I think it is a tragedy that we have a government, led by the emperor, who is now so indifferent to knowledge in Canada. And to our right to have the facts, that he has no compunction through his Minister of Finance about refusing to give out facts until he is brought to his knees in Washington and New York, and only when his bankers said: "Unless you tell us those facts you are not going to get your money".

We are now dealing with a new problem as far as foreign financing is concerned, and this was revealed earlier today. The long end of the American issue that was placed in New York is now selling at a discount of $1.75. It was brought out at par, Mr. Speaker, and it is now trading at $88.25; and if you want to undermine the confidence of international investors still further, pull that kind of trick on them. Sell them an issue effective on April 1, tell them it is properly priced, that you think there is an equitable rate structure put on your issue, and then on Monday, April 3 have them live with a $1.75 discount on the issue that you have sold them. Try selling another issue, Mr. Speaker, as you need further funds down the road, and you will receive a very chilly reception.

I mention this because of the news today. The increased bank rate, the increase in our line of credit with our own Canadian chartered banks, means the government is going to have to go back to the international trough once again and say: "Please give us another bail-out". What I am suggesting is that, because of the way the present issue has been handled, they are going to get a pretty chilly reception. Let there be no doubt, Mr. Speaker, when I say that the issue fell to $1.75 discount from its issue price, the long end of it; that put it into perspective. It now means that in the eye of international investors, Canada's credit rating is lower than that of most of the major U.S. corporation credits.

Most of the large finance companies in the United States are now being given money at a cheaper yield than Canada is able to borrow in that international market. It is very humiliating for a nation with the resources and talented people we have in Canada to have to live with a situation where our national credit is put on a basis junior or more speculative than the credit of certain corporations, including finance companies, in the United States. Those are the facts.

In dealing with Bill C-18, Mr. Speaker, we have got to bite the bullet. The reason our dollar has gotten into its present plight and that we are on bended knee in New York and Washington asking for more and more foreign borrowing is because the inflation program of this government did not work. As I said at the beginning, we have higher inflation than the combined inflation levels of seven industrialized nations of the world. Every year that the program has been in effect our inflation level has been running higher than the inflation level in the United States, and that to international investors means that our dollar has to go down in relation to the American dollar. And down it went.

The government, in an attempt to make a bad thing look good, has said the discounted dollar is the best thing that was ever invented and that somehow or other it is going to spur the economy. I have already read into the record John White's comment as to what happened with a depreciated dollar in Italy and the United Kingdom. The fact is that a discounted dollar that is lower as far as its relationship, for example, to the American dollar is concerned, is only a good thing if you take advantage of the competitive position it artificially gives. A depreciated dollar is only good if you can get a handle on your own inflation to ensure that the depreciation that you are now trying to utilize will remain and keep you competitive with your international competitors. The United Kingdom tried lowering the value of their pound, and we find today that if their oil revenue is taken out they are still running a substantial current account deficit with the rest of the world, in spite of their so-called depreciations or devaluations. On the other hand, the Germans have never had a devaluation or a depreciation. They have had nothing but a surplus with the rest of the world.

Those are the hard facts. We will not gain permanently by simply depreciating our dollar. In fact, it becomes a repetitive thing—the more you depreciate the more your inflation goes up; the more inflation goes up the more you have got to depreciate still further. There is no doubt the government would rather see our dollar higher, and every protestation that they make that somehow the dollar is a good thing at 87 cents is simply trying to let on that a bad thing is a good thing. However, it will not be bought internationally. If it was otherwise, surely we could ask the government why they encouraged the dollar to go to $1.03 premium at one time; why did they go to our corporations and municipalities and our provinces and ask them to go into foreign lands to borrow money? Why did they drop the withholding tax to facilitate borrowing that money in order to keep up the Canadian dollar if at the same time they thought it was a bad thing to have a high Canadian dollar? They cannot have it both ways. If they now say it is a good thing to have an 87-cent dollar, that must mean it was a bad thing when the dollar was at $1.00 or $1.03. On the other hand, if it is good to have an 87-cent dollar, why is it not even better to have a 77-cent dollar or a 50-cent dollar? How is it that the magic level that the so-called floating dollar reaches is always the ideal level, according to this government? I think we know the answer, Mr. Speaker. The government is in a tizzy. It is panicking. Its political expediency does not jell with economic reality. Today we have perhaps the greatest indication of how political expediency rules as far as this government is concerned.

• (2042)

In spite of the fact that it has been generally felt that we needed new budgetary measures six months ago, or possibly twelve months ago, the government consistently said they were not needed and that the economy was doing better than most economists said, that inflation was better than most economists said, and that real growth was better. In March, 1977, the previous minister of finance—now gone like so many other ministers—said that unemployment would be less toward the end of 1977 because of the imaginative provisions he brought in. Yet we now have the highest unemployment of any industrialized nation in the world.

This is the record of this government, Mr. Speaker. It asks us virtually to rubber stamp this bill, to pass this act for the anti-inflation program. I think it behooves us to ask why this part-time Minister of Finance is not willing to stand up in this House and give a full explanation of the failings of the anti-inflation program.

On that score, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should be more specific about why I feel he is a part-time minister. We have never had a Minister of Finance so reluctant to come before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We cannot get him there.

Mr. Chrétien: I am always there.

Mr. Stevens: When he gets there he does not want to answer any questions. Let me take the House through the scenario of Bill C-18. The government brought in Bill C-18 and we gave it relatively prompt passage in this House. Our caucus, and I believe the caucus of the New Democratic Party, felt that the proper place to deal with such a technical bill was in committee where we could ask questions of the minister.

Mr. Chrétien: I was there five times.

Mr. Stevens: We hoped to receive information in return. There were certain amendments we proposed to make to the bill and we wanted to get it out of second reading and into committee for study. We got it into committee and there was, I suppose the term is "leaked" to us, certain draft legislation concerning the setting up of an inflation monitoring agency and also another bill called the Financial and Compensation Data Returns Act.

We were left with the impression, from the responses of the minister in committee, that we had caught the government slightly off guard—that they had tried to slip Bill C-18 through, hoping the legislation would remain dormant, that nobody would question it and that they subsequently intended to bring in both these bills for which we had the drafts.

When we brought this matter up, the minister's response was rather odd. First of all, he said he knew nothing about the legislation and did not know what I was talking about. It was pointed out that the draft legislation had his name on the first page. It said that "minister" means "minister of finance". Clearly if somebody had been drafting legislation that the minister knew nothing about it was a most curious thing, and it makes one wonder what the government is up to. We pressed the point and there was a kind of admission that maybe at some lower echelon someone might have been toying with draft bills. In any event, the minister wanted no part of it.

In order to facilitate the questioning of the minister—because up to that point he had refused to acknowledge there was such draft legislation—I offered him the draft, but he said he did not want to touch it. It was untouchable, Mr. Speaker. I can only presume that if any member of the House was minister of finance and someone came to committee with a draft bill that said he was the minister referred to in the bill, he would be curious to find out what was going on. This minister, however, said he did not want to touch it. We pressed him and the answer was to the effect that really it did not have much to do with Bill C-18. In fact it had everything to do with Bill C-18 because it is on the question of what happens after the anti-inflation program ends. The impression was left that this does not have too much to do with Bill C-18, that the Prime Minister had asked the Economic Council of Canada to do the monitoring but certainly they did not want any provisions like those referred to in the draft legislation.

It was a stand off, Mr. Speaker. In effect, we said if the government want us to pass Bill C-18, they had better come clean and tell us what they have in mind for a monitoring agency and this so-called returns act, which had provisions such that people could go to jail for years if they almost inadvertently failed to sent in a requested report. The result—and I do not disagree—was that the chairman suggested we adjourn the committee until it was clear what the Economic Council was going to do. If it is not going to get into monitoring, clearly some provision will have to be made for monitoring, and this legislation, or something similar, will have to be brought in. I emphasize that the aura that the minister tried to put around it was that there was nothing to the draft legislation I referred to; that it was almost a figment of someone's imagination and he did not contemplate bringing in legislation immediately.

That leads me to the delay, Mr. Speaker. It was decided to postpone future meetings because in fairness it was felt the minister should be given the opportunity to get his house in order. It was not clear whether he was going to go the Economic Council route, or the route of some legislation along the lines of that I referred to.

The plot thickens, Mr. Speaker. As you know, the illustrious emperor, the Prime Minister, sent a letter to Dr. Ostry of the Economic Council of Canada dated March 15 and signed by his own hand. It set out very, very interesting things that he requested the Economic Council to do.

As a preliminary matter, perhaps I should make it clear that in effect what has now followed is that we have an Anti-Inflation Board carrying on with respect to the bulk of Canadian companies and workers till December 31, 1978; but as of April 14 we have Dr. Ostry and her posse coming into the picture to scrutinize what is going on in the nation with respect to inflation. Specifically, it refers to her checking out and "analyzing price and cost developments in the national economy". Those are the emperor's actual words.

● (2052)

I mention this because it is absolutely hypocritical of this government to pretend to the Canadian public that they are doing all these monitoring procedures, that they are desperately trying to identify who is the villain as far as prices are concerned, who the villain is on the labour side, whether the small shopkeeper or whoever, without accepting the responsibility for inflation. They do not have to go 100 yards from where they stand to find out where inflation is created in this country. It is literally created on the south side of Wellington Street by the printing of an excess amount of money in reference to the real growth of the economy. Any economist will acknowledge that.

This government is allowing the printing presses to be run through the Bank of Canada facility. It allowed 12 per cent more money to be created in Canada last year than the year before, in spite of the fact we only had 6.2 per cent real growth. I said our inflation was 9.5 per cent. Is it any mystery? Add up those figures and you will see why we have the inflation to which I am referring.

Is it not hypocritical for a government to pretend, presumably for political reasons, that they are trying earnestly to do something about inflation? They are now setting up a two-tier level of monitoring and supervision of inflation when they have been goosing the economy through the printing of excess money. Those are the hard facts.

When dealing with the role of the Economic Council, I want to draw to the attention of hon. members a very interesting fact. The Minister of Finance said that the draft legislation that I referred to had no meaning, or somehow or other was virtually a figment of somebody's imagination. However, when we review the letter from the Prime Minister to Dr. Ostry of March 15, we find that he sets out from A to F the various jobs he would like the Economic Council to do. Save for a realignment of paragraphs and a few changes of words, we find what he has asked Dr. Ostry to do is almost word for word what was in the draft legislation bearing the name of the Minister of Finance, which he told us in committee he knew nothing about. If we are to believe the Minister of Finance, something is really amiss in the Department of Finance and throughout the entire government. Presumably somebody is on the loose drafting legislation and is sufficiently in the know that his terminology is able to leap into the Prime Minister's letter to Dr. Ostry and be adopted by no less than the Prime Minister as the terms of reference for the Economic Council of Canada to follow in carrying out their monitoring procedures.

When I started to bring this out in committee, I was rather startled to find that the well-primed chairman of that committee was quick to say that it had no relevance to Bill C-18, in spite of the fact we delayed any further meetings of the committee until we could understand what the role of the Economic Council of Canada would be. We were told it would have no relevance. When we persisted, the Minister of Finance quickly refused to answer any questions. He said that what the Prime Minister said in the letter was not his business, that he would answer anything concerning Bill C-18 but not get into the role of the Economic Council in relation to monitoring or what-have-you.

The reason this is important is that if hon. members read the October 20, 1975 statement of this government, the fourth prong or wheel of their anti-inflation program was a deregulation of the Canadian economy. They said that was going to relieve—and I believe it would have—the present constriction within the economy that is contributing to inflation.

The program really had four wheels. It had de-regulation for the first wheel, fiscal restraint for the second wheel, monetary restraint for the third wheel and the AIB activities to which this bill is addressed for the fourth. Where it is relevant to concern ourselves with the Economic Council, in spite of the fact that the other three wheels have not worked worth a darn, namely fiscal restraint, monetary restraint and de-regulation, we find that the government is now proposing through its approach to the Economic Council of Canada a continuation of the AIB to have still further regulation and supervision of our industry beyond anything that was ever conceived.

It is important to bear in mind that the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board gave us the following estimates of the percentage of companies, professional firms and employees who would be released from controls by various dates. Bear in mind the government has represented that their de-phasing or de-control period will begin on April 14 of this year. It is important that we remember what they mean by that.

The chairman of the AIB made clear that by May 1, 1978, only 9 per cent of the employees in Canada, 9 per cent of the companies and 4 per cent of the professionals will be free from the AIB activities. By June 1, 13 per cent of the employees, 10 per cent of the companies and 8 per cent of the professionals will be free. By October 1, 62 per cent of the employees, 78 per cent of the companies and 77 per cent of the professional people will still be bound by the anti-inflation program. On December 1, 53 per cent of Canadian employees, 68 per cent of the companies and 75 per cent of our professionals will still be bound by the program. Let us get that into perspective. Until December 1 this year, the majority of the employees, over two thirds of the companies and three quarters of our professional people will still be bound by the Anti-Inflation Board rulings and the whole program, notwithstanding the de-phasing that begins on April 14.

I put those figures on record because there has been too much talk that somehow we are suddenly going to go out of controls. In truth, that is not right. We are not out of controls until very late this year. In fact, the chairman of the AIB made it clear that they do not see us being completely clear of the AIB for at least a year after December 31, 1978.

We are in the position tonight of having to face the fact that the government has represented that de-controls begin on April 14, when in all likelihood de-controls in the form they anticipate will not be effective until well into December of this year for the bulk of our businesses, employees and professional people. That is the main point I want to make on this subject.

Notwithstanding that degree of control, we find that the Prime Minister, in the letter to which I referred, has asked the Economic Council of Canada to do an overview of everything that has been happening. Not only is it an overview, but on page three of his letter the Prime Minister states:

> Because of the potential importance of an individual price or cost increase and the need for information which is not publicly available, however, it may be considered by the Council or—

I would stress the word "or".

> —the government that a special inquiry into a particular case is warranted. It is recognized that the carrying on of such special inquiries into individual price or cost increases under the powers of the Inquiries Act may be needed from time to time, but that such special inquiries would not be appropriately carried out by the Council itself. Such special inquiries would, however, be facilitated by the assistance provided from the Council's ongoing analyses and staff support.
>
> On this basis and pursuant to Part 10 of the Economic Council of Canada Act, I therefore request that the Council undertake a specific responsibility for analyzing price and cost developments in the national economy. More particularly under this reference, the Council would exercise the following duties, subject to the description and limitations set out above:

● (2102)

He then lists the terms of reference he would like the Economic Council to follow. They are essentially the terms of reference anticipated in the government's draft inflation monitoring agency act to be carried out by that agency should the act ever be passed.

Not only do we find these two levels, but the Prime Minister goes on to say he feels the Council should review the situation for two years. These are his words addressed to Dr. Ostry:

> You should discuss with the Treasury Board the provision of the additional resources which the Council will require in order to carry out these additional duties.

Nobody knows the number of additional staff the Economic Council feels it should have in order to carry out this new monitoring function. It has been estimated that 100 additional civil servants will be needed. News accounts from various sources are now making it clear that in any event there will be no abandonment of the 700 employees who presently work for the AIB. Thus we may end up with 700 employees from the AIB "doing their thing", plus another 100 people working for the Economic Council, all hoping to get a handle on inflation in Canada.

Referring to the employees of the AIB, an article in the April 1 edition of the Financial Post states:

> There are several hundred who are full-time civil servants and these people have been guaranteed new government jobs with no cut in pay.

Think of the scenario. We have the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) credibly arguing that the time has come to cut down the public service, not by firing people but through the ordinary process of attrition; and at the same time the government, so we are assured in this article, has guaranteed that these employees will not lose their government jobs or suffer any reduction in pay. Yet this is a perfect example of an area in which they could cut down costs. The article in the Financial Post went on to say:

> The AIB's middle managers have been preparing one-page resumés on all of these people. The resumés are being sent to all government departments to be used in filling job vacancies—when the AIB is ready to let them go.
>
> Most of these workers will be released toward the end of the year. Blackwell—

That is the name of an official quoted earlier in the article.

> —concedes there is a danger the job market could be temporarily flooded but he predicts the huge Ottawa bureaucracy will absorb the workers fairly smoothly.

Is it not almost laughable to find a government which pretends it is a government of restraint giving ironclad guarantees that none of these employees will lose their jobs or suffer pay cuts?

I am giving this background because I think we must accept the fact that, should the party opposite ever be returned with a majority to this House, the controls program will not end. What they intend to do, through this devious approach, is to reignite the entire controls system at the earliest opportunity and inflict it, perhaps for an indefinite period, upon the Canadian public. I do not think there is any doubt about it. The Prime Minister believes in controls. He has lost faith in our system. He no longer believes in the economy of the marketplace. He does not believe that the system which has brought prosperity to this nation can build an ever greater nation on the basis of free enterprise. Somehow he has accepted the line of the socialists, the supporters of the NDP, that an even greater degree of state intervention and control is needed in order to secure increased prosperity. He does not realize that exactly the reverse is the case, and that if we wish to turn the economy around what we need is a renewed vigour on the part of the private enterprise system as opposed to an extension of government controls.

We are dealing tonight with a big subject. Bill C-18 is a measure which contains many clauses and it is important we should deal with some of its inconsistencies and draw attention to amendments which ought to have been considered before the legislation left the finance committee. Hon. members who took part in the meetings of the finance committee on the bill will, I am sure, agree with me that it was passed only under the guillotine. The more the Minister of Finance refused to answer questions concerning the anti-inflation program the more the Liberal members on the committee insisted that the measure should be passed at once. Using the brutal majority they exercise in every committee of the House they insisted that the bill be passed without the benefit of further evidence from the part-time Minister of Finance or of amendments which we on this side thought were needed.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to be specific. I will begin by drawing attention to clauses 1 and 8. Clause 8, as undoubtedly Your Honour knows, makes the application of clause 1 retroactive to December 16, 1975, which is the date of the order in council establishing the regulations of the Anti-Inflation Act itself. Clause 1 enlarges the coverage of the present guidelines to include businesses in trucking, shipping, longshoring and grain handling sectors which bargain collectively. The amendment in C-18 ensures that profit guidelines will apply to companies which as a wage negotiating group form a unit large enough to merit control. The Anti-Inflation Act is constructed in such a way that wage-earners come under controls when the employing company comes under control. The amendment would also enlarge the coverage of wage controls.

● (2112)

Some additional construction companies are also brought under the controls by use of the same method applied to transportation industries. The companies and unions identified in clause 1 were brought under controls on April 22, 1976 by Order in Council P.C. 1976-910: SOR/76-273. The order came into effect on April 15, 1976 and was issued under the authority of section 3(2)(a)(v) of the Anti-Inflation Act. Before that section could be used it was necessary that the governor in council order the Anti-Inflation Board to study the potential inflationary impact of the groups to be affected and to report back.

The governor in council ordered the study on December 16, 1975. That was order No. P.C. 1975-2927, but it was never gazetted. That was one of the questions I wanted to put to the Minister of Finance in committee. Why was that order not published in the Canada Gazette? In any event, it was passed under what was alleged to be the authority of section 12(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act. Evidently the groups were found to be of strategic importance to the containment and reduction of inflation in Canada. Those are the words of section 12(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act.

The study and recommendations were not published and appear to exist only as internal memoranda within the AIB itself. Surely we in the committee were entitled to ask for that memoranda and not to be cut off and guillotined by the majority Liberals on that committee, as happened on March 21.

The purpose of clause 1 is merely to give explicit legislative sanction to procedures already authorized by order in council. That must be clear. For reasons that are not completely clear, the government passed orders in council which by clause 1 the government wishes to confirm. No new procedures are authorized in clause 1. What is new is that the guidelines are made retroactive to December 16, 1975, whereas the order in council applied only from April 15, 1976. It is not clear who the government is trying to catch. Presumably there is a little black hole into which the government feels it must throw some people because of the inadvertence of the government with its order in council. I think this House has the right to know exactly who the government feels it is retroactively catching with the wording in clause 1, which is different from the wording in the order in council to which I have referred.

In any event, the Anti-Inflation Board advises that this change is a formality undertaken for the sake of uniformity and that no company or union will be required to give back profits or wages because of the new retroactive application. I hope the board is right, but surely in committee we were entitled to learn from the Minister of Finance what his answer would have been to that type of question. If clause 1 is of such small significance, one wonders why the Minister of Finance has chosen to trouble parliament with it. If the insertion of clause 1 was necessary to the legislative coherence of the program, why was it not necessary to insert it into Bill C-89 in the first instance? Why was it not put into Bill C-89?

Hon. members will recall that Bill C-89 was debated in April, 1976, the same month in which the order in council was proclaimed. The order in council was virtually identical to clause 1 of Bill C-18, the bill before us tonight. Apparently the administration did not wish parliament to debate this measure, although a ready opportunity existed when Bill C-89 was before the House. Delay in the debate of a measure like clause 1 clearly shows the reluctance of this administration to permit public debate on the anti-inflation program. That is one of the points I have been trying to bring out tonight.

This government—and I do not blame it—is obviously embarrassed by the failure of the anti-inflation program. However, whether it is embarrassed or not, it should be willing to make a complete reckoning to this House, and through this House to the Canadian public, as to why it has failed so miserably with its anti-inflation program.

Coming back to measures like clause 1, I think I should simply conclude by mentioning that de-control day was to be April 14, 1978. We must wonder whether the measure was really prompted because of the debate that the government anticipated would take place with regard to the utility of wage and price controls themselves. Those are the references I wanted to make to clauses 1 and 8 as they appear in the bill which is now before us.

Let me now touch on clause 5 and clause 6. Some have called these the "ghost" amendments for decontrol. These amendments introduce a novel legal concept. The Anti-Inflation Act will expire by proclamation, presumably, on April 14, 1978. Incidentally, the only indication we have that decontrol will begin on April 14, 1978 is a comment made by the Prime Minister and reiterated on October 20 by the Minister of Finance. That is all we have. We have found that we cannot necessarily believe what these two gentlemen say, so how can we be absolutely sure that decontrol will begin on April 14? The fact is that to date that has never been proclaimed.

In any event, as I was saying, if the government sticks to its word, the anti-inflation program will presumably begin to be dismantled on April 14. Compliance with the terms of the act will, however, still be required in the sense that we have referred to the percentage dephasing month by month.

This brings me to the so-called ghost amendments which we find in clause 5 and clause 6 requiring compliance with a law which, if we believe the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, will no longer exist. Clause 5 makes extensive revisions to section 47 of the Anti-Inflation Act. Hon. members will recall that section 47 provides for the continuance of proceedings already instituted under the act, even though the act expired in the middle of the proceedings. The purpose of the section is to allow the completion of work under way by the Anti-Inflation Board, the administrator or the tribunal despite the termination of the act which gives these bodies authority to regulate wages and prices.

The amendment in clause 5 goes one step beyond the original section 47 by extending the powers of the board, the administrator or the tribunal to operate after the anti-inflation program has been legally terminated. Clause 5 would allow the Board to initiate proceedings after the legal end of controls for violations of the controls program which may have occurred while the controls were still in force. For example, if a company generates what is called excessive revenue during the final compliance period of the controls program, this amendment would allow the Anti-Inflation Board to investigate the revenue portion of the firm, find it to be in excess of the guidelines and order and enforce the distribution of the excess revenue of the firm.

The board, administrator or tribunal would have these powers—and I emphasize this—despite the fact that the act which gave them these powers will have expired. If we pass the bill which is now before us, that would be its effect, and let there be no doubt. These residual powers necessitate certain additional consequential amendments. Reporting requirements will remain in force. AIB staff will be retained. Vacancies on the board may be filled. All this may take place after the act has expired, perhaps as long as a full year thereafter.

On this particular point I am always taken aback by the number of people on the government side—in fact, including the chairman of the AIB himself—who are unaware of the fact that the present anti-inflation legislation can be extended beyond December 31, 1978 by a simple order of the cabinet.

● (2122)

Mr. Chrétien: No, we have to come to the House.

Mr. Stevens: If the Minister of Finance would care to look at the act he would find that the government can extend the termination of the AIB to whichever period it sees fit, subject to confirmation by the House at a later date. But the important thing that is often being forgotten is that this act does not automatically terminate on December 31 of this year. It can be extended by the government, and the only restraint on the government after it has extended the act is to be overruled by a vote in the House.

This brings me back to what I was saying that if, heaven forbid, this government should ever be returned with a majority, let there be no mistake; it will extend the AIB program, and if the House cares to have a vote on that program, the government will use its majority to push it through the House.

Let us bear in mind when considering Bill C-18 that the AIB will not necessarily end simply because the emperor, the Prime Minister, has said he thinks it should end by April 14. Also the Minister of Finance has said that, but both can reverse themselves. Believe me, political expediency is the only law this government obeys. Economic realities are secondary. If the government thinks it is politically expedient to tell us today that it intends to have a decontrol of the anti-inflation program, given re-election it will restore the controls program at the earliest opportunity.

Let me come back to clause 5. Clause 5 also attempts to invalidate the so-called AIB clauses in wage agreements. This was a deficiency pointed out by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) at a meeting of the committee. He was the first to make it clear that the legislation which the government brought in was defective. So clause 5 attempts to invalidate the so-called AIB clauses in wage settlements or, as it is sometimes referred to, there is a bounce back effect once the controls program ends with respect to any type of wage settlement that might have been higher than the guidelines.

Clause 6 also deals with wage agreements that have been reached calling for increases in compensation within the guidelines but which also specify that, after the termination of the controls programs, wages shall be paid at a rate considerably higher than would be allowed under the guidelines. Let me be a little clearer on that. For example, a 6 per cent wage agreement in force might provide for wages to be increased by a further 6 per cent once controls expire on whatever date is set. Clause 5(5) of Bill C-18 declares that such a provision would have no force or effect.

I suggest this measure is also a ghost clause. It requires compliance with the provisions of an act which will have expired, if we believe what the government is telling us.

Clause 6 also deals with wage agreements and is designed to prevent what has been called the bounce back of those wages, to which I have already referred. The bounce back would occur because of the particular method used under the Anti-Inflation Act to control wages. If a wage agreement has been negotiated providing for an increase in compensation in excess of the guidelines, the AIB or the administrator rolls back what would then amount to an increase in excess of the guidelines. The actual roll-back procedure does not affect the wage agreement itself but only the amount which can be paid out under it. Suppose a compensation agreement calls for a 12 per cent increase in wages when only a 6 per cent increase is justified under the guidelines. The decision of the AIB, or the ruling of the administrator, specifies that a 6 per cent increase only may be paid out. The decision or ruling does not, I emphasize, alter the terms of the contract itself. Thus, when the Anti-Inflation Act expires and the AIB ceases to exist, the original contract would immediately become payable at the old rate or, in the example I have given, at 12 per cent. Further, companies might be required to pay retroactively wages lost due to the AIB limit on the pay out of the settlement.

Clause 6 states that a ruling of the AIB or the administrator actually modifies the terms of the contract so that it will comply with the guidelines. This is not merely a ghost clause, as the "deemed modification" of a contract will take place while the Anti-Inflation Act is still in force, although the effect of the modification will be felt even after the act has expired. In conjunction with clause 5, clause 6 should prevent any attempt by a union or a company to exceed the guidelines while the compensation agreement is in force.

However, and this is the point, there is nothing in either clause 5 or clause 6 which will prevent a union and company agreeing to terminate a contract when the act expires. Once terminated, a new contract could be negotiated comparatively free of any guidelines.

The ghost amendments are a legal oddity and it is difficult to predict how effective they will be. Fortunately, they are only transitional powers for the decontrol period. One hopes that the administration will resist further attempts to create legal obligations pursuant to such non-existent laws. The ghost amendments show how much easier it is to start controls than to end them.

Having reviewed Bill C-18 and some aspects of the anti-inflation program to the point that I have at this time, let me point out that surely the Prime Minister was right when he made that famous statement that controls are a disaster looking for a place to happen. Do you recall that, Mr. Speaker? In fact, controls are not something that effectively control inflation—they cause problems. The Prime Minister had it right. Now unfortunately we have had inflicted upon us a controls program which, as I said earlier, has resulted in higher inflation in Canada than our main trading partners have experienced, certainly higher than in the United States. Yet we are being asked tonight, without, I suggest, having had a proper opportunity to review this legislation in the committee, to pass Bill C-18 relatively quickly, and without the explanation from the Minister of Finance to which I believe we are entitled.

This brings me to an interesting question when we are considering the anti-inflation position of the government. How often will we be subjected to the rhetoric we get from the government on what they propose and intend to do with respect to certain matters such as inflation? All we are left with is rhetoric but no action. I refer to this because already I have made reference to a letter written by the Prime Minister to Dr. Ostry in which he set out the terms of reference he would like her to follow in carrying out the monitoring of inflation starting on April 14.

There was also a letter sent by the Prime Minister to what were called business and labour leaders, which was dated July 29, 1977. In the letter the government set out what it regarded as an appropriate decontrol and post-control arrangement. The letter had many paragraphs in it, 15 I believe. In paragraph 8 it was stated that the government hoped to establish what they called a multipartite consultative forum and monitoring agency. This has been described in "Agenda for Co-operation", a copy of which I have here. The Prime Minister stated at that time:

These have been described in Agenda for Co-operation. In more specific terms, it is now proposed that the consultative forum should be constituted as follows.

● (2132)

This is the form he was proposing less than a year ago. He indicated that there should be ten participants from business, of whom at least five would be selected from a list of ten nominations by the business council on national issues. It would have ten participants from labour, of whom six would be selected in consultation with the Canadian Labour Congress. Five participants would come from interested groups, and five would be federal government ministers.

In item 9 of his letter he stated that, in selecting the participants, the government would ensure an appropriate balance with respect to industrial sectors and regions. In item No. 10 he stated that in selecting the board of the monitoring agency, the government would ensure that people of stature with a recognized experience in business and labour would be included.

On October 20 last year the Minister of Finance referred to those clauses before the House, yet we have heard nothing further. We have received no explanation from the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister as to why the proposals were not carried out.

Mr. Danson: You did not ask me.

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps that is the best evidence we have received as to where the entire program has gone wrong. It may be administered by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson). If that is so, it should have been made clear much earlier, and then we could have directed our questions to the Minister of National Defence. I was not aware that "Minister of National Defence" meant "defence against inflation", or whatever interpretation the minister places upon it. I do not mean to be critical of the jolly Minister of National Defence. He is a neighbouring member of parliament to my riding. He is a jolly good fellow. If he was made Minister of Finance, I would hope he would do a much better job in that portfolio than he has done as Minister of National Defence. Certainly he could not do a worse job than the present Minister of Finance.

Perhaps we will receive a little more insight bit by bit from the ministers as to who has the truth. Now I have learned that we should have directed questions concerning the anti-inflation program to the Minister of National Defence, to that degree a little progress has been made this evening.

I should like to know what happened concerning this letter of July 29. At that time it sounded somewhat interesting. An illustrious emperor was going forth and stating, in a letter addressed to labour and business leaders, what he would like to see happen. Well, what happened? Where was he turned down? Are we to accept that the Economic Council of Canada is what he had in mind? If that is so, we must remember that the labour component of the Economic Council dropped away. They decided they did not want to participate any longer in the Economic Council. Clearly there is no labour participation in the Economic Council.

I raise these points, and in particular this letter, during the debate on Bill C-18 because we should have been entitled to ask the part-time Minister of Finance in committee what happened to those proposals. Was it the government's decision to drop them? Was it labour or business? Who exactly said "scrap that letter, the idea is no good"? I could refer to various sections of that letter, but I should like to indicate that the 15 clauses set out have never been heard from since. Perhaps the Minister of National Defence has been having secret meetings with business and labour leaders. Perhaps he is the man who runs the anti-inflation program. As far as we have been able to make out, no meetings have taken place. The government has not met with labour, business or consumer groups. In short, the government is getting ready for an election. They are hoping to bamboozle the Canadian public and ensure re-election when they decide to go to the country. If that is the intention of the government, it is very, very important for its performance with respect to inflation to be put on the record clearly.

The policies of the Trudeau government have placed this nation solidly in the grip of inflation on a relatively permanent basis. The current annual rate of inflation is 9.5 per cent. That rate means prices in this country will double every eight years if it is permitted to continue. Because of the ineptitude of the government, it will continue at some comparable level should the government be allowed to continue running the financial management of Canada. Every hon. member must accept the basic premise that inflation is created by the Bank of Canada through the excess printing of money in relation to our real growth. The government is aware of that. As long as that is tolerated, the consequences must be accepted. One of those consequences is high inflation.

High inflation is nothing new to the Trudeau government. Actually, prices have risen by 87 per cent since our Prime Minister took office. That is according to the consumer price index. If one looks at the deflator, or the implicit price index, one will find that prices have gone up 100 per cent. That 100 per cent increase is 13 per cent higher than what the CPI reflects. In the main it is government inflation which is reflected in the deflator. That has gone up even faster than the rate of price increases as reflected by the CPI.

When the government's record on inflation is considered, the broken promises regarding inflation should be noted. The Trudeau government announced that it had defeated inflation on several occasions, only to have it return with a vengeance. In December 1970 the Prime Minister crowed the following: "Inflation no longer exists in Canada". Since then, prices have risen by 72 per cent. When the Prime Minister campaigned against wage and price controls in 1974, the "emperor" then said: "We are going to bring inflation under control. That I pledge to you". That pledge has brought price increases of 35 per cent since then.

The litany of failure to bring inflation under control continues to the present day. In October, 1975, the Liberal administration introduced the wage and price controls which they campaigned against in 1974. This fact is well known. The controls program presented targets for inflation from a level of 10.6 per cent in October, 1975. The rate of inflation was forecast to fall to 8 per cent by October 1976, to 6 per cent by October, 1977, and to 4 per cent by October, 1978.

• (2142)

The 1978 target was achieved when the inflation rate stood at 6.2 per cent in October. One year later, however, the inflation rate had increased to 8.8 per cent, well over the target of 6 per cent. Although the Trudeau government promised 4 per cent inflation in 1978, it has reneged on that commitment and now forecasts 6 per cent inflation this year. My guess is that it will soon abandon that target as well. The fact is that at the present time the Minister of Finance, and possibly his emperor friend, are the only people in Canada who still seriously believe there will be 6 per cent inflation in this country in the current year.

What about the 1978 inflation prospects? Our minister has forecast 6 per cent inflation in 1978. Many private sector forecasters think this is unrealistic. The Conference Board of Canada expects inflation to average 7.4 per cent in 1978. In that respect I note that the Minister of Finance often quotes the Chairman of that Board, particularly since he decided to run as a candidate for this party.

The Bank of Commerce expects 7.8 per cent inflation this year; the Bank of British Columbia predicts 7.9 per cent and Lévesque, Beaubien, Incorporated in Quebec expects 7.8 per cent inflation. Even the government's own advisory agency, the Economic Council of Canada, which the government has asked to monitor inflation, expects inflation to average 7.4 per cent in 1978.

What are the inflationary pressures? We know wholesale prices are 10.9 per cent higher at this time than a year ago. Adding to inflation are two further pressures on prices in Canada. I refer, of course, to the continuing fall of the dollar and our higher energy prices.

In the area of food costs, the impact of our falling dollar is already apparent. Higher import prices will continue to push up consumer prices. Canadian manufacturers who use imports in production face higher costs. Canadian corporations which have borrowed funds in foreign currencies will be required to pay much higher repayment costs.

In that connection, it has been estimated that the total foreign borrowings of Canadians, be they municipalities, corporations, provincial or federal governments, are approximately $33 billion. It does not take much of a mathematician to figure out that if you have a 10 per cent decline in the value of the Canadian dollar in relation to those currencies you have borrowed you will be losing $3.3 billion should you have to repay those foreign currencies with a falling Canadian dollar.

On that particular point—and I am pleased the Minister of Finance is here—I hope that before this debate ends he will explain to the House what his government expects to do to relieve the plight of the municipalities, corporations and provinces which, at the government's behest, went out and borrowed in foreign funds and are now left with considerably higher monetary amounts to pay than first anticipated, directly as a result of the government's current decision to allow the dollar to fall. I was going to say "allow the government to fall", which would be a blessing, Mr. Speaker.

Let me put that into another time frame. It could cost $3.3 billion in extra payout on the part of those who borrowed foreign funds if they have to pay off their debts in terms of Canada's fallen dollar. One must think of the interest cost as well, because most of those obligations were expressed not only in respect of capital, but in respect of the interest on foreign currencies. The debt or interest payments will also be 10 per cent higher than anticipated. There should be some indication from the government about its intent to relieve that situation. Does the government intend to leave those municipalities, corporations, and provinces in effect holding the bag because they acted in response to the government's request to go out and seek foreign funds at a time when the government was desperately trying to hold up the Canadian dollar? The dollar would have fallen in any event because our trade imbalance was already running at an alarmingly high level.

One other point I should touch upon is that we are very conscious of the effect of a falling dollar in relation to import prices. However, I was most surprised at a committee meeting to find that the Minister of Finance and his advisers were not as conscious of the effect of a falling dollar in relation to various commodities within Canada. I refer specifically to the price of some Canadian goods such as beef and lumber. The prices of both those commodities are quoted to Canadian buyers in terms of the U.S. dollar equivalent. As a result, to the extent you have a falling dollar you automatically ensure that domestically in Canada the price of beef, lumber and other commodities will go up. Hopefully the Minister of Finance will come forward and explain why this government feels the falling dollar is such a desirable thing when it will have such an impact, not only on the price of imports to this country, but also on the price Canadians will have to pay for such commodities as beef, lumber and others.

Dealing with this broad subject of the inflationary pressures we will experience this year, the federal Department of Finance has estimated that the recent devaluation of the dollar could add 4 per cent to our inflation rate within two years. The government will increase the domestic price of oil and natural gas twice during the year, each time by one dollar per barrel or its natural gas equivalent. The immediate impact of the price change will be felt in home heating and automobile fuel. The two price changes alone will raise the consumer price index by 1 per cent by the year end. Oil and gas used by consumer goods producers will result in higher consumer prices. Energy costs account for between 5 per cent and 10 per cent of farm production costs. The 1978 energy price increases may increase, if we follow that through, consumer goods by 1 per cent or more. These are some of the pressures we are facing in relation to inflation during 1978.

Let me touch on one question which is perhaps more important during this debate than any other. What causes inflation? The blame for inflation has been laid at almost everyone's doorstep. I mentioned earlier that the government liked to say that labour, business or foreign countries were to blame. Do hon. members remember when we had that minister of finance, two or three back, by the name of Mr. Turner? He used to come into the House when he was embarrassed about inflation and say that because anchovies off the coast of South America had gone wrong—somehow or other they could not find them—it meant we had higher inflation in Canada. At other times we have been told inflation was caused by the financial gnomes in Zurich who were manipulating the system. We were even told there were mysterious cartels at work which somehow or other caused inflation. It later became brutally clear that this government had set up a cartel in respect of uranium, the like of which the world had never seen before. As a result this will cost Ontario consumers, and presumably other consumers in Canada, additional hundreds of millions of dollars. It does not matter who the government pretends is responsible for inflation; the fact is that inflation could not and would not occur unless the government either encouraged, or permitted it, and that is the simple truth. Not only the Minister of Finance but the emperor himself have consistently encouraged inflation and permitted it. Inflation is always caused by government. It is the government which controls the supply of money, and it is excess money which causes inflation.

● (2152)

This brings me back to the falling Canadian dollar. The interesting thing that has happened is that while the government has been acting so irresponsibly with respect to inflation, they to a certain degree were getting away with it so long as other governments acted equally as irresponsible. However, there has been a sobering influence in the world. Countries such as Germany and Switzerland, and Japan to a lesser extent, have decided they are going to stop the excess printing of money as far as the economy is concerned. They have said they are going to get a handle on inflation and in short are not going to play the game of printing more money and living with inflation any longer. The result is that our big spending friends on the other side have been caught off base because they now find that the game has changed and that they no longer can spend as excessively as originally. The government can no longer print money as excessively as they were because countries such as Germany, Japan and Switzerland are not doing it.

To the degree that this government has failed to be equally as responsible, we find that international investors have been moving away from our dollar to invest in the German Deutschmark, the Swiss franc or the Japanese yen. That is what is happening, and let there be no pretence of anything else. In the eyes of the world, we are one of the weak currencies today, and to the degree that the international investor looks upon Canada as a weak nation, the run will continue so long as they look on the German, the Swiss or the Japanese currencies as stronger. The run will continue from our currency to that type of more solid currency.

I think it is important when we are considering this amendment to the government's Anti-Inflation Act that we virtually insist that the Minister of Finance get up and give an explanation as to why as were told in October, 1975 that the government have a program to handle inflation and yet we find that we still have no answers.

Mr. Chrétien: You have taken two hours.

Mr. Stevens: The Minister of Finance is saying that he thinks I am taking too long. To what extent, Mr. Speaker, am I entitled to time? I was not given the right to put questions in the finance committee. Surely if there are points that have not been made by the minister or his cohorts concerning this anti-inflation program, members of this House have the right to speak and ask what they feel fit.

Let me come back to the main point that I want to make, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the government can control inflation. As an example, suppose a customer has $100 to spend and he normally spends $25 on each of food, energy, housing and clothing. If the price of energy, for example, should double, he must either buy less energy or less of something else. The only way he can continue to buy the same amount of goods as before is if he increases his supply of money. It is the same with government and with the Canadian economy. An increase in the price of oil or an increase in wages or profits is not inflationary unless more money is printed at the same time. If the supply of money remains the same, an increase in the national price of oil simply causes people to spend less on other items. If the pie remains the same size, a larger slice for one group means a smaller slice for other groups. Individual price, profits or wage increases are redistributed in their effect and are only inflationary if the government tries to stop the redistribution by increasing the supply of money. By trying to cancel the effect of price and wage changes through increasing the supply of money, the government only provokes others to restore their share. More money in the system does not necessarily make the pie any larger. It just makes it more expensive to buy.

When the federal government lives beyond its means, one of the ways it pays for its deficits is by selling securities to the Bank of Canada, and it in turn pays for the securities by printing money. This is inflation in its most direct form. The government should not finance deficits or even try to ease the shock of a particular price increase by an increase in the money supply. Stimulated monetary policies are not necessarily inflationary, and the money supply should always expand in relation to the actual size of the economy.

It must be made clear that inflation cannot occur unless it is permitted to occur by an expansion of the money supply. The relationship of monetary growth to inflation is clear. From the winter of 1968 to the late fall of 1977 the money supply increased by 156 per cent. I hope you will pay particular attention, Mr. Speaker, to the figures that I am giving. Between that period this government printed 156 per cent more money in Canada. Over the same period real economic growth was 55 per cent. The difference between the two, 101 per cent, represents the amount of money created in excess of that required to finance the growth in the economy. It is no surprise, therefore, to discover that the general price level in the economy increased by 100 per cent in the same period, almost exactly the same as the amount of excess money printed.

Let us note those figures again, Mr. Speaker. In the period from late 1968 to the fall of 1977 the government caused the Bank of Canada to grind out 156 per cent more money supply in the nation. During the same period the real growth was only 55 per cent, so they created in excess of 101 per cent as far as the money supply is concerned. Our inflation when you use the deflator was exactly 100 per cent during that period, within one per cent of the excess money created during this government's reign of office.

Those are the facts, Mr. Speaker, and when we are considering amendments to the anti-inflation legislation, Bill C-18, the government should explain why they continuously pretend that they need monitoring agencies, that they need controls, that they are not too sure what is causing inflation when, simply, they are printing the inflation that we are living on.

I would like to touch on the historical perspective of this situation. A large proportion of the money printed in recent years has gone to finance the Trudeau government's deficits. The Bank of Canada has printed money to finance 33 per cent of the federal cash requirements in the past five years. The $5.6 billion of federal securities purchased by the Bank of Canada represents more than 60 per cent of the total addition to the money supply over that period. The spending practices of the Trudeau government created the budgetary deficits which were partially financed by increasing the money supply. Since 1968, federal spending has more than quadrupled—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Adjournment Debate

• (2202)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—INCLUSION IN BUDGET OF INCENTIVES FOR VOLUNTARY WORK-SHARING

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to listen to a monologist explaining his simple theories in a very complex world.

I believe that at this point we are in the middle of an international economic crisis with the problems that most countries have to face. Techniques are not working, particularly techniques which clearly should create jobs and increase demand. Those particular techniques do not work and have not been working as they used to. A good example of this is that, although we have put $4.5 billion or so on the demand side of our economy in the last 15 months, we have not been able to solve the problem of creating employment. In addition, we have serious energy problems which make for greater economic problems.

Because of the baby boom in the 1950s and early 1960s, Canada is experiencing a very large growth in the labour force. About 300,000 young people come on the labour market each year, or about four or five times the number that came on the labour market in the 1950's. These problems create some very serious distortions in the economy and create unemployment at the rate of 8 or 9 per cent. In the age group 15 to 24, unemployment is in the area of 14 or 15 per cent.

Because it is very difficult to create jobs, given the fact that demand and other techniques do not work and respond the way they used to, we have to look at methods of reorganizing the job market. I am particularly concerned with the failure of our experts to increase the number of jobs available. The rate of growth in the United States in the first quarter of this year is most disturbing—it is actually a zero growth rate. Given this kind of problem, it seems to me we must do something far more significant in terms of job creation or putting a large number of people into the work force.

One method we might look at is this. If we cannot create additional jobs, then the amount of work available could in some way or other be shared among the people available to do it. I should like to look at work sharing and the possibilities of voluntary work sharing as a partial solution to some of the problems which face us. I know there is already some work-sharing, especially when plants have lay-offs, but it seems to me a large number of people who are working would voluntarily adopt some form of work-sharing. This could be pairing, shorter weeks and so on. The reward, of course, would be the extra leisure time. I think this is particularly the case in professions such as teaching and nursing where pairing is worth-while. Many people would like half the work-load by taking half a day's work each, or working a week at a time, for instance.

Some problems are involved in work-sharing but one of the advantages, particularly with pairing, is that the productivity of the two individuals involved is usually higher than the productivity of one person doing the job full time. Other problems concern benefits, incentives, extra clerical work required by the employer for pay-rolls and so on.

• (2207)

These are some things that could and should be looked at by this government. I ask the minister to look seriously at incentives which would have the effect of overcoming some of the objections to work sharing. I would like the government to take on a program of attempting to get Canadians to volunteer to share the work they have with those Canadians who cannot find work. In that way we would not have one large group of people on the labour market, working eight hours a day for 40 years, with another group not working at all. I know there are regional problems and so on, but that would be a partial solution.

With the government coming out with a new budget within the next month or so, I hope it will seriously look at incentives to share the amount of work available among the people available to do it.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Dupont (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in the area of job opportunity development, the government has proposed to create more jobs through its employment strategy and also to support the principle of sharing the work that is available between a larger number of people.

In 1977-78, the government allocated $458 million to the employment strategy for fiscal year 1978-79. That amount includes nearly $330 million for direct job creation under those two programs, Canada Works and Young Canada Works which have proven both viable and flexible, because they created jobs for the unemployed in areas where they were most needed. In 1977-78, it is estimated that the various programs and initiatives funded under the employment strategy gave work to some 185,000 people, an approximate 611,000 man-months.

In 1978-79, a total $50 million from the Canada Works Program will be used to support the new economic growth segment of the program. That segment stems from the realization that a significant number of federal bodies can develop worthwhile projects capable of creating immediate jobs and also promote the creation of a greater number of jobs in the private sector.

In addition to programs involved in the employment strategy, mention should be made of two other initiatives in the area of employment. First $150 million were allocated to Federal

Labour Intensive Projects to create more job opportunities in the public sector. Second, the employment tax credit program will promote more job creation in the private sector. Under this two-year program started March 8, 1978, an estimated $100 million will be granted annually in the form of tax reductions.

Last year, the government amended the Unemployment Insurance Act so that among other goals employment levels could be maintained through work sharing in industries where lay-offs were needed. Under the new measures, the people involved in any given week will be paid for every day worked, and get UIC benefits for the remaining days.

At the beginning, labour representatives and management had some reservations regarding the principle of work-sharing. Nevertheless, despite these reservations, a good many companies and groups of workers had shown their interest by participating in this program as soon as it was started. It seems that the companies and the groups have adopted a realistic approach toward the usefulness of that program. This participation has naturally taken place on a purely voluntary basis, the application being jointly presented by the management and the workers of the companies concerned.

In order to assess the usefulness of the principle of work-sharing in the Canadian context, the program has been started on an experimental basis. On March 27, 14 such agreements regarding work-sharing were signed, thus preventing some 770 persons from being laid off. The concerns expressed by labour representatives and management toward work-sharing show how important it is to carry out a thorough assessment of each pilot project at the trial stage—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to inform the hon. parliamentary secretary that his allotted time has expired.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

● (2212)

[English]

VETERANS AFFAIRS—REQUEST WAR DISABILITY PENSION BE RAISED TO LEVEL OF 1973 FORMULA

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, March 17, as reported in Hansard at page 3872, I put two questions to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald). One of them had to do with the basic rate of the war disability pension and the other with the formula which determines when a disabled veteran's widow will get a pension following the death of her husband.

As the minister knows, and as the House knows, I put these two questions to the minister as often as I can. Indeed, earlier this afternoon I sought to present a motion under Standing Order 43 dealing with these two issues. Until not many weeks ago my questions about veterans affairs were three. In addition to my plea that something be done about the basic rate and the formula respecting widows, I was calling for amendments to the legislation respecting compensation for prisoners of war. As the minister knows, not only did he win his battle in cabinet and obtain agreement to bring in a bill extending compensation to prisoners of war of the first world war and also to evaders and escapers in the second world war, but he also won that legislation on the floor of the House in a matter of two or three hours; the bill went through all its stages on the same day.

I remind the minister of this because I should like to impress upon him, as I did when I questioned him on March 17, that he could do it again. If he brings in a measure improving the legislation affecting our veterans I can guarantee that the House will give it approval in a very short period of time. Speaking of time, we all know there is not much of it left for this session or, indeed, for this parliament. Surely the minister would like to go into an election campaign knowing that this legislation has been passed instead of having a record which says, time after time, only that the matter is under consideration. I would remind him that the convention of the Royal Canadian Legion may be held right in the middle of the election campaign, and though he may be busy in Prince Edward Island I suspect he will be invited to that convention. When he gets there he will find that two foremost issues will be those I am bringing forward tonight—the question of the basic rate and of the formula which applies to the widows of veterans.

With respect to the basic rate, the facts are well known to all concerned. Back in 1973 a formula was agreed to which called for the rate to be set so that the amount available for a 100 per cent disabled veteran would be equal to the average take-home pay of five categories in the federal public service. The hope was that this formula would carry through. Instead, although the rate was set in 1973 the increase each year has been only in accordance with the rise in the consumer price index and the basic rate has fallen behind.

It is true that the 7.2 per cent increase in January of this year narrowed the gap slightly. I received a letter only today informing me that the gap was now down to $311 a year. But I would remind the minister that this year's increase for the public service has not yet come through and no doubt when it does the gap will be back to $500 or $600 a year.

This is an issue on which there are strong feelings from coast to coast. I am making a plea to the minister. But I am also giving him a tremendous opportunity. He is going into an election campaign. He is going to a meeting of the Canadian Legion. Why not come through with this restoration of the basic rate to the amount that would be calculated by the formula agreed to in 1973?

● (2217)

I make the same offer to the minister with respect to widows. In fact, it would not surprise me if, when the Legion convention is held, those who take the resolutions before that convention will give very high priority to this question of widows. As veterans get older and more and more of them realize that their pensions are below 48 per cent and that their wives will not get a pension if the veteran dies first, they are concerned about this provision. It still just does not make sense to say that when a wife looks after her veteran husband who is on a 48 per cent pension and he dies first she gets a full widow's pension, but if the wife next door is looking after a veteran who is on a 47 per cent pension or anything less, she gets no pension at all. To say she can fall back on the war veterans allowance really does not answer the point.

I appreciate the fact that the minister has stayed here for the late show tonight. If he is looking for something new from me, I have to reply that there is nothing new to say on these two issues. We have been over them time and time again. The something new is in the minister's hands. The something new is for the minister to get up tonight and not just say that they are under consideration but to say that he shares my hope and the hope of all members of this House that these two issues will be acted on by the government and by parliament before this session ends.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for his continuing concern for the wellbeing of our veteran population and their dependants. The hon. member knows that the question of increasing the basic rate of disability pension has been discussed in this House several times in the last few months. Disability pensions were increased by 7.2 per cent on January 1 of this year. The basic rate for an unmarried 100 per cent pensioner is $596.70 a month. If that pensioner is married, the amount is $745.88 a month, and if he and his wife have two dependent children, his pension is $880.15 per month.

I have said that I intend to have the government consider the possibility of raising the basic rate again, and when I have something to report to the House on this subject, I shall be pleased to do so.

The hon. member suggests that a widow should receive a pro rata pension if her husband had been in receipt of a disability pension of 47 per cent or less. This is because she would receive a widow's pension if his pension had been 48 per cent or more at the time of his death. It was decided that a veteran receiving a 48 per cent or more pension would have been disabled to the degree that his disability would have contributed to his early death. It should be remembered that a widow will be pensioned if her husband's death occurred during wartime or was attributable to his service, regardless of the degree of the assessment of his disability.

Canada continues to be a world leader in providing benefits to disabled veterans and their dependants. I know of no other country that pays automatic survivor benefits to widows approaching the 48 per cent basis that we in Canada use.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN SEARCH FOR REMAINS OF SOVIET SATELLITE

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on February 1, as recorded at page 2438 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) if the armed services personnel stationed at Churchill were involved in searching for the satellite which came down in the Northwest Territories. At that time I was appalled by the remarks made by the minister. He said he had been up to the Northwest Territories, and he told us of the very harsh conditions in the Northwest Territories under which the armed forces personnel had to work. I pointed out that there are thousands of people in the Northwest Territories who work in these conditions day in and day out.

That brings me to the reason I have raised this matter in the adjournment debate tonight. Over the last 25 years Churchill has become a very important area for winter warfare training. I believe Churchill is the most appropriate location for winter warfare training because there is tundra just north of Churchill, the tree line is just to the south of Churchill and there are ideal training conditions.

● (2222)

Over the past few years we have seen a total erosion of the involvement of the armed services and of the Department of National Defence in Churchill. Fort Churchill was built in 1946; now it has been almost totally demolished. There are only 35 armed services families left there. There is concern that these 35 families will be slowly transferred out of Churchill and that the fort will be almost completely dismantled, which will mean that no one from the armed services will be left in that location.

Let us take a look at the geographic location of Churchill, the excellent airport facilities and storage buildings there, etc. Fort Churchill is the most northerly point along the Hudson Bay coast and into the Arctic, and it is an essential location from which to protect our northern frontier. I do not understand why the government, instead of training personnel in winter warfare in other locations where northern conditions must be simulated, does not put more emphasis on relocating the armed forces personnel in Churchill.

In 1946 when the army was first located in Churchill, the town was built up to a point where approximately 5,000 people were living in Churchill between the fort and the town site. Now that the fort has been dismantled, a $50 million resettlement plan was set up for the Churchill town site which involved moving all the facilities from the fort.

At the same time the CBC is pulling out of Churchill at the end of June, which will mean that only 12 CBC people will be left there. Also, the National Research Council will pull out of Churchill, as I understand, because, as they say, it is too expensive for them to remain there. That will leave only two NRC families in Churchill. The space program is to be continued but people will move from Gimli to Churchill for the rocket launches and then back to Gimli.

I am glad to see the minister here tonight because it is very important to the people of Churchill and, I believe, to the whole of Canada to have an active and effective winter warfare training element in a place like Churchill. A further erosion of the presence of armed forces in Churchill will mean that a community where a $50 million redevelopment program has been commenced will decrease to the point where it will number some 1,200 people only. First there was the building up of a community from 1946 onward until the tearing down of the fort in 1976. Then there was a redevelopment and rebuilding of the town. Now the federal government is slowly pulling out its services from that community. This is another blatant example of lack of government planning.

There is an $11 million recreation complex being built in the town of Churchill as part of the redevelopment program. This complex is serving now some 15,000 people only. It is like an albatross, around the necks of the people in Churchill amounting to about $8,000 a year, which the maintenance of this complex is costing them. Churchill does not have a big enough tax base to support such a complex. The population of Churchill is faced with actually locking the doors on it if there is to be an erosion of government involvement there. It is the government in the first place that made the main decision for the redevelopment because the federal government paid the lion's share for it.

● (2227)

I ask the minister to give serious consideration to retaining a good size core of armed services personnel in Churchill. It provides an excellent opportunity. There is not another place in Canada where winter warfare training can be simulated any better. A unit such as that would be very beneficial in searching for a satellite which has come down, though I hope that never happens again. The troops would be accustomed to the climate and conditions and would be able to step in because they have taken their daily training in that area.

Also I should like to mention I was very disappointed to see the Thompson application for a militia was turned down. This ties in with the fact that the number of armed services people in Churchill is diminishing. We want to see a little more involvement by the Department of National Defence in the north to protect our frontiers.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith). I appreciate he is aware of the tremendous investment the federal government has made already in Churchill. I hope in the long run that will pay off. Particularly I was interested in his comments regarding its suitability as a winter warfare training centre. The hon. member is quite right; the conditions of the Arctic can be simulated there.

The units which participated in the search for the downed satellite were not from Churchill. I am sure many of the people who were involved received their Arctic training in the Churchill area. This area is certainly considered a valuable training area. It does not lend itself to the large infrastructure required by the nature of the training. One difficulty is that there are a variety of different types of Arctic conditions. Our troops are training in different parts of the Arctic. When they move there, they are there to survive in that very rugged atmosphere. One of the good things is that there is an opportunity for relaxation in Churchill because of the excellent facilities which have been provided. I know the sports and recreation complexes to which the hon. member referred.

We must look at the broad picture of where we receive the most value and best return for the investment in infrastructure which we have. That is done automatically on a continuing basis to see that taxpayers' money is being handled properly in the first place, and that we are using the facilities to their best potential. Certainly Churchill offers a potential, but it does not lend itself to the large type of infrastructure of other places because of the nature of the training. The troops are on the road and away from the base itself, but they are necessary to maintain minimum facilities. I am sure the hon. member realizes that, as he also realizes the value of that training to the Canadian armed forces.

With regard to the other point about other government departments, I am not in a position to comment, nor is it appropriate for me to comment, on the Thompson situation with reference to the Cameron Highlanders. We are not talking about pulling out any who are there, but it is something which has been under consideration. In so far as Churchill is concerned, there are no immediate plans for any changes there. The value of the area for Arctic warfare training is appreciated. Our troops go there on their own and maintain themselves in that quite rugged environment. It is that type of training which has made our troops among the best in the world in Arctic and winter warfare.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 4, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

GRAIN

PAYMENTS UNDER GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that being the government's reluctance to pay out moneys owing to Canadian farmers under the grain stabilization plan. The amount of the payment is known to be in the range of $80 million to $95 million, and the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to the effect that the cabinet must consider the final figures is utter nonsense and means nothing more than fixing the date of payment in relation to the timing of the upcoming election. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the money owing to western grain farmers under the grain stabilization program be paid out immediately and not be subjected to the political manipulations of the Minister of Agriculture and the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

WINNING OF TWO ACADEMY AWARDS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can get unanimous consent for this non-partisan motion which I move under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Crown corporation, the National Film Board of Canada, won two Oscars at the 1978 Academy Awards for best animated and short films, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House congratulate the NFB and the directors and crews involved for this outstanding achievement.

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) announced yesterday that he will soon bring forward a budget, and that in a period of economic crisis; given also that according to the report of the National Welfare Council the income gap between the rich and the poor increases continuously, and that in 1976 it was two and a half times as large as in 1951, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House direct the Minister of Finance to introduce in his budget a series of measures such as tax reductions, the exclusion from taxation of government pension plans and a real annual guaranteed income plan.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Under Standing Order 43, such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

POST OFFICE

INFORMATION KIT PRODUCED BY DEPARTMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact that the Post Office Department and the Postmaster General have seen fit to produce an information kit containing a 44-page, colour brochure at enormous cost to the taxpayers, indeed a wasteful exercise, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the Postmaster General provide this House and the people of Canada with a full explanation of the reasons for this ridiculous exercise in pseudo-public relations and inform Canadians of the cost of this arrant nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST BUSINESSMEN IN THE PAS, MAN., BE COMPENSATED FOR LOSS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On March 23, 1978, the Minister of Indian and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) announced a $4.2 million contribution to the Otineka Development Corporation of The Pas. In view of the fact that many businesses in The Pas were forced out of business by this development, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this Liberal government also compensate the private businessmen in The Pas who have suffered loss of business.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REFUSAL OF DEPARTMENT TO ALLOW WOMAN TO UNDERGO PILOT TRAINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the refusal of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) to allow Julia Walsh, a young woman from Ajax, Ontario, to apply for the Canadian armed forces pilot training program because, in the words of the Canadian armed forces recruiting officer, "young ladies are not eligible to apply for pilot training", considering the minister's rejection of my appeal on her behalf, and further considering the subsequent decision by the chief human rights commissioner of Canada to support Miss Walsh and help remove the unfair impediment to her becoming a Canadian armed forces trainee, contrary to the provisions of section 2 of the Human Rights Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Minister of National Defence to accept Julia Walsh and other qualified women candidates as applicants for pilot training and support, rather than retard, the movement toward equality of opportunity for both men and women.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

FINANCE

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT CAN AFFORD INCREASED EXPENDITURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on March 13, 1978, that the government must be able to afford increased expenditures, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger):

That the minister make a statement to the House making it clear whether or not she knew that the government would, as of now, require to borrow another $1 billion for use as standby credit, whether or not she had given consideration to the pending $11 billion cash requirement of the government this year, and whether or not the extra money required would be derived from increased taxation or a further budgetary deficit.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be put to the House only by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GARRISON DIVERSION—REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the government has had almost six months in which to consider the final report of the International Joint Commission with respect to the Garrison diversion project, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That the subject matter of the IJC recommendations with respect to the Garrison project and, as well, the subject matter of the Andras Plan proposed by the U.S. Secretary of the Interior be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry in order that members of this House might make a meaningful input into the final position taken by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of this motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANNIVERSARIES

BICENTENARY OF COOK'S LANDING IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Royal Hudson, the unity train, arrives in Ottawa today—indeed, Captain James Cook is himself present in our gallery—I should like to seek the permission of the House to share with British Columbia in the celebration of its bicentenary, Captain Cook having landed in Friendly Cove, B.C., 200 years ago.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

INDUSTRY

REFUSAL OF GOVERNMENT TO STOCKPILE NICKEL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the federal government has refused over the last few months to consider the stockpiling of nickel as a move to protect nickel mining communities and the jobs of miners, in view of the fact that Inco last week raised the price of nickel by 7 per cent a pound in a move which may be the start of a recovery in that industry, and bearing in mind the fact that if the government had acquired a one-month inventory of 30 million pounds of nickel to protect the jobs of miners they would now be in the position of having made an inventory profit of over $2 million, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House condemn the short-sighted policies of this government which have not only cost over 4,000 jobs in this industry but which have cost Canadian taxpayers $2 million because the government lost an opportunity to make a profit on Canadian resources.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN BANK RATE—EFFECT ON ECONOMIC SITUATION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Minister of Finance, who is formally responsible in the government for monetary policy. The Bank of Canada last night raised the bank rate by a further one-half per cent. In the light of this development, can the hon. gentleman tell the House whether the government still expects the real growth rate of the economy to be 5 per cent in 1978, and whether he still expects inflation to be running at an annualized rate of 6 per cent by the end of 1978?

● (1417)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will give those answers in the budget speech which I will be making in this House very soon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we will see how far the dollar drops before that budget speech is finally delivered. My question to the minister concerns the reasons of the government or of the Bank of Canada for not announcing the increase in the bank rate last Friday, when the market expected that increase to be announced. Can the minister tell us why he waited until last night to announce that increase in the bank rate, thereby causing the Bank of Canada to drain in the neighbourhood of another $100 million unnecessarily from our foreign exchange reserves?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada came to see me only last night, so I could not have made the decision on Friday.

Mr. Clark: Mr.Speaker, it must be very comforting for the minister to have another public servant upon whom he can lay the blame for the economic failures of this government.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: On March 7, in this House, the minister told my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe, that there was, and I quote his words precisely "no basis in fact" for the suggestion that the fall in the Canadian dollar was the result of speculation by certain international investors. Yesterday, the minister was quoted on CBC radio as saying that if there are some people trying to run down the Canadian dollar in a speculative way, the government would act to stop that. I wonder if the minister could tell the House whether he has changed his position and is now saying that the fall of the Canadian dollar is related in some way to speculators and to speculation.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there is always the possibility that people can speculate against the Canadian dollar. That is why, for example, we decided to make sure that we have enough credit so that we can tell the market that we will not let anybody run down our dollar. However, of course, it is a floating dollar and the interventions of the Bank of Canada are designed to make sure that the floating of the dollar is done in an orderly way.

An hon. Member: Floating?

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—POLICY OF BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In spite of the half point bank rate increase yesterday and the announcement of a further $1 billion increase in the Canadian chartered banks' line of credit, the Canadian dollar today is still under heavy pressure. Another $30 million in United States reserves has been dissipated so far today, as of 2.15 p.m. Is the minister at least willing, now, to telephone the governor of the Bank of Canada to find out why the policy enunciated yesterday does not seem to be working today?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am in touch with the governor of the Bank of Canada regularly. The policy was announced yesterday. If the hon. member would read very carefully the statement of the governor of the Bank of Canada, he would find that the international situation is a very fluid one at this time; and the foolish speculation of the hon. member is not helping the situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the minister—and he knows it—that this is not foolish speculation; it is the truth. Yesterday, the governor of the Bank of Canada indicated in effect that if the dollar continued to fall, it would bring pressure on inflation and somehow counteract our competitive position as far as the world is concerned. This sentiment was certainly expressed in the CBC interview of the Minister of Finance when the minister said that we have to make sure that the floating of the Canadian dollar is not creating too much pressure on inflation. Is it now government policy to hold that an 88-cent dollar is about as low as the dollar should go, notwithstanding so-called floating?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar is a floating dollar. As the governor of the Bank of Canada said yesterday, I also say that the dollar must float rationally; excessive pressures over too short a time could lead to serious distortions in the value of the dollar. That is why the governor intervened yesterday.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the half-measures consistently taken by this government with respect to our foreign exchange position are not working, would the minister cause a reference to be made to the appropriate committee of this House so that we can have a full airing as to exactly what is the government's policy with respect to the dollar and what the governor of the Bank of Canada intends to do? In short, let us get to the truth as to why the government is handling this so ineptly.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the policies are enunciated by myself and by the governor of the bank. There is a public debate about this, and I do not think I can add much more at this moment. I think that the market would be even more worried if we were to take the advice of the hon. member.

• (1422)

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—EFFECT ON INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. At the outset, I ask if he would be completely honest in his answer and acknowledge that a rational float amounts to a dirty float, which is no float at all. Will he acknowledge that the government has abandoned the principle of the floating dollar? When answering that question, will he explain why, at a time when he is jacking up interest rates, which will inevitably lead to higher costs for business to expand—which means a rise in inflation and a rise in unemployment—he is pursuing that kind of policy at this time?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the statement the governor of the Bank of Canada made yesterday stands by itself. He gave very good reasons for his move, and I have agreed with it.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister is responsible to the House, not the governor of the Bank of Canada, and when he has an obligation he should exercise it to explain to the House, briefly, why he has embarked on the course of action he has, because the inevitable consequence is an increase in unemployment and a simultaneous increase in inflation.

Mr. Chrétien: I take the responsibility. I said I have agreed with the statement of the governor.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will try different tactics. Considering that the government of the United States has not taken steps to prop up its dollar, on the very sensible ground that it wants to boost its exports, contrary to the desires of Japan and West Germany, why does the Minister of Finance of Canada not follow a similar policy and allow our dollar to float, which will inevitably boost Canadian exports abroad and create more jobs?

Mr. Chrétien: It is odd to hear a member who has always complained that Canada is following the U.S. too closely say that we should follow the Americans on that score. I think we have an independent economic policy. We made that move because it was in the best interests of the Canadian economy to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

DATE NEW DAIRY POLICY WILL BE ANNOUNCED

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

On the last sitting day before the Easter break, I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture what the dairy policy would be for the coming year. Now that we have reached April 4 and that dairy producers, at least in my area, are asking many questions about the dairy policy they can expect this year, can the minister tell the House whether he will soon tell us what type of dairy policy he intends to propose and implement for the dairy year which started on April 1?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is forgetting that we have a dairy policy which is subject to review every quarter. Naturally, we meet with dairy producers and processors, and we hope to be able to announce the continuation of the program which is presently being followed. We were not able to do that as of April 1. However, I am sure the hon. member will be very happy when the program is announced for the coming year. It will be quite similar to the present policy, with not much change. As I said, it will be one of the best in the world.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CHANGE IN DAIRY YEAR

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

As it was suggested before the Standing Committee on Agriculture that the dairy year be changed, that is extended to allow dairy producers to eliminate, during the winter, those units that are not profitable, and so respect their quotas, can the minister tell the House whether that proposal was accepted and whether in fact the dairy year will be changed when a statement is made on the coming year?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this suggestion has been publicly debated by many different dairy producer groups and other people in Canada. That suggestion has been put forward.

* * *

● (1427)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON BANK OF CANADA INCREASED BANK RATE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is supplementary to the answer he gave the hon. Leader of the Opposition about the change in interest rate. Are we to understand the reason the Minister of Finance has given for the action of the Bank of Canada is the fact that the minister did not have a chance to speak to the governor of the Bank of Canada until Monday night?

An hon. Member: That is not what he said at all.

Mr. Gillies: Is there not constant communication between the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada concerning what should be done about the decline of the dollar?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the reason. I said that the governor came to see me to make the recommendation yesterday. I talk with the governor of the Bank of Canada regularly. I think he is a fine public servant and a very capable man.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, following along the same line of questioning and the degree of speculation that is taking place on the dollar, does the minister not believe that the statements being made by him and by officials of the governement on borrowing reserves and on maintaining an orderly market are a total invitation to speculate? No speculator has any risk, given the position the government is taking at the present time. Can the Minister of Finance tell us what, in the estimate of the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance, proportion of the decline in the value of the dollar since January 1 has been caused by speculation rather than by normal market forces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very amusing that the hon. member would put that question, because by the very fact that he is asking these questions he invites speculation. If I were to follow his advice, I would just sit in my seat and not say a word. So if he is worried about it, he should tell his colleague next to him—who is always throwing all kinds of figures around the place just to create the confusion he wants—to shut up and he will help the nation that way.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It seems to me any minister of Finance who has presided over a decline in the dollar of this dimension has no right to be saying that hon. members on this side of the House should shut up about this problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: There is grave concern in this country about the decline in the value of the dollar, because of what it is doing to economic policies, the level of inflation and the level of unemployment. Does the government, the Department of Finance and the Minister of Finance have no feeling or indication that there is a need for the government to say that it will not protect the dollar totally, and if people want to speculate against it, they can take the risk, or to say that they are going to protect it so that speculation will be removed from the market and the dollar will not be forced down by these untrue market forces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, nothing would be worse speculation than to reply to that question. Like most of the currencies of the world, the Canadian dollar is on a floating exchange basis. We intervene to make sure that the floating is done in an orderly manner. That is the policy of the government and that is the policy we intend to carry forward. I do not have to add anything to the statement made yesterday by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

EEC MONITORING OF PRICES AND WAGES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government any reason to believe that the Economic Council of Canada, which will monitor price and wage performance after controls are lifted on April 14, will be any more successful in obtaining compliance with the government's price and wage guidelines than was the Prices and Incomes Commission under the chairmanship of Dr. John Young, which proved to be completely incapable of doing so? If so, what are the government's reasons for so believing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since that appeared in the early seventies we have reached two-digit inflation. Co-operation was forthcoming from the private sector during the period in which we had controls. It is obvious there was a great deal of co-operation from the private sector because they realized the danger of runaway inflation. Because of this, we are quite convinced that the private sector and the government, as employers, will be very, very serious in their undertaking to control any inflationary spiralling.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, of course, that is pure speculation. The Prime Minister avoided answering a serious economic question, as he always does. I have a supplementary question for him. Does the Prime Minister not realize that without teeth to require compliance with the government's guidelines, the pressures that have built up on prices and wages during the past 2½ years will bring about an even greater price escalation than that which necessitated the imposition of controls in the first place?

● (1432)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. gentleman that it is not, to use his words, pure speculation: it is based on an agreement reached between the ten provincial premiers and myself, when we met in mid-February, to act as employers in a way which would keep any upward pressure on the public sector within the same range as that of the private sector. That is not speculation: it is an agreement set out by the ten premiers and myself in the communique issued at the end of the conference.

[Mr. Gillies.]

Mr. Hees: Does the Prime Minister not realize that this is not a matter which can be settled by the ten premiers but, rather, by the heads of labour and management in this country? There has been no agreement whatsoever among labour, management and the government to keep prices and wages down. Therefore, does he not realize that we are right back to where we were when the government, in 1969, formed the Prices and Incomes Commission; and does he not realize that we are headed on the same disastrous course?

Mr. Trudeau: I think the fact which escapes the hon. member is that the governments in this country—federal, provincial and municipal—are also employers, and when they undertake to follow a certain line of conduct as employers, this is certainly a very important advance in attempting to control the inflationary spiral. Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter for the hon. gentleman opposite to have confidence in the ability of the provinces to deliver on their word.

As far as we are concerned, there is a bill before the House now, the Public Service Staff Relations Act, dealing with amendments which we invite the opposition to vote for, and thereby give the government the power to make sure that it does stay within a reasonable escalation of wages. I await the support of the opposition for the government to deliver on its undertaking.

* * *

POST OFFICE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE SERVICE

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In view of the promises of former postmasters general not to increase postal rates until the service improved, what action is he taking, specifically, to deal with the poor service? I refer specifically to proposed reductions in door to door delivery, delayed deliveries in the Toronto area, and the enormous amount of rural mail delivery complaints.

Hon. J. Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of promises made by former postmasters general about reducing rates. I would state that there is no intention whatever to curtail services already in existence in any part of Canada.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, if I may direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General, what assurances will he give this House and the Canadian public that they will be getting their money's worth in smooth and speedy mail delivery in the not too distant future?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member of the opposition must know that at the moment we are having problems between labour and management. If you read the article that was in the Globe and Mail yesterday about the spirit of the CUPW toward the CLC and their Quebec congress, I think you will realize that it is very hard at the moment to improve efficiency until we have labour peace. That is what we are trying to achieve.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ONTARIO—TRIPARTITE ARRANGEMENTS TO DEAL WITH CONCERNS OF INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is reported that the interim report of the Hartt commission on the Northern Ontario Environment will recommend tripartite arrangements to deal with the concerns of Indian people in Ontario. What is the view of the minister regarding such arrangements involving the federal government, the province of Ontario and representatives of Ontario Indian chiefs? What role is envisaged for Mr. Justice Hartt if such a recommendation were to be implemented?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to read Mr. Justice Hartt's submission, but to the extent that it makes that recommendation, I would strongly support it. I would also point out that we have already had, in fact, the first of those tripartite meetings: it was held in Toronto recently with representatives of the government of Ontario, the Indian people and the federal government. It was an extremely successful meeting. I would say a recommendation of this kind would meet with the full approval of the federal government.

* * *

CANADA COUNCIL

REQUEST MANDATE BE STUDIED BY COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that the Canada Council has now publicly refused access to files including application forms, assessments of those applications, financial documentation and progress reports, and in view of the fact that all members of this House of Commons, including ministers, have been denied access to these files, does the minister not agree that it is time to refer the mandate of the Canada Council back to the parliamentary committee in order to assure accountability and fiscal responsibility of the Canada Council to parliament?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, of course, the Parliament of Canada, in establishing the Canada Council, placed limitations on the degree to which members of parliament and, indeed, ministers could interfere with the day to day operations of the Council. The resistance to allowing the intrusions which the hon. member described really flows from the fact that the Council is independent in its day to day operations.

As to the more general question of whether there should be further consideration by the committee on the mandate of the Canada Council, I would certainly reflect upon the hon. member's representation. The committee does, of course, have during the consideration of estimates the authority to discuss with the Council its programs and policies.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, the question I would like to ask is, if we as members of parliament, and the minister, are denied access to information by the Canada Council with regard to applications, and so forth, how can he possibly make a judgment as to whether more money should be spent, or substantiate the Auditor General's comment that there is fiscal irresponsibility here or financial documentation procedures that need to be improved? How can you make that decision if you are denied access to such information, and should that subject matter not be of great concern to the minister and all members?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I have never been denied access to information which I felt was necessary to assess, whether the budgetary proposals of the agency were necessary or not.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE FLQ CRIMINALS WILL REMAIN EXILED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. My question arises from information that PQ officials are interviewing FLQ exiles, and has reference to the deal made by the Prime Minister and his government with Jacques Cossette Trudel and Louise Lanctot regarding the kidnapping of Cross and the people connected with the murder of Laporte. Will the Prime Minister assure the House and the country that these people will not be permitted to return to Canada unless they are then subject to due process of the law? I believe this is one of the matters that affects the unity of this country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the report of these meetings has been brought to my attention. I believe the Department of External Affairs is attempting to follow up and determine to what extent the reports are well-founded. I know that our embassy in Paris has not been contacted to arrange such meetings. The puzzling aspect from our point of view, if the meetings did take place, is that apparently they would have taken place in the presence of French intelligence officers. This is something of a puzzlement to us, because why would the Quebec government want it to happen that way?

On the issue itself, the Minister of Justice and myself have made it repeatedly clear that if these people return to Canada, they will, of course, be subject to due process of the law; and that would include criminal charges against them.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the answer the Prime Minister has given me, Mr. Speaker. May I now put a question to the minister for external affairs. Can the minister add anything in reference to the negotiations—particularly in light of what the Prime Minister has said—and say that these two people who were exiled from Canada under a deal by the Canadian government will not return unless they are subjected to the due process of law which, in the Prime Minister's words, means they will be subject to charges with reference to the kidnapping and, indeed, the related offence of the murder of Laporte?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary question is simply a paraphrase of the one asked of the Prime Minister. I can only reiterate the comments of the Prime Minister and perhaps amplify them to the extent that the department was not aware of the interviewing that has taken place in Paris. Incidentally, I have ascertained that it was appropriate, or at least proper in the legal sense, for the Quebec government to do so under a treaty dating back to 1928.

* * *

● (1442)

IMMIGRATION

REASON FORMER SOUTH VIETNAMESE GENERAL NOT DEPORTED

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration in his capacity as minister responsible for immigration. It concerns the notorious former South Vietnamese general by the name of Dang Van Quang who is living in Montreal. I have tried over the last three years to have this person deported, and I have failed.

I would like to ask the minister why Dang Van Quang, who is presently under an order of deportation, was granted a work permit and is working in the city of Montreal, when over one million Canadians are out of work and looking for jobs?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's efforts to have this particular individual deported exceeds the time that I have spent on it, by approximately one year. I did check with the officials in Viet Nam and determined that if he was, in fact, sent back to Viet Nam he would not even be allowed off the plane. It did not seem to me to be a good expenditure of taxpayers' money to send him halfway around the world to find out something I already knew in the first instance.

With respect to his being granted a work permit, it seems to be more appropriate that he should be working, and not living off welfare in that particular province. He is prepared to work at the job he has found. That seems, to me, to be the right approach.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, I am absolutely flabbergasted at that answer—

Mr. Alexander: Astounded.

Mr. Blackburn: —in view of the fact that law-abiding Canadian citizens and landed immigrants are being forced on welfare because they are no longer eligible for unemployment insurance. In view of what I have just said, is it the minister's intention to withdraw that work permit, in view of the fact that Dang Van Quang has several very wealthy friends in Montreal from South Viet Nam who could easily afford to bankroll him for the rest of his life and for the lives of his children?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, not too many of them have come forward in the past two years to offer that kind of assistance. The situation has now reached the point where the individual fears for his life. He has some concern from day to day as to his safety. The fact that he has seen fit to work in this country rather than go on welfare, at least means there is a little bit of good—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cullen: Well, the hon. member would say, "Let's put the expense on the taxpayers and let this individual be taken care of by the government". I do not think that is appropriate.

An hon. Member: Is he staying at the Chateau Champlain?

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

REFERENDUM LEGISLATION—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister responsible for federal-provincial relations: it refers to the referendum legislation which was introduced yesterday. In view of the fact that this legislation covers "any question relating to the constitution of Canada"—that is, matters falling within both provincial and federal jurisdictions—would the minister say if, prior to the introduction of this legislation, he consulted with either the provincial premiers or his provincial counterparts about the legislation?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations): Mr. Speaker, consultations have been held in accordance with the commitment made by the Prime Minister during the debate on the Speech from the Throne at the outset of this session. There was consultation with the leaders of all parties of this House. There was no formal consultation with provincial governments since all referendum questions which might be asked should necesssarily be related to an issue under federal jurisdiction.

There was no formal consultation with provincial representatives but this point has been informally discussed on various occasions.

[English]

Mr. Clark: Incredible.

Miss MacDonald: My supplementary question is also to the minister. Is he saying that in a matter of such constitutional magnitude as this, which in effect could reflect on matters within concurrent jurisdictions, or within provincial jurisdiction as well as within federal jurisdiction, he did not consider it necessary to consult the other partners in our federation? Is that not what federalism is all about?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that if a question involving provincial authorities were raised, there would then be consultations with the provinces about issues which might affect them. However, if the questions raised were strictly within federal jurisdiction, it is quite clear in such a case that consultations would not be required. This bill authorizes parliament to put questions dealing with referendums. The type of consultations which should be held will be determined according to the question raised when those questions will be specifically submitted to parliament for consideration. It is as simple as that.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DATE AGREEMENT SIGNED WITH QUEBEC ON TOURISM DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. A few weeks ago the minister stated in the House that he was negotiating an agreement with the Quebec government to sign a subagreement for tourist development in that province. Considering that the citizens of the Gaspé Peninsula are anxious to learn the contents of that agreement, could he tell us whether those negotiations are completed and at what date he expects to sign that agreement for tourist development in Quebec?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed those discussions are completed. We will sign that agreement in Quebec City on Thursday next if nothing untoward develops until then. On Thursday next, we will sign an agreement with the Quebec government in Quebec City.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON POSSESSION OF SOFT DRUGS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in relation to governement policy on marijuana, cannabis. In 1972, the then minister of health, now the Minister of Labour, and later in 1973 the then minister of health, now the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, both announced that the federal government was going to move possession of marijuana, cannabis, from the Narcotic Control Act to the Food and Drugs Act. Bill S-19 was introduced but allowed to die in parliament.

I understand there was some discussion on this topic at the recent little séance the Liberals had in Ottawa. I wonder if the government has a policy, and when it intends to act upon it, because it has been dilly-dallying for five years now.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the member is right in speaking of one of our little séances. For us to have 3,500 people discussing questions is a little séance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: We easily attract crowds much larger than that. Relating to the hon. member's question, I would like to inform the House that further to representations made to me, to my predecessor and to other departments of the government by the Canadian Medical Association, the Solicitor General's department is reviewing the draft Bill S-19 with a view to improving certain sections. When it is ready, this House will, of course, be informed.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the information just received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare that his department is, in fact, redrafting Bill S-19, can he inform the House whether the intent is to have possession of marijuana changed from the Narcotic Control Act to the Food and Drugs Act? When does he propose to introduce that bill: will it be in the next few weeks?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, review of the bill which has been identified by the hon. gentleman, Bill S-19, is taking place. My department is interested in that matter, not independently of consultation with other departments; there are ongoing discussions and a bill will be presented. I doubt, however, that it will be done within the time-frame specified by the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1452)

AGRICULTURE

PRICE OF AGRICULTURAL CHEMICALS AND EFFECT ON IMPORTATION

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In late March the minister stated that if any irregularities were found in Canadian agricultural chemical pricing, he would either open the Canada-U.S. border or use import permits to permit agricultural chemicals to come into Canada. Since farmers have to know the government's intentions, will the minister advise what action the government is prepared to take on the whole question of agricultural chemicals and chemical pricing in Canada?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the last meeting with the committee which advises the minister and the department on the price of chemicals found no real evidence that a great debate is necessary or that we are paying too much for these chemicals. They point out that many chemicals used in Canada are much cheaper than chemicals used in the United States. There are pocket areas where there is a discrepancy: we recognize this. As Minister of Agriculture, I have to look at the whole Canadian scene and then decide whether irregularities exist and whether there is a rip-off of farmers who have to use the imported chemical brought into Canada by some dealers.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows full well that he has examples: I provided some from Manitoba. Has this committee determined the price spread between distributor and retailers of agricultural chemicals in Canada, and whether such price spreads have widened since the closing of the border last year?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, they have looked at all aspects of the price spread. As I said, many chemicals are cheaper in Canada than they are in the United States. How do you come to a decision when one or two chemicals used here cost more in Canada than in the United States? Do we throw the baby out with the bath water, or do we hope that the competition in a free market system will look after this? We are hopeful this will be done. We know this has happened in some instances where the American supplier not only had one agent in Canada but used three or maybe even four in some instances.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED NATIONS' DISCUSSIONS ON RHODESIAN SETTLEMENT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since the spokesmen for terrorism and kidnapping in Rhodesia, Messrs. Nkomo and Mugabe, were able to make known to the Security Council their views on the matter of a Rhodesian settlement, is the minister able to say what steps he took or would be prepared to take to get at least equal time with those who negotiated a settlement in Rhodesia, in the person perhaps of Bishop Muzorewa or Mr. Sithole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the necessity for making a specific decision did not arise because of the awareness made known to us that the majority on the Security Council were, in fact, not going to agree to these gentlemen appearing. Here I am expressing a personal view, because I have not consulted the permanent members or others on the Security Council. I cannot see that any damage is done by hearing all points of view. I emphasize that it is hypothetical in that sense, because I do not think anything that Canada or, indeed, the western countries could have done would have been able to set things up in such a way that they could have been heard.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I assume we can take it from that answer that no steps were taken to secure a hearing with those who negotiated the settlement. In view of his ofttimes expressed preference for negotiated settlements in international questions, what steps is the minister now taking to remove from the forces of terrorism, murder and kidnapping in that area the support that Canada is now providing to them either through third countries or through certain non-governmental agencies?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, may I just file a slight reservation on the preamble to the hon. member's question until I have an opportunity to check in order to be absolutely sure so there will be no argument. To the best of my knowledge, there was no formal discussion about their being heard. I recall having said informally that I saw nothing particularly wrong with it.

On the second part of the question, if the hon. member, in his use of adjectives, is referring to the patriotic front, we of course are not providing anything by way of what might be described as aggressive assistance for anything other than humanitarian purposes. We are, of course, giving a certain amount of support specifically for educational assistance for the children, some food aid and things of this nature. I would question whether it would be desirable to withdraw that. I am not being facetious when I say I will take a look at the possibility.

* * *

MANPOWER

JOB VACANCIES BEING FILLED BY PERSONS OUTSIDE PROVINCE

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. In 1976 and 1977, students from Shawinigan, Quebec, received preferential treatment in filling job vacancies in Flin Flon, Manitoba. These students arrived in Flin Flon with their papers totally completed, bypassing the local Manpower office. Can the minister give me some guarantee that this practice will not be continued in 1978?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the hon. member's representation. I will look into it.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REASON MINISTER DID NOT MEET DELEGATES OF CHINESE BARBECUED MEAT PRODUCTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that 55 delegates of the National Committee to Save Chinese Barbecued Meat Products are here in the nation's capital—many of them are now in the public galleries—at their own expense, and they are here from Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, will he put it.

Mr. Lee: Can the minister explain why she has been unable to see the delegation, and why to date she has not seen fit to grant an exemption under the regulations respecting Chinese barbecued meat products?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there are difficult moments in life which one cannot avoid. Unfortunately, I cannot accept the invitation to sample barbecued meat: another meeting was arranged a long time ago with the Canadian Medical Association. Also, I am on a diet!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I wish to assure the hon. member and the Chinese merchants who are in the galleries that I appreciate the culture which has given us such extraordinary recipes. However, because the Department of Justice has laid a few charges against some Chinese restaurants in Toronto and Vancouver, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to exempt an ethnic cuisine; because in most parts of the country food merchants have complied with the regulations very well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON NARROWING GAP BETWEEN RICH AND POOR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the excellent speech that the Minister of National Health and Welfare made in Sherbrooke, Quebec, on March 13—a copy of which, she told us this morning, had been supplied to the Prime Minister—in which she said "not only can we afford more equality, we must afford it", and in which she documented the fact that although the poorest people in our society are not, in absolute terms, as poor as they were 30 years ago, nevertheless the gap between rich and poor is as wide as ever, a fact which has been confirmed in the report of the National Council of Welfare on "Taxation and the Distribution of Income", in view of all this, would the Prime Minister like to correct the statement he made in Calgary a while ago when he said the government had narrowed the gap between the rich and the poor, and would he indicate to the House whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare has his support and the support of the government in her pursuit of a program of a guaranteed annual income?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the length of the question, I hope you will permit me to speak a little bit about Liberal philosophy in this matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: General election, here we come.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, when we in this party speak of equality, we do not try to equalize all citizens and lower the incomes of upper income people to a very low average. This is the view of equality pursued by the New Democratic Party. That is indicated by the nature of the question itself, which lays emphasis on the gap between the lowest quintile and the highest quintile.

● (1502)

In our approach to these questions we talk of equality of opportunity: we do not talk about absolute equality of income among our citizens. What is important is that the group of Canadians below the poverty line be reduced in number. We do not say they should all become equally rich; we say they should become less poor. The statistics I gave in Calgary bear this out. When the government took office in 1968, about 18 per cent of Canadian families were below the poverty line.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are dealing with a matter of very general policy here. Obviously, the pursuit of this line of questioning would lead to a very wide-ranging debate. I allowed a lengthy question from the hon. member, and a lengthy answer was given. I do not think I ought to allow the matter to be pursued any further.

* * *

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, that brought about by the resignation of the Hon. Stanley Haidasz, P.C., member for the electoral district of Parkdale.

Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. HNATYSHYN—ALLEGED HANSARD OMISSION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to proceedings in the House of Commons yesterday and the motion under Standing Order 43 proposed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). I should like to make a correction to Hansard. At that time I stood in my place and pointed out that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) had said no to that motion.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. McKINNON—ALLEGED ALTERATION IN DEFENCE COMMITTEE RECORD

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, arising out of something which happened at a meeting of the defence committee this morning. I note the ruling which Your Honour made on March 20 concerning the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) having altered the official Hansard record. My question of privilege has to do with a similar occurrence this morning in the defence committee. The chairman of the committee has agreed to conduct an investigation into the matter, and I simply wish to reserve my right to put forward a question of privilege after he has presented his report, should it prove unsatisfactory.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will realize, I am sure, that the Chair is powerless to do anything about events which take place in a committee until such time as the committee reports to the House. But the hon. member is, obviously, simply guarding his position, and I respect that.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF BOARD'S REPORT

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act I wish to table, in both official languages, seven copies of a report sent to the Administrator by the Anti-Inflation Board.

* * *

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO CORRECT REVISED STATUTES

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-41, to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE RESPECTING LANGUAGE USED IN COURT TRIALS

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-42, to amend the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

PETITIONS

Mr. Art Lee (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition on behalf of the National Committee to Save Chinese Barbecued Products. It contains 26,106 signatures.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 341, 350, 546, 904, 925 and 1,137.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CBC—COVERAGE OF MANITOBA PROVINCIAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ON OCTOBER 11, 1977

Question No. 341—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What was the total number of CBC staff members involved in the coverage of the Manitoba provincial election campaign and the election results on October 11, 1977 and, in each case (a) what were their functions (b) how much time was spent in actual election coverage work?

2. Were any brought into Manitoba from other parts of Canada for the specific purpose of the Manitoba election coverage and results and, if so (a) how many (b) who were they and what were their functions (c) from where did they come and what were their transportation costs (d) what were the costs for food, lodging and other expenses while in Manitoba (e) what was the total cost of bringing these employees into Manitoba for the election coverage?

3. (a) What was the cost to the CBC for computer services and staff for election results coverage (b) who was hired (c) how many computer operators and related staff were involved (e) what was the total cost for all of the computer related services?

4. What was the total cost of covering the Manitoba provincial election campaign and the results and what were the costs involved in reaching this figure?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. One hundred sixty-five staff members took part at one time or another in actual election coverage work, i.e. coverage of the five-week campaign and/or election night results, on behalf of four services—English television, English radio, French television and French radio—for local, provincial and national use.

(a)	(b)
English Television
1 national news reporter	10 days
1 national news reporter	1 day
1 film cameraman (national news)	10 days
3 film cameramen (local news)	75 days (total)
3 news reporters (local news)	75 days (total)
1 national news reporter (local info. item)	7 days
1 cameraman for above item	7 days
1 director	1 day
1 producer	2 days
1 producer	30 days
2 directors	10 hours (total)
4 script assistants	26 hours (total)
6 production assistants	46 hours (total)
1 news supervisor	11 hours
1 news editor—host	11 hours
4 news editors—decision desk	41 hours (total)
3 news editors—editorial desk	24 hours (total)
2 announcers	19 hours (total)
1 reporter-analyst	11 hours
5 reporters—remote locations	33 hours (total)
1 reporter—ENG	5 hours
1 editorial assistant—control room	11 hours
1 editor—remote liaison	11 hours
6 riding reporters—phone results	36 hours (total)
1 host	6 days
1 communications specialist	35 days
1 communications assistant	7 days
1 communications specialist	6 days
1 teletype operator	1 day
1 teletype operator (backup)	1 day
6 runners	60 hours (total)
13 telephone operators—-results	91 hours (total)
Plus staging and design staff
English Radio
3 news reporters	6 weeks (total)
1 executive producer	120 hours
1 story producer	28 hours
1 results coordinator	28 hours
1 results coordinator	10 hours
1 host	28 hours
1 host	49 hours
2 results announcers	20 hours (total)
5 technicians	50 hours (total)
4 reporters—remote	40 hours (total)
English Radio
1 reporter	1 week
1 producer	1 week
1 news reporter	1 week
French Television
1 editorial liaison	1 day
1 reporter-analyst	5 weeks
1 reporter-analyst	3 weeks
1 reader—partial returns	1 day
1 anchorman	2 weeks
2 Viacom operators	2 days (total)
1 Extel operator	1 day
1 coordinator	4 weeks
1 floor manager	1 day
3 script assistants	12 weeks (total)
2 script assistants	2 days (total)
1 producer	4 weeks
1 assistant producer	1 week
1 host—guest desk	1 day
French Radio
1 Viacom operator	1 day
2 Extel operators	2 days (total)
1 reporter-analyst	5 weeks
1 editorial liaison	1 day
1 coordinator	4 weeks
1 producer	4 weeks
1 assistant producer	1 week
1 anchorman	2 weeks
1 reporter-analyst	3 weeks
1 office junior	1 day
3 readers—partial returns	3 days (total)
1 display board operator	1 day
1 supervising technician	2 weeks
1 technician	2 weeks
2 technical operators	2 days (total)
At Party Committee Rooms (French Radio and Television)
1 reporter—with NDP	5 weeks
1 producer	1 day
1 floor manager	1 day
1 radio technician	1 day
1 reporter—with Liberals	5 weeks
1 producer	1 day
1 radio technician	1 day
1 reporter—with Conservatives	5 weeks
1 production assistant	1 day
1 radio technician	1 day

2. Yes. (a) English Services Division—11; French Services Division—16*. (b) With reference to names, see note below re individual employees. Functions (this staff also included in answers to 1. and/or 3. (c):

	(c)
English Services
1 TV director	Toronto
1 TV producer	Toronto
1 host	Toronto
2 communications specialists	Toronto
1 communications specialist	Ottawa
1 project manager (computers)	Toronto
1 computer specialist	Ottawa
1 computer analyst	Toronto
1 computer specialist	Ottawa
2 computer programmers	Ottawa

	(c)
French Services
1 TV coordinator	Montreal
3 TV script assistants	Montreal
1 TV producer	Montreal
1 reporter	Regina
1 reporter	Chicoutimi
1 reporter-analyst	Montreal
1 TV anchorman	Montreal
1 radio coordinator	Montreal
1 radio producer	Ottawa
1 radio anchorman	Montreal
1 reporter-analyst	Edmonton
2 Video TV technicians	Montreal
1 computer analyst	Montreal

* 16 staff members required because of the comparatively small French-language operation at CBC Winnipeg

See note below re transportation costs and for parts 2 (d) and (e)

	English TV	English Radio	French TV	French Radio
(a)	2(i)	—	3(i)	—
(b)	35(i)	4(i)	2(i)	3(i)
(c)	26	0(ii)	2	0
(d)	0	1(iii)	0	0
(e)	3	3	3	3
(f)	8(iv)	0	0	0

(i) In each vertical column, the figures given in (c), (d), (e) and (f) are included in (a) and (b).
(ii) technicians' time was less than one day and no seperate technician was assigned to radio.
(iii) producer and editor-in-charge.
(iv) editorial and production staff.

3. (a) See note below. (b) Only CBC staff were used. (c) 18. (d) See answer to 4. below.

4. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the names of individual employees and the costs involved in program projects. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

3. English TV-special program 1,700 hours, The National 221 hours. English Radio—249 hours. French TV and Radio—384 hours (same staff used for both services).

4. (a) A car and a plane were hired to transfer program material. (b) See the reply to 1. above.

CBC—COVERAGE OF PREMIERS' CONFERENCE AT ST. ANDREWS

Question No. 350—Mr. McCain:

1. What was the total cost of CBC's coverage of the Premiers' Conference at St. Andrews covering such items as (a) transportation of personnel and equipment to the conference (b) accommodations, meals and related expenses (c) setting up of equipment (d) production and telecasting of the TV special on the conference (e) managerial expenses (f) accounting costs?

2. How many persons were employed by CBC for the Conference in the category (a) on camera personnel (b) off camera personnel (c) of a technical capacity (d) of an administrative capacity (e) as a reporter or correspondent (f) miscellaneous positions?

3. What was the total number of working hours spent by the employees of CBC in covering the Conference and in producing the programme on the Conference?

4. Were helicopters, airplanes or other vehicles used to transfer tapes, recording and program material from St. Andrews to stations for broadcasting and, if so (a) how many were rented and from whom (b) how much was paid for each vehicle?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the costs relating to individual program projects. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

[Mr. Roberts.]

CBC—BUDGET FOR "THE FIFTH ESTATE"

Question No. 546—Mr. McCain:

What was the budget of CBC program The Fifth Estate covering such items as production, air time, capital costs, etc., for 1976-77 and what is the budget for 1977-78?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such details of its internal management and administration as the budgets for individual programs. The background to this custom is explained in detail in the reply to question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

IMPORTATION OF FISH SPECIES

Question No. 904—Mr. Marshall:

What fish species did Canada import in the years 1976 and 1977 and, what was the dollar value?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: Source: Statistics Canada, Catalogue 65-007, imports by Commodities.

NOTE: Current statistics only available to September, 1977.

CANADIAN IMPORTS OF FISH PRODUCTS, BY MAIN SPECIES, 1976-77

Quantities (Q) in metric tones, product weight; Values (V) in thousand dollars

SPECIES and PRODUCTS	1976		1976 (Jan. Sept.)		1977 (Jan. Sept.)
	Q	V	Q	V	Q	V
COD	1,790	3,147	1,370	2,404	1,891	2,747
Fresh or frozen	1,790	3,147	1,370	2,404	1,891	2,747
HADDOCK and HAKE	2,539	3,161	1,578	1,892	2,267	2,257
Fresh or frozen	2,539	3,161	1,578	1,892	2,267	2,257
HALIBUT	965	3,137	661	1,945	316	1,260
Fresh or frozen	965	3,137	661	1,945	316	1,260
SALMON	3,495	10,305	2,250	6,253	5,299	7,166
Fresh or frozen	1,505	4,835	1,088	3,213	2,970	4,581
Canned	1,990	5,470	1,162	3,040	2,329	2,585
SPECIES and PRODUCTS	1976		1976 (Jan. Sept.)		1977 (Jan. Sept.)
	Q	V	Q	V	Q	V
TUNA	12,903	23,712	8,212	16,163	11,943	23,432
Fresh or frozen	3,883	2,765	1,450	1,075	6,251	5,591
Canned, flake pack	3,577	7,988	2,698	5,736	1,782	5,961
Canned, not specified	5,443	12,959	4,064	9,352	3,910	11,880
TROUT	701	1,782	516	1,233	709	2,180
Fresh or frozen	701	1,782	516	1,233	709	2,180
HERRING	565	779	366	476	390	589
Pickled	289	362	221	257	108	152
Canned	276	417	145	219	282	437
ANCHOVY	233	721	183	531	333	1,303
Canned	233	721	183	531	333	1,303
SARDINE	1,277	2,668	748	1,529	1,041	2,106
Canned	1,277	2,668	748	1,529	1,041	2,106
SEAFISH, NOT SPECIFIED	—	30,167	—	22,168	—	28,587
Fresh or frozen	14,365	14,335	12,275	11,281	17,639	12,332
Fresh or frozen, steaks and blocks	5,933	7,716	4,502	5,603	7,483	10,789
Smoked	238	380	194	303	228	319
Salted or dried	1,693	3,625	937	1,874	940	2,210
Pickled	87	80	59	58	47	40
Canned	2,601	1,715	2,305	1,260	1,025	1,577
Liver and Visceral oil	—	213	—	160	—	228
Fish and marine animal oil	299	233	271	208	264	173
Meal	962	309	792	243	406	128
Foods and feeds	2,323	1,561	1,080	1,178	333	791
FRESHWATER FISH, NOT SPECIFIED	1,114	1,876	730	1,029	1,789	1,149
Fresh or frozen	1,114	1,876	730	1,029	1,789	1,149
CRAB	836	3,462	483	2,119	1,107	3,468
Fresh or frozen	811	3,389	463	2,063	917	3,369
Canned	25	73	20	56	190	99
LOBSTER	2,524	23,401	1,782	17,051	2,245	17,523
Fresh or frozen	2,524	23,401	1,782	17,051	2,245	17,523
OYSTER	1,829	4,379	1,087	2,799	1,298	4,245
Fresh or frozen	597	1,015	217	524	271	599
Canned	1,232	3,364	870	2,275	1,027	3,646
SPECIES and PRODUCTS	1976		1976 (Jan. Sept.)		1977 (Jan. Sept.)
	Q	V	Q	V	Q	V
SHRIMP and PRAWN	11,002	60,585	8,205	41,715	7,399	46,908
Fresh or frozen	8,607	47,678	6,427	32,585	5,849	35,433
Canned	2,395	12,907	1,778	9,130	1,550	11,475
CLAM	2,387	2,947	1,538	1,821	1,254	2,274
Canned	2,387	2,947	1,538	1,821	1,254	2,274
SHELLFISH, NOT SPECIFIED	2,867	6,628	1,943	4,533	2,633	5,905
Fresh or frozen	2,094	4,128	1,467	2,830	2,052	3,602
Canned	773	2,500	476	1,703	581	2,303
TOTAL IMPORTS	—	182,857	—	125,660	—	153,099

Point of Order—Mr. Cossitt

IMPORTED PENICILLIN

Question No. 925—Mr. Herbert:

What steps are taken to ensure that imported penicillin is manufactured under the same exacting standards for plant and premises as are enforced on Canadian drug manufacturers?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): For parenteral antibiotics, the Department of National Health and Welfare inspects foreign firms and issues licences for the manufacture of specific products offered for sale in Canada. For all other drugs, the Canadian importer must maintain detailed information and evidence that the conditions prescribed in the Food and Drug Regulations, relating to manufacturing and quality control, are met. Importers are routinely requested to furnish this evidence for evaluation. The Health Protection Branch of the Department has concluded bilateral agreements with four countries, the United States, France, the United Kingdom and Sweden, to exchange information on the capability of manufacturers. Commercial shipments of drugs entering Canada are also monitored.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—ADVERTISING IN NEWSPAPERS OF THE PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Herbert:

During the past year, did the Department of Public Works insert (a) French language advertisements in English language newspapers (b) English language advertisements in French language newspapers, in the Province of Quebec and, if so (a) on how many occasions (b) for what reason?

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): (a) French language advertisements in English language newspapers, in the Province of Quebec, were placed by the Department of Public Works: (i) on one occasion; (ii) because of the importance of the project and the large circulation of the newspaper, the department wanted to reach the largest number possible of French and English contractors. (b) There were no English language advertisements inserted in French language newspapers in the province of Quebec.

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. COSSITT—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS NOS. 44, 45, 48 AND 52

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I should like to begin by drawing attention to question No. 1,085 which was placed on the order paper on January 23 and which has not as yet been answered. In doing so I should like to thank the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) for sending me the answer which should, actually, have been tabled in the House. I cannot understand how such a thing could happen, but it happened. Here is the answer which should have been given in the House some time ago. What is even more interesting is the fact that the reply bears a departmental notation which reads as follows: "There is a time limit of ten working days for preparing replies to written questions." The notation then goes on to say other things concerning steps to be taken if an extension of time is required, and so on. The note is signed by Ronald Regimbald, Public Affairs Branch, Parliamentary Returns.

Mr. Speaker, if there is a ten-day limit on preparing replies to questions put down by members of this House, I think I am justified in asking why question No. 44 which was originally placed on the order paper on December 20, 1976—one year and four months ago—concerning a letter sent by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to all members of the Liberal party in this House, has not been answered, bearing, as it does, upon his use of government aircraft.

I draw attention, also, to three further questions which are in a similar category, first, No. 45, placed on the order paper one year and two months ago on February 7, 1977, concerning the massive fingerprinting operation carried out on public servants; the government will not disclose the number of those who have been fingerprinted, but it runs into thousands and thousands and involves an invasion of privacy about which the Canadian people have a right to know. Question No. 48 has been on the order paper for one year, or almost one year, dating from April 18, 1977. It concerns certain remarks which the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) made in a speech about a year ago. Finally, I refer to question No. 52 which was placed on the order paper last June, eight months ago, concerning Martin Goldfarb and the amount of public business he has received, he being the chief pollster for the Liberal Party of Canada.

● (1512)

I feel that if ten days is the limit, a member has a perfect right to rise, bring a question to the attention of the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), and to ask him if he is prepared to guarantee that before this parliament is dissolved, whether it be this week, next week or the week after, as it surely will be, all questions on the order paper which have been there for more than four or five months will definitely be answered. I think it is a disgrace to every member who puts questions on the order paper that they are not answered and that the information requested is not forthcoming. I do not know how the minister can sit there, keep a straight face, look off into space, and have nothing to say on this subject. I hope he has the intestinal fortitude to rise at this time—not leave it to his parliamentary secretary—and tell us why, ten days being the rule, two years seem to be the actual fact.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the standing orders of this House do not provide for any minimum and specific delay for answering questions on the order paper. If the hon. member sees some notes on the documents, they might be internal administrative delays which have nothing to do with the rules of the House but in any case I will check the point he has raised.

As regards his questions, I want to point out to the House that the hon. member has always been well treated by parliament and that we shall continue to do so in the future.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Mr. Cossitt: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has been given the floor and permitted to develop a rather extensive point of order. There is no machinery by which I can allow a second intervention on a point of order.

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I simply want to correct what the parliamentary secretary has said. He has completely twisted the remarks I made, and I therefore have a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to let him sit over there and lie about what I said to this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cossitt: I have the right and the privilege to raise this point because he completely misquoted what I said. I think I have a right to bring it up.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I listened very carefully to the remarks of the parliamentary secretary, as I did to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). Neither were out of order in any respect.

Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO ENLARGE POWERS OF CORPORATION

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion) moved that Bill C-38, to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Regional Development.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of discussions which have taken place I believe there is an understanding that we can put this bill through all stages right here in the House. So far as we are concerned, there is to be no debate on it. It is simply voting some money which was dropped out of a supply bill a while ago.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that this was a dollar item which had been ruled out of order in another appropriations bill, and there is the agreement of all parties to proceed directly with the matter through all stages without debate.

Mr. Speaker: In which case the motion would obviously have to be changed. Rather than referring the bill to the Standing Committee on Regional Development, with the consent of the House the motion would have to be changed to read "to the Committee of the Whole". Does the House consent to that change?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

* * *

NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF AGENCY TO SUPERVISE PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved that Bill C-25, to establish the Northern Pipeline Agency, to facilitate the planning and construction of a pipeline for the transmission of natural gas from Alaska and Northern Canada and to give effect to an agreement between Canada and the United States of America on principles applicable to such a pipeline and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There appeared on the notice paper this morning a proposal to amend the standing orders of the House of Commons dealing with reporting to parliament. In rising on this point of order I would like to commend the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and, indeed, the minister, for the discussions which were conducted in the committee, and before we begin this important debate at this final stage of the bill I wonder if the minister could indicate that forthwith upon third reading it is his intention to call and have dealt with finally this amendment, which would add to our standing orders a provision that the agency would be reporting to a standing committee of this House in the terms of the proposal on the notice paper.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to speak very briefly in the debate at third reading of this historic bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What about the point of order?

Mr. MacEachen: I will deal with the question of parliamentary scrutiny of the operations of the pipeline agency in the course of my remarks.

It is not my intention to speak at any length at all because the issues involved in this legislation have been carefully considered by the standing committee, and yesterday the House of Commons dealt with all the amendments which had been put forward at the report stage of the bill.

The legislation governing the construction of a pipeline to carry both Canadian and United States natural gas from the Arctic to southern markets in both countries is necessarily lengthy and complex, but I am pleased to say that, despite very thorough and careful consideration by all members of the House, the main outlines of the bill and the framework of the legislation have emerged intact from that careful and thorough consideration.

At the same time the bill has been dealt with expeditiously, I believe reflecting a recognition of the immense contribution this project can make to the Canadian economy and to increasing our energy self-reliance. As hon. members recall, the bill was debated for seven days at second reading stage. The special committee which was established to consider the legislation in detail sat on 11 days and held 21 sessions. During that period it did receive the views of a substantial number of witnesses.

● (1522)

Certainly I would like to express my appreciation to members of the committee who attended with great dedication and who conducted the sessions with the minimum of partisanship and a maximum amount of cooperation. Also, I should like to express my appreciation to witnesses who appeared before the committee and whose views were carefully considered by members of the committee and, in some cases, whose views were directly reflected in amendments that were made to the bill either in the special committee or at the report stage of the bill itself.

A number of proposals were made in the committee, notably by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) and other members, to improve and strengthen the bill. They were adopted unanimously. In fact it is worth mentioning that in the course of the committee's deliberations there was not a single recorded division. Every clause, every item before the committee, was accepted unanimously without any recorded division. But, of course, not included among the amendments that were accepted in the committee, or indeed at the report stage, is the matter of providing parliament with a continuing opportunity to maintain surveillance over the process of the project itself. I gave an undertaking in the course of the committee hearings that I would propose, on behalf of the government, an amendment to the standing orders establishing a continuing committee on northern pipelines. Hon. members will have noticed that there is on today's notice paper a motion in my name, proposing:

That Standing Order 65(1) be amended by adding immediately after subsection (s) the following:

"(t) Northern pipelines, to consist of not more than 15 members, to which shall stand permanently referred all reports, orders, agreements, regulations, directions and approvals mentioned in sections 12, 13, 14, 15 and 22 of the Northern Pipeline Act; provided that the said committee shall report thereon at least three times in every sesssion."

Provided that this subsection shall be deleted from the standing orders on the day on which the Northern Pipeline Agency ceases to exist.

I propose, in reply to the questions raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), to call this motion and put it before the House as soon as it is appropriate to do so following the passage of the bill. I am not quite sure whether we must wait until the bill has received Royal Assent because of the reference to the sections of the Northern Pipeline Act, but in any event it is my intention to call the motion and have it adopted, if the House so wishes, at the earliest appropriate opportunity.

The creation of this special committee will make it possible for members of the House of Commons to sit with a continuing reference, and to receive reports, orders, agreements, regulations, directions and approvals as mentioned in the relevant sections of the bill. The committee, of course, will be free to organize its own activities, but this material will be automatically referred, and to ensure that the House will have an opportunity to examine the work of the committee there is a provision that the said committee shall report thereon at least three times in every session. I believe that is a reasonable stipulation which will provide the committee with occasions to meet and to report to the House. I believe that is a constructive provision.

From the very beginning I undertook in the House to ensure that parliament was brought in at every stage, and indeed we did provide for a debate in the House of Commons during last summer when all political parties had an opportunity to express themselves on the Berger inquiry and to indicate what, in their view, should be the main lines of any ultimate pipeline construction in Canada.

I am happy to say that the agreement which was negotiated between Canada and the United States and the bill which is now before the House contain, if not all, a substantial proportion of the suggestions and ideas that were put forward by members of all parties. Even though the New Democratic Party has raised certain objections to certain aspects of the bill, if reference is made to the speeches made on the occasion last summer and the philosophy outlined in those speeches, it will be found that a substantial part of the proposals made by them was reflected subsequently in the agreement and in the legislation.

In the case of the official opposition, I want to express my appreciation to the hon. member for Yukon and his colleagues on the committee for the constructive approach taken with a view to providing an expeditious passage of the bill, and also to providing certain changes which, in my view, were an improvement on the original measure as it was introduced in the House of Commons.

The last time I had the opportunity to put a major bill through the House of Commons was, of course, when I introduced the bill on the reform to the Election Expenses Act, and that, as hon. members will recall, was a major change in our electioneering. It will be applied, of course, for the first time in the next election. However, political parties have already felt the benefits of that legislation, and political parties and candidates will appreciate even more the benefits that have accrued from the major undertaking. On that occasion as well there was a high degree of cooperation in the committee, and when the bill was passed it was, in a sense, a bill that had emerged from the House of Commons rather than the government itself.

I do not say that the same degree of consensus exists with respect to the northern pipeline bill, but I will say that, as time goes on, members as well as citizens throughout the country will appreciate even more the substantial benefits that will accrue to Canada in terms of increased production, employment, and access to energy reserves from the building of this huge pipeline system. The debate itself and the discussions in committee served to underline the enormity and the significance of these benefits.

• (1532)

Of course the question of Canadian participation and Canadian content has been a matter of debate. We dealt with amendments proposed on that subject yesterday. It is not my intention to relive that debate, except to say that evidence in committee, given by the company particularly and by officials from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, has certainly served to strengthen my conviction that Canadians will participate to the maximum possible extent in the construction of this line, and that the estimates which have been made by myself, when the agreement was signed and in the course of the debate, with respect to Canadian employment, Canadian jobs, impact on Canadian industry, and the benefits to Canada's balance of payments, will be fully realized.

In addition to what I have said already, it is important to underline the acute awareness on the part of hon. members on all sides of the House that this project be carried out in a manner which will minimize the adverse social and economic effects of the project on all of the people of the north, including the native people; and minimize the adverse effects on the environment in which they live and work, at the same time as ensuring that they will derive the greatest possible benefits both in the short run and over the longer term. We believe the project will contribute significant benefits to all of Canada, but we want to ensure that the adverse environmental and social effects be minimized. That sentiment was reflected in the comments made by all hon. members of parliament. I think that can be achieved, and I think the benefits for the northern people can be maximized during the course of construction.

In conclusion, I thank hon. members for the manner in which they have approached this measure. I wish to express the hope that it can be dealt with at this stage of the debate in the same expeditious manner which has characterized the preceding stages of the debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Northern Pipeline

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the remarks of the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) with interest, just as I listened with interest to his statements in response to questions put in the pipeline committee on which I was privileged to serve. That committee dealt with the entire aspect and many issues surrounding the Alaska pipeline.

In the area of another responsibility, which I share with other hon. members of the House, I have had some concern over the failure of one particular department to engage in any fashion in the discussion and debate surrounding the Alaska pipeline. That concern was reflected in Hansard dated March 16, 1978, when I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) about his role and his department's role in the development of the Alaska pipeline. By way of questions raised by the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), we had an opportunity to review the summary provided by DREE. It was a summary provided for the pipeline committee. I am not referring to the pipeline committee of the House, but rather of the government. Certainly the review occasioned some concern in the House which was demonstrated during question period. It concerned the degree of Canadian involvement in the project. Some of those concerns have been answered, and some will not be answered until the pipeline project goes forward.

The concerns which have not been answered with reference to the role of DREE appear to indicate on the surface that this is where the role of DREE will stop, rather than where the role of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will begin. In response to my question about his role, the minister provided me with vague and general rhetoric, without any categorical statement or indication that his department would be most substantially involved in the pipeline. The minister indicated that there had been some discussion with the province of British Columbia. He said that there had been no discussions with the municipalities, which is not quite correct. DREE officials have met with representatives of the regional district in a conference which was held in Fort St. John, a conference which was quite noticeable by the absence of any provincial representation. I see no reason why, in concert with provincial representatives, officials from the minister's department could not meet with municipal officials concerning the industrial infrastructure which is bound to follow the development of the pipeline, and perhaps even precede it.

The minister apparently thinks the service industries will have to respond. He said the same to me when I raised the question before the Standing Committee on Regional Development on March 21. At that time the minister said the following:

> What we intend to do is to make sure that while the pipeline is being built we maximize the benefit to Canada and also, in your case, you were mentioning obviously British Columbia.

Also in response to my question in the House, he indicated that the service sector would certainly be involved. He said the following:

—I think the service industries will have to respond to the opportunities that will be offered to them on the construction—

This gives me further cause for concern, because apparently no study is going forward or being planned for some semblance of orderly development of the service sector. Hopefully the service sectors will remain in an organized fashion in industrial parks or as needed. Certainly I hope we do not see the service sectors scattered along the route of the Alaska highway and the Alaska pipeline, eventually to become little isolated ghettos of rubbish and garbage which are so apparent after major construction projects of this kind. The minister has failed to address himself to this particular issue.

In response to my inquiry before the standing committee, the minister said that he intended to make sure there would be maximum benefits. He then went on to say the following:

—how to ensure the maximum benefit for B.C. in that instance through the whole exercise, I have no explicit plan in mind, but we have discussed that.

On the one hand the minister provided a statement through his departmental officials. A very substantial degree of analytical study went into that statement. The minister has indicated his department's concern only with reference to the future possibility of Canadian participation in the pipeline and the economic impacts. I must say I do not believe that particular aspect is in his mandate. Beyond that, when we move into the area of the minister's mandate dealing with economic development, the expansion of the economy, and areas which are disadvantaged, we find the minister really is not interested.

● (1542)

This morning, sir, before the same Standing Committee on Regional Development, I had an opportunity to ask the minister again whether he had expressed any concern to his provincial counterparts regarding the inquiry into the British Columbia railway. The minister apparently realizes, and his report indicates it, that rail is going to be one of the very substantial modes of moving pipe and other equipment to construction sites—at least in so far as rail runs into northern British Columbia. The minister's officials are not really aware of the fact that British Columbia had a very substantial inquiry into B.C. Rail. He is not aware that there has to be a very substantial upgrading of the roadbed before that rail system can provide the kind of service that is expected.

The minister has signed a subagreement as well with the province of British Columbia dealing with roads to resources in the north, whether they be railroads or highways, particularly in regard to coal development in the north. He did not seem to be aware this morning that, in fact, coal development in the north has been shunted aside because of the economy and the fact that coal is not selling. That particular type of soft coal has no market at this time.

The minister does not seem to be concerned over the fact that the forest industry, which is an important industry in northern British Columbia, also utilizes B.C. Rail and should also be receiving some form of assistance through DREE. He was unaware of the fact that the lieutenant governor of the province, in delivering the throne speech a week ago, stated that the government was seriously concerned about the condition of the forest industry in the province.

You may ask, Mr. Speaker, what the forest industry in British Columbia has got to do with the pipeline. The simple fact remains that the subagreement with respect to northern British Columbia, where 500 miles of this pipeline will be built, has two subagreements dealing with transportation and with forest and coal development. It would naturally follow, in a government with any sense of organization and forward thinking, that if the economy of the north is to be developed in one way, whether it is coal or forest or pipeline, then one should complement the other. There should be a realization that there is, indeed, going to be a very heavy demand on those transportation modes. It should also be realized that the service sector alone is not sufficient in the way of DREE examination.

I am not suggesting to the minister or the government that there should be DREE funding for the service sector, Mr. Speaker. I think, sir, as most supporters of free enterprise would think, they should be able to fend for themselves. Surely DREE, in concert with its provincial counterpart, should be looking at the fact that the service sector is going to go forward. Further, the minister and his departmental officials should be reading what has been said in the pipeline debate about the type of industry which will go along with the construction of the pipeline and follow the eventual development of the line once the system is in operation.

The minister has given no indication whatsoever of any concern in this regard. Indeed, I would think that it would be the minister's responsibility to look at the type of equipment that is going to be used in this pipeline, and to think in terms of heavy equipment, which we traditionally import from the United States. He should reflect on the fact that heavy equipment, manufactured in Canada by Canadians for Canadians on the Alaska pipeline, may be a very sensible investment.

There is not only the Alaska pipeline. Surely, to follow, will be the Dempster lateral, and then some years down the line we will eventually see a polar gas route. Bearing this in mind, Mr. Speaker, the horizons that are there now and that are going to develop in the north, it would be wise for the minister to expand his thinking to include the north. The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion has failed in appreciating and seizing upon an opportunity to advance the economic development of this country. I am not surprised when I see the type of attention he has failed to give to probably the single largest opportunity that has ever slipped through that minister's grasp.

Again, I must state for the record that I am astounded at the generalizations made by the minister in response to questions that I have raised in the House and before the committee with reference to the Alaska pipeline. I am appalled at the failure of the minister even to address himself to this vital subject.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the third reading stage debate on the bill on the northern pipeline. I want to reiterate the stand of the New Democratic Party in favour of the building of the northern gas pipeline, the Alcan pipeline as it is called.

Our concerns and, indeed, our reasons for voting against the bill that we have before us are that we feel it is inadequate and it does not represent the true interests of Canadians and Canadian companies. The bill has serious deficiencies and weaknesses, which I predict, some years down the road, will come back to haunt us. As I said, we are in favour of the Alcan pipeline running through Canada but we want to ensure that it will be built on the grounds that it will maximize Canadian content and Canadian jobs on the project. We have had assurances from the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) that this will be the case. However, those verbal assurances for us are not enough. We want to see something written into legislation which will become the law of the land and will guarantee maximum Canadian content and Canadian labour participation in this huge undertaking. To that extent, we moved a number of amendments in the House of Commons yesterday which, regrettably, were voted down by both the Liberal and Conservative members.

It might be worth while, Mr. Speaker, to recall the position of the New Democratic Party when it became apparent that the Alcan pipeline would be chosen over the Canadian Arctic Gas submission to bring natural gas down through the Mackenzie Valley to the southern part of Canada, and to the United States. In the debate in this House of Commons on August 4, 1977, the leader of the New Democratic Party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), moved an amendment to the government motion recommending the Alcan pipeline route. His position in that amendment, is worth while recalling, and I would like to quote from page 8044 of Hansard:

> —and after considering the evidence and reports of the relevant inquiries, this House approves the granting of a certificate for a pipeline through the southern Yukon as recommended in principle by the National Energy Board and the Lysyk and Hill inquiries, with particular reference to the following conditions:
>
> (1) That an Alcan pipeline authority be established immediately comprised of representatives of the native communities, labour, small business, consumers and conservationists from the affected pipeline corridor and from the federal, provincial and territorial governments, and that this authority be empowered to manage the regional impact of pipeline construction especially with respect to employment practices, and food, housing and utility prices as well as assuming the other responsibilities recommended by the above inquiries;

● (1552)

> (2) That a "Canada first" priority be enforced in hiring, contracting and supplying the pipeline with particular preference to local residents of the Yukon, British Columbia and Alberta in the vicinity of the pipeline route;
>
> (3) That no pipeline construction precede a fair settlement of the affected native land claims; and
>
> (4) That no pipeline construction commence before August 1981, and that the interval be used to inquire further into the local impact of pipeline construction, to determine final route selection, and to control project planning;
>
> and furthermore that exports of Canadian natural gas licensed for delivery to the United States after 1985 be considered as credits to be redeemed from the United States on an equivalent BTU basis."

Those were the conditions the NDP put forward and which we wanted to see incorporated in this legislation before us. Unfortunately, only part of those conditions are in the legislation. Indeed, the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council said he believed most of the conditions the NDP had asked for were met. I have to disagree with him on that point. We do have a committee, not only a government committee which will be supervising the planning and construction of the pipeline, but also, of course, the House of Commons committee which will be monitoring these developments.

Every member in this House knows from past history the attitude of this government to northern development. Not always has it been in the interests of northerners, and often their interests are sacrificed for the expediency of those more powerful interest groups in southern Canada. We also know from experience that this government has had a very sad record in protecting northern environment and the rights of native people in the north. It was this government and its former ministers of Indian affairs and northern development who were all gung-ho on the Mackenzie Valley pipeline route. So I am a bit suspicious that any agency set up by this government, and under this government's control, will prove to be beneficial to Canadian interests, and especially to northern interests.

I am also worried that the parliamentary committee, set up to monitor the progress of this pipeline will be ineffective in the long run. Every member in the House of Commons knows that every House committee is dominated by Liberal members. If there is an embarrassment to the government in terms of any phase of the construction or development of that pipeline, we all know that any attempts by opposition members to move correcting motions or courses of action are outvoted. All that we can hope for as an opposition is to generate enough publicity to embarrass the government into taking some corrective action.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that this government has long since become insensitive to publicity. One thinks only of the examples of the economic problems in this country, the serious representations that opposition members have made to correct the situation and how those representations have fallen on deaf ears.

For these reasons the bill before us needed strengthening and yet we do not have these corrective measures in it.

The real concern my colleagues have is the lack of specific guarantees in the legislation to maximize Canadian content and participation. It was for these reasons that we moved a number of amendments to incorporate in the bill before us some very specific, concrete and clear demands on the government and the pipeline companies so that we would have, as the Deputy Prime Minister assured us verbally, at least 90 per cent Canadian content in this vast undertaking, and that we would have at least 100,000 man-years of employment during the construction of this pipeline. It seemed to us that if the government is so confident that this could be achieved, it would have no objection to having such provisions in the legislation so that we could rely on law rather than on some cabinet minister's assurance, a cabinet minister who might be here today and gone tomorrow.

Why have we moved such amendments? Why are we so concerned that we will not achieve this maximization of Canadian content? We are concerned for a number of reasons. First I would like to cite some of the government's own departmental studies which have given rise to our concern.

We know that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion undertook a study of the proposed pipeline. They did an exhaustive analysis and came up with the conclusion, and we have quoted it in this House, that, unless there were guarantees, we could be more likely assured of only 67 per cent Canadian content, not the 90 per cent the minister promised, and not 100,000 man-years of employment, but more realistically somewhere between 60,000 and 68,000 man-years of employment. Surely if a respected government agency has produced a study like, this we should have some cause for concern if they are saying themselves that we need guarantees, or because of market situations and unfair trade situations and the way the treaty has been written, we will not get the maximum Canadian participation.

We have also heard reports from our friends in the American government. This is an energy pipeline and it will mainly benefit the Americans. It will move Alaskan gas through a Canadian land corridor to the 48 states. The Americans have been telling their business, their industry, and their Congress that it is a most beneficial undertaking. They have set up a situation or an agreement whereby they expect to achieve their maximum in terms of content and labour participation. Indeed the Americans are so confident that they predict 97 per cent American content in the Alaska portion of this pipeline yet here we are quibbling or afraid to even guarantee 90 per cent.

I recall when the Deputy Prime Minister first made the announcement after the negotiations and it was something like 98 per cent Canadian content. Then this figure was reduced to 90 per cent. The Americans are confident that they will get at least 97 per cent of the work on their section of the pipeline and will be employing American labour. It would seem to me we should be assured that we get maximum on the Canadian portion of the line.

We know the Americans have more competitive advantages, many more than we have in Canada. They have skilled labour which has recently worked on the Alyeska pipeline. This labour will be pressuring to move into northern Canada to work on the line here. As I say, I have some worry about whether our monitoring agency will be able to exclude these personnel, especially under the terms of some of the contracts that may be granted. We know there is American pipeline equipment that was used on the Alaska pipeline which has been bought up by American contractors at discounted prices. They are ready to go, in terms of submitting bids to work on the Canadian section of the line.

• (1602)

We should be guided by the fact that the Alyeska pipeline in the state of Alaska was eventually constructed with Japanese steel. It was not an American company that won the contract. I fear that this pattern may be repeated for the contracts issued on the pipeline coming through Canada. We have this government's studies and these American projections, all of which lead us to worry about whether we will get the 90 per cent content promised to us by the Deputy Prime Minister.

If the Department of Regional Economic Expansion Study is not enough to convince hon. members that there indeed may be some difficulties, I refer them to another report issued by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce entitled "Canadian Industrial and Manpower Requirements and Content for Northern Gas Pipeline". I went through this report in detail yesterday during the course of moving my amendments. I would again like to quote a couple of relevant sections from that report which back up the contention of this party that, unless we have these guarantees, we are not going to get the maximum benefits from the pipeline project. I quote from the report by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce:

> Given that American firms are very well placed to win contracts for the U.S.A. portions, they, as a result, are in a more favourable position to bid on contracts for the Canadian segment by being able to pass on to the pipeline contractor some portions of the savings to be achieved by combining the Canadian requirements with their existing production for the U.S.A. sections of the line.

Here again American industry, through the efficiencies and economies of scale in terms of their production capacity for the sections of the line that will run through American territory, will have a competitive advantage over Canadian firms. That is an admission by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. That same report worries about the state of our economy in terms of the degree of foreign ownership and the relationship between subsidiaries and parent companies as far as Canadian content in this undertaking is concerned.

I again quote from the report:

> The danger that sales contracts of Canadian branch plants of foreign multinationals which exceeded their existing capacity would simply be transferred to the non-Canadian parent instead of to alternative Canadian suppliers. Similar problems could occur if the low cost offshore plants were to be used to fill a bid made and originally intended for the successful Canadian subsidiary.

There is a very real possibility that Canadian companies will not get any spillover if American or foreign subsidiaries are producing at their maximum capability. Instead, that business will be transferred to the parent company of a subsidiary. I again quote from the Industry, Trade and Commerce report:

> Competition in world markets is intense and Canadian companies could be outbid by the pricing strategies of Japanese and European pipe producers. Projections by steel experts reflect a tough world competitive situation.

The pipeline treaty between Canada and the United States allows for open competitive bidding. It is not just a bidding situation between the United States and Canada. Japan, West Germany, Italy, or any other foreign country which has a steel industry will be able to bid on the contracts for this pipeline. Surely hon. members do not need to be reminded that, in a world of international competition, all kinds of devices and strategies are used that in the end amount to unfair competition, submitting bids at a low cost, bids that no Canadian company can match because of the lack of subsidies and other kinds of incentives provided by countries such as Japan.

This has been demonstrated again and again. I think, for example, of the latest charge under the Anti-dumping Act against Japan, by Algoma Steel in my constituency, for dumping on the Canadian market. There are also examples of American steel companies. One example is a recent pipeline contract in Mexico. American companies deliberately underbid 20 per cent so that they would get the contract for the Mexican pipeline and thereby not have to reduce the operation of their steel mills.

There is a slack in the world steel economy in terms of productive capacity. The bidding will be very intense. Is anyone naive enough to believe that the steel industry of Japan, West Germany, Italy, or the United States under the DISC program, will not have special concessions and assistance in terms of taxation policies, transportation policies or grant policies to allow them to submit bids in an unfair way to the detriment of Canadian steel producers?

The Canadian steel industry is confident it can win the bulk of the contracts on a competitive basis. We must remember it is an assumption of a fair competitive basis. I am worried that with unfair competition and lack of commitment in terms of some kind of guarantee, in the face of unfair competition Canadian steel companies and construction companies will not get the contracts for this undertaking. That is why we moved amendments recently to ensure that in the legislation we would have these guarantees of 90 per cent content and so on.

The government argues we cannot have that kind of guarantee in the legislation because it would be against the GATT treaty, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. I reject that argument. This is a bilateral agreement, an energy cooperation agreement between Canada and the United States. It mainly falls outside the narrow provisions of the GATT treaty. Indeed, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in its analysis of the situation correctly pointed out there have been precedents in the past relating to pipeline construction in both countries, the Interprovincial and the Portland-Montreal pipeline, as well as the Trans-Canada gas pipeline, whereby preference has been given to the country through which the pipeline passed in terms of construction and general contracts.

We made a mistake in the treaty that was signed with the United States, allowing for international competitive bidding. I am confident, if we had the competitive bidding within Canada, that our industry could meet the requirements of that pipeline construction at a fair cost. It is my worry that without guarantees we will find ourselves at such a competitive disadvantage that we will not get the maximum of the contracts. Certainly we may get something like 50 or 60 per cent. However, in light of the fact that we are taking all the risks for this construction, it is unreasonable because we will not be receiving the benefits in terms of natural gas until some long-off future date if and when a Dempster lateral spur pipeline is built in the Mackenzie valley.

● (1612)

I have no qualms about arguing there should be provision for maximum Canadian participation. I think the government is using the GATT argument as an excuse. The monitoring committee of the House of Commons, as I have said, while a welcome improvement to the bill, will be powerless to redress any major setback in terms of Canadian content.

Mr. Speaker, another position taken by the NDP was that there should be no construction of the pipeline through the affected areas until native land claims had been settled. That amendment was not accepted by the House. We have offered another amendment which, in my opinion, is weaker but which, nevertheless, is better than nothing. It would provide that the native people's land claims would not be prejudiced while the pipeline continues to be built, supposing, of course, that they were not settled prior to the actual construction. My fear is that unless these land claims are settled before the pipeline construction commences, we shall be faced with a number of problems. I see real difficulty for Foothills in trying to raise the necessary capital in the financial markets of the world unless investors are assured that there will be no challenges in the courts by the native people, long litigation or other such delays in construction which will raise the cost of the pipeline. The only alternative, it seems to me, is to ensure the land claims issue is settled prior to the beginning of construction. Construction is not due to begin until 1981.

I had hoped that our amendment on the native claims issue would have brought pressure on the government to move expeditiously and fairly in getting a settlement to the land claims. We know the history of this government has been a sad one as it relates to the native people in terms of betrayal of their trust and interests. Had the amendment been passed it would have been a legislative incentive, an inducement to the government to stop dragging its feet and to get the land claims settled in a fair and judicious manner. Unfortunately, that amendment was not accepted. I hope the land claims issue, which unfortunately is now in limbo, but which could conceivably be a very contentious one if not settled by 1981, will not delay construction of the pipeline project, though, as I have said, I do have certain fears that it may do just that.

I am also puzzled in a way by some of the statements of my friends in the Conservative party who have rushed to the government's defence. I know the members who represent steel industry towns, such as the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), were very concerned, as we in the NDP were that the government did not see fit to legislate guarantees to maximize Canadian content and Canadian labour. Unfortunately, the minister has not been able to convince his colleagues that this represents a real danger and I regret his failure to do so.

Again, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has castigated the government for blaming the GATT agreement for its failure to include guarantees in the bill. That argument, too, seems to have been abandoned by his colleagues. I hope the Conservative party has not misplaced its trust in this Liberal government. I find it strange, in light of the criticisms it has made of the way in which the goverment has behaved that the Conservatives have been willing to accept a bill which is in a weak form when it could have been strengthened considerably. For those reasons I regret that they have not supported the amendments we advanced.

This is a great undertaking, Mr. Speaker. It will mean a cost of some $10 billion, and it may mean at least some temporary relief to the massive unemployment situation we are facing as a result of Liberal government mismanagement of our economy. I hope that Canadian workers and Canadian companies a few years from now, when the contracts have been let and construction is under way, will not be short-changed by a bill which this House has been content to pass in the form now before us, when it had the opportunity to strengthen it by way of amendment. I hope the pipeline project proceeds without undue delay, without jeopardy to the environment, and in the interests of Northern Canadians and, indeed, of our friends in the United States. My only regret is that though we had the opportunity to improve the bill in significant ways for the benefit of Canadians, this House did not see fit to accept the needed amendments. I can only say my reservations still stand. I hope I am proved wrong. But the whole purpose, the whole stance of this party was to get the majority benefits for Canadians whom I thought we were elected to serve.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully this afternoon to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) in his wrap-up speech on third reading and there was one area that I think he should have addressed himself to this afternoon, that is, the position of the churches of Canada with respect to the pipeline. I hope that the Deputy Prime Minister will find it possible to take note of what I am about to say because I think the brief which was presented to the cabinet just before Easter on behalf of the five major churches in Canada was a significant one and needs to be responded to by the members of the government and, failing that, certainly by members of this House.

Throughout this long process, from the beginning of the Berger and Lysyk inquiries, through the debate and work of the special committee and in the House, we know there have been small groups representing the churches—one might call them social activist groups—which have been lobbying very strongly against this bill and against the pipeline, largely on the grounds that the native people of the north are going to be hurt.

It was my feeling, as this process went on, that the objections these groups were making on behalf of the churches were being noted and taken care of and that there were answers to them. To my surprise, a few days before Easter, not a small group but the main delegation from the Roman Catholic, United, Presbyterian, Lutheran and Anglican churches—what might be called the mainline Christian churches of Canada—presented a brief to the federal cabinet which had to do with the ecumenically arrived at position of the churches on the economic outlook in Canada.

[Mr. Symes.]

• (1622)

Four major areas of concern were outlined in the brief which was presented to the cabinet. The first was northern development, the second was income distribution, the third was investment transfers, and the fourth was regional disparities. I do not propose at this moment to go into all the implications of the comments made by the church leaders of our country in this interesting brief. I will save that for another occasion, but I do not think we can let this bill pass at third reading without responding adequately to the more or less up-to-date comments of the church leaders, who continue in their opposition to the northern pipeline.

The inter-church brief opposing the pipeline deals with four points. The first has to do with native land claims. On this point the church brief says the following:

> The Council of Yukon Indians has our support in their insistence that these matters be settled and implemented before construction begins.

Second, the church brief makes the point that the second stage inquiry should be proceeded with in order to guarantee social justice with regard to the pipeline. Third, the inter-church brief asks how the government can guarantee for Canadians maximum benefits, and so forth. Fourth, in view of public criticism since the pipeline agreement was signed, the inter-church brief asks how Canadians will be assured that Canadian public funds will never be spent on the pipeline.

As a basis for the questions raised by the church leaders in opposing the pipeline I would like to refer to one or two sentences in their brief to explain the philosophy on which they based their questions. The inter-church brief says that a new industrial strategy is needed in our country and that this conclusion has been arrived at as a result of the contention that the present model of industrial development tends excessively to be capital-intensive, highly technological, energy-intensive, export-oriented, and foreign controlled. The church brief sums up as follows:

> To sum up on this point, we continue to see in the present pipeline plans a bleak economic outlook for Canadians—whether they be northern residents whose way of life and livelihood will be drastically changed, or southern residents for whom the main outlook seems to be the risk of further staggering increases in public debt.

A response to what I have quoted is needed. I intend to vote for this bill at third reading because I believe that the pipeline is needed for all the reasons we have been through over these past months. I also believe that the philosophy being advanced on behalf of the churches today is a philosophy which can lead us into a no growth situation. I make that comment respectfully to the church leaders.

I have received representations that I should oppose the bill, but the philosophy laid down by the churches in opposing the pipeline is a philosophy which would bring about quite the reverse of what the church leaders intend. The church leaders are arguing in the name of social justice. I believe that to conclude that the pipeline must not be built for economic reasons or for social reasons or that it must not be built before native land claims are settled, would be injurious to all Canadians and that would lead us away from the opportunities for social justice that the church leaders want and which, indeed, I want.

Those who argue against the pipeline do us a service, however, because they make us focus on a just settlement of native land claims, on the social danger of destroying the native way of life, on environmental hazards, on the displacement of capital away from other pressing needs in southern Canada, on the voracious energy demands of the industrial machine which dominates western society, and on the need for us to change our way of life from resource exploitation to a new concept of stewardship, thus opening the way to a more just system of sharing wealth in the global community. That is a submission which church leaders as well as many responsible social analysts in Canada today are putting before the government. That philosophy can be found throughout the brief presented by the church leaders, although I have cited only a portion of it. The evidence which has been accumulated so far makes us aware of our responsibilities.

I think that what the church leaders and the coalition of social activists have been talking about over the past few months—and I support this—are changed attitudes which are necessary in today's economic society. I believe, however, that a pipeline can help us produce a climate in which people will be more receptive to the need for the changes for which the church leaders are arguing. The debate engendered by the pipeline hearings has sharpened our awareness.

The principal objection to the pipeline found in the up-to-date brief of the church leaders is on the ground that native claims have not been settled. I wish to make reference to the amendment which was introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), which I seconded. It is an amendment which was arrived at through the negotiating skills of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) who, I think, very diligently throughout this whole process took careful account of the economic and social implications of the pipeline, and who worked in such a way as to strengthen the bill—the Deputy Prime Minister paid just tribute to that this afternoon—so that the best results would be obtained by Canadians generally, specifically including native northerners.

● (1632)

The amendment to which I want to draw the attention of the House reads:

> Notwithstanding this act, any native claim, right, title or interest that the native people of Canada may have had prior to the coming into force of this act in and to the land on which the pipeline will be situated continues to exist until a settlement in respect of any such claim, right, title or interest is effected.

That motion was presented to us at report stage as motion No. 6, and it is in opposition to motion No. 4 put forward by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), the effect of which is to hold up the pipeline until all native land claims are settled. In my judgment, and I think in the judgment of several others, the effect of that motion would have been to kill the pipeline, or to hold it up for such an indeterminate period of time as to jeopardize the success of the project and the commitments that were made by the Government of Canada, with the concurrence of parliament, that the pipeline should be started.

Therefore, I think that we should look now to the special parliamentary committee which will act as an ongoing parliamentary monitoring agency, in addition to the regulatory agency which has been established, to ensure that the economic and social benefits are intertwined in a just way. I believe that this can be done. I think that the optimism expressed by the government that a settlement will be reached is perhaps reflective of the optimism which the government always brings to a statement of justice on behalf of minority groups. Of course, the proof is in the pudding.

I think that we will only obtain that justice in native settlements, we will only obtain the justice that the church leaders want for northerners in the dislocation they will be undergoing, if the ongoing situation is very carefully monitored and if pressure is exerted on the government by members of parliament and members of the committee to ensure that the settlements affecting the way of life of the northerners are handled in such a way that the benefits of the construction—the largest construction project in the history of Canada—meet the needs of both the southerners and northerners combined.

I think that if we ask ourselves whether we should halt the construction of the pipeline until the native land claims are settled, we should also ask ourselves whether we are not jeopardizing our relations with the United States and antagonizing the non-native Yukoners, not to mention a significant portion of Canadian labour. I do not think that that is a solution, which is why I personally oppose motion No. 4 and support the motion introduced by my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton-Kent. I think that pressure must continue to be exerted on the federal government to achieve a just settlement, and in the next three years the federal government must work just as diligently toward the achievement and implementation of a settlement as it will be working toward the construction and operation of the pipeline.

In the continuing examination of this project by the two groups I have mentioned, I would anticipate and urge that we see some concrete proposals on what the federal government intends to do about the Indian land claims. I think that we will certainly be hearing from the Council of Yukon Indians themselves, and then we will see how far apart the two sides really are. I think that the regulatory agency can then use its mandate to make revisions to our bill as time goes on to ensure that native land claims are not being prejudiced.

May I say in summation that I believe it is in the interests of all of Canada to proceed with this project, which is why I am supporting it, and I think that the argument made by the church leaders needs to be respectfully responded to, in order that it not be said that the Parliament of Canada was uncaring, unresponsive or not sensitive to the very real human problems that are connected with any major development project.

It is my intention to conclude by emphasizing that, as the Canadian economy continues to develop, it is important that we strengthen ourselves—and not weaken ourselves as failure to proceed with the pipeline would do—to make of our economy a production centre that the world can view with respect, with admiration, and with benefit, because out of a stronger economy in Canada we can obtain the ability to make a stronger contribution to a world that is in change.

I think that parliament should extend its concern about energy and its uses beyond the question of the northern gas pipeline for, as the Club of Rome points out in "Goals for Mankind":

> Mankind's growth toward energy sufficiency and self-reliance requires the international coordination of energy policies. Dangerous alternatives must be discouraged, wasteful duplication effort eliminated, and the options and possibilities constantly reappraised in the light of criteria based on human need.

Modern needs include a better flow of information and a more efficient transfer of technology. If the world energy system is to become safe, decentralized, and capable of satisfying legitimate demands on a sustainable basis, its development needs to be co-ordinated and supervised by an international body. As the International Atomic Energy Agency is presently co-ordinating and supervising the peaceful uses of atomic energy, a more long-term oriented and universal world energy agency is needed to co-ordinate the development of technologies which could bring to mankind abundant, accessible, and affordable energy.

Canada, a land of rich resources, technology and human energy, is ideally placed in the world community to exert leadership for the creation of such an agency. Let us expand our northern vision to a world vision so that we can learn to recognize the ways in which we can extend economic and social justice to mankind.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I will be brief. I want to answer a few of the points raised by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). Again I emphasize that he was not at the committee meetings and it appears that he has not read the committee proceedings either, because the bill we have before us now is a bill as amended by that special committee. The members on that committee were unanimous in the acceptance of all the amendments. There were one or two technical amendments that were advanced by the government, but the substantive amendments were all advanced by this party.

The opportunity was there for the NDP to advance amendments in committee, but they chose not to do so. So it seems to me to be rather inconsistent for them to be putting forward arguments that they failed to make in committee, which is the proper forum for that to take place. As the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) has said, it was unique, certainly in my experience, for a bill to come out of committee on which no recorded vote was taken. It was a completely unanimous report.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie says that we have seen all too often instances where northern interests are sacrificed for powerful southern interests. Those were his words. I would like him to name me one instance in the Yukon where a northern interest was sacrificed for any powerful southern interest. I challenge him to do that now. I see him sitting in his seat. Does he know of one instance where a Yukon interest was sacrificed—and the Yukon is in the north—for powerful southern interests? I invite him to stand up and tell me what that instance is.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Has the hon. member finished his speech?

Mr. Nielsen: I will allow the hon. member to answer my question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then we can take it that the hon. member has finished his speech.

Mr. Nielsen: Would the hon. member like to respond to my question?

● (1642)

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I have been invited to make a statement. I assume the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has concluded his remarks.

The hon. member for Yukon mentioned examples of northern interests which have been sacrificed for those of southern Canada. The hon. member for Yukon has been a consistent critic of the government for its failure to recognize provincial status for the Yukon. That was recommended by the NDP at its national conventions. I would have thought the hon. member for Yukon would have been the first to recognize the implications of the fact that the Yukon has not been given provincial status by the government and the various interest groups which it represents. Constantly the hon. member has complained about the Northern Power Company and how it has been under the control of the federal government and against the scrutiny of the territorial government. Also he has complained about Yukoners not being able to control the tax system, nor to regulate the development of the Yukon, as well as the entire question of royalties and taxes from resources.

All of these things are examples of how the territory and its people have been exploited by southern interests such as many of the multinational energy companies, whether oil, mineral, or what have you, and of the inability of Yukoners to control their own destiny because they are still treated in a colonial manner.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I am astounded at the abysmal ignorance of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. If the truth is admitted by him, obviously he meant the powerful southern interests were powerful moneyed or corporate interests. That is what the hon. member said when he indicated that the powerful southern interests were the reason for northern interests being sacrificed. If he wants to call the Liberal government of Canada one of those powerful southern interests, that is a neat way of slithering away from the inference he attempted to leave with those words. It is false. There has been no exploitation in the Yukon by powerful southern interests. Certainly a colonial system of government exists up there. That is because of the government's refusal to bring about meaningful reform and provincial status.

I am glad to hear the hon. member indicating that his party is now in favour of provincial status for the Yukon, because that is not what was decided at the NDP convention in Vancouver in September of 1970, 1971, or whenever. That was not his party's position when Mr. Barnett was expressing government policies with respect to that party on that question. It was somewhat similar to what Mackenzie King used to say; "A provincial status if necessary, but not necessarily provincial status. Maybe sometime in the future, but we are not ready for it now." If the hon. member was expressing the views of his party, I am happy to hear him say that he supports that philosophy of a provincial status for the Yukon now.

Mr. Symes: In 1974.

Mr. Nielsen: In 1974? Well, I hope the hon. member is expressing his party's stance on that. It has taken a long time to bring that party to such a point.

Deliberately the hon. member is twisting the whole thrust of the pipeline. His worst contribution was the lengthy quotation which he made from the IT&C report. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) acted very responsibly in committee. Having read the report, the hon. member obviously saw that what the government said represented the worst possible scenario.

In committee we heard evidence from Mr. Blair, from Mr. Pierce, and from others on the question of Canadian content. These very questions were generated by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. In issue No. 2 of the proceedings at page 2:14, Mr. Blair said the following:

> In a nutshell, we know the history of the supply of materials and equipment and services to the construction of pipelines in Canada; we know the individuals in the companies and how they have performed and we expect that they will continue to perform for this project basically as they have for the past projects by giving us high quality, suitable delivery schedules and prices and costs which are competitive or even advantageous as compared to counterpart suppliers in the United States. We suppose they will continue to behave competitively and energetically, and we know that they are sufficient as suppliers. We have calculated that very carefully; there is enough capacity in Canada to provide the materials and services to build this pipeline and we would prefer not to be put into a box that would weaken our negotiating position with our goods suppliers. We want to deal at arm's length with them and to have every encouragement that they will be trying as hard as ever to maintain their fully competitive status. We expect that by carefully following the procedures in the past, the content to which we have testified will be achieved.

In other proceedings Mr. Blair went on to tell of the approximate 1,000 miles per year of pipeline which has been built in Alberta, and that historically all the pipe and steel has come from Canadian suppliers because they have a competitive edge on the world steel market. I believed him, and I dare say the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands believed him when he backed his statement up with that evidence. Obviously the government believed him.

The hon. member's biggest impractical argument is that a legislative change can be written into this bill to provide guarantees. He knows, or should know, that the labour leaders of this country do not require that; that the steel industry of this country does not require that; that the Foothills people do not want that; and that the Canadian pipe producers have no such requirement. A legislative change cannot be written into this bill for two reasons. It seems to be impossible to penetrate the thick skull of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

It is impossible to amend this legislation in the face of the international agreement. If it were possible, we would support it. Actually it is impossible because of that one reason. Another reason is that the government has taken refuge behind GATT and does not want to offend the provisions of GATT. To speak of a legislative amendment guaranteeing Canadian content is to be very, very hypocritical, to say the least.

My party's alternative was the only practical one. Our alternative was a parliamentary process, the establishment of a monitoring committee, a new standing committee of the House. That suggestion was agreed to by the very sensible hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. It was the only practical alternative. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands supported the establishment of such a committee. The government, in its rare and unusual wisdom, accepted and conceded to that motion. Quite frankly, I was surprised that it agreed to set up the monitoring committee, and just as surprised to find it agreeing to insist upon the committee reporting once every four months to the House. Has the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie so little faith in the parliamentary system, even with this government, as to suggest that the committee is going to be useless?

● (1652)

Automatically, by the terms of the motion that the Deputy Prime Minister will be moving after third reading, every agreement, every regulation, every order, every direction, in essense every administrative act of any consequence whatsoever is going to be referred to that committee automatically. The committee will have responsible members sitting on it and will be able to review the very admirable intentions set out in the international agreement with respect to Canadian content. They will be able to look at whether Canadians are getting the greater portion of the steel orders, whether they are getting the greater portion of the pipe orders and whether Canadian labour content is being kept at the highest, with offshore labour only being imported where skills required are non-existent in Canada.

The committee will be able to review such matters once every four months. What more can we ask for? That committee will report back to the House, and if the intentions in the agreement are not being adhered to, then the spotlight of public attention is focused on what the Deputy Prime Minister and others on that side have been saying about 100,000 man-years if the Dempster lateral is included, or 68,000 man-years if it is not. If they fall below those figures they are going to be accountable to parliament. What better control does the hon. member, or any member of parliament, desire? Unless, of course, he wants to run the whole project himself.

Mr. Blackburn: You are giving it all to the Liberals anyway.

Mr. Nielsen: The government of the day has a right to govern. That fact seems to go over the heads of the members on the left.

Mr. Blackburn: They control the committees.

Mr. Nielsen: They have a majority on the committees. Would the hon. member in the NDP—I am sorry, I have forgotten his riding—

Mr. Blackburn: Brant.

Mr. Nielsen: —from Brant have it reversed? Would he have the opposition members have a majority on committees? Is that the way he would like parliament to run—that the minorities should be doing the governing and the majority should be in the opposition? That is the logic of his argument.

Mr. Goodale: That is NDP democracy.

Mr. Nielsen: We can improve—

Mr. Blackburn: That is the balance of power.

Mr. Nielsen: Oh, the balance of power. Well, I am afraid they will never advance beyond the stage of—

Mr. Blackburn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) on a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, it is not a point of order. I would like to ask the hon. member a question, if I may?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Would the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) permit the hon. member for Brant to ask him a question?

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Brant.

Mr. Blackburn: I thank the hon. member for Yukon for allowing me to ask this question. I was referring to the balance of power in this chamber and the way it has been shifting more and more to executive rule in this country. I am firmly convinced that, unless we give more power to the committees of this House, we are not going to have a true democracy in this country. Does the hon. member for Yukon agree or disagree with me?

Mr. Nielsen: I would certainly agree with that, Mr. Speaker, but that is not what he was saying a moment ago. His colleague from Sault Ste. Marie was belittling the amendments setting up this committee and the concession that his colleague from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) agreed with. I would like to get off that track, because they show an utter lack of understanding of the whole process by pushing that.

[Mr. Blackburn.]

I would like to deal for a moment with the other amendments in this bill. I would like to emphasize that these other amendments, as the Deputy Prime Minister has very graciously stated, were amendments that came from this party. In instances where we could not get the whole amendment, we negotiated. The representative of the NDP party could have followed the same course. We now feel that we have a far superior bill than it was when it went into committee. We were able to get native presence into the bill—not as strong as we would have wanted it, but it is there now. The monitoring process and the point that the line will remain in Canadian hands were included. If it does not, it will be the responsibility of the whole cabinet.

More important, we got the judicial provisions so utterly changed that they completely wipe out the original provisions. There is now the usual court process of appeal to the Supreme Court. There is the presence of section 16. After our arguments, including the argument of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, in committee, the government withdrew both of the offensive provisions. We have come back with a far better bill than when it went into committee.

One of the sad parts of the whole matter is that we have not come back with a $200 million heritage fund, which would provide some long-range benefits for Yukoners through whose territory the pipeline will pass. That is another area, however, and I will have to pursue that in another fashion. It is impossible to do so in this bill.

I have one last word—if hon. members are disposed to vote on that matter before five o'clock—and that is on the question of native claims. There should be no group, whether it be racial or otherwise, permitted to stand in the way of a vital project which is in the national interest. Even if the whole population of the Yukon were against this line passing through their territory, they should not be permitted to hold up a project of this magnitude. That is the simple answer. With respect to their claims and negotiations toward settlement, there is no reason why development and negotiation cannot go ahead hand-in-hand, without one prejudicing the other. No one has been able to convince me yet that development of any kind is going to prejudice the negotiations and final settlement of those native claims.

If, Mr. Speaker, they would like the question put, I will resume my seat. If they do not, I wish to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am prepared to go ahead at eight o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: May I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Post Office—Delivery service to new subdivisions; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Post Office—Minister's action to improve service and low employee morale; and—Ceiling on mail delivery contracts; the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco)—Regional Economic Expansion—Northern pipeline—Discussions on economic development of certain areas.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to proceed with the consideration of Bill C-208 and to stand all bills which precede it on the order paper.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Hon. members have heard the question of the hon. parliamentary secretary. Is there unanimous consent that all bills be stood prior to Bill C-208?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Agreed and so ordered.

* * *

GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS

MEASURE TO ENSURE LEGIBILITY OF DOCUMENTS RECEIVED BY SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Assiniboia) moved that Bill C-208, an act to render government documents and publications pertaining to senior citizens more legible and comprehensible, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Document Legibility

• (1702)

He said: In my experience as an MP I think one of the most satisfying and rewarding aspects of this job is the opportunity that we have as members of this institution to become associated with groups of retired Canadians, the senior citizens of this country, who have formed themselves into a wide variety of New Horizons Clubs and other types of senior citizens' organizations in all parts of Canada.

I am sure, as all other hon. members do, I welcome those occasions when I have the opportunity to visit these clubs and groups and meet with their membership. The time spent is very worthwhile because it is rare that one will find the depth of knowledge and the wealth of experience assembled together in one place that you will encounter in the drop-in centres and other meeting places created by the New Horizons programs of the Government of Canada, and in the clubs and organizations of senior citizens across the country created by other public and private programs.

For any member of parliament or any other interested person, the analysis of issues to be found in these places and the ideas which are put forward, whether those issues are large or small, local, provincial, regional, national or international, are very much worth listening to and heeding with care.

In Assiniboia constituency I am pleased to say we have more than 50 active projects operating under the auspices of the New Horizons program. Our part of southern Saskatchewan is fortunate to have a number of other agencies and organizations of particular relevance to older people. The idea for the proposal contained in Bill C-208 now before us in fact originated in the discussions which I have had from time to time with the members of these various clubs, agencies, and groups in the Assiniboia constituency. I am sure my experience in this regard has been duplicated many times over in virtually all parts of the country.

In proposing this bill, Mr. Speaker, I want to pay a special tribute to Mrs. Ivol Krueger and to all of those who have been involved in such a dedicated way on the New Horizons committee of Weyburn, Saskatchewan, and the very active "Aid for the Aging" group in that community. Their efforts in drawing attention to the particular issue dealt with in Bill C-208, and their work on behalf of senior citizens in so many other ways, is a prime example of spirited and effective community service. I hope that this House can add to those efforts in some small way by adopting this bill, or at least by adopting the idea in principle and allowing the matter to go to a House committee for detailed analysis and consideration.

The gist of Bill C-208 is captioned quite well in its short title "An Act to render government documents and publications pertaining to senior citizens more legible and comprehensible". It is brief, as hon. members can see, consisting basically of three short clauses. The major provisions are really two in number. First of all there is a requirement through this bill that the Queen's Printer print all publications specifically intended for senior citizens in a large and clear style of type. Secondly there is a provision which would require the Queen's Printer to make specific documents available on request to senior citizens if they have a particular need for them. These documents should be printed in a large style of type in order that these people can make use of them.

There are two additional clauses in the bill. One would authorize the minister to make the appropriate regulations to implement the thrust of the legislation. The other is a short definition clause defining precisely that "senior citizen" refers to people who have reached the age of 65.

I am sure that rationale behind this kind of proposal is perfectly obvious and will be well understood by hon. members. As people get older, eyesight often tends to fail. Therefore, regular sized print or type used in official publications is often not adequate to meet the physical requirements of senior citizens.

In my office today I received an orange booklet put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare. It is entitled "Basic Facts of Social Security Programs". It is a very useful booklet, and it contains approximately 45 pages. In this booklet there is information about various programs and activities of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Unfortunately every page is chock-full of very small, fine print. It is extremely difficult to be able to read such a document in an easy way and to comprehend what is being said in that document, even with perfect eyesight. I am sure that to anyone who has any impairment of vision this document might be almost unreadable not because of what is contained in it, but because of the style, type, and method of printing used.

As older people struggle to deal with the papers they have to read and cope with, they are subject to a considerable amount of unnecessary strain, physical eye strain as well as emotional stress or strain. Sometimes of necessity, because there may be no alternative, documents like that one and even others of greater importance simply get ignored.

In discussing this issue with senior citizens themselves, another interesting point was brought to mind. In days gone by, many people who are now in the older age bracket did not have access in their youth to the formal educational facilities available in Canada today. As a consequence they are often apprehensive or even frightened to tackle government documents, forms and publications. It is ironic, and I think unfortunate, that these people, who are often so properly referred to as the "salt of the earth" or the "backbone of the country", are sometimes intimidated by some of the complexities and the complications placed on them by the country to the building of which they have contributed so much. Sometimes it seems to me that this intimidation or that feeling of inadequacy can have very serious consequences, Mr. Speaker.

I am told by senior citizens that a prime case in point is in relation to the various federal-provincial old age income supplement plans for which senior citizens must make application. These plans are not available to senior citizens automatically when they reach a certain age. They must apply to the various departments responsible for the administration of the programs in order to entitle themselves to benefits.

[Mr. Goodale.]

Specifically, I think of the guaranteed income supplement program. This is a program which is very useful to senior citizens on limited incomes. But the important fact to remember is that this program is not automatically available to senior citizens upon their attaining a certain age. They must file an application for it. In order to know that they must do that, they have to be able to read documents like this one, to which I have just referred. This document outlines the details of that particular program and makes it clear that an application must be filed. In addition to that they must be able to deal with the application itself in a reasonable way, to read it, to understand it, and to file it, in order to entitle themselves to those benefits. If the form or the book itself is not printed in a way that is easily read, then that, of course, impedes the making of that application. That is a rather serious consequence which should be a relatively easy problem to solve.

Income tax forms are another problem. Those closely associated with programs involving older people can attest to the fact that every year at tax time some senior citizens actually become physically ill in having to contend with the complex and finely printed documents and forms which come to them during the time when income tax documentation must be completed. I suppose there is no formal documented evidence on this point. But I am content to rely upon the observations of those who have been very active in helping to serve senior citizens. Again I refer to Mrs. Krueger of Weyburn, and many others like her, who can speak from years of observation in actual experience in this field. They know the kind of anxiety that senior citizens experience when confronted with difficulties of this kind.

● (1712)

The problem could be alleviated in some small part by ensuring that the relevant printed material is in fact printed in a manner which can be easily read. That would be a step in the right direction. It would help to reduce some of the uneasiness and frustration which some senior citizens presently experience when trying to grapple with the documentation with which they now have to deal.

The idea contained in Bill C-208 is obviously not a cure-all for all of the difficulties with which older people must deal in encountering government agencies and other institutions, both public and private. The complexity of life in this day and age is unfortunately more than any of us would like to see. At least this bill would implement one measure which might be of positive, practical assistance.

I do not pretend that this is a perfect proposal in Bill C-208. It has some obvious defects. For example, it is specifically tied to the needs of older people. There are many Canadians under the age of 65 who also suffer from impaired vision. Conversely, there are a great many senior citizens who enjoy perfectly good eyesight and might not require the large style of type proposed in this bill. Nevertheless, this is an important matter for the House to consider. I appreciate the attention hon. members are giving to it this afternoon.

If there is general agreement that the subject matter of this bill is worthy of further examination but the specifics proposed in it are not precisely appropriate, I would have no objection to the motion being amended to refer the subject matter only to the appropriate committee to consider and study a matter of this kind. It might not be the Miscellaneous Estimates committee. It might well be the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. If it were the disposition of the House to make that amendment and refer the subject matter, I would be happy to see the matter go forward in that way. In that forum, such as a committee of this House, we could more thoroughly canvass this whole area of concern and identify the best technical way to solve what is a very real problem for older people and for certain other Canadians as well.

Mr. Alan Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate on a very interesting and worth-while topic, I commend the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) for bringing to the attention of the House concerns of senior citizens. As I read the wording in the bill, as a legislator I have some reservations as to just what we might be legislating by bringing this specific bill into force or into committee for possible amendment, as the hon. member suggested. Bill C-208 is, and I quote:

An Act to render government documents and publications pertaining to senior citizens more legible and comprehensible

If we were to pass this bill, we would be amending the Department of Supply and Services Act to require, and I quote:

The Queen's Printer for Canada shall

(a) print any publication that is distributed to senior citizens pursuant to the Old Age Security Act or the Canada Pension Plan in large and clear type, and

(b) provide on the request of any senior citizen a copy in large and clear type of any publication that is printed on behalf of any department or agency of the Government of Canada.

(2) The Minister may make regulations respecting the printing and distribution of publications for carrying out the purposes outlined in subsection (1).

(3) In this section "senior citizen" means any person who has reached 65 years of age."

There are a number of concerns that will come out of the course of this discussion that will not in themselves take away from the point that is being made by my colleague from Assiniboia. But they perhaps give us some reservations in terms of putting this legislation on the books before we have a much deeper look at the substance.

Let us talk about the criteria. The bill refers to age. The hon. member for Assiniboia indicated that age might not be the only criterion. There might be other criteria that should be examined. The condition of eyesight is the underlying cause in the bill. If that is so, it should not be restricted to a particular age factor.

I have many senior citizens' residences in my constituency. In them are people of various physical situation. Some of them at a very advanced age have far better eyesight than perhaps I myself in terms of their reading habits. In other cases there are much younger people who, for one reason or another, have eye problems. They do not have to wait until they are 65 before it becomes a serious problem for them. Therefore I question the age factor if we are going to proceed with legislation of this type.

If the criterion is age, we are setting an artificial barrier by putting in age 65. Perhaps 65 is chosen because that is the age at which people are entitled to the old age pension and the Canada Pension Plan. However, I am not sure this would be a valid criterion for inclusion in legislation of a more general nature of this sort. We would in effect be creating two classes of citizens at the taxpayers' expense, one privileged, and the other not. Presumably those citizens who will receive the larger face type will receive a certain advantage if, indeed, they need it. The problem is that it may end up going to a lot of people who do not need it.

How do we readily identify citizens with a reading difficulty? If age is used, reaction from older persons past the chosen age limit or barrier who have no such problems will be critical. The problem relates primarily to the identification of the audience for each publication put out by the 128 departments and agencies of the Government of Canada. However, is this really to be on the basis of age or eyesight? Regardless of what happens to the bill, that is a point that will have to be examined at greater length.

In addition to that general criteria problem, I would like to speak for a few moments on the matter of cost. It would be unfair for us as parliamentarians at this time to brush over this issue and see the bill go to committee before we have the benefit of discussion on what kind of costs might be involved in making an amendment of this nature to the Supply and Services Act.

It is going to be very difficult to assess the cost figure and the actions required to implement successfully what is called for in Bill C-208. That becomes obvious as we examine the details of the bill as I enunciated them earlier. If the likely cost cannot be calculated with some degree of accuracy, it would be imprudent on our part to adopt this amendment before endeavouring to assess just what it is to which we are exposing the Canadian taxpayer.

A costing of these responsibilities presupposes at least the ability to do a number of things. We must be able to identify which government publications should be printed in the larger type size, and why. I am sure that my colleague from Assiniboia would be the first to say it should not necessarily apply to all government documents, only when there seems to be a particular need. This again gets into the criteria question, which document should be and which should not.

We would need to have the ability to specify the required quantities of each identified publication in each official language. There are massive publications hour by hour, day by day, in the various government departments and agencies in the over-all government service. In each specific case, someone would have to pinpoint how many would need to be printed in the larger type and in both official languages. Would it be the same number in English and French, or more English and less French? What would be the percentage? How would that be established?

In addition, a method of distribution would have to be established. In other words, after these copies have been produced in large type in English and French, what do you do with them? Presumably they are distributed to someone. The question is, who gets them? Is it the intention to wait for applications to come in from Canadians who, perhaps, would have to be over a certain age in order to qualify to receive these publications in the larger type? How does one go about this process? The demand may, in the end, turn out to be very small. We could be piling up surpluses in printed paper, publications which may never be requested or, indeed, required. Just what are we getting into in terms of the inventory of these special issues?

● (1722)

Then there is the question of frequency. How often will these publications be brought out? Would every issue be treated in the way suggested, or only the more important ones? Where would a limitation be placed? What I am really saying is that the range of possibilities or options in layout and type size is really too broad to enable us to make any reliable estimate as to cost, and in these circumstances it would be somewhat irresponsible for us to allow the bill to become law.

There are, however, two basic factors which can be recognized immediately as likely to have an effect on costs. And each of them implies additional costs. The first is that in most cases a larger type face will put less characters on a page, thus requiring more pages or larger pages to achieve the same quality of communication. This means more paper, and, if there are to be more pages, additional sheets to be run through the printing presses. Already many of us are receiving criticism from our constituents about the amount of paper we generate in the system. And most of us here would agree there are times when we are ourselves overwhelmed by the quantity of paper which is churned out day after day for our attention.

The second factor is that the number of the older generations will increase over the years, implying an increased audience for such publications if they are based on the somewhat dubious criterion of age. In other words, the percentage of the population over the age of 65 is rising rather rapidly, so the demand might be expected to increase.

A further alternative, and one which has the virtue of eliminating doubtful selection criteria, would be to instruct the Queen's Printer to produce all government publications and tracts in type of not less than a given size, thus assuring the reading comfort of any citizen suffering from a corresponding degree of restricted vision. Two problems immediately emerge, however. First, the cost of all government printing would automatically increase, although percentage increases would probably vary with different publications. In the second place, defining a corresponding degree of restricted vision which made any sense would still leave citizens, whose eyesight is more seriously impaired, without an increase in their reading comfort. What is the correct reading impairment cut-off point?

These are just some of the problems to be faced. I am simply pointing out the need for a much closer examination of the criteria of which we are speaking if we are to take this legislation through the whole process and make it an official amendment to the Supply and Services Act. It is my view that as members of parliament we should be concerned about the cost we are imposing upon the taxpayers generally. If we were to pass this measure I assume there would be considerable pressure on provincial governments and municipal governments to take similar action. It is my observation that municipal governments, in particular, often make use of print sizes which are very small.

I am sure that senior citizens have recommended such a measure as this to the hon. member. It has not so far been brought to my attention, although there are a large number of senior citizens' homes in my riding. Nevertheless, I hope the discussion this afternoon will focus on some of the specific points which I have raised and which need to be explored further.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Martin) has pointed out, there are certain difficulties in connection with this bill. However, I hope we will not let those difficulties stand in the way of the suggestion of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), namely, that the subject matter be sent to the appropriate committee. Like him, I think the appropriate committee would be the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. The parliamentary secretary wants certain aspects of this matter looked into. There is no better place in which to do that than the committee to which the subject matter could be referred.

I suppose I should do the usual thing and commend the hon. member for Assiniboia for bringing forward this measure. But I should like to go back a step and commend Mrs. Ivol Krueger of Weyburn, Saskatchewan, who proposed that this matter be discussed in parliament. I suggest that there are many Mrs. Kruegers around the country who have the same view, and who would like to see the things they have to read printed in a type size which is discernible.

Before going any further, may I say something which is, surely, so obvious that I am surprised it has not already been said: that what the senior citizens would like to see larger is not the size of the type in the things they have to read but the size of the figures that indicate the amounts of their pensions. If we want to raise something, let us raise the amount of the old age security payment and the guaranteed income supplement, and give our senior citizens a better break in that respect.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The debate on this subject began at five o'clock and I am surprised that I should be the first one, at half past five, to propose this.

I turn, now, to the question of the size of the type used in printed materials. The parliamentary secretary is quite right that it is a matter of concern not just to those senior citizens who have impaired eyesight but also to people of all ages who may have difficulty reading things. My eyesight is pretty good. At least, it is with the bifocals I have worn for a very long time. Like some other hon. members, I have been working on my income tax return, and in particular you have to look at those T-4 slips, T-4A's and T-4B's, or whatever they are, and try to figure out which one you attach to the income tax form and which one you keep for your own records. The size of the type is so small that anyone with good eyesight still has to use a magnifying glass.

● (1732)

I am an old printer. I realize that I learned printing when it was closer to the Gutenberg days than it is to modern technology, but in my time we had hand-set type which got as small as six point and on a linotype machine or on a monotype machine we could get down to 5½ point or even 5 point. However, that was as small as we could get the type in those days. However, under the modern photographic processes they can reduce it to what must be about 2 point or 1½, so that it is beyond reading by anyone at all.

I think some concern should be expressed about the matter. As the hon. member for Scarborough West has pointed out, this is a concern to other people as well, and I think that the government as a whole should take a new look at the material it puts out to see if it cannot be made more legible for everyone.

The last speaker indicated that if we make the size of type a little larger, that means we get fewer characters on the page, and that calls for more paper. Well, maybe we could save far more paper than we would have to use for that purpose if we could cut out a lot of the paper that is wasted in this place. If just the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) would stop sending us his speeches every day of the week, we would save enough paper to do all kinds of things. I think the Minister of Agriculture gets the prize; I think we get more paper from him than from anyone. I am sure my experience is not unlike that of other hon. members. I fill a waste basket every day with printed material which comes in. I look at it only to see what it is, knowing that in most cases it is not for me. If we took some care to cut out the wasteful use of paper and printing, we could afford the extra paper which might be needed to print things for people so that they can see them.

I also like the suggestion in the title of this bill that these documents should be made more comprehensible. It takes more than type size to make some of these things comprehensible, but what I am saying is that surely the whole idea is a good one. Yes, there are things which have to be looked at, but the place to do that looking is in the standing committee to which this matter could be referred. As the last speaker pointed out, if we do something at the federal level that would suggest that something should be done at other levels as well. There is such a thing as giving a lead. If we can do it here, it might be done at other levels of government.

What about the publications of some private agencies? Just go out into the lobby and get Bell Canada's telephone book and try, without squinting or adjusting your glasses, to see the number you are trying to look up. The government telephone book is not too bad yet, but in another year or two it will be the same. We cannot pass one law today which does away with all type sizes below the old six point or below the old eight point, but we can give a lead.

It is in that respect that I welcome the fact that the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) has put this bill before us this afternoon. It is obvious from what he has heard from his side that his bill will not get second reading today, but I plead with the dozen Liberals over there to let the subject matter of this bill go to committee this afternoon. I agree that printing should be of a size that people can read, and I am glad that the hon. member agrees with me that the size of the payments on old age pension cheques should also be made much larger.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, this bill is an interesting one. Perhaps it does not need to be discussed interminably as so many other things around this place are before anything gets done. Surely if the New York Times and Reader's Digest can mount a special promotional campaign to sell their products to senior citizens and people with impaired vision by special publications which have enlarged type, that indicates that there is something to be said for helping people who have impaired vision. To that extent the hon. member should be congratulated for attempting to bring to government publications a method that the commercial world has found to be very worthwhile indeed.

I want to mention one reason why it should be the responsibility of the government to make its material clear. Special attention ought to be given today to an incident only last week to which I think this bill, if it ever gets further than second reading, would be directly related. I have my doubts that it will this afternoon, but I can assure the House that it will not be my fault if it does not come to a vote.

Last week it was revealed that some 1,400 retired public servants were going to be required to repay overpayments they received in superannuation benefits. It was brought to light that these 1,400 retired public servants were receiving not only their superannuation but also disability pensions under the Canada Pension Plan. Upon investigation it turns out that many of the people concerned are living on approximately $350 to $360 a month, which are very low pension payments, and somehow or other their names were included in the Canada Pension Plan disability list. Their names were retained on this list when they began to draw superannuation benefits.

It boggles the mind to suggest that 1,400 retired civil servants attempted to defraud the government by obtaining two pensions. Some of those retired public servants reside in Edmonton, and in my investigation I found that they did not know they were required to report this duplication. Whether or not instructions were given to these persons—and there is some debate about that—it is abundantly clear that the forms they had to fill out had type which was so small and so hard to read that these persons, who are honest citizens, went ahead and filled out the forms in good faith.

If there is any blame to be ascribed in this situation, it ought to be laid at the doorstep of the government. For the government now to be reclaiming money paid in this so-called overpayment by deducting from pensions which are already far too low, a fact to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) alluded, I think is intolerable. I think it is intolerable for the government now to be enforcing a requirement that these people repay these amounts of perhaps $1,000 or $2,000, which seem to be insignificant but which for the people concerned are large amounts of money. It is unfair and unjust of the government to be insisting that the money be repaid because of this error.

• (1742)

Apparently the public servants involved did not inform the Department of Supply and Services. That is the government's story. Whether or not they did, it is clear that the manner in which the reporting was to be done was so obscure to the people concerned that they went ahead in good faith. For the government to force them now to repay the amounts received in duplication of pension allotments is, I think, something about which members of the House, and indeed the sponsor of the bill himself, should feel outraged.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The forms certainly were not comprehensible.

Mr. Roche: Yes, the forms were incomprehensible. As one who has just gone through the annual exercise of trying to decipher regulations with respect to income tax, let me say that the forms put out by the government need to be printed not only in larger type but drafted by somebody with some editing experience and an ability to communicate to the public in simple language rather than in the obscurities which are found in so many government forms.

So my concern is not only that the size of type be larger but also—and I say this very sincerely—that a real effort be made by those officials in government who are responsible for such exercises to communicate those regulations that the government has passed in a way that can be understood, particularly in situations involving pensions. It is often difficult indeed for people at such a stage in life to get professional help in filling out forms. It is fine for me. After I get through figuring out my income tax, I send my form to an accountant. But there are a lot of people for whom we must be concerned who need special help.

That is all I want to say on this bill. If the government has any compassion at all as it approaches the electorate in a few days' time, then it will show that compassion for the handicapped and disadvantaged people in our society, people who live on small incomes, by making a decision now, involving minuscule cost to the government, that the 1,400 public servants involved in this case who acted in good faith will not be penalized by somebody's obscure mistake.

I hope that if this bill goes to committee we can examine the Public Service Superannuation Act at the same time as we go through the matter involving the Department of Supply and Services and the amendments that are proposed for that act. I believe that the Public Service Superannuation Act should be amended to permit the recovery of payments which were made because of misinformation. Certainly the government should be entitled to recover payments that are made as a result of misinformation given to the government, but the government should not be able to recover overpayments arising from its own mistakes. If government officials make mistakes, if the language is shown in a legal sense to be misleading or if it is shown in a parliamentary sense to be misleading, then it is clear to me that the mistake is made by the government and that the burden of that mistake should be carried by the government.

That is the amendment that I would propose if this bill goes as far as the committee. In the meantime I think that, because of the impending great event which will be visited upon the Canadian electorate, the government would be well advised to move quickly on this situation in the case of the 1,400 public servants.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to congratulate my colleague, the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), for bringing this timely matter before the House of Commons. It certainly indicates his concern for senior citizens, and I suggest to him others as well, including the handicapped. As my other colleague, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), pointed out, it is not a question of age alone that is involved. In other words, a person having reached the age of 65 should not automatically have large type publications from the government sent to him. People who are much younger and have disabilities such as impaired vision, and who are considered handicapped, also need this kind of assistance.

The explanatory note indicates that publications for senior citizens should be available in a type face that can be easily read by those with impaired vision. I suggest that the bill should be broader than that and our concern should relate to all Canadians so that they can deal at least with the government, if not with private agencies, by way of documents printed in a way that is readable to them. Of course, the language should be understood, but at least the document should be legible.

As my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), pointed out, the print in the telephone directory is so small that it is difficult even for people with 20-20 vision to read some of the names and numbers unless they have a light reflecting on the book. Sometimes I have even thought that every telephone book should have tied to it a magnifying glass, because I have difficulty reading the fine print in the directory even with my reading glasses on. On the other hand, I suppose the telephone book might have to be twice its size if it were to be really legible. Maybe that would not be such a bad idea.

I will not attempt to reply to the various arguments that have been put forward because they have already been discussed by my colleagues, but I would point out that cost is certainly a factor, although it should not be the overriding criterion. As we all know, not too long ago the government was criticized for inserting in letters to senior citizens and others information with regard to family allowance cheques and old age security cheques. Had the information been in larger type, it would probably have cost twice as much. All I am saying is that the cost factor must also be considered.

On the other hand, in fairness to some senior citizens, it may be that some of the 28,000 senior citizens who have not replied to the government's suggestion that they fill out their forms for the old age supplement have not done so because they were not able to read the fine print. I do not know. I can only say that I personally have not received complaints from any of my constituents regarding that matter. That does not mean to say that what the hon. member for Assiniboia is saying with regard to some of his constituents is not so.

I notice that the bill refers to matters concerning the Department of National Health and Welfare since it mentions directly the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan, both of which fall within the ambit of the Department of National Health and Welfare. I notice that although the suggestion is made that any senior citizen should be able to receive government information in large, clear type, perhaps what we are talking about is a limited number of people. In other words, people who want information in larger type would have to ask for it expressly.

Since the bill refers, at least in part, to the Department of National Health and Welfare through the two acts I mentioned, I have a few remarks which I would like to read into the record.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is the fine print!

Mr. Robinson: I can read it with my glasses on.

The Department of National Health and Welfare is responsible for many programs concerning Canada's senior citizens. Each month the department sends out old age security payments to two million senior citizens. Over one million of them also qualify for the guaranteed income supplement. That brings up the point I mentioned earlier of some 28,000 who have not responded. It may be that some of them were not able to read the print. A large number also receive monthly retirement benefits under the Canada Pension Plan; I understand that at present there are about 600,000 such recipients.

● (1752)

Of course, the department is desirous of providing the best possible service to its clientele, both those who are already receiving benefits and those who are in the process of applying to qualify for benefits. The income security programs branch has a network of regional and district offices across the country for the purpose of providing information on benefit programs, receiving applications and giving prompt and reliable service to our senior citizens. At the present time the branch is in the process of reorganizing its offices to improve the quality of service, including integrating the various income security programs under one administration to ensure that our clients can get all the information they need about all their potential benefits from a single office.

The department is constantly striving to improve the calibre of the service it offers. For example, last fall it commenced a new program of sending out letters of information to 64 year olds throughout Canada to remind them that they might qualify for Canada Pension Plan and Old Age Security benefits when they reach their 65th birthdays, and advising them to be sure to apply well in advance of their birth dates to ensure receipt of their benefits without delay. Departmental staff are striving also to improve the quality of the counselling they give to people who inquire about benefits. Increasing attention has been given as well to various information programs, including advertising campaigns and mailing of notices regarding GIS renewal, advertising campaigns concerning changes in legislation, and so on.

In addition, the department provides a wide range of written materials to inform people about the programs, including a large number of booklets and pamphlets on our various programs. Naturally, an attempt is made at all times to make these documents as clear and readable as possible. However, there is no doubt there is always room for improvement. The department will continue to examine its printed documents to make them as useful and easily comprehensible as possible.

I might observe, given the nature and extent of the OAS and CPP programs, that the department has of course a vast number of contracts and communications with our senior citizens through its network of offices across the country. Indeed, there are over five million contacts each year involving applications, correspondence, telephone calls and personal interviews. This multitude of contacts has not revealed any identifiable volume of complaints concerning the readability of documents.

From the perspective of the Department of National Health and Welfare, therefore, we do not really see the need for Bill C-208. The problem which this bill addresses is not a serious one in our experience. We fully accept the principle that inspired the proposal for this legislation, and the department will continue to examine its printed material to improve its readability for persons with impaired vision. However, surely it would be overkill to proceed with legislation on this point.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for St. Catharines (Mr. Parent).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question! Is the hon. member going to talk it out?

Document Legibility

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few suggestions and comments. I heard the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when I rose. Many times I have sat in this Chamber and listened to his words of wisdom. I thought I could share a few of my comments with him and all other hon. members who are present today.

Mr. Orlikow: Until six o'clock.

Mr. Parent: So much the better. Continually I come across references to age 65. It seems to be the magic number when older people in Canada, and other parts of the world, change into something else. At that point they receive the title of senior citizen and are considered to be old people. I would not want to suggest that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is that much older and should have his copy of Hansard printed in large type, or that the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) should have his printed in block letters.

The other night I was interested to learn how this magic number of 65 was arrived at as being the age when everything starts to change. The figure of 65 was chosen back in 1881. Count von Bismarck was the chancellor of Germany at that time. He had to find a way to appease the masses. One of his advisers came to him and said: "Count, we have to appease the older workers. Here is what I suggest: we must set up a date when a person will no longer be able to work and will be retired. At that time we will pay him a half or two-thirds of the salary which he was earning". So Count von Bismarck said: "That is a good idea; that is exactly what we should do". He asked his adviser what age he would suggest, and the man said: "Sixty-five is the age when you should start to put people on compulsory retirement". So the chancellor said: "Why 65?" At that time the life expectancy of people in Germany was 55, so he figured very few of them would reach age 65. That is why the figure of 65 was agreed on.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mackenzie King picked the age of 70 because he read in the Bible that the days of a man's years are three score years and ten.

Mr. Parent: Perhaps that prime minister spoke to the ghost of Count von Bismarck.

Mr. Orlikow: He had his own ghost!

Mr. Parent: That is quite true, and many of us have skeletons in our own closets some place along the way. The age expectancy of most people has increased to approximately the age of 71 for women and the age of 69 for men. As always, men are lagging behind. The countries of Italy and France followed along by adopting 65 as the magic age. I do not know if people of that age want to be singled out as a group.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre talked about the cheques. He was talking about the numerical size of the cheque, rather than the print. I am sure all hon. members will be interested in hearing the following. The Receiver General cheques are issued pursuant to the Financial Administration Act and not pursuant to the Department of Supply and Services Act. Therefore, the Receiver General cheque is not a document within the categories established by Bill C-208. However, Bill C-208, if implemented, could have a detrimental impact on the Receiver General cheque and Receiver General payment process.

The Receiver General of Canada is responsible under the Financial Administration Act for making payments to all citizens on behalf of the Government of Canada. Some of these payments are made to senior citizens by the authority of the Old Age Security Act or the Canada Pension Plan Act. The Receiver General has developed a set of standards for the payment instrument and other related documents based on very strict and rigid specifications.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour allotted for private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

NORTHERN PIPELINE ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF AGENCY TO SUPERVISE PIPELINE CONSTRUCTION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. MacEachen that Bill C-25, to establish the Northern Pipeline Agency, to facilitate the planning and construction of a pipeline for the transmission of natural gas from Alaska and Northern Canada and to give effect to an agreement between Canada and the United States of America on principles applicable to such a pipeline and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. At five o'clock the hon. member for Yukon had the floor.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, it has been our determination from the outset to assist in the passage of the pipeline bill, Bill C-25, but that in doing so we would ensure that the legislation is improved so as to guarantee that the best interests of Canadians are served.

When the bill was introduced it was immediately apparent that there were several major defects and omissions. We have attempted to explain those and correct them through amendments at the committee. As the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) explained in his remarks, most of those were appreciated and accepted. Our chief concern was that the project should be well thought out and delays avoided. At the second reading stage the NDP voted against the bill. It will be interesting to see what members of that party will do on third reading. Perhaps they have received a call or two from Premier Blakeney and one or two others in the west in respect of their stance on the bill.

Delays in respect to this project are critical, not by reason of any political problem, but rather with regard to the companies charged with building the line being able to meet the very heavy debt financing responsibilities. A number of delays in conjunction with incomplete planning constituted the reason for massive over-runs on the Alaska project, which met with economic tragedy. We cannot afford such over-runs on this project.

One thing the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) and others of that party have failed to recognize is that this is a project which will not involve the expenditure of any taxpayers' dollars. It is a project which is being undertaken by the private sector entirely, and that should not be overlooked. In light of this critical delay factor and the importance to the nation of the project over-all we should have expected more leadership. I say that kindly in light of the very kind remarks of the Deputy Prime Minister with respect to myself in my committee activities.

● (2012)

There have been government shortcomings. They could have introduced this bill last fall. They could have given us more opportunity in committee to examine the project more thoroughly. They have not given the leadership which should have been expected but was not forthcoming. We were presented with a bill which was very deficient, and that is implicit in the remarks of the Deputy Prime Minister. It was drafted in a fashion which virtually eliminated the judicial review processes of the bill.

There was no mention of the native presence or any review process whatsoever to ensure the observance of the Canadian content provisions spelled out in the international agreement. Also, there was an absence of watchkeeping or safeguards to keep watch over the exercise of very wide discretions granted to the minister, to the agency and others having authority under the bill.

For a party that should have been displaying leadership on such an important issue to this country, they have failed to an extent that was a surprise to us. In retrospect, perhaps it was not such a surprise in view of the extent to which the government accepted the amendments which we proposed. For example, I have mentioned that proper planning and preparation, the avoidance of delays, which was absolutely critical to the success of the project, and the recognition of native rights should have been an integral part of the planning process. Instead, we have the native groups appearing before the Commons and Senate committees virtually unannounced in their indictment of the government's lack of planning of concern for these people. The government should have shown concern with singular focus on native rights, rather than on the over-all concern for the total population in the areas which would be traversed by the pipeline itself.

The most glaring omission—and even I was surprised at this because I thought that the government would have been more closely attuned to this factor—was the total failure to look into the native environmental situation in northern British Columbia. The Yukon at least had Lysyk and the promise of a second stage inquiry, which is now resolved by the government's acceptance of an amendment which will ensure that an advisory council will be set up for the Yukon. The NWT had Berger. But northern B.C. had nothing. It spite of the fact that more pipe will be running through B.C. than the Yukon, they were completely ignored. Anyone studying the matter will immediately come to the conclusion that the environment and the socioeconomic impact of the pipeline is just as important in northeastern B.C. as in the Yukon.

One cannot help but reflect on this government and its consultative practices. So much for the just society, so much for participatory democracy and so much for the consultative process. It simply results in bad management, and that is the bottom line. It is plain bad management. It is insensitivity as well as lack of foresight. How can you expect, for instance, the native organizations in British Columbia to react favourably when they are not even consulted? How, indeed, can you expect anyone else to co-operate with the government in a project of this size? Really, they jeopardized their own project. Indeed, the approach taken by the government party invites obstruction. It invites lawsuits and delays in construction.

The same thing happened to the Alyeska project. It resulted in huge over-runs, and I might add—and I hope this does not happen in Canada—that that line has been sabotaged twice deliberately. It is an inevitable implication in the climate of suspicion and resentment such as this that both this project and the national interest cannot help but suffer. Whatever delays occur—and they have occurred already—will be completely the fault of the government. It is their inability to manage and provide leadership for this massive undertaking of extremely strategic importance to Canada.

Our approach from the outset has been to expedite the passage of this bill. We have taken the leadership in making a bill out of a non-bill. Confronted by a seriously deficient piece of legislation, as was this bill, we had to optimize this tremendous opportunity to help the country out of its current malaise. It was we who initiated the discussions relating to changes which would recognize native concerns and formalize the judicial review provisions. It was we who initiated the discussion with respect to the plan of parliamentary review of the decisions and agreements and other matters involving the sections of the bill which are going to be the subject matter of the resolution proposed by the Deputy Prime Minister. We were the ones who devised the parliamentary plan of review, which is the only acceptable alternative to ensure Canadian content.

We recognize that an explicit guarantee of Canadian content was impossible, for the reasons I have already expressed, namely that it offended the international agreement as well as the terms of GATT. We have accepted the assurances of the company that is going to be building the pipeline, and we have accepted the assurances of the Deputy Prime Minister and of the government that material and labour procurements will not be approved which do not optimize the Canadian content possibilities.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie overlooks the fact that the designated minister will have that power under the bill. That will undoubtedly be explained by the member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), who explicitly examined the minister when he appeared before the committee with respect to powers in that respect.

● (2022)

In addition, we added the provision for a parliamentary review of such approval by a standing committee. This is unique in my experience in this House, where the standing orders have been amended to provide for the establishment of a special committee for this specific purpose. Given these constraints, plus the fact that neither industry nor labour wants the kind of changes that the member for Sault Ste. Marie has been advocating, our approach is by far the most reasonable. It is the only acceptable approach.

We were the only party which proposed imposing a limit on the cost of the agency which could be passed on to the company. That proposal was made by the member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden). It was ruled out of order. This party thought that was essential. It is included in the American legislation but it is not in ours.

Our intention was not to pass on these costs to the people of Canada as taxpayers, but rather to impose a lid on the bureaucratic growth that we are all too familiar with respecting the unwieldy, unresponsive, secretive and expensive bureaucracies of this government. We thought a lid would impose a discipline which would keep those costs under control. The government argued against it and the proposal was ruled out of order. All of these measures we presented in committee. This was not done by the NDP. At the last moment they introduced amendments which they should have introduced in committee. We think that lid was important. We think that lid would have enhanced the position of the companies in the debt financing markets, and that is precisely why the provision is in the American legislation.

It is my belief, and I say this kindly to the government, that the number and the scope of our amendments clearly show that this government still does not know what it is doing wrong. They plod on and they keep making the same mistakes over and over again. It was our party which also expressed concern over the possibility that a controlling interest in the project might fall into foreign hands. We obtained an amendment which places the responsibility upon the governor-in-council, the cabinet, to approve any alteration in the shareholdings of the companies undertaking the project. That, we thought, was essential.

A final point remains which still causes some concern, and that is the absence of some assurance that Canadian gas will flow to Canadian consumers through this pipeline. This was one of the key points raised in debate last August—that we must maximize the potential benefits to Canadians that may issue from this project. At the time it was stated by our leader that it was imperative that the government and the Alcan proponents begin immediately environmental and other studies to tell us whether a Dempster connection was feasible. Today, almost eight full months later, there are not only no reports, but no studies have been initiated.

At committee we continually probed and questioned in an endeavour to find out whether Canadian gas would indeed flow through this line. We were continually assured it would, but assurances are all that the Canadian people have received. They have received no action in the way of setting up the machinery to prepare these reports. I believe that this point is critical. How are we to move to energy self-sufficiency? How are we to rectify our trade imbalances? This government is dragging its feet. When I speak of delays in introducing the bill, the delays apply equally to the absence of any action in exploring the Dempster lateral.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nielsen: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I can finish in just two minutes. The government is dragging its feet. That, coupled with the initial delays of the New Democratic Party, has delayed this bill. The NDP seems to have had a change of heart, perhaps because of pressures from the west. One can conjecture about that.

While the title of the act refers to a pipeline for the transmission of natural gas from Alaska and northern Canada, the definition of "pipeline" is, and I quote, "the pipeline for the transmission of natural gas from Alaska across Canada along the route set out in Annex I". This route does not include the Dempster or any other route to Canadian sources, and that to my mind is not good management. It is not leadership. I think they could be missing their big chance. The government is not maximizing this opportunity. The government has delayed the bill. It should have been introduced last fall. We had urged that last August through our leader. They have not used the intervening time to study that route.

The position of the NDP is simply not acceptable. They voted against the bill at second reading. What will they do at third reading? That is left to conjecture. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands accepted every one of our amendments in committee. He did not introduce any from his own party. Amendments should be discussed in committee where witnesses are available and where we can have free discussion and cross-examination of witnesses.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was absent, I am sure for a legitimate reason, when the matter came on at the report stage and the responsibility was left to the hon. member for Sault Ste Marie. His presentation displayed an absolutely abysmal ignorance of what went on in committee. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands was concerned about two things. He was concerned first of all about Canadian content, and he was concerned secondly about native rights. He listened to me, as I did to him in committee. The Canadian content and those guarantees are adequately protected by the acceptance of the government of our suggestions for parliamentary review, which is where it should be and nowhere else, and because it is impossible in the legislation itself.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands does not understand the situation with respect to the residents of the Yukon as a whole, and the native people there in particular. While the native people say that I do not represent their interests in this forum, what they really mean is that I do not agree with their views. I do not, and this party does not. It does not stand to reason that any development should be impeded or stalled or held up if the negotiating process is still a reasonable process to follow. Without the one prejudicing the other, there is no reason in the world why those negotiations cannot result in a just and fair settlement of the native claims, with development taking place at the same time. Logically, if you adopt any other conclusion there will be no road built, no bridge built and no new mine brought into production. Everything is stalled until the native demands are met, if they are to be met. That is an intolerable position, in a project of such national interest as this, for the New Democratic Party to be taking.

● (2032)

I chastise the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, although I would like to be as fit as he when I reach his age to enforce that chastisement—which I would probably be unable to do successfully even with our age difference now—for not introducing amendments at the committee stage. I chastise him and his party for agreeing with every amendment that we advanced at the committee stage and then at the report stage coming up with the ill-advised and empty amendments which he proposed.

When they charge us with defending the government's position, they are twisting the truth. The government came in with a weak bill. It is through our amendments that the bill is now at least half acceptable. There are still weaknesses, but we negotiated for as much as we could get. I suggest to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that in the national interest his party is compelled to vote for the project.

They have the guarantees that they wish through the overview of the parliamentary committee. That should satisfy him and his colleagues. They have the judicial provisions completely revamped so that there is no impediment to freedom of access to the courts by the individual. That was not in the original bill. It is there because of us. Clause 16, with its broad, sweeping powers, is wiped out because of our objections. That should satisfy them. All of the other major amendments which we proposed in committee have been accepted by the government.

If the gloomy predictions of the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie occur and if the control or ownership of the mine passes from Canadian hands, it will be on the head of the government, not on the head or in the discretion of a single minister, because of our proposals.

Something I want to emphasize is that the amended bill as it came back from committee was a result of the amendments of this party only. There was no input whatsoever in the way of amendments from the New Democratic Party. That I chastise them for. If they were really sincere and if there were no hypocrisy about their position, that is where their amendments should have been brought in.

The government has to be chastised for their delay, not because of the presentation of the project in the national interest. Through no fault of the Deputy Prime Minister—because he was ill—it was not treated with very much importance in the two days before we recessed for Easter. The first day it was left to a minister who knew nothing of the terms of the agreement itself. The second day it was left to my friend and colleague, whose constituency I cannot identify at the moment, but who also is not a member of the committee.

It seems rather a shame that they would treat in such cavalier fashion a bill of this importance. The magnitude of the project, the importance that it has to Canada as a whole, the bottom line being the creation of a new industry which has the potential of bidding competitively and successfully throughout the world in a pipeline industry, cannot be overlooked. For those people on the left to adopt stalling and delaying tactics, voting against it on second reading—and who knows what they are going to do on third reading—is very patently against the national interest. In my submission, that is what we must be concerned with here.

The government could have handled this project much better than it did. It could have negotiated a much better agreement, particularly with regard to my constituency, something I will take up elsewhere. However, for anyone in this House to vote against this project in my submission, and in the submission of this party, is sheer irresponsibility, because it leaves too much at this critical stage of our, to put it kindly, extremely disturbed economy.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, that is the longest two minutes I can recollect. The hon. member said he wanted two minutes of overtime. The hon. member has complained about the members of the New Democratic Party stalling and taking up time, but he is the only member who has taken part in the debate who went overtime on second reading, overtime on third reading and monopolized a good deal of the discussion in committee.

Nevertheless, I commend him for his interest and the work he has done. However, he would be better advised to worry about the position of his party instead of worrying about the position of the NDP. We are quite able to take care of ourselves. He had better square with the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and some of the other members who have raised very valid questions about this legislation, concerns which have not yet been resolved.

An hon. Member: But they are going to vote for it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is right. That is exactly what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is going to do. His speech was in two parts. Before dinner he spent all his time saying what a great piece of legislation this is and what hypocrites the NDP were that they were not going to vote for it. He has spent all his time since dinner analysing the bill, taking it to pieces and damning the government for the way they have handled the situation. That is a typical Tory approach. The speech can be sent out to two different classes of people. One half can be sent to those in favour of the bill and the other half to those against it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wonder what he had for dinner!

Mr. Nielsen: I didn't have any dinner.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Bill C-25 is a very difficult bill to assess. The reason is obvious. In the first place, there is no difference of opinion between the various political parties as to the advisability of making a land bridge available to the United States to transport gas from Prudhoe Bay to the United States. This party advocated considering that proposal a year ago. When the National Energy Board brought down its report in August, the leader of this party, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), set forth the conditions under which he would support legislation to have this line constructed. Therefore, there is no difference on that point of view.

Why we voted against the bill on second reading and why we are going to vote against it on third reading is because our concerns have not been resolved. I say to the hon. member for Yukon he need not worry about Premier Blakeney or anyone in the west telling us what we are going to do. We all make our own decisions. I do not think it comes with good grace from him or anyone else to suggest that our position with reference to this or any other piece of legislation will be dictated by what we are told by someone outside of our own caucus.

Mr. Nielsen: You must have heard from him.

● (2042)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Our objections to this legislation lie basically in two areas. First, there is the agreement itself which the bill before us virtually ratifies. We think the agreement was ill-conceived and hastily considered. We believe the government entered into an understanding which is not in the national interest. In the second place, we are critical of the legislation not so much for what it contains in its amended version as for what is omitted.

Members have criticized me for not moving any amendments in committee. Well, first of all, the Conservative members moved some good amendments which I supported. As for the amendments which were proposed by the Council of Yukon Indians, by the Committee on Arctic Research and by the Committee for an Independent Canada, I asked both the government members and the opposition members if they were prepared to support them. They were turned down. It would have been of no use at all to go through the charade of one member of the committee moving proposals which it was perfectly clear neither the government members nor the opposition members would support.

I agree that the bill was greatly improved in committee. Many of the most obvious deficiencies were removed and I commend the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) for adopting the changes proposed. To have really amended the legislation would have required redrafting the bill. It would have required amendments which no private member could have introduced.

I suppose we could now, at third reading, move a motion to refer the bill back and ask the government to negotiate with the United States so as to make fundamental changes in the legislation. But that would simply be histrionics. The government has been pushing this bill through as quickly as it can—too quickly, in my view, to allow for proper and careful consideration to be given to it. There is no doubt that the official opposition is gung-ho when it comes to getting this measure through, as the hon. member for Yukon has demonstrated again and again. The fact remains, though, that this House is about to take part in putting on the statute books a piece of legislation in which there are glaring gaps and deficiencies, shortcomings which will become more obvious as the project proceeds.

Let me remind hon. members that we are passing this legislation despite the fact that there has so far been no agreement with Foothills, the company which was recommended by the National Energy Board to get a certificate of public convenience. This is the company which is to be allowed to proceed with the project. The agreement is presently being negotiated. We do not know what it is to contain, yet the agreement is important for a number of reasons. For example, it will set forth the hiring procedures and the timetable for construction of the project. Most important of all, it will set forth the environmental impact protection provisions.

I do not think sufficient consideration has been given to environmental protection. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), quoting this afternoon from a brief submitted by the churches of Canada, made the comment that he thought the position they were taking really amounted to a philosophy of no growth. Mr. Speaker, I have read that brief. I do not agree with him, but I don't think it envisages a no growth situation. What it does, though, is remind parliament and the government that it should be possible to get economic growth without destroying the environment; that it should be possible to improve the living standards of this generation without destroying the prospects of the next generation living well. Surely those two things are not mutually exclusive.

I believe there has been a complete failure to understand the dangers which are implicit in this project. We might have been in a position to assess what the government had in mind if we could have examined the agreement with Foothills Limited. But we do not have that document. We have the report of the Lysyk inquiry which took only three months. Dean Lysyk himself, at every hearing, told those who came: This is only a preliminary inquiry; there is to be a second review. In point of fact, there will be no second inquiry. Committees will be set up and so on, but most of the plans will already be under way by then. There is a serious failure to put anything concrete in the legislation along the line that we want the pipeline but we do not want the environment of northern Canada destroyed or the livelihood of its people impaired.

Further, the United States government has not yet set a price for the gas, and in consequence Foothills Limited has not been able to get any gas contracts. And because it has not been able to get contracts, it cannot arrange any of its financing. No financial institution is going to buy bonds or debentures from a company which has not signed any firm contracts.

Again, there is nothing in the legislation about cost over-runs.

Mr. Nielsen: We tried.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In the message which President Carter sent to the U.S. Congress there was the definite statement that there would be no financial support forthcoming from the government of the United States. This afternoon the hon. member for Yukon said there would be not one dollar of the Canadian taxpayers' money involved. How does he know that? Certainly I do not know it and I do not suppose the Deputy Prime Minister knows it either. There may be another parliament here in a few years' time. There may be other members sitting on these benches, and if that pipeline is three-quarters finished and the company cannot get enough money to finish it, what government will sit back and do nothing?

An hon. Member: It will be like the CPR again.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The CPR affair will be peanuts in comparison with this situation.

Mr. Nielsen: They will have to come back to parliament.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Of course they will go to parliament, and when they do there will be members here just as supine as the hon. member for Yukon who will say: "Look, if we don't finish it there won't be any jobs and there won't be any gas".

Then again, there is no agreement between the government of Canada, the Territorial Council of Yukon or the provinces of British Columbia, Alberta or Saskatchewan. It is true the provinces will have to consent before the agreement is signed, but they will be under the same kind of pressure as we are in this chamber. It is true that particularly the provincial governments will have to agree before an agreement is signed, but they are going to be under the same type of pressure this House of Commons is under. They are going to be told that there are over one million unemployed in Canada and that if they want jobs they should agree and not hold the project up. In the public eye they are going to be accused of holding up a pipeline which is essential to economic growth in this country, and they are going to sign.

● (2052)

Yet what is involved? The hon. member for Yukon says taxpayers' money will not be involved. There could be a lot of local taxpayers' money involved because the construction of this pipeline, first of all in the Yukon, is going to put a heavy financial burden on the people of the territory. They are going to have to increase their infrastructure. They are going to have to supply improved educational services, health services and police services, and where is the money coming from?

Mr. Nielsen: The heritage fund.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In the case of the Yukon Territory they are going to get an advance payment on their taxes on which they are going to pay interest, and they are not going to get the $200 million heritage fund which was proposed. If I were the hon. member for Yukon, on that score alone I would vote against this legislation.

Mr. Nielsen: You can't amend that by legislation.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If it is not amended now, it will not be amended later; let us make no mistake about that.

Mr. Nielsen: You can't do it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The hon. member should just sit down and keep quiet for a while. The trouble is that when he sits down it agitates his mental processes, and this seems to make him vociferous. I listened very quietly to him, and I suggest that he just try to control his exuberance.

Mr. Nielsen: Impossible!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What about the provincial governments of British Columbia, Alberta and Saskatchewan? This pipeline will go through areas which will affect local government structures. It will increase the demand for housing, police protection and schools. Who is going to meet that cost? We do not know. It may be that the provincial governments and the federal government will reach satisfactory agreements as to compensation for those municipalities, but we have had no evidence of it. The municipalities in the Peace River region certainly have not received any assurance either from the government of British Columbia or from the federal government. We are being asked to pass legislation despite the fact that the provincial authorities, the Yukon Territorial Council and the local governing bodies have no idea at all how they are going to meet the burdens which are being imposed upon them by this parliament through this legislation.

Thirdly, there is no agreement which has yet been reached with the native people who will be affected by this pipeline. Negotiations started with the Council of Yukon Indians as far back as 1973. On February 14 of this year the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) said he hoped we were making progress but, of course, we hoped we would make progress and have a settlement in principle last fall. Now we are hoping we might have it soon. But there is still no settlement at all, and if we do not move any more quickly in the next four or five years than we have moved in the last four or five years, there will not be any settlement prior to the commencement of construction of this pipeline.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) was quoted by the media a few months ago as saying he could not agree that there should be no commencement of construction until a settlement had been reached, because that would allow the native people to hold the country up to blackmail. The hon. member for Yukon reiterated the argument again this evening that we cannot allow one small group of people to hold the nation up for ranson. He went so far as to say that even if the whole of his area were against this legislation he would support it because it is in the national interest.

On the other hand, surely any minority group in this country has a right to consideration, and what we are doing when we pass this legislation is putting the shoe on the other foot. What we are saying with this legislation is that we are going to build the pipeline. We are telling the native people that they had better sign the agreement we have put in front of them or the project will begin, and once the project is finished the chances of getting a settlement are extremely remote.

Mr. Nielsen: Not with our amendment.

Mr. Roche: What about motion No. 6?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I will come to the hon. member's amendment in a moment.

An hon. Member: It is after the fact.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Of course it is after the fact, and the hon. member knows that, but he wants to pretend he does not. Surely hon. members of this House who have listened to briefs presented by native people, not only from northern Canada but also from southern parts of Canada, know perfectly well that probably the blackest page in the history of this country is our treatment of native people. We robbed them of their land, we deceived them and we made promises to them which we have not kept.

Most native people in Canada live in dire poverty, stuck on reservations, and some of them not even on reservations. They have no agreement and no treaty. Our forefathers might have been excused. I personally do not excuse them, but they might have been excused by virtue of the fact that they did not realize the enormity of the crime which was being perpetrated. However, we in this parliament cannot claim ignorance. We know what has happened, and we know what will happen again if the government does not put its foot down and say it will come to an agreement with these people.

The company has said repeatedly through its spokesmen before the National Energy Board and before the special committee of this House that they do not want to begin the project unless they have the co-operation of the native people. They have said they do not want to build the pipeline in a hostile environment, and of course they do not. Too many things could happen. Too many difficulties could arise. I think we will regret not having had something much more definitive in this legislation with respect to an agreement in principle with the native people regarding their land claims in the areas affected by the pipeline.

The fourth thing I want to refer to has been referred to many times, but I want to touch on it because it was mentioned again today both by the Deputy Prime Minister and by the hon. member for Yukon. It is that there is no guarantee with reference to Canadian content. There is no guarantee of the 100,000 man-years of which the Deputy Prime Minister spoke, although actually if we take out the Dempster spur, we are probably talking about 67,000 or 68,000 man-years. However, that is a mere detail. The argument has been put up today, particularly by the hon. member for Yukon, who seemed to be more vociferous in protecting the government than the Deputy Prime Minister was, that we do not need to worry any more about Canadian content because we have the assurance of the company and the assurance of the government that they want to have Canadian content.

Mr. Nielsen: And the committee.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): And the committee; there is no doubt that that is true. When Mr. Blair, the president of Foothills (Yukon) Limited, was on the stand, I quoted to him his own submission to the National Energy Board in which he said that they would buy all their pipe in Canada. I asked Mr. Blair if he still stood by that, and he said "yes". I asked if that applied to practically all the compressors, the fittings and the valves, and he said "yes". I believe him, and I believe the Deputy Prime Minister when he says he wants to see all the business done in Canada. But that is not the point at issue. The point at issue is that we are ratifying an agreement with the United States, and article 7 of that agreement is paramount. It says:

● (2102)

Having regard to the objectives of this agreement, each government will endeavour to ensure that the supply of goods and services to the Pipeline project will be on generally competitive terms. Elements to be taken into account in weighing competitiveness will include price, reliability, servicing capacity and delivery schedules.

That is crystal clear. The matter of competitiveness will not be decided on the pious wishes of the Deputy Prime Minister or the good intentions of the president of Foothills. The allocation of a contract in the final analysis will lie with the terms that are set out in article 7. When the hon. member for Yukon argues, as he did this afternoon, that one did not have to worry about this because a committee was going to be set up to which matters would be referred and that members of that committee would see to it that Canadian content was taken care of, could anything be more absurd? Did the hon. member take a look at what the proposed change in the standing order says?

Mr. Nielsen: You supported that view in the committee.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): My friend does not need to worry about what I supported. If he would just try to control himself, I will get around to the position I took in committee. The proposal, which is in the order paper for today, is one which I certainly support. I support it in that it is better than having no committee at all, that it is a committee to which the monitoring agency must give account. The motion reads as follows:

"(t) Northern pipelines, to consist of not more than 15 members, to which shall stand permanently referred all reports, orders, agreements, regulations, directions and approvals mentioned in sections 12, 13, 14, 15 and 22 of the Northern Pipeline Act; provided that the said committee shall report thereon at least three times in every session.

What power does that give the committee? This is a committee to which the monitoring agency will periodically give information on how things are going. There is no guarantee that the reports it makes to parliament will even be discussed and certainly they will have no authority to discuss anything prior to it taking place.

One of my main quarrels with this legislation is that prior to its being suggested there was no accountability at all. Here was an agency which was to have the power of several departments, which was to have the power to authorize the expenditure of billions of dollars, which is responsible to no one, and which is not required to account to anyone. I supported the idea of having a committee of the House—certainly it is better than nothing—but it is a committee which deals with the matter after the fact, not prior to policies being instituted. For instance, they will not have a budget to discuss before the budget is made up. They may be allowed to look at expenditures after they have been made.

Mr. Nielsen: On a four months basis.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This will not give parliament any power. It is a reporting agency. It is certainly better than nothing, but let nobody think for a moment that this answers the problem of Canadian content in the pipeline. It does not at all. The matter of Canadian content is determined by the treaty, and as the hon. member for Yukon said this afternoon, you cannot amend a treaty. Of course you can. You can ask the government to go back and renegotiate the treaty as it did with the Columbia River Treaty. As the treaty now stands, there is no guarantee whatsoever that Canadian content will be properly recognized.

It may be that I am a born optimist—although sometimes my optimism is not fully warranted—but I think that the 88 cent dollar will probably help us more than any other thing the government might do, and we might get a fair share of the business. As my colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), pointed out this afternoon, we should not forget that the Alyeska line was built entirely with Japanese pipe, and we should not forget that the Americans have the Disc program and that West German bankers have announced they are prepared to help finance any pipeline companies without interest charges during the construction period. We should not forget these things.

The hon. member for Yukon again said that my colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, was being hypocritical when he talked about what GATT would do. GATT is a fact, but I point out that in the committee the minister and the law officer of the Crown were telling us that GATT did not really matter because in interpreting article 7 you must look at the preamble of the treaty under which the interests of both countries were to be advanced. So that GATT is not anything they can hide behind. The fact is that it would have been comparatively simple to have said to the Americans: "You want a land bridge across our country. It is going to cost us a great deal of inconvenience, it will impose some hardships upon our people; but it will create jobs and we want those jobs, so part of the quid pro quo is that we get the preference." We could have safeguarded the company and we could have said that Canadian contractors will be the first to bid. If the company can convince the minister in charge of the monitoring agency and the officers of the agency that those bids are out of line, then those bids could be swept aside and the whole project could be laid open to competitive bidding.

Mr. Nielsen: He has that power now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Canadian contractors should have had the first right to bid. Almost every provincial government in this country with reference to highway contracts and public works contracts gives its own employers and its own workers a preference, so there is no reason at all why the Canadian government could not have done the same.

Mr. Nielsen: The minister has that power under the bill.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He has no power under the bill except the power that is in article 7 of the agreement; and if the minister tries to set aside article 7 of the agreement, he will be in real trouble with the United States.

Mr. Nielsen: All that was explained in the committee and you know it.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What I want to do in closing is to point out to the House that since we started to discuss this legislation the whole scenario has changed. Originally we talked about a pipeline to take Prudhoe Bay gas to the United States.

Mr. Nielsen: Plus the Dempster.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Since that time, John G. McMillian, chief executive officer of the Northern Energy Company which is a partner of Foothills, has signed an agreement with the Pan-Alberta Gas Company for the purchase of 1.04 billion cubic feet of gas per day. That works out to something over 370 billion cubic feet of gas per year. That would mean an increase of 37 per cent in our exports of gas. I know that the answer will be that we cannot do this without the approval of the National Energy Board, but I say the National Energy Board will give that approval. I predict furthermore that they will get approval for even more gas than is now being requested.

It makes one ask whether this government is like the Bourbons who learned nothing and forget nothing. Have we forgotten that it is only five years ago that some of us were pleading in the House to phase out exports of oil? Today we are a net importer of oil and we are told by the National Energy Board that in the 1990's we will be spending $4 billion or $5 billion per year to pay for imports of oil. Are we going to make the same mistake with reference to gas? We are exporting 60 per cent of our gas production. We are going to increase it now by almost 40 per cent.

● (2112)

The government say: "Just a moment, we are going to work out a swap arrangement". I think a swap arrangement could be worked out if it were on an energy equivalent, so that for every 100 units of BTU energy we sold we would get back a similar amount, if and when we wanted it. That is what the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources talked about a few months ago. The tune has now changed. When Mr. Bob Blair, the president of Foothills, appeared before the committee, I asked him about the swap. He said, "Yes, we would like to do that." I asked on what basis. He said in effect: "The only basis would be that we would sell Alberta gas down this pipeline to the United States, and if and when we needed gas, we would get it back; but we would sell at the going price now and we would buy it at the going price then." I am not saying the government will approve that, but I tried to get the chairman of the National Energy Board, when he was before the committee, to be very specific and he ducked right around the question. Certainly the Deputy Minister was not any more helpful.

Do we realize what we are doing? We are walking blindfolded into a continental energy policy. The Americans have always wanted a continental energy policy, particularly when they ran short of energy. We are like the couple of brothers who went into town: one saved his money and did well, and the other one had a high old time until he was broke and then said, "Let's pool our resources". That is exactly what the United States is doing. We have supplies of gas. We can manage for quite a few years. But we do not have inexhaustible supplies. If we enter into a swap arrangement by which we sell 370 billion cubic feet of gas per year at $2.16 at the border, and 10 or 15 years down the road we buy it back at $3.50 or $4 per thousand cubic feet, we will have sold Canadians down the river. This House had better be aware of the manner in which the pieces are falling into place.

Now they are talking about starting the pipeline at the south end and building it so that it will take Alberta gas down to the United States, and the companies involved will make enough money out of that to finance in part the rest of the pipeline. The primary purpose in the immediate future is not to take Prudhoe Bay gas to the United States. The primary purpose is to take Alberta gas to the United States, and then hope some day, when the line is completed and Prudhoe Bay gas is coming down, if we need it, we can buy it back at a price. I suggest with great conviction that price will not be the same price we got for the gas we sold.

As I come to the end of my parliamentary life, I hate to make such a pessimistic speech; but I suggest to the hon. members of this House that my pessimism regarding this piece of legislation is based on some very bitter experience. I was in the House in 1962 when the Columbia River Treaty was debated. It was proposed by the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Also I was in the House in 1963 when we debated the amended version of it, as it was introduced by the government of the late Lester B. Pearson. There were only a few of us who fought that legislation. We were branded as holding up a necessary project. It was said that this was an opportunity to get the people of British Columbia very cheap gas, almost free gas, with very little inconvenience.

Of course, the legislation was shoved through, although we held it up for some months in the House and in committee. We were chastised in many parts of British Columbia for so doing. Today it is acknowledged by the government of British Columbia, headed by the son of the man who was premier when the agreement was signed, that the Columbia River Treaty has cost British Columbia over $500 million. We are much wiser now than we were then about the Columbia River Treaty.

Also I remember that in 1965, the government of the late Lester B. Pearson, brought in the Canada-United States auto pact. The same story was told then. This pact was going to give us more work and a larger share of the automobile manufacturing industry. It was going to remove the differential in price between cars in the United States and cars in Canada. What has happened? Again we opposed that legislation, but not because we were against the principle. It was because this legislation had all the cards stacked against Canada. We were shooting craps with loaded dice. It was rammed through, amid the cheers and the hurrahs by those who favoured it and the jeers for those who dare to question it. In the past 12 years, there has been a slight surplus in our favour in three of those years, but in nine of those years we have lost approximately $1 billion a year on that agreement. Surely we should have learned something.

I hope I am wrong this time. I hope this legislation will be beneficial and the pipeline will go well. I hope the agreements with the provinces, the territorial council and the native Indians will be the kind of agreements which protect Canadians. I hope the government will be able to work out ways to get around article 7 so that the Canadian content will give us the jobs we hope for. But I am very doubtful. Hon. members of the House should realize that if the harmful things which could happen do happen, they should never claim they were not warned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues from the Edmonton area have not participated in this debate at any great length by deliberate policy. First of all, there was limited access to the committee. Also there was a desire to have an orderly debate without any protraction. If there is a city and a district which has a vital interest in this pipeline, certainly it is that portion of central and northern Alberta which is headquartered through the city of Edmonton.

At this time it is not my intention to engage in great polemics with regard to this pipeline, but we have to look at the general principles involved. I have listened with some care to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and earlier today to his colleague, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). I am not going to engage in any point by point argument with either of those hon. members. They are expressing doctrinaire points of view which clearly indicate their socialistic views regarding the development and the operation of that industry or the use of resources. They betray the socialist traditional leaning by which they know better how to run affairs than the people who will be risking their money and energy developing these resources.

● (2122)

This is implicit. In fact, I would say it is explicit in the descriptions by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands of this House committee which has been appointed under the bill as a watchdog committee. As far as the socialists are concerned, this is not to be a watchdog committee in any way but, rather, it is to be a management committee. Those members will substitute their valued judgments regarding the construction of this pipeline for those of management and the people on the site who have the responsibility for the business commitment to build this pipeline, and the responsibility for the risk involved to their own money as well as the money of other investors. There is to be no government money involved in this particular project, and I hope that turns out to be the case.

I intend to propose something that has not been discussed so far during this debate, and this will involve what I consider to be the advantages to Canadian investors and how we can encourage them to provide the bulk of the money required for that part of the line going through Canada, without the necessity to resort to government participation.

Some people will suggest that this project involves an extremely large investment requirement. Let me remind them that this is not to be financed entirely over one year. This pipeline will take some time to build, and investment will not only come from individual Canadians but from Canadian corporations as well.

I want to look at this project from a positive angle. We have heard hon. members often in the past describe many projects in a negative fashion. They have said almost everything about how not to achieve a project, and they have done so in detail. The people in the region from which I come have an entirely different concept about this project, as do the people from those regions represented in the past by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

I recall when that hon. gentleman was premier of the province of Saskatchewan. At that time there was very active petroleum development in the province of Alberta. If any government went about the development of oil and gas within provincial boundaries in a backward, hesitant, wrong-headed, impossible way, it was that administration led by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. As a result, entire fields of leases were given up, in total disgust, because of the conditions imposed by that socialist administration. The net result was that a great part of the population of Saskatchewan moved to Alberta where the oil and gas development action was, and they have remained there. Even today many people from Saskatchewan are moving to Alberta. That province has a different philosophy and a different approach. It has a positive approach, and that is the kind of outlook I want to see on the part of Canadians toward this project.

I have here a numer of magazines, including the Oil Week, which indicate advance proposals for the development of oil-sands mines in the constituency of my friend the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk). The next project will cost in the neighbourhood of $4 billion and will lead to the production of $150,000 barrels a day by 1985. Others are to follow.

We do not have the people or the materials to undertake more than one development of this type at a time. These are fantastically large projects. To the extent they are financed by Canadians, using Canadian materials and labour, we will have economic development for the benefit of Canadians. The governments of the provinces involved, whether they be of Saskatchewan or Alberta, and the Government of Canada will gain greater revenues through these developments which can be used to provide better services for Canadian citizens. Governments have an interest in these projects as well as the people, but they have to be initiated by private investment.

Governments lay down the guidelines and parameters of proper conduct for the development of these resources, but beyond that governments should not interfere. When listening to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands on what I consider in many ways to be nitpicking matters, I was reminded of a couple of philosophers of the Middle Ages arguing about how many angels one could fit on the head of a pin. These are totally sterile arguments. After all, the proof of the pudding is in the eating, and the oil development policy of the hon. gentleman when he was premier of Saskatchewan does not give me any proof or encouragement that what he describes could result from the sensible development of the oil industry. I suspect that this would accomplish quite the contrary, particularly since the industry in Saskatchewan has never recovered.

Let me speak a little bit about the capitalization of this project. The method of capitalization should not be covered by the bill as it is not covered in the agreement. I do not think one should establish capitalization by statutory requirement. I want to see Canadians participate in the capitalization and the ownership of shared capital, or debt capital, for this undertaking to the maximum extent possible.

● (2132)

To do that, Mr. Speaker, we are going to have to see a change in our tax laws. Our income tax law with its capital gains provision is an absolute albatross around the neck of any potential Canadian investor in projects of this kind. I do not care whether they are private individuals, whether they are corporate investors or whether they are actively engaged in the development and production of oil or gas in this country.

Over the past 20 years our history with regard to income tax as it relates to resource development is a woeful chapter of wrong-headed philosophy. It was designed—I do not know by whom or for what reason—to penalize the Canadian investor. There was an infamous principle occupation rule, which I have spoken against for over 15 years in this House. I must say in that regard that the government which I suppported was just as deaf to arguments and supplications on behalf of the oil industry while all the time Canadians, and particularly Albertans, were being driven out of ownership of the oil lands because our American counterparts could always bid us out. In the purchase of speculative leases, farm out agreements and all other related development work, we as Canadians simply could not recover any losses unless our principal occupation was the search for and development of oil and gas. Therefore, Canadian investors, be they doctors, lawyers, garage owners, farmers or what-have-you, could not put up $10,000 or $40,000 or any portion of the drilling costs, which were extremely low drilling costs for those earlier wells.

I have been through this many times in this House, Mr. Speaker. It was a one-shot affair for so many of them because if the net result of drilling a hole in the early days was a dry hole the loss was no more than $75,000 to $85,000. Rarely did it go to $100,000. But it was a loss and it could not be offset against any other income.

On the other hand, our American counterparts could always offset those losses against their other income. It was all right if you had enough money in the syndicate for one small company to drill three or four wells and you had a couple of producers, because you could always offset the expenses of the dry holes against the revenues earned by the producers. Now, however, that nefarious rule is gone and there can be a progressive write-off of those expenses.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

How are we going to interest Canadians in such projects? Well, we all know what was done with the building of Alberta Gas Trunk back in the mid-1950's when the reservations for equity stock were limited to all Albertan citizens. But that policy in the 1950's before we had capital gains tax was geared to cupidity and the love of profit by the many thousands of Alberta citizens who took a reservation for the maximum number of shares that would be allotted to them and at the same time signed a trust agreement for which they were paid a bonus in order to assign the stock as soon as they got it. There was no limitation on the devolution of stock, and the net result was that soon the ownership of Alberta Gas Trunk passed out of the hands of Albertans. It is now a company that is controlled basically by investment funds of one kind or another.

How can we avoid that this time? Well, I am going to suggest that with the advent of the capital gains tax there is a method that will see that the classes of Canadians who will invest in this stock are such that the stock will remain in Canadian hands. It is simply this: that the income tax Act be amended to provide that, in the development and production of natural resources, there be created a so-called "ball park" of qualifying operations. If any Canadian taxpayer that is a Canadian citizen residing in Canada or a company controlled by Canadians is to invest in such stocks and was to keep the stock for a period of five years and then dispose of it, there would be a forgiveness of any capital gains tax. That is for five years. If it were kept for four years, then the forgiveness would be 80 per cent, and progressively moved downwards so that if the stock were kept within the "ball park" of investment there would only be a 20 per cent forgiveness.

There would, as I say, be the opportunity for rollover providing the stocks or the investments were kept within the category of qualifying investments, but one has to be a Canadian to get that advantage. It does not mean that non-Canadians could not invest, but such non-Canadians investing in Canada would have to pay income tax as well as capital gains tax. Of course, I am looking to an operation where basically we are going to see some profit and an increase in the value of those stocks or investments. To me the idea is fundamentally simple and would encourage Canadians to invest in this type of stock.

Now, how do we guarantee that the initial investment shall be for Canadians? This can be done the same way as it was done in the case of Alberta Gas Trunk, except that in that case Albertans had a monopoly on the initial offering. In this particular instance I dare say that since the pipeline would have to go through three areas of Canada—the Yukon, British Columbia and Alberta—some equitable formula could be found, perhaps on the basis of the proportion of total costs, and that percentage could be allocated to Albertans, a remaining percentage to British Columbia and then some percentage to the Yukon. To the extent that the people from any one province or zone did not take up the investment allotted to that zone, then that portion could fall to other Canadians; there are a number. I am not going to be dogmatic about the formula except as to the insistence that it should be Canadians or Canadian companies who shall have the benefit of the bonuses with regard to this investment in this particular pipeline operation.

● (2142)

I do not know just what volume of savings would be forthcoming from Canadians. I would hope that they could take up the bulk of this offer over the period of years which this pipeline will require for construction. I would like to see this kind of financing applicable in some of the other developments in Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

Let us start with resources and get the control of resources back into the hands of Canadians to a greater degree than is the case today. Goodness only knows that our tax policy over the years has driven the ownership of our natural resources, minerals, petroleum and natural gas, into the hands of foreign nationals or international companies. This has happened simply because they have the tax advantage. If there ever was an ostrich-like attitude toward this thing over the years, it was that of the Canadian government as well as some of the provincial administrations.

I am astounded that we, as a Canadian public, have put up with it this long and have failed to recognize how we could deal with the situation when the tools for it were immediately at hand. I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that those things that require to be done with regard to the further implementation of the agreement concerning this pipeline shall be carried out and some of the many difficulties that exist will be ironed out.

I have not spoken about the settlement of Indian land claims. I do not think those were in any way related to the development of this pipeline, no more than they were related to the development of the Great Canadian Oil Sands, or Syncrude. Nor will they be related to the next consortia in Alberta or Saskatchewan with regard to the development of oil and gas. The claims arise for other reasons and shall be paid for by Canadians, because it is the government on behalf of Canadians which has the obligation with regard to land claims. I thought it was patently nonsensical for anyone to insist that part of the price of this agreement should be the setting aside of a fund of hundreds of millions of dollars to be paid for by the users of the gas to settle land claims. What nonsense. It has no relationship whatsoever. It is merely an attempt by someone who feels that there is a legitimate claim by the native peoples to find a suitable milk cow to provide the milk, as long as that person did not own the cow and did not have to feed the cow.

I hope that the Canadian government and any other provincial government which is involved in land claims will get on with the business. That is a matter of justice vis-à-vis the native peoples. It has nothing to do with the development of natural resources.

I think that the Berger Commission in effect did a great disservice to the people of the Northwest Territories and along the Mackenzie River valley. Go there now and talk to them. Talk to the people of northern Alberta and British Columbia who have contact with the Northwest Territories and see what has happened and what is going to happen to what have been thriving communities as a result of the negative stand taken by the Berger commission. This was in effect an engineered affair. It was an engineered affair subject to points of view organized by the CBC and other people who used native associations, not for the benefit of those native associations, but for political purposes. In all that has happened the Berger report will join as quickly as possible other government reports on some lonely shelf in some back room. In my estimation, Mr. Speaker, that is its fate. It started out with the wrong concept and it finished with the wrong recommendations.

I commend, Mr. Speaker, the work that was done by my colleague from the Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) on this particular bill and as a matter of fact by all members of the House who participated. I may disagree with the views of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, but I do not disagree with his own bona fides and his own earnestness. We can now get on with the final determination on this particular bill and I would invite hon. members to join in the support of third reading.

● (2152)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. MacEachen) which was agreed to on the following division:

(Division No. 37)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott	Andre (Calgary Centre)	Basford
Alexander	Andres (Lincoln)	Bawden
Alkenbrack	Baker (Gander-Twillingate)	Beatty
Allard	Baker (Grenville-Carleton)	Béchard
Anderson		Bégin (Miss)
Andras (Port Arthur)		Blaker
		Boulanger

Adjournment Debate

Messrs.

Brisco	Gillespie	McKinnon
Buchanan	Goodale	Milne
Caccia	Gray	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Cadieu	Guay (Lévis)	Murta
Cafik	Harquail	Neil
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)	Herbert	Nicholson (Miss)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)	Hnatyshyn	Nielsen
Caron	Holmes	Nowlan
Clark (Rocky Mountain)	Holt (Mrs.)	Ouellet
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)	Hopkins	Paproski
Clermont	Huntington	Parent
Collenette	Jarvis	Patterson
Comtois	Johnston	Penner
Condon	Kaplan	Pigott (Mrs.)
Corriveau	Kempling	Pinard
Crouse	Lajoie	Prud'homme
Cyr	Lalonde	Railton
Darling	Lambert (Edmonton West)	Raines
Dawson	Lamontagne	Ritchie
De Bané	Lang	Roberts
Demers	Langlois	Robinson
Dinsdale	Laniel	Roche
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Lapointe	Rondeau
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)	Lawrence	Roy (Timmins)
Duclos	Leblanc (Laurier)	Roy (Laval)
Dupont	Lee	Schellenberger
Dupras	Lefebvre	Scott
Duquet	Lessard	Sharp
Epp	Loiselle (Chambly)	Smith (Churchill)
Faulkner	Loiselle (Saint-Henri)	Smith (Saint-Jean)
Fleming	Lumley	Stevens
Flynn	MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)	Stollery
Foster	MacEachen	Tessier
Francis	MacGuigan	Towers
Friesen	MacKay	Trudel
Gauthier (Roberval)	Marceau	Turner
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)	Martin	Wenman
Gendron	Masniuk	Whiteway
	Mazankowski	Whittaker
	McCain	Wise
	McKinley	Woolliams
		Yanakis
		Yewchuk—139

NAYS

Messrs.

Blackburn	Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)	Orlikow
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)	Leggatt	Peters
Gilbert	Nystrom	Rodriguez
		Saltsman
		Symes—11

● (2222)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

POST OFFICE—DELIVERY SERVICE TO NEW SUBDIVISIONS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) said that he had just arrived from a visit in Edmonton, which is in the vicinity of my constituency. He was replying to a question put by me representing, as I do, the constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar. I ask if the Postmaster General does not know where Saskatoon is, because I suggest we have very serious problems with respect to our postal service. Many people in Saskatoon really believe that the Postmaster General does not know where Saskatoon is. I can assure him that by the end of this speech he will know exactly where it is and exactly what the problem is. I expect in turn that after having received this kind of advice he will do me and the people of Saskatoon, and generally people in urban communities across this country who deserve a reasonable postal service, the favour of providing door to door delivery. I hope he will have the presence of mind to stand up tonight and tell those people that they can expect now to receive the same kind of service or, to be more correct, door to door delivery service in the new subdivisions, a delivery service which they so sadly lack now.

Although it is tempting to blame the fact that the Postmaster General does not know where Saskatoon is as being the root problem of our inadequate mail service, the real malaise lies much deeper than that. Last week we faced yet another increase in the price of stamps in this country, sending the cost of mailing a first class letter up to an all-time high of 14 cents. It can come as little comfort to know that none of this money whatsoever will go toward improving service, and further that it will not even wipe out the Post Office's massive deficit.

I want to mention, for the benefit of the Postmaster General, some of the new areas in Saskatoon which require that service. They are: Meadow Green, Wildwood, Confederation Park, River Heights and Pacific Heights. Saskatonians living in these new areas will have to pay up like everyone else for the privilege of receiving mail weeks late, sometimes in deplorable condition. However, unlike Saskatonians living in older areas, they will have to trudge down to their little green boxes to get it. It is all part of this new service at the higher rate.

● (2227)

The Postmaster General said that he was sorry. He stated the following:

> The Post Office Department is very conscious of the annoyance, inconvenience and disappointment caused to new home owners across Canada who expected to have door to door delivery of mail.

This was contained in a letter addressed to me and also to the city council of the city of Saskatoon. He has done nothing about it. We make out petitions and send them to the Postmaster General, and then he sends back a form letter of apology and attempts to provide more little green boxes. The form letters imply that the lack of door to door service is merely a temporary inconvenience. Don't bet on it! The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) indicated last year that the government has given serious consideration to doing away with door to door delivery altogether. Thus, not only will the people in new areas be deprived of this service; it will include every citizen and resident of this country. The Prime Minister has put on record that he is considering this option. Is this the type of service we can expect at higher prices for delivery of first class and other classes of mail?

The Post Office has now gone through a decade of drift, with only one consistent theme: a steady deterioration of service. It has the worst labour relations in the public service. It is losing over $1 billion of the taxpayers' money. It takes longer today to deliver mail than it did before the last war. It does not provide full service to those families who have a right to it. The service requires reform now, if it is not to slide into total chaos. For this reason, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) established a special task force which will bring back its recommendations soon. After the next election, the Conservative government will make a new start in the Post Office. It needs it. What does the Postmaster General propose to do now for those people who have been deprived wrongfully for over two years of their right to have door to door delivery service?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I could argue with many of the affirmations stated by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), but I prefer a more positive approach to the problem, and I should like to tell hon. members of the House what we intend to do.

Yesterday the hon. member asked about the lifting of the current freeze on extensions of letter carrier service and the possibilities of alternatives. I have been discussing the matter with senior departmental officials, but basically I can restate only what I outlined on previous occasions.

The Post Office Department has several methods of getting mail to the public. One of the most common methods is that of the individual picking up his mail from a post office box in a small town post office, in his apartment building or in a large business complex. Another is by general delivery over the counter, and still another is by rural route delivery.

In most cases both businesses and residences in cities enjoy door to door service. While this method of delivery is relatively efficient in business areas, the cost per item of mail delivered in the residential areas is relatively high. It would be well to realize that in 1978 the milkman, breadman and dry cleaner have eliminated daily service in most residential areas. Obviously they are faced with the same high cost of delivery as we are.

In 1972 the Post Office had a $90 million deficit. The projected deficit this year, without the rate increase, would have been $717 million, and for 1980 it would have been $1 billion. This situation was assessed in November 1975, and it was determined that there were just not enough funds in taxpayers' pockets to handle these rapidly increasing costs. In the name of good administration and sound business practices, the government restrained its spending. The only alternative was to put a freeze on the extension of door to door delivery service.

• (2232)

In place of door-to-door service, new suburban areas were provided delivery service through the use of group mail boxes located on the side of the streets adjacent to these new areas, bearing in mind that the Canadian citizen is entitled to the services of the mails.

[Translation]

I realize that city dwellers are used to door-to-door delivery service. I realize also that in some neighbourhoods we are putting some hardship on our customers by forcing them to pick up their mail at the wickets of general delivery post office or at a group of mail boxes located near their homes.

[English]

I realize, however, that I have the serious responsibility of providing Canadians with a mail delivery service which has some degree of consistency, yet in doing so I must ensure that excess costs are avoided.

I should like to reassure Canadians that for the moment there is no question of curtailing any existing services. If we are to contemplate any changes or expansion in delivery methods we must re-evaluate the overall situation and consult with the unions to obtain their full collaboration, keeping in mind that the taxpayer is the one who always foots the bill.

POST OFFICE—MINISTER'S ACTION TO IMPROVE SERVICE AND LOW EMPLOYEE MORALE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) is with us tonight. The last time I dealt with matters on the motion to adjourn the spokesman was the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley), who completely missed the point I was making. Unfortunately the replies of the Postmaster General since he has assumed responsibility for this portfolio—and he is the tenth Postmaster General in the past six years—would indicate he is not yet aware of the gravity of the situation. The only response to some of the problems briefly outlined tonight by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has been to increase postal rates and to change postmasters general. This has only aggravated the problem.

The Post Office provides an essential service, but it is in desperate difficulty and its efficiency has been going downhill continually for ten years. This is demonstrated by the more than one half billion dollar deficit in the past fiscal year. Business is declining, particularly parcel post, the level of which today is down to the level of 20 years ago, and projections with regard to first class mail indicate this mail is down by one million pieces. The situation is desperate when periodical publishers in Canada, upon whom the Post Office depends for goodwill, are forced to go to court to get justice as a result of the service, or lack of it, by the Post Office Department. At the present time they have an appeal before the Supreme Court of Ontario.

The Postmaster General, in the face of these obvious problems, has told members of the House that service is improving, as are industrial relations. In a reply to the hon. member for Hamilton-West (Mr. Alexander) yesterday it was pointed out that you cannot even depend on registered mail these days. Obviously postal service is in a very desperate state of deterioration, and this is mainly the result of a disastrous breakdown in morale following the breakdown in labour-management relations.

I do not have much time to develop my theme, but it relates to mechanization and the failure of management to consult with unions when introducing this monster for the handling of our mail. There has been a complete breakdown in the parcel post sorting mechanism at the bulk mail facility at Gateway, Mississauga. The Post Office is establishing an emergency manual sorting process at the abandoned warehouse of Canadian Arsenals. It looks as if they are going to have to take the computer program back to contract. All these things are evidence that something drastic has got to be done.

● (2237)

Canada is not unique. The Conservative party have a task force working on this matter. We have already come to a lot of positive conclusions and I am going to pass some positive tips on to the Postmaster General tonight. The United Kingdom, West Germany and Japan, all modern states, have faced exactly the same problem. Several of them have gone the route of the Crown corporation because, after all, the modern post office is an industrial organization. However, essentially they have dealt with the problems of management and labour relations in the post office by establishing management advisory committees where management, workers, postal users and customers sit around the same table.

It is not consultation or co-determination or comteam, or any such terms that are used by those who think they are resolving the problems in Canada's Post Office. It is constant consultation. No decision is made in dealing with the major problems in our changing technology in the post office unless consensus is achieved. As a result, you have harmonious co-operation and you have every aspect of the postal service working together to achieve the most efficient operation possible.

The union have offered the Postmaster General an alternative. They say they want a study. They want the Postmaster General and the government to consider the possibility of a Crown corporation. Why does he not move in this direction? He will never get a contract unless he does something. To do nothing is to court continued disaster. Leadership is desperately and urgently needed. There must be legislative action, and this is the question I raised the other day. The Postmaster General said: "Maybe before the election, maybe after the election". After the election will be too late. This is the voice of management!

I have before me a report known as the Uberig report. It is dated August 11, 1975, and it has excellent suggestions for improving the post office situation. The information paper is headed: "Re. Special Status For the Canada Post Office". Recommendations have been made by the union to improve the situation. The postal users have gone to court to get justice from the Post Office Department, and certainly the voice of the general public protesting loud and clear has been heard in the land. I trust that the Postmaster General will indicate that he is going to take action, and that he is going to take it as quickly and as urgently as possible.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have listened very carefully to my colleague across the aisle, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). He has mentioned many things which I could argue tonight. For example, he talks about harmony in the United States post office. He should read American newspapers, where he will find talk of the danger of strike in the post office and the talk—

Mr. Dinsdale: It is illegal; they cannot strike.

Mr. Lamontagne: Even if it is illegal it could happen just the same.

Also, he should read a book which was written in the United States about the mess the United States post office is in. This book was printed last year. I am not interested when he talks about harmony somewhere else. I am interested in what is going on here.

It would be a good thing if the hon. member on the other side of the chamber would learn what has been done during the past few weeks. I will tell him what has been done during the past few weeks in the Post Office Department. I had meetings with all union leaders, including Mr. Parrot, president of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. I have had meetings with all senior management in the Post Office Department as well as regional and divisional managers. The General Trade and Labour Union has ended its rotating strikes and an agreement has been reached. The president of the conciliation board has now been appointed and I can report that conciliation is going normally. The Hubling commission got underway concerning allegations of mail disruptions during the Christmas period in Toronto. I have visited major and minor plants in the Toronto area and other places and have talked with many workers in order to determine exactly what they think.

Invitations have been made to CUPW to sit down and talk about labour problems. We have invited them to study with us the feasibility and possibility of creating a Crown corporation. We have also invited them to participate in our inter-group meetings. However, all the invitations fell on deaf ears and a response was never received.

● (2242)

Our objective is to negotiate an acceptable collective agreement with CUPW without a work disruption if at all possible. We have made efforts and every attempt to improve and strengthen our dialogue and our relations with the post office workers. We should communicate more and more with the employees, I agree, and with the general public so they can understand the situation and then be able to make a valid and a more informed judgment on the situation. We will try to avoid an escalatory situation of power struggling. It is not a question of who is the strongest. When one talks about leadership, there is all kinds of leadership. We have leadership and we will show leadership. Hitler was a leader but that is not the kind of leadership we believe in, and I do not think Canadians do either.

Mr. Dinsdale: Have you talked to the postal users? They have to go to court for justice.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—NORTHERN PIPELINE—DISCUSSIONS ON ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF CERTAIN AREAS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on March 16 I asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) the degree of involvement of his ministry with reference to the development of the Alaska pipeline. I did that on the basis of having participated in the extensive standing committee hearings on the pipeline and on the basis of having listened to speeches in the House on second reading and at report stage about the concerns of government with reference to industrial development along the course of the pipeline and in those communities which will be closely associated with the pipeline.

I have in fact addressed similar questions to the same minister before the standing committee dealing with regional economic expansion. The minister on March 16, in reply to me, indicated two things which are of concern. He indicated that there had been no negotiations with municipal authorities but that there had been some discussions, I must assume in a very shallow and vague fashion, with provincial authorities. He really was not quite correct because some of his officials in DREE in British Columbia have met with the regional district representatives in the northern part of British Columbia.

What really concerns me is that the minister, in his answer to me on March 16, went on to say that he was trying to put into force a subagreement on the industrial development of that province which was signed last year. Mr. Speaker, a careful analysis of the subagreements dealing with industry which were signed with British Columbia last year will indicate to the reader that those subagreements in no general or specific way deal with pipeline development and the need to develop the industrial sector along the course of that major undertaking.

In fact, on the occasion that I addressed the minister with reference to this issue before the standing committee, he did in both instances make reference to the service sector. I must assume, sir, that it is a reflection of the minister's thinking in general terms, in general policy, when he speaks of the service sector. The last thing that needs assistance is the service sector. The first thing that needs consideration is some orderly planning for the future in terms of the industrial community, whether it be in the manufacturing sense, basic industries, resource industries or secondary industry.

• (2247)

I find it very regrettable that on the basis of questions that I have asked the minister both in the House and before the standing committee he is clearly not prepared to give his department the mandate to make the necessary planning, certainly in the long range, that is required if this pipeline is going to be more than simply a pipeline, which in itself is a major proposal. If it is going to serve in any real sense the needs of Canadians in the north, there has to be some planning. That planning falls within the responsibility of the minister. Clearly that minister is not prepared to live up to that responsibility.

I can only suggest that a different government, a Conservative government, would have that planning in place so that when we go into this proposal four years down the line we would know what provisions can be made for industry and what provisions the government would have to make to encourage industry to develop. It would not be to live up to some willy-nilly development along the fringes of the pipeline which inevitably in the long haul will fail, and not to provide dollars to the service sector when it is clearly not needed.

I hope the minister will study the comments I have made and will give his officials a mandate to work in the direction I have suggested, other than the type of summary that DREE has provided with reference to the pipeline debate, which had some value but clearly did not deal with that particular mandate of that minister.

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to reply on behalf of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) for whom I had the pleasure of being parliamentary secretary for 12 months prior to being Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

It is not accurate to state that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has not taken any initiative to discuss economic development with municipal and regional officials in northern British Columbia. The officials have had frequent discussions and have made frequent presentations to various municipal and regional bodies, chambers of commerce, etc., in northern British Columbia, including Prince George, Dawson Creek, Fort St. John and Fort Nelson. In fact it was the recognition of the potential for economic development in the northern part of the province that led the department to the decision to establish an office in Prince George, which would make staff and programs more accessible to the people and needs of northern British Columbia.

The officials have not undertaken, not is it their place to undertake, discussions specific to the proposed northern pipeline with such bodies. As the hon. member is aware, the responsible minister for the northern pipeline is the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) and the responsible agency is the Northern Pipeline Agency.

The department has contributed significantly to both the collection of information required for pipeline discussions in British Columbia and negotiations between the pipeline commissioner's office and officials of the provincial government in British Columbia.

The hon. member knows the negotiations between the federal and provincial governments having to do with the pipeline are not yet concluded, and as a result it would be inappropriate for the department either to discuss details of the pipeline with regional planning bodies or to negotiate possible subagreements having to do with the pipeline with provincial officials until the pipeline negotiations are completed.

As the minister stated in his reply to the hon. member on March 16, 1978, the industrial development subsidiary agreement is being applied in northern British Columbia. Industrial commissions under the subagreement have been agreed to in a number of places, including the Fort St. John area, and the department has received a number of applications under the small business program from the area, some having been approved. Others are under active consideration at this time. In addition, the department is currently giving consideration to several RDIA applications from northern British Columbia in addition to those already approved.

I understand the minister will be announcing this week a fairly substantial grant under the special ARDA program in that part of the country. I should also state that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the provincial government contributed some funds under the industrial development subsidiary agreement toward the cost of holding the "Impact '78" conference which recently took place in Fort St. John at the initiative of interested groups in the northeast, to examine economic development issues in the region. This meeting was attended by the newly-appointed northern district B.C. manager of DREE. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, while DREE officials are not, for the reason stated, actively negotiating with municipal and regional officials relative to the pipeline, the department is very active in northern British Columbia and will continue to be active in promoting its economic development.

• (2252)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:51 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 5, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

BENEFITS FOR EMPLOYEES NOT INVOLVED IN STRIKE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity involving the loss of unemployment insurance benefits for hundreds of workers in my constituency in Trenton, Nova Scotia. These men, who have not worked for many weeks because of curtailed operations by their employer, Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited, are being placed in dire circumstances because a portion only of the work force is involved in a legal strike. I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration take every possible step to ensure that only those workers employed at the time of the dispute and resulting strike are disqualified from receiving benefits and that those other workers whose termination of employment predated by many weeks any such dispute and who have no immediate prospects in the immediate future of employment with Hawker Siddeley not have their benefits disturbed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF THEFT OF PUBLIC FUNDS AT FORCES BASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Beatty: They have guilty consciences again.

Mr. Cossitt: —concerning new developments on a matter which I revealed in the House a few months ago dealing with theft or conversion of public funds at Canadian Forces Base, Ottawa North, in the reported amount of a quarter of a million dollars. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

Whereas the RCMP investigated this situation and forwarded a report to the Department of National Defence, and whereas the Department of National Defence has ordered the convening of a court martial on Tuesday, April 18; that the Minister of National Defence make public all details of the situation, including the name or names of military personnel and the charges against them, whether or not charges are also being laid against certain civilians as a result of RCMP evidence and, if so, the name or names of such persons and the nature of the charges and, finally, that an explanation be given as to why there have been no audits of central band equipment at Canadian Forces Base, Ottawa North, for a number of years.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

PENSIONS

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE PENSIONS FOR HOMEMAKER SPOUSES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I ask leave to move:

That this House urges the government, in view of its stated recognition of the role of spouses working in the home, to bring before the House legislation to provide pensions for all homemaker spouses, in their own right, equivalent to those earned by contributors to the Canada Pension Plan, thus recognizing in full, for pension purposes, the contribution to our society made by those who work in the home.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SUGGESTED CREATION OF COMMITTEE TO HEAR EVIDENCE ON 1970 FLQ CRISIS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present an urgent and important motion.

Considering the importance of setting the facts and the situation of the October 1970 crisis in their true light, and since those facts and circumstances seemed to have been freely interpreted by federal government authorities so that they could justify war measures and discredit the entire population of Quebec; considering that the government has never taken seriously all the interventions which I have been making for years on that very matter and since new developments such as the revelations made by the Cossette-Trudel couple confirm in part my allegations that the police were quite aware of FLQ activities, but allowed them to go on, thus risking even the life of Mr. Laporte in the secret hope of discrediting for ever the emancipation movement in Quebec, I move, seconded, by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That a special committee made up of representatives of all political parties in the House be created to hear all the necessary witnesses to clarify the circumstances which led the government to impose war measures in 1970.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion cannot be presented for discussion without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION PROPOSED WITHDRAWAL OF RADIO SERVICES FROM CHURCHILL, MAN.—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. CBC radio has been established in Churchill for 27 years. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has made application to withdraw its services from the town of Churchill in June, 1978. The CRTC has given its approval to this request. Therefore, due to the need of this necessary service to this isolated community, and due to the sagging economy of Churchill, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp):

That the government instruct the CBC to continue radio service to Churchill in the existing manner.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

TRADE

REQUEST TEXTILES BE EXCLUDED FROM TARIFF CUTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the Canadian trades and tariffs committee's announced decision to include textiles in the proposed "Swiss formula" tariff cuts during the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade negotiations at Geneva, Switzerland, presents a real threat to the future of the Canadian textile industry inasmuch as Canadian textile tariffs would be reduced from their current 20.8 per cent to 8.2 per cent by 1985, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House immediately instruct our Canadian trades and tariffs committee to exclude all Canadian-made textiles from tariff cuts during the current GATT negotiations at Geneva.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY IN DEFENDING VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. By telling the House of Commons yesterday to shut up, the Minister of Finance indicated that he does not want Canadians to know what policy this government is following to defend the dollar. The minister knows that that very uncertainty is driving down the value of the dollar.

I ask the minister now whether, to stop that drop, he would agree to make an immediate statement today outlining the level below which the Government of Canada will not let the value of the Canadian dollar drop, and also outlining the specific strategy that the government is going to follow to stop this daily drop in the value of the Canadian dollar.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the policies of the government are well known—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Chrétien: The governor of the bank is intervening to make sure that the dollar floats in the normal way. I think we are gaining nothing from speculating on those figures. Perhaps what the country would like to know is whether the opposition has a policy on that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Who is running the country?

Mr. Chrétien: It is because they are all over the place that they are worried when the figures go down. The Gallup poll this morning has shown that the country sees that the opposition presents no real alternative.

Mr. Clark: The problem is that the position of the Government of Canada is not at all well known. It claims that it is letting the dollar float, when it is clear that there is not at all a float in any sensible meaning of that word. The Solicitor General of Canada, in a speech made yesterday or the day before in Sarnia, took a position explaining the policy on the dollar that is exactly the opposite of the position stated by the governor of the Bank of Canada. What we have here is not just speculation on the value of the dollar, but speculation as to what in fact is the policy of the Government of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Everything this government does adds to the uncertainty which drives down the value of the dollar. What I want to know is, will the minister stop this playing of games which is destroying the value of the Canadian dollar, and will he come forward immediately and spell out to this country and to the international investment community—which does not know now what is the real position of the Government of Canada—just exactly what that position is, so that the dollar will not continue to drop day after day after the actions of this most incompetent and confused minister and government?

• (1417)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition took the occasion to make a speech. Once again he has not put forward anything concrete in terms of a position. The position of the government on the dollar is very simple. The Canadian currency is a floating dollar. We are intervening to ensure that it floats in a normal way. The governor of the Bank of Canada intervened on Monday night: he made a very clear statement. If the Leader of the Opposition will take two minutes to read it—and it is only one page—he will understand the policy of the government.

Mr. Clark: I read what the governor said. I also saw what the Solicitor General said, which was exactly the opposite of what the governor of the Bank of Canada said. Every day this minister gets up in the House of Commons, the dollar drops again. It drops because this government is not coming forth and telling the international or the Canadian community exactly what it intends to do to defend the dollar. More than politics is at stake here; the value of the Canadian currency is at stake.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to ask the Leader of the Opposition to put his question.

Mr. Clark: My question to the minister is this: this minister not only refuses to answer questions here, but refuses to come before the standing committee on finance of the House of Commons. Why will the minister not now come forward and spell out precisely what strategy this government is going to follow and what is the basement value beyond which he will not let the value of the Canadian dollar drop?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have stated the policy many times. The results of the Gallup poll were published today, and it is very obvious that is why the Leader of the Opposition has lost his cool. I just want to say that the policy of the government is the same. We are floating the Canadian dollar. We intervene in the market to make sure the float is done in an orderly way. This has been the policy we have been following for some months: we are not planning to change it.

REPORTED ASSISTANCE OF QUEBEC HYDRO IN SHORING UP VALUE OF DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the dollar started to scrape against a new low today, 87.44 cents, Quebec Hydro came to the government's assistance in Ottawa and exercised $100 million of their standby line of credit with 51 banks. Will the minister indicate if he is aware of this assistance from Quebec Hydro in shoring up our dollar? If so, was it done at his request?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member just stated is an illustration that the governor was correct when he stated on Monday night that one of the reasons is the institutions in Canada were not going into the market at this time. The fact that some Canadian institutions are going into the foreign market to borrow is what is desired at this time. If the hon. member will read the statement of the governor, he will see he was referring to that problem. As expressed in the communique of the governor of the Bank of Canada, some provinces and institutions will go into the marketplace in the near future. I am glad to hear the hon. member confirm that that will help the status of the Canadian dollar.

Mr. Stevens: In the interests of some clarification, a further item that is disturbing the international market is the February budgetary deficit figures that have now been published.

These figures indicate that the budgetary deficit for fiscal year 1978 is running 81 per cent ahead of where it was the year before. Does the minister still anticipate the budgetary deficit for fiscal 1978 to be the $9.2 billion originally indicated, or may we anticipate it to be considerably higher, as current figures indicate it could be $11 billion?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the hon. member is referring to 1977-78 or 1978-79. In any event, when I come into the House with the budget, those figures will be made known to the public.

● (1422)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. With rising unemployment, rising inflation, a falling dollar and a widening budgetary deficit since the minister took office in September of last year, will he now indicate whether he has done anything wrong?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on, get up and tell us about the Gallup poll.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON NARROWING GAP BETWEEN RICH AND POOR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who yesterday misinformed the House in replying to a question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. He said, when discussing the problem of poverty in Canada, that what is important is that the group of Canadians below the poverty line be reduced, and he maintained that the statistics he gave in Calgary bore this out.

Mr. Speaker, the statistics presented by his Minister of National Health and Welfare, and Statistics Canada, simply do not bear him out. I would ask whether he will today admit that the totally inaccurate claim which he made in western Canada before a Liberal convention, that the number of those living below the poverty level in Canada has been reduced from 20 per cent to 10 per cent, was achieved by ludicrously assuming that the dollar level of poverty in 1961 ought to be applied in 1975, thus totally ignoring the effects of inflation which all honest presentations of such figures take into account?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that is quite incorrect; and if members of the hon. member's party and others had let me answer yesterday, they would have understood that.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Prime Minister does not want to be any more forthcoming or honest today than he was yesterday when discussing poverty.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Stevens.]

An hon. Member: Give him a chance.

Mr. Broadbent: I will give him an opportunity to answer the second question. In her recent sensitive speech in which she honestly confronted the question of poverty, the Minister of National Health and Welfare pointed out, with reference to a certain district in the city of Montreal, that 21 per cent of the children are undernourished, 22 per cent are physically retarded, and 28 per cent are retarded in a physical-mental co-ordination way. She said, "Poor children do far less well in school".

Considering this situation, and given the fact that yesterday the Prime Minister said in the House that the Liberal party believes in equality of opportunity, would he not agree that such a description of equality of opportunity is ludicrous when applied to such children who have no such opportunity to achieve what others do?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the question is being put forward as an argument, and not in search of information.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, this question is one seeking information. Does the Prime Minister agree with the statistics as presented by the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Was she stating government policy when she said, "Poor children do far less well in school"? If that is so, will he not agree that his so-called belief in equality of opportunity is not only factually wrong, on the basis of that description of such children, but is morally offensive and odious because it implies they could do just as well and it is their fault rather than that of circumstances?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the NDP is quoting certain facts. These do not represent matters of policy but, rather, are matters of fact. Of course I agree with the general line put forward by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. She put it forward precisely to justify some of the current expenditures in order to create more equality of opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I never stated that we had achieved equality of opportunity in Canada. To the contrary, my statement in Calgary, and my statement here yesterday, was to the effect that there are a great number of people in Canada who are still living below the poverty line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Those were my statements.

Mr. Broadbent: The situation has not changed much, either.

● (1427)

Mr. Trudeau: The point I was making, Mr. Speaker, is that over the last ten years the number of people as a percentage of total population below the poverty line has dropped considerably in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: That is false.

Mr. Trudeau: That is the point I was making.

Mr. Broadbent: That is horseradish.

Mr. Trudeau: Those are the facts that the hon. member will get from the bureau of statistics, if he will take the trouble to look.

* * *

[Translation]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR DEEPER STUDY OF 1970 FLQ CRISIS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Further to the revelations made by the Cossette-Trudel couple last night on the CBC program Télémag, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he intends to change his position with regard to the necessity of throwing light on all the details of the gloomy business of the October 1970 crisis? Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister is turning a deaf ear or whether he wants me to put my question again?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was unaware that the hon. member was putting a question to me. If he is willing to put it again, I shall answer it.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I repeat my question. The right hon. Prime Minister if doubtless aware of the revelations made by the Cossette-Trudel couple, who kidnapped James Cross on October 5, 1970, and stated on the Télémag program that the police knew where they were and were holding Mr. Cross, that they even knew where Mr. Laporte was being held. For eight years now I have been trying to convince the government of the need to throw light on every aspect of that incident, so I ask whether the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that those revelations confirm my allegations, whether his government is willing to come clean so that we can find out everything concerning the circumstances and events surrounding that dark business of the October 1970 crisis?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, indeed it was a dark crisis which shook the morale of Canadians right across the country. The allegations of the hon. member are, as far as I know, false and erroneous. I know that, at that time, the cabinet asked for a daily report on the inquiry assigned to finding out where Mr. Cross and the late Mr. Laporte were being held, and the police did not locate them. So one cannot claim that the police knew where they were. Had we known that, we would have acted much sooner to free them. Those claims strike me as complete fabrications, not only fabrications, but also totally unrealistic in their make-up. If the hon. member has otherwise some knowledge contrary to what I have said, he should bring it forth either before the House or before the McDonald commission, which was created to inquire into such matters.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

To answer the statement the right hon. Prime Minister has just made, Mr. Speaker, he simply has to question FLQ members. But the Prime Minister did not answer my question on the circumstances of the kidnapping of Mr. Laporte and Mr. Cross and everything surrounding this matter. When they appeared before the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts in 1969, one year at least before the October crisis, Montreal Mayor Jean Drapeau and Executive Committee Chairman Lucien Saulnier stated categorically that several times they informed the Prime Minister of some troubling facts concerning terrorist activities in Quebec, and in particular the sabotage and kidnapping planned by FLQ groups—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, I would ask him to put it forthwith.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I wanted first of all to give the Prime Minister some background information so he would not go off on a tangent. Does the Prime Minister remember these messages, could he advise us of their contents and tell us how he followed up on the recommendations of the Montreal authorities?

Mr. Trudeau: Well yes, Mr. Speaker, I quite clearly recall them; as for their contents, I believe that at the time Messrs. Saulnier and Drapeau made public what they told me in private, namely that they were afraid of the terrorists in Montreal. What a revelation, Mr. Speaker! We knew that there were terrorists, that for a few years there had been murders, train derailments, arms thefts and all kinds of bomb threats, we knew there were terrorists, and of course the mayor of Montreal and the chairman of the executive committee knew it also, they gave us the information they had at the time, and we attempted, in co-operation with their police, the Montreal police and the Quebec Police Force to find the terrorists. So the hon. member is not shedding any new light on the climate which existed at the time.

* * *

● (1432)

[English]

FINANCE

DECREASING INVESTMENT IN CANADA BY CANADIANS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It relates to press and radio reports to the effect that because many Canadians are fearful of the direction in which the value of our dollar is going, and also the failure of the government to act, they are sending their currency to the United States to purchase real estate in that country in order to safeguard them against potential loss.

Is that a fact, and to what degree does the government estimate that last month Canadians took their money out of Canada and sent it to the United States for that purpose?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for the government to know exactly what Canadians do in their transactions. Of course, there are some stories to the effect that some Canadians are buying houses or other properties in the United States and elsewhere. We have no intention of imposing exchange control. The flow of capital inside Canada and outside Canada is the policy of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we at least have one policy now that we know the government is going to adopt. I suggest to the minister, to the Prime Minister and to the government that their nonchalant attitude toward this terrible problem indicates that they believe they still have 87 cents to go before they will act.

* * *

MANPOWER

OPERATION OF EMPLOYMENT TAX CREDIT LEGISLATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can he tell the House whether the employment tax credit bill is, in fact, operative? Have applications been received, and are they being processed? If not, can the minister tell the House why not, and when we can expect the bill to be operative?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the bill is operative and some applications are coming in. We will be conducting a program of advertising to indicate the benefits available under this particular program, in the hope and expectation of increasing the number taking advantage of it.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Given the seriousness of the unemployment situation, the delay in getting that bill in place and the minimum impact it is consequently having on the unemployment situation, I ask the minister if he can give the House an assurance that there will be no tampering with the Unemployment Insurance Act while there are over one million Canadians unemployed. Perhaps he can tell the House precisely what the terms of reference are of the advisory council that he referred to in his interview yesterday.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, during discussion of Bill C-27 we went into this particular council at some length, or the authority and objectives that I wanted to see. We indicated that we did not want to set it up simply for the sake of setting up a council.

I am happy to say that we found an excellent chairman who wants to get a group of three or four people to find the most effective way of using the council so they can give advice to the department. I do not know what the hon. member means by "tampering with the act." Perhaps he could be more specific. If there are ways to improve the Unemployment Insurance Act, that of course will be done.

Mr. McGrath: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Given the fact that the minister is presently spending $1 million on a campaign to bring alleged fraudulent practices to the attention of the public, given the fact that there are over 800,000 recipients of unemployment insurance out of over one million unemployed, I ask the minister if he is prepared to include with unemployment cheques a small card advising unemployment insurance recipients of their rights under the law.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, all the unemployed receive courtesy and co-operation from Unemployment Insurance offices and Canada employment centres across the country from the civil servants who have that particular responsibility. I think those who come under that program would indicate that they receive very sympathetic, very careful, patient treatment and information, and tremendous help from our offices. If there are further ways to enhance that co-operation and assistance, I am prepared to look at them.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ACCEPTANCE OF NEUTRON BOMB

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Last July the minister told us that he was studying the question of acceptance of the neutron bomb. Since virtually all our NATO allies have said where they stand on this matter, could the minister tell the House what the policy of the government is on the acceptance of this bomb?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that policy has not yet been developed. As was pointed out at that time, it has military utility, but we are not a user of nuclear weapons nor are we one of the nations on which the weapon would likely be deployed. This is a matter for NATO discussion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: If hon. members opposite think this is a funny sort of thing—

An hon. Member: You are.

An hon. Member: You are the joke.

Mr. Danson: I think it is a pretty sad joke over there, Mr. Speaker. I am sure they are trying to keep their spirits up, after the Gallup poll. A policy is being developed.

Mr. McKinnon: A supplementary question. Last Wednesday the minister said on television that we should give the neutron bomb to the Russians, ignoring the fact that it is not ours to give to anyone. Would the minister explain why he is so keen to give the neutron bomb to the Russians, when we ourselves seem incapable of deciding whether it should be deployed by NATO?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member did a little more research in many areas, he might find out that that is not what I said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION LOTTERIES ADVERSELY AFFECTING PRIVATE SECTOR FUND-RAISING

Mr. Jim Fleming (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The minister is reported as saying that he wants to see a code of ethics established to govern lottery advertising in Canada. Several months ago I asked his colleague, the Secretary of State, if he would investigate charges that various government lotteries appeared to be negatively affecting private sector fund-raising for many important charitable causes.

In preparing his code of ethics, will the minister take into consideration the broader question, that these government-run lotteries may be seriously affecting the traditional and important marketplace for fund-raising in the private sector?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, immediately before Easter we had a federal-provincial conference of consumer affairs ministers. All agreed that we should work toward the development of a code of ethics for lottery advertising. Prior to that conference I had approached the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and she was very interested in these proposals. We would be glad to consider the submissions made by the hon. member.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF THEFT OF PUBLIC FUNDS AT FORCES BASE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. It concerns the embezzlement or conversion of public funds at Canadian Forces Base, Ottawa north, in the estimated amount of a quarter of a million dollars, and the fact that the court martial has been set for April 18, resulting from an RCMP investigation.

Is the minister in a position to give details of the matter, including who has been charged, the nature of the charges, and why it has taken so long for this matter to come to a head since I first raised it in the House?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it came to a head when the hon. member raised it in the House, as the RCMP were conducting an investigation. Warrant Officer Cooper has been charged. There will be a court martial, and that court martial will be public.

Mr. Cossitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister tell the House how much of the money that was allegedly embezzled or allegedly taken in some manner has been recovered by the government? In addition, could he tell the House whether charges are being laid against certain civilians, particularly in the musical instrument business, as a result of information uncovered by the RCMP? Also, could he tell us why audits of musical band equipment at Canadian Forces Base, Ottawa north, have not taken place for some years?

Mr. Danson: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that information. It will likely come out in the court martial.

* * *

RESOURCES

STOCKPILING OF NATURAL RESOURCES TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. A recently-released government of Ontario report indicated the likelihood that the mining industry in Ontario will lose another 1,300 jobs between now and 1980. The federal government is now considering stockpiling more uranium as a profitable edge against future world demands, and in the last week Inco raised the price of nickel by 7 cents per pound.

• (1442)

In view of these facts, can the minister tell this House if he is now prepared to extend the concept of stockpiling to other areas of the mining sector, both to protect jobs of the workers in those communities and the communities themselves, where required, and to help capture a larger share of the profits that our resources are accruing for a very small band of multinational mining companies?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the preamble to the hon. member's question. The whole issue with respect to the stockpiling of nickel—which he has raised in this House before—has been answered quite clearly. We have looked at it and we have decided that such a program would not help those who need help: indeed, it would undercut the very stability and revival of that important industry in Sudbury.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that despite the lay-offs, Inco has raised the price of nickel by 7 cents a pound, which indicates their confidence in the future markets of nickel, and in view of the fact that in spite of its 2,000-man lay-off to cut back production, Inco has required overtime in the last month in production areas for their remaining employees—and, indeed, their production of nickel is just as high as it was prior to the lay-off—and in view of the fact that if the government had acquired a one-month stockpile of 30 million pounds of nickel it would not only have saved 2,000 jobs but they would have made $2.1 million on that stockpile, can the minister stand in this House and honestly tell us why he is not prepared to take advantage of these opportunities, and at the same time show some commitment to the communities affected by such lay-offs?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should know by now that as far as nickel is concerned, 96 per cent of all the nickel produced in Canada is sold abroad. The reason the nickel industry is in difficulty right now is that the international markets are in trouble—

Mr. Rodriguez: Production is off.

Mr. Gillespie: —and Canadian nickel goes into those international markets, 96 per cent of it. Therefore, the health of the Canadian nickel industry will depend on those markets. Unfortunately, at the present time the international markets are not healthy as far as nickel is concerned. That is why we have stated time and time again that the kind of stockpiling program the hon. member has referred to with respect to nickel would not help the recovery of the nickel industry. The hon. member a few moments ago laughed when I gave that answer. We are concerned—I am not sure that he is—with the plight of the workers in Sudbury. He seems to be more interested in making political hay rather than trying to solve a very difficult problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Simcoe North.

Mr. Rodriguez: Supplementary, supplementary.

Some hon. Members: Order.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TOXIC CHEMICALS IN GREAT LAKES BASIN—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO REMEDY

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. In view of the fact that the IJC reports growing evidence of dangerous toxic chemicals in the Great Lakes basin, combined sewer overflows and storm water overflows from urban areas reaching serious proportions which may well become dangerous, as well as radioactivity from the 12 nuclear plants situated on the Great Lakes using the water from the lakes, why has there not been more manpower supplied to deal with this increasing problem?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the hon. member's question correctly—and I may not have because there was a fair amount of noise occurring while he spoke—he was inquiring about the matter of adequate manpower to police and to detect the difficulties of the heavy metals and other pollution ingested by fish. I would tell the hon. member that fish sold for commercial purposes must reach required standards. If it does not, then sale is prohibited as it was, for example, in the English-Wabigoon system where fishing is not allowed to be pursued commercially. Regulations for the sports fishery would come under the jurisdiction of the provincial government which administers them.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. It was the people I was concerned about who are using this water, and the pollution that is contained in it. It does, of course, affect the fish, but I was talking about the lead and the radioactivity pollution which affects people.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I will read the hon. member's question very carefully and determine whether I or my colleague, the Minister of State (Environment), should give him a longer answer.

* * *

FINANCE

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Finance. In the last budget, which was brought down March 31, 1977, it is said, "taxes are to be deferred on any capital gain that arises from voluntary sales in cases where a farmer sells his farm, providing the funds received are used to purchase a similar asset in the same business".

I ask the minister in view of the support that measure received, whether it was government policy at the time that budget was introduced that farmers who sell their capital assets and turn them over into another farming operation, but of a different nature, where the income is solely farm income, should have the tax department now assessing capital gains on those transactions?

An hon. Member: Scandalous.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather technical question. I shall take note of it and ask the Department of National Revenue and get back to the hon. member on it.

[English]

STATUS OF WOMEN

EMPLOYMENT OF WOMEN IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister: it relates to the establishment in 1972, by a cabinet directive, of equal opportunity directorates in all departments of government. The report I had recently from the chairman of the Public Service Commission indicated that in a survey of more than 40 departments, only 16 have full-time, equal opportunity co-ordinators.

Does the Prime Minister think, with the progress that has been made in the last five years since this directive was issued—which would lead one to believe that equal opportunities' programs would only be effective over the course of 50 to 100 years—that is a satisfactory performance, or does he think that less than 50 per cent of the departments should not have even one full-time person to implement these important programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the observations of the hon. member. I will, of course, confer with the minister responsible for the policy regarding the status of women and, hopefully, he will report back to the House on this matter.

The hon. member realizes, of course, that this post was created in order to influence hiring within the civil service. That hiring is not controllable in any way by the government. We can give directions and express hopes. However, in so far as order in council appointments are concerned, the hon. member knows that the record of the government has been improving and is quite good at present. We expect to do better. As far as the public service is concerned, I will have to ask the minister to inquire into the reason why, if the facts are right, more persons have not been established to fulfil these functions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can put a question to the Prime Minister relating to an area of direct government policy and programs. In 1975, the spokesman for the status of women announced a feasibility study involving the Department of Labour, Supply and Services, Public Works, and Treasury Board with respect to contracts with companies with the federal government to ensure, to use his words "that the federal government is determined that companies with which it does business should provide equal employment opportunities and wages for their women employees".

Since that study was done 2½ years ago, Mr. Speaker, can the Prime Minister indicate whether the results of that study have resulted in directives being issued by these particular departments; and what has been the effect of that policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can certainly inquire into that. I would indicate to the hon. member that he knows that in some cases when quotas are established, they become floors. That is not the proper way to proceed. In the case of order in council appointments, I repeat that we find it necessary constantly to remind ourselves that indeed there are functions which can be filled by women representatives. We constantly remind ourselves of that in cabinet. That is why we made a particular effort to bring a certain number of "firsts" into the area of employment of women. This government named the first woman lieutenant-governor of a province, the first woman chief justice of a superior court, the first woman judge of a superior court, and the first woman deputy minister.

* * *

FINANCE

TEXTILES—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON REDUCING TARIFFS

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. As a result of hundreds of messages I have received from constituents employed in the textile industry who are deeply concerned that a government decision in the current GATT discussions will reduce tariffs on imported textiles and synthetic fibres entering Canada, thus causing more massive unemployment in our country, I ask the minister to tell us the government's policy on this matter, and is it a policy that will sustain the jobs of Canadian textile workers?

● (1452)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The policy is well known, Mr. Speaker. We are presently negotiating on tariffs at the Geneva conference. We have put forward some propositions there and we have received some proposition, but no final decision has been made on any item. The government is, of course, aware of the situation of the textile industry and we have already done a lot for that industry: we have imposed controls on the importation of textiles, quotas, and so on. I agree with the hon. member—other hon. members disagree with him, depending on where they come from—that in the hon. member's riding, textiles are important.

REQUEST THAT TEN CENTS EXCISE TAX ON GASOLINE BE REMOVED

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It has to do with the 10 cents excise tax on gasoline, and also with the discrepancy between prices at one gasoline station as compared with another. Will the minister and his department review this 10 cents excise tax on gasoline and work out a proposal for its removal, because all it has ever done is add to inflation? At the same time, would the hon. gentleman review the discrepancy between gasoline prices at one gas station compared with those at another? I might add that I have pressed the government to do this for the past three years.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The proposition the hon. member puts forward is like so many others put forward by the opposition: during every question period they ask for increases in expenditure or reductions in taxes, while at the same time complaining there is too big a deficit.

* * *

[Translation]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

SUGGESTION QUEBEC BE COMPENSATED FOR NOT USING RCMP

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Quebec justice minister indicated yesterday the firm intention of the Quebec government to demand from Ottawa payment of a lump sum of $937 million as compensation for the costs of providing provincial police services which are the responsibility of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in eight of the Canadian provinces, could the minister advise the House whether he intends to meet the Quebec minister to discuss the basis for this claim?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, because I am not responsible for the RCMP or for police costs. Those are matters which are dealt with by the Solicitor General, who may wish to add to my answer.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a most important supplementary question. I suggest the Solicitor General understands very well the nature of my question. Is he at least willing to discuss with the Quebec justice minister an issue which Mr. Choquette, the former Quebec justice minister, had raised himself for that matter, namely whether the federal government should pay compensation to the province of Quebec for these costs which are extremely high just now?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): It is a fact that the former Quebec justice minister had discussed this issue with my predecessor, who had clearly indicated the position of the federal government on this. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid my reply to the hon. member is no.

* * *

[English]

HEALTH

AVAILABILITY OF SACCHARIN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question arising from her department's plan to ban the sale of saccharin in grocery stores and limit its sale to pharmacies only. Bearing in mind the research which is going on around the world to determine whether saccharin is harmful to humans or whether it is only harmful to laboratory animals, would the minister consider allowing the sale of this drug in grocery stores until those studies are completed?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I did look into the question of accessibility and the problem which might be caused to residents in northern communities. In the case of the territories, the difficulty has been solved in a satisfactory manner. As for the northern parts of the provinces, I gave consideration to the representations made to me by the hon. member and I have instructed my department to place saccharin on the list of drugs which are stocked by nursing health stations. However, I am referring now to very isolated communities, not to parts of the north where people may have to travel a little before reaching a pharmacy.

* * *

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REGULATING OF NOISE FROM SUPERSONIC AIRCRAFT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Canadian citizens living along the south shore of Nova Scotia, especially those living in Barrington, Cape Sable Island and Ingomar, Shelburne county, are experiencing on an almost daily basis a new meteorological phenomenon—specifically, a new kind of sonic boom. Since these booms are very disturbing, I ask the minister whether the government has made any representations concerning this matter to the International Civil Aviation Organization which is presently preparing recommendations for regulating the noise from supersonic transport and, if so, what response has been received?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): It was my understanding that such representations have been made and that aircraft in this area would reduce their speed. I would be happy to pursue the matter, though, and find out whether this has been done.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

STEPS TO PREVENT LOWERING OF BEEF PRICES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. As the hon. gentleman knows, farm income in this country has declined by some 23 per cent over the last three years and beef producers lost some $400 million over that period. Beef prices have now begun to pick up. I should like the minister to assure the House that if this trend toward increased prices continues, further imports will not be used as a tool to depress the domestic price.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure the hon. member, unlike his hon. friends in that party, does read some of the reports and releases I make from time to time. My colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and myself put out one release saying that the import laws in effect at the present time will be carried on for three more years.

Mr. Nystrom: That is precisely why I have raised this question. We want a guarantee that the minister will not use imports in the future as a means of decreasing the domestic price.

While I am on my feet, may I ask the minister this: Since we only supply about 94 per cent of the Canadian market, what steps does the hon. gentleman envisage his department will be taking to assist the beef industry in this country? What concrete steps does he have in mind to assist Canadian cattle producers?

Mr. Whelan: If the hon. member wishes, I will send him about four pages of material listing all the things we have done in the last four years in response to the requests of that industry. There has never been a government or a minister under which more has been done, and the evidence shows this to be the case. I am surprised the hon. member asked the question he did, having regard to some of the things he has said in the past.

* * *

[Translation]

URBAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHEN HOUSING INDUSTRY WILL BENEFIT FROM RRAP

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Recently we received a release to the effect that the assistance program for rehabilitation of older residences, namely RRAP, would be implemented. At first sight, that program looks as thoughs it will help and encourage small property owners to renovate their homes through a maximum remission of $3,750 on a $10,000 loan. However, I would like to know when the housing industry will be able to take advantage of those programs and what funds will be allocated for 1978-79.

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the budget is approved, I will be in a position to tell Canadian municipal authorities how much money is available to them for residential rehabilitation purposes. There is no doubt in my mind that the budget will be twice what it was last year, especially in rural areas, in keeping with the increase in residential rehabilitation applications.

Mr. Beaudoin: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

According to press reports suggesting that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is on rather bad terms with some small municipalities of Quebec, particularly with some mayors, could the minister tell the House whether he has come to some agreement with the province of Quebec regarding those investments and whether the Quebec government completely agrees with the minister on this point?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, this is essentially a federal program as well as federal funds. In order to put the program into effect, all provinces—not only the province of Quebec—had to designate the municipalities qualified to receive these funds from the federal government. As far as the province of Quebec is concerned, it has been agreed that all rural municipalities of Quebec would be designated for this program.

* * *

• (1502)

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN UN DISCUSSIONS ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform the House what plans the government has for participating in the special session of the United Nations on disarmament, starting in May, which UN Secretary General Waldheim says may become a turning point in the search for disarmament? Also, is the government prepared to introduce any initiatives for arms control and world peace by promoting the political, civil, social and economic rights of people everywhere?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it would not be possible in an oral answer to provide the details to the hon. member. I can tell him, however, that we will be taking an active role in the special session on disarmament. In addition, there are a number of internal departmental groups and outside groups which are making submissions and preparing material. I hope this will all be co-ordinated within the next little while. It is possible that the hon. member might wish to raise some questions when I appear before the standing committee, at which time I will be very glad both orally and, incidentally, by way of a written statement, to provide him with an up to date report.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

GRAIN

PAYMENT UNDER WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce to the House today that an initial payment of $60 million has been approved under the western grain stabilization program.

Western Grain Stabilization Payment

Producers who have paid the $500 maximum levy over each of the past two years will be getting about $1,100 as a part payment for the 1977 crop. A final payment will be made in the fall when all the information needed to determine the final pay-out level under the act has been gathered. Right now it looks as if that final payment will also be a pretty hefty one.

This part payment will help grain growers meet planting expenses for the coming year. The purpose of setting up the Western Grain Stabilization Act on a calendar basis was to allow producers this type of flexible assistance. I understand that cheques will be going out very shortly. In fact, producers can expect to have them in their hands by the end of April. This should be of considerable help to prairie grain farmers particularly, in view of the decreased net returns prairie farmers suffered last year.

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, we on this side welcome this announcement by the minister for two reasons. First, the announcement was mercifully short and, second, the money is badly needed now. The announcement emphasizes the problem facing the western grain industry, which is really just a reflection of the total problem facing Canadian agriculture.

This announcement is one more indicator that an election is imminent. Yesterday in the Standing Committee on Agriculture the minister said this announcement could not be made until after the cabinet meeting tomorrow, so he is either talking through his hat or he does not understand cabinet procedure, or both.

We are now 30 million bushels behind in our grain exports, mainly because of problems at the west coast. Farmers know that the asking price for top grade grain is $4.50 a bushel plus, but still the government says there will be no further payment on the initial price of $2.75 a bushel received by the farmer. For those people this announcement today will be small comfort. It means that they are sold out at below the cost of production for the full calendar year 1978.

At a time when close to $1 billion will have to be expended to plant the prairie grain crop, which requires seed, fuel, chemicals, equipment and wages, producers will question why this payment could not be made in full instead of in two parts. The money is required now. The fund presently has in it $154 million, give or take $1 million or $2 million. The $60 million payment announced by the minister today is simply a return of the premiums already paid by farmers, and if the government honestly feels that the western grain stabilization plan is so great, why does it not include landlords? By "landlords" I mean mainly widows who live in our small prairie towns. These are the people who are being hurt. I sincerely hope that in the coming years returns from the marketplace will preclude payments of this kind.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, like the spokesman for the Conservative party, we in the NDP welcome the fact that farmers are getting some additional moneys, but I must admit that I am not really surprised at the announcement. It is really an election payment which is being made to the farmers. Farmers are being paid $1,100, as a maximum, of their own money, and if we look at the plan, we find that over the last two years farmers contributed $1,000, $500 per year. If we add interest, that amounts to $1,100, so they are getting back their own money. I think this is a bit of cynical politics on the part of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

The announcement today says that a final payment will be made in the fall when all the information needed to determine the final pay-out under the act has been gathered. Of course, we will not have that information in the fall. I suppose it is by accident that there is an initial payment. We welcome that initial payment, but I want to be sure that this is a precedent, and in other than election years when there is a pay-out under the plan there had better be an initial payment like there is this year. It had better not be just in an election year that the government decides to pay farmers with their own money in an attempt to buy votes. I want to be sure that the minister uses this as a precedent.

I do not think the Minister of Agriculture knows very much about this because his boss is out in Saskatchewan making a similar announcement today.

An hon. Member: Winnipeg.

Mr. Nystrom: By his "boss" I mean the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, who is announcing that there will be a hefty payment in the fall. If the government can project a hefty payment in the fall, why can that payment not be made now? It would make more sense to make the payment now than it would in the fall.

The minister who made this announcement in the House today is full of nothing but bull when he talks about the decent farm incomes we have in this country. Net farm incomes in the last three years have dropped by 23 per cent. Farm expenses have gone up by 18 per cent. Is that the best there is in the world? When the minister cannot answer questions in the House, he pats himself on the back, and he spreads a bunch of bull from one end of the country to the other.

In my province of Saskatchewan between 1975 and 1977 cash receipts for grain and oil seeds went down by 20 per cent, while the cost to the farmer went up by some 23 per cent. Some Minister of Agriculture and some department!

Between January, 1975 and January, 1978 cash receipts for farmers went down by 38 per cent, and in the province of Saskatchewan they went down 55 per cent. What other sector of our economy would sit back quietly and allow that to happen? The minister announced nothing today for beef producers. All he has announced is a measly payment out of the western grain stabilization fund, money which the farmers themselves have put into it. Of course we welcome the payment, but it is not enough. If farmers are going to stay in business, they will need a lot more than this.

• (1512)

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment very briefly on the statement the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) just made on western Canada's grain growers.

That the government decided to extend financial aid to farmers can only be good news, whether those farmers are in western, central or eastern Canada. Because it is generally recognized by members in this House that farm producers are finding it very difficult to gain recognition for their right to a reasonable and stable return, bad seasons and bad years notwithstanding.

As far as I am concerned, I know western grain growers are facing difficulties, and the announcement that an initial $60 million payment has been approved will be welcome because those farmers have obligations and any revenue will allow them to honour those obligations, at least in part, and provide them with some incentive to consider the coming crop year and the seeding season with better hope and satisfaction.

On the other hand, it is too bad farmers have to wait for months on end before at least recouping the money they spent on seeding, maintenance, threshing, storage and so forth, and still wait another number of months before getting a revenue, some return on their labour. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that through the years it will be possible to develop a program ensuring better stability, so that our country can produce on a regular basis what is needed to feed this country and also to meet our commitments to the underdeveloped countries we are helping generously.

I am happy about this, about the fact that we can help because, in my opinion, it is more satisfying to help others then to have to ask others for help. While the Minister of Agriculture is still in his seat, I would like to make a small comment concerning the Canadian dairy producers.

Yesterday, when I asked the minister about this, he replied that we would be proud when he announces the dairy policy for next year and that we would be happy to learn that we have the best dairy policy in the world. If it really is the best in the world, I shall be the first to applaud. When someone does something positive, something which truly corresponds with the aspirations of a group of Canadian producers, I am not one to criticize, as I would rather help with the administration and co-operate, and on those occasions, I am happy and proud to say that such a thing is good.

Therefore, in the days to come, I hope the Minister of Agriculture will tell us about the nature of this dairy policy to reassure the Canadian dairy producers so that they will also start the next dairy production year in good spirits and work generously like all other producers of western Canada to produce the goods essential for Canada.

Mr. Speaker, if this is the situation, the member for Bellechasse will be happy to say so throughout Canada and invite all our producers to take advantage of this policy and to continue to work generously to accomplish their mission, and we shall assure them of our support to provide them with reasonable returns and to ensure the future of agriculture in Canada, which is essential for the survival and the prosperity of our country.

[English]

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I believe that under the rules of the House we might be permitted to pose a few questions following the minister's statement, which could be accurately described as an attempt to bribe farmers with their own money. I draw the minister's attention to the last sentence of the statement, which reads:

This should be of considerable help to prairie grain farmers particulary, in view of the decreased net returns prairie farmers suffered last year.

The minister has finally recognized that farm incomes in this country have declined. That is admitting his failure and that of the government, of which he is a part, to deal effectively with this serious problem.

My questions to the minister are, first, what information is not known now that should be known in order that a final payment could be made to western producers; second, when will this information be known; and third, can he give me the assurance today that cheques will be in the hands of the western producers by the end of this month?

Mr. Whelan: I think I can tell the hon. member that cheques will be in the hands of the producers by the end of April, according to the officials who administer this act and who are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Agriculture. Producers were slow in giving their information. This is the first year of operation of the program and we had hoped to have the final figures in by March 15. The figures are being tabulated at present. We are not satisfied that they are coming in fast enough. I am afraid I forgot the other question the hon. member asked.

Mr. Wise: I think the minister was in the process of answering it, but can I take it from the minister's remarks that all the information should have been in by March 15 and in the hands of the Grain Stabilization Board; and if this is the case, why will the full payment only be received in the fall?

Mr. Whelan: The hon. member should realize that if a mistake is made of even half of one per cent either in favour of the producers or against them, it can amount to a tremendous amount of money one way or the other. So these figures have to be double checked and double checked again to make sure that they are accurate.

When the hon. member makes the statement that the incomes of farmers have gone down, let me point out that I have continually stated to those farmers who are selling their products on the world market, whether it be surplus dairy or surplus grain products, that the world price of those products went into a tremendous slump or depression, and that there are few grain farmers in the world who have a program such as this under which for every dollar they put in the federal government puts in $2. Opposition members are saying that this is producers' money, but let me point out that there is $2 of taxpayers' money in this program for every dollar the farmers contribute. We think we have one of the best programs of all. It may not be the 100 per cent we would like to see but it is at least 99 per cent of what we would like to do to stabilize farmers' incomes.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) a question. The statement he made today makes a mockery of the grain stabilization program. The farmers have contributed approximately $50 million and the government has contributed in the neighbourhood of $100 million, which comes to an approximate total of $150 million which has been allocated to the plan. What the government has done today is to give farmers back $50 million of their own money plus $100 million of federal government money, and that is it for the present time.

The minister says that possibly next year we may see a lump sum payment, one payment only. The minister has certainly not convinced the House of Commons. I want to ask him why that payment was not made in total at the present time. Why are we dragging it out in this particular year? I would caution the minister not to give us the same old answer to the effect that officials do not want to make a mistake. We know that the computers of the Canadian Wheat Board are determining the payment. I would like to know the reason.

● (1522)

Mr. Whelan: As I said, Mr. Speaker, the information has just come into the office, some of it late in March. It has to be double checked. The hon. member spoke about the computers. They are using the most sophisticated equipment; there is no doubt about that. The money is there. There will be a payment later to finalize the payment for that year. I am more optimistic, as was his colleague in answer to the statement I made. I hope we do not have to make a pay-out next year. That would eliminate all the problems and accusations that this is political skullduggery and that type of thing, or that if the program is running like it should, there is an automatic pay-out. We thought it proper that a statement be made in the House today because of the deep concern of hon. members for the farmers of western Canada.

Mr. Murta: The minister can take away any charge of political skullduggery by answering this last question. He indicated that he knows the amount of the total payment; if he checks Hansard he will see that. We have seen $60 million at the present time. What will be the final payment, within $5 million or $10 million if he likes? Can the minister answer that in order to clear up this matter?

Mr. Whelan: No, Mr. Speaker, not at this time. The figures we have been given go all the way from a final payment of around $100 million to $120 million to $140 million. The computers have not fed out any better information than that, according to information we have received at this time from the trade. We have to make doubly sure we have that so that we do not make an error in favour of the government or against the farmer.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, this is probably the dirtiest trick that has been played on the prairie grain producers for a long time. Is the reason the payment is being made in two phases the fact that the government does not have the money now and is waiting for the producers to contribute for the balance of this crop year and the start of the next in order to contribute to the fund that will be paid in the fall?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member says this is one of the dirtiest tricks ever played on the farmers. That is false. We need to have all the information. Statistics Canada will not be able to give us the total information we need to make the final payment until July of this year. We hope in other years this will be more automatic. This is something they are adjusting to and learning how to manage. It is not something that has been in operation for several years. It is a new program, one that we think is very satisfactory.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister of Agriculture said the final payment would likely be $100 million to $140 million, in that category. If the computers are saying it is at least $100 million, why was a larger initial payment not made now? Is the minister saving some for a larger payment in case there is a fall election instead of a spring election?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that we would love to make the complete payment at this time. However, as I said, we do not have the facts from Statistics Canada. It could be that that payment will be made before the fall; it will depend on how early we get those figures. We have been promised them for July. The hon. member talked about the amount of money. The facts that have to be supplied are the cost of production figures. That is what you need to have.

The hon. member threw figures around here, as he usually does, about a reduction in income and this type of thing. When you talk to most of the farmers in western Canada about their grain production and the price they have received for the last five years—and they are on a five year revolving program for income tax—you find that most will be paying a decent income tax again for the calendar year 1977. The hon. member knows that. When he talks about a tremendous income reduction, he fails to take into consideration the very high price they have received from durum wheat and rapeseed. Those prices are much above the cost of production. They were allowed to sell a tremendous volume because of the fact this government allowed them to delay paying their income tax. We made it so that they would not be subject to heavy taxes because we needed the grain for world markets at that time. The government co-operated 100 per cent in every way to market the grain and get the best possible price for it.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the minister what was the contribution of the farmers plus the accrued interest up to the time of the payments? Second, what is the estimated levy paid by the farmers in the present crop year? Finally, how many cheques are being mailed out?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there are 129,740 participants. The amount of producer levies is $51,893,842.85, government contributions amount to $103,787,685.70, and interest $8,410,223.10, for a total of $164,091,751.65. As I said, this partial payment will amount to an average of $1,100 per producer.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, as an easterner, I would like to ask the minister a question about the statement he made today in the House. This is a joint or split jurisdiction. Is the statement the minister made in the House the same statement being made in Winnipeg by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang)? Is it possible that in the statement being made in Winnipeg the minister will indicate that the $100 million to $140 million the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) mentioned can be paid as a final payment before June 19?

Mr. Whelan: Not being a political member of the cabinet, Mr. Speaker, I would think we would want to make sure the payments were made after all the facts are in and that this is done in as honest and proper a fashion as we now know how. Hon. members keep using the figures $100 million and $120 million. I also used the figure $89 million. That indicates how varied the figures are at the present time. I want to be doubly sure, whether it be June 19 or October 19, that we can mail the cheques to the farmers so that they can make use of them. Some are suggesting that we may have two elections this year. Who knows?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I intend to conclude the discussion between the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton). The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I find really extraordinary the statement just made by the Minister of Agriculture who is not a political member of the cabinet. I shall not ask a question concerning the dates but I wish to ask very seriously a question concerning the last paragraph of his statement. He said that this payment would be a substantial help for grain producers of the prairies considering the reduction of their net income last year. Will that payment compensate for the reduction of their net income last year and ensure them a surplus for the present year to stabilize their operation?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the intent of stabilization is to do just that. We do not pretend that it is going to be 100 per cent of their cost. We used 90 per cent in this the same as we did with the Agricultural Stabilization Act in 1975, only this is a contributory program by the producers and the federal government. The producers pay in $1 and the federal treasury puts in $2. It will be that kind of program. This is a voluntary program. The farmers are not forced to join. Seventy-seven per cent of the farmers in western Canada saw fit to join this program and 23 per cent did not. Perhaps they felt their economic resources were such that they did not need to join; we do not know. It is their right to join or not join. They have the right to drop from the program with three years' notice if they think it is unsatisfactory.

● (1532)

When all this is known I think it is one of the most fair programs in which the producers can participate. It is also one of the most superior programs that any group of cereal grain producers have in the world.

Mr. Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions for the minister which relate to his replies to the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie). Would the minister give us the effective date in relation to the amounts he gave in response to that hon. member? Does the grain farmer have to pay income tax on his contributions now that he is getting them back? Will he have to pay income tax once again?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I would imagine that this is treated the same as all other stabilization payments; it is counted as income. I am surprised by what the hon. member has said. If we rely on what has been said by hon. members of the NDP, the hon. member would not be worrying about the farmers paying income tax because, as they have said, their incomes are so very, very bad. The money he is talking about, and the figures I used in reply to the hon. member for Dauphin, relate to December 31, 1977.

* * *

OMBUDSMAN

MEASURE RESPECTING ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-43, respecting the office of the Ombudsman and matters related or incidental thereto.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

STANDING ORDERS

MOTION TO AMEND STANDING ORDER 65(1)

On the order: Government Notices of Motions:

April 3, 1978—The Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council:

That Standing Order 65(1) be amended by adding immediately after subsection (s), the following:

"(t) Northern pipelines, to consist of not more than 15 members, to which shall stand permanently referred all reports, orders, agreements, regulations, directions and approvals mentioned in sections 12, 13, 14, 15 and 22 of the Northern Pipeline Act; provided that the said committee shall report thereon at least three times in every session."

Provided that this subsection shall be deleted from the Standing Orders on the day on which the Northern Pipeline Agency ceases to exist.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section (2) of Standing Order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under Government Orders later this day.

* * *

PETITIONS

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the honour to inform the House that the Clerk of the House has laid upon the table the tenth report of the Clerk of Petitions stating he has examined the petition presented by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Lee) and finds that it meets the requirements of the Standing Orders as to form.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 196, 517, 675, 719, 833 and 1,431.

[Text]

PERSONS UNDER CONTRACT TO THE CANADIAN PENITENTIARY SERVICE

Question No. 196—Mr. McKenzie:

1. What is the total number of persons under contract to the Canadian Penitentiary Service and how many are retired public servants?

2. What was the total amount in (a) 1975 (b) 1976 paid to those under contract and how much of this was to retired public servants?

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): By the Ministry of the Solicitor General: 1. As of October 20, 1977, 749 persons were under contract to the Canadian Penitentiary Service.

2. (a) 1975/76: $377,631,48; (b) 1976/77: $1,399,105.60.

NOTE: The above figures reflect the total number of persons under contract and the total amount so paid. Information on the number of retired public servants under contract cannot be provided as the records of the Canadian Penitentiary Service are not kept in such a manner as to facilitate extraction of this information. However, appropriate measures have been taken in order to have this type of information available in the future.

[Mr. Basford.]

MEASURES TO PROMOTE REFORESTATION OF HARVESTED TIMBER LANDS

Question No. 517—Mr. Howie:

Has the Ministry of State for Science and Technology or any of its commissions or councils or the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, instituted any programmes, projects or taken any measures to promote reforestation of harvested timber lands since January 1, 1975 and, if so, what measures have been implemented?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources as follows: The policy of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is to formulate and develop policies in relation to the activities of the government of Canada that affect the development and application of science and technology. The objective is to assure the optimum use of science and technology in support of national objectives. The ministry has no laboratories and does not award grants-in-aid of research, scholarships or fellowships. Forestry and/or reforestation are not within the administration responsibility of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Question No. 675—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answers to Question Nos. 29 and 30 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated in part that the Minister of Agriculture made 188 trips on government aircraft to his Constituency in Windsor or from Windsor to elsewhere, on how many such occasions, if any, did the aircraft leave the Minister in Windsor, return to Ottawa or elsewhere and then subsequently fly back again to pick up the Minister?

2. Were any such empty flights included in the total of Department of Transport and Department of National Defence aircraft used by the Minister and, if not, for what reason?

3. What was the total number and cost of all flights made to or from Windsor by the Minister from the points of origin, including flights returning to or from Windsor from points elsewhere without the Minister on board?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Defence and Transport Canada as follows: 1 and 2. The requested information was provided in answers to questions No. 29 and 30 tabled October 17, 1977.

3. The requested information regarding flights to and from Windsor was provided in the answers to questions No. 29 and 30. For information regarding the costs of all flights, see reply to question No. 2,881 answered October 17, 1977.

PERSONS ON EDUCATIONAL AND SABBATICAL LEAVE IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 719—Mr. Jones:

1. In competition 77-DSS-CCID-5126M for the position of Manager, Records Office (As-3) in the Superannuation Division of the Department of Supply and Services, to whom is the position open?

2. Does the Public Service allow educational leave at their expense and are there unemployed persons qualified to do the work the employees are being trained for and, if so, for what reason is such leave granted?

3. (a) How many employees of the Public Service in Moncton are on so-called sabbatical leave (b) what are their names (c) what courses are they enrolled in (d) how will such courses assist them in their work?

4. How many persons were hired from Moncton for positions in the Superannuation Division of the Department of Supply and Services to be located in Moncton and are presently being trained in (a) Ottawa (b) Montreal?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. Employees of the Superannuation Division, Ottawa-Hull area, and employees of that part of the Public Service, Atlantic region, to which the Public Service Commission has the exclusive right to appoint, who occupy positions of which the maximum of the salary range is at least $16,498 per annum as of November 28, 1977.

2. The Public Service Commission allows at its own expense educational leave which is granted under the following conditions: firstly, under some collective agreements, the employer is compelled to grant educational leave to a minimum of its personnel (e.g., for the ED group, the employer has to set aside 1 per cent of his resource-years annually for educational leave). In the Public Service Commission, almost all educational leave is granted under collective agreements. Secondly, the other condition under which this type of leave is granted is governed by the following criteria: organizational requirements; the need to improve the performance of employees. In order to meet future needs, constantly changing organizational requirements and finally to better prepare more and more qualified employees, training and development policies provide for educational leave. The Public Service Commission does not employ additional resources since resource-year limitations and internal recruitment policies compel the Public Service Commission to call on its own personnel for the necessary skills.

In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned: 3. (a) Two employees; (b) (1) Mr. Douglas Maloney; (2) Miss Claudette Drisdelle; (c) (1) Masters in Business Administration—University of Moncton; (2) Electronic Technology—New Brunswick Institute of Technology; (d) (1) This type of training will provide the employee with a greater knowledge and additional skills thereby assisting the Moncton Regional Office in its senior management activities. (2) To better perform radio inspector duties in the Atlantic Provinces.

In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: 3. (a) One. (b) Donald J. Savoie. (c) Doctoral program at Queen's College, Oxford University. (d) The program consists of course work in policy development and in policy and program coordination. It will have specific application to Mr. Savoie's duties as a program coordinator.

In so far as the Department of Transport is concerned: 3. (a) There are presently no employees from Transport Canada on leave, that may be described as sabbatical, in Moncton. There is one employee from the Atlantic region who is currently on leave-without-pay for educational purposes. (b) This employee is Mr. Douglas M. Consul. (c) Leave was granted to enable Mr. Consul to complete a degree in electronic engineering, at Seneca College, Toronto, at his own expense. Due to health reasons, Mr. Consul was unable to retain his licence as a helicopter pilot, and is taking this training to acquire a second profession for subsequent re-employment in the Public Service. (d) This course is a recognized qualification in the field of electronic engineering.

In so far as other departments and agencies located in Moncton are concerned: None. 4. Fifty; (a) Fifty; (b) None.

RELOCATION OF SURVEYS AND MAPPING BRANCH

Question No. 833—Mr. Dick:

1. Is it the government's intention to relocate 750 positions in the Surveys and Mapping Branch of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to Sherbrooke, Quebec and, if so, how many employees will be involved?

2. What is the estimated cost of moving the employees?

3. What is the number of (a) permanent (b) term (c) casual employees working in the Branch in Ottawa?

4. What percentage of the employees speak (a) English (b) French as their mother tongue?

5. Is their a cartography course or degree programme offered at the University of Sherbrooke or at any other university, community college or CEGEP in the Province of Quebec?

6. Prior to the decision to relocate such employees, did the government calculate the number of spouses who presently have jobs in the Ottawa area?

7. Is the government considering compensation for spouses who will have to give up their jobs in order to accompany relocated employees and, if so, in what manner?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and Treasury Board as follows: 1. If the relocation of the Surveys and Mapping Branch is confirmed, 750 employees will be affected.

2. Excluding facilities and other costs, the actual expenditure requirements for the movement of employees will depend upon the number of staff members who eventually agree to relocate. The unit cost of movement, per employee, is estimated at $13,800.

3. (a) 878 permanent; (b) 90 term (over six months); (c) 19 casual (less than six months).

4. 72 per cent of employees speak English as their mother tongue or first official language. 28 per cent speak French as their mother tongue or first official language.

5. Yes.

6. No.

7. The entitlements of spouses are covered in the Decentralization and Relocation Guidelines which were endorsed by the National Joint Council on December 7, 1977 and issued by the Personnel Policy Branch of the Treasury Board Secretariat on December 21, 1977. The relevant paragraphs read as follows: "Indeterminately employed spouses of relocated employees may, if they make their wishes known to their departmental personnel office, be granted leave of absence without pay for a period not in excess of twelve months. During this 12 month period, such spouses will be entitled to the services of the PSC's transfer system if they wish to be considered for reassignment within the Public Service, either in the new location or elsewhere."

Motion for Production of Papers

GRANTS TO CHARITABLE AND NON-PROFIT ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 1,431—Mr. Robinson:

For each year 1971 to 1978, did charitable and non-profit organizations receive grants of public funds and, if so (a) how many (b) in each case (i) in what amount (ii) for what purpose (iii) was an audited financial statement filed by the recipient?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): The information requested is not readily available. To provide an accurate reply in its entirety, would entail a lengthy and costly examination of the accounts of every department and agency including their regional offices. The costs in manpower and time to undertake such a large amount of work would be prohibitive.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 166 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

PERSONS CHARGED AND CONVICTED OF MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER IN CANADA

Question No. 166—Mr. Friesen:

How many persons in Canada were charged and convicted of murder or manslaughter more than once and, in each case (a) what is their name (b) how was the sentence disposed of (c) on what date was he/she eligible for parole where a prison term was involved (d) what was the length of the sentence served?

Return tabled.

* * *

[Translation]

MOTION FOR THE PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the motion for the production of papers No. 49 is acceptable to the government subject to usual reservations concerning confidential documents and to the approval of interested government authorities.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the hon. parliamentary secretary, shall notice of motion No. 49 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Pinard.]

[Translation]

COPIES OF CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL AUTHORITIES RELATING TO FUNDS PROVIDED FOR BILINGUALISM

Motion No. 49—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of correspondence between the federal and provincial authorities relating to the accounting of federal funds provided under the Federal-Provincial Programme for Bilingualism in Education.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all other notices of motion be allowed to stand.

[English]

Motion agreed to.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED SHATTERING OF WORLD CONFIDENCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the notice I sent you earlier today I wish to ask leave to move the adjournment of this House, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the shattering of world confidence in our economy as evidenced by the selling off of Canada's April 1 bond issue in New York, the arrangement of a further emergency credit of $1 billion from our Canadian chartered banks, the imploring by our Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) that our provinces, municipalities and corporations borrow more actively in foreign markets, only to be countered by the reported statement by the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) in Sarnia yesterday that "international debt is caused by Canadian businesses borrowing on the international market" which he felt was bad.

The urgency of this matter has been aggravated by the refusal of the Minister of Finance to come before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for the next two weeks, notwithstanding the fact that he has not appeared once on his main estimates for this year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) indicated, he gave me notice, pursuant to Standing Order 26, of his intention to invoke the provisions of the Standing Order in order to precipitate a special debate in respect of the matter contained in his notice. I do not propose to grant that application for three reasons, the third of which I think is the most direct and most important. However, the first two are also relevant, but I do not determine them in a final way.

The first reason is that the hon. member seems to me in his notice to be putting before the House a matter of opinion. He states, "I wish to give notice that I will ask leave to move the adjournment of the House under the provisions of Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the shattering of world confidence in our economy".

The balance of the notice is evidence, as is the language used, of that opinion. Nevertheless, the matter itself is the shattering of world confidence in our economy, which is an opinion rather than an event. I do not make a final determination on that, but it seems to me that the language of the Standing Order does not really lend itself readily to a debate of an opinion, as it does to the consideration of a specific event. However, I say again that I do not make that as a final determination. That could be subject to argument and in certain circumstances it may be applicable. I do not think it is here.

As I said, there are three reasons. The second is that on February 22 I did grant an application pursuant to this Standing Order in respect of a matter proposed by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), in which he was joined by the hon. leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Broadbent). The language, of course, was different, but it did relate to the fall of the dollar as it reflected confidence in our economy. While the language is not identical, I would have some misgivings, in the face of the provisions of paragraph (16)(b), about granting a second application under this order allowing a discussion on the same subject-matter. As I say, I might be persuaded otherwise in that regard.

The third reason, which I think involves the final determination, is that in answer to questions this week the Minister of Finance has indicated, and he did so again today in answer to a question, that after tomorrow's cabinet meeting he will be giving an indication about the presentation of a budget. I really think I would have to overlook entirely the provisions of paragraph (5) of the Standing Order if I did not at least wait to see whether such a budget is to be presented. The matter of the accountability of the Minister of Finance in this regard would seem to be answered in that way.

To what extent a full debate will be possible after that, of course, remains to be determined. In any case, as long as that remains a serious possibility I should think that the provisions of paragraph (5) would prevent the Chair from granting the application.

For those three reasons I do not find that the matter is a proper matter to be discussed at this time under Standing Order 26.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND RANGE OF PERSONS TO WHOM ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES APPLY

The House resumed, from Monday, April 3, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-18, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act and guidelines, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is rather fortunate that I am able to speak at the moment on Bill C-18. I earnestly hope that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), who is shunning this parliament and is unwilling to appear before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to give an accounting and explain some of the mistakes his department has been making in its administration, particularly in relation to the monetary situation, will take part in this debate.

● (1542)

It is fortunate, Mr. Speaker, that this debate is able to continue. I enjoy having the opportunity to add a few more remarks to the record concerning our position with respect to the controls position and Bill C-18 itself. More specifically, I hope that the Minister of Finance will accept this as an opportunity to come into this debate and give a meaningful speech on the federal government's present position with regard to our monetary status both domestically and internationally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: If the Minister of Finance is within hearing distance—and I know his parliamentary secretary is here—I will make this deal with him: I will stop speaking to give him an opportunity to speak in this debate if he so wishes. He can have the remainder of my time, Mr. Speaker, and I will be one of the most attentive people in this House when the minister explains to the members the policy that he is trying to follow—or more specifically, what appears to be the lack of policy that he is following—concerning the economy of this country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What is the remainder of unlimited time?

Mr. Stevens: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will leave that up to the discretion of the Minister of Finance; if he wishes to talk for a long period of time that will be up to him.

The time has come, Mr. Speaker, when we need some clarification concerning the direction of the economy in this country. There was a time when, presumably, the government was able to fudge the issue sufficiently—at least domestically—and get by with a very poor economic performance. Now, however, they have come unstuck. They have come unstuck because the government has raised the attention of the international bankers of this world. Most of us who have had to deal with bankers on a credit basis know that bankers can be very cold and ruthless in getting to the facts.

As far as I am concerned, this is no longer a partisan question. It is no longer a question of rhetoric. This country deserves better economic leadership than it has been getting from the Trudeau government or the Minister of Finance. In dealing with the Minister of Finance it is no overstatement to say that this is literally the weakest performance of any minister of finance in this country since confederation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I say that because I think that the minister can be faulted virtually on all fronts. He refused to answer a question today when I asked him this: In view of the fact that unemployment has risen since he has taken office last September—inflation has risen, his deficit has widened, the dollar has fallen—does he feel he has done anything wrong? Normally, I would have expected him to get to his feet and clarify the situation or defend himself. However, the nature of the question shocked him so much that he sat dumbfounded, realizing I had hit upon the truth.

The Minister of Finance has made some serious mistakes. International financial circles are able to identify almost within the hour when mistakes have been made by this minister. These mistakes have helped to shatter the Canadian economic image throughout the world and resulted in the further decline—of our dollar. This is due to the minister's presentation and lack of comprehension of the nature of this job. In short, he has bumbled, but unfortunately he is not the one who suffers most. It is the Canadian public that are suffering from his want of knowledge in a department that is so vital to Canada's wellbeing today.

In saying that, and in dealing with the question of inflation under Bill C-18, we must bear in mind that one of the contributing reasons for the decline of our dollar is that the international banking world is judging us as an inflation-prone nation when other nations have been able to get control of their inflation. They find that Canada has become a stand-out nation where inflation continues to rise. As we said on Monday, it has risen by 9.5 per cent. It continues to rise much faster than it has been rising in the United States and is almost triple the rate in Germany. Switzerland has no inflation.

We are told by this Minister of Finance, backed up by his emperor overlord, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), that they do not know what to do to control inflation in this country. In my opening, rather brief preliminary remarks last Monday, Mr. Speaker—I see the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance is laughing. Frankly, the question of our economic condition in Canada at the present time is not a laughing matter.

In the opening remarks I made last Monday I pointed out, for example, that the outflow from our foreign exchange reserves was costing Canadians dearly. It is easy to forget that on August 31 last year, about six months ago, United States reserves held on behalf of the Canadian public by the Bank of Canada were $2,558 million. Since that time and with the arrival of the Minister of Finance in September to take over the reins of finance in this country, we have had a deterioration in those reserves of $1.6 billion. If you add the outflow of United States reserves so far in April alone—Monday, Tuesday and today—there has probably been $1.7 to $1.8 billion lost with respect to the United States reserves that we held when this Minister of Finance took over the reins on behalf of the Government of Canada.

If you translate that into more meaningful terms, it means that the ineptitude and lack of comprehension shown by the Minister of Finance has cost the average taxpayer in Canada $180 of the United States reserves that he rightfully could have expected to be maintained by the Bank of Canada on his behalf. It has cost every taxpayer in Canada $180.

Let me put that into perspective. When we are talking in terms of billions of dollars—and frankly most of us, including myself, cannot comprehend what a billion dollars is—let us not forget that our reserves have now dwindled to the point where we, in relation to our external obligations, be they of a debt nature or trade nature, have the thinnest reserves of any industrialized nation in the world. In that context it is not too hard to understand why the international community has the jitters about Canada when they see our reserves are so thin and they observe the bumbling, stumbling actions of this government. When the international community sees the half measures the government brings in in order to try to counter the lack of confidence that there is in the system, it is not hard to understand why the run on the Canadian dollar continues. The obvious reason why the run continues is that the government's program to counter inflation in this country has failed.

● (1552)

That is why, when dealing with Bill C-18, I think it wise to continue to press this government for an explanation of why the program they enunciated on October 20, 1975 to help fight inflation in this country was not carried out. If you recall, Mr. Speaker, the program was quite explicit. It said the government was going to make some basic changes in the way they were running the country. They were going to be restrained in their own fiscal spending. They were going to be restrained in their monetary growth. They were going to start deregulating industry and set up a controls mechanism through the Anti-Inflation Board that somehow would keep the lid on prices, profits and wages in the country.

I think the time has come to ask the government what went wrong with the program that they told the Canadian people, and certainly this parliament, they intended to follow. Certainly we do not have the fiscal restraint. Anybody who wishes to attend the committees of this House and review the estimates now before us—the $50 billion spending that the government contemplates for the coming year—realizes there is no fiscal restraint. We have not had the monetary restraint referred to in October of 1975, we have not had the deregulation referred to, and, of course, the controls that were presumably supposed to keep the lid on the rising prices, profits and wages have not worked either.

I ask what went wrong because we must not forget that the targets the government set for themselves were, if anything, high targets. When they said we would be getting down to 4 per cent inflation this year, that was not only an attainable goal if we had been in power in 1975, it was a high goal. If Germany got inflation down to 3.5 per cent this year compared to our 9.5 per cent, then I must ask this government why they cannot do the same. If Switzerland can get down to zero inflation at the present time compared to our 9.5 per cent, then I ask this government why they cannot.

The hard fact is that this government does not have to live with some of the problems a country like Switzerland has. Other than salt, basically Switzerland has no resources whatsoever. They have to import practically everything they need. That is not our situation, Mr. Speaker. We are virtually self-sufficient in energy, we are virtually self-sufficient in such resources as nickel, iron and other minerals and we are rich in agricultural products. In short, of all industrialized nations, we have fewer problems than others. Switzerland, Germany and Japan, for instance, have very, very serious problems but in spite of them have been able to handle their level of inflation in a much more satisfactory way.

The figures I used are on the record, Mr. Speaker. I shall not take hon. members through the Bank of Canada's February 1970 Review again. It points out the comparative position as far as consumer prices are concerned in the various countries listed. We must not forget, however, that the Bank of Canada—and few members will want to dispute what the Bank of Canada says in this regard—points out that in December, 1977, the 12-month inflation level in the United States was 6.8 per cent compared to the Canadian 9.5 per cent; the Japanese inflation rate was 4.9 per cent compared to our 9.5 per cent; and the German rate was 3.5 per cent compared to our 9.5 per cent. In fact, all those major industrialized countries were lumped together and 7.2 per cent is the average inflation level compared to our 9.5 per cent. I think those Bank of Canada figures are a sad testimony to the effective management of our economy by this government.

Toward the end of my opening remarks on Monday, Mr. Speaker, I said that I should like to deal with the historical perspective of this question. I hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Lumley) suggesting that I should shorten my remarks. I find it not only reprehensible that the government does not have the courage to tell the people of Canada what they believe the facts to be, but that they seem to have absolute disdain for anybody in this House who tries to enter the debate of the day as it should be debated.

Mr. Lumley: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. My comments to the hon. member were that we are debating Bill C-18, amendments to the Anti-Inflation Act, not having a general discussion on the Canadian economy. The hon. member has already spoken for almost two and one-half hours. It is taking the eloquent gentleman from the business world two and one-half hours to make his point. That is the point I was making, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Towers: You missed the point entirely.

Mr. Stevens: As the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) says, the parliamentary secretary missed the whole point. The point is, if the parliamentary secretary feels I have taken a few minutes too long—

An hon. Member: A few hours too long.

Mr. Stevens: The fact is that over there the Minister of Finance, his parliamentary secretary, the Prime Minister or any minister of that cabinet have not taken one minute to give their explanation of the failure of their anti-inflation program as enunciated in October of 1975 to the Canadian people. That is the point. I think perhaps even more effectively than he realizes the parliamentary secretary has demonstrated the complete disdain of his party for this House of Commons. The fact that he could get up and be critical of one member speaking for a few minutes longer than he likes and the fact that the minister chooses not to say one word on this, if not the most important problem in Canada, certainly the second most important problem, inflation, is appalling. What does Bill C-18 deal with if not inflation? It is simply legislation amending the Anti-Inflation Act that this government, counter to their 1974 election promises, introduced and passed in this House in 1975. That is what I am debating.

We have another interjection from a government supporter, the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin). They speak from their seats much more effectively than from their feet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin: We do not take 2½ hours.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member for Scarborough West says I have spoken so long that it is very difficult for others to get into the debate, but I should like him to stand up and indicate whether the Minister of Finance has agreed to enter the debate. Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance could indicate that. If other gentlemen can assure me that the minister will come and join in the debate, I will stop within the minute and give him an opportunity to put his comments on the record concerning the anti-inflation program introduced by this government in 1975.

I should like to return to my concluding remarks when I spoke on Monday concerning Bill C-18, Mr. Speaker. I feel it is proper to put into historical perspective what "the Trudeau government role" has been on this whole question. Let us not forget that a large proportion of the money printed in recent years by the Bank of Canada has gone to finance the Trudeau government's deficits. For the members of this House who were not here Monday night when I dealt with this question of the creation of inflation by the over-printing of money in relation to the real growth in the economy, I would reiterate that that is the basic cause of inflation in any nation.

• (1602)

As I pointed out, during the ten years of mismanagement by the Trudeau emperor, we have had money created to the extent of 156 per cent in this country. During that same period of approximately ten years the real growth in the economy, Mr. Speaker, was 55 per cent. Is it any wonder that we had 100 per cent inflation during the present government's tenure of office since 1968? These are the facts. Basically, let us not forget the more people pretend that they do not know—and certain politicians pretend that they do not know what causes inflation—the more they are not being fair to the Canadian public. Inflation basically cannot be caused in a nation unless more money is printed than the real growth of the economy permits.

That is why I come back to this question of the nature of the printing of money by the Bank of Canada. The fact is the Bank of Canada printed money to finance 33 per cent of the federal cash requirements needed by this government in the past five years. The $5.6 billion of federal securities purchased by the Bank of Canada represents more than 60 per cent of the total addition to the money supply over the period I am referring to.

Let us bear in mind that when the Prime Minister took the reins of power, when he became the senior executive in this country, the total federal securities owned by the Bank of Canada were approximately $4 billion. Since that time securities owned by the bank have risen to almost $11 billion. That increase from $4 billion to $11 billion is what people mean by monetarizing the debt of the nation. When the debt of the nation is monetarized, that is the classic way to print more money; more money is flushed into the system which causes the inflation we are now living with. I cannot dwell on that point too often because it is the point that every government in power which acts irresponsibly with respect to the management of the economy likes to forget. The main cause of inflation occurs when governments over-print money in relation to real growth. The terrible culprit in Canada has been the present administration.

The spending practices of the present government created the budgetary deficits which where partially financed by increasing the money supply, as I have indicated. Since 1968 federal spending has more than quadrupled. If the $50 billion figure is accepted, it is up almost five times. In 1968 the federal government announced preliminary federal spending intentions of $10.9 billion. In 1979, using the government's own figures, it will be $46.5 billion, which is the figure I am referring to when I say there has been approximately a four-fold increase in government spending.

Before I go further, Mr. Speaker, let us make a quick review of the present administration's strategy against inflation. First of all are the years 1973 to 1975. Early in 1973 it became apparent that the administration had not licked inflation as the Prime Minister was wont to claim. In 1971 we find that the rate of inflation was approaching 6 per cent. It was showing no signs of lessening since the money supply was growing in excess of 15 per cent. In short, the return of inflation in that period was not surprising.

In the budget of February, 1973, the present administration stated that fiscal measures were, and I quote, "aimed at reducing inflationary pressures in Canada". The strategy was to increase supply, to increase disposable incomes, to protect Canadians against inflation and to restrict federal government demands upon the economy. In many ways, are not those familiar terms even today? Wage and price controls were flatly rejected in that budget.

[Mr. Stevens.]

That strategy, of course, was a failure. Inflation which stood at 5.8 per cent reached 9.6 per cent a year later, and was still rising. The strategy might have had more effect if it had been properly implemented. Where smaller federal demands upon the economy were promised, federal spending actually grew 23 per cent in the following year. Let us not forget that figure.

In spite of the fact that in the February, 1973 budget we were told that the government was at last going to restrain their spending, in the very next year they increased it by 23 per cent. By the next budget, in May, 1974, inflation had reached 11 per cent and was still rising. The budget reflected to use the government's words, "determination to deal with inflation." Lip service to spending restraint was dropped. Federal spending grew at the even faster rate that year of 28 per cent. Once again the present administration rejected the illusory magic, as they called it, of controls. During the subsequent election campaign—how well we all remember—the Prime Minister called controls "a proven disaster looking for a new place to happen". At the same time he pledged his government, and I quote again, "to bring inflation under control." That was the Prime Minister's pledge to the people of Canada which presumably influenced them in voting for his re-election in 1974.

With the rate of inflation approaching 12 per cent the then finance minister, Mr. Turner, prescribed the same medicine once again in November 1974 that he had been prescribing previously and unfortunately it had the same effect. The inflation rate was hovering around 11 per cent when he presented his last budget in June 1975. The principal measure was, again, promised restraint in federal spending. While the present administration claimed it had cut $1 billion from federal spending plans, federal spending was still forecast to increase by an alarming 11 per cent over the year before. That, Mr. Speaker, is a very brief summary of what the government said and did during the 1973 to 1975 period.

Let us take a look at 1975 through to 1978 and at what brings us to the debate on Bill C-18 at the present time. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that by October 1975 the inflation rate was still in excess of 10 per cent. After nearly three years of budgets directed against inflation, three years during which the government had consistently rejected the use of wage and price controls, the present government introduced the anti-inflation program, which I have referred to. The central component of it was none other than wage and price controls.

At this point I should explain something. Most of us will recall that the minister of finance who presided over the economic affairs of this country during the tremendous spending binge which occurred was none other than Mr. John Turner. But Mr. Turner presumably had a falling out with the Prime Minister in that the Prime Minister was a controls-oriented person. He liked the sound of controls. The falling out resulted in Mr. Turner resigning and Mr. Macdonald being brought in to do the dirty work of imposing controls.

• (1612)

It is interesting to note that there was a change of ministers at that time. But not only was there a change of ministers. As we know, the deputy finance minister during most of the time Mr. Turner was minister of finance also resigned, and he has since stated in unequivocal terms that the inflation problem with which we are confronted today was contributed to in large measure by the overspending of the federal government during the Turner years. That is a little of the background.

Then we find that the anti-inflation program of October, 1975 proposed to reduce inflation from its level of 10.6 per cent to 4 per cent by October, 1978. As I said earlier, that 4 per cent target was not an overly high one. It was relatively realistic. The anti-inflation program also promised that federal spending would be restrained, that the growth in the money supply would be greatly restricted, that there would be "a review with some urgency of the federal government's responsibility for creating price rigidities in its own area of responsibility", and that there would be a reassessment of the cost to the private sector of government rules and regulations. Finally, a review of the role of regulatory agencies was to be undertaken.

The promise of federal spending restraint, Mr. Speaker, has not been kept. Over the two years of so-called restraint the estimates of federal spending have risen by 28 per cent, and those increases have occurred due to the administration's own internal operating costs. Let no hon. member forget this. During the two years of so-called restraint, operating costs have increased by 37 per cent. That, Mr. Speaker, is the government in action. That, if you like, is charisma in action for the Canadian public to enjoy. The cost to the taxpayer has been horrendous. If the cost of federal operations had run parallel to the inflation guidelines of the control period, federal expenditures would today be $2 billion lower than they are.

Let us remember, also, that the growth of the money supply has been held within the limits proposed by the Bank of Canada primarily because the targets were so generous. The first set of targets called for money supply growth amounting to between 10 per cent and 15 per cent effective September, 1975. The second set called for growth rates between 8 per cent and 12 per cent effective March, 1976, and the third set for rates between 7 per cent and 11 per cent effective last June. These targets all represent rates of monetary expansion which are not consistent with price stability. They are an improvement in relation to previous performance but they are still, in our opinion, too high.

Throughout most of the controls program monetary expansion has been below the target range. Recently, however, the money supply has been growing at much higher rates. In December, 1977 the money supply was 12 per cent higher than in December, 1976, a rate of expansion higher than the target range. If such growth continues, the Bank of Canada will slip back into an inflationary posture not much different from that which created the initial problem.

The administration has given us no indication that it is reviewing the contribution to inflation made by federal agencies. Indeed, the federal government has specifically exempted a number of Crown corporations and agencies from the application of its own price and profit control guidelines. Such an action clearly indicates that the administration does not view the activities of its own agencies as being in any way inflationary.

Further, the government has published no studies and offered no initiatives relating to its commitment to reassess the economic costs of federal regulations. Recently the minister of state responsible for small business announced he would establish a program to reduce the paperwork burden on small business. The first step, Mr. Speaker, is to be a study. Guess of what. A study of what the problem is. More than two years after a commitment is made to reduce the regulatory burden, the present administration has progressed as far as studying the problem. In order to do so they intend to appoint, they say, a comptroller of the paper burden, with a staff of 20.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Pathetic!

Mr. Stevens: If it were not so sad it would be almost laughable to compare the rhetoric of the government with its actions. There has been no indication that the government is reviewing or has reviewed the role of its regulatory agencies. Ministers have admitted publicly that they do not know how many Crown corporations the government owns; the total is over 385 and they are still counting. It is unlikely the administration will be able to accomplish the review it promised even if all the regulatory agencies can be identified. New regulatory agencies are still being created; for example, there is the national broiler board, the Northern Pipeline Agency, the competition policy advocate and, of course, the comptroller of the paper burden.

Let me add one almost humorous note. Here we are dealing with Bill C-18, which proposes to amend the anti-inflation legislation. The government, according to the Financial Post this week, has given an assurance to the 700-man staff of the AIB that they will be shifted to other government jobs should the board ever be dismantled. Here is a government which created an agency, one which it told us would never be established, and then announced that the number on the staff would not be more than 200 temporary employees. Now we find the board has a staff of 700, and when it is suggested the board might be dismantled the employees are assured they will never be allowed to drift away from the public service but will be guaranteed jobs at salaries comparable with those they now receive under the AIB.

• (1622)

Let me now deal with the lack of success—indeed, I might say the failure—of controls. Since the present administration has been unwilling to honour its commitments on spending restraint, monetary restraint, and the proliferation of bureaucracy, it is not surprising that wage and price controls have been unable to slow inflation. In fact, the failure of this administration to implement supportive policies has made controls virtually irrelevant in the anti-inflation campaign.

Wage controls, for example, did not halt the erosion of our competitive trade position with the United States. Studies by the Conference Board of Canada indicate that the deterioration in our competitive position has continued throughout the controls program. All the devaluation of the Canadian dollar has done is restore our competitive position to what it was in 1975 when our competitive position was so poor that controls were required.

On the question of the effect of a declining dollar hon. members will recall that this party initially pointed out to the government that a falling dollar is not a mixed blessing. The government was saying that the fall in the dollar would help exports, but we were pointing out that it would also trigger a new round of inflation in the country. As the Conference Board pointed out in the quote to which I referred, the fact is that the devaluation which had occurred up to the date of the report simply had put us back to the competitive position we were in in 1975, the very year the government said it had to bring in controls because we had lost our competitive position in relation to the rest of the world.

The important thing to bear in mind now is that the government at last seems to be coming to its senses. It is realizing that the falling dollar is in fact generating its own inflation, and we now find that the Governor of the Bank of Canada in a release dated April 3 stated that, and I quote:

> —too large an exchange rate adjustment over too short a period of time would not be helpful in restoring Canada's international competitive position on a durable basis because of the risk that it would undermine the substantial progress Canada has made to date in overcoming inflation.

In short, the economy is in a tailspin. The government has allowed the dollar to drift lower, and to the degree that it has allowed the dollar to drift lower it is in turn generating inflation about which even the governor of the Bank of Canada has become alarmed.

Let me touch on another point. In our opinion the price and profit controls imposed on the nation through the government's anti-inflation program were quite an unnecessary burden on the business community. Corporate profits have been so sluggish that in 1976 only 20 per cent of the firms subject to profit controls had been within 10 per cent of the allowable maximum profit. Most firms had such small profits that the profit restraints were unnecessary. In 1976 Canadian business was generating only 51 per cent of the maximum profit allowable under very strict profit restraining guidelines. The steadily worsening economic situation has narrowed business profit margins independently of controls. Profit margins of industrial corporations had already fallen from 1974 levels of 7.2 per cent to the level of 6.1 per cent in the nine months of 1975 before controls were introduced. Margins fell further in 1976 to 5.2 per cent and declined to 5.1 per cent in 1977.

Wage controls, on the other hand, did not halt the erosion of our competitive position, nor were profit controls necessary in the current economic circumstances. The costs of controls have been huge. Labour-management relations have been damaged severely by prolonged federal intervention. Business confidence and investment are low. These costs might have been sustainable if inflation had fallen to forecast levels, but as we have pointed out, inflation has not come down to the 4 per cent target. Where the inflation rate was originally forecast to be in the 4 per cent to 6 per cent range at this time, as we know the rate is now 9.5 per cent. The Trudeau government's controls have failed. Not only have they failed, but they have produced the costs to which I have referred which have had to be borne by business. Let me put this into perspective. One corporation has told me that its cost for staff and administration simply to cope with the anti-inflation program is $500,000 a year.

What are the new policies enunciated by this administration to fight inflation? The government now says that the phase-out of the disastrous controls program will begin on April 14 of this year. However, as I indicated on Monday, 70 per cent of workers and 80 per cent of companies will remain under controls until the end of 1978. Even after the expiry of controls certain rules and guidelines will continue to apply. Monitoring of prices and wages in the post-controls period is now to be undertaken by the Economic Council of Canada. Whatever group does the monitoring will be a watchdog, without real powers.

We are told that inflation will reach 6 per cent in 1978. Hon. members will recall that at the first ministers' conference the government forecast an inflation rate of 3.5 per cent by 1982, but no policies have been implemented or even proposed to move Canada from the current 8 per cent plus inflation level to the 3.5 per cent level the government claims can be achieved by 1982. Let me be candid on that. We believe that an inflation level lower than 3.5 per cent could be achieved by 1982. That is not the point. What we are saying is that it will not be achieved, any more than was the 4 per cent inflation level achieved this year, if the government does not now take the necessary steps to ensure that it will be achieved.

Repeatedly the Minister of Finance likes to maintain in his inept way that he sees nothing wrong with existing federal fiscal and monetary policies. That is most unfortunate.

Let me now deal with what we in the Progressive Conservative party think should be done in this country to reduce inflation. First of all, we should end controls, but they should not be ended in this disgraceful way by saying that there will be a decontrol period starting on April 14, but in fact keeping 70 per cent to 80 per cent of the employees and companies in this country bound up until the end of the year. We believe that, if anything, wage controls have been inflationary. What starts out as a wage ceiling over time becomes a floor for wage settlements. That is a consequence of a controls program which lasts too long.

Profit controls, no doubt, have been inflationary. They have retarded investment projects which would have protected the economy from inflation resulting from supply shortages. Profit controls have increased the burden of regulations upon business, added to cost and reduced efficiency. Profit controls have encouraged business inefficiency as a method of disposing of excess revenue.

A second thing we would do to counter inflation would be to cut income taxes. Consumers need a break. The 6 per cent ceiling on wage gains in 1978 is inadequate to compensate workers for the inflation expected during this current year. Without a tax cut the buying power of consumers may well fall. Wage earners must be protected against inflation to avoid a catch-up explosion of wage demands in the future. We feel the tax cut should be large. It should be approximately the $2.2 billion the government is overspending at the present time. I referred to that earlier. This means that more than 1 per cent of Canada's national output, or gross national product if you like that term, will be returned to individual taxpayers; that 500,000 Canadians will be taken off the federal tax rolls if our tax cut were implemented. I say that 500,000 Canadians would be taken off our tax rolls because we recall how many ministers of finance have loved to use that term.

● (1632)

Not only do we feel that the tax cut would benefit the average Canadian but we believe it should be directed so as to bring the main advantages to those earning up to $16,000 a year, who would receive nearly $300 if you work out our program. In effect, we are proposing a tax cut which would give most Canadians one week's extra pay. We say that one of the problems in the economy is the lack of consumer buying. We must get the consumer buying once again, creating the demand to which the businessman will respond through additional production, and eventually the creation of more plants and the buying of more equipment to serve that demand.

If you assess the thrust of this government's stand with respect to making our economy more buoyant, Mr. Speaker, I think you can determine that they have put heavy emphasis on giving the corporate sector an incentive. But the corporate sector really needs more than an incentive; it needs the demand from the buying public to allow it to create the jobs that are so urgently needed in the country. In addition to giving the corporate sector just a blind handout incentive, one should link those incentives to productivity tests so far as those corporations are concerned, and make them work for the tax breaks they are offered through one's fiscal position. That would be part of the approach that we would adopt in bringing in a budget if we had the opportunity to do so this month.

Having said that, I should like to emphasize that timing is all important in these measures. We enunciated what I am saying in part several months ago. We urged the government to cut back on their spending and to give a more meaningful tax cut to the Canadian taxpayer. We would not have the unemployment levels today that we have if the government had taken our suggestions. But now we are saying: Although it is late, do something still; because if you do not get the economy responding in a more vigorous way, we will have higher unemployment come the winter of 1978-79.

We believe that there should be a cut in sales taxes. The federal government collects a 12 per cent sales tax on almost every purchase made by consumers. By reducing the rate of tax on particular items, for example on building materials, consumers will pay lower prices. This is a fiscal tool that could be used, if the government so wished, with precision. They can assess, for example, the hardware items that are not moving at present, the cars, refrigerators and stoves, and as the government determines where it wants to put the main thrust of its incentives, it can at least lower the sales tax, if not remove it, with respect to that particular commodity. We have referred to the manufacturers' sales tax or the federal sales tax because we feel that is a most unfortunate type of tax. It is very inflationary and it goes on products at the manufacturer level and in effect then becomes amplified as mark-ups are placed on the product between the manufacturer and the eventual end user.

Another approach that can be used is to have the provinces reduce their sales taxes. Most provinces feel that they cannot give such a cut if they do not have a break from the federal government. That is why we are saying that the federal government, and certainly the Minister of Finance, in considering the budget that he will probably bring in next week or the following week, should at least consider cutting back on taxes, or, if you like, giving a bonus to those provinces which are willing to reduce their sales tax. Surely it is most unfortunate that a province such as Newfoundland, which is experiencing the tragedy of the highest unemployment in this country, should feel it necessary to impose a 12 per cent sales tax on its goods.

Mr. Kempling: Quebec has the highest unemployment.

Mr. Stevens: The hon. member is correct. I was referring to Newfoundland having the highest unemployment rate, which is also correct. I am pointing out that it is most unfortunate that, because of lack of revenue, some of the provinces which have high unemployment—and the two things go hand in hand—have been forced to inflict upon their citizens the highest sales taxes in the country.

This is where the federal government can do something meaningful. It can make whatever compensation is needed to those provinces to allow them to start removing, or at least reducing, their sales tax so that the consumer buying enthusiasm can be restored and in turn we can get our economy working again.

The thrust of what I am saying is that if we were in power, we would get Canadians back to work. It is a disgrace that in a nation which is as bountiful as ours this government should be tolerating a real growth of only 2.6 per cent, as they did last year.

Having said those things on the revenue side, let me say where we feel those revenue items can be paid for. In short, the size of government must be reduced. By cutting back on the growth of federal spending we will reduce the contribution of the government to inflationary pressures. A variety of cuts would be made by us if we had the opportunity. The size of the federal public service would be reduced by 20,000 a year for the next three years. This would be accomplished through a hiring freeze and a policy of not replacing those who resign or retire.

In this respect we feel we should probably have to exempt prison guards, RCMP personnel and military personnel. In short, we are simply saying that it is possible not to fill the vacancies, to let attrition of its own momentum reduce the size of our public service. If we were able to drop, say, 20,000 public servants a year through that method, this would mean about $400 million a year could be saved in spending at the federal government level.

We also feel that savings could be achieved through lower personnel support costs, lower accommodation and equipment charges, and lower transportation and communication expenditures. Again we feel that further reductions in spending could be achieved through sharply reduced advertising and consulting expenditures. One of the points we have made—certainly my leader has made them several times—is that we believe there is room for zero based budgeting and sunset laws if they were implemented by the federal government and earnestly enforced. I emphasize that because, as most of us know, the city of Hamilton has brought in a zero based approach to their budgeting. It has been tough, it has been hard to work out, but it has been successful. I think it is interesting to note that a city with a budget of approximately $100 million has been able to keep the lid on its spending to within 1 per cent of the previous year's spending. As a result of the general growth of that city, their mill rate, the actual tax rate of the homeowners in that city, has gone down this year compared to last.

● (1642)

Compare that city with zero based budgeting, keeping their increase to within 1 per cent of their spending last year, to this federal government which expects to receive cheers when they tell us they kept their spending approximately equal to the real growth plus inflation in the nation. They are a laugh. Hopefully the Canadian public will give them the final laugh when the election is called and the voting is recorded later this year.

We feel that some of the more than 300 Crown corporations to which I have referred should be dismantled or integrated within departments or sold to the private sector. Non-budgetary borrowings of Crown corporations should be curtailed, especially where the interest rate does not reflect market conditions.

We have before the House a bill to amend the Export Development Corporation Act in which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is seriously asking this House to give that one Crown corporation the right to borrow without further reference to this House, certainly of a formal nature, over $20 billion on their own account.

The Minister of Finance has said that our cash needs for fiscal year 1979 are to be $11 billion. He deliberately did not induce the borrowings of such Crown corporations as EDC because they do it in their own name. That may be so, but they bind the Government of Canada when they do it. That is clear. If you read their prospectus, Mr. Speaker, in each case across the front of it they state it is an Export Development Corporation note that you are buying, but Her Majesty the Queen in the right of Canada guarantees the note.

[Mr. Stevens.]

When we talk about cash needs, admitted by the Minister of Finance to be $11 billion, and we add the needs of Crown corporation such as EDC, we see how totally out of control this government is getting. If you put it into percentage terms, you find they are spending about $50 billion this year and are going to be able to pay back only 77 or 78 per cent of that spending. The rest of it is ending up on the cuff to be paid not necessarily by us, but in part, plus interest, by future generations in this country. That is why we say there has to be a cutback.

Recently some of us were in Israel. I found it most refreshing when talking to the minister of finance in Israel to hear his attitude as a new minister of finance, heading a Conservative government in that country, with regard to what they intend to do with their state corporations. The previous socialist government which ruled that country ended up with about 180 state corporations. Apparently those state corporations were into unbelievable things. They were making plastic articles, virtually anything you can conceive of, but losing money hand over fist.

When I talked to officials in their finance department, they pointed out that their country simply could not continue to subsidize the losses that were being run up by those state corporations. The solution of the new government in Israel—and this is why I say it is so refreshing—is to put on the block at least one-half of those 180 state corporations. They are simply going to ask for tenders in the private sector. If they can get suitable bids, presumably they will sell and get out of the business of running companies which no government any place in the world generally runs well.

The next point I would like to make is that we, if in power, would deregulate the economy. The burden of public bureaucracy on private enterprise must be lifted. Sunset laws will be implemented to terminate agencies which have outlived their usefulness. Tax rebates will be supplied to small businessmen who are plagued by excess federal paperwork.

We should bear in mind that the paperwork, the bureaucracy that business has to live with, is certainly an irritant to all businessmen. The large corporations handle it by simply adding to their staff. They hire another accountant or another lawyer. It is just another cost item. The small businessman cannot do that. He finds that that is often the final load that breaks him as a businessman. In short, he goes out of business.

My final point in dealing with what we would do if we were in power today is this. We feel there should be greater monetary restraint in Canada. There should be gradual reductions in the growth rate of the money supply, greater than we have been having. Monetary expansion must not be allowed to exceed growth targets that are set in relation to realistic real growth potential in this country. The federal government must put less pressure on the Bank of Canada to finance their own federal debt. The federal government must learn to live within its means.

That is our position. I believe it is a credible position. I hope it will be accepted, at least in part, by the Minister of Finance when he brings in the budget some time next week or the week after. If he does not, let me assure him that to the extent he has cheated the Canadian public once again by taking the wrong fiscal and monetary positions in a budget, we will make it an election issue come the next election.

I have touched on the Liberal record with regard to controls. I could touch on certain other items. I know there are other members who are anxious to get into this debate and I do not want to take an unduly long time.

Mr. Kempling: These are just preliminary remarks.

Mr. Hees: That was a nice introduction.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He has not warmed up yet.

Mr. Stevens: I do not want to take a prolonged time as far as my remarks are concerned. I am pleased to see that a former minister of finance is in the chamber, the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp). He knows what I am taking about.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He is the only Liberal listening to you.

Mr. Stevens: I hope that hon. member might join in this debate and give us the benefit of his understanding as to where the government has gone wrong with regard to inflation in the nation. I hope he will indicate where he feels some of the mistakes were made in the anti-inflation program and where corrections could be made, even at this late date.

I conclude by saying that I think Canada has a potential second to none in the world. It has a potential that, if properly harnessed with the government of the day giving the kind of economic leadership that Canadians rightfully deserve and are entitled to, could go on to real growth targets, not at the low level set by this government, but substantially above the real targets to which this government has referred.

In short, this country could be second to none in the world. We do not have to be humiliated with the tenth standard of living in the world when we once had number two. We could be number one in the world as an industrial nation if we simply made up our mind under the present leadership in Ottawa that we could do it.

I am concluding my remarks a little prematurely because I earnestly hope that the Minister of Finance will take the time that I have left to come into the debate and give us some explanation as to why he has been such a tragic failure as Minister of Finance to this point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1652)

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the speech of the first spokesman for the official opposition I could not help wondering why he went on and on, speaking for more than three and a half hours, unless the nature and objective of his speech was not to criticize the government but rather to outdo the lengthy speech of my colleague the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) some months ago. All the practical suggestions made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) could very easily be compressed into fifteen minutes. I listened very carefully, so let me list them quickly to show what I mean.

Some of the proposals he made for reducing government expenditure included means of reducing the size of the government. Of course, he was very careful not to indicate which programs would be eliminated. Every member of parliament who has any experience knows that the real cost of government does not result from the size of the public service, although that is substantial, but from services provided the people of Canada. If a political party pledges to eliminate services it may lose votes, so the hon. member was very careful not to do that.

Mr. Stevens: I was trying to give you some time.

Mr. Orlikow: Then the hon. member said a Conservative government would dismantle some Crown corporations. Again he was very careful not to indicate which they would be.

An hon. Member: That is being smart.

Mr. Orlikow: That is right; that is being smart politically, but not very honest.

Mr. Stevens: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member asked that I conclude my remarks in order to give him some time to speak. In doing so I did not have the time to elaborate on some of the points he is raising and complaining about now. Had he allowed me the extra time I would have given him the detail he is looking for now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. member that this is a point of debate and not a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it is a long time since I have heard a member speak for three hours and then—

An. hon. Member: And say nothing.

Mr. Orlikow: —complain about not having enough time. The hon. member said that a Conservative government would dismantle some Crown corporations. Canadian history will show that Crown corporations are created by government. In the entire history of Canada we have never had a socialist government in Ottawa. We have always had either a Conservative or Liberal government. Those governments created Crown corporations, not because they fit in with their ideological frameworks, but because there was a need that was not being met by the private sector.

For example, in my province of Manitoba we have a publicly owned telephone system. It was created in 1908 by the Conservative party headed by Sir R. Roblin. This is how we get Crown corporations. If the hon. member had been serious I think he should have indicated the kind of Crown corporations his government would dismantle.

The hon. member then talked about greater monetary restraint. Of course, what that means is that you spend less money, you provide less service and you employ fewer people. As a result, of course, you increase unemployment. So much for his ways for reducing expenditure.

He then outlined his proposed ways of helping to get the economy moving again. Those suggestions were not bad, as far as they went. He was not being very radical, but following the advice of the Economic Council of Canada and the Conference Board. He said a Conservative government would cut income taxes, particularly for the people in the middle and lower income brackets. We are in agreement with that. He said his government would cut sales taxes. We are in agreement in that regard, and they would encourage the provinces to cut their sales taxes as well. Mr. Speaker, I have taken about five minutes to list all the practical things the hon. member took over three hours to outline.

Let me speak about the situation this country finds itself in, keeping in mind the sophistry used by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during question period today when he referred to the Liberal objective of providing equality of opportunity for the people of Canada. What the Liberal government has done instead since this Prime Minister took office is provide a lack of opportunity for the people of this country.

I am glad to see that the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp) is in his seat today. If my memory serves me correctly, he was the first minister of finance at the time this Prime Minister took office. I want to compare the situation then in April of 1968 with the situation in February of 1978.

In April of 1968 the actual number of unemployed was 375,000 and the actual rate of unemployment was 4.9 per cent of the labour force. In February of 1978, just two months short of the ten years this Prime Minister has been in office, the actual number of unemployed was 1,007,000, and the actual rate of unemployment was 9.5 per cent. In other words, we had an almost threefold increase in the number of unemployed and an increase in the rate of almost 100 per cent.

An hon. Member: And they call that progress!

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, they call that progress and we are told we are doing quite well in comparison with other countries. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) has informed me that in a news article appearing in the Ottawa Citizen today there is an indication that the rate of unemployment in nine common market countries is 5.9 per cent as compared to the 9.5 per cent in Canada.

In discussing this bill before us today we must consider the history of how we got into this situation and why we are amending a bill we first passed in 1975, more than two years ago. Members will remember that in 1974 the Conservative party, then as now the official opposition, began a campaign across the country calling for a freeze on wages and prices. That was to be a 90 day freeze. That proposal was taken up by the media and given a great deal of prominence. It became an issue in the election campaign of 1974. The Prime Minister of this country travelled across the land from the Atlantic to the Pacific telling the people of Canada that a freeze on wages and prices would not work, and that the government which he headed would not impose wage controls in this country. The people, particularly the workers in the urban parts, believed the Prime Minister was an honest man. They voted in substantial numbers electing Liberal members while defeating some Conservative and some NDP members of parliament.

We all know that happened in 1975. This Prime Minister, who had won an election on the promise not to impose controls, implemented wage and price controls because, as he said, they were necessary to stop the cost of living from rising. In October 1975 there was sharp inflation, running at an annual rate of 10.5 per cent. After the anti-inflation program was imposed in October of 1975 there was a sharp decrease in the rate. At the end of the first year in which we had controls the cost of living increase had been reduced to 6.2 per cent.

● (1702)

The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board went around flexing their muscles and saying to the people "Look how successful we have been." Some of us tried to warn the government that this to a large extent was an accident and a temporary thing which would not be repeated.

I have not often, if ever, quoted from a speech which I have made in this parliament on an earlier occasion. However, speaking in this House on June 20, 1977 I talked about this question of the cost of living, and I pointed out how in each month from January, 1977 through to June the cost of living had increased by a half to one per cent. I said:

> Taking into account the $2 a barrel price increase there will be in July, we are looking at an increase in the cost of living for the year 1977 of between 9 and 10 per cent.

And what happened, Mr. Speaker? We had an increase of exactly 9.5 per cent for the calendar year of 1977. The Minister of Finance is still going around the country arguing that in 1978 the cost of living will only rise by 6 per cent. However, he cannot find a single independent economist in the universities, the business community or anywhere else who will agree with him that such a thing will happen.

The reasons are obvious. First of all, the fall in the Canadian dollar has had a disastrous effect on the cost of living in this country. The business commentator in the Globe and Mail yesterday quoted a speech made recently by David Slater, a member of the Economic Council, in which he quoted from a study done by the Conference Board of comparable wages between the United States and Canada for 1975 which seemed to show that the wage rate in Canada was higher than in the United States. Even if one accepts the validity of that study in 1975, the fact is the dollar in Canada as compared to the dollar in the United States has fallen by 15 cents since 1975. So the Canadian worker has suffered a real decline in the cost of living since this program began.

The second thing is that we have a continuing increase in the cost of energy because the government is committed to staged increases in the cost of oil and natural gas to the consumer until the cost reaches the world price. Thirdly, there has been and continues to be a sharp increase in the cost of food, so much of which is imported from other countries, and which is, therefore, a cost over which we have no control.

The government—I said it then and I will say it now, and events have proven me correct—had taken credit for the decline in the rate of inflation through the Anti-Inflation Board. However, when the facts demonstrated that there was no reason to br proud of what was happening, the Anti-Inflation Board suddenly began to try to rationalize matters and deceive the public last October by putting out a booklet called "Kick the Inflation Habit", in which they tried to argue that we were doing quite well. They tried to show that the rate of inflation was continuing to come down. How did they do that? They did that in the classical way of one who wants to lie to the public. They cooked the books. To show how they did it and how they rationalized it, I quote from that pamphlet:

Food, energy and import price movements have obscured somewhat the success that has been attained in reducing the rate of inflation.

Of course, if you take out the major factors for the change in something, then you can prove that the change has not taken place.

What has been the effect of the anti-inflation program? Let us look at it. The program has, in fact, never worked because it has never controlled prices. It has only been successful in the one field in which there was the least reason for implementing it, and that is in controlling and limiting wage increases. Since the program has not worked at all, we believe there is no logic in continuing the program, and for that reason we are going to vote against this bill.

The program has not succeeded in holding down prices, profits or the rate of inflation. All it has done is to hold down the salaries and wages of the low and middle income people. It has been ineffective in controlling executive salaries or the incomes of professionals. The only logic for continuing the program, therefore, is a continuing desire on the part of the government to hold down wages and salaries of the ordinary people of Canada. The government continues to believe that this type of wage increase is the prime cause of inflation when there is all kinds of evidence to indicate that the prime cause is elsewhere altogether. By holding down wages and salaries, the government is restricting the purchasing power of the wage earners, thus holding down consumer demand and lengthening the recession in which we currently find ourselves.

The government has deliberately increased prices on oil products. The oil price increase of last year, this year and the one which will come some months from now will add at least one per cent. It added over one per cent in 1977, and it will add more than one per cent to the over-all cost to the CPI for 1978. For the average family this means approximately $150 a year more to heat a house and drive a car. The oil price increase has contributed to a 15 per cent increase in the price of fuel and utilities in the last year, and we have not yet seen the effect of the latest increase. Moreover, the government is committed to a dollar per barrel increase every six months for the foreseeable future.

The cost of buying a house has increased by 9 per cent in the last year for a $50,000 home, which in most cities does not give a person a very elaborate home. This is a price increase of $4,500 and over the average life of a mortgage it is an increase of approximately $12,000. Also the cost of an automobile has risen by nearly 10 per cent in the past 12 months, and recent price stories indicate that the larger car companies will continue to raise their prices in this year. In fact, one has already raised its prices and another has received permission from the AIB for a 5 per cent increase. Food prices in 1977 have gone up by over 15 per cent, and food for home consumption rose by nearly 18 per cent. As a result of all this, we have had an increase over the year in the CPI of 9.5 per cent, and in the last months of 1977 the increase was over 11 per cent.

In spite of this the government, under the provisions of this legislation, is holding down wage increases in the last year of the AIB to 6 per cent. With inflation running at somewhere between 8 and 9 per cent, this means food and energy prices, and even prices of supposedly controlled items are going up at a rate of 9 to 10 per cent a year, and the average person this year will suffer a corresponding decline in his real standard of living.

• (1712)

If they are lucky the average family's income will go up about $900, or $18 per week. The average family, if it gets the increase allowed by the AIB, will find its standard of living this year dropping by about $12 per week. For those on fixed income the loss will be even more, about $16 per week for those on fixed incomes of $8,000 per year and about $20 per week for those on fixed incomes of $10,000 per year. What we have always needed is an alternative to the anti-inflation board, a plan that protects those on low and fixed incomes and guarantees the purchasing power of ordinary people so that we can begin to work our way out of the combined recession and inflation that has characterized this country for the past few years.

We have been told that the reason we had inflation was that workers were demanding and getting too high wage increases. I refer now to the period in 1975 when the government brought its program in. What the government conveniently forgot to tell people was that in 1975 workers were reacting to the very sharp increases in profits which Canadian corporations had been able to achieve in the years 1972 to 1974. Profits more than doubled in those three years. It was very natural for workers to try to get their share of the increased productivity and the increased gross national product of this country.

We were told that we needed the anti-inflation program to protect our markets. Although we have had the controls and although the wage demands of Canadian workers were restricted, what we have had is complete disaster. Our major export products, such as metals, have not been selling, not because the price was wrong but to a large extent because the market was not good. There has been a world recession. They have not been selling because our very patriotic multinational corporations such as International Nickel found it wise from their point of view, wise from the point of view of their management, wise from the point of view of their shareholders, but disastrous for their workers, to take the profits they made in Canada and the loans so generously provided by this government and invest that money in mines in Indonesia and Guatemala. These mines compete for sales with Canadian mines and for jobs with Canadian workers.

In a fit of honesty—not found too often—a senior Inco official admitted and later retracted, I am sure under a great deal of pressure, that of course Inco could not conceive of cutting back production in Indonesia or Guatemala because those governments simply would not permit it. Only in a country like Canada with a supine government such as we have could this take place.

When I began I said that our actual rate of unemployment today is 9½ per cent. Is that temporary, Mr. Speaker? Is it likely to go away in the near future? Is it likely to improve? There is not a single reason to believe that is likely to happen.

The current issue of Macleans, Mr. Speaker, should have been paid for, if it was not, by the Liberal party because it is an out-and-out propaganda pamphlet for that party. It contains an article by Ian Urquhart entitled "What Price Trudeau? If he didn't hurt the Economy, he sure didn't help it." Then there are four "report cards" given by four economists who were asked to rate the Prime Minister. I should like to quote a couple of sentences each from three of them.

The first one is by John F. Helliwell, Department of Economics, University of British Columbia, and has the heading "Trudeau's Report Card No. 1: A very Average Student". The text reads as follows:

GRADE: C

The student was asked to find and implement policies that would achieve reasonably full employment, reasonably stable prices, efficient, innovative and peaceful operation of the public and private sectors, and less disparity of income and opportunity across the country. The student failed the exam . . .

Carl Beigie, C. D. Howe Research Institute, Montreal under the heading "Trudeau's Report Card No. 2: Not working to Potential", writes as follows:

GRADE: C

Mr. Trudeau inherited two major economic problems when he became Prime Minister—regional disparities and a weak international competitive position in most manufactured products. Both are now even more serious.

The last one I want to quote is Professor J. C. Weldon, Department of Economics, McGill University. Under the heading "Trudeau's Report Card No. 4: Should seek other Work", he writes:

GRADE: F

Not deserved? Perhaps, but it is the lowest grade the rules allow. I suppose the principal charge to be laid against the Trudeau government is that it has adopted the most reactionary of all economic policies, namely to abandon policy. The vital commitment of 1945 to full employment has vanished.

In case members on the government side think that I am being much too partisan and being unrealistic in speaking about full employment, let me remind them of a white paper published by a Liberal government in 1945. One of the great men in the Liberal history of this country, C. D. Howe, was minister of reconstruction. When tabling the white paper he said that the central task of reconstruction was to maintain a high and stable level of employment and income, a task the government adopted as a primary objective of policy. He said that government was not thereby selecting a lower target than full employment.

That was the commitment of the Liberal government in 1945 and we must compare that with the record in February, 1978 when over one million were unemployed and 9.5 per cent of the labour force was out of work and looking for work. We know that is an under-estimation of the actual number of unemployed. We know that there are several hundred thousand—probably 500,000 people—who have given up looking for work because it is no use, there is no work in the areas in which they live.

Our party believes in 1978, as did the Liberal government in 1945, that full employment is both necessary and possible. We believe that and we say it can be done. Indeed, we know it can be done. If we are to achieve that goal, however, we must order our system much better than we have been doing.

In a recent report on industrial policy the Science Council of Canada gave as one of the major causes of our economic turndown the fractionalization of industry because of the high degree of foreign ownership in our manufacturing sector and our subservience through branch plant organization to investment decisions being made by large foreign industrial concerns. Mr. Speaker, is there a member of this House from any party who would not agree with that assessment? Is it not obvious that our branch plants are not able and interested in providing the jobs which are necessary?

● (1722)

We have in many fields an efficient industry productivity. In the Canadian steel industry it has always been high. Output of the worker increased by 6 per cent between 1975 and 1976. Canadian steel prices are 10 per cent to 20 per cent lower than that of comparable American products. We are able to sell 70 per cent of our steel exports to the United States and yet the employment rate has been falling in that industry. While we are not exporters of steel, we run a deficit in imported manufactured goods incorporating steel. These manufactured goods are auto parts, aircraft parts, agricultural implements, appliances, machinery and equipment. The biggest drawback to expansion in this industry is weak demand. As a result there are less people employed this year than there were in earlier years.

Those of us who were here in parliament at the time when the auto pact was negotiated remember the glowing promises made by the then minister of industry, Mr. Drury, about how we were to get a better share of the automobile market, how we were to get more skilled jobs, how we would get lower prices for cars. Mr. Speaker, we have more jobs but the skilled jobs are in the United States. The assembly jobs are available in Canada. The tool and die makers are in the United States. We have not developed a tool and die industry. We have let our electronics industry and our television industry go. What we have had is a series of plant closures and layoffs.

Let me put on the record just a few of them. RCA is getting out of the major appliance business. CAMCO, formerly Westinghouse, manufacturer of dishwashers, refrigerators and ranges, has reduced employment from a high of 1,400 in 1973 to the present 700. Appliances, formerly made in Barrie by Canadian General Electric, are now being shipped in from the parent plant in the United States. These products include vacuum cleaners, electric knives, hair dryers, deep fryers, blenders, food processors, etc. The workers at CGE in Peterborough attribute the drop in employment from a high of 4,500 to 3,000 in 1975 and to the present low of 2,300 to the depressed economy and the fact that the company has been moving many sections of its operations elsewhere. I could go on and on.

We may not know it because the GATT negotiators have not said so publicly, but what we gather and are told by people in the industry is that our negotiators are prepared, if they can get some more concessions for tariff reductions on raw materials such as minerals and lumber, which we export, to agree to substantial tariff cuts for manufactured goods coming into Canada. That means fewer jobs and more unemployment in Canada.

Having damned the government's program and having indicated how miserably the anti-inflation program has failed, I want to take the few moments remaining to me to put on the record the concrete steps which we think should be followed by a Canadian government.

First of all, there must be a real commitment to full employment. This country can and must have full employment. It must offer to every Canadian citizen who is able and willing to work a meaningful job. How can that be accomplished? We believe that our monetary and fiscal policies must be timed adjusted and implemented to attain this objective. We believe that our manpower policies and training programs should be developed and co-ordinated to bring jobs and people together. That obviously has not been done. Publications such as the Financial Post are predicting that we will have a very serious shortage of skilled craftsmen despite the fact that we have spent billions of dollars on our manpower training programs. We believe that substantial moneys should be allotted by all levels of government for programs to create jobs providing decent living wages. What we have had instead, despite the urging of the official opposition, is the exact reverse—restraint and cutbacks. These have meant more unemployment in all provinces of Canada.

We believe that we need a massive low income housing program to help solve the severe housing shortage and, as well, to provide jobs. We believe an industrial strategy must be developed which would promote and create secondary manufacturing, provide long-range solutions to energy problems, deal with manpower needs, transportation, housing and land use, and concentrate on employment. We believe that there must be a redistribution of income in this country. We must face up to the fact that the present Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) stated so clearly in her recent speech, namely that in more than 30 years income distribution in Canada has hardly changed at all. Where it has changed, it has changed for the worse. Thirty years ago the lowest 20 per cent of income earners of this country got about 4 per cent of the gross national product. The top 20 per cent received more than ten times that. They got 42.5 per cent of the gross national product. Thirty years later according to the latest figures, the bottom 20 per cent get 3.9 per cent and the top 20 per cent get 44 per cent of the gross national product.

What should we do about income redistribution? First of all, we should scrap the Anti-Inflation Board since its main thrust has been to keep down wages and not prices. Secondly, the tax system should be restructured to be more equitable. Thirdly, those on the lower end of the income scale should have their personal income taxes lowered and the sales taxes should be cut. Fourthly, pensioners and those on fixed incomes should have their purchasing power restored by tax adjustments and by increasing benefits. Lastly, real taxes on corporation profits should be increased.

I have tried to sketch not just what is wrong with the government's program but what a government that is really concerned about the welfare of this country should do. This government has failed lamentably, Mr. Speaker. It has not met the needs of the Canadian people. One of the most dramatic ways of indicating that feeling is to vote against this bill, because this program has been a complete failure. For those reasons, we intend to vote against this bill.

● (1732)

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have already made a contribution to this debate on this patch-up bill, C-18, but I want to put in a few final remarks at this time. I do not want members on the other side to think we are holding things up over here. I know they have had a lot of information given to them by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) but I would refer the House to the fact that the bill had only two days of debate in the House earlier before it was referred to the Standing committee, where it received speedy passage after only four committee meetings. I would also stress that we in the opposition are going to be consistent and stick to our position in opposing this kind of bill.

I think it is interesting, though, to refer to the draft bill which my hon. friend from York-Simcoe mentioned in his remarks. I have the draft bill here in my hand, a discussion draft bearing the name of D. Maurais from the Department of Justice, legislation branch. It makes reference to the minister as being the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). It is interesting that at our last committee meeting on March 16 the minister said to the committee in reference to this bill, which he said he saw for the first time in the committee:

> It has never been government policy and I have never seen it before. It was shown to me by a member of the opposition and I denied that day and I deny today that we had any intention whatever to present such a bill.

Now that is a fairly straightforward statement, but I have to go back a little further to February 17 when we were also in committee and the minister, again referring to the bill, said this:

I have never approved and do not have any intention to approve; I do not intend to put it in front of my colleagues in cabinet. I have said that to the unions, I said it to the businessmen and I now say it to the premiers. There was no such thing. How could I say more?

He was referring again to that bill. I commented that this was reassuring and at that same meeting—I am quoting myself here—I said:

If the Economic Council would not take on the job there would be legislation?

To which the minister replied: "For a monitoring agency, yes". The minister said he did not want to see the bill and continued:

You know, Mr. Stevens presented it. He had the bill in his hand. I have never seen such a bill. My name is on it, but I have never seen it.

I thought it was poor that we should have the minister at the meeting without having the advantage of having seen such a bill, so on the next occasion, also at a meeting of the finance committee, I reminded him that on Friday I had said that I would try to get a copy of it for him. I said I had it with me, but the minister said: "I do not want to see it." He did not want to see it even though he had been reminded that his name was on it. Subsequently the minister was asked by me who Mr. Maurais was, the one who had drafted the bill, and the minister said he did not know who that was. Finally, at this same meeting, I asked the minister whether he would undertake for the benefit of the committee to determine where this bill originated, who drafted it, under whose authority, and why it was released. I said:

Mr. Chairman, I said I was willing to obtain a copy and I did obtain a copy for the minister but he does not want it.

The minister said: "It was given to me here. I will take it home." So finally, on February 17, we have the minister admitting that he has the copy and that he will take it home even though some weeks later he says in the same committee:

I have never seen it before it was shown to me. And I denied that day and I deny today that we have any intention whatever to present such a bill.

That is very strange, Mr. Speaker, and in order to try and clarify as to how this draft bill came into being, I decided we had better ask a question in the House about it. Accordingly, on February 22 I put a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) because, after all, legislation does emanate from the Department of Justice. I asked him whether he would tell us who in his office had instructed Mr. D. Maurais to draft this bill and who had authorized the release of the bill across the country. Now that is a fairly straightforward question. At that time the minister said simply that he did not know the name of the officer and added "I would have to find out who he is in order to ascertain from whom he received his instructions."

That was approximately six weeks ago and we have not yet had an answer from the Minister of Justice with regard to that question. I tried to catch Your Honour's eye today so that I could refresh his memory on this matter. I am assured by the minister that he will have an answer for the House tomorrow. I regret he did not have it available before now but I would remind the House, since I will not have an opportunity to do so tomorrow, that the name of D. Maurais is the ninth name on the list of some 14 officers in the legislative section of the Department of Justic. He is listed right here in the government of Canada telephone book and if the minister has any trouble finding him I will be glad to help.

Leaving that mystery aside for the moment I should like to deal with the issue of restraint. Ministers have assured us they are anxious to exercise restraint, yet the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), when presenting the estimates this year, took great pleasure from the fact that the government was reducing the rate of increase in public expenditure. He did not say that expenditures were down or that the government had been able to hold the line with regard to expenditure. No, the only thing the minister could take credit for was a reduction in the rate of increase.

We cannot afford to carry on this kind of spending spiral. We have to do something more serious than having the rate of spending increase going down. Of course, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe has said, it is really all a matter of confidence in the economy; but I must say that if one looks at the record of the government one cannot escape the conviction that the record is not an impressive one. How can we have confidence in a government led by a prime minister who said to us some time ago that inflation had been wrestled to the ground and that separatism in Canada was dead?

I have a couple of quotations here from recent magazines. This is the same man who in July, 1974 said:

You cannot start with a policy and then run away from it every time you want to get a new sector of the population to support you.

Well, we have seen some of the changes of mind of the government opposite and if they have any shred of consistency left, it is this: when they get a bad policy they sure stick to it. I guess this is why we have a bad record on unemployment and inflation.

Another couple of quotes from the leader of the government party. Here is one from December, 1975. He does not like the system the way it is. He says:

We haven't been able to make it work, the free market system. We've ended up with very high unemployment and very high inflation. We can't go back to what was before with the same habits, the same behaviour and the same institutions. Otherwise, we'd be back to high unemployment and high inflation... That means the government is going to take a larger role in running institutions.

● (1742)

That was two and a half years ago, and since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made that statement we have had nothing but high unemployment, high inflation and a government which takes a larger and larger role in running institutions. If the government cannot learn from its mistakes, I do not know how we can expect it to change the direction in which Canada is going or to increase confidence in Canada.

If we think the statements of the Prime Minister are strange, perhaps we ought to compare his statements with the actions of his government. In the 1974 election campaign the government campaigned against controls of any kind and made a mockery of the temporary freeze proposed by the Conservative party. Then, as we all know, 15 months later the government imposed a 39-month program of controls. Can we believe what the government says?

In that same 1974 election campaign the government promised the residents of Toronto a $30 million waterfront park. Well, the residents of Toronto know that nothing has happened on that score. That is another example of this government changing its mind.

The government promised other cities aid in the form of grants for rapid transit systems, but every mayor in the country can tell us that there has been no money for rapid transit since that election promise in 1974. I suppose we should not be too surprised at the actions of the government opposite.

I see that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) is here. I appreciate the fact that he is listening attentively because I want to refer to some of his problems. He tells the country quite blithely that his department does not have any deficit. The fact that it spends something like $1.7 billion more than it takes in is, in the words of the minister, a commitment of the government. I hope the minister can sell that to the taxpayers, particularly those who are either self-employed or who are retired and do not contribute to or benefit from the unemployment insurance scheme, but who, nevertheless, are required to pick up their share of the tab through general taxation. Some insurance scheme!

I remember that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) told the country about the great things his department was going to do, but we find that there was such a small increase in national defence spending that it did not even keep up with the rate of inflation.

If the voters of the country can be forgiven for wondering about the practices of the government opposite, I wonder how the voters of Vancouver feel. Every time many of my constituents look out of their windows in the morning they can see 13 to 15 ocean-going ships anchored in the harbour. Why are they anchored in the harbour? They are waiting for grain. Where is the grain? The grain is out on the prairies because the government cannot get it to Vancouver to ship it to the people who want it, the Russians or the Chinese. Who pays the cost of these ships waiting around in Vancouver harbour, and who is at fault? At the very least the taxpayer pays. Farmers probably pay more than other taxpayers do. We know where the fault lies. No one can take the blame except the government opposite.

Let us go back to the time when the government told farmers that they should not grow anything because the government could not sell it. Farmers were going to be paid for not producing. Now they are told to produce as much as they can, even though it cannot be shipped out.

What are the results of this lack of planning and leadership on the part of the government? Recently we have seen a flight of capital from Canada, principally to the United States because that country is so close to us. That is not really surprising. Any time a government creates a hostile environment for people or capital, they leave. We need only examine the situation in Quebec at the present time under its separatist government. That government has frightened many people and undermined confidence in that province. Many companies and individuals are leaving Quebec because of the hostile environment there. We had the same problem in British Columbia a few years ago when we had an NDP government. One result of policies which are unfriendly to businesses and individuals is that there is a tendency to save money rather than to invest. Another result is higher unemployment because the private sector will not invest in order to create the jobs which are needed.

It is really a shame to see Canadian expertise and Canadian money going to the United States to provide housing for American citizens. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) tells us we have a housing crisis in Canada. We do not have a housing crisis; we have a money crisis. Many people cannot afford the houses that are available. There are empty units all over Canada. Units financed by the government opposite are competing with private sector units, and some government financed units are even competing with other government financed units. It is ludicrous that the government should be competing with itself. In some small centres apartment units financed under the National Housing Act by CMHC are competing with new houses built under AHOP. The result is that people invest in housing for themselves only. What we really need is more investment in housing and in other industries in order to get things going again.

Finally, I want to conclude this fairly short intervention by saying that it is extremely unfortunate for the country and for the confidence that taxpayers are expected to have when government ministers—and I have just illustrated a few cases—do not even know what is going on in their own departments. We cannot expect to have confidence until hon. ministers opposite can show that they know what is going on in their departments and that they are interested in what is happening. When the government has no idea—as illustrated by the quotations I have cited—of what direction it should take, it runs for cover because it knows it has to take care of itself; and if it does not know what direction the country should take and the effects of its policies on the whole economy, the results can be devastating indeed.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, as we approach the beginning of the dismantling of controls on April 14, I think we should take a look at the problems we will have to handle in a satisfactory way if we are to avoid a recurrence of the situation which made the imposition of controls necessary in the first place.

First of all, we must realize that human nature does not change very much from year to year and that the impulses and desires which caused management, labour and government to act in the way they did prior to the imposition of controls in 1975 will still be about the same when controls are lifted. Knowing this, in what way can we expect these three components of society to react when the economy becomes free of controls once again?

We can expect organized labour to put forward demands for the accumulated wage increases it considers were wrongly denied it by the AIB during the period when controls were in force.

We can expect management to give in to labour's demands for wage increases rather than risk work stoppages and the consequent loss of profits, as it did in most cases during the period which preceded the imposition of controls. These wage increases will, once again, be passed on to the buying public in the form of higher prices. Management can also be expected to resume the practice of charging what it considers the traffic will bear in order to obtain the best possible return for its shareholders.

We can expect government to continue spending far in excess of what can be justified by proper management of its responsibilities to the public and to be the worst offender of all in fueling the fires of inflation.

● (1752)

Realizing that there will be sharp upward pressures on wages and prices as soon as controls are lifted, the government has announced guidelines, and has asked the Economic Council of Canada to monitor our price and wage performance after controls have been removed. Now, how effective will this monitoring mechanism be? The best way to arrive at an answer to that question is to see what success a similar approach to controlling wage and price rises had when it was tried some years ago.

In June, 1969 the government established the Prices and Incomes Commission under the chairmanship of Dr. John Young in an attempt to control price and wage increases. Soon after it came into being, the commission announced price and wage guidelines to be followed by management and labour, and started to monitor price and wage performances.

As wages kept on rising at an unacceptable rate, the commission brought this to the attention of the unions concerned, and strongly urged that the government's guidelines be obeyed. The unions paid no attention to the commission, because it had no powers to compel compliance with the guidelines. As wages continued to rise, prices also continued to go up at an unacceptable rate. Management's reply to the commission was that these price increases were necessary to compensate for the wage increases that were taking place, and so the price-wage spiral continued unchecked.

It became obvious that without the provision of teeth to require compliance with the guidelines, the commission was powerless to control or even slow down price and wage increases, and it finally went out of existence in June, 1972, a very disappointing failure.

When those of us who were around here ten years ago hear the government announcing guidelines, to be monitored by a mechanism that will have no power to require compliance with the guidelines, we get the very definite feeling that "this is where we came in". There is no reason for believing that the government's proposed method of getting labour and management to comply with its guidelines after April 14 will be any less of a failure than it was between 1969 and 1972. To try to pretend that the present approach will be any more successful than it was then is a blatant attempt to mislead the people of this country.

And, of course, that is exactly what the present plan is. April 14 will be very close to the day when the election will be called, and the vote will be in the latter part of June. The government's plan is for very gradual decontrol in the early stages, which means that very little decontrolling will have taken place before the end of June. This plan will, of course, give the government the best of both worlds. It will please those voters who are clamouring for decontrol, and sharp increases in prices will not become apparent until after the election is over.

In addition to our own buying capabilities, why is it so necessary to keep our price levels from rising at an excessive rate? The main reason for applying controls in 1975 was that rapidly accelerating inflation was making our products less and less competitive in both the Canadian and the export market, and production and employment were adversely affected. In this regard, we are particularly vulnerable to price levels in the United States, the country which is by far our most important trading partner and with whom we do 70 per cent of our export and import business. Neither Americans nor Canadians are willing to pay more for a Canadian product if they can buy a similar American product at a lower price.

For many months now, prices in the United States have been rising less rapidly than ours, and that is one of the principal reasons why our production and unemployment have been steadily worsening. If this spread between our price levels grows even greater, our loss of orders to the United States will be even greater than at present, and unemployment in Canada will increase at an even faster rate than during recent months.

The complete failure experienced by the Prices and Incomes Commission in trying to control price and wage increases without the power to compel management and labour to obey the government's guidelines shows the futility of a monitoring mechanism without teeth to require compliance with the guidelines. I believe that the teeth which are required are for the government to say, very clearly, that if inflation due to causes generated within our economy rises for two successive quarters at an annual rate greater than 1 per cent above the annual rate at the time when decontrol starts, controls will be reimposed.

Past experience has demonstrated that without such teeth we will be heading for failure before we even start and will have inflation which will accelerate more rapidly than that which made controls necessary in the first place.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 6, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBAN INVOLVEMENT IN TROUBLED AREAS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity to move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowksi):

That this House feels, having regard to the recent developments in Africa, the time is overdue to advise the government of Cuba that with an army of 110,000 men, of which some estimated 23,000, under the direction and with the co-ordination of the Soviet Union, are engaged in action in Africa and in particular in Angola where diabolical cruelties were perpetrated against its people by this army, and in a so-called liberation movement designed to drive out democratic governments Cuba has troops now in Mozambique, Malagasy, Tanzania, the Congo Republic, Sierra Leone, Guinea, Liberia and Algeria, in Rhodesia they are engaged in arousing revolution, and elsewhere assisting in the drive of African guerrillas against white minorities: in consequence of this, the peace of the world is endangered, and this House declares, despite the closeness of the relationship and mutual admiration between president Fidel Castro and the Prime Minister of Canada that—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Even on this happy day I suppose there will be mutual messages. My motion continues:

—a warning in the form of an ultimatum be given to Fidel Castro that either he have his troops returned from Africa and agrees to desist from stirring up war and revolution, this House not only condemns what he is doing, but if he does not desist and return the troops to Cuba, Canada will have to consider terminating the large financial aid that she is providing to Cuba—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very long motion. I hope the right hon. member is coming to the end of it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the assistance of hon. gentlemen opposite makes it impossible to be brief. My motion continues:

—and also give consideration to ending diplomatic relations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I would like to move a motion under Standing Order 43. In view of the irresponsible statements by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in Hamilton yesterday, where reportedly he indicated that he is not concerned about the devaluation of the Canadian dollar and, furthermore, that the dropping of the Canadian dollar to as low as 80 cents U.S. would be a good thing for Canada—

Mr. Horner: I never said that.

Some hon. Members: What did you say?

Mr. Saltsman: —I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House condemns the minister's irresponsible statements, talking down the Canadian dollar, which only encourages speculation and uncertainty and lack of any confidence in our currency.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUESTED INCREASE IN DISABILITY PENSIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the numerous requests made by the National Council of Veterans' Associations in recent months concerning the increase in the basic rate of disability pensions for veterans; in view of the fact that there is a $240 annual income disparity between the average wages of unskilled civil servants and the disability pension of veterans; considering also that the federal government must ensure that a fair pension is paid to disabled veterans and to the widows whose spouses willingly courted danger and sacrificed their lives, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House direct the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) to take all necessary steps in the shortest possible time to introduce a bill aimed at increasing the basic rate of disability pensions for veterans and thus correct inequities existing between the latter and the wages of the unskilled workers comprising five groups of civil servants now on the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL UNITY

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT CONSULT PROVINCES ON FORM OF REFERENDUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent necessity and great national interest.

Considering that the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations (Mr. Lalonde) openly recognizes that the referendum bill he has introduced was prepared and drafted without previous consultation with the provincial governments; considering that, when the first ministers met last February, the federal government formally proclaimed its intention always to consult the provincial governments on all matters of national interest; and considering that nothing could more directly involve national interest than a bill providing for a referendum or amendments to the constitution, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the House unanimously decide to postpone consideration of the referendum bill until all provincial governments have clearly indicated their position on this issue, for hon. members need to know where the provinces stand before opening an intelligent debate on such a vital issue.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Allard.]

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED PAYMENT FORMULA FOR POTATO GROWERS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that eastern Canada's potato growers are going through the worst selling campaign in 25 years because of artificially low prices; considering that yesterday the federal government announced initial and part payments of about $60 million to western grain producers; and considering that eastern Canadians are not less deserving that western Canadians as regards monetary needs to pay for seeds and to compensate for the loss of net income, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) and the Agricultural Stabilization Board immediately announce the payment formula or formulas for potato growers.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the terms of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

BUDGETARY DEFICIT—DATE OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my initial question is for the Prime Minister, who undoubtedly is very anxious to tell the House when the budget will be presented. In telling the House when the budget may be received, can he tell Canadians why the budgetary deficit, which was approximately $20 for every Canadian when he took power, rose to almost $500 for every man, woman and child in the country in the year just ended?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr.Speaker, it seems to me that the answer to the question—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1417)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members on both sides of the House for their very warm applause.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Jack Horner didn't applaud.

Mr. Trudeau: I certainly cannot guarantee that they will all be here in ten years to wish me another ten years.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: There may be, in those days, a couple of leftovers, including myself, from a previous depression, Mr. Speaker, but not many more.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Which depression?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is my point. But that is a bit too subtle for the hon. member to understand.

Mr. Speaker, the question is obviously one which is related to the budget debate. The opposition have been asking for a budget debate, and I am glad to see that they are not only welcoming it now, but are entering into it at this point, by their questions. I would suggest they wait until next week, when the Minister of Finance will be making his budget speech, and then maybe we will hear the answer to the point made by the hon. member opposite.

Mr. Stevens: What day?

Mr. Trudeau: What day is it, Mr. Chrétien?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it will be Monday night at eight o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister, who surprised me when he did not seem to know the date when the budget debate was to be held. I would also add, with reference to his "depression" reference, that certainly we on this side will not be contributing, as he is, to the next depression in this country.

Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister indicate why he feels that during his ten years in office the number of unemployed in this country should have risen from 375,000, when he took power, to over one million Canadians looking for work today.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that the question is argumentative.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again my supplementary is to the Prime Minister, who surely does not feel that Statistics Canada's hard, cold figures which I have just cited are argumentative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Let me ask him this second supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Could he explain to the House and account to the Canadian public why inflation, which was running slightly above 4 per cent when he took power, should now be 9.5 per cent, which is the last figure published by Statistics Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member will realize that if the Prime Minister wanted to attempt to do that, the question period would not provide ample time.

DECLINE IN BALANCE OF TRADE

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Prime Minister. I was one of the deluded Canadians who ten years ago voted for the Prime Minister to become leader. I have since atoned for that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: My question to the Prime Minister is this: Canada's financial deficit on current account was $97 million in 1968, and was 44 times that last year—$4.2 billion. This is reflected, of course, in the way the world is now dealing with the Canadian dollar: you need a snorkel mask now to deal with the Canadian dollar, which is supposed to be floating.

• (1422)

My question to the Prime Minister is this: Could he explain the reasons for this dismal record and tell us how, in the few days left to him in office, he is going to do something to reverse this tragic decline in our trade balance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course we are very anxious to make comments on these statistics and help the Canadian public understand how they should be interpreted, rather than listening to the biased interpretation from the other side of the House.

When a statistic is quoted, I am not saying the statistic itself is argumentative; I am saying the way in which the question is asked is argumentative. Obviously, with respect to each one of these statistics—the one asked now and the previous one by the hon. member for York-Simcoe—we have answers and are anxious to put them forth in the budget debate. For instance, when the hon. member says that the number of unemployed has gone up by something like 400,000 in ten years—

Mr. Stevens: 600,000.

Mr. Trudeau: —600,000, it would be important for the Canadian public to understand that during that period Canada created jobs at a faster rate than any other industrialized society.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You are a fraud.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, 2,300,000 jobs have been created in that period in this economy. That, obviously, is an argumentative answer and that is why I am suggesting that this line of question would be properly put during the debate. We are very anxious—

An hon. Member: You don't like this kind of question.

Mr. Trudeau: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member wants me to give argumentative answers, I will make my budget speech right now. He can just continue asking the questions. On the other question that he asked me—

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I suggest if the Prime Minister cannot do better than that, he should give the boots to Coutts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I suggest to the Prime Minister that the electorate of Canada will want the answer in a few months. In 1977, our deficit in fully manufactured end products—that is, the products that give the jobs—was $11.6 billion. If we manufactured those goods in Canada—in reverse—it would mean 800,000 jobs. Can the Prime Minister tell us how he plans to overcome this deficit which has grown from $3.1 billion in 1968 to the present $11.6 billion? What are his plans to reverse that in the next few weeks, before the Canadian people reverse him?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can indicate at some length that the size of the deficit in Canada now, compared to gross national product, is considerably less than it has been historically in Canada. That should put that matter in perspective.

The hon. member is interested in making puns on personalities. I wonder if he would explain to us why he comes down here to give us advice on economics, when the Premier of Newfoundland did not even think he was good enough to correct the economy in that province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the right hon. Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister indicate to this House whether the statement made yesterday in Hamilton by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, when talking down the Canadian dollar, reflects government policy? When the minister said that he is not concerned about the devaluation of the Canadian dollar, and that the dropping of the Canadian dollar to as low as 80 cents U.S. would be a good thing for Canada—

Mr. Horner: I never said that.

An hon. Member: You did.

Mr. Horner: Were you there?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order please. The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I really wish the backbenchers would keep their ministers in order.

An hon. Member: How would you do it?

• (1427)

Mr. Saltsman: Jack, if it is not too much of a crossing, come over and I will show you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, on some days it is very difficult to get a serious question in.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member would put his question, the matter would be complete.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister indicate whether the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce was reflecting government policy when he said it would be a good thing if the Canadian dollar dropped to 80 cents U.S.?

Mr. Horner: I never said that.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the government, as stated by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Finance, myself and all ministers, is that the dollar should be allowed to find its natural level.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It is a floating dollar. I understand hon. members opposite would like to engage in a bit of speculation; they would like us to tell them the way it will float. If they want to risk some money, they can do it on their own.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The position of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been exactly that: it should find its level. He has twice said to the hon. member—and the hon. member understood him—that he did not say the words he was quoted as having said. I would have thought the hon. member would accept that denial as the word of the minister.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Of course I am prepared to accept the denial of the minister that he said it; nevertheless, whatever he said has certainly given an impression of what he meant to convey. If he is not guilty of that, he is guilty of having some very loose lips.

An. hon. Member: "Loose Lips Horner".

An hon. Member: Let's have a statement, "Loose Lips".

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I really wonder how much of this kind of preamble we should have. Will the hon. member please put his supplementary question.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, this question is to the Prime Minister. In light of the Minister of Finance's fine moral fervour of yesterday when he lectured the opposition to avoid making certain statements because of the effect this would have—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Saltsman: —would he lecture the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce along the same lines?

[Translation]

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. On this tenth anniversary, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. La Salle: Allow me to point out that there are probably a million or more Canadians who do not feel like applauding the way my hon. friends opposite do. In 1968, Canada had 375,000 unemployed; ten years later, we have over a million. Under the circumstances, having failed to find the solutions required, would the Prime Minister have at least the courage to recognize the monumental failure of his government in that regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, once again it is a matter of quoting statistics with arguments. I repeat what I said a while ago in reply to the same question in English. We would like to hold a debate on budgetary matters; that is why the Minister of Finance announced a budget for this coming Monday night. I can understand that hon. members across the way should want a budget when none is on the way, but now that one is, they do not want a debate because they know we have answers to all those questions. The hon. member speaks of an increase of some 600,000 unemployed; but that should be placed in the context of a Canada in which 2,400,000 new jobs were created over the same period. All those things must be seen in context and that is why we want to have a debate on the budget next week. I trust the hon. member will come forth with his speeches at that time, and that he will listen to the answers we give.

Mr. La Salle: On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In answer to that the Prime Minister says they still managed to create two million new jobs. How then can one explain the lack of foresight of the government with regard to the new workers entering the labour market? The Prime Minister tells us they created two million new jobs in the last ten years: how then can that increase of 700,000 unemployed be explained? Under the circumstances, how does one explain the fact that the Prime Minister—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Elgin.

• (1432)

AGRICULTURE

STEPS TO OVERCOME FARMERS' ECONOMIC DIFFICULTIES

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to lack of government performance. In view of the fact that farm debt has doubled, to $10 billion, in less than ten years and farmers, under this government, have to borrow simply to survive, what immediate action, if any, can the producers of this country expect to help overcome these serious difficulties?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member wants to be a little more factual. He knows that land values for farmers have increased about 120 per cent in the past four years. That is a capital gain for the farmers, so naturally they are going to have more investment. But they are much wealthier because of that. There are many farmers in agricultural endeavours who are making net profits; the hon. member knows that very well.

Mr. Wise: Farm input costs have increased 100 per cent in less than ten years, net farm income has declined 30 per cent in three years, and agricultural imports have tripled since 1968. Without the sale of western grain, total agricultural exports would be nil. What legislation, if any, can we expect to effectively deal with these serious problems?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well that we increased our exports last year by 11 per cent on the world market. The hon. member makes broad, sweeping statements about agricultural products that we are importing. He should be more specific and outline what they are. He knows that the Tariff Board report is in, and that action has been taken on imported products.

If we were to swing in and immediately move to stop all the imported tomatoes coming into Canada, the producers could produce them but we could not process them, the facilities are not there. It would have to be a three year phase-in program. The hon. member knows those programs are in the government's machinery at the present time, and that the horticultural producers of this nation recently made an award to this minister for doing more for them than in living memory of the Canadian Horticultural Society.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

LOSS OF JOBS DUE TO CLOSING OF RENAULT PLANT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT INTERVENTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. We were told yesterday that Renault-Canada is leaving the province of Quebec and that from now on its complex, located in Brampton, Ontario, will serve only as a distribution centre for Canada. An agreement to build Renault models in the United States has been reached between the Régie nationale des usines Renault of France and the American Motors Corporation. Taking into account the glaring laissez-faire and irresponsibility of the Quebec government on this question and taking into account the loss of jobs that this move will mean for Canada, and particularly Quebec, can the minister tell us if his officials or himself have taken action in the matter?

[English]

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice, owing to the delicate nature of the implications of the Quebec government and the Canadian government in the various automotive plants.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if the minister had heard about this move and if he had made plans to prevent it?

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I was aware of the possibility of the move. As I said, owing to the delicate nature of it, I would like to examine all the ramifications before answering fully.

* * *

THE BUDGET

LENGTH OF DEBATE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister of Finance has announced that the budget is going to be presented Monday night, will the Prime Minister, as head of the government, confirm whether it is the intention of the government to have a full length budget debate? If so, will he participate in that debate? Should he participate, would he tell us how he can explain the floating Canadian dollar, and why it should not be known as the "fuddle-buck"?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought the first part of the question was a serious one, but it was obviously intended in jest. I am not quite sure what kind of answer the hon. member wants. On the one hand, they wanted a budget debate. When we announced the budget they said "We don't want a budget because it is going to be an election budget."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: That is what members opposite have been saying.

Mr. Paproski: You are the one who said that.

Mr. Stevens: I never said that.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

Mr. Trudeau: The absent Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and the Leader of the NDP—

An hon. Member: He is out getting his hair cut.

Mr. Trudeau: He may be getting out of shape; I am not quite sure what he is doing. On the other hand, they want us to have an early election. Now they want a guarantee that we are going to take all the time for a full budget debate. If they will make up their minds, I will have the government House leader meet the House leaders of the other parties to see how much business we can complete in the next few days, or weeks—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Keep trying; you will screw it up.

Mr. Trudeau: Obviously, we are ready for an election any time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: We were told repeatedly by the opposition that they wanted to have a budget debate before an election: they challenged us to do it. Our attitude now is that we are going to have a budget debate before an election. We would like to pass other important legislation before an election and we hope we will have the co-operation of the opposition: for instance, the bill to amend the Criminal Code—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

STABILIZATION PAYMENTS TO EASTERN PRODUCERS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that eastern farmers have as high and as urgent a cash requirement as do western farmers just before spring seeding, can the Minister of Agriculture now indicate what payments he or the Farm Products Price Stabilization Board intend to make, and when will they be made to eastern potato growers, since the last press release was of little consolation to them?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well what the stabilization act is that we use for potato growers. The act used for western grain producers is a voluntary program which they join and contribute to if they wish. Their operation is on a calendar year basis. As I said in the House yesterday, the final figures are not in for that; we do not know what the final figures will be. We will not be changing our historic approach toward the stabilization of potatoes. Potatoes are completely different from cereal grain. Potatoes are a perishable product, while cereal grain can be stored for years. I do not think you can make a similar comparison at all.

[Translation]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT TEXT OF CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT ON MARITIME FRONTIERS BE PUBLISHED

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment.

Is the minister prepared to release today the text of the agreement reached recently by the United States and Canada on the question of maritime frontiers?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member could be mistaken. Canada has recently reached an agreement with Japan, but not with the United States; that agreement is to the effect that negotiations will resume within a certain period of time, probably in six or eight months from now.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Would the minister state, even in very broad terms, the provisions of the agreement between Canada and the United States on the matter of the four sectors involved and could he also explain what criteria were followed in the negotiations with the United States?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I would need a lot more time than Your Honour would give me to answer in detail the question of the hon. member. As I have already stated, there has not been any agreement. We have agreed that the special negotiators would take some time off in an attempt to identify points where agreements could be reached and to find a solution. Meanwhile, we will have to conclude an interim arrangement for 1978.

* * *

● (1442)

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGISLATION TO ESTABLISH INFLATION MONITORING AGENCY

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice of which I gave him notice yesterday. It arises from a question I put to the minister a few weeks ago concerning the drafting by one, D. Maurais, of his department of an act to establish an inflation monitoring agency and to provide for the reporting of financial and other information. At that time the minister said he would inquire who the officer was, who authorized the drafting of this legislation and the distribution of the draft bill throughout the country.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the hon. member. He told me yesterday that he wanted to ask this question and I undertook to get the information, but because I have been in cabinet all morning I do not have that information. I will get it immediately and supply it to the hon. member.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CRANBROOK, B.C.—DISPUTE BETWEEN INDIAN BAND AND CPR

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister followed developments in the unequal dispute between the St. Mary's Indian band of Cranbrook, B.C., and the CPR in which the band has threatened to charge the railway with trespass? Can the minister report any progress on this problem of seven years' standing, which deals with erosion into the St. Mary's River from the railway line?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not followed the developments recently. But I would be pleased to review the matter and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Johnston: Considering the difficulty experienced in negotiating disputes involving Indian bands in south central British Columbia, the delicacy of questions of ownership, the possibility of differences between individual rights and band rights regarding the—we hope—early settlement of the cut-off lands question, and that the nearest Indian Affairs office is as far away as Vancouver, is the minister in a position to announce the reopening of the Indian Affairs office at Vernon, B.C.?

Mr. Faulkner: No, I am not, Mr. Speaker.

* * *

INDUSTRY

HALIFAX, N.S.—NEGOTIATIONS ON SALE OF SHIPYARDS

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As the minister knows, there has been a drop in employment in the Halifax shipyards from roughly 1,300 or 1,400 down to 100, and the province has been trying to negotiate the sale of the shipyards by Hawker Siddeley to Upper Canada Shipping Limited. I think the minister has been engaged in the negotiations. Can he report to the House any progress as far as the negotiations are concerned? Many people in that area are suffering as a result of the high rate of unemployment.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is quite correct; Hawker Siddeley does want to sell the Halifax shipbuilding yards. We are attempting to facilitate new ownership of the yards, but as yet we have not put together a package that is satisfactory to any prospective buyer. I would hate to speculate any more on the matter for fear of upsetting the delicate balance of negotiations at this time.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce think the lay-offs at the Halifax shipyards are due to workers' inappreciativeness for the retention of their jobs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Palliser.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN STABILIZATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In his statement yesterday relative to grain stabilization payments, why did the minister, in effect, return to the farmers only what had been paid into the funds to date by those very same farmers? Why did the government not make a contribution of its own to match what the farmers had contributed? Could it be that the Minister of Finance wanted to postpone this so that his deficit would not look so bad at the present time?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member reads the questions and answers of yesterday, he will find the answer to his question. We still have to wait for cost of production figures from Statistics Canada, and they will not be ready until July.

* * *

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON ELDORADO REFINERY—REPRESENTATIONS FROM INDEPENDENT GROUPS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Environment). In the period of time between when the minister receives the final report of the environmental impact panel which is making a recommendation regarding the Eldorado refinery at Port Granby, and the time that report is considered by the cabinet, will there be an opportunity for independent groups and persons to make representations to the government and to the ministers concerned?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Environment)): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how many groups I will be able to see, but I did tell a group from Port Hope that I would be very happy to see its members before I make a decision on the report submitted to me.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister appreciates that a number of people will want to make representations based on the final report before the cabinet, and especially the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, make certain decisions which may flow out of that report. Will people have an opportunity to make representations between the time the report is released to the public and the time the cabinet finally makes its decision? Will there be an opportunity for interested groups or individuals to make representations to the cabinet or to the ministers concerned?

Mr. Marchand: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I expect to be as flexible as possible. However, wide-ranging public hearings were held by the panel and I hope not to carry on the process for too long.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am assuming that the minister has not yet received the final report. I wonder if he has any idea when it will be coming, whether he will be releasing it or whether the panel will be releasing it.

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, I expect to receive the report about the middle of April, and I will be releasing it.

* * *

PUBLIC WORKS

USE OF METRIC SYSTEM FOR PROJECTS

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. The minister has defined a public works policy whereby all plans for capital projects have to use the metric system. Do even those plans drawn to the standard measure have to undergo metrication before contracts for capital projects are put out to tender?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker, but I will be happy to verify that for the hon. member.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

KENTVILLE, N.S.—REQUEST THAT CONSTRUCTION OF RESEARCH STATION BE SPEEDED UP

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of evidence given by the minister's officials yesterday in the Standing Committee on Agriculture that the long outstanding capital project in the Annapolis Valley, the research station at Kentville, Nova Scotia, is now ten months behind due to metrication of plans already drawn, could the minister exercise his good offices and the weight of his office with the Minister of Public Works and finally announce this project, so that the tenders which have been delayed three times may be dealt with in the early spring rather than some time in June?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can rest assured that I will do everything I can to help him—out!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ACHIEVE PROFITABILITY

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Postmaster General. The minister is certainly aware of the deteriorating service provided by his department. Today is a day for statistics and for looking back ten years. I presume the minister is aware that ten years ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There have been several questions on this theme which, by their very nature, are argumentative. If the hon. member has a question for the Postmaster General, would he put it forthwith.

Mr. Darling: I would like to ask if something is going to be done to reverse the present trend in the Post Office. Ten years ago there was a $67 million deficit; now there is a $650 million deficit ahead of us. Ten years ago we paid 5 cents for a stamp for first-class mail, and now we pay 14 cents: that is nearly a 300 per cent increase.

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, referring only to the question of postal rates, I must say that even with a 14 cents stamp our rate remains the lowest in the world. So I do not believe that there has been so much inflation or, if you like, that the increase was scandalous. I think it is a reasonable rate in the circumstances.

* * *

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

HIGH COST OF FOOD IN THE NORTH—REQUEST FOR FURTHER STUDY

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Some two years ago the then chairperson of the Food Prices Review Board had a special study conducted with respect to food prices above the sixtieth parallel in the two northern territories. That report recommended a further study in order to see that food prices be reduced.

In view of statistics released yesterday, indicating that food prices in Whitehorse and in Yellowknife are some 25 per cent above the national average, can the minister now say when that study will be resumed and, if not, has he any plans at all for reducing food prices in the two northern territories?

• (1452)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I still have as great an interest in the question of food prices in the north as I did when I was minister in that department. Just two weeks ago I sent two officials from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to the north to discuss this very matter. I am afraid I do not have exact information on when this particular study will be proceeded with, but I will inquire into that and get back to the hon. member.

Mr. Nielsen: Is the government taking any action whatsoever to bring down food prices in the north—which I emphasize are some 25 per cent above the national average—in Whitehorse and Yellowknife, to say nothing of the more remote communities along the coastal areas of the Northwest Territories?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I would agree with the hon. member that those statistics are alarming. I will bring myself up to date on the work that is being done in this respect.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS REGARDING CONTROVERSIAL CLAUSE IN BILL C-28

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Due to the great number of representations made to members of parliament, in particular in the Ottawa area, concerning Bill C-28—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Be quiet. More especially with regard to sections dealing with the right of the employer to assign not only duties through position but duties to employees, is the President of the Treasury Board in a position today to tell us if he intends to amend this section or to withdraw it altogether?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, it was not the intention of the government to permit the employer to make such assignment and/or change of duties of employees, as has been the interpretation of the wording of that clause. We believe that the concerns are unwarranted. However, for absolute certainty, I assure the House that when we proceed with the bill before parliament, we will make the necessary amendment or, if necessary, delete that clause.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Oral Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF WINNIPEG SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would call attention to the presence in the gallery of 55 members of the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra, led by their musical director and conductor, Maestro Piero Gamba, and their president, Mr. Julian Benson.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DUTIES OF OMBUDSMAN VIS-À-VIS RCMP

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question. Today I received a news release from the office of the Minister of Justice in which the following statement is made:

> The ombudsman will also be able to hear complaints from members of the public about specific actions of the RCMP. The need for a mechanism allowing the public to have complaints against the national police force reviewed by an independent body—

My question is twofold. First, will the minister move immediately on this legislation, and has he ascertained the cost with reference to the priority? We already have a deficit. Second, does he consider—I know the minister is not running again, and I make nothing of that, but that means he will not be Minister of Justice—that it is necessary for the ombudsman to check the RCMP?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, first, I think it is essential that we have an ombudsman within the federal jurisdiction. As to whether we will proceed with the bill, the Prime Minister endeavoured a short while ago to indicate to the opposition bills, such as the language of trials bill and others, for which we hope to get the co-operation of the official opposition with regard to passage.

Mr. Trudeau: Two days' debate?

Mr. Basford: With regard to the other part of the hon. member's question, Judge Marin in his report on the RCMP made two recommendations: first, that there be an independent process for the examination of citizens' complaints regarding the force and, second, that there be a different system dealing with complaints and disciplinary matters by members of the force. The bill that was introduced dealing with the ombudsman acts on the first of the recommendations, and the Solicitor General is proceeding with the preparation and introduction of a bill covering the second of those recommendations.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the fact that I have always had confidence in members of parliament when it comes to the routine of their daily work with reference tc taking care of complaints from their constituents, and even people living elsewhere, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice whether he has ascertained the cost of setting up a new organization within the government, thus adding to the deficit? What is the cost of this new empire which the minister wants to build before he leaves the distinguished position he now holds?

Mr. Basford: The report upon which the bill is based outlined the projected cost. I think the cost will be considerably lower than that projected in the report.

Mr. Woolliams: How much?

Mr. Basford: The estimate of the cost for the first fiscal year, if the bill is passed this session, is $700,000 for the start-up, appointment and establishment of the capacity to deal with some 200 complaints per month. It is, of course, impossible to determine with any certitude what the business of the ombudsman will be. It is also very dependent upon the style of the ombudsman one appoints. The Quebec ombudsman deals with 7,000 complaints a year, with a staff of some 30 people. The Ontario ombudsman deals with 6,000 complaints a year, with a staff of about 140 people. We hope to appoint the Quebec-style ombudsman as a more effective and efficient way of dealing with the matter.

* * *

POST OFFICE

EFFECT OF SLOW MAIL DELIVERY ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. On March 20 one of the stores in Vancouver mailed an advertising brochure to the poeple of Surrey, which was delivered on March 28, for a sale to be held on March 27. Can the Postmaster General collaborate with the Minister of State for Small Business to see if they can find ways to help small businesses stay in business in the face of the kind of perverse help they are getting from the Post Office?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I believe we are making every necessary effort to have the most efficient mail service possible. Accidents or errors may happen, and I think that in this case it was an error and I am very sorry it happened.

[English]

POSTAL WALKS FOR NEW SUBURBAN AREAS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Postmaster General a question? Since several hundred thousand Canadians cannot have their mail delivered, will the minister now make the decision to spend some or all of the last postal rate increase on installing postal walks in cities in Canada with new suburban areas? Over 2,000 postal walks are needed. Would he agree now to establish these new mail deliveries for Canadians across the country?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, if I did what the hon. member is asking for, it would mean spending millions of dollars. Considering the fact that the opposition is always telling us we are spending too much money, the increase in the postal rate was imposed so as to decrease to $525 million the deficit which was projected to be $717 million and I think it was a wise move. If we expanded door to door delivery, it could cost many hundred million dollars, because all across Canada people want it at the moment. But at the present time we must be reasonable and we must try to administer the Post Office like good businessmen.

* * *

THE BUDGET

LENGTH OF DEBATE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. There was an exchange between the Prime Minister and the hon. member for Edmonton West with respect to the budget debate and I will be asking the government House leader when we might be commencing the debate. But no answer was given by the Prime Minister on whether the budget debate will be shortened or there will be a full debate. I ask the Prime Minister, as leader of the government, what is the intention of the government with respect to the length of the debate? Are we to have the full six days' budget debate, or is the government's intention otherwise?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We could go either way. If the opposition has a preference, I would appreciate hearing from them what it is.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Quite frankly, my preference is to go to the country, beat this dreadful government and get it over with.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

● (1502)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I do not believe that has anything to do with the length of the budget debate; at least, I did not think it would. But if it does, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not we will have a full debate? It is a simple question and I would like as direct an answer as I gave him.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are attempting to be extremely accommodating in this matter. At the request of the opposition, we made sure we would have a budget before dissolution. We have announced that budget. They seem to grumble that there is going to be a pre-election budget. I am not quite sure what they have in mind. Now I am saying, Mr. Speaker, if they want quick dissolution after we read the budget speech, we can go that way—if that is what they would like. If they are completely indifferent, my suggestion to them is, why don't they wait and see?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the act of accommodation of the Prime Minister, but still I would like an answer to my question. What is the intention of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if it is a very serious debate, and if the opposition comes forth with very constructive proposals, we will want to hear them through to the bitter end. If they are making politics out of this, we might just dissolve before.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

Third report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in both official languages—Mr. Collenette.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

Third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments—Mr. Baldwin.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the government House leader has to leave the House, in the event he does, and since the budget date has been announced today, I wonder if I could ask a question with respect to that in the course of the usual Thursday question on House business.

I think the House would be interested in knowing on what day after April 10 the budget debate will be commencing. Once the budget debate has commenced, is it the intention of the government to carry it through on six consecutive days to the normal end? Or is it the intention of the government to break up the budget debate and deal with other legislation in the meantime? If the government House leader can be any more forthcoming than the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I know the country would be grateful. That is one question I should like to put to him.

My second concern is that there is a motion for concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs dealing with that committee's report on pornography. I understand it may well be the intention of the government House leader to call that business. If it is his intention to call it, I want to assure him that we are prepared to have that motion concurred in without debate.

The third thing I should like to deal with is that it is important, and obviously it is becoming much more important from the point of view of the answers of the Prime Minister today, for him to give us an indication of the government's priorities with respect to legislation as we go into the next week. I would appreciate it very much if the government House leader could be as straightforward as possible with respect to those questions.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it is my present intention in calling the budget debate on Wednesday to provide hon. members with an opportunity to savour the flavour of the budget address. It is my intention to call the budget debate and continue it in the regular sequence, in accordance with the Standing Orders and all constitutional opportunities which may present themselves. Nothing will be done that is not fully regular.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: At the present time I have no intention of interrupting the budget debate with other legislation. It may be that will happen, but it is not my intention.

In addition to the budget debate, today I will call the amendments to the Anti-Inflation Act, then the Farm Credit Act, followed by the bill in the name of the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), petroleum administration act amendments and then Bill C-8, the labour code. I want to talk to my colleagues in the other parties on whether we might agree to pass, within a very short time, the act to amend the Criminal Code with respect to the language of trials. I should like to get that passed quickly, if we can get consent from hon. members to deal with it quickly.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my friend's answer speaks volumes to all of us. He mentioned Bill C-18. I understand there may be anxiety on the part of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) to deal rather quickly with the Farm Credit Act. That is a matter he and I may wish to discuss. I would be happy to discuss it on the basis that I believe debate on that will be quite short.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with respect to this point of order, may I say first of all that someone should be commended for the new clocks in the chamber today. The times may be out of joint in Canada, but it is good to have the clocks in this place synchronized.

May I remind the government House leader that on at least two occasions, once when Mr. King was prime minister and once when Mr. St. Laurent was in that position—both of them Liberals—the House was informed a few days ahead of dissolution as to the actual date of the election so that we could plan the work of the last week or ten days with some sort of sense. I wonder if the government House leader would discuss with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the possibility of following that precedent, and straightforwardly telling us what the election date is so that we can decide what should be dealt with in the intervening time.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of members of this side, as well as the other side, who would be interested in knowing that date. As always, I will attempt to co-operate with hon. members opposite. It would be very important information to them, from which they would likely be ready to clear the order paper in a very short time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the government House leader be calling an early meeting of House leaders so that we can discuss the plans for the remainder of this session?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, a very serious one, of interest not only to members of parliament but indeed to taxpayers. We have repeatedly suggested that the election date should be provided for in the constitution, that it be established once and for all and known to every Canadian. I feel that such an amendment would provide a very clear-cut rule for holding general elections, avoiding a lot of dealings and so many public opinion pools of no use whatsoever.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the point made by the leaders of other parties in this House, that we be apprised as soon as possible of the date of the coming election. Mr. Speaker, I believe this would facilitate our proceedings, we could go ahead in an objective way with the process of dealing with government bills that have a high priority. Simultaneously, as far as the budget is concerned, after the answer given today by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the budget hopefully will be coming Monday next, this would allow members to seriously address the question of what should be discussed about the forthcoming budget, in the interest of Canadians we are trying our best to serve here. In this way we could work together at giving Canada the best possible administration, the most efficient one, so that the Canadian tax dollar be put to the best use, for the benefit of all groups within our society.

● (1512)

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the government House leader. I noticed when he listed the order of business that he mentioned the lifting of the anti-inflation legislation, then the farm credit legislation, the petroleum administration measure, and then Bill C-8. I would like to put it to the government House leader that C-8 is an extremely important bill for all those workers covered under the federal labour code, and in the committee when we studied the bill we expedited it because both labour and the members of the committee felt that it was extremely important to workers under federal jurisdiction to have the right to refuse work which is dangerous to their health and safety. It was in that spirit that our party participated in expediting the bill.

I recognize the fact that the minister may be receiving some flak from some members of the cabinet with respect to that bill because of the new ground it is breaking, but I would plead and ask the government House leader to please reconsider the order and put Bill C-8 in a higher position than it is presently resting.

I would hate to have all that work that we have done, and the anticipation of the workers under federal jurisdiction, dashed by an election which would wipe out that legislation. So, I ask the government House leader if he would give us some assurance that he will reconsider the order and put C-8 in a higher position?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that following the Anti-Inflation Act amendments I would call the farm credit bill, and following that I am quite prepared to consider whether I could call C-8 prior to Bill C-19.

Mr. Baldwin: On a related point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the way the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his superior attitude has treated the question of a budget is picayune and childish. The question I would like to ask the hon. gentleman is: will this House have the right of the normal procedures of a budget debate to place the normal amendments, and has the government the intestinal fortitude to allow those amendments to be brought to a vote in this House?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have indicated that it is my intention to call the budget debate and to carry it forward in the normal way. I have already made it clear that there are constitutional possibilities that may intervene, and I have no control over those. I think the Prime Minister has indicated his attitude on that point.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, during the exchange between the government House leader and the Conservative House leader there was an indication that, in the event the report on pornography from the legal and justice affairs committee was called, there would be some commitment that it would go through without debate. I want to make it clear that that is not the position of our party. We would not wish to see that particular report go through this House without further debate in the House.

Order Paper Questions

COST OF REGULATION ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE ANALYSES OF DEPARTMENTAL REGULATIONS

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-433, respecting the cost to the public of government regulation.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous amount of regulation and red tape associated with modern government whenever a new regulation is introduced, and inevitably costs rise. Under the policies of the government the only costs that are disclosed as such are the costs to the taxpayer. The purpose of this bill would be to require federal departments and agencies to estimate, to the best of their ability, the costs of regulation and administration and to give this information to the industries affected by the regulations, and to the consumers of the products and services involved.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CUSTOMS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-44, respecting Customs.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Translation]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today; 1,302, 1,398, 1,400 and 1,416.

[Text]

FISH—IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Question No. 1,302—Mr. Marshall:

1. Of the $183,000,000 worth of fish imported in 1976, as reported in the 1976/77 Annual Report of the Fisheries Prices Support Board, what is the breakdown with regard to the (a) amount of each species of fish imported (b) dollar amounts for each species of fish imported?

2. What is the same breakdown with regard to fish exports?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment):

Order Paper Questions

Canadian Imports and Exports by Species, 1976

1. Imports

Name of Species	Amount Imported (Metric Tons)	$ Amount ('000)
Seafish
Cod	1,790	3,147
Haddock and Hake	2,539	3,161
Halibut	965	3,137
Herring	565	779
Sardine	1,277	2,668
Salmon	3,495	10,305
Tuna	12,903	23,712
Anchovy	233	721
Seafish, not specified	28,202	29,934
Freshwater Fish
Trout	701	1,782
Freshwater Fish, not specified	1,114	1,876
Shellfish
Clams	2,387	2,947
Crab	836	3,462
Lobster	2,524	23,401
Shrimps	11,002	60,585
Oyster	17,419	4,853
Shellfish, not specified	2,867	6,628
Other Species
Fish and Marine Animal Oil	299	233
Total	91,118	183,331

2. Exports

Name of Species	Amount Imported (Metric Tons)	$ Amount ('000)
Seafish
Cod	45,441	73,612
Haddock and Hake	8,221	11,904
Pollock[1]	4,637	5,455
Halibut	1,709	5,522
Catfish	865	1,506
Ocean Perch	21,187	36,503
Flatfish	22,277	44,906
Turbot	3,000	4,678
Herring	125,167	114,108
Mackerel	2,011	1,119
Sardine	4,135	6,979
Salmon	21,197	87,309
Smelt	1,516	1,205
Swordfish	3	5
Alewife	2,164	771
Seafish, not specified	49,248	42,789
Freshwater Fish
Bass	131	155
Perch	1,727	6,620
Pickerel	2,311	7,947
Pike	1,733	2,495
Sauger	982	3,388
Smelt	4,530	3,359
Sturgeon	31	117
Trout	289	551
Tullibee	633	1,281
Whitefish	4,878	7,775
Mullet	518	417
Freshwater Fish, not specified	2,587	2,728
Shellfish
Clams	743	1,182
Crab	1,910	11,684
Lobster	8,857	52,762
Scallop	9,259	43,436
Shrimps	1,759	5,700
Shellfish, not specified	2,375	2,677
Other Species
Seals[2]	(156)	4,114
Whales	5	8
Fish and Marine Animal Oil	3,407	1,041
Seaweeds	4,549	2,708
Total	365,992	600,516

[1]Includes some cusk.
[2]Quantity reported in number of skins.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent).]

EXPENDITURES PER CAPITA BY FEDERAL AND PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENTS

Question No. 1,398—Mr. Schumacher:

What amount did the (a) federal (b) provincial governments spend in total, per capita, in (i) 1937 (ii) 1947 (iii) 1957 (iv) 1967 (v) 1977 in current dollars?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports: The following table shows the amount spent per capita by the federal and provincial governments in the years asked for.

Year	Federal	Provincial
1937	$ 41.00	$ 33.00
1947	169.00	52.00
1957	313.00	111.00
1967	517.00	394.00
1977	1,824.00	1,581.00

VETERANS' HOSPITALS

Question No. 1,400—Mr. Schumacher:

1. How many veterans' hospitals have been turned over by the government to provincial government responsibility and, in each case, where was the hospital located and on what date was responsibility transferred?

2. How many other veterans' hospitals will be turned over to provincial authority and, in each case, where is it located and what is the proposed date of transfer?

3. (a) In each of the hospitals already transferred to provincial jurisdiction, how many employees had to resign their federal positions and re-apply to the province (b) how much severance pay was given in each case by the government?

4. In each of the hospitals still to be transferred from federal to provincial authority, how many employees will be expected to resign their federal position?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1. Seven: Sunnybrook Hospital, Toronto, Ontario, (transferred to the University of Toronto) October 1, 1966; Ste. Foy Hospital, Quebec, Que. September 1, 1968; Lancaster Hospital, Saint John, N.B. November 15, 1972; Shaughnessy Hospital, Vancouver, B.C. July 29, 1974; Veterans Hospital, Victoria, B.C. August 26, 1974; Westminster Hospital, London, Ont. October 3, 1977; Queen Mary Veterans Hospital, Montreal, Que. February 20, 1978.

2. It is the policy of the government to transfer all veterans hospitals. Date of transfer is a matter of negotiation with provincial authorities. With the exception of Camp Hill Hospital, Halifax, which it is proposed to transfer this summer, no dates have been negotiated. Location of hospitals not transferred: Halifax, Ste. Anne de Bellevue, Senneville, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton and Calgary.

3. (a) No employees have had to resign their federal positions and reapply to provincial jurisdiction. (b) The amount of severance pay given in each case is determined under the terms of collective agreements negotiated under the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act which are binding on both the Public Service as the employer and the employees.

4. None.

PENSIONS PAID BY CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 1,416—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

Has the Minister of Finance, or the Inspector-General of Banks acting for the Minister, since May 2, 1977, had any discussions with the chartered banks in which the point has been made that the pensions paid by the banks to their retired employees ought to be escalated annually by an amount at least equal to the rise in the cost of living and, if so, can the Minister say whether the chartered banks are implementing this practice with respect to their retired employees and, if not, have they made any improvement in this regard since the last time there was a report thereon, as indicated on page 5180 of Hansard for May 2, 1977?

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): No. It is not government policy to impose conditions on private pension plans beyond those contained in the Pension Benefits Standards Act. I am, however, advised that the chartered banks are continuing to pursue the previously reported practice of making supplementary payments to their older pensioners with increases in the cost of living being the primary factor in the determination of the amount of the supplement.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question number 933 could be made an order or return, this return would be tabled immediately.

Point of Order—Mr. Rynard

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary having been answered, is the House agreed that question No. 833 be made an order for return?

Mr. Paproski: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

[Text]

CANADA COUNCIL GRANTS "EXPLORATION PROGRAM"

Question No. 933—Mr. Epp:

As of November 21, 1977, what were the purposes and descriptions of each of the eighty-five Canada Council grants funded under the "Exploration Program" and (a) how long will each project last (b) what is the total number of persons employed through each project?

Return tabled.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. RYNARD—DELAYS IN ANSWERING STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to your attention one of the failings of this House, namely, the failure to deal with the starred questions. It was almost four years ago, the length of this parliament, when I first brought this to your attention. A starred question had been on the order paper for a period of just about one month.

I will put it in order of sequence. On February 27, 1975, I rose in the House of Commons to inquire about a question which was of importance to me. At that particular time a starred question of mine had been on the order paper for approximately four weeks and had not been answered. I naturally assumed that that question would be answered within a week, as was the custom when I first came to the House of Commons. As custom dictated the law of proceedings in the House, I accepted this to be so.

When I rose on this point of order, Mr. Speaker, you stated that I had raised a very interesting point but you could not find any authority which would entitle a member to an answer to a starred question within a certain period of time. What it did entitle me to, of course, was an oral answer in the House of Commons when that answer was given. As I have stated, this was not my interpretation of the starred question. Indeed, I felt it was accepted fact that starred questions were to be answered within a week, or the minister contacted that individual who had asked the question.

● (1522)

In the Mother of Parliaments, a member who desires an oral answer to his question must distinguish it with an asterisk, and notice of any such question must appear on the order paper two days before that on which an answer is desired, except that questions received before 2:30 p.m. on Mondays and Tuesdays may be put down for oral answer on the following Monday and Thursday respectively.

As a matter of historical interest, Mr. Speaker, the starred question came into being in 1910 when Sir Wilfrid Laurier was Prime Minister of Canada. At that time he stated that many questions are put on the floor of the House that have no interest except to the individual putting the questions, but if a member desired to have an oral answer he had only to put an asterisk to his question and it would come before the House at once. In 1910 the rules of the House provided only for written questions, but members persisted in asking oral questions and, by custom, this became a rule. The starred question was introduced in an attempt to reduce the emphasis on oral questions. Oral questions were not recognized by the rules of this House, as far as I can find out, until 1964.

In 1955 the Special Committee on Procedure sought to establish more firmly the existence of the starred question, which was then given a special place on the order paper on one day of the week. No member was allowed to have more than three starred questions on the order paper at any one time, and this is still the accepted practice. This, of course, was the situation when I first entered the House of Commons.

The very thing that has happened today is that the order paper has become so full of questions that the backlog goes far beyond the original interest of those starred questions being answered within a few days. It appears to me to be a very foolish thing, and a waste of time and printing, when one finds at the end of a parliament that hundreds of these questions remain unanswered long months after they had been placed on the order paper.

As a matter of fact, John B. Stewart, in his work on procedure in the House of Commons, offers an unique explanation for the existence of starred questions, by stating that usually the purpose—and this is very fundamental to our democracy—is to ensure that the House and the press will not remain oblivious to any horrendous information elicited about extravagance, patronage, or mismanagement by government itself. This strikes at the roots of democracy, and it is the right of the people to know.

I want to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your advice in the House and for your request, on more than one occasion, that the Special Committee on Procedure meet to deal with this matter.

I am further upset that this infringes on the rights and privileges of a new member particularly, who might have difficulty in the wording of his oral question. Further, I see no reason why the committee should repeatedly ignore the request of the Speaker who, all of us feel, has the toughest job in this House. Not only must he have the ability to think and the wisdom to guide, but his own conscience is on trial. As well, of course, as ignoring my own personal request as a member of this House on several occasions, and the refusal of the head of that committee to meet, I do not believe that this would be the wish of this government or of any member of the opposition.

[Mr. Rynard.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I just add a few words in support of my colleague with regard to starred questions. Governments in the past have been absolutely contemptuous of members with respect to the nature of starred questions which, by tradition, practice, and ordinary decent consideration, have been earmarked for early attention by the House and could not be sloughed off as a matter to be made an order for return. The fact that starred questions exist today does not mean a thing.

I have intervened not only to support my colleague and others who want to use starred questions, but in order to support you, Mr. Speaker, in your stand, and to lay the blame where it belongs.

I am vice-chairman of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. I want to put on record that the committee has not met once during this past session except for the formal organizational meeting. Not only in this session but in the long prior session, the government House leader has refused consistently to refer one item of House rules to that committee. This matter should be taken into account by the committee itself. The government House leader has been contemptuous of this House where there was an agreement on both sides that certain modifications should take place. The House has been run as his personal fiefdom when he is here and, when he is not, it is totally neglected.

I do not know how we are going to cut the Gordian knot. Shall we have to decide that the committee will take up matters without reference from the House and bring in their return? Something has to be done, Mr. Speaker. For the three terms that I have been vice-president of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization, the present government House leader, not only in this parliament but in a previous parliament, has consistently refused to refer any particular point to the committee, with the result that nothing is done. We have this continuing abuse, and we have anomalies in practice. The duties of Mr. Speaker are made more difficult, and the functions of members are made equally difficult.

I insist again that the blame lies entirely with the government House leader who has refused to refer these matters to the committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think we must still put the facts in their proper perspective. What the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) says is not quite accurate. As I remember very well, since I was myself a member of the Committee on Procedure and Organization, two years ago, at least three very detailed reports on parliamentary reform were prepared and discussed by this committee. The committee even sat during the summer recess. We came here to Ottawa, and what stopped the House from adopting those reports which recommended reforms and important changes was that the parties had undertaken to submit those reports to their respective caucuses. The Progressive Conservative party never did accept to ratify those important changes, which were liberal to say the least and which would have greatly helped modernize the House and make it more efficient. This was therefore the true reason. It was not obstruction on the part of the government House leader, but the fact that the Progressive Conservative members of parliament did not come to an agreement about the changes which had been discussed and which had obtained the approval of the members of the committee. This is the real reason.

As for the suggestion of the member who spoke before the hon. member for Edmonton West concerning starred questions, I think that it is very interesting and should be examined in due time by the Committee on Procedure and Organization, but I think we should not examine only this matter but consider also a global reform. We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that during the past year and a half, or rather the past year, the main reform in this institution has been the televising of our debates. God knows that hon. members have co-operated under your able leadership to enable this reform to be made as smoothly and as efficiently as possible. Now that our debates are televised, I am convinced that an in-depth reform of parliamentary procedure will follow and that very shortly, probably in the early days of the thirty-first parliament, the Committee on Procedure and Organization will be able to study many changes to parliamentary procedures and that this will quite probably include the starred questions mentioned by the hon. member.

For our part, I want to assure the House that we are open to all changes which aim at making this parliament more modern, more efficient and more respectful of the rights of members of parliament and the population as a whole.

● (1532)

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this is an unusual day to be discussing the reform of parliament after the exhibition which occurred this afternoon during the question period. I have never seen anything to equal it since 1957 just prior to the dissolution of parliament that year, which resulted in the election taking place in June.

Mention is made of television in parliament. One of the effects of TV in parliament, which has not been beneficial, is the fact that across the country people are deeply disturbed about the noisy nature of this institution and of the degree to which those ordinary principles under which man meets man, even in disagreement, are so often disregarded.

Today brings to mind that prior to an election things do happen. I recall the last day of the 1957 parliament when, as far as I was concerned as opposition leader, the possibility of becoming Prime Minister was as remote as Peking in China. It was pointed out that there had been a Gallup poll which showed that all the Conservative party would be able to poll would be 34 per cent. It was then I enunciated a principle which I have followed through the years concerning polls, and that is that the only animal which knows how to give appropriate treatment to poles are dogs.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I listened to the hon. gentleman who just preceded me. I do not want to be unjust to him, but I have watched him as questions are asked or motions are made under rule 43, and he has developed a propensity and a capacity to say no without resort to any artifical instruments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Here we are facing the end of this session of parliament. There are 1,408 questions, of which only a few have been answered since April. There have been starred questions asked on the part of the hon. gentleman who has brought up this point of order, as far back as November. I had one here a moment ago; it was concerning prices. It was a starred question, and there is no answer to it. This is the kind of thing which disembowels this institution. It seems to me now that we are in a position which did not happen under previous governments. It did not happen under Mr. King, it did not happen under Mr. St. Laurent, and it did not happen under my leadership. We are in a position where questions have simply become an instrument for the concealment and hiding of information. Hide and conceal, and never reveal!

This is a very serious matter. This matter not only covers starred questions, but questions in general. I am beginning to wonder how parliament can continue unless there are tremendous changes made. Untrue information is given too often, and yet we are supposed to accept the answers as being the truth. I could give several examples of that. Yesterday during the course of the oral questions the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) pointed out what the western farmer would receive. It looked like a $60 million gift. Gift, nothing! This amount was contributed in considerable measure by the farmers themselves over a period of two years. Those farmers who belong to the stabilization organization have each contributed approximately $1,000, and the farmers are simply getting back what they paid in. It is no gift. There should be no concealment, or endeavour to pretend that it is otherwise.

There are other examples I can give which have come to mind, but I am not going to do so. I am simply saying that unless there are reforms in this connection, parliament will become a hollow institution. It does not have to become that. In the Mother of Parliaments in the United Kingdom, how long would they stand for the fact that there are questions on the order paper going back to October 18, 1977, unanswered, unconsidered, concealed? There are 1,400 of them here.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is wrong. This is unjustifiable. Mr. Speaker, this is a travesty on the institution which you and I and hon. members love.

An hon. Member: It is contempt.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to designate it by such an inferior expression as contempt. It is the disregard of the rights of an institution that belongs to the people of Canada. That is what it is. We had a clear example today when the Prime Minister finally allowed the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to speak. He said, "You", and then the minister was able to speak. If parliament comes under the control of the Prime Minister, and he has no regard for it, then this institution simply becomes a form of debating society. I only hope, believing as I do in the continuance of Speakers from parliament to parliament, that even with a change of government, the House will decide to continue you, sir, in office—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: So that you, with your high ideals of what parliament should be, of what this institution should do, will take a lead, bringing about changes which everybody admits should be made.

The point raised by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) is one which does honour to him. All I can say is that I hope his views will receive attention. Why hide information?

The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt)—I see his name all through the record. He has asked many questions. When he asks questions, the government wonders what he has in mind, fearing the worst or knowing the worst. You can see the record prolific with questions unanswered. This cannot maintain the dignity of this institution. To follow a system whereby a government can simply say "Shut up," will not allow this institution to carry out its responsibilities.

That is the reason why I make the suggestion to you, about a permanent speakership, sir, because I believe in the continuance of speakers in your position, thereby providing them with independence, which too often has been challenged over the years. Unless such a system is adopted, I fear for the future of parliament.

● (1542)

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND RANGE OF PERSONS TO WHOM ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES APPLY

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-18, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act and guidelines, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is some five years since I first spoke in this House with regard to the subject of wage and price controls. I recall the circumstances in 1972 at the time of the budget being presented by the former member for Ottawa-Carleton. Inflation was starting to show its head, following what I consider to be the most disastrous budget that hon. gentleman ever presented in so far as the country was concerned. We are still reaping the whirlwind of it, as well as the slack money policy which accompanied that budget of 1972. It was an election year budget that was full of goodies.

It is conceivable that in its desperation for what is going to be an electoral campaign in a short time, this government, bankrupt of policy and bankrupt of effective action, will come down with a budget that is going to insert into the Canadian economy long-range nefarious effects, as was done in 1972.

At that time I spoke about the need of an effective wage and price control policy. This was continued as the policy of our party. My colleague from Don Valley spoke at length on that occasion with regard to the proposal, and others of my colleagues supported it.

This was not something that was suddenly dreamed up on the eve of the election in 1974. It had been a considered policy. It had been strongly advocated by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), who was then Leader of the Opposition. It was a good program as enunciated by him.

One of the problems in 1974 was that in a spirit of dishonesty, in light of subsequent events, a government spokesman decried and belaboured the wage policy. The New Democratic Party followed suit. In Ontario, and that is where it happened, they convinced the voters that they should have nothing to do with an incomes policy. The Leader of the NDP came along immediately after he had done what he thought was effective on the Conservative party policy, and came down with a prices review board, just prices. Of course, his program was soon picked apart. His followers quite rightly read into the program that it was another form of incomes policy. It was to control prices and profits, but somehow or other not wages. There is no way to control prices and profits without controlling wages and rents.

I have the record here if anyone wants to see the onslaught of inflation over the years. In 1971 the government changed the base to 100 from what it had previously been since 1963. Taking the 1971 base of 100, when we go back to 1966, it only took 83 cents to produce what in 1971 cost $1.

In 1975 there apparently was a series of events which led to the resignation of the minister of finance and, on the eve of the re-opening of parliament, the institution of a wage and price controls program that is now to terminate on April 14. The legislation today deals with that.

Let us see what the record has been since 1971. In 1971 it was 100. In 1972 it was 104.8. In 1973, after that infamous budget of 1972, it went to 112.7. In 1974 the people were still not conscious of inflation. They had not suffered enough. It went to 125, in other words 12.3 points on all items.

In 1975, it went to 138.5, another 13½ points. That is when the government finally acted. We had had double digit inflation for three years. It was only then that the government reversed its stand. In a little over a year the policy of controls—"zap and you are frozen", as the Prime Minister (Mr.

Trudeau) was so wont to say in Ontario—became a matter of fact. He who said that the people of Canada should eschew any program of wage and price controls was the man to put it in.

A little bird in the person of a young, well-established lawyer in Ottawa circles spoke to me the other day. He gave me the scenario of what happened in September and October of 1975. The then minister of finance, Mr. Turner, finally came to his senses with regard to wage and price controls. He told the Prime Minister that there would have to be a wage and price controls program and that he, as minister of finance, was making that recommendation as of then. He was told that in no way would there be such a program. Therefore he said he could not continue as minister of finance, and wanted a transfer.

Mr. Béchard: Who told you that?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A man who knows a little more than you about it.

Mr. Béchard: Speculating.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not speculating. Members opposite should know the scenario of what brought on wage and price controls and John Turner's resignation. The story is told that he could no longer continue as minister of finance and that he wanted to go back to Justice or some other ministry that was in keeping with his talents. Very abruptly, Mr. Turner was told that he was in the ministry as minister of finance only, and could serve in no other capacity. That was the end of the road. That is a very instructive way of finding out why there was such a sudden change in policy.

● (1552)

Prior to October, 1975, the ministers sitting with the Prime Minister today who were ministers then, swore up and down that, no, a thousand times no, there would be no controls. Then after October 14 they were all following the former member for Rosedale, who has been appointed the new mate of the ship or, if one wants a change in command structure, the first lieutenant. The first lieutenant was then defending wage and price controls. But what a system of wage and price controls it was! It did not apply to everyone. Many price increases were allowed. Many wages were frozen. The Public Service was frozen. Wages were frozen, but prices were allowed to go up.

The price situation got so bad in British Columbia that the provincial administration of the day took its conviction into its own hands and took steps which were against the basic philosophy of the New Democratic Party, which did not favour wage and price controls. The NDP did not favour an incomes policy, as enunciated by David Lewis. But the B.C. government put in a system of price controls on foodstuffs and consumer goods, and the people became very consciously against the fact of inflation.

There is no doubt that 1974—in fact, 1973—would have been the time to bring in a program of wage and prince controls for a short time, not a protracted period of almost three years as we are now going to have. What was needed was a psychological shock to the minds of the public, and to bring to the attention of governments at all levels that this business of charging what the market would bear, passing costs on to anybody, instituting a cushion and deluding the public that inflation was not here and that it was something which could be swept under the rug, was not acceptable. People on low fixed incomes, people receiving unemployment benefits, and people who had their own savings and the savings of generations, were finding that their money was being eaten away by inflation. These people, as well as people living on savings from insurance policies, were being offered as sacrificial lambs on the altar of inflation. There was total inaction in the face of inflation.

In July of 1969 the Prime Minister appeared on television to deal with inflation as it stood then. At that time we were dealing with an inflation rate of about 5 per cent or 6 per cent, which was peanuts compared with today. We would be in a seventh heaven today if we could get inflation down to say, 5 per cent. Then later came the statement that the government had wrestled inflation to the ground. What nonsense! The man was completely deluding the Canadian public. As a lawyer I would almost say that he was crassly ignorant or grossly negligent in saying that to the Canadian public, and then instituting programs such as indexing of old age pensions and civil service pensions. Those measures were designed as a temporary cushion. They were palliatives, but inflation was not cured. The government did nothing about curing inflation.

In 1972 we saw full indexing of old age security, public service pensions, RCMP pensions and, after a certain point, armed services superannuation. That was when we had the cheap money policy. There was an increase in monetary supply.

I invite hon. members to read the speech made last Monday by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I invite the public to read that speech. It was a long speech, but it covered chapter after chapter of inaction. It was an exhaustive review of bad economic policy and bad economic actions by this government. However, from 1972 on we had those palliatives.

It was almost like telling someone, "Yes, we realize that you have rotten teeth, that you need some work on the roots of some of your teeth and that they hurt," and then offering some aspirin or some other type of medication. It was like telling that person to take two tablets a day to relieve the pain, that the prescription could be renewed and that if the pain remained, the dosage could be increased. Nothing was said about getting to the root cause of the problem, the decay in the roots of the teeth. In the same way, no one on the government side looked to the cause of the decay in the economy.

How on earth can an administration continue to support double digit inflation and ever-increasing unemployment? In those days half a million people were unemployed, and there were all-party debates here about that. The New Democratic Party put resolution after resolution on the order paper. There were questions, debates, motions, and amendments from all parties on the opposition side. Government ministers did express some concern about having 500,000 unemployed when inflation was at the level of 138 to 148.9 in 1976. However, where are we today?

After two and a half years of wage and price controls we still have indexation. There has been an increase in the frequency of indexation, and now there are one million unemployed. Where are we with regard to inflation? In January of 1978 it had reached 167.8. In other words, compared with the dollar of 1971, seven years ago—and seven years is a short time in the economic life of the country—it now costs two thirds more to buy the same quantity of goods and services. We wonder why people outside this country are concerned about the falling value of the Canadian dollar. There is the answer, Mr. Speaker. Our Canadian dollar is a true reflection of the economic performance in this country during the last decade.

● (1602)

If my good friend, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton), would like to take a look at the tables in the Bank of Canada's monthly review at page 62, I would invite him to read for his edification and education something that he should know. I am sure that his wife tells him that in the past decade it has cost 78 per cent more to buy $1 worth of goods and services. Does the hon. member pretend that that is the right conduct of the economic affairs of this country? What does he think will have to be the course of action over the next decade if that was the performance over the last one? If you take another 68 per cent or 78 per cent increase on this total, in other words, if you take 78 per cent of 178 per cent, as the hon. gentleman knows, we will have an increase of 100 per cent, so we will get 350 per cent. That is the prospect.

I can put on the record the performance of all governments in the past decades and the percentage they take of the GNP in the inflated figures, based upon the regressive tax system we have. By 1984, George Orwell's Big Brother will have nothing at all on government, as government will take more than 54 per cent of the GNP.

Mr. Railton: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to ask him a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I will certainly accept one from that hon. member.

Mr. Railton: I want to thank the hon. member for allowing me to put a question to him. Does he agree with the statement in the past year made by the vice president of the Toronto Dominion Bank about Canada's borrowing power and the soundness of the economy, which will increase progressively because of our GNP increase over the next 15 or 20 years at a steady rate of between 4 per cent and 5 per cent, and that we have nothing to fear because we have a deficit at this time in the economy? That is what he stated. Does the hon. member agree with it?

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): First let me say that I would hope the hon. gentleman has a true appreciation of what was said by the president of the Toronto Dominion Bank, and second, I would say that I do not agree with that statement because it was made on the basis of past records. My statements are made now when the Canadian government has difficulty borrowing. Does the hon. member know what was the record of that $750 million bond issue in New York which fizzled out? It was a real fizzle.

An hon. Member: It was sold out.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, at discount prices. The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) shrugs his shoulders. Of course, you can always sell at fire-sale prices. The hon. member knows very well that the Canadian government has to report not only the initial credits in the consortium of Canadian banks on its foreign exchange account and then arrange for a credit, but is having to pay increased rates at 1 per cent more, and this will have to be paid. It is all part and parcel of consumption by the government. I do not agree with what was said because I do not agree with the premises put forward by the hon. member for Welland as quoted by the hon. gentleman, and I am not too sure of the accuracy of his quotation.

I want to come back to the point that here we are being asked to make some changes in the legislation. I welcome some of them, and one in particular in section 47 and 48 dealing with matters which I raised in committee with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), the director of the Anti-Inflation Board, and the administrator. That was a point that no one seemed to notice in the initial instance, but then it was drawn to my attention by one very erudite gentleman who asked; "Have you provided for anything to eliminate the spring-back effect of multiple year contracts?" If you read your Anti-Inflation Act, you will find that there is nothing in that legislation which says that any roll-back ordered by the Anti-Inflation Board or by the administrator would serve as a modification of the contract.

There had to be an amendment, and that is true in the legal sense, because it was clearly the intention indicated by a number of people that if there were in existence unexpired multiple year contracts at the time of the expiry of the anti-inflation legislation, when the controls came off not only would any full year's provision in the contract be applicable, but any amount in the roll-back would immediately spring up and be due to the workers under the collective agreement. That would make utter nonsense of any AIB roll-back or any order by the administrator. That is provided for in section 48, and I am glad to see it there. There are also provisions in section 47 specifying that notwithstanding any order of the AIB or the administrator, when the controls came off, the wage rates provided for in the contract would become binding, and naturally there would be considerable increases in the arrears.

● (1612)

The study of this bill in committee provided a classic example of how a very complicated subject cannot get adequate treatment. In the committee structure, an hon. member is given ten minutes. A committee session consists of approximately 80 to 85 minutes. In the first round, members are given ten minutes, and in the second round they are given five minutes. That may continue on, but there were only three sessions on this matter. The minister was not very, very forthcoming. He would not give information. The net result is that what you are attempting to find out in committee is withheld. There was pressure, and then the study and the legislation were terminated.

As a matter of fact, perhaps this is the bill the Minister of Finance refused to come back to committee with, unless certain things happened in the House. I was not present for that, but indeed it is a strange attitude to exhibit. I have no apology to make, and I reject any suggestions that speeches made by myself and my colleagues will take some time. We are here for the purposes of making a review. I am taking my allotted time. I was not involved in the committee, so I will canvass the subject as I see it.

I disagreed with the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board concerning a particular case which came to my attention. There was an exchange of correspondence. The anti-inflation program does a grave disservice to a firm which is operated efficiently. I am referring to a particular trucking firm in western Canada. That firm increased its profits beyond those of the base year, as defined by the Anti-Inflation Board. It was not done by reason of any increase in rates. It was done by re-organization in certain parts, and greater efficiency.

When the AIB examined the profits of this company, it indicated that they were over 95 per cent of the base year or the compliance period. Therefore, the board indicated that there would have to be a return of the excess profits to the patrons. That is totally impractical and impossible, unless the company reduced its present rates thereby putting out of business other smaller competitors. If that occurred, of course it would pick up more business, and a self-defeating cycle would occur. Instead, the company proposed to take the surplus profits and invest them in better capital facilities, rather than distributing them as dividends or for the payment of higher executive salaries. I protested this. There was no way this could be accepted by the board as an economic principle.

I received a letter dated September 30, 1977, from the Chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board. In part it reads as follows:

> I agree with your statement that the program "in many ways" discourages attempts by management and employees to improve efficiency in that, by and large, we require the benefits from such actions to be passed on to the marketplace. Indeed, it is difficult for me to imagine an anti-inflation program which did not require such a contribution from the more efficient firms. At the same time, it must be recognized that this policy only impacts on the companies that are operating close to their target profit levels.

It is extraordinarily difficult to justify that the achievers, either through improvement in management or performance by employees, must be penalized. This is what happened precisely in this particular case. The case is under review before the administrator, and I trust we will see a reversal of the AIB decision.

Before finishing, I should like to indicate that the other day I heard a very intriguing radio program on the CBC. Some time in the past there was quite an uproar in the media when the salary figure of the president of Canadian Pacific Railway was published. It had been obtained in Washington. Of course it was in the $300,000 range. People booed and hawed. They made various asinine and inane comments about it, not realizing that most of it goes toward income tax.

A former member of the press gallery, who is now stationed in Washington, went to the appropriate government agency, and under their right to know legislation, he was able to unearth the exact salary figures of leaders in the Canadian labour movement who occupy executive positions in international unions. The results were very interesting. I will not refer to any particular example, but some of these people were earning over $100,000. I should like to hear the comments of the hon. members of the New Democratic Party, particularly those who feel anyone earning over $15,000 is somehow robbing his employer. What about these people?

If it is conceivable and correct that the salaries of public officers, such as of the Prime Minister, cabinet ministers, and of Your Honour, shall be public knowledge, then the law should apply to everyone. We have a right to know. There is a great deal being said about that. The United States does not seem to be suffering from its right to know legislation. Under that legislation, corporations must file the salaries and allowances of their corporate officers, or the schedule of salaries of executive officers and directors must be filed with the Security Exchange Commission. One can get at that information in the United States, but in Canada it is impossible to do that. Similar legislation with regard to labour unions, because they are executives of major economic units, is in force in the United States. They are required to file the exact figure of their salaries, down to the last dollar and cent.

● (1622)

I think it is only fair, and it is my personal suggestion that if elected officials must post their salaries, as do certain other officers and directors of public companies, then it is right and just that those people in private corporations who are officers and directors, and executives of labour unions, should file their incomes. It should be out in the open where everyone will know, and no one can come along and point to business leaders and comment adversely about their salaries while at the same time they are drawing down the same high salary or perhaps more.

On that, Mr. Speaker, I will now draw my remarks to a close.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-18, a legislation to amend the Anti-Inflation Act. Inflation has become a real psychosis over the last ten years and remains a major barrier to the realization of our collective and individual aims.

In 1975, Mr. Speaker, when we were discussing Bill C-73 on price controls, I stated that the restraint measures the government intended to take did not strike at the roots of the problem. Indeed, controlling the salaries of the workers and the weak and letting the brass do as they wished was no solution and changed absolutely nothing to rising inflation. I would now add that the efforts that were being planned for the three following years would not solve the problem.

Mr. Speaker, today, after three years of implementing the Anti-Inflation Act, the government is out of breath in every field, and especially with regard to inflation and unemployment problems. It admits candidly that it is incapable of throttling rising prices and unemployment. When the price and wages control program was introduced, the board was given the task of reducing inflation to 6 per cent over a two-year period. Unfortunately, the system created a majority of dissatisfied people and much dissatisfaction and we are grappling with a 9.5 per cent inflation today. That is as unacceptable as the current rate of unemployment. Mr. Speaker, we not that the steps taken by the government until now, that is limiting government expenditures, controlling and watching prices as well as salaries, are precisely that, just steps. It is high time we have a cohesive policy, and over-all policy requiring decisive leadership. It is all too easy to blame inflation on unions and workers.

The inflation we know in Canada is not inflation created just for lack of demand as some would have us believe: it is monetary inflation stemming from the level of prices and interest rates. It is therefore a monetary problem. Let us not forget that the production of goods and the production of money, that is the issuing of credit, are the fruit of two entirely different processes. The price mechanism is related directly to the monetary system. Mr. Speaker, the chartered banks can issue up to 16 times the credit they have in real reserves; they have a direct influence on the purchasing power of consumers. High interest rates mean additional costs for the producers who pass them on in their prices. The consumer who resorts to credit to acquire goods and services will pay in the price of the products he buys a portion of the interest of the producer, in addition to his own interest on the capital.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, those who close their eyes on the impact of interest rates bury their heads in the sand, as the government is doing. The actions of the government relating to inflation controls were only reactions of defence. They came to grips with secondary effects rather than with the roots of the problem.

The government is unable to put before us a real aggressive policy to control inflation and unemployment. Does this mean that it has already surrendered to the financial power of chartered banks and large companies? We often hear in government circles that our inflation comes from external causes and that it is worldwide. I would like to remind you that the most industrialized countries in Europe, such as Germany and Switzerland, have the lowest inflation rates. The continuous rise in the cost of energy and food we experience will only be amplified by the drop in the value of our dollar, because we import many of our products in large quantities.

In my view, the decline of the dollar is caused by the lack of confidence of financial circles and international bankers in our economy and by the total lack of leadership to ensure its recovery. Inflation which continues and will continue to plague us can be attributed to a large degree to past mistakes by the monetary and fiscal authorities. And, unfortunately, the longer inflation goes on the more complex become the factors creating it.

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the government when they refuse to end the controls abruptly. We need a decontrol process which will not bring back the staggering rise in prices, but let me add that these decontrol measures as proposed by this government will still create a great deal of frustration because we cannot endlessly count on such simple measures to stop the decline in purchasing power. To get to the root of the evil, what will be needed is a consensus of the three main components of our economy, that is management, labour and the government. I believe it is already generally recognized that this is a step toward a more consistent policy which would not favour one group at the expense of the other. This action has had good results in Germany and other European countries. However, more than a consensus among the three groups, the government will have to seriously consider revamping the present monetary system, where most of the credit power rests with the chartered banks. We all recall that in 1976-77, interest rates offered on savings accounts decreased fairly substantially and that despite this trend financial and banking institutions continued to charge interest rates of 13½ per cent or more.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot stabilize our rate of inflation by relying on measures such as anti-inflation controls, which affect only some facets of the economy such as salary increases and other secondary problems, while the brass continue on their merry way. I therefore ask the government that, in submitting the first phases of its decontrol program, it also propose a genuine policy aimed at reversing inflation and unemployment, which, in my opinion, are causing more harm than the problem of national unity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I hope to see the government exercise more control over chartered banks, especially, of course, over the Bank of Canada, which is the foremost money and credit institution, so that it adopts a credit policy in line with the harmonious development of the Canadian economy. Such a credit philosophy, if I can use those words, will, in my view, stabilize the purchasing power of consumers. I therefore implore the government to consider these suggestions very seriously.

● (1632)

[English]

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, we in this party are going to oppose Bill C-18 because it continues the inequities of the Anti-Inflation Act and, instead of ending in April, it is really going to continue until January 1, 1979.

I want to start by looking at what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had to say in his New Year's interview with Mr. Bruce Phillips of CTV. He was asked by Mr. Phillips how he would defend his economic record. When Mr. Phillips mentioned 9.1 per cent inflation for the last 12 months—as of that date—the Prime Minister said it was unfair to look at the year-to-year change in the consumer price index without reference to the over-all trend of inflation during controls. He went on to say, and I quote from the transcript:

> We are still making the assertion that by the end of the three-year control period the inflation rate will have been brought down from the almost 12 per cent it was, to 6 per cent.

Again quoting from the transcript, a few moments later the Prime Minister said:

> . . . that on the over-all three-year average we're going to be on target.

The Prime Minister was wrong both in his view of recent Canadian economic history and in his forecast.

First, from the historical point of view, inflation was not almost 12 per cent when controls were announced in October, 1975, but 10.6 per cent.

The target was not 6 per cent but 4 per cent at the end of the three-year controls program. As for his forecast of getting 4 per cent this year, every economist I know of, in or out of government, forecasts that we will be looking to an inflation rate of 8 per cent for 1978. Given the recent increases in interest rates it is likely to average at least 8 per cent, and everybody knows that it is now about 9.5 per cent as measured by the consumer price index.

We all know that, on top of this, the unemployment rate this year will be at least 8 per cent, and if discouraged workers were counted accurately by Statistics Canada, there would be an average of 1-1/4 million workers unemployed, or 1,600,000 during 1978.

In several speeches I made when the Hon. John Turner was minister of finance—and our party has been consistent in this—I told the government that inflation cannot be controlled by deliberately creating more unemployment.

The current economic wisdom at the centre of the Liberal national economic policy was that expansionary policies would push up the cost of living, or the inflation rate. In our opinion, this is a fundamental error, with very bad results for the whole of this country but chiefly for low income areas of unstable employment. I think of Quebec and parts of Atlantic Canada such as my own, regions of northern New Brunswick, and most of Newfoundland.

The New Democratic Party was accused, both by Mr. Turner and Mr. Donald Macdonald, when each was minister of finance, of not caring about inflation. We retaliated by saying they were hurting individuals, regions, and national unity by their policy of waging the fight against inflation on the backs of the unemployed.

Just recently Mr. Ralph Sultan, chief economist of the Royal Bank of Canada, who is no wild eyed radical, said:

> The current thinking is that expansionary policies would be inflationary. This may be one of our fundamental errors. Inflation seems built into our economy regardless of our growth rate.

The Prime Minister's economic policy for the last three or four years has been based upon this notion which is prepared to see unemployment rise as a trade-off for less inflation. Between 1975 and 1977 this policy was shown to be a bankrupt one, and 1978 will prove it to be even more so. Economic history attests that in Canada and other countries you cannot fight inflation on the backs of the unemployed and low income workers. It is not only a morally wrong policy but an economically bad one. That I repeat, has been shown in this country at the present time, and will be shown even more during 1978.

The Prime Minister pointed with pride in his recent address to the Economic Club of New York to the fact that Canada had created 280,000 new jobs between February, 1977, and February, 1978, "well above our historical average of 250,000 jobs each year." That is fair enough—if we do not seek the details of how many of these were permanent jobs. In any case, what he forgot to mention was that while jobs increased by 280,000 the demand for jobs rose by 362,000, leaving a record of 1,007,000 Canadians unemployed in February, 1978. Statistics Canada shows that there were only a little over 32,000 vacancies for permanent jobs in all of Canada during the same month. The Prime Minister conveniently did not mention that the size of the unemployed labour force in Canada had almost doubled since 1974, the year of the last election.

As high unemployment has continued there has been a substantial increase in the number of long term unemployed. The definition of long term unemployed that Statistics Canada uses is "unemployed for over 14 weeks". The number of people unemployed for 14 weeks and over averaged 247,000 in 1976, rising to an average of 302,000 in 1977.

In New York the Prime Minister tried to hide his government's miserable mismanagement of the economy since the last election by a curious selection of reference years such as 1964—when he was not Prime Minister—to 1975. He has done the same thing in the question period during this week. He does not dare run the coming election on his government's performance in the last four years, so he retreats to decade figures to try to hide from the Canadian people how poorly the Canadian economy has been managed over the last several years. This time, however, he will not fool the Canadian people.

The Prime Minister must have sounded unconvincing even to the Liberal faithful when they gathered in Ottawa in March, when he tried to tell them that Canada is a healthy country in a difficult world. Using unemployment as the chief yardstick of economic sickness, Canada has not fared well. The following are recent figures compiled by the International Labour Organization in Geneva and the Montreal Gazette. These figures were published in the Montreal Gazette on Wednesday, February 8, 1978, on page 2. The countries with less than 4 per cent unemployment are: Switzerland under 1 per cent; Sweden 1.8 per cent; Japan 2 per cent; Austria 2 per cent; Norway 2 per cent; Israel 3.5 per cent; West Germany 4.2 per cent. Countries with unemployment between 5 and 7 per cent are as follows: France 5 per cent; the Netherlands 5.3 per cent; Australia 5 per cent; Britain 6 per cent; United States 6.3 per cent; Italy 6.6 per cent; Finland 6 per cent; New Zealand 6 per cent. Countries with unemployment over 7 per cent are as follows: Denmark 7.1 per cent; Canada 8.5 per cent (at that time); Belgium 9.5 per cent; Greece 9.5 per cent, and Ireland 12 per cent.

● (1642)

Canada has in recent years one of the worst managed economies in the western world, and I could add the cost of living figures to go along with the unemployment statistics to show that. Amongst the western world countries, Canada has one of the most consistently high unemployment rates over the last three years. I would love to debate the Prime Minister's economic record during the coming election campaign, not the record of the government during the last ten years, but the record during the last four years since the last election campaign.

The Liberals are going to be fooled if they think that because of the Gallup polls which show them ahead because of the national unity issue, because the people in Quebec are uptight and so on, English speaking Canada will fall for that kind of thing and not see the economic mess that has been perpetrated by the stupid policies of this government in the last four years, and especially in the last three years.

Money policy or monetary policy was fairly tight in 1977 and was tightened even further by the Bank of Canada's two increases in its discount rate, which is the rate it charges to the banks that borrow from it, to 8.5 per cent from 6.7 per cent in March. These interest rate rises have occurred despite the fact that the Canadian economy is weak, a weakness that is widely attributed to the existence of deficient domestic demand for investment goods and consumer goods. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, imposing even higher interest rates on an economy already hampered by restrictive national and provincial fiscal policies will only serve to dampen business investment and consumer spending further. This again is another bleak chapter in the bankrupt economic policy which has been followed by this government.

For the first time since the Central bank adopted the policy in 1975 interest rates have been increased with no pretense that the change was needed to keep the supply of money growing within the chosen target range. In fact, the latest increase in the bank rate will probably make the money supply grow slower than the Bank of Canada says it needs to grow for the good of the economy. This means that interest rates are going higher than they should.

[Mr. Hogan.]

The rise in the bank rate immediately caused an increase in the prime rate charged by the ordinary banks, in other words, the interest rate which they charge to large corporations for short term loans. And with the prime rate up to 9.25 per cent, other interest rates will rise too. This can be expected to make it less attractive to build homes or to get business loans in order to improve one's business, or for consumers to buy durable goods such as automobiles, etc. Interest rates for loans such as these will be higher. The increases are far from over. They may be able to hold them in line until election time, but I doubt it because as I see it there are higher interest rates in the offing. These trends will all tend to hold the economy back at the very time when it needs to grow faster to cut down on unemployment. We are all familiar with the figure that it is over 1 million people. If you count the discouraged people who cannot get jobs and those who have given up looking for jobs and are therefore not counted statistically amongst the unemployed, the figure is at least 1.4 million people in Canada without jobs.

But Mr. Gerald Bouey, the governor of the Bank of Canada, admitted as he raised the interest rate, that the bank, and I quote him, "gives high priority in its conduct of monetary policy to the external value of the Canadian dollar." When is this government going to learn the lessons of the economic history of this country? It is repeating the same errors of the early 1960's.

Ottawa's actions of accommodating and encouraging higher interest rates in Canada at this time are explained on the basis that interest rate rises in Canada are inevitable because of interest rate pressures in the United States. Thus this government has chosen to defend the Canadian dollar at the cost of an even more sluggish economy. That means, in every day words, at the cost of more unemployment and at the cost of higher inflation. As Mr. Donner, a Toronto economist, said in the Globe and Mail yesterday "this risk is not worth taking, and Ottawa has, once again, chosen to emphasize the wrong priority. Ottawa has linked Canada's economic prestige to a particular international price for the Canadian dollar, and by intervening with tighter monetary measures in exacerbating the real No. 1 problem, which is not the declining dollar, but high unemployment."

As Clarence Barber, professor of economics at the University of Manitoba, has recently noted, the governor of the Bank of Canada claims to have a policy of gradually reducing the rate of inflation. "In fact, the evidence suggests that it has a policy of gradually increasing the rate of unemployment."

Since the governor embraced his monetarist creed—and for those who are not cognizant with the term "monetarist creed", it means the money supply aggregates are much more important than the interest rates and one does not intervene in the economy. The governor of the Bank of Canada embraced this very much since 1975. Now he has to get off that kick of Professor Milton Freidman and others. I repeat that the governor embraced his monetarist creed in the late summer of 1975, and Canada's unemployment has risen from 7 to 8.3 per cent. As Professor Barber says, and I am still quoting, "that takes some doing when the U.S. economy is recovering and its unemployment rate is falling." Meanwhile, the new wage and price controls policy appears to have had little effect on the rate of inflation. That is a serious warning from Professor Barber.

● (1652)

The American economy is showing a decrease in unemployment and a decrease or a holding the line of inflation. When our economy should be moving up and our exports should be increasing, what do we get? We get increasing unemployment and higher interest rates that will further increase unemployment and the cost of living.

If we look two years ahead or more, this country will be in an even more serious condition than at the present time. I defy anyone to say that is gloom and doom. What we are going to get willy-nilly is the continuance of the policies of the past three years by this government which have made this country so badly off, both nationally and internationally, and have caused so much suffering to the people of this country.

This government's major thrust since October, 1975, when it introduced the anti-inflation legislation, has been to fight the cost of living or inflation, as measured by the consumer price index, by increasing unemployment. It is helping to convince many, as Karl Marx pointed out in the nineteenth century, that, in order to succeed, capitalism needs a "reserve army" of the unemployed. This time the major part of the army is young adults and housewives whose incomes for family well-being are desperately needed by at least half of Canadian families.

The record of this government for the past three or four years in its economic mismanagement of this country defies description. To continue essentially until January 1, 1979, with this present anti-inflation program which has not stopped price increases except in a marginal way, and in the past year especially has attacked the personal disposable income and wages of the ordinary people of this country, is a sad state of affairs, for a party to go to the nation with at such a time with such a program. They will try to hide behind the flag of national unity. This time those living in regions of high unemployment, and suffering desperately as a result of it, are not going to be fooled.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, we are now debating the demise of the government's anti-inflation program. Inflation has gone from 10.5 to 9.5 per cent, not much to show for almost three years. The Anti-Inflation Board will carry on for at least another 12 months.

I would like to speak today on a few of the elements in the inflationary process and the fact that other and more pressing problems are weighing down on us. With the Canadian dollar at a 45-year low, the American dollar collapsing on the world markets with its enormous American trade deficit, the Russian superiority in arms and their ability to control western oil through their successes in the Horn of Africa, along with Iraq and Libya, this means that Canada and the western world are in a rather grim financial situation. The value of oil has been a factor in rising inflation. Inflation grew out of the oil crisis in 1973.

I would like to deal first with the Prime Minister's desire to have the Anti-Inflation Board grafted on to the Economic Council of Canada. There is a certain relationship in that one of the Council's jobs has been to give advice on how to avoid inflation. But the move does seem to pose great problems for the Economic Council if it is to have a function to point the way to the government of often unpleasant political truths. Will it not lose a great deal of value if it only becomes the mechanism for deflecting criticisms that rightly belong on the government's own shoulders?

One cannot quarrel with the idea of a general report and surveillance of inflationary processes. The problem will begin when the organization has to do what the Prime Minister suggests, and I quote:

—the surveillance of those particular cases of increase in prices, wages or other incomes which constitute threats to the national economic objective.

There does not seem to be any way in which the council can stay out of public controversy over its views on price and wage amendments. What is the government doing? It surely seems to be unloading on the Council the government's responsibility for the problems of inflation and it will almost certainly lose its role as an independent economic critic.

Obviously it is not going to develop new ties with organized labour or provincial governments. If the Economic Council is going to be involved in economic debate, there is substantial evidence that it would be better not to involve the Council. With such a move it will make the Council much less important in the future, and much more suspect to government direction. In the final analysis, the Council was set up to point the way in a non-political manner as the best advice for the government in dealing with economic problems.

Obviously the government's plan and the oft-stated hope that inflation would fall to 6 per cent by this year are purely a mythical mirage and a political deception. The announcement yesterday that the Bank of Canada's lending rate was up to 8.5 per cent, with two raises within the past month, indicate that the government is in serious difficulty. It was necessary to arrange an increase on its stand-by credit from $1.5 billion to $2.5 billion, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) announced that he had to draw $750 million to bolster Canada's foreign exchange reserves. Furthermore, the government lost $500 million through intervention in the foreign markets during March through interventions aimed at supporting the Canadian dollar, although the minister keeps saying that the Canadian dollar is floating. What about the inflows—

* * *

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill S-10, an Act respecting The Royal Canadian Legion, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Pensions—Requested amendment to legislation to provide pensions at age 60 despite marital status; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Health and Welfare—Grants to Planned Parenthood Federation; the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae)—Energy—Rationing of supplies—Government position.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

PRIVATE BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be unanimous consent to proceed with consideration of Bill C-1001 reported to us this afternoon and to give it third reading during the next hour. I think that the parties have brief comments to make on the matter and this would enable the member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) to proceed with consideration of motion No. 50. So, Mr. Speaker, I ask that Bill C-1001 with all its amendments be reported as is and that we proceed immediately with the third reading in the shortest possible time before the end of this hour and afterwards, if time allows hopefully that we proceed with the consideration of motion No. 50 standing in the name of the member for Brandon-Souris.

● (1702)

[English]

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) has agreed to allow his motion to stand and to allow Bill C-1001 to proceed. My understanding is that it will be allowed to proceed prior to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. I think that was the essence of the agreement. I think the understanding arose from a commitment on the part of members of the New Democratic Party. I do not know if there is any time limitation, but I understand that there will be brief remarks. I understand that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris has agreed to let his motion stand and that it will proceed following the conclusion of debate on Bill C-1001.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we agree to the proposal that we now take up the report stage and third reading of Bill C-1001, and after that move on to the motion in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). I do not think there is any ironclad agreement about the length of time to be spent on Bill C-1001, but the intention is that it be dealt with quickly.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: We agree, Mr. Speaker, with the statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There seems to be unanimous consent. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BELL CANADA

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East) moved that Bill C-1001, respecting Bell Canada, as reported (with amendents) from the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. O'Connell moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members of the House for giving unanimous consent to proceed today to the final stages of this bill. That unanimous consent is very much appreciated by me as the sponsor of the bill, and I know also by the seconder of the bill. We do appreciate this cooperation.

I would like to thank hon. members of the House for the consideration they have given the bill over the past 14 months. I would also like to express my appreciation for the expeditious work this morning of the members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. That committee is heavily charged with other important legislation, and its members did undertake to facilitate the consideration of this bill and particularly the amendments to this bill this morning, so that once again there has been a very cooperative attitude in the House, which is very much appreciated.

Circulated amongst us is the amended version of Bill C-1001. It incorporates the changes made this morning in the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I would like to refer very briefly to those changes. They can be found in a pledge made by me as sponsor of the bill in the debates of March 16 at pages 3846 and 3847 of Hansard. They, and they only, are the changes which were incorporated in this printed version this morning in the standing committee.

Those three changes are these: Former clause 2 has been amended in that former sections 5.2 and 5.3 have been entirely deleted from the new version of the bill. Former clause 4 which was found on page 8 of the bill has been entirely removed from the new bill. Finally, two words have been deleted from former clause 6 at line 6 of page 9. Those changes are in exact accord with the commitments made in my statement of March 16 which are recorded in Hansard at the pages to which I have referred, and which were made in the final stages of second reading debate. As I pointed out, no changes other than these have been made in the bill.

Just to remind the House again, the effect of the amendments are also as recorded in Hansard for March 16, and I will refer to them very briefly. The effect of the changes is to withdraw from the bill the request for a letters patent procedure for any possible future changes and the request for a negative resolution procedure in the House or in parliament as a future means of amending Bell Canada's basic charter.

Furthermore, the amendments would also withdraw the request formerly made for certain ancillary powers sought through the application to Bell Canada's charter of section 16 of the Canada Corporations Act.

Finally, through the deletion of the two words I mentioned the amendment would withdraw the request in this bill that future individual common stock issues not require CRTC approval. The effect of this latter change would be that future capital stock issues would require CRTC approval.

These are the important amendments made to this important private bill. What remains is an authorization of a new and higher level of capital for Bell Canada, and certain provisions to give Bell Canada a greater financial flexibility in capital stock. Those are the changes, and I believe they are such that the bill will now commend itself to hon. members of the House.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-1001, dealing with Bell Canada and as amended by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, is acceptable to the New Democratic Party. Hon. members will recall that when this bill was first introduced in the Senate as Bill S-2, we objected to its passage in its original form because we felt that it would reduce parliamentary scrutiny of this monopoly telephone company. If the bill had passed unamended, it would have created a company which would have come under the Canada Corporations Act and therefore treated as any other corporation in Canada. Bell, by virtue of being a monopoly, should not be treated as any other corporation.

• (1712)

The bill would have allowed Bell Canada to expand and invest in non-telecommunication industries, which was prohibited by this parliament when it first granted Bell its act of incorporation. We felt that, if that was allowed, telephone subscribers would receive poorer service since their subscriber fees would be funneled off into non-related telecommunication undertakings by Bell Canada.

Another part of the bill to which we objected was the procedure of letters patent whereby Bell could change its act of incorporation to a negative resolution procedure, which in effect would have curtailed debate in the House on Bell's performance and the implications of any such changes. As well, we objected to removing CRTC scrutiny of the issuance of stock. Anyone who reads the debates of this Chamber will realize it was primarily the objection of the NDP that has brought about these amendments. We have had assistance from our friends in the Créditiste Party on occasion, and we appreciate that, but not one Liberal or Conservative member, other than the sponsor of the bill, rose in objection to these provisions in the bill which we say would have jeopardized telephone service and would have lessened parliament's scrutiny over this company.

Indeed, I think it is a sad chapter in the history of this parliament that the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) and her department, as well as the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and CRTC, did not come forward with a public statement on what they thought the implications of the passage of this unamended bill would be on Bell Canada and its subscribers. Indeed, the length of this debate on Bill C-1001 almost reached the point of 1,001 speeches, because it was only through the NDP consistently putting up members during private members' hour every second Thursday that we were able to prolong debate on this bill and prevent its passage in original form until Bell Canada decided to make some compromises and withdraw the offending section of the bill. It took Bell a long time, in my opinion, to come to its senses, and indeed it is in the dying days of this parliament that it is finally getting in the bill its capitalization increase which still remains.

One of the issues on which we in this party have been harping again and again, not only before regulatory agencies but in this chamber, is the level of service that Bell is providing to its subscribers, which we say can be dramatically improved in terms of Bell's priorities, on where it is placing its priorities, and what it is doing with the rate increases it is receiving from the public. We have harped on the lack of improvement in the rural service over the years, and I think we have made an impression on Bell Canada officials that they have an obligation to rural subscribers to improve service so that we no longer have the norm of ten people per party line but have brought it down to more reasonable levels of four or two parties on a telephone line. As I say, we have made some progress in this respect.

I do not want to prolong this debate. I have spoken on this issue many times in the House, and anyone can look at the Hansard record to see the reasons why we objected to the bill. I think the bill is improved because of the amendments we have been able to win out of Bell Canada, and I hope that in the future when Bell Canada comes before the House to advocate changes in its act of incorporation, we, as members of parliament, will again have the opportunity to hold up to public scrutiny the activities and performance of Bell Canada, as is surely our right as members elected by constituents who are subscribers to this company.

Our whole aim during this debate is to maximize service to telephone subscribers, to pressure Bell Canada to live up to its responsibilities, and to keep Bell Canada involved in what its act of incorporation charges it to be involved with, that is, telephone service to the best of its ability for its subscribers at the most reasonable cost. We have won this battle here in the House of Commons. There is yet the battle before the regulatory agencies on rate increases which my colleagues and I will continue to fight in the interests of subscribers.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize that I run the risk of being accused of just giving in public a bouquet I could give to my hon. friends in private, but I do not feel I should let this moment pass without paying a tribute to the tremendous piece of work that has been done on this legislation by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and other members of this caucus. I could say, of course, that it is a demonstration of what can be done by hard work in parliament.

I would also like to commend the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) on his flexibility and his willingness to advocate that certain changes be made. At any rate, the story does have a happy ending although, as my friend has said, there are battles to be won in other places. But I did feel that I should not let this moment pass without paying this tribute to a number of my colleagues, and especially to my friend, the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I think there was unanimous consent prior to this day that the next item, which is item No. 2, shall stand.

We will next proceed to Motion No. 50 in the name of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale).

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[English]

REPORT ON POST OFFICE MANAGEMENT

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a copy of the report by Hay Associates Ltd., management consultants, concerning the management of the Post Office Department, together with a list of the recommendations implemented by the department.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion first came up for consideration of the House on December 7 last. It is a very simple motion which should have received the approval of the government at that time.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard), rather than approving a motion of this kind, which was an attempt to get information to deal with the growing malaise in the Post Office Department, said that it is a confidential report. Perhaps I should quote him. He said:

These are internal working documents of a confidential nature. Consequently, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Then the motion was transferred for debate. I do not want to speak at length this afternoon because I hope that the matter will come to a vote.

● (1722)

Since great concern has been increasing in recent days regarding the problems of the Post Office, I would think hon. members would only be too happy to have access to information which would provide some answers in coming to grips with these problems. Certainly this opinion has been expressed almost every day in questions put from all sides of the House. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) agrees that something has to be done.

There was a great celebration today, because of the significant anniversary of the Prime Minister becoming leader of the Liberal party ten years ago. During the question period it was demonstrated that the right hon. member has not been too accurate in some of his positions, statements, and actions over the intervening ten years. In 1973, when a government backbencher asked a question of the Prime Minister arising from the continuing long saga of the Post Office horror story, he answered briefly and succinctly by saying "Everybody knows postal service is lousy". He was dead accurate in his assessment of the situation. Obviously action must be taken. Before action can be taken, it must be based upon informed opinion.

The Hay report, which was produced at considerable expense to Canadian taxpayers, goes back to December of 1975. It was a report on major organizational problems in the Post Office Department. It was made up by departmental officials, in cooperation with members of the task force from the Treasury Board, which has a responsibility for administrative matters in the Post Office. It was compiled at great cost from a series of conferences, interviews, and consultations with members of the Post Office from all parts of the country. It is an excellent, useful, and helpful document in coming to grips with these problems. Why should the government regard a public document of this kind as confidential? It is beyond my understanding. Surely the government must be interested in resolving the problems of the Post Office. That department will play a major role in the events which are not too far ahead. It is typical of an almost paranoid government to be concerned about confidentiality and secrecy. In fact, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has been promoting successfully a piece of legislation on freedom of information. I trust the matter will come to vote today.

On the basis of the general concern which has been expressed for a long time, and which has grown in intensity in recent months as the problems become more critical, I hope we will receive the approval of hon. members for the tabling of this document, so that we will have access to its valuable information, and in turn begin to make recommendations for solving the Post Office problems. It is obvious to hon. members present in the chamber at this time that I have a document in my hand.

Mr. Paproski: Table it.

Mr. Dinsdale: I would be quite happy to. Whether it is the real document or a reasonable facsimile thereof, I do not know. It indicates the problem the government faces when it attempts to conceal information which has no confidentiality aspect whatsoever. The only legitimate reason I can conclude for this action is that there is information in the document which is embarrassing to the government. It is highly critical of the lack of attempts on the part of the government to deal with the growing problems of the Post Office.

The document recommends what hon. members on this side have been advocating for a long time, that is, the setting up of a special committee. We have not specified the specific terms of reference of the committee or its organizational structure. We have suggested that it could be a joint committee including members of the Senate and members of the House of Commons. Joint committees have been successful in coming to grips with problems on many occasions. It could be a special committee of the House assigned the task of pursuing a particular problem, as was the case regarding problems in the penitentiaries which the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs dealt with. It could be a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications which deals with Post Office matters. It could be a royal commission as recommended by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. Whatever its formation might be, it is encouraging to realize that the Hay study group made exactly the same proposal back in 1975.

I should like to quote from the report of the Joint Post Office-Treasury Board Secretariat Study Group, which reads as follows:

> The study group, in beginning its assignment, excluded from its analysis any examination of organizational options for the Post Office such as a Crown corporation, special status department, etc., focusing instead on the internal structure of the existing department. The group took this particular course of action, not out of conviction that such options were impractical, but rather because it considered that manpower and time limitations made such a review infeasible and better studied later as a separate issue.

One of the first recommendations of this group, which was brought together in 1975 to investigate the Post Office and to come up with solutions, was that it had only gone partially into its investigation and that it must be followed up, if solutions were to be found, by another review at a later date to consider and study such important issues as the advisability of transforming the Post Office Department into a Crown corporation type of organization.

● (1732)

Now, I do not have to recite the problems of the Post office here today for it has been post office week in the House of Commons. We have had several debates on the subject which indicates the degree of concern with respect to post office problems. I do not have to repeat the problems. They are all too obvious.

I would like to comment on a statement that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) made recently when he said that there are far too many leaks from government departments. I do not know whether the document which I have in my hand is a leak or not. I cannot say because I have not seen the original document. He made some strong criticisms of public servants who might be responsible for such leaks. I suggest that in view of some of the problems in the body politic in Canada today—and the post office is typical of this type of situation—anybody with the courage of his convictions to make available to the general public, through elected representatives of the people, helpful documents of this kind is not acting in a despicable way. Rather, he would be acting in a responsible way, realizing that it is the only way that there can be any action obtained from a government that has been noted for inaction, wrong action, or just plain muddle-headedness.

I would say that the explanation of confidentiality is not in the interests of the public of Canada but in the interests of the government of Canada, the particular party in power. This is a far different situation from the one of confidential documents that border or move into the security area of concern.

It is another sad commentary on the lack of competence on the part of the present government that hon. members who have been primarily concerned with post office affairs and endeavouring to come to grips with the problem have had to go outside the country for information. We have not had a thorough study of the post office since 1966. I have that document in my hands, incidentally, and it is called the Royal Commission on Working Conditions in the Post Office Department, an excellent report under the chairmanship of the Hon. André Montpetit which was tabled in 1966, 12 years ago.

Strangely enough, it is in the intervening years that the Post Office Department has gone continuously downhill. There are 363 pages of recommendations, reforms, legislative changes and administrative changes that will have to be brought in urgently if the Post Office Department is going to meet the challenges of the revolution in communications generally that has been felt in Canada and throughout the industrial world. If I had time here this afternoon I could recite recommendation after recommendation to which no attention has been given by the government of Canada. The Liberal party has been in power during this whole period of time.

The latest document I received on the subject was put out by the Congress in Washington, where they have gone the route of the public corporation in order to deal with the problems of an industrial organization such as the modern post office. I refer to volume one of the report of the commission on the postal service, and it was brought down last spring. I refer to it at this time because it indicates that if we had access to this information from a Canadian source we could intelligently and hopefully sort out the post office confusion.

One of the topics they dealt with and which we have not started to deal with in Canada is the impact of electronic communications. There was a newspaper report recently that a firm in Toronto has launched itself into the electronic communications business in Canada. If the post office service was to go electronic, 70 per cent of the first class business would be removed. Seventy per cent of the post office business can be handled by electronic communications, and the technology is already available. Surely this subject requires careful examination.

Other topics in this report are financing the postal service—that is a topic that comes up repeatedly in this House—and levels of service. Hon. members know the horror stories we hear every day in question period in this House of Commons. Chapter six deals with postal rates and mail classification.

I understand the committee on statutory instruments has picked up this topic once again and they are standing by the decision they made with respect to irregular increases in postal rates by the government under administrative decree and order in council rather than by amending the Post Office Act as is required under the act. This is a fundamental invasion, as Senator Forsey keeps saying, of the rights of parliament because only parliament can increase taxes; but the government is increasing taxes by order in council.

The joint committee made up of Senators and members of the House of Commons only this morning was wrestling once again with this problem. They are concerned that the government has again ignored their unanimous recommendation, which states that order in council action is a fundamental violation of the rights or parliament. It is also a fundamental violation of the rights of parliament for the government to refuse the tabling of a report, a helpful, innocuous report so far as the security of Canada is concerned. Indeed, I think it would be helpful to the well-being and security of Canada if we did have access to this information and were able to make recommendations helpful in resolving post office problems.

I hope that hon. members will support this appeal this afternoon and vote positively so that the Hay report can be tabled. I think that we will all benefit from the information that is obtained. When it is observed in that report that the final recommendation was that it should be followed by another study, then we will have strong support for that viewpoint as well.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) that we are regularly and constantly receiving reports on the conditions which exist within the Post Office Department. If we seek and obtain these reports, it is because we want to study them, determine how we can implement the recommendations they make to improve the Post Office organization. For the information of the hon. member, I should like to say that I have with me a list of all the reports which have been prepared since 1969. There are several of them, and I do not understand why the hon. member has chosen to pay more attention to the Hay report than to the others.

The hon. member has mentioned a lack of attempts on the part of the government to come to grips with the problems within the Post Office. I suggest that if he would only read my communications, as well as the official report of our proceedings, he would find that we have indicated on several occasions the actions we have taken. As to his suggestion about a Crown corporation, a special commission of the House or a royal commission, I have said and I repeat that they all seem great to us, but before we decide on one of them and implement it, I feel we must find solutions to two problems. As I stated again recently, the Post Office is faced with two problems, namely the debugging of our mechanization and especially, our relations with our employees.

About the Hay report, perhaps I should say something. We have received several reports, including the Montpetit report, and I should like to indicate to my hon. colleague that we have implemented over 80 per cent of its 200-odd recommendations. Which proves that when we receive a report containing recommendations, we pay them the attention they deserve. We implement those which we feel are more likely to improve the postal service. That is what we have been doing and will continue to do. As to the Hay report—

[English]

● (1742)

The purpose of this study was to collect objective and realistic data from the various levels of management of Canada Post concerning their conception of the climate of the organization. In fact, the consultants, Hay Associates of Toronto, called the report a "Climate Analysis Report". That was in 1975, three years ago. The purpose of the report was to analyse the data and compare results with those from other employers. Hay Associates have also conducted a climate analysis report for the Royal Bank, Abitibi, Cominco and CMHC, to name a few.

Hay Associates aimed at ascertaining what were the strengths of the post office and what were the weaknesses. We are not hiding anything and I think we have a big problem. Any corporation with a budget of $1,300 million and around 63,000 employees has problems these days.

The hon. member opposite spoke of the United States post office. A report in the Washington Post of March 22 says there is talk of a postal strike in the United States. I can also send the hon. member a book published in the United States in the last year entitled "United States Post Office—A Great Mess". I think we all have problems in this world when we try to run large organizations.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, would the Postmaster General permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Paproski: The minister says the post office is in a mess now.

Mr. Lamontagne: I am talking about the United States post office.

Mr. Paproski: What about yours?

Mr. Lamontagne: Ours is getting better and better every day. The survey attempted to show how wide the gap was between how things were in the post office and how they ought to be. It was a vast study. A total of 5,870 climate analysis questionnaires were distributed to various regions and to all levels of management. They were answered anonymously and returned directly to Hay Associates. The method insured that the managers were given every opportunity to be frank and candid.

The report's approach borrowed from contemporary sociology and reflects both the strengths and weaknesses of this method. That is to say, it aimed at determining what the opinions and attitudes of management were toward the organization that employed them. In no way did the report try to measure the performance, efficiency and rationale for organization and operational systems.

It must be emphasized that the report is essentially an aggregate of opinion and attitudes. While having some merit in learning what management thinks, the report's approach was essentially an academic approach to operational realities that remained constantly in flux as a result of the introduction of new techniques and operational methods at Canada Post. That is why they recommended a further study.

The report was conducted in 1975, only a relatively short time after the post office had been decentralized. Automation had also only been recently introduced. As a result, when the Hay inquiry was conducted the post office was still in a period of transition, a period of change. As celebrated English journalist, G. K. Chesterton, once said, "Progress is the maker of problems."

The post office, at the time of the Hay report, and indeed today, was and is changing, a change in many respects in the direction of progress. Traditional methods were being modified in the interests of progress, and as G. K. Chesterton stated, problems accompany a period of change.

The Hay report reflects the dismay and even at times the trauma experienced by some of the management at Canada Post. The old, safe routines were being uprooted and new ways of doing things remained to be modified and adjusted to make the new systems work smoothly.

This is not to say that management's attitudes as portrayed in the Hay report were entirely negative. Neither were they 100 per cent positive. To be frank, the Hay report did reveal that there existed some discontent at Canada Post about the way the organization was being run. There exist some problems and nobody is surprised about that. But the fact that senior management at Canada Post in 1975 wanted to ascertain what the sentiments of their management were vis-à-vis the organization is a tribute to their concern about improving the morale and productivity of their employees.

It would be grossly irresponsible for me here to reveal with any precision the details of the report. Certainly, the frank and candid opinions expressed in the survey could conceivably turn a branch against another branch, a division against a division, perhaps even a region against a region. Certainly, such a revelation would not be in the best interests of the Canadian public and Canada Post. Revealing the report's details would clearly serve no useful purpose except, perhaps, to reveal that there is some latitude for more changes at Canada Post if service is to be improved. And, let me ask, what organization made complex and sophisticated by having a staff of more than 60,000 scattered across several thousand miles does not have latitude for change and improvement?

I should also like, Mr. Speaker, to give a report about the status of our relations with our employees. There are five major unions in the post office.

[Translation]

There are five major unions in the Post Office Department. Following the Hay report, we have used several means and approaches to improve relations between employees and management. That is the kind of system we have put into place through inter-group sessions and consultation meetings with our employees. The management works exceptionally hard with four of our five unions. I need not remind my colleague from Brandon-Souris of the interventions the Canadian Union of Postal Workers have made during the convention of the Canadian Labour Congress in Quebec City, as reported in newspapers over the last four or five days. Hon. members will admit, if they really want to be fair, that we are dealing with people with whom it is quite hard to negotiate and to discuss and I suggest that the major problem in the Post Office is located at that level.

If all our labour unions co-operated with the Post Office, we could give you a service which would be as competitive and efficient as that of any other administration of the same type or size. At this point, concerning labour relations between the Post Office and its staff, I woud like to read to you an excerpt from a brief which was sent to me and which is entitled Labour Relations; it may be a very delicate subject, since the matter will probably be discussed soon or since we may have to take measures. My colleague says that we are not doing anything in the Post Office, that we are not trying to solve the problems. We are now in conciliation. The chairman has been appointed. In fact, he should begin conciliation talks next Monday. After a certain number of weeks or days of talks, or after both parties have made all their representations, he will prepare and table his report and then we will see what we have to do. If the union wishes to work more closely with us, we will try to solve the problem that way. I would like to quote a few comments on this subject:

• (1752)

[English]

If hon. members listen to their constituents and to the public these days who are indicating that the right to strike in the public service should be eliminated, it would be very easy to say yes right away. But the situation is more delicate than that. One has to understand the reason why the public voices such an opinion.

This opinion does not apply to all employees of the post office, but it is given because some workers of the union, at certain times act irresponsibly. Each work stoppage brings a rash of letters to editors suggesting that the right to strike be withdrawn or that the union be de-certified. All hon. members here have heard these cries. It is understandable the public eventually loses patience. As hon. members know, I sympathize with the Canadian public who get fed up at times with the kind of service that is given by the Post Office Department. I would like to point out that we are not the only ones responsible. We have workers who work well and we have certain workers who are not responsible in the work they do.

It is understandable as I say, that the public will eventually lose patience. It is questionable, however, that the answers suggested would solve the problems. According to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the right to strike is not the problem. In a letter to a major mailing organization the Prime Minister said that stifling the worst symptom of the ailment is not a cure. He suggests that we must deal with the perceptions that labour and management have of themselves as adversaries. The Prime Minister sees the basic challenge as one of securing from labour and management a sense of shared responsibility for making sure the enterprise survives. That is the basic point. If everybody in the post office were responsible about the work they had to perform, we would not have this problem, and we would not be in this mess, as it is called.

The Prime Minister points out that while cynics may scorn this approach in favour of a hard line, experience has proven that conflict between labour and management is neither inherent nor inevitable. Mr. Trudeau said—

An hon. Member: Order.

An hon. Member: You cannot say that, you must refer to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Lamontagne: I am sorry, I will learn after a few weeks.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

Mr. Paproski: You are doing a good job, but you will only be here for a few months anyway.

Mr. Lamontagne: Thank you, to the hon. member on the other side of the House, if that is the way to do it.

Mr. Paproski: Yes.

Mr. Lamontagne: The Prime Minister said "Consider the more harmonious relationships that exist in some other countries, for instance, West Germany. And in our post office, the letter carriers union is participating with management in a problem-solving program, which has succeeded in defusing some potentially explosive grievances." The LCUC have collaborated with us tremendously and we have no problem with them. The Prime Minister closed by insisting that his government will pursue its efforts to get all participants in collective bargaining in the public service to make the process work so that increased regulation does not become necessary.

Tripartitism is one of the many names given to an exercise in joint management/labour/government problem solving. This is an idea which is becoming more and more interesting to companies, labour unions and governments in their search for ways to cool the destructive aspects of confrontation and arrive at decisions which will present the optimum good to all three segments.

Tripartitism, it is hoped, will work for the welfare of the nation without the messiness of table banging, strikes, lockouts, and the impediment of passion. The conditions faced by most western nations—inflation, unemployment, slow growth, limited resources—enhance the appeal of any new ideas. Changes in the social climate, including interest in the quality of work, life, job enrichment, industrial democracy and individual social expectations, contribute as well to the search for new approaches to problem resolution.

It is clear that we must keep looking for better ways with an open mind. That is what we do. John F. Kennedy said, "Those who make peaceful revolution impossible make violent revolution inevitable".

Since the introduction of collective bargaining into the public service a number of bargaining agents have been certified by the Public Service Staff Relations Board to represent employees of the Post Office Department. The Canadian Union of Postal Workers represents approximately 25,000 employees primarily performing internal mail processing and complementary post services. The Canadian Union of Postal Workers was certified on January 16, 1975, at about the time of the Hay Report. The remaining 40,000 unionized employees are represented by the Letter Carriers' Union of Canada, the Association of Postal Officials of Canada, the Canadian Postmasters' and Assistants Association, the Public Service Alliance of Canada and the Professional Institute of the Public Service. These five unions present no problem.

Mr. Paproski: What about the CLC?

Mr. Lamontagne: In order properly to understand the events it is important to place the facts underlying the employer's request in their proper perspective. The Canadian Union of Postal Workers was certified by the Public Service Staff Relations Board in January 1975 as I have said. The certification of the Union of Postal Workers followed the decertification of the Council of Postal Unions, which included the Letter Carriers Union and the Union of Postal Workers, which asked to get out.

During the 1975 round of bargaining with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, it became clear from the union's demands that CUPW wanted a new agreement, quite distinct from the one which had just ended. In fact, because of the many changes that had been made, the 1975 agreement could justly be described as new. This is why we find it surprising, to say the least, that the proposals of CUPW would have the effect of writing a new collective agreement once again.

During the current negotiations—and I would like to bring this point to hon. members' attention because they think nothing has been done—the parties met on April 20 and 22, May 19, October 5, 6, 12, 18, 25 and 27 and November 4, 8, 10, and 17, 1977. As the House can see, during a seven month period there were only thirteen meetings. We believe it is necessary to explain these gaps.

CUPW decided to break off negotiations at the first official meeting on May 19, 1977 after some thirty minutes of discussions. This breakdown was followed by a complaint to the Public Service Staff Relations Board by CUPW alleging that the employer was contravening sections 8, 9 and 10 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Not until October—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) is rising on a point of order?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair I would like to ask if this discussion is now concluded. We started at 5:20 p.m. rather than five o'clock.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, there are so many minutes left to debate this motion. We are not asking for extra time at this moment, but because this is a motion for the production of papers we have so many minutes left and we want to know how much more time is available.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are 45 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion does remain on the Order Paper certainly. Again, the hour provided for consideration of private members' business has expired. I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO EXTEND RANGE OF PERSONS TO WHOM ANTI-INFLATION GUIDELINES APPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that Bill C-18, to amend the Anti-Inflation Act and guidelines, be read the third time and do pass.

• (2012)

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, when I called it five o'clock I was speaking about the problems of the dollar. Roger Croft, a Toronto Star staff writer, under the headline "Moves to prop up the dollar called too little, too late", wrote the following today:

> Ottawa's latest moves to prop the sagging dollar are too little, too late, most economists and foreign exchange dealers say.
>
> . . . in hectic trading yesterday, the dollar skidded to yet another 35-year low at 87.4 cents U.S. before recovering slightly . . .

But more important is the cost.

> "We've got a run on the currency," Michael Graham, director of dealers A. E. Ames and Co. Ltd., told the Star.
>
> "Foreign investors have lost confidence in the Canadian economy and are simply not putting their money into Canadian funds."
>
> At the same time, added Graham, Canadians themselves are either buying real estate in Florida or opening up U.S. currency accounts "because no one in this country has any more confidence left.
>
> "Both the Bank of Canada and the government have done too little, too late."

The article later refers to some of the reasons for our problems as follows:

> "Our high inflation rate—after three years of wage and price controls—our high jobless rate, the big and growing budget deficits and the Quebec situation. Add the expected election to that lot, and no wonder everyone wants out of Canadian funds," Graham said.

Later in the article we find the following:

> "No one wants to stick his neck out on that one" . . .

This is a reference to where the Canadian dollar will go.

> "We thought 95 was the psychological barrier late last year. Then it got to 90 and recently people have been saying that 87 cents will be the bottom."

There is now talk that at 85 cents there might be a turnaround. According to currency dealers, the Europeans got out of Canadian currency long ago. That is because they had sold off almost all they had. The article continues:

> "The gnomes of Zurich have by now got out of the situation."
>
> Barry Davenport, chief foreign exchange dealer with Wood Gundy Ltd. on Bay St. said he expects the dollar to continue "very, very weak for the foreseeable future."

"It doesn't matter what the Bank of Canada or the finance minister do to stem the drop in the Canadian dollar. It won't have any effect. Things have to change . . ."

Among those uncertainties, said Davenport, are the Quebec situation, the upcoming federal election and the relatively poor state of the Canadian economy.

Doug Peters, chief economist at the Toronto Dominion Bank, said . . .

"The government should have convinced the speculators—whether corporate or private—that it meant business. I don't think the fundamental economic situation warrants this run on the dollar."

This is what Mr. Rogers, chief economist at the Bank of Nova Scotia, had to say:

There's talk and uncertainty about a new federal budget. But the sort of budget a government should bring in to deal with a run on its currency is a restrictive budget . . .

Finally, a senior partner at Dominion Securities Ltd. said that the only thing that can save the Canadian dollar is a new government. I think we can agree with that.

The Speech of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in New York about two weeks ago was really saying that "when you are broke you have to be kind to your bankers". In his speech he said that Quebec would not separate. Anyone who lends money would want to hear that. However, there are no assurances. It seems that our economic situation will not improve until the Quebec problem is settled. The flight of capital from that province, mainly to the United States, and the dislocating effect of language problems prevent the functioning of companies which must do business in other parts of Canada and in the United States. It is no wonder that business is moving out of that province. However, by attempting to shore up the economic life of Quebec the federal government is diverting large amounts of public funds into that province. Even with the most careful management it is difficult to allocate funds where they can have a meaningful and productive role.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) and the Prime Minister have looked to the United States to bring the Canadian economy out of its doldrums. The United States is now obviously being geared to a much higher inflationary rate than was even considered a few months ago. There is no doubt that inflation in the United States is going up and is going to go up at a faster rate. The basic rate has moved from 6 per cent to 6½ per cent and it will move to almost 7 per cent or more later this year. The United States coal contract will be a goal which other unions will strive to match, and they will prod non-union workers to demand increased wages. The United States dollar is weak, and ours is weaker. That will cause import prices to rise.

The President of the United States has had to back higher farm prices, stockpile copper and make a good many other promises in order to nail down votes to ratify the Panama Canal Treaty. On the political scene, the Panama Canal Treaty has increased the inflationary risk. The government and Congress are not likely to do very much about it. Mr. Carter will obviously look for other ways to deal with inflation, but he is not going to balance the budget. He wants tax cuts, and he will not restrain the money supply. Will the President of the United States turn to what the AIB was supposed to do in Canada?

How will President Carter control wages and prices? He will obviously be forced into the same tactics used by the AIB. One tactic was to get at wages and prices directly. High wages and high prices are symptoms of inflation, not the cause. President Carter and other people around him know that controls have not worked in the United States, in Canada or in any other major country, so it is almost certain that United States inflation will race along and gather steam as the year goes by.

A previous minister of finance, Mr. Turner, always maintained that inflation arose outside the country and that there was nothing we could do about it. Inflation has created a voracious monster, and it may in time destroy our institutions. We have had a decade of accelerated inflation, and all indications are that we will have more in the next few years. We measure goods and services in terms of money prices. If we had a pure barter economy, there would not be generalized inflation. If the supply of money rises faster than the supply of goods and services, then prices for all goods and services rise as well. Only if the money supply does not become more plentiful relative to goods and services will inflation be contained.

In the early stages of inflation the total money supply declines as the public is duped into holding money at high rates of interest, but actually at negative real rates of return. As inflation advances the public tries to dump its money into buying goods before inflation reduces their value. But obviously credit must be settled at some time, and there is a limit to credit.

There are other inflationary factors which are new. Mr. Henry Kaufman, in an address to the Committee on the Budget of the U.S. House of Representatives, had this to say:

The composition of credit demands in 1978 reveals part of the emerging problem. I shall focus on three major demanders for money—the households, business and the Federal Government. The increases in consumer credit and mortgage debt, reflecting mainly borrowings by individuals, is truly spectacular.

This is referring to the American scene.

It reflects strong demands for consumer goods and housing, sharp increases in prices, and a new inflationary psychology that is perhaps more than marginally liberalizing the financing attitudes and habits of individuals.

Our inability to reduce inflation is encouraging individuals to bid far more aggressively for mortgage funds than in the past because home ownership, at least in the postwar period, has been a far more satisfactory hedge against inflation than investments in financial assets ranging from savings deposits to bonds and to common stock.

So home ownership and various other personal needs requiring credit have certainly increased the number of problems related to borrowing. People's personal monetary habits spread over the nation as a whole, and that is important.

One of the greatest difficulties in steadying inflation is the definition of money. The Bank of Canada has standardized four types of money, and if the effect of money on inflation in real economic activity is viewed solely in terms of actual spending on goods and services, then we must look at spendable money. But when money is viewed as a commodity it seems to be a much broader concept. Obviously there should be a wider definition of money or of what should be called the total money supply. If there is an excessive creation of money, it will undermine its value; if there is slow growth, it will raise the value of money.

● (2022)

It is obvious in an open economy such as is Canada's that large increases in money supply are not necessarily reflected in domestic price levels in the immediate future. In our open economy, an increase in the money supply so that the total supply of goods and services is greater than the productive capacity of the domestic market can be met by increased imports, because when domestic prices rise above competitive world prices an inflow of goods and services results. Obviously excessive money supply results in a severe deterioration in the current account of the balance of payments, with the consequent downward movement of the external value of the currency.

Canada has shown all the symptoms of excessive money creation in the early 1970's. The current account deficit was $4.8 billion in 1975; $4.2 billion in 1976; and $4.1 billion in 1977. How should one deal with the current account deficit? There are a number of ways of dealing with it, or one can use a combination of them all. Raising domestic interest rates, which the Bank of Canada has just instituted, is obviously one action which causes an inflow of money. But when we are hampered by political uncertainty in the country, with an election in the wind and with the problems with Quebec, this might offset the deficit, and tight money will eliminate the excessive current account. Also, the Central Bank could allow its foreign exchange reserves to run down, which would eventually diminish the money supply, or it could induce sellers to accept the local currency. Unless excessive monetary creation is stopped, money will either depreciate against local goods and services or against foreign currency.

Toward the end of 1976 the Bank of Canada allowed interest rates to fall and differentials vis-à-vis the U.S. money market to narrow sharply so that the excessive money creation in a little over a year has reduced the external value of the Canadian dollar by 13 per cent.

From 1967 to 1977 the growth of the money supply was truly phenomenal but the Canadian public was willing to hold increasing amounts of the total money supply as a percentage of its transactions. This was borne out in the annual report of 1976 of the Bank of Canada, which stated the following:

> —the inference is that as incomes have risen over this period, most people wish to hold a larger proportion of their incomes in the form of interest earning deposits. In terms of our earlier discussions of velocity, it is also a way of saying that every dollar of money turned over fewer and fewer times in the past ten years to accomplish a given rate of economic growth. Excessive credit demands were being accommodated rather easily by the further creation of money, and therefore, interest rates were not allowed to perform their credit allocative function.

During the period of 1967 to 1977 three quarters of the increasing assets of the Bank of Canada have been ascribed to the purchase of Government of Canada bonds. Obviously the Bank of Canada has been monetizing government of Canada bonds, the result of which has been a rapid increase in inflation.

Supporters of Keynes point out the economic benefits of a budget deficit. They indicate that the Bank of Canada has had to increase its support as a percentage of the net financing requirements. In the last ten years the government of Canada has been unable or unwilling to obtain non-inflationary financing, such as sales to the non-banking general public, and has relied increasingly on the printing presses. Obviously credit demands rise faster than the money supply, with the competition for funds causing interest rates to rise, thus eliminating the weaker borrower, and if at this stage the central Bank keeps interest rates from rising too fast, it is forced to monetize the increasing credit amounts.

This happened in 1972 to 1974 with a minority government which feared that bad publicity would result. The result was that the Bank of Canada took up 6 per cent of the government's net financing requirements. According to the "Bank of Canada Review", in 1966 to 1968 the Bank of Canada purchased 18 per cent of the bonds, which amounted to $2,578 million. In 1972 to 1974 the Bank of Canada purchased 66 per cent of the bonds which amounted to $3,271 million. In the first nine months of this year, almost 23.5 per cent of the bonds was taken up.

It is obvious that the purchase of these bonds by the Bank of Canada has increased our rate of inflation. This enormous appetite of the public sector has crowded out the private sector, and the Bank of Canada rescued the Canadian government by purchasing much of its debt. The situation was turned back once more in the last year, and with the government's recurring record of a high budgetary deficit it is obvious that this year some 25 per cent or more will have to be monetized by the government and by the central Bank, thus increasing our financial and inflationary expectations.

In the fiscal year of 1978-79 the prospects are frightening. With a $10 billion deficit and, it is to be hoped, a reviving private sector, interest rates will be forced up to high levels or, what is even worse, monetization on a large scale will be required or the printing of more money. It is estimated that if the government monetizes only 25 per cent of its requirements in two years, we will have created $34 billion in total money, or an increase of 40 per cent in two years.

How inflation can be kept below double digit rates is not at all clear. A sensible approach for the government of Canada to take is to eliminate its $10 billion to $11 billion deficit which would allow the central Bank to follow non-inflationary policies. To raise taxes now would harm the private sector. To cut expenditures seems to be the best course to follow. However, the government has obviously decided to raise a substantial portion of its next financing abroad. The Minister of Finance should tell us what are his financing plans for the next year.

The floating of the $750 million loan is just the beginning, and the speech of the Prime Minister paves the way for the future. But how can he be so hopeful about the political realities in Quebec? Obviously the government hopes to borrow abroad so as to shore up the Canadian dollar. If foreign currency is exchanged for the Canadian dollar in a freely floating market, the net effect would be to raise the value of the Canadian dollar, with beneficial side effects on the anti-inflation effort. But if the foreign currency is converted into Canadian dollars and is absorbed into foreign currency reserves, the inflationary impact will remain the same. It seems that we will not have a balanced budget, and there are those who suggest that with the frightening prospect of two $10 billion to $11 billion deficits back to back, our rates of inflation could be double digit.

The demise of the AIB has to come. It was faulty in the beginning and it failed to attack the causes of inflation. All it dealt with was the symptoms, the rise in wages and prices. Inflationary forces were at work internally and externally and the government has done little about them.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion, (Mr. Chrétien), which was agreed to on the following division.

(Division No. 38)

YEAS

Messrs.

Abbott	Duclos	Lee
Béchard	Dupont	Lefebvre
Bégin (Miss)	Dupras	Loiselle (Chambly)
Blais	Duquet	Lumley
Blaker	Faulkner	MacDonald (Cardigan)
Blouin	Fleming	MacEachen
Buchanan	Foster	MacFarlane
Bussières	Francis	MacGuigan
Campagnolo (Mrs.)	Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)	Maine
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)	Gendron	Marceau
Caron	Gillespie	McRae
Chrétien	Gray	Nicholson (Miss)
Clermont	Guilbault	O'Connell
Collenette	Harquail	Ouellet
Comtois	Herbert	Parent
Corbin	Holt (Mrs.)	Penner
Corriveau	Hopkins	Pinard
Cullen	Horner	Poulin
Cyr	Joyal	Prud'homme
Danson	Kaplan	Railton
Daudlin	Lajoie	Reid
Dawson	Lalonde	Robinson
De Bané	Lamontagne	Roy (Timmins)
Demers	Laniel	Roy (Laval)
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)	Lapointe
	Leblanc (Laurier)

[Mr. Ritchie.]

Messrs.

Sauvé (Mrs.)	Smith (Saint-Jean)	Stollery
Savard	Stewart (Cochrane)	Tessier
Schumacher		Watson
Sharp		Yanakis
		Young—86.

NAYS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack	Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)	Nielsen
Andre (Calgary Centre)	Lambert (Bellechasse)	Nowlan
Beatty	Lambert (Edmonton West)	Nystrom
Cadieu	MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)	Orlikow
Crouse	Matte	Paproski
Dinsdale	Mazankowski	Peters
Dionne (Kamouraska)	McGrath	Ritchie
Ellis	McKenzie	Rodriguez
Friesen	McKinley	Saltsman
Hnatyshyn	McKinnon	Stevens
Hogan	Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)	Symes
Howie		Towers
Huntington		Whittaker
Johnston		Wise
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)		Woolliams—41.

● (2112)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

FARM CREDIT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, March 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-29, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to indicate our party's support for the bill before the House tonight, in a mood of friendliness and co-operativeness, in order to expedite the work of parliament, and I will be as brief as I possibly can. The bill before the House tonight does a couple of things. It increases the Farm Credit Corporation's capital from $100 million to $150 million; it also increases the amount that can be lent to individual farmers under the Farm Credit Corporation. It increases the lending limits to $200,000 for all borrowers. At present the limitations are $150,000 for persons under the age of 35 and $100,000 for the people over the age of 35.

As I have said, the bill before us is a good bill; it will help farmers a little bit better in a pinch. But I want to make it clear that it will not solve their problems.

It will be worth while to take a few minutes to put on the record some of the statistics that show the reality of the problems faced by Canadian farmers today. I know of many members, even some from New Brunswick, who are not aware of the dire financial circumstances that farmers are faced with today in Canada. The number of farms in this country is decreasing every year. According to the census, from 1951 to 1976 the number of small farms in the small farm category, which comprises acreage ranging from 70 to 759 acres, went down by 36 per cent. The number of farms in the 760 acre and more category went up by 72 per cent. One can see, Mr. Speaker, that farms in Canada are becoming larger and larger and more and more of the smaller farmers are being forced off the land.

Farm debt should concern all of us. We are discussing a bill to lend farmers money and farm debt is going up very rapidly. It is probably even going up in Crowfoot. For example, in 1966 we find that the farm debt in this country was some $3.4 billion; in 1976 the farm debt had gone up to some $9.5 billion. Farm debt is triple what it was previously.

Then if you look at net farm income, Mr. Speaker, one would assume that if the farm debt is going up, with people borrowing money and expanding their assets, then net farm income should likewise go up. We all know that farmers are hard working people. It should be pointed out to the people of Canada that the Canadian farmer is the most productive farmer in the world. It costs only about 14 per cent of our consumer dollar to buy food in this country, whereas in the United States it costs about 15 per cent of the consumer dollar. In every other country in the world costs are much higher than that. The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool recently used as an example a typical food basket and it was found that for that food basket in Canada it took about five hours and 15 minutes worth of labour to buy it. In Washington, in the U.S., it took about seven hours of labour to buy that same basket of food. In Toyko it takes around 24 hours worth of labour, and in Buenos Aires, Brazil, it takes approximately 60 hours of labour to buy the same basket of food. Once again we can see the Canadian farmer is indeed most productive. Canadian consumers are very fortunate that our farming system is efficient and we are able to produce food at a lower price than any other country in the world.

I suspect in some areas where food prices are high that it is not the fault of the farmer, it is the fault of the middleman. Again there are examples to point that out. For instance, using the consumer price index in January we found that the price of beef had gone up some 33 per cent. For a 1,000 pound steer we found that the farmer had received an extra 19 per cent in January, 1978, or an extra $80 over what he would have received in January, 1977. The consumer had paid an extra 33 per cent for the steer, or an extra $180. This meant the middleman had received an extra $100 for the steer for that same period. We looked at the statistics for these middlemen. We looked at wage rates first of all, because in this House there are hon. members who will say that the workers are making too much money. We found that the wage agreements for the packing house workers had increased only 6 per cent during that calendar year. So it was not the workers who were receiving that money.

One would assume with all this extra investment and the efficiency of the farmer, together with the free enterprise values in this country, that the farmer would be receiving a much higher income due to his initiative, hard work and all the expansion of his capital, his assets and the like. But that is not the case at all.

I have here before me the figures on net income for Canadian farmers. In 1974 net income was some $3.9 billion. In 1975 it had gone up to some $4.3 billion. In 1976 it had gone down to some $3.7 billion, and in 1977, according to the best estimates of Statistics Canada, it will be about $3.3 billion.

● (2122)

This means the farmers of this country had a drop in wages and salaries of some 23 per cent. Which other group in society would allow their wages to go down by that amount? That is what happened to the farmers of this country. It is net income they are losing, not their cash receipts.

At the same time as income went down, what happened to their costs? In 1975, farm costs in this country were $6.6 billion. In 1976 they were $7.3 billion and in 1977 it looks as though they will be $7.8 billion. Therefore, while the cost to the farmer increased by some 18 per cent, his net income dropped by 23 per cent. The Canadian farmer is expected to meet his 1978 costs with his 1974 income. That is not fair. Farm incomes must be higher. The farmer must receive a guaranteed price for his commodity. He must get a better break from the marketplace. The farmer is not receiving a break from this government.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has gotten up time and again in the House to say that we have the greatest farm programs and the wealthiest farmers in the world. I wish he would look at some of his own statistics which show that farm income has decreased drastically. Debts are piling up and farmers are being forced to leave the land.

Let us look at more statistics which point out what is happening in rural Canada, particularly in my province. Yesterday I was astounded to find in some research we were doing that cash receipts in Saskatchewan for January 1978 had fallen by 55 per cent over January 1975. If the people in the constituency of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) had a drop in income of 55 per cent, she would scream blue murder in the House like I am trying to do now. That is the drop in cash receipts for Saskatchewan farmers between 1975 and 1978, according to the Department of Agriculture and Statistics Canada.

Let us look at the Saskatchewan operating costs and depreciation charges. In the full year 1977, compared with 1975, the operating costs in Saskatchewan increased by 23 per cent. While cash receipts are down by 55 per cent, their costs are up by 33 per cent. Is it any wonder why grain farmers in my province, Manitoba and Alberta are going out of business? Is it any wonder more and more farmers are being forced to sell their land? The older farmers are selling to the big guy. Farms are consolidating very quickly.

Look at net income in Saskatchewan. If you take away the cash receipts and leave in the farmer's pocket the money he is able to spend, you find that net income in Saskatchewan between 1975 and 1977 decreased by some 40 per cent.

Stabilization programs will not rectify that situation in any serious way.

The 1978 forecasts for Saskatchewan indicate that costs will probably be 32 per cent higher than 1975 costs. The 1978 costs will be 105 per cent higher than the 1970 to 1974 average. In every province in this country there was a similar situation. I am sure the hon. member from British Columbia who will be speaking after me will be saying some of the same things about farm income.

Let us look at Alberta, the province of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) who is worried about his re-election in Crowfoot. In 1978, cash receipts in that province were down by some 38 per cent over January 1975. In Manitoba, cash receipts in January 1978 were down by some 53 per cent over 1975. In other words, the drop in Manitoba was roughly the same as the 55 per cent drop in Saskatchewan.

I have intentionally used a lot of figures and statistics to point out to the House and the government that there has been a serious drop in farm income. Passing a bill like this, even though it is good and will help some farmers in a pinch, is not good enough. We must start determining what we are going to do to ensure that farmers survive and that their family farm remains the basic unit of production. If we do not do that, the family farms will disappear. We will have a situation similar to that in states in the United States such as Colorado, where 95 per cent of the farmland is owned by non-farmers such as doctors, lawyers, wealthy people in the cities, corporations, real estate people and the like. The rest is owned by the farmers who are doing the farming. If we go that way in this country, it will not only be a disaster socially but economically, not just for the farmers but for the country.

As the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has stated, we in Canada have a real crisis in unemployment. If we do not produce and process our food in Canada, we will add to that unemployment problem. In almost any food category in which we are not self-sufficient, we are not only losing jobs but a lot of money. We are only self-sufficient in a few items of food in this country. According to all indications, if we do not start changing our policies, by the year 2000 Canada will not be feeding itself. According to the Science Council, we will only be self-sufficient in five of the 27 basic foods in Canada.

According to the figures of the Minister of Agriculture, if we take away grain and oilseeds we will be in a deficit position in production of food to the tune of about $1.8 billion. That is a downright shame. Those policies have to change. One change should be to ensure that our farmers receive a decent wage. If they get a decent wage, they will produce food.

This country has the capacity to feed ourselves for hundreds of years in the future as well as the capacity to feed a lot of others in the world. We should be making a commitment to self-sufficiency. That would not only be good for rural Canada but for the urban consumer as well.

I want to use one example, that of broilers. There is now a move in Canada that is almost completed which I support totally. That is the bringing in of a national marketing board to handle broilers and chickens across this country. We will have that marketing board as soon as the province of Alberta gives us the green light. The other provinces are pretty well in agreement.

In anticipation of a national marketing board, a number of large chicken importers in Canada have been importing an unduly large number of imports from the United States. They do that because, when a supply management board is brought in, import quotas will be based on the previous five year average. Therefore, they are importing five, ten, 15 or 20 times as many broilers as in the past in order to up their average of imports. In that way they will not be as controlled by the farmers' agency as they might otherwise be, as it is in terms of industrial milk, eggs and other products marketed through the marketing board in this country or through the provinces.

Studies have pointed out that in the last year in the area of chickens alone, literally tens of millions of dollars have been lost in productivity as well as jobs we would have had if we had not imported so many chickens from abroad. We should have been producing Canadian chickens, making sure that Canadian chicken farmers had better incomes and that Canadian workers eviscerated, processed and cleaned those chickens instead of letting that be done in the United States. We should have been making sure that Canadians in the transportation and refrigeration industries were given jobs transporting those chickens.

● (2132)

We have lost literally tens of thousands of dollars in that industry alone, but I could go through the whole food industry. I admit that I do not know very much about particular industries in Ontario, but I know that fruit and vegetable growers at about the time of the second world war supplied about 70 per cent of the Canadian market. I believe we now supply about only 30 per cent of our market. We have the capacity to be almost self-sufficient in fruits and vegetables, yet we are not. Because we are not, we are losing hundreds of millions of dollars which could be generated in Canada.

Our target must be to be self-sufficient in food. One way of doing that would be to make sure that farmers are guaranteed decent prices for their products. If they are guaranteed decent prices, they will produce food. Farmers are about the only people in our country who do not have guaranteed prices for their labour or their commodities, and they have to have guaranteed prices if they are to produce food. We have to produce food if we are to keep farmers on the farm and if we are to keep the rural fabric of our country going as strongly as it should.

I want to remind hon. members of these things because I feel that most Canadians think we can produce an infinite amount of food and that we are the bread basket of the world. People do not realize that with our existing policies, according to the government, the Science Council of Canada and almost every organization which has looked into this, by the year 2000 we will be a net importer of food. We will not be able to feed ourselves, and that will be mainly because of policies which do not assist farmers to produce the food that they can be producing.

With regard to self-sufficiency, according to the federal government there are several hundred acres of good quality farmland being taken out of production each and every day. Because of our climate we cannot produce food in most of the country. We have lakes, water, muskegs, forests and places where food just cannot be produced. Only about 4 per cent of our country can produce food in great quantities, yet several hundred acres of farmland are being paved under each and every day or sold to developers for urban development and turned into such a state where the land cannot be recaptured for the production of food. I think that is a crime, and it should not go on. We should be concerned about producing as much food as we can in order to feed the people of this country, to stimulate our economy and to make our contribution abroad in terms of foreign aid.

I call upon this House to pass this bill as quickly as possible so that farmers who need more credit from the Farm Credit Corporation can get it. However, I ask hon. members on both sides of the House to realize that farming is important, that without the support of this government and governments right across the country there will be fewer and fewer farmers, and that the day will come when there will be a food shortage and we will be a net importer of food.

That might not sound very serious to many people, but there was a time when we did not worry about the shortage of oil. We said we could get all the oil we needed from the Arabs or Venezuelans at very low prices. That is the kind of policy we pursued for years, and now we have an energy crisis and a price crisis. If we do not have foresight, the same thing will happen with regard to food about 25 or 30 years from now. I ask hon. members, please, to do something about this now instead of burdening our children and our grandchildren.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I speak this evening on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

The Farm Credit Corporation has been administering the Farm Credit Act for close to 20 years. In that time, it has approved over 192,000 loans totalling more than $3.1 billion. A further indication of the importance of this agency is that it extends approximately 60 per cent to 70 per cent of all the long-term farm credit in Canada. In recent years, private lenders, the chartered banks in particular, have become more active in the general field of farm credit, and, more particularly, in the area of long-term credit. I sincerely welcome this increased participation. The Farm Credit Corporation is a long way from meeting the total demand, and unless steps are taken to meet it, the gap will continue to widen. Projections are that it will soon take close to $1 billion per year to meet the long-term credit needs of Canadian farmers.

This bill brings forth a number of amendments designed to update the Farm Credit Act so that Canadian farmers can maintain their position of leadership in the world and increase their productivity level through the wise use of credit.

The major amendments are as follows: the FCC's capital will be increased from $100 million to $150 million, thus increasing the corporation's borrowing capacity to $3.75 billion from $2.5 billion. There is real urgency for this amendment because the corporation's capital will be used up by May, 1978.

Most age restrictions on lending will be removed except for loans to persons phasing into farming. This special advantage would continue to be offered to persons under 35 years of age.

The maximum loan for a single farming enterprise will be increased to $200,000 for one qualifying applicant and $400,000 for two or more qualifying applicants.

Before going on to the lesser amendments, let me give the reasons for these three proposals. The present authorized capital of $100 million and the corporation's borrowing capacity of 25 times that, or $2.5 billion, will be exhausted early in 1978-79.

The corporation's capital was last increased in 1975 by about 50 per cent, from $66 million. Between 1971 and 1976 the total value of farm capital in Canada increased from $23.7 billion to $57 billion, representing an increase of close to 140 per cent. The number of farms with annual sales of $5,000 or more has increased by 18 per cent. The number whose sales exceed $10,000 increased by more than 63 per cent. The corporation therefore needs a significant increase in borrowing power to be able to keep pace with the increase in total farm capital.

In order to meet future demands we are also proposing that henceforth requests for additional capital could also be authorized under an appropriation act. Any provision of an appropriation act authorizing an increase in the aggregate amount would stand permanently referred to any committee of the House of Commons established for the purpose of reviewing matters relating to agriculture.

It should be noted that the FCC will continue to be restrictive in its lending guidelines in order to stay in line with the government's restraint program. This means that applications will continue to be assessed according to the applicant's need for funds from the Farm Credit Corporation.

The second amendment removes age as a qualifying factor for lending limits. Hon. members will recall that when the Minister of Agriculture proposed the 1975 amendments to the Farm Credit Act, the main thrust of that bill was to help young people get started in farming. Since then the FCC's total lending to young farmers has steadily increased. This year almost three quarters of all loans went to persons under 35 years of age. This represents some $410 million.

A great number of farmers, farm organizations and the FCC advisory committee as well as members of parliament have written to the Minister of Agriculture and made recommendations in the past few years. One of the points that constantly comes up is that need does not magically stop at 35.

The present amendments extend these advantages to all farmers. Nothing is taken away from young farmers by these amendments. They simply acknowledge that basic credit requirements do not change on a specific birth date. Experience indicates that the imposition of the 35-year age limit encourages borrowers to rearrange business structures to qualify a spouse or child. This amendment will give more flexibility in meeting real credit needs. The 35-year age limit would remain on what we now call Part IV, or beginning farmer loans, which allow the borrower to retain an off-farm job for up to five years before becoming principally engaged in farming.

● (2142)

We must recognize that capitalization under all its forms is increasing in agriculture. With the farm labour problems of the past and the future, increased mechanization will continue. Many of the costs of technological change cannot be paid for immediately out of current incomes. Time is required. I wish to remind the House that in recent years the farmer has very often been faced with the cost-price squeeze. This cost-price squeeze has forced him to pay for most capital requirements over a substantial period of time.

The third amendment, therefore, deals with increases in lending limits. Under its present legislation, the Farm Credit Corporation can lend up to $100,000 for standard farm loans and up to $150,000 for loans for young farmers. The $150,000 limit for young farmers was set in 1975 and the $100,000 limit for the standard loans was set in 1972. According to Statistics Canada, land values have increased 25 per cent since 1975 and 130 per cent since 1972. Furthermore, a farm today is nearly 10 per cent larger than it was in 1975.

The present loan limit applies to farm units as well as to applicants. Thus, the maximum loan for a farm operated by father and child or by partners is presently $100,000 or $150,000, depending on age. If this bill is approved, the Farm Credit Act would provide a new loan limit of $200,000 per qualifying operator up to a maximum of $400,000 for a farm unit where there are two or more qualifying operators. We feel this will facilitate joint operations, encourage greater efficiency and a smoother phasing in of the young operator into the family farm business.

This increase in lending limits is presently necessary so that the Farm Credit Corporation can meet the credit needs of Canadian farmers. There are a number of sectors which have become increasingly difficult to finance. For example, a grain-livestock operation of some 1,100 acres in Alberta presently costs about $400,000. In Saskatchewan, let us say on the Regina plains, if one wishes to purchase two sections of wheat land it would likely cost over $500,000. In Ontario, a 75-cow dairy farm would cost more than $300,000. Cash cropping land of about 200 acres in size in southwestern Ontario would probably cost nearly $300,000 today. These are but a few examples of some typical capitalization requirements on family farms in Canada.

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

In looking at these proposed amendments, some critics will say that raising loan limits, removing the age limits and adding capital for the corporation will have an inflationary effect on land values. There may be a small element of truth to this statement since the provision of more adequate credit will at all times favour the buying and selling of land. However, farm land gets its value because of its capacity to produce income. It is really economic conditions—that is, the level of income produced—which are the main determinant of land prices, not credit. An increase in the lending limits and removal of age limits only mean that the farmer with the greatest need can more easily compete for the land available.

A small number of other amendments are included in this bill which are designed to streamline the administrative operations of the act. These are, first, the use of market value to assess all loans. The Farm Credit Corporation at present uses two values in assessing the security it takes: market value and appraised value. Generally, market values are used for young borrowers and the appraised value for older borrowers. Market value is based on recent sales of similar properties while appraised or productive value is mainly based on the capitalized value of net income. Appraised value is calculated, and therefore a theoretical value which is bound to confuse most people, other than economists. The use of these different values has been confusing to borrowers and to other agencies, as well as to FCC staff. In recommending the use of market value and repayment ability, it is understood that loan limits would be based on the lower of the two. This point should be stressed. No matter how high or low the market value, all loans are determined on the repayment ability of the proposed operation.

A second amendment regards the removal of the supervision fee. Under the original act passed in 1969, a supervision fee of $25 was set for supervised loans; that is, those that exceed 75 per cent of the appraised value. The fee is now more of a nuisance than anything else, and sometimes gets in the way of establishing good relationships between the borrower and staff. Under the proposed legislation, advisory services would be provided only where needed and wanted.

Third, there is the provision for losses on loans. The present act has established a reserve where actual losses have been charged. This amendment would allow the corporation to make provisions for these losses according to accepted accounting principles.

The last amendment proposes that penalty interest be dropped. It is believed that removal of penalty interest would make the Farm Credit Act more compatible with the spirit of the Interest Act, which prohibits penalty interest except in those acts which specifically provide for it. Even a higher penalty interest would probably not have the desired deterrent effect because farmers traditionally pay off loans as fast as they can, even when the interest rate is well below the market rate.

In 1978, farmers will face further increases in costs of farm inputs and the present outlook is for slightly decreased realized net income. When hon. members consider that these farmers represent a mere 6 per cent of our population, yet they produce most of the food that all 24 million Canadians consume, as well as earn about $4 billion in foreign exchange from exports, they can understand the importance of these amendments. One of the tools of our modern economy, credit, must be available to the Canadian provider of food.

I also want to mention that loans under the Farm Credit Act are not a grant or a gift. Borrowers enjoy a slightly lower than market rate. The FCC interest rate is presently 9¼ per cent. On a $200,000 loan amortized over 29 years, this represents an average of $13,000 in interest payments alone per year. The Farm Credit Act is a tool which gives operators of family farms a chance to make a success of their operations. One need only look at FCC's statistics to realize that this opportunity is not taken lightly. Farmers have by far the best repayment record in our Canadian society.

I have faith in the ability of Canadian farmers to continue to produce high quality food in an efficient manner. I urge hon. members to show their support for these efforts by giving farmers this needed legislation.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Farm Credit Act. We in this party were prepared to have this bill go through this evening. We agree the main thrust of this bill is the increase in money for loans. We were prepared to pass this piece of legislation quickly tonight. We wanted to see it go into committee, go through committee, and come back before the House dissolves, which I believe will not be too long.

• (2152)

Because the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) rose this evening and read a lot of statistics into the record, which everyone in Canada is aware of, and because he used up 20 minutes of the time of the House doing the job of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan)—

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the House, which I failed to do in the first instance, of the fact that the Minister of Agriculture was performing another duty, and I was asked as Acting Minister of Agriculture to make a speech this evening. If the hon. member is going to say something which has never been heard in Canada before, we would be glad to hear it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am not rising on a point of order, but I think the minister—

Miss Bégin: Then sit down.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Clearly the Minister of Veterans Affairs is misleading the House. The Minister of Agriculture has already spoken on second reading. He started off the debate. I was present in the Chamber at that time. The hon. member for Lisgar followed him. I do not understand why the minister—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. All of these remarks are argumentative, and I think the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary should pursue his own intervention.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I was present in the Chamber, and I heard the speech by the Minister of Agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary on a point of order.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I would still like to rise on a point of order with regard to what the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) has just said. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has not spoken yet to the bill, and the explanation was given by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald).

[English]

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, the government is filibustering its own bill. Farm credit needs money. Members of the Conservative party do not disagree with that.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Whittaker: We do not disagree with that. The Minister of Agriculture opened this debate.

An hon. Member: No, the Minister of Agriculture did not speak.

Mr. Whittaker: I heard him.

Some hon. Members: He did not speak.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I was present in the Chamber and I heard the Minister of Agriculture speak on this bill. Clearly hon. members opposite are filibustering the bill. The minister has known for six months, or for at least four months, that the Farm Credit Corporation needs more money. He could have brought the bill in four months ago. He is not providing the House with an opportunity to say anything regarding this piece of legislation. In fact, hon. members of the Liberal party are trying their best not to let the opposition say anything on this bill.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: Opposition members do not get very many opportunities to speak on agriculture in the House. Very seldom do we have an opportunity to speak on farm credit. The minister is dragging his feet. Hon. members opposite are filibustering in an attempt to stop opposition members from speaking. The Minister of Agriculture had his opportunity.

An hon. Member: When did he speak?

Mr. Whittaker: I know when the minister spoke. I sat in the House and listened. I do not have to listen to the baloney which is coming from hon. members opposite.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whittaker: I do not have to agree with the baloney from the government side.

Mrs. Holt: Watch your farm language.

Mr. Whittaker: I know more farm language than that. You city slickers ought to sit and listen for a change. It is just about time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: I have a lot to say about farm credit. Hon. members opposite should not bother reading figures into the record and wasting the time of the House. The minister read a lot of statistics into the record. That can be done every day. It is not difficult.

There are many things going on in the field of farm credit which should be brought to the attention of the House. I brought forth one such matter before committee the other day. The last time the House dealt with farm credit, time was spent on dealing with people under 35 being able to hold a job for five years while they established their farms. The other day I noticed in the lending policy of the Farm Credit Act that there is an eligibility clause. I should like to refer to part IV, which reads as follows:

> It is not intended that part IV loans should be made to persons or the spouses of persons who are established in stable employment that provides what is considered in the community to be an adequate level of living, even if such persons have capabilities as farmers or are presently involved in farming.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whittaker: Even though hon. members opposite are making a lot of noise, I should like to indicate that this policy makes a farce out of the Farm Credit Act.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): No way.

Mr. Whittaker: Hon. members opposite do not want to hear any reason. That is a complete and utter farce. It is completely against what the act indicates.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to inform the hon. member that I do not think he should be reading.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. minister is attempting to use up part of my time. He mentions my reading into the record, but at least I read some pertinent information. He read his speech. He read every word of the entire speech he made.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Whittaker: What kind of a place do we have here? The people in the Farm Credit Corporation who are working out in the field can give various examples of what is happening because of policies such as the one I have referred to. These things make a farce out of what we do in the House when dealing with a piece of legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it is now ten o'clock. The hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, just as a matter of clarification for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, I should like to point out that Hansard, at pages 3957, 3958 and 3959, reflects the speech of the Minister of Agriculture on this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is one fact which is clear now.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Acting House leader might apprise us as to the business for tomorrow. What order of business can we expect, as far as the government is concerned, for tomorrow?

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow morning we should be in a position to advise the hon. member about the business to be dealt with tomorrow.

• (2202)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PENSIONS—REQUESTED AMENDMENT TO LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE PENSIONS AT AGE 60 DESPITE MARITAL STATUS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, January 31, as recorded in Hansard at page 2387, I put this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Now that she has been the head of her very important department long enough to know that a great many Canadian women between 60 and 65 feel very unhappy and upset over the fact that there is no pension for them unless they have the status of being married to and living with someone who is 65 or over, is the minister giving consideration to the necessary amendments to the Old Age Security Act so that persons between the ages of 60 and 65, particularly women, who are in need will get a pension without regard to their marital status?

The reply of the minister was in these words:

> Mr. Speaker, I answered the same question very recently put to me by other members of this House. We are reviewing the situation, and I have nothing new to add today. As soon as I am ready to give a further explanation, I will do so.

In today's atmosphere I feel like saying: "This is where I came in". My reference to today's atmosphere, is, of course, to the fact that everyone is thinking about the next election. I am reminded of the fact that during the 1974 election I happened to be in my room late at night when the first news came over the television to the effect that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had indicated that day that if the Liberals were re-elected they would bring in a bill providing for what was to be known as the "spouse's allowance".

I remember that the Prime Minister in the announcement had said they were going through with this program because it would provide help to certain people, even though it would create certain problems. I said to myself: "How right the Prime Minister is". Once you start paying a pension to persons in any age bracket based on marital status you are creating as many problems as you solve. I know that the spouse's allowance is regarded by the government as one of those examples of equality because it is available to the younger spouse where the older spouse is 65 or over and is receiving the old age pension, regardless of whether the younger spouse is a husband or a wife.

The fact is that in most cases the spouse's allowance is granted to women. The government refuses to give us the exact statistics. It tells us it does not keep statistics on the basis of sex. In my experience I have had scores of letters from women complaining about the situation, particularly from women whose husbands have died, and I have not had one letter in the years this has been on the statute books from a man between 60 and 65 complaining that he does not get the benefit of this legislation. For all practical purposes the spouse's allowance is a piece of legislation for women.

● (2207)

In addition to the age requirement and the means test there is this marital test: you get this allowance as a woman only if you have a man. That is no test, Mr. Speaker, to be in any legislation today, particularly in days when we believe in equal rights. My plea to the government is that it correct the mistake soon that was made in that legislation and remove from it the marital test.

I do not like means or income tests, but I will accept a means test, an income test, or a work test and so on between 60 and 65 rather than a marital test.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin), in some of her responses to me on this matter, has said that she is concerned not only for those between 60 and 65 but for those between 55 and 65 and for other categories as well. I commend her for that. She knows how warmly I commended her just the other day for that tremendous speech she made in Sherbrooke on March 13. It is one of the best speeches I have read for a long time.

However, Mr. Speaker, the whole thrust of what she is trying to do is defeated by a piece of legislation that says to women: "You get what you need, or what you should have, only on the basis of your attachment to a man". This marital test ought to be removed. Just as soon as possible there should be a pension available between 60 and 65, or between 55 and 65 if the government wants it that way, based on other tests if you will, but not on a marital test. I do hope that the problem that the Prime Minister realized four years ago would arise will be resolved by establishing a pension or an allowance in this younger age bracket based on need, if the government wants it that way, but based on the rights of people as individuals and not because of marital status.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has raised again his usual question about the spouse's allowance program, and he has waxed very eloquent, as he usually does. I thank him also for the comments he has made about the minister and her concerns regarding senior citizens in particular, which is the topic we are discussing this evening.

The program with regard to the spouse's allowance was introduced to cover a specific situation—that faced by many married couples with little or no other income who are trying to get by on a single old age security pension. It is considered appropriate to use spouse's allowance for cases like this because the married couple already has a connection with the old age security program through the one spouse who has reached retirement age. Because it was designed for this specific requirement, the spouse's allowance was not made applicable in the case of widows, divorced persons, and other single people in the 60 to 64 year range.

It is recognized that many people in this age group also have need for income-assistance, but it should be remembered that these needs can be met through other programs such as provincial assistance programs which the government of Canada shares in under the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan.

The idea of an income tested retirement benefit akin to the spouse's allowance which would be available to anyone in the 60 to 64 age group who needed it is an attractive idea. At this period of time, however, when it is particularly important to exercise restraint in government spending, one should look very carefully at the potential costs of such a program. A rough estimate indicates that introducing the proposed program would cost an additional amount in excess of $600 million annually. This estimate does not take into account the potential effect on the behaviour of people. That is, if people were encouraged to retire earlier because of the existence of such a benefit, then clearly the additional cost would be higher.

We would also have to ask ourselves whether the creation of such a program would lead to the adoption of age 60 as the normal retirement age in Canada, and whether we could afford such a development. It is a well known fact that when federal retirement benefits became available at age 65, that age soon became generally regarded as the normal age of retirement in the country.

Notwithstanding this question, the government has considered such a program in the past and will no doubt consider it again when economic circumstances make it feasible. The government will be continuing to examine other potential improvements in programs to assist people. In this context the government is looking at potential initiatives for supplementing income for those who work at inadequate levels of income, and there will be a continuing examination with the provinces regarding possible improvements to the income support system.

In conclusion, potential improvements to the system can and will be examined in the future. In the meantime it should be recognized that we do have programs to meet the income needs of people, and in particular the spouse's allowance is doing a good job of meeting the special need for which it was designed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Provided a woman has a man.

● (2212)

HEALTH AND WELFARE—GRANTS TO PLANNED PARENTHOOD FEDERATION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, last Monday I rose to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) the following question:

The chairperson of the allocations committee of the Planned Parenthood Federation said in her report of June 17, 1977:

> It is important for associations to remember that their primary role is to be agents for change rather than service agencies.

Since the federation receives about $670,000 annually from the federal government, most of it from the minister's department, I ask the minister whether she, as the principal financial supporter of that organization, endorses that statement?

I should like to put on the record the last part of the minister's reply, in which she said:

I can see the implications he—

Meaning me, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

—is suggesting, and I do not think that is an honest, intellectual way to work. First of all, I should like to read the report; secondly, if the hon. member has clear allegations I would prefer that he had the guts to announce them.

I think that last part of her response does not deserve comment, Mr. Speaker, and so I shall refrain. Up to this point I have had considerable regard for the minister. But I am concerned about the first part of her answer where she said:

I do not see what is wrong with the statement, taken out of context, that the hon. member read to me.

That answer, Mr. Speaker, disturbs me a great deal. I am really not talking about whether the Planned Parenthood Association ought to exist or even whether the federal government ought to be supporting it financially. What I am talking about is to what extent the government and ministers of the government will permit our people to be free and independent determinants of their future, their lifestyle and what kind of people they choose to be. That really is the critical question. When any group says it is here to be an agent for change and is supported by taxpayers' dollars, I am concerned.

The minister is right. This statement made by the group does raise serious implications. Let us admit it, Mr. Speaker, we are living in a very pluralistic society. There are many different views of man and of life. The planned parenthood group apparently sees life from a very rationalistic and materialistic point of view. Other groups such as the pro-life group see man as being a sacred person. There are other religions who see all life as being sacred, whether it is man, animal or insect. We live in a pluralistic society.

If the minister says she agrees that this agency ought to be an agent for change, my question is: How far is she willing to go to apply pressure to bring about a change of attitude? How much are the people going to have to change their convictions to conform to those agents of change? What if they do not want change? What if they want to maintain the convictions and lifestyle they have chosen for themselves? How far is the minister willing to go and to what extent is she willing to use taxpayers' money to bring about that change and try and convince people that they ought to change?

Within a rationalistic and materialistic view of life there are many different views, a whole range. Should there be such things as abortion on demand? What about abortion for those whom some invisible agency deems are not fit to raise a family, are not capable of raising a family? Should there be compulsory abortion? What about euthanasia and to whom should euthanasia apply? Should it only be for the elderly? At what point should we apply euthanasia for the elderly? What about euthanasia for the disabled who are "a burden" on society? At what point do we apply euthanasia if we are going to take a rationalistic view of life?

I come back to the question, Mr. Speaker: How far should any group in society be supported by the taxpayers' money to try to change people? That is the most sacred question. The most sacred faculty we have is the faculty of choice. If this is taken away from us by any means at all, we become dehumanized. We become animals. We do not have to go back very far in history to see examples of that.

● (2217)

The goal stated by this group raises ominous implications for this very sacred faculty which is ours by right. Furthermore, the government is elected to represent all Canadians. What about the other groups who disagree with that point of view? Are they not entitled to support? If the government is going to support planned parenthood, a group that thinks they are agents for change, what about the other groups in society who want to change society in a different way? Are they not entitled to taxpayers' dollars? Is the government going to represent only one small segment of society and the one very narrow view that it has chosen as being the right view for all people? How far is the government willing to make this choice for all Canadians?

I say again, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has chosen a very serious approach if she agrees, as she says she does, with the view that the planned parenthood group has espoused for itself. They ought to remember they are not simply there to be social servants, but they are to be agents of change.

I would like the parliamentary secretary to give me a clear indication of just how far the minister is willing to go to change society according to the norms that she has chosen for all of us, or that this group has chosen for us. How much money are they willing to continue to spend? Will they be free and democratic enough to support other groups who might not agree with this particular group?

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have now had the opportunity to read the report of the allocations committee of the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada for 1976-77. It was from the document I understand the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) quoted from when he asked his question on April 3. In it, the chairperson of the allocations committee reports on a meeting held June 17 at which several topics of relevance to the financial health of this national voluntary association were discussed. The report in its financial affairs section indicated, as did the hon. member on Monday, and I quote from the report:

"It is important for associations to remember that their primary role is to be agents for change rather than service agencies".

What is implied here is the primary role of the Family Planning Federation of Canada, which can be conceived as education and promotion of responsible parenthood for all Canadians.

This sentence further implies that voluntary agencies in the social and educational sectors are not to be primarily responsible for the delivery of health, welfare and education services. I am sure the hon. member would agree provision of services is the primary responsibility of provincial and municipal governments in this country. Let me take this opportunity to commend the two national voluntary associations active in family planning, SERENA Canada and the Planned Parenthood Federation, for their educational and promotional efforts toward ensuring that Canadians have the number of children they want and when they want them.

At the same time let me sketch the policy of the department on sustaining grants to national voluntary associations such as SERENA Canada and the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada. These grants are made on a year-to-year basis, after annual review. The sustaining grants to the two associations, namely $175,000 to SERENA and $600,000 to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada, are calculated on the basis of their relative scope of activity in the country.

The sustaining grants have not increased over the last four years. Notice has been given that the department is attempting to reduce the dependence of the two organizations on federal funds. In other words, we have been working toward a pattern of financing in which the affiliates of the two associations will cease to be dependent upon the national organizations. We visualize the national offices being in receipt of revenue from their affiliates. This model is the typical pattern of funding for the voluntary sector in Canada. In the family planning field we do realize, however, that a number of years may pass before it can be fully implemented without loss of valuable educational and promotional effort.

It is my firm belief that the voluntary sector's advocacy for social change has been influential in the development of the broad range of social services across Canada.

• (2222)

ENERGY—RATIONING OF SUPPLIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) about a report from the London Conference over the weekend to Mr. R. Toombs, the senior energy adviser for the department. Mr. Toombs indicated some very real concerns about oil shortages in the next seven or eight years and called for a super conservation program. The minister indicated in his answer that this program, which included the possibility of rationing, would only be implemented in the case of an emergency.

According to the figures of the National Energy Board, this emergency is inevitable. A chart produced by the National Energy Board and a report on oil supply and demand made a year ago do not vary more than 50,000 barrels a day today, according to the department and the board. That report shows that in 1976 Canadians were producing two million barrels a day. By 1986, production will drop to one million barrels a day. This includes a growing amount that will come from the oil sands or tar sands.

In 1977 we had a deficiency of 17 per cent in our production. This will grow to 52 per cent by 1986. We were told in testimony recently that by that time oil will be $25 a barrel in today's dollars. Therefore, we will have a deficit of $10 billion.

The department's figures indicate additional supplies of gas and electricity will be coming on stream. However, by 1986, we can expect a 30 per cent deficit in our total energy needs. With a good conservation program, that can be reduced to 20 per cent. One problem is, there is no discernible program for crossing over. We are told that more supplies of gas are coming in, but the cross-over just is not there. We will run out of an extremely vital resource necessary to propel our automobiles and so on. There will not be the technology to use some of these other materials at an early date.

I say to the minister through the parliamentary secretary that a crisis situation is developing. A white paper should be produced at the earliest opportunity, if possible before this parliament dissolves, clearly setting the conservation alternatives before the public. It should set out the alternatives in terms of available technology to make the cross-over, the changes required in our automobiles, and much more drastic changes than have already been announced.

• (2227)

Changes in the price structure may bring about conservation. There may be a possible need for rationing almost immediately, well before we run out of oil. I believe that there is a global oil crisis. There will be shortages everywhere, not just in Canada, and we must anticipate these shortages. I believe it is essential that a white paper be produced so that Canadians can better understand prices and take part in the discussions which will decide how we must approach the super conservation program which is required.

Mr. Frank Maine (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in response to the question of the oil supply situation in Canada as foreseen for the next ten years, it can be noted that the country's production of conventional crude oil is forecast to decline from 1.4 million barrels a day in 1977 to the level of 900,000 barrels a day in the mid-1980's.

In order to minimize reliance on uncertain supplies of oil imports, this production would not only have to be supplemented by production of close to 200,000 barrels a day from the two oil sands projects now developed in the Athabasca oil sands, but also by a further production of 200,000 barrels a day from as yet undeveloped sources in the heavy oil areas and the oil sands, to provide for a total production of 1.3 billion barrels a day. Expected oil demands in 1985 will be over 2 million barrels a day, which indicates that between 700,000 and 800,000 barrels a day would have to be imported. This would be a minimum level of imports, in view of uncertainties regarding the timing of projects to bring on new heavy oil and oil sands sources.

The situation of extensive dependence on oil imports, to the extent of 800,000 barrels a day, raises two major concerns. Such a large reliance on oil imports would impact seriously on Canada's balance of payments position. Imports of 800,000 barrels a day would represent a drain on the country's balance of payments by some $6 billion in 1985, or possibly even more should the international price of oil escalate faster in the 1980's than now anticipated.

The second problem, one of even more significance, is the question of import dependence from a security of supply point of view. In the event of international oil supply restrictions or serious supply disruptions, the eastern part of Canada would be in a major deficit position after existing storage supplies were exhausted. In preparation for such an eventuality the government is considering several possibilities of developing underground oil storage facilities to lengthen the period in which Canada could sustain itself in the event of an overseas supply curtailment. However, there are limits to storage development and, in any event, supply interruption would also be dealt with through some form of energy use curtailment.

To this end the government has developed an emergency preparedness plan which, in the event of a prolonged emergency, could be carried through to a rationing phase. The government has recognized that an emergency could occur at any time and, consequently, has actively been developing a preparedness plan since the occurrence of the 1973-74 Middle East crisis. This is a contingency plan to meet emergency circumstances. Other steps are being taken to reduce the dependence on overseas supplies in addition to the acceleration of oil resource development.

To reduce the gap between supply and demand as now projected for the mid-1980's, increasing emphasis is being placed on conservation measures. This includes measures to reduce energy use in the home, such as the Canadian home insulation program, measures to reduce gasoline and diesel oil consumption in transportation, and a number of programs to improve the efficiency of energy use in industry.

In summary, the government has prepared for the possible eventuality of international oil supply curtailment through the design of an emergency preparedness program. It is also taking steps to minimize the projected energy supply gap in the next decade through incentive policies designed to accelerate oil resource development and through conservation programs directed to the residential, transportation and industrial sectors. All these programs, whether for emergency conditions or to meet the normal problems of supply and demand, are part of the government's energy policy. The country's energy policy in this and other respects has been developed to respond to the circumstances of a dynamic and ever-changing international energy economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 7, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

● (1107)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AIR CANADA

RELOCATION OF AIRCRAFT PAINTING FACILITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. As Air Canada is planning to move its aircraft painting facilities from Dorval to the virtually unused $5 million hangar in Winnipeg, which is large enough to hold wide-bodied jets such as 747s and L10-11s that now have to be painted in the United States, and also since Air Canada could bid to do painting for other Canadian and American airlines with 747s and L10-11s, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That this House direct the Minister of Transport to stop blocking the move of personnel and the paint shop to Winnipeg, which will establish a new Canadian industry, creating employment and stopping a flow of Canadian dollars to the U.S., and the planned move be left entirely with Air Canada officials, with no political interference.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

ESTABLISHMENT OF WILDLIFE PARK IN YUKON—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the request by United States authorities going back to the early 1960s to have Canada establish a wildlife park in the Yukon in conjunction with Alaska, and that the State of Alaska has now designated some 74 million acres as a wilderness area which could be used in conjunction with such a park, and that the recommendation of the Berger commission was to establish such a park, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That legislation be introduced in this House in line with Mr. Justice Berger's recommendation for the establishment of the wildlife park in the Yukon as recommended.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires unanimous consent at this time. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO RESTORE PEACE IN ANGOLA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the accelerated military activity in Angola, where a Marxist regime is employing Cuban mercenaries to brutally crush indigenous opposition to it, and given the disturbing news of the assassination in southwest Africa of the paramount chief of the Herero people, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu):

That this House request the government, through its representative on the United Nations Security Council, to urge the strongest possible action by the United Nations to restore peace in Angola, where the death toll seems to have surpassed that in Lebanon already, and that at the same time the government of Canada withdraw its representative from the five-nation committee endeavouring through negotiations with South Africa to reduce southwest Africa to the same state of oppression existing in Angola.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDUSTRY

REQUEST GOVERNMENT TAKE CONTROL OF INCO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Inco has announced a two-week extension of summer lay-offs, and that no level of government was made aware of this until hours before the announcement was made public, making a complete mockery of national economic planning, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

● (1112)

That this House instruct the government to take over the operation of Inco, rescind the lay-offs and take control of Inco until such time as future plans which affect the Canadian economy have been made clear and the jobs of Canadian workers have been protected.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONDEMNATION OF COMMUNIST ATROCITIES IN KAMPUCHEA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Matane): Mr. Speaker, I should like to present, jointly with the House leader of the official opposition, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), a motion of the greatest importance which calls for the unanimous consent and support of all hon. members.

Since the Khmer Rouge has taken absolute control of Cambodia, called today the Democratic Republic of Kampuchea—

[Translation]

—the entire world was horrified on learning from many concordant sources about the terrible genocide of two million babies, children, women and men; the deportation of any living soul from the capital of Phnom-Penh and from every city, with no exception made for dying persons confined to hospital; the fact that the government called the communist party of Kampuchea have used children to shoot all those who were executed.

For those reasons, all members of the Canadian parliament express their horror of that genocide, which is one of the worst crimes in the history of mankind, and urge the government of democratic Kampuchea to stop that inconceivable blood bath and Prime Minister Pol Pot to accede immediately to the resolution voted with the support of Canada on March 8, 1977 at the 30th session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission sitting in Geneva and, finally, ask all parliamentarians and governments which maintain relations with our country to protest against that slaughter which has astounded the entire world.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Motions pursuant to Standing Order 43. The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert).

Mr. Rodriguez: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I stood up to debate the motion put before the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I heard no negative voice; I am sorry.

Mr. Rodriguez: I stood up right in my place, Mr. Speaker, after you put the question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Then the motion ought to be read entirely.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I agreed with the motion, but I wanted to debate it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand that.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, I understand the motion was put and carried.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has indicated now that he had given his consent to the putting of the question, but I gather he wanted to enter the debate on the motion.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances, having carried the motion, I may have acted precipitously. I was not aware that there was any intention to debate it. In any case, we would have been required to interrupt the debate at this time in order to commence the question period. Therefore, I think the safest course is to allow the motion to have been carried as indicated.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR RAISING BANK RATE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Perhaps he could be given an opportunity to return from his "floating" in the House of Commons here.

My question concerns the rising interest rate structure in this country. We know that within the last month the bank rate, and consequently the prime lending rate, in Canada has gone up one full percentage point. Knowing the domestic consequences of high interest rates in this country, would the minister indicate to the House why he has chosen this time to raise interest rates by that amount, bearing in mind there were 229,000 more people out of work in February, even seasonally adjusted, than there were in December of 1976, when the interest rate was last at the 8.5 per cent level, at which time the government thought it wise to lower the rate to stimulate the economy?

● (1117)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, each time the government has raised the interest rate we have given an explanation, and it was clearly indicated in the statement made by the governor of the Bank of Canada. I would like to point out to the hon. member that there is an increase of 250,000 people in the work force over this time last year.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, again to the Minister to Finance, who obviously has little regard for the 229,000 people out of work as compared to December 1976, when the government chose to lower the interest rate in the hope of getting the unemployment figure down.

My second question to the Minister of Finance is: Has the government analysed the impact the higher interest rate structure will have on the sale of unsold homes or homes about to be completed in Canada, bearing in mind that raising the interest rate by 1 per cent will disqualify 25,000 would-be home purchasers in this country or, to put it another way, a total of possibly $1.25 billion in house construction? If the government have considered the impact on the housing industry, would the minister indicate to the House what he feels the consequences will be?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to state to the hon. member, without having all of the figures in front of me, the interest rate was higher a year and a half ago than it is today in Canada. The past year was a good year for housing. Of course, the higher interest rate will have a negative effect on the buyers of houses, but the monetary policies of the government are such that we have no other choice.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, obviously, is acknowledging to the House that it is the international bankers who are calling the domestic tune in Canada as far as our monetary position is concerned.

My final question to the minister is: If he accepts that the higher interest rate is necessary to the country, has the Minister of Finance taken up with the chartered banks and the other lending institutions of this country what one of his predecessors did, that is, to ask those institutions to give preferential treatment to the small businesses and farmers of this country by way of a one-quarter to one-half point lower rate, rather than letting them take the full brunt of the one percentage point increase?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the interest rate on mortgages, for example, has not risen a full point like the rate of the Bank of Canada, and because there is a competitive situation in that market at this time, a lot of funds are available. The competitive factor has kept the situation better under control than we could have expected normally with an increase in interest rates.

BALANCE OF PAYMENTS ACCOUNT

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the minister has said that the government's policy of raising interest rates was to deal with the foreign exchange problem, I wonder if the minister could tell us why, as given in the March issue of the Bank of Canada Review, the balancing items in the balance of payments account are substantially higher than ever before?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I take note of the question, for I did not hear the preamble.

[English]

Mr. Gillies: I will put the question another way. In the balance of payments account there is a balancing item which in the past two years has been over $3 billion, almost $4 billion. I am astonished that the minister is not up to date on this matter, because it is so important in making policies. It is incredible to me that the minister does not understand this. I want to know if the department has completed any studies to determine if there is a lot of hot money, to use the vernacular, moving out that the government cannot trace, thus causing the balancing items in the balance of payments account to be so large. You can call it what you will, suitcase money, money of this sort. I am wondering if the minister has discovered that this is, in fact, what is happening and whether it is affecting the balance of payments to the extent that is indicated.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, when we establish the budgetary or monetary policy of the government, we take all factors into account during the debate.

[English]

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that answer from the Minister of Finance, but how can he say that all factors have been considered when there is an unexplained amount of almost $4 billion? What is that $4 billion? Where is it going? What sort of capital is that? Where is it flowing? Where is it?

● (1122)

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I take note of the question and I will give the hon. member a detailed answer during the next question period.

[English]

INTEREST CHARGES INCURRED IN MAINTAINING A FLOATING DOLLAR

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. In addition to driving up the cost of living in Canada and creating higher levels of unemployment, will the minister confirm to the House that the government's policy of maintaining a rational float, or dirty float or no float of the dollar is actually costing the taxpayers of Canada, in interest charges for the more than $3 billion that the government is borrowing or is planning to borrow, $750,000 a day? Would the minister confirm that?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I know that in order to establish those credit margins we have to pay a certain amount of money; nevertheless, it would be extremely regrettable not to have any credit at all at the present time, given the monetary situation we are in, in order to protect the dollar against any drastic fluctuation of the market. Obviously, given the circumstances, we would have to pay even higher rates than those we can offer at the present time. The hon. member should recognize that the fact that we can so easily obtain credit margins to implement our monetary policy is a tribute to Canadian credit.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that is witness to the irreverent and harmful gnomes of Zurich. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance to take a very brief period to reply, because he did not a few days ago when I asked him. He referred to the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Since the floating dollar is also actively being pushed by the President of the United States because he recognizes it is creating more jobs than any other particular measure that could be taken in the United States economy, why does the Minister of Finance not also follow the straightforward policy to which the government was committed some months ago and allow the dollar to float, instead of pouring $750,000 per day down the drain to prop it up, because we get more jobs with a floating dollar?

[Mr. Chrétien.]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should recognize that the United States system and the Canadian system are not exactly the same. As I have said so many times, the policy of this government is a floating dollar. The intervention we make in the marketplace is to make sure that the dollar floats in a normal way. This is exactly what the other governments do. Just look at the United States situation: not long ago they negotiated some borrowing from the Germans in order to make sure that their dollar could react normally to the international situation.

Mr. Broadbent: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure it was inadvertent, but the minister simply and completely distorted reality. Would he confirm that, contrary to what he just said, it has been the Germans and Japanese in recent weeks and months who have been taking action to prop up the United States dollar because of the concern about their exports. They realize that by floating the dollar the United States will make inroads in terms of competition with them.

I repeat to the Minister of Finance, why does the government not stick to the floating dollar, instead of pouring money down the drain to prop it up, because we get more jobs by allowing it to float?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the hon. member confirms it is good policy that we float the Canadian dollar. Not long ago he was telling me what I had to do to maintain the dollar; today he tells me he likes a dollar that floats and does not mind it. He even implies in his question that he would like a dollar lower than it is now.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—INQUIRY WHETHER IMPORTS WILL BE REDUCED IF TARIFFS CHANGED

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Following agreements which have been negotiated recently with some countries on textiles and clothing, would the minister tell the House whether tariffs were raised or reduced and if there was also agreement to lower imports so as to provide better protection for our textile and clothing industries in Canada?

● (1127)

[English]

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Some years ago Canadians were importing something like 12 units of clothing per person. We have cut that back to less than eight units per person. The textile industry has responded with renewed investment in Canada, and I am very pleased to say there is more confidence now in the Canadian textile industry than was the case a couple of years ago before we put on quotas. I think we will see more Canadian-manufactured textile goods available to Canadians in the years ahead.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Following those negotiations, would the minister tell the House whether he has received comments from industry owners and if those comments were favourable, because we are interested to know what their reaction is when things go bad. We also like to know how they feel when the outlook is more promising. Did he receive communications from manufacturers expressing their satisfaction?

[English]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there have been communications between the department and the business community with regard to the Canadian textile industry, as well as the manufacturers. If one looks at the last quarter of 1977, textiles was one industry in which there was an increase in investment. Canadian manufacturers are investing and enlarging their plants, and as a result will be able to serve the Canadian market better in the years ahead.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

DISTRIBUTION OF SECRET DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice, I will direct my question to the all-knowing Deputy Prime Minister. This morning, over CBC radio, Hal Anthony made certain revelations that require to be cleared up. He pointed out that 58 copies of top secret material were made available to sources, some of whom he named. In this connection a prosecution is beginning today in Toronto.

The document in question was so secret that the hon. member for Leeds was approached by General Dare and also by the Solicitor General to produce it. I now ask the minister this question. For what purpose, for what incredible reason, were these various copies sent out to, among others, the chairman of the Public Service Commission, the assistant deputy minister of finance—as if he did not have enough trouble the way it is—a representative of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the deputy minister of supply and services? This very secret document was sent to those four people, as well as others. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister on what basis this distribution was made.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the right hon. gentleman's comments about my all-knowing capacity, but I am sure I shall disappoint his confidence immediately by my answer. My information is that the document in question was circulated in the normal way—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Beautiful.

Mr. MacEachen: —and the recipients were those who normally receive documents of this kind. I am not in a position to confirm the names of the recipients of any of the documents, but the distribution was a normal one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if that was a normal distribution, God help security in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask the minister—I know how frank he is at all times, and I pay him that tribute too—whether on Monday he will have the Solicitor General, if he is back in the House, table the list of the 58 who received this secret document in the normal way. That would be most helpful, because today a prosecution is taking place.

The contents of some of these documents have been out in the press. Have the 58 been retrieved with the exception of one or two? How many have been returned to the department at the request of the Solicitor General or the government? How many are still outstanding? These are questions that, when answered, will reveal the bona fides of the persecution of the hon. member for Leeds.

● (1132)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, no one would agree with the right hon. member that the hon. member for Leeds has been persecuted in any way. I believe the matter was dealt with by the Minister of Justice and the situation has returned to normal in that area of activity.

I would tell the right hon. gentleman that it is not the intention of the government to make public a list of recipients of security documents. It should appear immediately to the right hon. gentleman that this kind of information would be of interest to intelligence services not friendly to Canada. Who receives security documents in a normal manner is something that should not, and will not, be disclosed because, as I have said, it is information of a sensitive nature.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that is a very interesting alibi. However, I would like the minister to explain what interest that security document would have for the chairman of the Public Service Commission, the assistant deputy minister of finance, the representative of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and, above all, Supply and Services. Why would documents like that be sent to those people if they are top secret? I am amazed that the minister says he cannot reveal this information. They apparently threw them up in the air, and 58 picked them up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

EXTENSION OF LANDING STRIP AT QUEBEC AIRPORT—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Dennis Dawson (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, to his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Speaker, following the numerous meetings which took place between hon. members of the Quebec City area and those held with intermediate representatives of the area, and more particularly with the Chamber of Commerce and industry of metropolitan Quebec, I would like to know whether there are any new developments concerning the plans for the extension of the Quebec airport landing strip so that the capital of the province will have an airport which can accommodate aircraft of all sizes. This would certainly help the old capital, the cradle of the French language in North America and it would represent a unique tourist attraction in Canada?

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the minister and myself met several times with hon. members of the area on this subject, as well as with municipal authorities and members of the Chamber of Commerce of Quebec. It is true that with the hotel accommodation and convention facilities available in Quebec city it becomes more and more urgent to extend the present runway. This is why the minister intends to ask very soon for the necessary funds to extend the runway to 9,000 feet. We hope that the amounts will be invested in the area at the very beginning of summer.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

DISTRIBUTION OF SECRET DOCUMENTS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the very excellent and penetrating questions put by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, is this not an outstanding example of the screw-ups that this government has participated in over the past few months and a very good example of how this government is falling apart before our very eyes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think hon. members may recognize a hint of argumentation in that question.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR FUNDS TO PROVIDE WHARVES AND BREAKWATERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the relaxed, albeit rejected, Minister of Fisheries who would like to be minister of fisheries and oceans. Since it now appears obvious that, like an earlier Romeo, he is not to have his way and we will not get legislation setting up a department of fisheries and oceans, I ask him—in this prebudget sitting—if he is prepared to impress upon the Minister of Finance and his colleagues in cabinet the need for additional funds to make up for the years of austerity in small craft harbours which has resulted in neglected wharves and breakwaters across this country.

I ask this question in light of the fact that more people are returning to fishing in the Atlantic provinces and this is a very important matter on the eve of a new fishing season.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Why are they going back?

Mr. McGrath: Because there is nothing else to do.

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that many citizens, including some of the hon. member's constituents, recognize that the future of the fishery is as bright as I have been predicting it would be. It is very much in recognition of this fact and preparing for it that my predecessor, Mr. Davis, went from a budget of $8 million to $11 million, on average, for small craft harbours to well over $30 million in the past five or six years. This year, by intelligent use of programs and with the co-operation of members of parliament—in particular, my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration—we will be putting in $50 million worth of facilities along the coastline of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: In view of the critically high rate of unemployment prevailing in the Atlantic provinces and eastern Quebec, and in view of the intensive labour content in these kinds of works—wharves and breakwaters—is the minister prepared to recommend to his colleagues that we embark upon an accelerated program of building wharves, breakwaters and other onshore facilities to accommodate the many thousand people, especially young people, who want to go fishing and see in the industry the promise that has long been denied them?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, my mind is really boggled when I remember the hon. member's speech in which he denounced my department for doing exactly what he is now suggesting, that is, utilizing programs of other departments of government where they can help the fishermen. That we have done, and will be doing this year, to the tune of some $12 million, thanks to the co-operation of my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Obviously, we will continue to do this. We think it is very useful to have fishermen involved in the construction of their own facilities, of which they are justly proud.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I am having as much trouble communicating with the minister as he is having communicating with his colleagues in government, especially the government House leader.

In view of the undertaking by the Prime Minister that there would be a separate department of fisheries before the end of this parliament—an undertaking made by the government House leader—will the minister tell the House if legislation setting up a separate department of fisheries is to be placed before the House before dissolution? I can assure him he would get the co-operation of my colleagues in the opposition to expedite this legislation. We know how important it is to the fishermen of Canada especially and to the hardworking public servants in his department.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I certainly thank the hon. member for his offer of co-operation. The Prime Minister has designated the deputy minister for the new department. The administrative separation is a de facto situation. We administer the department as two separate entities although in law I cannot at the moment proceed along certain lines. This would have to be confirmed by parliament.

In fact, it is a bureaucratic and administrative matter which should be given the approbation by parliament which the hon. member promises. I have been told by the officers drafting the bill that they hope to have it before the cabinet committee dealing with such matters in a matter of days. It may well be that we will be able to proceed before the House recesses.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

REDUCTION IN INCOME OF BRITISH COLUMBIA DAIRYMEN—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO CORRECT

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will ask it of the acting minister. Is the Department of Agriculture investigating the situation in British Columbia, where the Anti-Inflation Board has disclaimed responsibility for a rollback order that has cut the income of B.C. dairymen?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, while the Minister of Veterans Affairs is taking that question as notice, will he also inquire whether the rollback is an attempt by the federal government to homogenize the returns of all fluid milk producers with those of industrial milk producers in lower cost areas of the country?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): I will also take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

RECOMMENDED STOCKPILING OF NICKEL

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Yesterday afternoon, Inco announced the extension of its summer lay-off by two weeks. In view of the fact that this extension of the summer lay-off could have been prevented by stockpiling nickel, as the government has done in the past in the uranium industry, will the minister now recommend to his government the temporary stockpiling of nickel as a method of protecting nickel-producing communities and jobs?

• (1142)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I answered the hon. member yesterday on this question. I might make the further observation that it seems to me to be the absolute height of irresponsibility, indeed, even contemptibility, to suggest that the international problems which have created the difficulties in Sudbury—problems of the market and the heavy inventory—could be solved by the nationalization of Inco.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I have never seen a more callous and cruel minister. However, I want to direct a question to him. In view of the fact that I never suggested the nationalization of Inco in my question to the minister, that irresponsibility and contemptibility for Canadians was displayed by Inco by not consulting the government first of all with respect to the announcement of the two-week extension, and that there was no consultation whatsoever with respect to the workers' representatives of trade unions, will the government follow at least the advice of the CLC and order Inco to rescind the announced extension of the summer lay-offs until such time as the government has had an opportunity to sit down with the company and with the trade union movement to find out how to ameliorate any necessary extension of a lay-off in the summer?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the extent of lay-offs is a most regrettable outcome of the world situation with respect to nickel markets: I have made that clear on a number of occasions. If the hon. member is interested in trying to help those affected by the situation, he would have recognized that the extended lay-off has been moderated very substantially by a special vacation-on-pay arrangement extended by the company to workers at Inco. If the hon. member cannot remember his own Standing Order 43 motion, then someone else will have to remind him of it.

* * *

FINANCE

INCO—REQUESTED CANCELLATION OF TAX CONCESSIONS

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, now I will turn to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that Inco is not using the large and generous tax concessions granted to it by the federal government, as we were told, to create jobs for Canadians, is the minister prepared to consider cancelling those advantages or tax concessions and calling in the over $300 million in deferred taxes, because obviously they have not served the Canadian people for whom they were intended?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can have a tax system which operates on an ad hoc basis like that.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—CREATION OF GENERAL SERVICE MEDAL

Mr. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. A few weeks ago I reminded him of the commitment of the government, pursuant to a resolution which I had introduced, to introduce a medal as a military decoration recognizing NATO service. Following his answer of a few weeks ago, is the government now ready to proceed on this matter?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker; as a result of the hon. member's representations, considerable work has been done in the department.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: Recommendations have come forth. I will not be recommending specifically a NATO medal, but a general service medal which can also be identified for special service, with bars and rosettes for NATO, NORAD or other types of unusual service. I would rather avoid a proliferation of medals which show that service is recognized. I appreciate the hon. member's interest in this matter.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INDEXING OF VETERANS' DISABILITY PENSIONS

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the repeated requests and encouragement given the minister, can he tell the House if he plans to initiate any improvement in the indexing feature of veterans' disability pensions in the next two weeks?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on that matter at this time.

Mr. Hees: That is the long way of saying no.

[Mr. Rodriguez.]

FISHERIES

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING GEORGES BANK

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the hon. Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. Was an interim fisheries agreement for 1978 on the Canada-United States boundary dispute concerning the ownership of Georges Bank recommended to the minister by his advisers, or did they recommend that Canada should take a firm stand and declare the location of the line on Georges Bank? If so, where did the hon. minister propose that the line on Georges Bank should be drawn?

I am sure the minister knows that this question is of vital importance to fishermen on the east coast of Atlantic Canada, since the ownership of the prolific and profitable Georges Bank scallop fish is obviously an issue. Has this discussion bogged down on the problem relating to minerals, or has it bogged down on the problem relating to the fishery resources on the bank?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the special negotiators who tried to narrow down the differences over many weeks felt they were close to agreement. Because they could not arrive at a final agreement, they felt they should not register failure but, in fact, they should recess and give each side time to review its position, see where movement might be possible, and meanwhile come up with an interim agreement.

Basically, the problem was one involving the fishery resource. The discussions will continue at a lower level than the special negotiators. Both sides are reassessing their positions. Frankly, I think the negotiators had made so much progress that it would be too bad if their efforts were not sustained over a period of time. I think there is hope for an agreement.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the minister rather skirted the main point of my question, which I will put again.

An hon. Member: He is good at that.

Mr. Crouse: What recommendations were made to the minister by his Canadian advisers concerning this problem? Did they, or did they not, recommend that the minister and the Canadian government should define where the line should be drawn, and take that stand? What were the recommendations to the minister by his appointed advisers on this matter?

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, if we had backed away from our basic position, there would have been an agreement, but obviously that type of agreement is not satisfactory to us. We were attempting to find a way around the difficulty regarding where the line should be drawn, what stocks of fish move in and out of the Canadian and American zones, who should take them, and at what time. The talks did not end successfully on these issues. The fact is that they were recessed; they were not given up. There is still considerable hope that both sides will arrive at an advantageous agreement over the long term.

* * *

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PRICE OF GASOLINE FOR FARM MACHINERY USE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Some weeks ago, while speaking privately to the minister, I indicated to him the concern of many farmers, particularly in Ontario, over the fact that when they purchase gasoline for use on their farms and to store in bulk tanks, they are being forced to pay a price of up to more than ten cents a gallon than if they were to buy their gasoline at local gas company retail outlets.

Has the minister had an opportunity to investigate this problem? If so, can he make any suggestions which might bring some relief to farmers?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I followed up that question after the hon. member raised it with me in the House. Farmers in Ontario are entitled to federal and provincial rebates totalling 29 cents per gallon on gasoline for unlicensed vehicles. Consequently, in net terms, we are aware of no situation where farmers pay as much or more than consumers. But it is true there are variations from city to city and from town to town. I cannot say much more at this time.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware of the fact that the price being charged farmers by companies supplying their bulk tanks is ten cents a gallon more than would be charged if the farmers had their tanks filled at local gas stations and also would receive a rebate from the government if the assistance were made available to them?

• (1152)

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we have been told that that has been happening in some cases and it has been due to the price war between the different oil distributors. This varies from one part of Ontario to another. I do not know what we can do about that: it is part of the free market system where there is competition between them.

ACTION TAKEN BY DEPARTMENT AGAINST MISLEADING ADVERTISERS

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is it a fact that the marketing practices branch of the minister's department has not acted on complaints received in the past year on Post Office advertising of expected dates of mail delivery on its red, white and blue mail boxes for local, regional and national delivery, nor has it acted on the recent complaint lodged by the CLC against Employment and Immigration Canada's advertising of UIC regulations, because it is the view of the minister's department that it cannot sue another federal government department or federal agency because it is another branch of the Crown?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): This is the first time those complaints have been brought to my personal attention, so I cannot comment on them. But I am advised that Crown agencies and the Crown are exempted from the misleading advertising sections of the combines act.

Mr. Dick: Since the minister has never reprimanded or prosecuted any federal department or agency, is there now any mechanism in effect that has allowed the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to publicly reprimand another federal department or agency should it indulge in inaccurate or misleading advertising?

Mr. Allmand: A few days ago I answered a question in the House indicating that we are developing, with the provinces, a code of ethics for lottery advertising, for example. Lotteries are run by Crown agencies. We are re-examining our whole policy in this area on advertising by Crown agencies, and we will take into consideration the complaints put forward by the hon. member.

* * *

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EXTENSION OF EXEMPTION FOR AVERAGING PROVISIONS OF GRAIN ELEVATOR AGENTS

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): My question is for the Minister of Labour. During the committee stage of Bill C-8 there was considerable discussion with respect to the exemption for averaging provisions of local grain elevator agents. Does the minister have anything to tell us at this time with respect to any action he has been able to take in this regard, or any action he proposes to take?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In view of the representations made by the hon. member for Vancouver South, members of my party and of the official opposition, I have indicated that I am prepared to grant a further extension of the exemption for a period of six months to allow the unions and the grain country elevator operators to try to come to some solution which they themselves can work out.

* * *

ENERGY

CONSORTIUM TO DEVELOP THIRD ATHABASCA OIL SANDS PLANT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Some weeks ago Shell Oil of Canada announced its intention to form a consortium to develop a third oil sands plant in Athabasca, but made it very clear that their attempts to form this consortium would depend on the commercial arrangement made with the government. Have any negotiations started yet between Shell Oil and its consortium with any members of the government?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe there have been a number of discussions among Shell, some members of the consortium and my officials. I have had discussions myself with the president of Shell. I believe the major negotiations that are taking place at present are within the consortium itself.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Would the minister pay me the honour of looking into a proposal that I made to the then minister of finance, the Hon. John Turner, with regard to Syncrude and how this type of proposal could be financed at much less cost to the final consumer than at present. Have any of his officials made this proposal known to him?

Mr. Gillespie: I have not seen the proposal in the form that the hon. member has described. I would be very pleased if he would send me a copy, and I will take a look at it.

TAX STRUCTURE, MARKETING AND EXPORT OF OIL SANDS PRODUCT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he has made any commitment to Shell Oil with regard to the tax structure, marketing and export of their product should they go ahead with the plan. I understand that some of these matters have been responsible for delaying a decision on whether or not it should go ahead, and when it should begin. Perhaps the minister should clarify the status of the matter at this time.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, a range of options has been discussed with senior officers of the Shell corporation, but no commitments have been made.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, would the minister indicate when he feels he will have made up his mind as to the kind of commitments he can make to these people, in order that the kind of stable environment that is required may be established so we could proceed with developments such as this which are of great importance to the country in the long run?

Mr. Gillespie: Discussions are going on. I hope we will be able to conclude them in the relatively near future.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—NEW IMPORT REGIME DISCUSSED AT GATT

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce: it has to do with the GATT negotiations, particularly with regard to clothing. I shall read one sentence from the Financial Post dated tomorrow. It reads:

> The new import regime, whose details have been revealed privately to textile and clothing industry executives by Canadian negotiators, appears to have one manufacturer's approval, particularly in the primary textile sector.

I ask the minister if these comments are true and, if they are true, which companies have received this privileged information? If there are companies that have received it, on what grounds have they received it, when others have not and MPs have not?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): That sentence is referring to negotiations which are taking place with seven of the major exporters of textiles to Canada. They export to Canada about 80 per cent of our imports. Negotiations have been going on with these seven countries; that is what the sentence in the article is referring to.

Mr. Ellis: Are our Canadian negotiators telling the producers of other countries what our plans are at GATT, and not giving this information to Canadian producers?

Mr. Horner: I have the article before me. The hon. member is referring to GATT negotiations. The first part of the article reads:

> Last week Ottawa concluded a three-year agreement with South Korea which, like similar deals already reached with Hong Kong (unofficially), Taiwan—

It goes on to name the Philippines, China, Poland, Romania. Those are the negotiations which have taken place and to which the latter part of the article refers in the sentence which the hon. member read. It does not refer to the GATT negotiations.

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

ESTABLISHMENT OF WILDLIFE PARK IN YUKON

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development: it concerns the establishment of a wilderness park which has been proposed from time to time going back to the 1960s when the United States proposed one in conjunction with Canada. Alaska has now dedicated 74 million acres as their part of that park.

Can the minister now explain why this government has yet to move on the establishment of this park, in spite of the recommendations of the Berger commission and in spite of the pressure from the U.S. since the 1960s?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is misinformed. Several months ago I announced in Yellowknife that consultations would be undertaken in the north around six new wilderness areas: one was in the north of the Yukon. Since that time, there have been meetings with the people of Old Crow and other people interested in the north Yukon wilderness area. I hope to be able to proceed with it, after the process of public consultation, as quickly as possible.

I think I should add that when I was in Alberta, I had lunch with Governor Hammond and talked about the possibility of an international park. He seemed quite sympathetic to that, and I am sympathetic to it. It seems to be the only rational way to deal with the migration of Porcupine caribou herds.

* * *

● (1202)

ENERGY

ELDORADO NUCLEAR—CONSTRUCTION OF URANIUM REFINERY IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is consulting the Postmaster General. My question relates to a place called Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, which is not in Alberta: possibly the Postmaster General was consulting him on that.

In respect of Eldorado Nuclear Limited, has a decision been made regarding the construction of a uranium refinery outside Saskatoon, and will this refinery have provision for the production of enriched uranium for export purposes?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made on that matter.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, will the minister let the House and the people of Saskatchewan know when a decision is to be made in this regard?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any likelihood of an early decision on this matter. Of course, in respect of uranium policy generally, the Canadian government is waiting for the Bayda commission report and the response of the Saskatchewan government.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—S.O. 43 MOTION CONDEMNING COMMUNIST ATROCITIES IN KAMPUCHEA

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of a matter which occurred earlier this day.

Point of Order—Mr. W. Baker

You will recall that the House of Commons passed a motion under Standing Order 43 dealing with the dreadful situation in Cambodia. I was delighted and, indeed, proud to second the motion of the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané), joining with him and my colleagues in this regard.

One of the thoughts which comes to mind is that it is one thing for the House of Commons to pass a motion, but it may be another thing to carry out the intent of that motion. I know that in the mind of the hon. member for Matane he hopes something outside this chamber will occur.

My point of order is directed in part, sir, to you as the First Commoner, and in part to my colleague, the government House leader. It has to do with what will happen in respect of this matter following the passage of that motion. When I sit down I hope the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), who is the Acting Prime Minister today, will assure the House—I am going to stop until I have his attention because I think it is important. I am sorry to interrupt the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), who is talking with the Deputy Prime Minister, but I think it is important in respect of this motion under Standing Order 43 that the House knows that something from the government's point of view will take place, since the motion was unanimously passed by the House.

It is my hope that the Deputy Prime Minister can assure members of the House today that he, in fact, will bring this motion to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) and his department, particularly having regard to the fact that the motion called on all governments which have diplomatic relations with Canada to join with the intent of the motion. I hope we can get that assurance from the Deputy Prime Minister.

Now in respect of that part directed to you, Mr. Speaker, I understand it is the intention, and certainly I share in this, and I hope it is your intention as well, if your office permits, to consult with all parliamentary bodies with which our parliament has exchanges from time to time, in order to bring to their attention the will of this House in the hope that those parliaments will know how strongly this parliament feels in respect of that situation in Cambodia.

I do not want to embarrasss you, sir, but I think this is appropriate for consideration by way of a point of order today. I know it is the intention of the hon. member for Matane, and I share that intent and feeling with all my colleagues in the House, because this is a very serious matter and its existence is a blot on the human landscape, that free parliaments everywhere should speak out against the murder of innocent people in such political situations.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to assure the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) and the department have been made aware of the motion, and support it entirely. As we do not have diplomatic relations with democratic Kampuchea we will have to work with and express our views through the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, which we are already doing. I would say there is evidence of increasing international pressure to improve the situation and ameliorate the violence to human rights in Cambodia.

* * *

MR. RODRIGUEZ—RIGHT TO DEBATE

S.O. 43 MOTION CONDEMNING COMMUNIST ATROCITIES IN KAMPUCHEA

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order regarding a matter which took place earlier this morning in respect of a Standing Order 43 motion placed before the House by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané). When the question was put I agreed with the principle contained in the motion and I said "yes", but I did not forswear my right to debate the motion. I believe the principles contained in that motion are worthy of debate.

Prior to the calling of question period I stood in my place to be recognized in order to particpate in the debate for which the Standing Orders provide. Therefore I submit, Your Honour, the motion which was agreed to be put to the House superseded the question period in respect of debate. The precedent of this House is that in the past we had a vote on a bill put to the House for first reading, and when the vote went right into the question period, the question period was delayed until the vote had been taken. I am prepared to debate the principle involved in this particular motion. I agree with that principle, and I think it is worthy of consideration by this House in the fullest context.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Nickel-Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has called the attention of the House to a problem relating to the whole operation of Standing Order 43. May I say at the outset, for the record, that what has happened on a technical basis is, whether it has been well done or not, that the question on the motion has been before the House, it has been carried, and it has been so entered as having been carried. The matter is, therefore, finalized. Whether that was a precipitous action by the Chair in the circumstances, remains open for discussion. The fact is that this action was taken and, therefore, it is concluded.

However, the hon. member raises two other aspects of applications made pursuant to Standing Order 43. The first is, of course, that there is a popular impression that what is being sought in every circumstance is not simply unanimous consent to introduce a motion, but unanimous consent for the passage of the motion. In fact, the hon. member has highlighted that what the House is being asked to do is put the motion before the House and then, of course, to enter into debate on it if that is the desire of members of the House.

The fact that debate occurs so rarely in these circumstances does not in any way diminish the correctness of the hon. member's point. In fact what was done was that consent was given, the motion was put, and at that moment the motion was debatable. If the Chair missed the intention of the hon. member for Nickel Belt to debate the motion I must accept responsibility for that. However, again I say it is extraordinary when these matters are debated.

The hon. member for Nickel-Belt raises another point that I do think we will have to consider, and that is that once a debate is launched during the period of time set aside for motions to be put pursuant to Standing Order 43, and this is a very important point, is that debate to be interrupted by the commencement of the question period? If it is not to be interrupted by the commencement of the question period can we, under our Standing Orders, in fact have a question period at all, since it is called for on this day from 11.15 a.m. until 12 noon and on other days from 2.15 until 3 o'clock in the afternoon?

These two questions are most important. Again I suggest that the matter has been resolved; whether satisfactorily or not, it has been finalized. I do thank the hon. member for raising again the two difficulties to which I think the Committee on Procedure and Organization, early in another parliament or at another session of this parliament, will certainly have to give its attention. That is my hope.

MR. HNATYSHYN—REPETITION OF MINISTERIAL SPEECH ON SECOND READING OF BILL C-29

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of a debate which took place yesterday on the Farm Credit Corporation Bill, and a rather unusual and peculiar situation that occurred. I refer to the fact that during the course of debate yesterday, commencing at page 4227 of Hansard, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) rose to address this particular bill, and at that time stated to the House in the first sentence of his speech that he was addressing the House on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan).

• (1212)

I rose, during the course of the remarks just after that to point out to the House that the Minister of Agriculture had, in fact, addressed the House when commencing debate on second reading of this bill. The peculiar part is that when I look at the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture, starting at page 3957 of Hansard on March 20, 1978, and the remarks made by the Minister of Veterans Affairs last night, the two speeches are identical. They are exactly the same speech made in connection with this one bill.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to indicate to us whether the time of the House can be usurped and wasted by this kind of contrivance whereby a minister repeats a speech that has already been made. I tried to bring this to the attention of the House and I was met with scorn, shouting, interjections on the part of the other side of the House, and the final indignity, which was that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Caron) stood in his place and categorically stated that the Minister of Agriculture had not spoken on this particular bill. I say that the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) misled this House, because there is no question if you peruse the debates on March 20, 1978. The identical speech that was given last night was made by the Minister of Agriculture on a previous date.

One speech from the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, is enough to put you to sleep. A second speech is more than the body can stand.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there is one point that has to be made in connection with the comments made by the hon. member to explain the situation in which the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) found himself acting as the Minister of Agriculture. When the bill was called to follow the anti-inflation bill and the vote on the anti-inflation bill had taken place, the Minister of Agriculture was not in Ottawa. He was in another place, and the Minister of Veterans Affairs was acting for him and had been advised that the second reading speech had not been given by the Minister of Agriculture. On that basis he presented the second reading speech. I think it is unfortunate that the Minister of Veterans Affairs had been misled in this way. I am sure the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is not complaining about repetition as an obstacle to speechmaking in the House of Commons because, if repetition were an obstacle, then the House would have been adjourned several months earlier.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The point rarely arises in such a graphic illustration, as given by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar, (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and I realize the validity of his point. It is one that would have had validity as a matter of order during the course of debate on second reading, in respect to that particular measure. The point is well taken. In fact it raises two matters that are prohibited, not simply that of being repetitious but also the fact of reading a speech has another interesting connotation.

However, the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), has raised the difficulty that the Chair faces in attempting to enforce in a uniform and consistent way those provisions in our practice here. In any case, the point is well taken but, regrettably, is behind us.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIONNE (NORTHUMBERLAND-MIRAMICHI)—INCORRECT ATTRIBUTION OF INTERJECTIONS IN DEBATE

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of what was said by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn). I want to point out that if the suggestion made by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar is to apply to members on this side of the House, it ought to apply to members on the other side as well, particularly the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie).

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, my point of order, I hope, will facilitate work in the House of Commons over the next day or so. I understand that we will be debating Bill C-8 at the present time under a —

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): There has been no time allotted yet.

Mr. Murta: Well, I understand we are going to be debating Bill C-8, which is the labour bill. On behalf of my party we would like to obtain agreement that the farm credit legislation that has been brought in will be passed either by Friday or early Monday. We have had discussions with the chairman of the agricultural committee, to the extent that if we could get the legislation into the agricultural committee on Tuesday it could be arranged that it pass third reading Tuesday night before the budget debate starts. It is an important piece of legislation.

The Farm Credit Corporation is virtually out of money, or it will be by the middle of April. We are certainly prepared to move this bill through all stages as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would be willing to regard the debate on second reading of the Farm Credit Act as finished, endorse the bill, and send it to committee right now.

Mr. MacEachen: On the point raised by the hon. member with respect to the farm credit bill, if it is the desire of the House to send the bill to committee now without debate, I will call it first and then we can go on with the arrangements that have been made with respect to Bill C-8.

Mr. De Bané: Mr. Speaker, with respect to my Standing Order 43 motion I just want to have the assurance that the unanimous will of our parliament will be channeled to all countries with which we have either diplomatic relations or that we recognize. As for the way of doing it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) made that abundantly clear.

Order Paper Questions

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

THE BUDGET

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 60 I request that you designate the necessary order of the day to permit the budget presentation on Monday night.

* * *

● (1222)

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 160, 829, 1,092, 1,116, 1,319 1,320 and 1,425.

[Text]

"JOIN THE COAST GUARD"

Question No. 160—Mr. Marshall:

1. Did the advertisement "Join the Coast Guard" appear in any Canadian newspapers and, if so, which ones?

2. Have any applications to join the Coast Guard been received from residents in Newfoundland?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The official recruitment, for the 1978 Campaign for Officer-Cadets of the Canadian Coast Guard, commenced October 3, 1977 and terminated January 31, 1978. The following Canadian magazines were employed: "Canada & the World," "Miss Chatelaine", "Today's Generation", "Campus". All of the abovementioned were printed for general distribution or sale, across Canada, and were directed toward readers at the high school level. As of November, 1977, advertisements also appeared in the following Canadian newspapers: Granby, La Voie de l'Est; Chicoutimi, Le Quotidien; Edmunston, Le Madawaska; Les Echo Abitibiens; Thetford Mines, Le Progrès de Thetford; Sept-Iles, L'Avenir & Sept-Iles Le Journal; Rouyn-Noranda, La Frontière; Rivière-du-Loup, Le Saint-Laurent; Rimouski, Le Rimouskois; Matane, La Voie Gaspésienne; Lévis, La Tribune de Lévis-Métro; Cowansville, Le Yamaska; Gagnonville/Shefferville, Le Nordic; Cap-De-La-Madeleine, Hebdo-du-Cap; Victoria, Colonist-Times; Vancouver, Province & Sun; Calgary Albertan; Calgary Herald; Edmonton Journal; Saskatoon Star Phoenix; Regina Leader-Post; Winnipeg Free Press; Montreal Star; Moncton Times Transcript; Moncton L'Evangéline; Toronto Star; Toronto Globe and Mail; Montreal Le Devoir; Montreal La Presse; Québec Le Soleil; St. John's Telegram; St John's Daily News; Halifax Chronicle-Herald & Mail Star; Saint John Telegram-Journal & Evening Times; Charlottetown Guardian-Patriot; The Montreal Star; The Guardian-Patriot, Vancouver; Canadian Mazazine; Weekend Magazine/Perspectives.

Yes. In total, 37 applications were received from Newfoundland residents, 27 of these being eligible to write the Public Service Examination required for admission to the college.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY TOLLS

Question No. 829—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Has the government made any studies of the effect that the proposed increases in St. Lawrence Seaway tolls will have on (a) revenue to the government from Seaway tolls (b) the number of ships using the Seaway (c) the level of pilotage fees taken in on the Seaway (d) the economy of the St. Catharines-Niagara region as a result of decreased shipping through the Welland Canal (e) the continued cost competitiveness of the Seaway over alternate modes of transporation (f) employment in Canada as a result of decreased shipping activity (g) income to grain producers and (i) if so, what were the results (ii) if not, for what reason?

2. Will the government consider holding public hearings on the proposed toll increases as did the U.S. Seaway Authority?

3. In deciding to impose toll increases on the St. Lawrence Seaway, did the government consider that all Provincial Premiers, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture are opposed to the increases and, if so, for what reasons did the government ignore such opposition?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: 1. (a) The federal government would receive in 1978 a return of $6.25 million on its investment. In 1977, parliament voted $36.5 million to cover interest on debt and the operating deficit of the Welland canal. The net change would therefore amount to $42.75 million. (b) No change anticipated in the number of vessels. (c) Pilotage fees should not be affected. (d) No decreased shipping being anticipated, the economy of the St. Catharines-Niagara region should not be affected. (e) The present cost advantages of the seaway over other modes of transportation are such that increased tolls will not affect the competitiveness of the system. (f) No decreased shipping activity being anticipated, employment in Canada should not be affected. (g) Proposed toll of 2.2c. per bushel of wheat (65c. per ton) or 0.8c. per bushel (25c. per ton) more represents the extent to which the income of the producers would be affected. (i) The Canada and U.S. governments have carried out comprehensive studies of the effect that the proposed higher Seaway tolls might have on the country's economy and are satisfied that the effect would be minimal. (ii) Not applicable. As stated in (i) studies were carried out.

2. The government considered but did not hold any public hearings because the interested parties made their views known through numerous meetings with the minister and officials of the Department of Transport and the Seaway Authority, as well as with officials of other federal departments. Many briefs were submitted expressing the concern of the users of the seaway which led to a number of changes to the original proposal.

3. Some provinces have argued in favour of toll increases. The government recognized that any toll increase may be resisted for various reasons by interested parties. The numerous meetings and the analysis briefs referred to in part 2 of this reply were conducted for the purpose of considering such representations. As one result of this process, the Minister of Transport announced on December 16, 1977 that the toll increase would be phased in over a period of three years on the basis that only 50 per cent of the increased amounts will be applied at the start of the 1978 navigation season and 75 per cent at the start of the 1979 season. The total increase will not come into effect until the start of the 1980 navigation season.

AIR CANADA EARLY RETIREMENT INCENTIVES

Question No. 1,092—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. (a) What incentives have been offered to the 363 Air Canada head office staff who have been induced to take early retirement (b) what is the total cost to Air Canada of the programme?

2. What is the rationale for the early retirement programme?

3. How many retirements are targeted under the programme over the next five years?

4. Were employees, who are now signed up for the early retirement programme, given the voluntary choice of retirement or continued employment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. (a) Management employees eligible for early retirement under the company's pension plan were offered scaled severance payments which took into account years of service and age. (b) This financial data will be made available with the tabling of the 1977 annual report.

2. To meet a 10 per cent target in management staff reduction.

3. The voluntary programme was a one-time offer and there are no future retirements planned under such a programme.

4. Yes.

EXPENDITURES—CONSTITUENCY OF NICKEL BELT

Question No. 1,116—Mr. Rodriguez:

For each fiscal year since 1970, what amount was spent in the Constituency of Nickel Belt by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and those agencies that report to it?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1970/71, Nil; 1971/72, Nil; 1972/73, $79,460; 1973/74, $69,649; 1974/75, $248,183; 1975/76, $24,840; 1976/77, $767,061. From April 1, 1977 to January 31, 1978, $319,642. The reply for the Atlantic Development Council and the Canadian Council on Rural Development is as follows: Nil. The reply for the Cape Breton Development Corporation is as follows: Not applicable.

OLYMPIC COINS

Question No. 1,319—Mr. Towers:

1. How many gold double-struck olympic coins were authorized?

2. How many such coins were produced?

3. (a) At what price were the coins sold to the public (b) what price did dealers pay for them?

4. As of January 4, 1977, how many of the coins were unsold?

5. What are the latest figures on the number of coin orders unfilled?

6. Were unsold coins disposed of and, if so, in what manner?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): 1. The Olympic Coin Program was authorized to strike up to 350,000 gold double-struck coins (i.e. 22k gold proof coins).

2. See below.

3. The direct sales price was $153.50 each including mailing costs. There were a variety of dealer discount arrangements and dealers were free to sell coins at market value. Some developed special cases or presentation cases.

4. Sales in the report to parliament issued September 30, 1977 were 337,190 coins. This figure will be subject to adjustment up or down as the program winds up.

5. All coin orders on which the Olympic Coin Program has received payment have been fulfilled.

6. Any unsold proof gold coins will be melted down.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT—EMPLOYMENT OF EX-PILOTS

Question No. 1,320—Mr. MacKay:

1. How many ex-Royal Canadian Air Force personnel are now employed by the Department of Transport?

2. How many are ex-pilots in key positions in the Department?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The information requested is not readily available and to provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy manual search of all Transport Canada employees' personal files (22,000 people), which cost in manpower and time would be excessive and prohibitive.

2. There are ten ex-pilots in SX positions in Transport Canada.

IMPORTED FISH PRODUCTS

Question No. 1,425—Mr. Marshall:

What is the breakdown, by species and with amounts, of all fish products imported in the year (a) 1976-77 (b) 1977-78?

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned:

Order Paper Questions

Canadian Imports of Fish Products, by Main Species, 1976-77

Quantities (Q) in metric tones, product weight; Values (V) in thousand dollars

SPECIES and PRODUCTS	1976		1976 (Jan. Sept.)		1977 (Jan. Sept.)
	Q	V	Q	V	Q	V
COD	1,790	3,147	1,370	2,404	1,891	2,747
Fresh or frozen	1,790	3,147	1,370	2,404	1,891	2,747
HADDOCK and HAKE	2,539	3,161	1,578	1,892	2,267	2,257
Fresh or frozen	2,539	3,161	1,578	1,892	2,267	2,257
HALIBUT	965	3,137	661	1,945	316	1,260
Fresh or frozen	965	3,137	661	1,945	316	1,260
SALMON	3,495	10,305	2,250	6,253	5,299	7,166
Fresh or frozen	1,505	4,835	1,088	3,213	2,970	4,581
Canned	1,990	5,470	1,162	3,040	2,329	2,585
SPECIES and PRODUCTS	1976		1976 (Jan. Sept.)		1977 (Jan. Sept.)
	Q	V	Q	V	Q	V
TUNA	12,903	23,712	8,212	16,163	11,943	23,432
Fresh or frozen	3,883	2,765	1,450	1,075	6,251	5,591
Canned, flake pack	3,577	7,988	2,698	5,736	1,782	5,961
Canned, not specified	5,443	12,959	4,064	9,352	3,910	11,880
TROUT	701	1,782	516	1,233	709	2,180
Fresh or frozen	701	1,782	516	1,233	709	2,180
HERRING	565	779	366	476	390	589
Pickled	289	362	221	257	108	152
Canned	276	417	145	219	282	437
ANCHOVY	233	721	183	531	333	1,303
Canned	233	721	183	531	333	1,303
SARDINE	1,277	2,668	748	1,529	1,041	2,106
Canned	1,277	2,668	748	1,529	1,041	2,106
SEAFISH, NOT SPECIFIED	—	30,167	—	22,168	—	28,587
Fresh or frozen	14,365	14,335	12,275	11,281	17,639	12,332
Fresh or frozen, steaks and blocks	5,933	7,716	4,502	5,603	7,483	10,789
Smoked	238	380	194	303	228	319
Salted or dried	1,693	3,625	937	1,874	940	2,210
Pickled	87	80	59	58	47	40
Canned	2,601	1,715	2,305	1,260	1,025	1,577
Liver and Visceral oil	—	213	—	160	—	228
Fish and marine animal oil	299	233	271	208	264	173
Meal	962	309	792	243	406	128
Foods and feeds	2,323	1,561	1,080	1,178	333	791
FRESHWATER FISH, NOT SPECIFIED	1,114	1,876	730	1,029	1,789	1,149
Fresh or frozen	1,114	1,876	730	1,029	1,789	1,149
CRAB	836	3,462	483	2,119	1,107	3,468
Fresh or frozen	811	3,389	463	2,063	917	3,369
Canned	25	73	20	56	190	99
LOBSTER	2,524	23,401	1,782	17,051	2,245	17,523
Fresh or frozen	2,524	23,401	1,782	17,051	2,245	17,523
OYSTER	1,829	4,379	1,087	2,799	1,298	4,245
Fresh or frozen	597	1,015	217	524	271	599
Canned	1,232	3,364	870	2,275	1,027	3,646
SPECIES and PRODUCTS	1976		1976 (Jan. Sept.)		1977 (Jan. Sept.)
	Q	V	Q	V	Q	V
SHRIMP and PRAWN	11,002	60,585	8,205	41,715	7,399	46,908
Fresh or frozen	8,607	47,678	6,427	32,585	5,849	35,433
Canned	2,395	12,907	1,778	9,130	1,550	11,475
CLAM	2,387	2,947	1,538	1,821	1,254	2,274
Canned	2,387	2,947	1,538	1,821	1,254	2,274
SHELLFISH, NOT SPECIFIED	2,867	6,628	1,943	4,533	2,633	5,905
Fresh or frozen	2,094	4,128	1,467	2,830	2,052	3,602
Canned	773	2,500	476	1,703	581	2,303
TOTAL IMPORTS	—	182,857	—	125,661	—	153,099

[Mr. Loiselle (Chambly).]

SOURCE: Statistics Canada, Catalogue 65-007, imports by Commodities.

NOTE: Current statistics only available to September, 1977.

* * *

[Translation]

STARRED QUESTION

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred question No. 770?

[Text]

*PROCESS HEAT EXCHANGERS

Question No. 770—Mr. Rynard:

1. What is the cost per pound for nickel alloy tubing and plate for process heat exchangers from (a) International Nickel Company of Canada (b) off shore sources?

2. In which countries are the off shore sources located?

3. Is nickel alloy tubing and plate processed in Canada and, if not, for what reason?

[English]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows: 1. Prices of nickel alloy tubing and plate for heat exchangers vary widely according to product specifications. Therefore, complete specifications would be required to obtain a price from suppliers.

2. Nickel alloy tubing and plate are produced in the United States, Germany and the United Kingdom. Tubing is produced in Japan and Sweden.

3. Types of nickel alloy tubing for which there is a significant domestic market are processed in Canada. However, many nickel alloy tubing and plate products are not processed in Canada because the domestic market is too small to support a plant of minimum economic size, and major export markets are protected by significant tariffs.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. BEATTY—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS NOS. 1,233, 1,236 AND 1,237

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the government has any intention of responding to question No. 1,233 which was placed on the order paper on January 26. Questions Nos. 1,236 and 1,237 were also placed on the order paper on that date. I can understand that it might take some time to obtain the material requested but it has now been more than two months since these questions were put down.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I shall indeed take the request of the hon. member into consideration but I should like to take this opportunity to mention that, as at April 5, that is the day before yesterday, 855 questions had been answered in total, that is 56.3 per cent of all questions on the order paper, which is an excellent record.

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have just read again the reply I gave the House earlier and find that I overlooked something. As I would hate to mislead the House, could I make a correction now?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, at the end of my reply a while ago, I said certain amounts would be invested in the area early this summer: I meant early in the summer of 1979.

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might refer to consultations which have taken place with respect to Bill C-8 which I had intended to call first today until I heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta), and which I will call in accordance with that suggestion. At the same time I should like to obtain an order of the House with respect to the agreement on Bill C-8, namely, that we would commence the bill and complete the report stage and third reading in a period not longer than four hours.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That represents the agreement to which we were a party, and we would be happy if such a House order were made.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I should like to confirm the agreement on behalf of the official opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the consultations bore fruit: we have expressed our agreement.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It is, then, the intention that an order of the House be made that upon entering into debate at this time on Bill C-8, which is now at the report stage, report stage and third reading would be concluded in a period of not longer than four hours. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. MacEachen: Now, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could call, in accordance with the agreement earlier entered into, the second reading of Bill C-29 to amend the Farm Credit Act. I am calling it on the understanding it will be passed without debate and sent to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FARM CREDIT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed, from Monday, March 20, consideration of the Motion of Mr. Whelan that Bill C-29, to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Parliament lives!

* * *

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENTS TO CERTAIN SECTIONS OF THE ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-8, to amend the Canada Labour Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 1.

—That Bill C-8, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 28 by

(a) striking out line 21 at page 19

(b) striking out line 31 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"to the safety or health of the employee; and

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

(c) imminent danger to the health and safety of an employee includes a condition in any place where any radiation safety level set by either the federal or provincial government has been exceeded."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to put forward very briefly my reasons for seeking to amend this particular clause. The amendment would put in place the right of workers to refuse work in circumstances where their health or safety is in danger.

While the bill covers workers who are under federal jurisdiction, there is one group of workers who have consistently been caught in a jurisdictional jungle. I refer to the uranium workers, those who work in the refineries or processing plants as well as to those who work in the mines. They may come within the scope of regulations set by a federal agency, the Atomic Energy Control Board, or they may come under provincial jurisdiction since the provinces also set safety standards. Inspectors who attempt to enforce regulations are invariably caught in an administrative jungle. The mine owners claim on occasion that they are under provincial rather than federal jurisdiction—or they may argue the reverse depending upon which safety standards are less stringent. This whole question of jurisdiction in the field of safety will become increasingly contentious, and now is the time to eliminate some of these jurisdictional quarrels wherever possible. It seems to me the best way to do this is to say to the workers, "It does not matter who sets the safety standards; whichever safety level is the more stringent is the one you may insist upon." This is the first step to be taken in eliminating at least some of the underbrush from this regulatory jungle.

● (1232)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have had consultations with the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and we are essentially in agreement. I believe the official opposition is in agreement also, as there have been discussions with the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). I wonder if this motion could stand for a few minutes in order that I may double-check the precise wording because some changes have been made. I am prepared to elaborate on them now, but as a result of our discussions we are having it put in precise form referring to the precise clauses that are to be amended. These will be put on the hon. member's desk. I am sure he will agree with them and agree that they reflect the discussion. If we could have some time for that type of verification, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion of the minister. If hon. members agree, I suggest we suspend discussion on motion No. 1 and go to motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

Motion No. 2.

That Bill C-8, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended in Clause 29 by striking out lines 11 to 48 at page 20, lines 1 to 42 at page 21 and lines 1 to 23 at page 22 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) At least one-half of the members of a committee shall be appointed by the bargaining agent for the employees or, where there is no bargaining agent, elected by the employees of the work, undertaking or business, and the remaining members of the committees shall be appointed by the employer.

(3) The members of the committee shall elect two of the members as co-chairmen, one of whom representing the employees and one of whom representing the employers.

(4) An employer shall post and keep posted the names and work locations of all the members of the committee established for his work, undertaking or business in a conspicuous place or places where they are likely to come to the attention of his employees.

(5) The powers and functions of the Committee are:

(a) the receipt, consideration and expeditious disposition of complaints relating to the health and safety of the employees represented by the committee;

(b) the maintaining of records pertaining to disposition of complaints relating to the health and safety of the employees represented by the committee;

(c) the receipt, consideration and expeditious disposition of each safety officer's report, including any recommendation for closing down based on unsafe working conditions;

(d) co-operating with any occupational health service established to serve the place of employment;

(e) the establishment and promotion of health and safety programs for the education of the employees represented by the committee;

(f) participation in all enquiries and investigations on matters pertaining to occupational health and safety including such consultations as may be necessary with persons who are professionally or technically qualified to advise the committee on such matters:

(g) developing, establishing and maintaining programs, measures and procedures for the protection or improvement of the health and safety of employees;

(h) monitoring programs, measures and procedures related to the health and safety of employees on a regular basis;

(i) ensuring that adequate records are kept on work accidents and injuries and health hazards and monitor data obtained therefrom on a regular basis;

(j) co-operating with government safety officers;

(k) requesting from an employer or any other person acting on his behalf such information as the committee considers necessary to identify existing or potential hazards with respect to materials, processes or equipment;

(l) full access to all government and employer reports relating to the health and safety of the employees represented by the Committee.

(6) A committee shall keep accurate records of all matters that come before it pursuant to subsection 84.1(5) and shall keep minutes of its meetings and shall make such minutes and records available to the safety officer on his request.

(7) A committee shall meet during regular working hours at least once each month and, where meetings are required on an urgent basis as a result of an emergency or other special circumstance, the committee shall meet as required whether or not during regular working hours.

(8) A member of a committee is entitled to such time from his work as is necessary to attend meetings or to carry out any other functions as a member of the committee, and any time spent by the member while carrying out any of his functions as a member of the committee shall, for the purpose of calculating wages owing to him, be deemed to have been spent at his work.

(9) No member of a committee is personally liable for anything done by him in good faith under the purported authority of this section or any regulations made under this section.

(10) A committee may establish its own rules of procedure in respect of the terms of office not exceeding two years of its members, the time, place and frequency of regular meetings of a committee, and establishing such procedures for its operation as it considers advisable."

He said, Mr. Speaker, there is a reason why we are introducing this particular amendment. First of all, in regard to the establishment of health and safety committees, when we looked at the bill we felt that representatives of workers in the work place ought to be placed right in the middle of the establishment of such health and safety committees. The minister has assured me that the particular clause in the bill covers the placement of the representatives of workers in the formation and composition of the health and safety committees. In Bill C-8, however, the kind of structure for the health and safety committee, and the manner in which it would operate, were all left to orders in council. It was our feeling that the ways in which health and safety committees were to operate ought to be placed in the bill itself rather than left to orders in council. We therefore outlined what we felt those terms of reference ought to be and the manner in which those health and safety committees were to operate. We felt that ought to be outlined and placed in the bill statutorily rather than left to regulations.

I have had some discussions with the minister and we were able to eliminate some of the subclauses of the amendment before us in order to avoid duplication. We reached an agreement that on proposed section 84.1(2) this could be dispensed with as it is covered in the bill to our satisfaction, and subsection (3) is also covered to our satisfaction as is subsection (4). We felt that subsection (5) should remain as is, and the next one which is numbered subparagraph (5) should be numbered (6), and should stay. We felt it was important for that one to remain. We thought that the one numbered (7) on the order paper should be eliminated, and that was agreed. The next one, which is numbered (8), should be numbered (7), and the one on the order paper which is numbered No. (9) could be eliminated and No. (10) reordered as No. (8).

We felt that those would firmly institutionalize the health and safety committees with their terms of reference and their modus operandi with respect to the work place and the way in which the committees would conduct business on behalf of the workers they are seeking to protect under the act.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe what the hon. member has said is an accurate reflection of what was agreed. I just suggest again that he double-check over the lunch hour to see that it is in proper form, but in essence there is no disagreement. If we could table this for the lunch hour and proceed with it afterwards, I am sure the hon. member would be agreeable. It would also give the labour critic for the official opposition an opportunity to examine it more fully.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we seem to be getting along pretty well so I would like to suggest that we call it one o'clock. This would give the minister and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) a chance to sort out the paper work. I think we could then proceed expeditiously at two o'clock. It is obvious we are not going to need the full four hours we had planned.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the opposition parties for their helpfulness at report stage. In going along with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) I should like to say that I believe the official opposition has one amendment and the government has three. Those could also be examined over the lunch hour. There is a purely technical amendment to clause 24, an amendment limiting review by the federal court which is clause 43, an amendment to expand access re remote locations, clause 71(1), and the fourth, a technical amendment to correct an error regarding first agreements made in committee in clause 62 on page 35.

If all those amendments that we intend to make and that we anticipate from the official opposition are accurate—and I have indicated what they are—as well as the amendments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and can be verified over the lunch hour, they can be handled with dispatch when we come back.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I want to say on behalf of my party that we are in agreement. I will be presenting one amendment which has been discussed with the minister, arising out of representations made to the committee by Miss Betty Garbutt whose sister was killed by a former employee who had threatened to commit violence and unfortunately was not stopped in time. The basis of this amendment has been discussed with the government, and I hope it will have the support of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party.

• (1242)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add to my suggestion of a moment that the consultations which will take place between now and two o'clock will have to be not only among members on the floor but also with the Chair and the Table. What seems to be developing is a substitution of three or four report stage amendments in place of the one which has been proposed by my friend from Nickel Belt. I think we are in unanimous agreement, and that all that is needed is consultation concerning the necessary paper work.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair is very much aware of the point raised by the hon. member and is ready to cooperate. However, it must also comply with the standing order which can replace the 24-hour notice only by unanimous consent. I hope that hon. members can give that unanimous consent, and whatever agreement they see fit, when we come back at two o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is Friday; we can do it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed we call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 12.43 p.m. the House took recess.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

• (1402)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Prior to the lunch hour there was a disposition that during the short recess the minister and the members concerned would get together and suggest some motions at the report stage to replace the two motions that were in front of the House in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). We have made great progress, but that is not quite complete.

In order not to waste the time of the House, and because we did not get from the minister a redraft of motion No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt, if the House agrees I will stand consideration of that motion for the purpose of examining it later, or withdrawing it to be replaced with the newly worded motion which is being prepared at this time.

The House may agree to proceed in the order of the clauses of the bill. As we go along, we can dispose of motion No. 2, which also was in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt and will not need to be adopted because it will have been replaced by one of the other motions.

I have before me seven proposed motions, some in the name of the minister and two in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser). These motions are achieving the purposes hon. members have accepted among themselves. Of course the Chair does face a difficulty arising from the fact that three of the motions go beyond the terms of the bill which is in front of us. At the same time, taking into account the disposition in the House to proceed all along on the basis of unanimous consent, it appears to me that the implications of these changes is not so fundamental as to prevent my accepting the motions as they are, provided we consider them by unanimous consent and, thereafter, make sure we follow the normal procedure.

• (1412)

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I believe what you have just been handling is the rework or Garbutt amendment to 81(3). We have had the lawyers working and we have just been handed that wording in place of the old draft. If it is thought satisfactory, I can move the amendments in consecutive order. I may say there is only one amendment outstanding. It is the one put forward by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) relative to "imminent danger".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to follow the procedure suggested by the minister?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As we go along, the minister will be moving the motions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We agree to this but there is the understanding, of course, that if by the time we get to the point at which my hon. friend's motion No. 1 has not been reworded or redrafted, the minister will accept it in the form in which it appears on the order paper.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Quite so. I turn, now, to page 14 of the bill, present clause 24. I move, seconded by my colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen):

That Bill C-8, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by striking out line 9 on page 14 and substituting therefor the following:

"keep for a period of at least thirty-six"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I am referring to page 15 of the bill and to clause 27. I move as follows:

That Bill C-8, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by adding immediately after the following new subclause:

"27.1 subsection 81 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following new subsection:

"(3) Every person operating or carrying on a federal work, undertaking, or business who has reasonable grounds to believe that any person may commit, or has threatened to commit, an act that endangers the safety or health of the person operating or carrying on the work, undertaking or business or any of his employees shall forthwith notify the nearest police authority."

I guess that is motion No. 2.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let's deal with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I might suggest to the hon. member that it would be simpler if he were to make two separate motions on account of the fact he is proposing amendments to two different clauses. I suggest he move to add the new clause 27(1) and then come forward with another amendment to move to new clause 27(2).

Mr. Fraser: I have moved the new clause 27(1), and at that point I sat down, anticipating what Your Honour has just asked. We have one motion in front of us in relation to 27(1).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Clerk has just brought a point to my attention. In what the hon. member has just proposed he suggests that section 81 of the act be amended by adding thereto a new subsection. In his previous proposal which was examined by the Chair during the lunch hour he was suggesting that 27(1)(3) be repealed and certain words substituted. The hon. member is now, in one way, suggesting an addition to a clause. In another, he is repealing a clause and revising it. I want to make sure we do things in the right way. It is my interpretation that he is suggesting the repeal of the clause and its replacement.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No.

Mr. Fraser: I do not think so.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): What was advised during the lunch hour by the lawyers for the Department of Justice was to leave 71(1) as it is. It provides for certain rights to employees with respect to overtime and vacation pay. This is in regard to orders to pay arrears and I am sure it is not the intention of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) to negate that provision. We wish to amend the clause by making an additional provision which would be numbered (3) as moved.

● (1422)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Fraser) agreed to.

Clause 27.1 agreed to.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in the motion that you now have in front of you you will see clause 27.2 which reads:

27.2 Section 82 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

I am sure the minister understands that Section 82 of the Code has literally been revised over the noon hour, the consequence of which is this motion. So the effect of this motion is not only to put in the second part of what we may call the Garbutt amendment but also to bring back to full force those other sections of the Code which it is not the intention to delete. So I will read the entire amendment.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) that:

27.2 Section 82 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"82(1) Every person employed upon or in connection with the operation of any federal work, undertaking or business shall, in the course of his employment,

(a) Take all reasonable and necessary precautions to ensure his own safety and the safety of his employees; and

(b) at all appropriate times use such devices and wear such articles of clothing or equipment as are intended for his protection and furnished to him by his employer, or required pursuant to this Part to be used or worn by him.

(2) Every person employed upon or in connection with any federal work, undertaking or business, who has reasonable grounds to believe that any person may commit, or has threatened to commit, an act that endangers the safety of his employer or any person employed upon or in connection with any work, undertaking or business, shall forthwith notify his employer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 27.2 agreed to.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we will now move on to page 19 of the bill. We intend to add to 82.1 (12) paragraph (c) dealing with imminent danger. The wording is not in front of me or my colleagues in the House at present, so

I will come back to it later. I will now move on to the next amendment, again with the understanding that if it is not here in sufficient time we will proceed with the wording of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I then move on to page 20, section 84.1. I propose to move the deletion of paragraph (4), seconded by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen):

That paragraph (4) of section 84.1 be deleted and the following wording substituted therefor:

(4) The powers and functions of the committee are:

(a) the receipt, consideration and expeditious disposition of complaints relating to the health and safety of employees represented by the committee;

I should qualify here by saying that this wording is identical to a motion put earlier by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). The amendment continues to read:

(b) the maintaining of records pertaining to the disposition of complaints relating to the health and safety of employees represented by the committee;

(c) the receipt, consideration and expeditious disposition of each safety officer's report, including any recommendation for closing down based on unsafe working conditions;

(d) co-operating with any occupational health service established to serve the place of employment;

(e) establishment and promotion of health and safety programs for the education of the employees represented by the committee;

(f) participation in all inquiries and investigations on matters pertaining to occupational health and safety, including such consultations as may be necessary with persons who are professionally or technically qualified to advise the committee on such matters;

(g) developing, establishing and maintaining programs, measures and procedures for the protection or improvement of the health and safety of employees;

(h) monitoring programs, measures and procedures related to the health and safety of employees on a regular basis;

(i) ensuring that adequate records are kept on work accidents and injuries and health hazards and monitored data obtained therefrom on a regular basis;

(j) co-operating with government safety officers;

(k) requesting from an employer or any other person acting on his behalf such information as the committee considers necessary to identify existing or potential hazards with respect to materials, processes or equipment;

(l) full access to all government and employer reports relating to the health and safety of the employees represented by the committee.

In the same motion, if it is permissible, we will move the deletion of the present paragraph (5) and substituting in lieu thereof a new paragraph (5) which reads as follows:

(5) A committee shall keep accurate records of all matters that come before it pursuant to subsection 84.1(4) and shall keep minutes of its meetings and shall make such minutes and records available to the safety officer on his request.

We will also move the substitution of paragraph (6) by the following:

(6) A committee shall meet during regular working hours at least once each month and, where meetings are required on an urgent basis as a result of an emergency or other special circumstance, the committee shall meet as required whether or not during regular working hours.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

We will also move the deletion of the present paragraph (7) and the substitution of the following:

(7) A member of a committee is entitled to such time from his work as is necessary to attend meetings or to carry out any other functions as a member of the committee, and any time spent by the member while carrying out any of his functions as a member of the committee shall, for the purpose of calculating wages owing to him, be deemed to have been spent at his work.

● (1432)

Further I propose to move the addition of subclause 12 which reads as follows:

Subject to subsection (9), a committee may establish its own rules of procedure in respect of the terms of office not exceeding two years of its members, the time, place and frequency of regular meetings of a committee, and establishing such procedures for its operation as it considers advisable.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is the first time the Chair is cognizant of this amendment. If we want to follow the normal procedure, it should be split in such a way as to amend one clause of the bill at a time. If there is a disposition to have the Chair put it in this manner, it would be done only as an exceptional procedure for the purpose of saving time. I invite comments from hon. members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think there is less embarrassment if we put this one rather than some of the others. Most of the wording of this one is the same wording as motion No. 2 in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Rightly so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to assume that the Chair is being asked to put the motion as it is, and as an exceptional procedure in order to assist the proceedings at report stage?

It is moved by Mr. Munro (Hamilton East), seconded by Mr. Cullen—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there was an understanding that this was to be moved in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, that is quite acceptable. I thought the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) indicated, if I moved it, that it would be acceptable, as long as the House is fully cognizant. It does not matter.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): I move it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I second it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Therefore Mr. Rodriguez, seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moves that Bill C-8 be amended in the form as just read by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) for seeing the benefit of clearly establishing the terms of reference and the duties of safety and health committees in the bill, rather than leaving it to regulations. In my opinion, this is the most important aspect of the bill rather than leaving it to regulations. In my opinion, this is the most important aspect of the bill. Often we are bombarded with propaganda indicating that the number of days lost to strikes has a very grievous and serious effect on the Canadian Economy: Very little is said about the very grievous and serious blow to the Canadian economy caused by the number of days lost through accidents on the job, injuries, or lingering physical conditions because of ailments resulting from employment. Indeed the province of Ontario is wracked with such incidents.

There must be legislation providing workers with the right to exercise some control over the conditions under which and in which they work. It is one of the worker's rights to exert control over the health and safety conditions of his employment. It is one right which should not be taken away. A long time ago it was taken away by what became owners' rights. The owners determine the conditions under which the worker labours. I commend the minister for bringing an amendment to the federal Labour Code before the House which returns to the worker what was his right in the first place. I am referring to the right of a worker to refuse employment in conditions and under conditions which he considers to be injurious to his health and safety.

Instead of the health and safety committees being optional, I would have preferred those committees to be mandatory. The minister is well aware of that. I made that point time and time again in committee. If we indicate that workers ought to have control over their conditions of work, then it seems to me health and safety committees ought to be mandatory. An agreement could not be reached on that. Thus, we agreed to compromise, and we obtained a great deal of benefit for workers under federal jurisdiction. Now the conditions under which the health and safety committees will be conducted in the work place are clearly set out. It provides the workers with a right to certain information. At the present time it is denied to them. I am referring to such things as dust levels, radiation levels, or whatever. Now they would have the right to obtain such information in order to arrive at some decision vis-à-vis their continuing employment. This is extremely important.

I do not want to get carried away. I am a politician who has his feet firmly fixed on the ground, but some people would never accuse me of having them firmly affixed in cement. I realize this is not the nirvana for workers' control over the work place. As I look at part IV of the federal Labour Code, I notice in Section 80, subsection (2), that notwithstanding this legislation, nothing in the federal Labour Code which refers to the health and safety of employees will apply to employment in connection with the operation of ships, trains, aircraft, and those agencies of government which come under the Financial Administration Act. I recognize that shortcoming.

Even if this legislation is passed, there is a "notwithstanding clause" which indicates that it does not apply to ships, trains, and aircraft. What else is under federal jurisdiction? Of course an umbrella has been provided. In case anything has been missed, any other agency of government which comes under the Financial Administration Act has been added. Well, every federal government operation comes under that act. The Atomic Energy Control Board comes under the Financial Administration Act. That board sets the radiation levels under which Canadian workers work at Eldorado or the mines at Elliot Lake.

Also there is a provision which indicates that changes can be made by order in council. I hope the minister will receive the cooperation of his cabinet colleagues in that regard. I am anxious about health and safety. I hope the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) gives us the assurance he will work with his cabinet colleagues in order to get an order in council which would indicate that if it is good enough to have it on paper, let us make it apply to some workers for a change. I hope the minister provides some assurance that we will not have another paper tiger. There are enough paper tigers in Canada. We should start to give workers some control over their working conditions. Workers are starting to refuse to work because conditions are unsafe in this country.

• (1442)

Can you imagine that we have a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who was a great defender of the asbestos workers. Oh, boy, when he was young and single, and before coming to parliament, he was a great defender of the asbestos workers. He was a great one to condemn the asbestos companies for the kind of working conditions that existed in the province of Quebec. It has been ten years since he became the Prime Minister of this country, with all the power of that office and we now find we are getting amendments to the federal Labour Code. These amendments come along every ten years, and we now have one that is to provide some protection for the workers vis-à-vis health and safety conditions.

This provision immediately becomes emasculated, because in Part IV of the federal Labour Code it is stated that this cannot apply to workers on ships, trains, and in aircraft, or indeed any other agency of the government which comes under the Financial Administration Act. One would hope that those vocal advocates of labour and of the rights of workers to work in safe health conditions would, in fact, come forward with an order in council putting these workers under the aegis of this particular bill. I hope the minister can give us the assurance that this is the direction in which we are headed with this bill.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief intercession at this point. Let me congratulate the minister on a very meaningful piece of legislation in terms of promoting labour peace in Canada. The key clause of the bill we are now dealing with may make a significant contribution, although perhaps not in the immediate future, as there are too many exceptions over which the minister does not have control, because of provincial jurisdictions. We should give the minister some credit for leading the way for provincial ministers of labour, who can now have a look at this proposal and make sure provincial labour codes contain the specific provisions of clause 29 which we are about to pass.

In rising to speak on this particular clause let me suggest it is incumbent upon members of parliament to examine the strike situation in Canada from time to time, and the reasons for strikes. Strikes have become very unpopular in the public's mind. Let me remind the House and the minister, although he may be aware of this, of a strike taking place today in Newfoundland at a place called Baie Verte, where asbestos workers of the Advocate mines, some 570 of them, have now been on strike for seven weeks. I can assure hon. members of the House that strike pay in Newfoundland is pretty darn low. I expect it is about $30 per week for a man and his family attempting to survive. These workers are not on strike for more pay. They are not on strike for anything except a change in their working conditions.

Le me tell the minister about those working conditions. A study was carried out by Dr. Selikoss in respect of the conditions at the Advocate mines. He found that 31 per cent of the workers with 15 or more years' experience in these mines show abnormalities through X-ray, which lead to asbestosis; 15 per cent with 10 or more year's experience have abnormalities leading to asbestosis, and of the entire work force this works out to one of every ten workers with abnormalities caused from working in the Advocate mines. In spite of this we have a company and several governments which refuse to move in terms of improving the working conditions in these mines.

I know the public becomes frustrated from time to time when the airlines and other such companies go on strike, or when there is a strike among the building trades which delays construction, but I want to say that all members of parliament should be backing up this kind of strike, because such strikes can bring labour peace to Canada, particularly if they make members of parliament and our ministers aware of the fact that we must act to protect the workers who are dying every day all across this country as a direct result of the environmental conditions in which they are forced to work.

The asbestos mining situation is one of these cases, but the fluoride situation is another. Studies have been done in respect of the Kitimat company in British Columbia, and I am sure the minister is aware of this. Fluoride poisoning is a direct result of working in aluminum production.

It is time that every legislature in Canada adopted the provisions of this bill so that workers have the right to save their lives by removing themselves from a working place when working there is destroying their health. There are some amendments we might like to have seen incorporated in this bill to accomplish certain other things, but I repeat my original words that the minister is to be commended for a progressive move in the labour scene. I hope he will take the advice of my colleague, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), about extending the jurisdiction of this measure. It may be that the minister may want to clarify this. I have not had a chance to examine the clause in detail. Perhaps I could get the minister's attention.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): You have it.

Mr. Leggatt: Perhaps he can clarify for the House just what this provision means in terms of its exceptions, indicating whether in effect the atomic energy and uranium industry is exempted. I am not entirely sure about this, and perhaps the minister is in a position to clarify it. I hope he can also give the House some explanation of why workers in the transportation system, such as airlines, are not covered. It may be that they are covered under another bill, but I do not know.

I did not have an opportunity of following the bill through the committee, and I would appreciate the minister's response to those questions; what do the exemptions really mean, and what firms are covered under the Financial Administration Act, thereby being exempt from this legislation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just spoken, and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), have referred to the uranium situation. There is now a bill on the Order Paper, of which the hon. member for Nickel Belt is aware, to amend the Atomic Energy Control Act. It has reference to Part IV of the labour code applying to the industry, but it does include, as we are all aware, the phrase "unless the board otherwise directs". I would anticipate that when that bill comes before the House, particularly in view of the comments by both hon. members of the NDP, there will be controversy about those qualifying words. I anticipate hopefully dealing constructively with the objections to those words when that particular bill is before the House.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues in congratulating the minister for this step forward taken by this amendment, and in paying tribute to him for his efforts and the efforts of his department to bring safe working conditions to the Devco mines in the Cape Breton coal fields.

I was not a member of the committee, although I attended one of its sessions, and I have difficulty understanding why these health and safety committees are not mandatory. It has been my experience that when health and safety committees are not mandatory there is a tendency on the part of the owners or the companies to take them less than seriously.

We must remember that all federal labour legislation, although it applies only to a very small minority of workers in Canada, not to the total working force, is meant to be persuasive in provincial jurisdictions, but we cannot bank on that type of thing. Even if we do bank on it, if the federal government is not prepared to make this mandatory, it takes away from what is a real forward step in the safety and health fields as far as protection of workers is concerned. Traditionally—as the minister and all members of the House know—the owners of property, whether they be joint stock companies or multinational corporations, consider that the main objective of protecting working conditions is to make sure their property, and therefore, the productivity that comes out of the ownership of that property, are safeguarded.

• (1452)

It has taken the trade union movement a long time, and it has never fully succeeded through collective bargaining alone, to establish the contrary right, which is really a human right, but which has been referred to from a legal point of view, that the worker has the property right to his job too, just as the owners of the joint stock corporation or the capitalist, publicly owned corporation or multinational, have with respect to their property. This amendment goes a step toward helping this.

Again, I would like to ask the minister why he does not make these health and safety committees mandatory. While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, and not in direct reference to this amendment—but since I am leaving for my constituency and I have attended one of these meetings where I brought this up and the minister was not present—why is it that there is not the minimum of union security granted to the unions in this labour code? Why, for example, is not the agency shop, as it is now called in jurisdictions in the United States where it is so plentiful, and what we familiarly know as the Rand formula in Canada, not included in this new labour code?

The Rand formula dates approximately from 1948 and arises, as the minister knows, from the traditional conflict between the individual rights of workers to join a union. The collective right of the union is to negotiate on behalf of its workers since it is an agent for all of the workers within the plant and has been certified as a bargaining unit. Such a formula would give those workers who wanted to opt out of a union the freedom to opt out. But since the union is the agent in getting improved conditions, salaries and so on—and under this amendment will have an added impetus to improve the safety and health of the conditions under which the workers will work—why is it that the union does not have this minimum protection that union dues will have to be paid by all members of the bargaining unit, even if some opt out of being members of the union?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. minister has introduced the amendment, and it was moved by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). As the minister has already answered a question, and we are not in committee of the whole, he is entitled to speak only once. If he wishes to answer this question he will have to do it by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to answer the question?

Perhaps it may be more in order, if there are other questions, that the minister seek one unanimous consent, but I am at the disposal of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is unanimous consent.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the members of the House. I will answer the two questions as quickly as possible because I understand the hon. member has to leave.

The reason it is not mandatory is because we wish to put it through a trial period to test the validity of the general thrust of the 14 points to which the hon. member from the New Democratic Party from Vancouver just referred. It is simple to make something mandatory in the legislation, but if the desire to accomplish things in these committees, which do have equal representation of management and labour on them, is not there, then even if you put a policeman at the door to be sure that they stay in the room — the further specifics that the hon. member for Nickel Belt has in his amendments—if the willingness to accomplish anything of a meaningful nature through the committees is not there, nothing will get accomplished whether the committees are mandatory or not. Thus, it is the old story of management and labour and trying to get a degree of co-operation.

It can be likened to the collective bargaining process: they sit down and negotiate and accomplish nothing and make a mockery of the negotiating process. This often happens, as the hon. member knows, and I think there is a real analogy here. We felt that by treating the parties with a degree of maturity, perhaps they would see the wisdom of co-operation rather than the "big stick", which, as I have already indicated, comes up with precious few results if the spirit is not there. That is the reason that it is not mandatory.

In a sense it is more effective because the whole spirit of the legislation and its amendments is indicative of the hope on the part of the government and, more important, of parliament, that these committees should be formed to accomplish the purposes set out in the legislation. It is hoped that they will do it of their own volition and in their own enlightenend self-interest and, obviously, on the part of the employees. Employers with any degree of wisdom or compassion, or even in their own self-interest in terms of a long-term economic gain, should care about the health of their workers and do this of their own volition.

Our legislation calls for the safety officers to conduct education programs in the work place, and this should indicate to the employers the necessity and benefit gained by following it as a matter of volition. If, over a period of time, there is nothing but obstinancy and refusal to follow the legislation, then the minister can require it. Indeed, I would suspect that it would be a rather inadequate minister of labour if after a reasonable testing period there is still obstinancy in forming committees of this kind, he did not, in fact, take advantage of the provision parliament gave him to require it to be done. That is the philosophy.

On the second point, the Rand formula, the government has not gotten into the act in terms of saying what fundamental rights unions have, which they have earned over a protracted period of time in Canada, any more than stipulating certain rights that companies perceive that they are entitled to when they meet with agents of unions at the bargaining table. We would open up a new set of provisions that would be the subject matter of endless debate. As far as the Rand formula is concerned, it is almost incredible to think that that is not accepted as a fact of life among organized workers and unions in Canada.

I can think of one outstanding example which occurred two or three years ago where the employer chose to have a dispute that went into a strike situation. It was a very bitter dispute over the failure to acknowledge the reality of the Rand formula, but that was a most exceptional circumstance. Every major employer in the organized sector today has accepted the Rand formula. It would be rather redundant at this stage to build into the legislation what is accepted by employers in the organized sector so prevalently that I think it would almost weaken the legislation to include it. It is common, ordinary practice. It has not been a matter of dispute at all in Canada except in one or two extraordinary circumstances. That being the case, I wonder at the necessity of putting it in legislation. To raise it as an issue now when it is accepted in common practice seems to be counterproductive.

● (1502)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I think I served Your Honour notice, and I do now to my colleagues, that unfortunately in the wording of the motion of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) there was a typographical error which was repeated by myself. I refer to page 2 of the amendment, clause 5, the second line, which refers to "subsection 84.1(5)". That should be (4) rather than (5). I wonder if that can be accepted as a clerical error.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to make the correction proposed by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion was put to the House; I hope the House will not ask me to read it. It replaces subclauses (4), (5), (6), (7) and adds subclause (10). Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House of adopt said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Rodriguez) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This would require, I imagine, withdrawal of the previous motion, No. 2, that had been put to the House before lunch and which appeared in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). Is it agreed that motion No. 2 be withdrawn and struck from the order paper?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 2 (Mr. Rodriguez) withdrawn.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would be prepared to go back so that we could take the motions in consecutive order and move the amendment with respect to the imminent danger provision which appears on page 19 of the bill, if he has had time to check the text which has been gone over by the Department of Justice officials. If so, I would invite him to make the motion now.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That Bill C-8 be amended on page 19 by striking out lines 21 to 31 and substituting the following therefor:

(b) where an employee having a particular occupation would normally work in a place in a particular condition or circumstance or where an employee would normally in the course of his employment work in a place in a particular condition or circumstance, that condition or circumstance in the place does not constitute an imminent danger to the safety or health of the employee and;

(c) imminent danger to the health and safety of an employee includes a condition in any place where any radiation safety level set by either the federal or provincial government has been exceeded."

Mr. Speaker, I was particularly interested, in the community that I represent, to learn that just about 100 miles away there are two very large uranium mining companies, Rio Algom and Denison Mines, that have been mining uranium since about 1958. I have become aware of the problems of people who work in the uranium mines vis-à-vis lung cancer. It has been quite a task, an uphill struggle for the union, the United Steelworkers of America, which represents workers in those operations, to get agencies of the provincial and federal governments to recognize the hazards of radiation exposure.

The Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada is responsible for setting the safety levels in those mines—if there can be any such thing as a safety level. Implementation of the standards, however, has been turned over to the provincial ministry of mines and ultimately to the department of labour of Ontario. They are supposed to carry out the proper inspection and ensure that the safety levels are adhered to. History has shown that those levels were never enforced. As a result, the union representing the workers has had an uphill struggle to prove that the incidence of lung cancer with those workers has a direct link to and is a direct result of their employment in the mines.

The record is strewn with refusal after refusal of the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario to recognize that lung ailments, particularly lung cancer, are a direct result of working in those mines under those conditions. We find that the safety and health of those workers have been lost in this kind of jurisdictional struggle between the federal government and the provincial government. The federal government is responsible for setting the level trhrough the Atomic Energy Control Board but it has turned responsibility for enforcement over to the provincial health inspectors. These inspectors are now attempting to enforce standards set by the Ontario ministry of mines.

The company, when it suits its purposes, maintains that it comes under federal jurisdiction. Whichever is the less stringent standard is the one the company stands by. When the Atomic Energy Control Board standard is less stringent than the provincial standard, the company claims to be under federal jurisdiction. Where the provincial standard is less stringent, then the company claims to come under provincial jurisdiction.

At the moment a case is at arbitration. Workers, exercising their rights under the Ontario bill 139, walked off the job because of conditions in the uranium mines. The company is disputing that jurisdiction, claiming they were contravening the federal act, not a provincial act. The case has gone to arbitration because the workers feel strongly about getting the tightest possible control over working conditions. That is why I raised the question with the minister. There is a need to place the uranium workers—whether they work in processing plants, refineries or mines—firmly and squarely under the jurisdiction which is the most stringent. This whole jungle of federal-provincial jurisdiction must be eliminated. The minister agreed there is a problem and that this is the direction we should move in to provide safety and control over the workplace for those most affected, the workers.

I am not naive, Mr. Speaker. I say again to the minister that I recognize in Part IV this could not become effective because of the fact that the AECB comes under the Financial Administration Act. I hope the minister can convince his colleagues that we need an order in council which would put those workers under the umbrella of this particular bill. I plead with the minister to do that because that is what I intend to tell to the workers in my area. As a matter of fact, I am speaking in Blind River on Saturday afternoon at the nominating convention of the person whom I hope will be the next member of parliament for Algoma.

An hon. Member: Dreamer.

● (1512)

Mr. Rodriguez: Well, I think the New Democratic candidate will be the next member of parliament for Algoma. When I speak at this convention I will deal with this matter. I will not be so naive as to say that we have nirvana. The minister still has to convince his colleagues that this sort of change must be made. I wish the minister the best of luck with that task. He knows where I stand on this issue and he has my support. I hope he will proceed onward and upward.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I understand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Rodriguez) agreed to.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am referring to page 28 of Bill C-8. I am moving an addition which will be a new clause. I move, seconded by my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen):

That Bill C-8 be amended in Clause 43 by striking out lines 35 to 37 on page 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"44. Sections 122 and 123 of the said Act are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"122. (1) Subject to this Part, every order or decision of the Board is final and shall not be questioned or reviewed in any court, except in accordance with subsection 28(1)(a) of the Federal Court Act.

(2) Except as permitted by subsection (1), no order, decision or proceeding of the Board made or carried on under or purporting to be made or carried on under this Part shall be

(a) questioned, reviewed, prohibited or restrained, or

(b) made the subject of any proceedings in or any process of any court, whether by way or injunction, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto or otherwise, on any ground, including the ground that the order, decision or proceeding is beyond the jurisdiction of the Board to make or carry on or that, in the course of any proceeding, the Board for any reason exceeded or lost its jurisdiction.

123. (1) The Board shall, on the"

That is the amendment. I am sure hon. members are aware that this is designed to overcome frivolous delays by applications to the Federal Court during proceedings before the board which delay the decision, to the frustration of both parties involved. It is similar to proposals in other provincial legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Before presenting this amendment, the Chair would ask unanimous consent of the House to have motion No. 1, which was on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) withdrawn. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 (Mr. Rodriguez) withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House has heard the terms of the motion of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) agreed to.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): I would now like to draw hon. members' attention to page 35 of Bill C-8, referring to Clause 62. This appears at the bottom of the page on the left-hand side. Section 171.1 is deleted. I move, seconded by my colleague the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen):

That Bill C-8 be amended by striking out lines 31 to 39 on page 35 and lines 1 to 7 on page 36 and substituting therefor the following:

"171.1 (1) Where an employer or a bargaining agent is required, by notice given under Section 146 after December 31, 1975, to commence collective bargaining for the purpose of entering into the first collective agreement between the parties with respect to the bargaining unit for which the bargaining agent has been certified and the requirements of paragraphs 180(1) (a) to

(d) have otherwise been met, the Minister may, if he considers it necessary or advisable, at any time thereafter direct the Board to inquire into the dispute and, if the Board considers it advisable, to settle the terms and conditions of the first collective agreement between the parties.

(2) The Board shall proceed as directed by the Minister under subsection (1) and, if the Board settles the terms and conditions of a first collective agreement referred to in that subsection, those terms and conditions shall constitute the collective agreement between the parties and shall be binding on them and on the employees in the bargaining unit, except to the extent that such terms and conditions are subsequently amended by the parties by agreement in writing.

(3) In settling the terms and conditions of a first collective agreement under this section, the Board shall give the parties an opportunity to present evidence and make representations and the Board may take into account

(a) the extent to which the parties have, or have not, bargained in good faith in an attempt to enter into the first collective agreement between them;

(b) the terms and conditions of employment, if any, negotiated through collective bargaining for employees performing the same or similar functions in the same or similar circumstances as the employees in the bargaining unit; and

(c) such other matters as the Board considers will assist it in arriving at terms and conditions that are fair and reasonable in the circumstances.

(4) Where the terms and conditions of a first collective agreement are settled by the Board under this section, the agreement shall be effective for a period of one year from the date on which the Board settles the terms and conditions of the collective agreement."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) agreed to.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would now like to draw hon. members' attention to page 42. The new clause 71.1 has to do with remote locations, permitting union officers to go thereon. I move, seconded by the hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen):

That Bill C-8 be amended by adding thereto immediately after clause 71 on page 42 the following:

71.1 Subsection 199(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"199. (1) Where the Board

(a) receives from a trade union an application for an order granting an authorized representative of the trade union access to employees living in an isolated location on premises owned or controlled by their employer or by any other person, and

(b) determines that access to the employees

(i) would be impracticable unless permitted on premises owned or controlled by their employer or by such other person, and

(ii) is reasonably required for purposes relating to soliciting union membership, the negotiation or administration of a collective agreement, the processing of a grievance or the provision to employees of a union service, the Board may make an order granting the authorized representative of the trade union designated in the order access to the employes on the premises of their employer or such other person, as the case may be, that are designated in the order."

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the motion of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) agreed to.

● (1522)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Pinard: By leave, now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Now, pursuant to special order made earlier this day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the House should get leave to take third reading of this bill at this time. It is an important piece of legislation. We do not want it to get caught by any events that could occur. I would make a special plea, however. I point out that our table officers and Mr. Maingot and his staff are extremely efficient. This gives me a chance to say so. Because of the numerous changes we have made, I trust they will apply their efficiency to the extreme in reprinting this bill so that the bill we are now passing on third reading does conform to what we have agreed to at the report stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): By leave now, we will take third reading.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I wish to thank hon. members.

* * *

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO CORRECT REVISED STATUTES

Hon. Monique Bégin (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-41, to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, after consultation with opposition parties, I think there is unanimous consent to proceed with consideration of Bill C-41 at all stages in a very short period. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Young) would simply have a very brief remark to make before passage of this bill at all stages.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, speaking for my party, I can confirm that there have been such discussions. This bill, as the parliamentary secretary will point out, just makes changes to clear up a few anomalies. It does not have any effect in terms of substance. A draft of the bill was considered in committee before the bill itself was introduced. We see no reason why we should not deal with it completely this afternoon. We are prepared to give it second reading, have it referred to committee of the whole and give it third reading.

May I say that one of these Friday afternoons, when we seem to be able to do so well, I hope the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will come in with his bill affecting the rates of pensions, and he will see how fast we get that through.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): We would need unanimous consent of all hon. members to change the wording of the motion to go into committee of the whole. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, just to recap briefly and as a courtesy to hon. members, hon. members will recall that some few months ago I tabled in the House a document entitled "Proposal to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms" and so on. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has said, it was subsequently referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It was studied by that committee on the understanding that the proposals contained in that document, which were accepted by the committee, would then become the bill which we presently have before us. The bill before us contains proposals accepted by all members of the standing committee.

I should point out as a courtesy to hon. members that in the bill as printed there is one less clause compared to the report which was tabled by the chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. The clause which is missing has been deleted from the bill. It had to do with the appointment of auditors to Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) requested subsequent to the report and the proposals being brought into the House, and prior to the printing of the bill, that that clause be deleted at the request of hon. members on both sides of the House. As a courtesy to hon. members, the minister does not wish to proceed with that clause at the moment.

All clauses in the bill have been thoroughly studied by the justice and legal affairs committee. I hope the bill will be approved expeditiously in all stages this afternoon.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the parliamentary secretary for the kindness of his consultation with me with regard to this bill and with particular reference to the amendment dealing with the auditor of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I understand it was the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott), the urban affairs critic of this party, who led in the concurrence of the request to the minister with regard to that matter. That is perfectly acceptable.

Mr. Young: There were one or two.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The parliamentary secretary has indicated there were one or two. He is quite right with respect to that.

This is housekeeping legislation. It is a good idea for us from time to time to go through the statutes of Canada and pick out the anomalies and changes that should be made, those things that drive lawyers crazy and do not help in the relationship between clients and their lawyers. It is very difficult for solicitors to explain to their clients anomalies and inconsistencies.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It drives the public crazy.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I know that the hon. member opposite is a client. I do not know whether he is a lawyer. In any event, it is good to get this kind of thing straightened out. Bearing in mind this is housekeeping legislation, it is appropriate that so soon before the House we all keep is dissolved and we go our separate ways we should be dealing with this kind of legislation. We are quite prepared to agree that this bill should go through all stages today in this place. When concurrence is called for, I am prepared to consent on behalf of Her Majesty's opposition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

• (1532)

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, after consultation with opposition parties, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that it is four o'clock and that we should proceed with consideration of notice of motion No. 23, in the name of the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). I ask for the unanimous consent of the House so that all notices of motion prior to No. 23 be allowed to stand and that the hour provided for consideration of private members' business expire at 4.35, when we can call it five o'clock.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The House has heard the request of the parliamentary secretary that the Chair should consider it four o'clock and that all notices of motion prior to No. 23 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent? Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

TRANSPORTATION

SUGGESTED NETWORK FOR MARITIME PROVINCES

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury) moved:

That the Standing Committee on Regional Development be empowered to study the concept of using transportation as a development tool by putting in place a modern transportation network in the maritime provinces, incorporating bus, train, highway and air services, and report back to the House its findings on the desirability and the best ways and means of achieving such a concept.

He said: Mr. Speaker, we must focus the attention of all departments of government on the issue of regional transportation if we are to succeed in helping Canadians who live in the Atlantic provinces to help themselves. Transportation is of paramount importance to the region, and since it is related directly to the whole question of regional economic expansion I want it placed before the appropriate committee of this House to be considered and dealt with within the total context of that committee's mandate.

Lack of an effective transportation system has been a problem in the maritime provinces ever since the turn of the century when the intercolonial railway was absorbed by Canadian National Railways. A gradual increase to bring fares charged in the maritimes to the higher level charged in Upper Canada was brought about by 1923. One of the early rate hikes amounted to about 120 per cent. The competitive disadvantage to the maritimes was recognized in 1927 with the passage of the Maritime Freight Rates Act under which rail freight rates were reduced by 20 per cent for freight passage within the maritimes, and a slight reduction was made with respect to freight originating in the maritimes for transportation elsewhere in Canada. In 1957 the subsidy was increased to 30 per cent and in 1969 the Atlantic Regional Freight Assistance Act was passed providing subsidies to Maritime truckers.

In 1974 changes were made in the federal freight subsidy program affecting railways and truckers in the maritimes; an additional selective subsidy of 20 per cent in addition to the existing 30 per cent subsidy came into effect. This program was designed to assist the transport of selected commodities grown or manufactured in the Atlantic provinces and shipped to other parts of Canada for sale.

Despite millions of dollars paid in these subsidies, maritime shippers still find themselves at a comparative disadvantage in selling products from the maritimes in the central Canadian market. There are serious structural deficiencies in our transportation system which work against Canadians who live in the Atlantic provinces. Because of tariff and quota regulations, Canadians who live along the Atlantic seaboard form a captive market for industries in central Canada. On the other hand, their distance from the more densely populated markets places them at a serious disadvantage when it comes to developing an industrial base of their own. With smaller industries and a lower population they ship a lower volume of products through older and less developed transportation carriers at transportation costs which are much higher both on a unit basis and in terms of the distance travelled. Maritimers are paying for unused capacity as well as for part of the subsidies which they themselves receive.

As a result of the population and industrial imbalance between the maritimes and central Canada, many boxcars go to the maritimes loaded with goods for delivery there and return empty or partially empty. The relatively low volume shipped westward means that maritimers do not enjoy all the advantages of competition between carriers. The trucking operation which developed dramatically in recent years has still not reached its potential. Moreover, the high risk factor involved and the smaller profits to be made by truckers meant that the operation was much slower to start than might have been expected.

In addition to suffering from a lack of competition between carriers, maritimers also suffer from the lack of co-operation between road and rail and from a failure to bring about integration in certain areas. Railroads and truckers should, for example, be encouraged to become involved in common warehouses and integrated schedules to their mutual advantage and that of the public they serve.

• (1542)

I would like now to turn briefly to the quality of transportation service in the maritimes and the Atlantic region. One of the most criticized features of air travel is the number of intermediate stops that must be made between centres. Let me illustrate this. If you are travelling at around 6 p.m. from Charlottetown to Fredericton, you fly from Charlottetown to Halifax, you change planes, and then you fly from Halifax to Moncton, from Moncton to Saint John and from Saint John to Fredericton. If you are flying at 8.40 a.m. from Fredericton to Ottawa, probably you will not have too much difficulty getting the flight from Fredericton to Montreal, and incidentally, this is one of the two flights in the Atlantic provinces where you are served an excellent meal. You then may be fortunate enough to catch the connecting Air Canada flight 167 from Montreal to Ottawa. One of our colleagues joined about six other people who could not get seats on the plane on one occasion, and this flight was already booked on two other occasions when I tried to make the connection. The alternative is to wait in Montreal for three and one half hours for the next flight.

Before I suggest that air transportation can be improved in the maritime provinces, I have to tell the House that it is our best mode of transportation available at this point in time. The problem is that we do not have enough direct flights within the maritimes and between points in the maritimes and points in central Canada and northern parts of the United States. We do not have these flights because we do not have enough volume of trade to make them pay. Even with the large subsidies which are paid to air carriers we still have difficulty in providing the numbers that are needed to make it a good, efficient operation.

Now, the sad fact is that we are never going to have the numbers or the trade unless we first have the service, and therein lies the key to our basic problem in transportation in the Atlantic provinces. A high quality air cargo service is absolutely essential if Atlantic Canada is to develop a good industrial and commercial base. In this regard some of the larger firms in the Atlantic provinces have purchased their own planes.

Rail passenger service and, to a degree, rail freight has not really been given a good chance in the Atlantic provinces because the railways have allowed their rail beds to deteriorate to the point where trains move very slowly and the equipment they use, particularly in respect to passenger service, is generally 25 years of age or older. Depending heavily on the United States for reefer cars which the railways rent or buy, our potato industry has been affected detrimentally by the shortage of equipment.

The gateway to commerce in the maritimes is the deep water ports of Halifax and Saint John which, because of their advantageous geographic position, can become arteries of commerce in an expanding trade environment if the ports are properly equipped with modern facilities. Improved terminal storage and handling facilities are badly needed in the Atlantic provinces.

Highways in the Atlantic provinces are the principal arteries of commerce and they are carefully preserved by our highway departments. Highway weight restrictions are essential in the spring to preserve the roads for use during the balance of the year. This means, of course, that truckers have to operate with limited loads and therefore make more runs to achieve the same volume of traffic, which adds considerably to the cost of transporting goods.

The economy can be stimulated by an improved highway network. Four lane highways can be built in many instances on existing rights of way, and with two lanes going in each direction turn and elevation gradients require less expense to permit safe passage than is the case with single lane roads. This significant saving would go a long way toward paying for the additional pavement.

These more modern highways are not as much in evidence in the maritimes as they should be because without federal aid our provincial governments have not the funds to build them. In New Brunswick, for example, I feel the federal government should participate financially in a ring road around Fredericton, the new highway bridge across the river at Fredericton and a four lane highway connecting Fredericton, the capital city, with the port of Saint John.

When approached with such concepts, the federal govenrment is only too quick to suggest that current traffic needs do not warrant such expenditures. New Brunswick's five year highway and bridge program which contained such a concept was discouraged by this government only two years ago. The point I am making is that the traffic will never warrant such highways unless the highways are built to stimulate development and thus develop the population that would warrant the highways.

Despite all the subsidies, freight rates remain too high because they are too high to begin with. We had a good example of this before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on May 31 of last year in reference to our very important New Brunswick forest products. A comparison was made between the rates in New Brunswick and in British Columbia, and on raw wood products we found that rates in New Brunswick were 60 per cent higher.

Many people in the potato industry in New Brunswick find that the contemplated freight rate increases of 20 per cent and 12 per cent scheduled to be implemented during the next few months would put producers close to having their profit margins cut to the point where they would go out of business.

The concerted attack on about four occasions over the last few years on the "at and east" rates which make possible the shipment of export grain and flour through the Atlantic ports, if successful, would mean that the ports of Halifax and Saint John would be about the only ones in the country not receiving subsidies for export grain shipments. Indeed it would be ball game over in the maritimes for almost all shippers of products if the user-pay concept were adopted.

There is a general suspicion that the railways who are masters at the rates game charge whatever the traffic will bear, and with the limited competition and long distance from markets the maritime captives of the railways would find their future intolerable.

Some essential changes are absolutely necessary if the Atlantic provinces are to move into parity with the rest of Canada. The first big change is right at the top of the Department of Transport. The Department of Transport is so massive and in such a mess that most of its time is consumed in clearing up the mess that already exists. During the last three years no very exciting proposals have come from that department for this reason.

I suggest that the department should be divided into different modes, one for each form of transportation, and that these modes should be co-ordinated and interrelated. The significant policy change that is essential for this department is that it should use transportation as a development tool across Canada.

Nowhere else in the world does the user pay the total cost of the service to him. The cutback in services to the maritime provinces, plus the increase in rates and the almost seamless web of rates that exists, has become a nightmare to maritime shippers. Every time you change one small rate the reaction among other rates is fantastic.

One result in New Brunswick is that we have an over-supply of wood in one part of the province and an under-supply of wood in another part, and the cost of transporting wood from one section to another is intolerable. Our success story in secondary manufacturing in the agricultural sector is limited but it can be built on and expanded.

Instead of paying increasing freight rates to ship our farm produce to distant markets and buying back cooked meats, bottled jams and canned vegetables, we urgently need a fundamental change in our transportation and DREE policies to enable us to develop plants to purchase and process local products in New Brunswick for sale in New Brunswick and across Canada, and, through tariff changes, to our natural trading partners along the Atlantic seaboard. We have the resource potential to supply and operate plants to process cheese, meats, fruits and vegetables, to name only a few. I urge the government to invest in the future of New Brunswick and to take this giant step in creating good jobs and markets for our farming community. My remarks apply equally, but with less knowledge, to Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island.

The simple concept that we must ask ourselves in terms of transportation cost is: "How much does it cost to get a product to market economically? How much does it cost to get it there now?" Any difference in cost must demand a subsidy, or a roll back in freight rates. A user-pay concept cannot achieve this purpose.

As a transportation system is used more, the cost should be lower. Right now for the railways it must be a paying proposition. Air Canada by statute must contemplate a profit. We cannot possibly discuss rates with the railways because it is a seamless web that only they understand. They do not have enough competition, while our national air carriers have never been refused a fare increase.

● (1552)

The railways should be required to retain, modernize and upgrade the service they presently give to the total area of the maritimes. Better rail freight cars are absolutely essential for shippers, particularly for agricultural products, and the integration of rail freight and passenger service with other forms of transportation is an important step in developing an efficient transportation system.

The Government of Canada should co-operate in a meaningful manner, on at least a 75-25 per cent basis, with the governments of the Atlantic provinces to put in place a system of modern, all-weather highways to serve Canadians in the Atlantic provinces both now and tomorrow.

Air carriers should be required to consult with local communities before discontinuing service. Air Canada should provide more direct flights between the maritimes and central Canada, even on a subsidized basis. EPA should be encouraged to provide direct flights in the maritimes between maritime centres and centres that do not now receive regular air carrier service. Faster and more frequent air freight service to points in the maritimes is essential.

CP Air should be given access to the Atlantic market to provide more competition for Air Canada. Air Canada should be requested to take note of the excellent in-cabin service provided to maritimers by Eastern Provincial Airways.

Better methods of permitting freight rate increases with railways, such as through a tribunal with government, shippers and railroad representatives, should be evolved to give some relief to captive shippers in the maritimes. Present statutory subsidies should be retained, and a consistent subsidy policy which would expand and improve the present program should be developed. Transportation must be used as a development tool in the maritime provinces. We must put in place in the maritimes a modern transportation system which will enable real growth to take place.

My purpose in raising this resolution and in suggesting this topic be placed with the DREE committee is to provide an opportunity for all members of parliament from the Atlantic provinces to cite examples by which transportation can be improved in that region. They can relate to their own constituencies. With their knowledge and with the use of expert witnesses, I hope we might finally develop transportation as a development tool in a very meaningful way in Atlantic Canada. Transportation in itself is not an answer to the problems of regional disparity, but it is an important segment in the process of arriving at an answer. It requires a co-ordinated focus by all departments of government on this very important subject. Transportation plays a very dominant role in arriving at an ultimate conclusion.

Thank you for giving me the opportunity to raise this matter this afternoon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have an opportunity to comment on the questions raised this afternoon relating to transportation. However, I am puzzled with regard to the continuous contradictions raised by hon. members opposite before the House. Transportation is an important question. On the one hand, hon. members opposite indicate that they would like to see the government spend less and say that we are spending much more than we should. On the other hand, they bring in motions and resolutions asking the government to do things which would be more costly. This is not the first time the government has been faced with this type of suggestion, which would result in an increase in expenditures. There are difficulties in some aspects of the resolution with respect to not being able to have it both ways.

Also it is interesting to observe that hon. members on the other side do not take the opportunity to say positive things about what has been happening in Canada in the realm of transportation. Canadian National Railways is now turning a profit because of the vision and dynamic leadership of its new management and administration, especially that by Dr. Bandeen. The other day Dr. Bandeen appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications in Ottawa, at which time he gave a most impressive performance responding to questions raised by members from all sides. Those questions concerned all aspects of the operations of CN across Canada. After witnessing the performance of the President of the CNR, and looking at the profit picture he produced, one quickly appreciates the reasons why CN is in its present position.

I am sure the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) will appreciate what I have to say regarding Air Canada, since its president, Mr. Taylor, comes from our native province of New Brunswick. With his youth and dynamic leadership, he is able to show a profit and has turned things completely around in the last year or so. He has strived for the efficiency we all wish to see.

I should like to quote from the speech of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) which was made in March 1978 in Atlantic Canada. It reads as follows:

> To my mind, transportation is one of the most important binding agents we have. It has been so from the time of Confederation when the rail line linked for the first time what had been isolated and separate communities. Even with the advent of other ties such as modern communications, transportation still remains a key factor in a country the size of Canada.
>
> Transportation has also been an important factor in the economic development of this country. Without an efficient transportation system, western grain producers could never reach rapidly-growing markets all over the world. And in Atlantic Canada, our fine ports have been our link to European markets since the earliest days.

Regarding the problem of freight rates, one study has taken place with respect to the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act. That covers the Atlantic region and Gaspé coast. Following consultation with the provincial governments, we determined that the existing subsidy for movements within the region did not provide the maximum possible economic benefit for the region and, in turn, agreed that a subsidy should be paid on selected regionally produced goods moved by all means of transportation. This subsidy will be implemented by September 1 on a selected list of commodities worked out by federal and provincial officials. I am convinced our revisions to the blanket 15 per cent subsidy program will have a positive economic effect on the whole region by making goods produced in Atlantic Canada more competitive and by improving competition in various forms of transportation.

Maritime Transport

The Department of Transport has investigated the distribution system for potatoes from New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Working with the provincial governments, potato producers and distributors, already we have made some significant improvements to the distribution system, including revisions to potato freight rates, some improvements to port facilities in several places in Atlantic Canada, and a new operational planning system.

An important segment of the economy in Atlantic Canada centres around the shipbuilding industry, and there are several projects that could mean a significant boost if a shipyard here is the successful bidder.

Recently it was announced that, although there is no funding involved, a major step toward streamlining the management of east coast ferry and coastal service was taken in December with the establishment of CN Marine, based in Moncton, New Brunswick.

All of these points are obvious, glaring and important, but they are never referred to by hon. members who raise questions and problems relating to transportation.

The call which has been made for planning and placing a modern transportation network into being in the maritime provinces has been answered already, in my opinion. In fact, developments which have occurred in the past few days indicate the government is sensitive to the special transportation needs of the Atlantic provinces. Further, it is responding to meet those needs in a positive and highly visible manner for today and for the future.

● (1602)

The Minister of Transport also this week made three very important maritime-oriented public announcements of which hon. members are no doubt aware. When he was in Yarmouth he presented the province of Nova Scotia with a cheque for more than $5 million to cover work already done during the past year on that province's highway network. The money was provided under the Atlantic provinces transportation agreement announced last year and is just a portion of the $125 million which will be spent on a cost-sharing basis with the federal government, enabling all of the four maritime provinces to upgrade their individual road systems. I believe this agreement forms the base, but not the only one, for the modern transportation network which the hon. member appears to be seeking, but which is already there.

The funds provided this week for Nova Scotia represent only the start of the highway improvement program for that province, which will total about $64 million over the four year span. Better roads, of course, will allow commercial vehicles to carry greater weights, and these improvements are direct benefits to the province's trucking industry.

The second announcement made by the minister is in a related area but it also means this government is cognizant of the local as well as regional transportation needs of the maritime provinces. A $1 million contribution was made to construct a new bus terminal in downtown Saint John, New Brunswick. This contribution is just a portion of the $4 million assigned to the intercity bus industry, and it also comes under the $125 million transportation umbrella for the Atlantic provinces that I referred to a few moments ago.

One of the conditions of this agreement with New Brunswick is that the bus company improve service on several of its network routes. Four new coaches will be purchased under the agreement and they will join the fleet to boost passenger service between Fredericton, Moncton and Newcastle. Under provisions of the Atlantic provinces transportation agreement each province must, of course, identify service improvement to the bus network in its respective jurisdiction. New Brunswick, incidentally, is the first province to do so.

A very important point which I believe should not be omitted is that there is provision in the Atlantic provinces transportation agreement providing for a searching look at what the future requirements in transportation may be after the current agreement expires. This means that while the immediate needs of highway transportation are being taken care of, both the federal government and the provinces are looking at least four years ahead, trying to determine how the real transportation growth will meet projected forecasts. It is this kind of look-ahead planning which will ensure the most efficient and the most equitable transportation modes so vital to the economy and well-being of the Atlantic provinces.

I think that answers the question in respect of the point raised by the hon. member when he referred to the already outdated term "user-pay". At a recent national policy convention of the Liberal party we adopted a resolution that this term is not one that is viable or to be used, but rather that when the objectives of commercial viability and regional development conflict, then regional development will take precedence. This fundamental principle of transportation policy is to encourage and support economic development through provision of effective and sensible transportation services, not just in the Atlantic provinces but across Canada as well.

The philosophies of commercial viability and regional development certainly do not conflict in the announcement the Minister of Transport made just last month dealing with a $1 million contract for consulting services in connection with the building of the Fairview Cove container terminal in Halifax. The minister announced last December that the new container terminal would be built, and it is anticipated that about 12 construction contracts will be required to complete this project by December, 1980, at a cost of $35.6 million. Construction has already provided additional employment in the area, and about 100 more jobs will be created to operate the facility. It should be remembered also that studies made by the National Harbours Board and the province of Nova Scotia concluded that additional container facilities will be required to handle anticipated growth in container traffic through the port by the early 1980's.

The cost sharing of this project is $29.1 million by the federal government and the remainder of $6.5 million by the province. I would take the opportunity to mention as well the tremendously efficient operation of the Saint John port with the vision and ability shown by the manager and those appointed persons responsible in that city. They have been increasing the container traffic and other business in that area at an impressive rate.

Around the middle of March we announced that a contract to construct a forest products terminal shed at pier No. 1 in Saint John harbour was awarded in the amount of $2,759,000. When this project is completed later this year there will be a total of 6.7 acres of enclosed storage space available to the forest products terminal. This shed will now consolidate the handling of all forest products at the site.

I should also like to point out that while our minister was in the Atlantic provinces just recently he inaugurated a new ferry service between Yarmouth and Portland, Maine. This now is an established year-round commercial operation, and this type of direct link to the United States is of tremendous importance to that part of Atlantic Canada.

The four maritime provinces are again brought into the over-all maritime transportation picture with our urban transportation assistance program. This program is designed to tackle a number of transportation problems affecting major cities. Each province will receive $10 for each of its citizens over a five year period, and a number of urban transportation projects high on the priority list will also be submitted under this project. The financial breakdown shows that New Brunswick will receive $6.8 million, Nova Scotia $8.2 million, Newfoundland $5.6 million and Prince Edward Island $1.2 million.

As you know, VIA Rail Incorporated was created last year to provide a completely revamped rail passenger service system across Canada. Part of the reorganization, of course, calls for new equipment. The government in November of last year announced that it would be purchasing 22 locomotives and 50 coaches at a cost of about $90 million. This is the first major purchase of Canadian rail passenger equipment in more than ten years. These new trains will greatly assist VIA Rail in providing modern, attractive and economical rail passenger service throughout the country. Several of these trains will be put into service in 1980 as part of a new high quality rail passenger service between Quebec City and Montreal. The remaining trains will be used by VIA in the introduction of conveniently scheduled, fast intercity trains across Canada to complement an upgraded transcontinental service and, therefore, will be available to VIA for western Canada and the maritimes as well.

I had the opportunity of putting this question to the new president, Mr. Roberts, as well as to others such as Mr. Benson of the CTC and Mr. Lang when they appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, and received the assurance that we will see some of these funds directed as well to improving the roadbed and other equipment in the Atlantic area.

Direct funding and cost-sharing programs are, of course, essential in terms of a broad transportation policy for a given region. The other facet involved subsidies, and this government has been looking into this matter in the broad overview of transportation requirements for the maritime provinces. One of the subsidies we have been studying is the Maritime Freight Rates Act and the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Act covering the Atlantic region and the Gaspé coast. After discussions with the provincial authorities we decided that the existing subsidy for movement within the region did not provide the maximum possible economic benefit for the region, and in turn we agreed that a subsidy should be paid on selected regionally-produced goods moving by all modes of transportation. This subsidy will be implemented by September 1 on a selected list of commodities, such as those I mentioned earlier in my remarks.

Turning to aviation for a moment, a significant period of development is being seen for the Atlantic region in this area. This will include a new terminal building, a maintenance garage and firehall, and eventually a new 5,000 foot runway at the Charlottetown airport. The project, developed in consultation with provincial and municipal authorities, will cost more than $21 million, and work is expected to begin early this summer. Other improvements for the airport include a new maintenance garage, aircraft apron, taxiways, a car park, an access road system and field electrical installations.

Gander airport in Newfoundland will be receiving a new air control centre, an expansion to its air terminal building and improvements to the north runway. The completed project will cost an estimated $18 million. A new maintenance garage and firehall will be built at St. John's airport at a cost of $1.5 million over the next two years.

● (1612)

I am delighted to report that on April 17 we will see the inauguration of the new terminal building to be constructed at Charlo airport in Restigouche, which will be the last of a multiphase program that has witnessed the extension of the runway to 6,000 feet to receive jets, the construction of a modern maintenance garage with firehall at a cost of $850,000 and electronic facilities for instrument control landing services. This brings the total expenditure on the Charlo airport to about $6.5 million.

These facts and figures which I have been able to bring to the House this afternoon clearly demonstrate more than just the concern of the government, but the type of planning, vision and study that has gone into this most important aspect of government responsibility, particularly in the Atlantic area. As I mentioned earlier, it does surprise me when members do not take the opportunity to point out the significant developments that have been taking place in their areas through the direction of the Minister of Transport and his department.

Recently the Minister of Transport has come on strong in meeting these demands and finding answers to the problems that we are faced with in the Atlantic area. I have had the opportunity to question various officials in the transportation field as they appeared before the tranportation committee regarding air passenger service in the Atlantic area, and I have received assurances from Mr. Benson of the CTC and the Minister of Transport himself that discussions will take place in terms of EPA and Air Canada to work out a rationalized service that will see all citizens in the Atlantic area have an equal opportunity to travel, not only within the four Atlantic provinces but to other parts of Canada as well. It is of great interest to me that citizens in the Atlantic area are able to enjoy the advantage of moving economically, efficiently and conveniently to other parts of Canada and the world as well.

As I said when I began my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the opportunity to be able to respond to this resolution this afternoon and at the same time place some facts about transportation on the record.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I love these crowded afternoons! One has the feeling that there is a tremendous audience in the galleries and in the House hanging upon every utterance of hon. members, and that inspires us to do our best. It is regrettable that the fourth estate, which seems to regard this place as nothing more than theatre, abandons always, and almost in total, the Friday matinee. I have often thought in my 21 years here that the greatest problem of the press gallery, and they have many, is that many of its members are brought up from the police beat, and since it is not always so clear to distinguish between the accused and the accuser in this House, they quite often do not really perceive what is going on.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for bringing up for consideration this Friday afternoon a topic which is as old as confederation and, indeed, older. Our people in the sea-bound provinces have troubled themselves about this situation. They studied and debated it and brought their great, constructive suggestions and inquiries to the national legislature after the dominion was formed. It is very significant that the hon. gentleman should interlace this particular question of transportation with the concept of regional economic disparity. It pleases me that the very distinguished Canadian, the former premier of Nova Scotia, the Hon. G. I. Smith, was the man who brought to the dominion-provincial constitutional discussions the question of regional economic disparity. It is the kind of question which a federation should, properly be seized with as it studied the problems of the confederation.

It always was, but it is only recently that it has been recognized as, a profound truth that no national economy is strong or vibrant if the regional components thereof are weak or disorganized. I am not nearly as happy with things as the speaker who preceded me. The best remark he made was that even his party now recognizes that the user-pay concept really never was much good and should be decently and hurriedly interred, and for that I congratulate him.

I thought that my colleague from York-Sunbury brought forward some constructive suggestions, and I am appalled that we have allowed the advantages of the Atlantic region to lapse. We were brought in, and, indeed, urged—some would say seduced—into confederation 100 and some years ago because of our location. We were in the corridors of commerce; we had the great ice-free ports. Now all this has been lost. Our wonderful merchant navy has withered away. I have said in the Chamber before that whenever I travel abroad, because my father was a sailor and I was born in a seacoast village, I go to the harbours and I look at all the flags; but I never find a Canadian flag no matter how crowded the harbour. Whether it is Havana, Piraeus or anywhere else, you do not see the Canadian flag of commerce, yet less than a generation ago we had the fourth largest merchant navy in the world.

I thought that my colleague's remarks about the railways were profoundly true. There is no inherent opposition among the Canadian people to travelling by rail, but we have passed through a situation where it has become very difficult and inconvenient to use that particular mode. Timetables were inconvenient. The basic structures and infrastructures like the roadbed, coaches and so on became uncomfortable. Then, because people abandoned them for comfort, figures were presented which suggested that people did not care for this mode of travel. I predict that even in my time—and I am not nearly as young as the two other members who spoke, though I am not as old as I look, thank God—the day will come—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just mature.

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you, chancellor. The day will come when we will be laying new roadbeds. In this day with the energy realities that we face, the crowded public highways, there may, indeed, be a new era for the railways that can be ushered in with wisdom and with some concept that transportation is not only a public utility but, as the hon. gentleman has so well expressed, an ingredient of social unity and a powerful propellant of national development.

I fear that the hon. member's suggestion will die in this frenzied atmosphere in which everyone wants to cast themselves upon the electorate—for what reason I do not know because why should the Canadian electorate applaud the present government? In any event, we are in the dying days of this session—and it is an agonizing death as far as I am concerned—so I fear that the hon. member's suggestion will not be carried out. It would have been a fine thing for a committee to look into—the essential importance of transportation. There would have been no Dominion of Canada without the CPR and no CPR without Sir John A. Macdonald. One was as essential as the other. So my colleague from York-Sunbury is very much on sound historical ground, as he is on sound economic ground, in his recommendation today. I support him strongly and commend him heartily for his initiative, and I commend his advice to my colleagues in this chamber.

● (1622)

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, as one can imagine, I am quite pleased to take part this afternoon in a debate raised by the motion introduced by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie). Two main reasons incite me to do so; first, ever since the Department of Regional Economic Expansion came into being, and even before, I have been asking and urging the various ministers and the government itself that transportation be included in any regional expansion policy. The second reason is related with transport conditions in the area which I represent and more especially in my constituency. I refer to special means of air transport on the mainland as well as on the islands which are part of the Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine riding.

Is it necessary, Mr. Speaker, to remind the many members in the House this afternoon, as the previous speaker pointed out a while ago, that it is always a pleasure for me on Friday afternoon to take part in the debate, because the House is crowded? This year, however, we do have some spectators, that is the Canadian viewers on television. Is it necessary again to remind you and hon. members that I pointed out on various occasions in the House the necessary improvements which should be made to the Îles-de-la-Madeleine airport since it is essential to equip the Bonaventure constituency with airport facilities which would ensure regular air transport service for the inhabitants of that area? I apologize to my colleagues and to the Chair, who have repeatedly heard the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) recite his requests, his demands, his grievances, his complaints in view of the disconcerting inaction, I regret to say, of the Department of Transport officials who could certainly have acted and reacted more promptly.

You will no doubt understand, Mr. Speaker, that I could not forego the opportunity afforded me by this debate to repeat these grievances. Sixteen years of experience in the House have taught me not to expect anything on a silver platter here. But if you do not succeed the first time, they say, try again. If reports of an upcoming election which we keep hearing these days prove to be true, this is probably the last opportunity I will have to speak on the subject as member of this House which, Mr. Speaker, has been a most exciting and enriching experience. I also want to commend the hon. member for York-Sunbury for his excellent initiative in moving and discussing this motion here this afternoon. As the characteristics of my region are not dissimilar to those described in the motion of the hon. member, I can only subscribe to his statements on this important question of transportation within our regions.

How, Mr. Speaker, can a government hope to do some regional development, to organize the economy of a given area, to reduce the economic disparities between various regions throughout the land, and especially in far eastern Quebec, which includes the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands, without first developing an adequate transportation system? That is elementary, it seems to me. I agree, considerable efforts were made by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion with the help of and in co-operation with the various departments and the province of Quebec through the development program for eastern Quebec which includes the Lower St. Lawrence, the Gaspé Peninsula and the Magdalen Islands, but in the field of air transport in particular, we have not been spoiled. How, for instance, can requests lie around over 12 years for urgent and important improvements to the Magdalen Islands airport, requests made by my predecessor the Hon. Maurice Sauvé and myself since 1968, to be precise, without someone feeling guilty down deep, when expenditures of some $5 to $6 million are being put off or turned down for some four to five years to give that insular population a mode of transport which is the only one, I repeat, during the winter season? How can those expenditures be denied or put off when at the same time we hear that our neighbours in Prince Edward Island—and I am not criticizing what the people of that island get—are being given $21 million for improving the airport in Charlottetown, P.E.I. That airport I visit quite frequently on my way to the Magdalen Islands. Its runways are long enough for jet aircraft to use. The people of the Magdalen Islands and myself find it difficult to accept those hesitations in making the improvements needed for so long and which are basic to the economic development of that isolated part of Canada.

In conclusion, I would say that rail transport, the first and for long the only means of transport in Canada, is still for us in Gaspé the only one on which we can rely, so I welcome with joy and great confidence the federal government endeavour with the new VIA Rail company. I had the opportunity to meet the officials who will administer the company, and the dynamism demonstrated by its president and his staff makes me believe that this new trend in rail transportation will be a success, at least I hope so. I have always said that rail transportation is the best, the most reliable, the least energy consuming and the cheapest transportation means, especially if we relate the cost of railway construction to the enormous amounts we must spend every year for road construction.

So, Mr. Speaker, as I wish to leave some time for my colleague and neighbour from the province of New Brunswick, the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne), in conclusion I wish to congratulate once again the hon. member for York-Sunbury for this very important motion and I ask the government and the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), before they consider the economic development aspect, to find a way to attract people and industries in our areas where regional disparities are tremendous so that these industries will be able to sell their products at a competitive price.

● (1632)

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, if my friend from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) can be patient for another three or four minutes, we may discuss the question. As has been done by previous speakers this afternoon, I add my congratulations to the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. Howie) for putting this motion on the order paper. It is indeed useful to have an opportunity to discuss matters such as this. I do not think I will do it with the same ecstasy displayed by his colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), but I am not in the habit of expressing myself as poetically as that hon. member.

There are three aspects of transportation in Atlantic Canada that are of concern, namely highways, air transport and rail transport. Those are the ones normally talked about. However, there is a fourth aspect that should be mentioned, water transport.

Water transport is very important to us on the Atlantic seaboard. There are some very fine port facilities in Atlantic Canada. We have the opportunity and the potential for further development of them. I am happy that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is taking a very keen interest in the development of those facilities.

One port that is in urgent need of development is the Port of Miramichi. Before that port can experience any great expansion and the potential that is definitely there, the river must be dredged. I was pleased that the government committed itself to making a definitive study of the economic and technical feasibility of dredging the river. That report, which has now been completed, proves beyond doubt that such a project is both economically and technically feasible. As far as I am concerned, the government is committed to the actual dredging.

There are two or three problems or stumbling blocks, but I am optimistic that they will be overcome. First is money. There is always that problem. However, I am sure it can be solved. There is also the problem of the ocean dumping sites permits which must be overcome. I am confident it will.

I want to take this opportunity to assure fishermen on the Miramichi that dredging should in no way affect their livelihood. If it did, I would not be in support of it. I am convinced that the opposite is true, that the river can be used as a very vital means of transport and economic development for the Miramichi.

[Translation]

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) on a point of order.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I only want to take this opportunity to remind members of the opposition that the budget speech will be delivered Monday night at eight o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is very good of the parliamentary secretary to tell us what we all know, namely that the budget speech will be made Monday night. Can he tell us what item of business will be called Monday afternoon?

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I was expecting that question from the hon. member. We intend to proceed with Bill C-19. If there is a change, we will let the hon. member know as soon as possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' hour has now expired. It being 4.35 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 4.35 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 10, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUESTED POSTPONEMENT OF CNT APPLICATION FOR RATE INCREASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On April 3, the CRTC gave notice it would be holding public hearings on April 11, in Gander, into a rate application by CN Telecommunications for a 20 per cent rate increase on the telephone system in Newfoundland and a 30 per cent increase on long-distance calls within the province. This compares with the normal 60 days' notice given by the CRTC for similar hearings into the Bell system affecting Ontario and Quebec. I believe, sir, that this is tantamount to second-hand treatment of Newfoundland taxpayers and ratepayers on the CN system, and I find that abhorrent.

With the consent of the House, I would move the following motion, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That this House directs the CRTC to postpone its public hearings scheduled for tomorrow at Gander, Newfoundland, into an application by CN Telecommunications for a 20 per cent rate increase to its telephone subscribers in Newfoundland and a 30 per cent rate increase for long-distance calls within the province on the CNT system in order to give intervenors a reasonable time to prepare their case.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT URGED TO GRANT POLITICAL ASYLUM TO CHILEAN NATIONAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of the same order, in view of the fact that the right of political asylum is recognized as one of the last lines of defence for democratic and human rights, in view of the fact that Galindo Madrid Avilez, because of his actions and criticisms of the Chilean regime, faces a real risk to his life or safety if he is deported to Chile, in view of the fact—known to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and his department—of the brutal nature of the Pinochet government in Chile, and in view of the fact that if returned to Chile, Galindo Madrid Avilez faces certain imprisonment and possible death for exercising what in Canada would be his right of free speech, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Employment and Immigration immediately grant Galindo Madrid Avilez political asylum.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

SOCIAL SECURITY

REQUEST GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT NOT BE REDUCED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that Quebec pensions and private pension funds paid for by a citizen during his active life cannot be considered as new income, and considering that, such pensions being acquired values just like a single family house or even an amount of money bearing no interest, it is unfair and discriminatory to consider these pension plans as new income, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the government introduce a bill immediately before an election is called stating clearly that payments on accumulated funds will no longer reduce the guaranteed income supplements of elderly people.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GATT NEGOTIATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Given the uncertainty that prevails regarding both the life of this session and the future of the textile industry in Canada, and given the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has added to that uncertainty by his vague and ambivalent references to the status of textiles in GATT negotiations, with the apparent intention of trying to confuse an already complex issue, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That the minister undertake, before the dissolution of the House, to make a statement on motions setting out the current position with regard to textile negotiations under (1) the multifibre arrangements and (2) the GATT, indicating whether or not the government will still consider withdrawing textiles from the GATT negotiations until such time as the multifibre agreements have been finalized and the industry has achieved stability.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion can be presented, pursuant to Standing Order 43, only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

T-SHIRTS BEARING INSCRIPTION "FUDDLE-BUCK"—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that for some strange reason a manufacturer in Winnipeg had accepted a $6,000 order for T-shirts bearing the inscription "Fuddle-buck", and then suddenly notified a group of businessmen from British Columbia that he would not complete the order and would destroy the 150 dozen that were already produced, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker):

That a representative of the government party make a statement on motions in this House reassuring the House that the manufacturer involved was not strong-armed by representatives of the Liberal party into cancelling this order.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

GRADUATING NURSES IN QUEBEC REQUIRED TO PASS FRENCH TEST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that nurses graduating in Quebec cannot receive a permanent licence until they pass the required French test, and also that no other nursing association in Canada is prepared to grant a permanent licence to these nurses until they receive a permanent licence from Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin):

That the government extend to all Canadians, and particularly Quebec graduating nurses, the same language training facilities that are offered to immigrants.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion at this time, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

REQUEST THAT TONIGHT'S PRESENTATION INCLUDES MARCH LABOUR FORCE INFORMATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that officials in both the Department of Finance and the Department of Employment and Immigration have already obtained the results of last month's labour force survey which is due to be released by Statistics Canada by tomorrow morning, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), to move:

That this House request the assurance of the Minister of Finance that the March labour force information, including the number of unemployed and the unemployment rate, will be set forth in his budget presentation tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FINANCE

UNFULFILLED ORDERS FOR OLYMPIC COINS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgency under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Canadians have been defrauded of over $100,000 through undelivered, prepaid Olympic coin orders purchased in good faith under a federal program, and in view of the fact that according to an answer to question No. 1,319 on April 7, gold coins on hand will be melted, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That the government accept responsibility for the coin dealers who failed to meet their commitments and follow the honourable procedure of supplying coins for the unfilled orders.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion for debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

FISHERIES

REGULATIONS RESPECTING INSHORE FISHERMEN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. Since many Canadian inshore fishermen are complaining bitterly that regulations without consultation affecting their operations are proliferating with greater rapidity than the fish upon which they depend, I move, seconded by the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse):

That recent fisheries regulations regarding seasons for scallop dragging, changes in size of mesh in nets utilized in dragging for groundfish, and other such measures, be suspended until further input is received from those fishermen affected and more account taken of the varying conditions in regions affected, rather than imposing blanket regulations which do not take into account local conditions and differences in seasons.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion, for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Oral Questions

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

FISHERIES

POLICY STATEMENT ON REOPENING OF ATLANTIC PORTS TO FOREIGN FISHING VESSELS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of some regret that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce are not in their seats this afternoon. Therefore, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. It flows out of a major policy statement made by the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment late last week, in which he set forth the terms and conditions under which Canada would reopen its Atlantic ports to foreign fishing vessels.

I ask the Prime Minister why the government chose to make one-half of the major policy statement and not couple it or pair it with a similar statement from the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Commerce and/or DREE with respect to the upgrading of our ports and, particularly, the upgrading of the capacity of our ports to deal with this increased ship repair and related activity.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member is supporting the policy announcement made by the minister but is saying that it is not quite enough. I will convey the representations of the hon. member to the minister.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, this needs conveying to no one other than the Prime Minister. Would he convey at that time the concern of the people in the fishing industry and in the ports and port-related industries of eastern Canada that the Minister of Fisheries, in this major policy thrust, did not extend his thinking to include a definitive plan for the expansion and upgrading of our existing fishing fleet?

● (1417)

Some 10,000 jobs are involved. These should be given to Canadians to fish our own species, in our own boats registered in Canada and carrying Canadian crews. Why were these two matters not coupled? Would the Prime Minister make that representation as strongly as possible to his colleague?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the House will recognize that this type of representation is hardly necessary. We have a Minister of Fisheries who is highly respected in the industry and who has the confidence of the fishermen. I would have to refresh my memory on the exact statement made by the minister. However, I would remind the hon. member that the first minister's conference in mid-February had something very specific on the fisheries, and of the fact that the federal government was successful in getting international support for the 200-mile limit and the provinces and the federal government were unanimous about the action that should be taken both provincially and federally. Of course, they included some suggestions along the lines made by the hon. member.

I would have to see what the difference is. For the time being, it looks as though the hon. member of the Conservative party is trying to ride on the coat-tails of the Minister of Fisheries. This often happens.

* * *

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INTERDEPARTMENTAL CONSULTATION ON EXPANSION OF FISHING FLEET

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have forgotten more about fishing than the Prime Minister of this country will ever know. I would direct my final supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In the development of this policy statement by the Minister of Fisheries, was there direct consultation with his department, and is he aware of any direct consultation with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce with respect to the expansion of the existing fleet so that we might reap what is ours and that the benefits be maximized for Canadians, not the Russians and east Germans?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman that there have been consultations among my officials and the Department of Fisheries over recent weeks on that matter. We are satisfied that the policy arrived at is the best one.

* * *

TRANSPORT

INTERDEPARTMENTAL CONSULTATION ON OPENING OF PORTS FOR REPAIR OF FOREIGN FISHING VESSELS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and is based upon the statement which, characteristically, was issued by the Minister of Fisheries on Thursday and delivered to members' offices on Friday afternoon. This is the kind of thing we have come to expect from this government which has so little regard for parliament.

I ask the Minister of Transport if there was consultation with the Minister of Fisheries before the decision was made to open Canadian ports for the repairs of foreign trawlers and crew changes. If so, does the minister intend to carry on a program of port upgrading which is desperately needed in east coast ports, in order to provide the facilities so we can maximize this new opportunity for business in the Atlantic provinces and create the new jobs that could arise from it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member well knows that our concern for facilities at east coast ports has resulted in announcement after announcement, in city after city, on the east coast for those improvements. I was in the Atlantic region just last week in connection with a further development. I can assure the hon. member that we will continue to make developments happen so that we have the facilities to encourage development in that area, which is one of the high priorities of this government.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that this is a matter of some priority. I hope it will be given the same priority as the additional expenditures which have been announced for the port of Montreal and the port of Quebec: we hope we can get the same sense of priority in the Atlantic provinces.

I ask the minister if he is prepared to enter into a program of development for the port of Halifax, the port of Saint John, New Brunswick, and the port of St. John's, Newfoundland, for shipyard facilities in each case and the provision of a synchrolift in Newfoundland that was asked for by my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West. All these things are desperately needed in order to maximize the opportunities arising from this policy statement for which we have been pressing for a considerable period of time.

• (1422)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what we are doing. I am happy the hon. member and some of his colleagues finally agree that it is all right to spend money on ports in other regions as well, just as we are making major expenditures in Prince Rupert, on the west coast. A week ago today I was in Saint John, New Brunswick, for a sod-turning ceremony in connection with a new forest products terminal, only several months after we opened a new forest products terminal there, so that we will have the facilities that are required in that area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Port by port, we have major developments going forward throughout the Atlantic region. We are spending very large amounts of money indeed.

An hon. Member: What about Halifax?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member asks, "What about Halifax?" Surely, the most important development of all is the container terminal which is under construction in Halifax.

* * *

THE BUDGET

SUGGESTED LEAK BEFORE INTRODUCTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I preface my question by reminding Your Honour that I gave you notice of my intention to rise at three o'clock on a question of privilege concerning the same subject. Could the Prime Minister inform the House whether he or the Minister of Finance has ordered an inquiry into the possibility of a budget leak?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enogh to inform me at a couple of minutes to two that he would be asking this question. I have been unable to communicate with the Minister of Finance in the few minutes which have elapsed since then. I would think that, to say the least, the suggestion is premature. We will have to see what the budget is, and then perhaps the kind of concern the hon. member is expressing could be expressed at that time.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, of course, knows that I informed the Minister of Finance some two hours ago that I intended to raise the question. In the Saturday edition of the Toronto Star, an article appears, not in hypothetical, suggestive or conjectural terms but in categorical terms about what is in the budget. I will quote the opening sentence which reveals the tone of the rest of the article. It says:

The federal government will offer the provinces a deal in Monday's budget that would cut the Ontario sales tax on a $6,000 car from $420 to $240—

The article goes on. The point of my question, Mr. Speaker, is that the rest of the article in the Toronto Star details in specific after specific with the kind of tax cut that is supposed to be announced in tonight's budget. With this in mind, and given the tradition of Great Britain, where in modern times I have found that there have been only two budget leaks, both of which were immediately followed up with investigations and in both cases led to ministerial resignations, I ask the Prime Minister if he will assure the House that if the very specific assertions which appeared in the article in the Toronto Star turn out to be included in tonight's budget an investigation into the possibility of a budget leak will take place.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, you will recognize of course, that the question in its form is hypothetical. I will take notice of the question and we will see what the budget contains.

* * *

● (1427)

[Translation]

MANPOWER

YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO BUDGET REDUCTION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In view of the fact that some people involved in the assessment of Canada Works and Young Canada Works projects have heard of a 50 per cent staff cut, that the budget available this year for job creation is 75 per cent of what it was last year, and that the student work force will be over 4 per cent greater than last year, could the minister indicate to the House whether the current staff can effectively control and monitor the projects which have been received this year or which will be accepted this year under the Young Canada Works program.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

In view of his claim that the same service can be provided with 50 per cent of the staff which was previously necessary to study the Canada Works projects, with the assistance of some new people hired as recently as three weeks ago, to supervise the Young Canada Works projects, could the minister indicate to the House whether the necessary budget will be increased to make possible the implementation of a greater number of such projects?

Mr. Cullen: It is not possible just now, Mr. Speaker, but we must examine this question.

* * *

[English]

GRAIN

INCREASE IN ELEVATOR COSTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO ASSIST FARMERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, who three days ago exercised unusual philanthropy in connection with the Western Grain Stabilization Act, providing for payment to the western farmers of $60 million as a gift from the government when, as a matter of fact, the farmers themselves have paid the full shot in the last two years. That disturbs the Minister of Transport, who is back in his seat after a trip to Nova Scotia which convinced him that all is not well in the Liberal party down there.

My question is this: Prairie farmers are facing a major increase in elevator costs this summer. An application has been made to a commisssion in connection with extra charges. Apparently the commission is favourable to permitting additional amounts to be levied in respect of wheat. The producer groups gave evidence. They say it will mean several cents a bushel will be taken out of the western farmers. In view of the serious situation in agriculture, whose income has decreased for three years by 6 per cent per year, is the minister prepared to assure the House that this extra levy to permit the grain companies to expand and develop their procedures will come from the people of Canada as a whole, rather than the western farmer in particular who has been paying through the nose as a result of the present government's policy during the last few years?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I first want to say to the right hon. gentleman that the Western Grain Stabilization Act will be used properly and within the law to the extent we can do that which is proper. It will be done in as fair a manner as possible. I also want to advise that I had a discussion about the hearings with one of the grain commissioners this morning. At this time I am not prepared to make a statement one way or another. I am sure the right hon. gentleman knows that the producers of grain do not want an increase in tariff. All the elevator operators, pools, and so on, are more or less in favour because they need a realistic economic operating picture to present. It is too early for me to say what we will do. I want him to know, and I am sure he does know, that I have the concern of all concerned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, anybody who has the concern of all concerned has concern for nobody.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I ask him this simple question. Not endeavouring to foretell what the commission will recommend, obviously there will be an increase: the grain companies want it, the pools want it, and so on. If there is an increase, as there will be, it will hit the western farmer to the extent of six cents a bushel. Will this be taken up by the Government of Canada, rather than adding to the burden already suffered by the farmers as a result of the high cost of production and rising costs in connection with their needs? Will the Government of Canada take this up as part of its responsibility and ensure fair markets for western wheat?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. member is suggesting that we should give this matter serious consideration. Anything he suggests always receives serious consideration from this minister.

* * *

● (1432)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS RESPECTING FUTURE BORROWINGS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. As the lack of confidence in the government's economic record continues to be reflected in Canada with a Conference Board survey showing that 73 per cent of Canadians feel the government is doing poorly in running the economy while our dollar continues to scrape near bottom in New York—it was down again today, with a further loss of tens of millions of dollars—will the Prime Minister tell us when the government intends to place further foreign debt, as they just completed the issue for $750 million on April 1?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think you will recognize that the question is obviously on the subject of the debate which begins tonight.

Mr. Stevens: Again to the Prime Minister, who obviously did not hear my question because it has nothing to do with the budget debate tonight But since in the Prime Minister's mind the budget debate tonight is linked very much with the issues the government indicates it may be making at some later date in New York, would the Prime Minister indicate whether reports from Washington are correct, that the main reason the government is bringing in a budget tonight is that they have been told that without showing the current fiscal position for the country they may not raise further money in New York; they may not file a prospectus without showing the budgetary position which will be revealed tonight?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member asks two questions on monetary policy and then says they have nothing to do with the budget debate tonight. I will give him the answer to those questions if he will undertake that his party is not going to discuss monetary policy during the budget debate, which is a ludicrous proposition.

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary is addressed to the Prime Minister. I shall word it very simply. Was a contributing reason to the timing of the budget tonight the fact that the information which will be revealed tonight concerning Canada's fiscal year 1979 is needed to be included in a prospectus to be later filed in Washington?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, an answer and a comment. The answer is a flat no. The comment is that the Conservatives add very little credibility to their own policies when they themselves have been pressing for a debate and then they do not think we are going to give a debate because they asked for it, which seems to be very ridiculous.

* * *

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO FISHERMEN IN MODERNIZING VESSELS AND EQUIPMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Minister of Fisheries, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister: it has to do with the ports policy announced by the Minister of Fisheries last Thursday. At that time the minister stated that something like 58 per cent of the catch of all species within the 200-mile limit was presently taken by Canadian fishermen.

How can the government justify giving away 42 per cent of the catch as being surplus to the catching capacity of Canadian fishermen? What steps is he taking to help Canadian fishermen modernize their vessels and equipment, as was recommended to him by the premiers and ministers of fisheries from Atlantic Canada when they met with him at the federal-provincial conference in February? To save asking a supplementary, I should also like to know what steps are being taken to help Canadian processing plants to expand and diversify their operations in order that they may process presently under utilized species in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): The hon. member is no doubt aware that through various international organizations and treaties we have signed, and in discussions which have taken place on the Law of the Sea, the Canadian government, along with many other governments, has agreed to allow fish surplus to the needs of Canadian fishermen to be caught by other nations. The hon. member is aware that if we Canadians do not catch species which are not commercially viable for us, we should not restrict entry to other countries, acting like dogs in the manger. As far as the modernization of our fleets is concerned—

An hon. Member: Let's have a speech, Hugh.

Mr. Trudeau: Go on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member asked several questions. If he wishes, I shall deal with them. If not, I shall not deal with them. The hon. member is very well aware that we have today an overcatch capacity on both the east coast and the west coast.

Mr. Forrestall: We were just told we had underutilized capacity.

Mr. Anderson: The minister has stated on many occasions in the House that the object of federal policy should be to increase stocks of fish rather than increase the catch capacity of the fleets we already have. As far as the third part of the question is concerned, the hon. member knows that we have various programs in operation, including grants to freezing plants in order to increase the freeze capacity. I hope the hon. member will agree that the present minister has done more for the fishermen of Canada than any member or minister from the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED AMENDING OF BILL C-28

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board: it relates to Bill C-28. Last week, the hon. gentleman informed my hon. friend from Ottawa-Vanier that an amendment or deletion would be forthcoming with respect to the clause dealing with the duties of employees in the public service. On the assumption that Bill C-28 does receive second reading, is the minister prepared to consider other changes, for example in the restrictions on the flexilibity of the arbitration process?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): We shall, of course, pay full attention to any constructive suggestions which may be put forward in the course of debate both on second reading and in committee. No doubt witnesses will be heard during the committee stage and full opportunity will be afforded to those who have constructive suggestions to make. I can say that we shall give them full consideration without, at this stage, making any commitment to specific changes other than the one I gave the other day.

AIR TRANSPORT

REFUSAL OF AIR CANADA TO PARTICIPATE IN DOMESTIC ADVANCE BOOKING CHARTER PROGRAM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In light of Air Canada's refusal to participate in the domestic advance booking charter program, has the minister had an opportunity to look into this matter and can he give the House and the country a justifiable explanation for the action taken by the corporation? Is he satisfied that the position taken by Air Canada does not violate the principle and the spirit of the cabinet directive on this subject? Can he assure us that the result will not be an over-all reduction in the number of domestic air charter opportunities and, specifically, can he say whether Air Canada's allocation will be diverted to other carriers?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the decision taken by Air Canada carried its own explanation. Of course, because of the action taken by this government, the opportunity for carriers to provide charter services went far beyond the original decision which would have restricted it largely to Air Canada and Canadian Pacific. This means there is no limitation on additional charters being offered. Naturally, there is no obligation on the carrier to offer services regardless of terms of agreement which might be proposed by a tour operator.

I must say I am delighted with the development of charter services as they are coming very quickly on the scene in Canada, and also by the fact that in addition to its charter competitive fares, which are much more numerous than ever before and have the advantage of linking all city pairs in Canada and not just the larger cities, which are all that are served by most of the charter operators, Air Canada has now introduced its Nighthawk flights, approved by the Canadian Transport Commission, an additional feature allowing Canadians to travel most cheaply between various cities in this country.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister did not tell us whether the original ABCs for Air Canada would be diverted to other carriers. Considering that the Nighthawk program developed by Air Canada does not require the element of advance booking, and considering that the program discriminates against the minister's province of Saskatchewan, I ask the hon. gentleman whether he has discussed the possibility of reviewing or changing the advance booking requirement in relation to charter class fares and other charter operations so that further opportunities might be available to Canadians to see more of their country on a charter flight basis.

● (1442)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I answered the question about the diversion of Air Canada flights to other carriers. I made it clear that that was open as a result of the cabinet decision directing more charters than the CTC had originally allowed. They were not limited to the 25 and 25 to the two main line carriers, but could go well beyond that. So there is no question of diversion: it is a question of any offer coming forward being potentially acceptable.

We did, at the same time, ask the commission to review its advance booking rules. The commission will have to do this even more vigorously, in view of the fact that these rules are undergoing changes in the United States and in certain places where we are directly competitive with American services.

In the case of Saskatchewan and other places where Nighthawk flights were not originally offered, I have had a discussion with Claude Taylor and he has his operational people looking at the question of whether these flights could be extended to other destinations and origins. Indeed, with particular regard to Saskatchewan, I am aware of certain overnighting aircraft in Saskatoon and it may be possible to offer some Nighthawk flights. There are other problems in relation to crew and the number of people likely to travel. These are being looked at because of the desire on the part of all of us to offer as many low-cost flights as we can to Canadians throughout Canada.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT OF IMPLEMENTATION OF BILINGUAL BONUS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board regarding the enormous problems involved with the implementation of the bilingual bonus for language excellence. We have heard that it is a discriminatory program, that it adds to frustration and that it affects the morale of the public service. I understand the minister has been studying this program for some time. Has he reached any conclusions as to whether the program should be scrapped, as we have said it should be? If not, when does the minister expect to come to a conclusion in this regard?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not reached such a conclusion and I cannot give the hon. member any indication as to when such a conclusion might be reached.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I point out to the minister that in hearings before Treasury Board last week, we were advised that the minister's department will deem the study which is now being undertaken confidential, and that the minister would be prepared to release the result of the administration of the bonus but will not release the results of the effect of the bonus on the public service.

Given the fact that the public of Canada will be paying twice, once to see that the public service does get this training and—which is beyond my comprehension—once more for proficiency by way of a bonus, is it the intention of the minister to see to it that any study or analysis, and the results, will be released for the edification not only of members of this House but also of the public? Can the minister give me that assurance, or is this also a matter to be covered up?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a respresentation from the hon. member and I will give it the consideration I usually give to his recommendations of that nature.

Mr. Alexander: One last supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. Alexander: Don't cover up; that's all we are saying.

* * *

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST MINISTER GRANT POLITICAL ASYLUM TO CHILEAN NATIONAL

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration: it concerns the case of Mr. Galindo Madrid which I discussed with the minister last Friday. In view of the fact that Mr. Madrid was tortured in Chile prior to jumping ship at Squamich, British Columbia, and in view of the widespread appeals for the minister's intercession on a humanitarian basis so that Mr. Madrid can be given political asylum in Canada, can the minister rise in his place today and advise whether he intends to intercede in this worthy case and provide asylum to Mr. Madrid so that he will not be deported to Chile?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the individual to whom the hon. member refers has been through all the appeal procedures. He was not able to convince the refugee status advisory committee that he was, in fact, a convention refugee. His case was reviewed by the special review committee. It was decided that there was no basis for special consideration. I understand that Mr. Madrid has now appealed to the Federal Court of Canada. Until that appeal is disposed of, I think it would inappropriate for me to comment further at this time.

Mr. Leggatt: I can appreciate that Mr. Madrid is not a ballet dancer and that that gives him a bit of a handicap. However, in terms of the request the minister received on March 29, which was that there be a delay in the decision until the solicitors for Mr. Madrid are able to provide corroboration for the evidence they have provided to the various levels within the minister's department, would the minister at least undertake that there will be a delay until Mr. Madrid and his representatives have a chance to corroborate the evidence of risk and the evidence of torture which he will face in the event of his deportation?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is suggesting that if Mr. Madrid had done a ballet manoeuvre when leaving that ship, we would have been a little more compassionate in our approach. I think the record speaks for itself. It indicates that in cases of this kind we have bent over backward's to be as fair and compassionate as possible.

All the appeal procedures are in place. I think the gentleman and his counsel should be given access to them, and not be hampered or hindered in any way. With regard to whatever compassion is needed in this case to lengthen the time, I do not think there will be any difficulty.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

STABILIZATION PAYMENTS TO POTATO GROWERS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I ask him once again whether he will consider changing his previous statements to the effect that no stabilization payments would be made to potato growers until the end of the current marketing season. This is the seventh time I have risen in my place and asked this question of the Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I said to the hon. member the other day that we would follow historic patterns. Historic patterns show that we have made interim payments, and I have instructed the stabilization board to do so for eastern Canada.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR WHITE BEAN GROWERS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Some time ago, at a meeting, the minister suggested that there would be some federal assistance for white bean producers because of the disastrous weather of last year and the lower price. Can the minister advise us if a definite decision has been made in that regard and what form of assistance will be provided?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not remember exactly what I said to the hon. member, but those producers did receive about $10 million in assistance from crop insurance programs. The white bean board has applied for stabilization, and that is under consideration by the stabilization board at the present time.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, producers are now in the process of deciding what crops to plant in 1978. The minister's decision in this regard might have some bearing on those plans. I wonder if a definite decision could be given on this matter quite soon.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I met a group of white bean producers in the hon. member's area the other night. I gather that those producers are ready to go ahead and plant their acreages. Many of them have been compensated under crop insurance programs. There was low crop production last year because of the terrible catastrophe which took place, which was very wet weather. It was impossible in some areas to harvest any of the crop. In most areas about 90 per cent of it was left in the fields.

Producers are now deciding whether they are going to plant. That will be a decision for the producers themselves, but I gather from talking to them that most of them will be planting sizeable white bean acreages this year because we are considering stabilization, and also because slightly over 77 per cent of the producers had crop insurance.

* * *

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PROGRAM TO ENABLE GRAIN ELEVATORS TO BE CLEARED

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. Elevators in the Red River Valley are plugged because we have not received the number of rail cars to which we are entitled, even though we have received clearance through the block system. In view of the extensive flooding which is taking place in the Red River Valley south of the forty-ninth parallel, can the minister assure us that the special permits which have been issued in the past will be issued again? Farmers have been able in the past to move grain which might have been flood prone. Grain is now in storage. Will the minister announce a program so that these elevators can be cleared and so that grain can be moved before flood conditions arrive in Manitoba in approximately ten days' time?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that these arrangements are ordinarily made by the Canadian Wheat Board and not by the government. I will be very glad to discuss this matter with the board, and I know its usually sympathetic ear will be turned to these representations.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT DECISION ON TARIFF RECOMMENDATIONS AT GATT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Last week Ambassador Warren, Canada's chief spokesman at the GATT negotiations in Geneva, made a statement in Winnipeg in which he said, "The Tariff Board recommendations, many of which propose higher protection than now afforded, have been under careful consideration by the government, and I understand that decisions may be expected shortly".

Since we are getting well into the final stages of the GATT negotiations, and since agriculture is being discussed at Geneva, can the minister indicate whether the government has made a decision on tariff recommendations and, if so, would the minister outline briefly what the situation is?

● (1452)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, they have made a decision. The people returned from GATT last week, as the hon. member knows full well. If he wants it briefly, it is practically as the Tariff Board reported.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, do I have the assurance of the Minister of Agriculture that the government will be adopting the Tariff Board recommendations pretty much as they were outlined in their report to the government some time ago?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, that is what I said.

* * *

PUBLIC SERVICE

OPINION THAT BILL C-28 CONTRAVENES PROVISIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board: it is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Ottawa West with respect to Bill C-28. Is the minister aware that the human rights commissioner has expressed an opinion with respect to the fact that bill C-28 contravenes the provisions of the Human Rights Act in one particular respect? Has the minister seen that opinion? Is he studying it? Can he undertake to inform the House of the intentions of the government with respect to the opinion as to the impropriety of Bill C-28 as expressed by the chairman of the Human Rights Commission?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the chairman of the Human Rights Commission has written to the Minister of Justice expressing an opinion and some concern about a portion of one clause of the bill. As yet, I have not had legal advice from the Minister of Justice in response to that letter, although there were some important discussions prior to the receipt of the letter which indicated that there would not be a problem. I will be guided by the advice which I will receive very shortly, I presume, from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the minister knows, one of the aspects is equal pay for equal work for women, and there is one other important aspect. So that the House will have the benefit of the opinion of the chairman of the Human Rights Commission, will the minister consider tabling the letter from the chairman to the Minister of Justice, now that it is public?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, of course, the official in question reports to parliament. I do not think there would be any inhibition, but I would question the propriety of us tabling the document. The hon. member is quite correct; it was published in the Globe and Mail the other day, so I do not think there is anything secret about it. I will take it under advisement. If that is the proper procedure, I have no objection.

[Mr. Murta.]

AIRPORTS

EDMONTON, ALTA.—CUSTOMS PRECLEARANCE CENTRE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport: it concerns the fact that while this government is prepared to pump $50 million a year into a white elephant at Mirabel, it is not even prepared to discuss an offer by the province of Alberta to pay for the construction of a customs preclearance centre at Edmonton airport.

I ask the minister why he has refused to meet the Alberta minister of transport to discuss this offer. In view of the deficit the government has run up in creating the Mirabels and the Pickerings, why has this offer by the province of Alberta been refused? After all, it is free money for the government.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, both parts of the hon. member's statement are really quite ridiculous and are nonsense. The amount he talks about in relation to Mirabel—which I think he knows—is largely an interest payment being carried on the books, and not new money being pumped in.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Lang: If he wants to display his regional biases, he might mention the fact that we are putting $130 million into an airport in Calgary, and it is a beautiful airport, which has just been completed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The reason the second part of his question is nonsense is that if he is reading one press release, he might read the other. I have made it clear that we have not received a formal proposal from the minister of transport in Alberta to finance the construction at the Edmonton airport. I have made it clear that we are willing to consider that if such a proposal came forward. When I met the minister two weeks ago and talked about three other subjects, he did not even raise with me that matter of the Edmonton airport.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, just to straighten the minister out, as of Friday he had not met the Alberta minister of transport on this particular project. It seems the so-called voice from Alberta in the cabinet is that pitiful squeak from what's-his-name.

Mr. Hees: That is "Loose Lips."

Mr. Paproski: Yes, that is his name. He cannot even get an audience for the Minister of Transport; that is the problem. I know the minister wants to use this as an election platform in the next campaign.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to hon. members, Dr. Horner—who is the minister of transport in Alberta—did not raise this matter with me when we met on other subjects a few weeks ago. He had ample opportunity to do so. Indeed, after our meetings on the three main subjects were over, we raised several other matters of interest. He did not choose to raise this one.

Mr. Hees: Did you raise it with him?

Mr. Lang: Indeed, I had an informal question about this matter through my colleague, the hon. Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I indicated to him that if such a request on the part of Alberta came forward, we would consider it most favourably. Nothing more has come forward in this regard.

* * *

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—SEASONAL EMPLOYMENT FOR NATIONALS OF OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment or his parliamentary secretary. Is he aware of the fact that the bonanza in the herring roe fishing industry in British Columbia is attracting some seasonal employment, and that Japanese nationals have been hired as technicians for that industry who are really not technicians but are out in the fishing grounds working along with the other fishermen and are taking jobs away from Canadians?

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am aware, as I believe the minister is aware, that fish buyers of Japanese extraction are out in various areas during the herring season. I am not aware of any Japanese nationals who are fishing with the herring boats off British Columbia.

VESSEL AND FOREIGN CREW OPERATING UNDER CANADIAN LICENCE

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question also concerns the employment of Japanese. In light of the fact that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment is not present in the chamber, perhaps Your Honour will permit a small preamble in order that the Prime Minister may understand what is happening in the Department of Fisheries and the Environment. Therefore, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

In a recent letter to me, the minister stated that he was prepared to extend a licence to a ship with a capacity 25 times greater than the ship from which the licence was taken, on condition that the vessel went to sea with a Canadian crew. Now it is apparent that the vessel is going to sea with a Japanese captain and a Japanese engineer, within the 200-mile limit and under a Canadian licence. Is the Prime Minister aware of this? If he is not, would he be prepared to speak to the minister and ask him what devious political purpose he intends to achieve by this particular operation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question was addressed to the Prime Minister.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, how can the hon. member expect to score points by referring to private correspondence between himself and the minister? Obviously, I have not read the correspondence. The parliamentary secretary has risen, perhaps to give an answer or perhaps to take notice of the question. I think this is a somewhat ridiculous example of what the Tories are asking.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FINANCE

EXTENSION OF RELIEF MEASURES FOR STEEL BEAMS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. At the first ministers' conference, the Prime Minister left the message that if the premiers of Alberta and British Columbia got together on a mechanism to safeguard the interests of Algoma Steel, and at the same time maintain a steady supply of wide-flange steel beams from offshore sources at world prices, he would implement relief from the 30 per cent anti-dumping duty which was recently levied. Assuming agreement is reached between the provinces, will the Prime Minister confirm that it is still his intention to extend the relief beyond June 29?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the names of the two provinces escaped me. Would the hon. member repeat them, please?

Mr. Huntington: Alberta and British Columbia.

Miss MacDonald: They are out west.

Mr. Huntington: Yes, they are out west.

Mr. Hees: Surely the Prime Minister remembers the place he flew to a little while ago.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the facts on which the question is posed are not correct. Dealing with the first point, action was taken by the Minister of Finance in giving relief to the industry for a period which I believe extends to the end of June. Dealing with the second point, there was no suggestion by me that Alberta and British Columbia would have to get together to settle this question. The producers are in Ontario and they think anti-dumping duties should be applied: the consumers are in British Columbia and they think they should not be applied.

● (1502)

If I were to ask the provinces to get together, it would be rather to have Premier Davis and Premier Bennett get together to find an agreement, certainly not Alberta and British Columbia.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether he realizes that his reply today will be a great surprise to interests in British Columbia who have been negotiating with the province of Alberta on the clear understanding of a commitment from the Prime Minister.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROBERTS—DENIAL OF NEWSPAPER REPORT ALLEGING MISUSE OF POSTAL FRANK

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The Toronto Globe and Mail carries a story alleging that I have abused my franking privilege by sending newsletters of mine to areas outside my constituency, with the frank. This allegation is entirely false. I have sent newsletters outside my riding but I have paid for the printing and the postage of those sendings myself. I think it is important, since this is a matter which does affect the privileges of the House, that my position on the matter ought to be clearly put forward.

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED LEAK OF BUDGET DETAILS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a question of privilege, and I consider the subject matter to be of serious importance. I want to deal with two parts of the issue involved in this question of privilege. The first will be to indicate briefly the seriousness involved in a budget leak of any kind, and the second is to present my reasons for believing there is very good cause for concluding that precise information concerning tonight's budget has, indeed, been leaked in advance.

I checked the record for the past 50 years concerning budget leaks, and found there were two cases, both of which led to the resignation of ministers of the Crown, and they both took place in Great Britain.

One case occurred in 1947 and involved an indiscretion by the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the time. He made an off-hand comment to a journalist on the very evening of the presentation of his budget, obviously with no intent to have such information appear in public before he had concluded his budget address. However, what did transpire was that because of the timing of a certain edition of the paper for which the journalist worked, news in particular detail about the budget did in fact reach the paper. As soon as the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the time, Dr. Dalton, was made aware of this, he submitted his resignation forthwith, which was accepted on the following day.

The other case I discovered in modern times, and that means going back probably over a 50-year period, took place in 1936, also in Great Britain. In this case it was not the Chancellor of the Exchequer who resigned but another minister of the Crown. In this particular instance there was what transpired to be a leak of information that led to certain activity on the stock market. As soon as the Chancellor of the Exchequer at the time learned of grounds for believing that there was at least a clear possibility of a leak of budgetary information, he initiated an investigation. The investigation led to the disclosure that another minister of the Crown had in fact revealed budgetary information, and in that case that minister resigned.

In the present circumstances I submit at this point for consideration a story which appeared in Saturday's Toronto Star. I should say at the outset that there have been countless newspaper, radio, and television speculative pieces about what may or may not appear in the budget. We always take that for granted. There is a crucial distinction to be made in respect of what one normally finds in such stories, whether in newspapers, on television or on radio, that is, the stories contain therein words like "it is speculated" that such and such will appear in the budget, or "it is assumed" that such and such will appear in the budget, or "it is rumoured" that such and such will appear in the budget.

In Saturday's Toronto Star one finds no wording of that kind at all in the story as it is worded. The story begins with the assertions I indicated in my letter to you earlier today, Mr. Speaker, and as I presented to day in a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). It begins in the April 8 edition of the Star "The federal government will offer the provinces" such and such, and the rest of the story concerns details of precise dollar amounts, taxation changes, and sales tax changes that are going to vary from province to province, with the direct dollar implications being connected to those tax changes.

The point I want to make then is really twofold in nature. A budget leak is a very serious matter indeed, in a parliamentary government, and at least at this point no one knows, except someone who may have leaked the story, whether it was a leak. Until we see the budget tonight most people in Canada, and certainly most people in the House of Commons, will not know if the story that appeared in the Toronto Star is in fact based on a budgetary leak. However, there are good grounds for believing so, and that is why I am raising the matter at this point. I do so simply to give you notice that there are very good grounds for believing, given the specificity of the story, that it is not speculative but contains what the budget is going to contain, in concrete detail. That is why I am concerned.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, really what I would like to do at this point is simply serve Your Honour with notice that if the budget tonight, when it appears, contains the kind of precise detail that is indicated in the Toronto Star story, I intend tomorrow in turn to raise a question of privilege on this matter.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in respect of the point raised by the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent). I have two observations to make. The first is, of course, that the budget itself has not yet been presented, and it is impossible to talk about a budget leak at this stage. The second point is that the hon. member has based his comments and his intention to rise on a question of privilege on two British cases. As the hon. member will recall, the former minister of finance often raised the appropriateness of the traditional, so-called, budget secrecy.

Obviously the concept of secrecy that surrounds the budget has evolved, and must evolve if a minister of finance, and the modern context, is to undertake any consultation whatsoever in respect of budget preparations. That was the gist of the comments, as I recall, made frequently by the former minister of finance. There was a question about the appropriateness of that traditional concept that the hon. member has taken from Britain in these cases in our modern economy.

I have not talked to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) about this. I do not know what the budget will disclose with respect to the matters that have been mentioned by the hon. member. A question that the members of the House of Commons ought to ask themselves is whether, in the operation of a modern economy and the preparation of a budget, it is relevant to apply the rigid categories that were applicable in the days that the hon. member has mentioned.

● (1512)

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I followed with great interest the statement that has just been made by the government House leader with respect to such a practice. He is quite right when he says that the former minister of finance, Mr. Donald MacDonald, P.C., did in fact question at one stage budget secrecy and whether it is appropriate in very general terms, but with respect to a specific interest which I raised with him in the House of Commons at the time, on that occasion he did not—and we do have the tradition on this occasion in the event that something untoward should be revealed—back away from his obligation to assure the House that the existing practice would continue, and practice is, therefore, a very good reason.

No one governs the private sector—businesses, or labour unions. No one ought to be able to speculate in any way whatsoever with respect to what is contained in the budget in the sense of taking advantage of it. This particularly applies in the private sector, and that is the reason for the tradition. We all know that, and it could very well apply in the public sector as well in the event this kind of matter should take place.

I am interested as well in the fact that the government House leader indicated to us today, quite properly, that he has not talked to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). I assume he will be talking to the minister. The fact that the matter was raised in advance of the budget being presented, as the House leader has said, will not stop a leak. Of course, the only time that a leak could take place is before the budget is presented. However, if it has, it is extremely important that the minister live up to the undertaking that he will consult with the Minister of Finance and that tonight the Minister of Finance stand in his place and indicate to the House what the facts are with respect to the matter raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). It is important that that be done, and we have a right to know. Then the situation can be discussed and decided upon by the House.

The parliamentary secretary to the minister says that it is pure speculation. I agree with him when he says it is speculation, but it is speculation that ought to be laid to rest. That is my point. I am happy that the government House leader is going to be speaking to the Minister of Finance, and I hope that the minister will make the appropriate statement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has raised an important question of privilege. It awaits the presentation of the budget this evening, and will be subject to further discussion at this time tomorrow.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McCAIN—TOURISM—FUNDY NATIONAL PARK

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have a document in my hand issued by the government, intended to promote inter-Canadian tourism and, no doubt, to turn the balance of the tourism dollar, which is being spent by Canadians abroad. In the first place, the document is inadequate, but even worse than that, and this is the subject of my point of order, is that it is inaccurate. Referring to Fundy National Park they say:

> Live it, Learn it, Love it.
>
> Fundy's in Nova Scotia on the Bay of Fundy where you can see the world's highest tides flood in and out. It is alive with things to see, touch and do.

The definition and description of the park are quite all right, but the location of the park indicates the lack of concern that many publications seem to have for accuracy. I would like to point out to the government, just in case none of its members are aware of it, that that park is definitely located in, and is the pride of, New Brunswick.

It is only fitting that the minister for tourism should reissue the booklet, withdraw those copies which have been circulated, remail those which have been mailed on request, and have the corrections made. The document should not only be withdrawn but should give proper attention to the scenic values of all of Canada. But, for goodness sake, let us put them province by province where they belong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Introduction of Bills

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS PLACED ON ORDER PAPER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should have given you notice. I thought it had been given through the whip, but through a misunderstanding it was not. I thank you very much for seeing me because I wish to raise a question of privilege that reveals an attitude on the part of this government that is totally inexcusable and out of keeping with the concept of government. I am referring to the matter which came up the other day when the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) raised a question of privilege.

Here we are, approaching the last days of this session, and there are on the order paper 1,500 questions which have not been answered. I decided, while waiting today to get on, to look over the nature of these unanswered questions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I invite the right hon. gentleman to wait a few moments until we have called questions today, and then it will be more relevant to the question and, in addition, would not require notice.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND SECTIONS DEALING WITH PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-434, to amend the Criminal Code (pornography).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill would be to amend the Criminal Code with respect to obscenity. In particular, it would disallow expert witnesses, make the use of children for pornographic or sexual exploitive purposes an offence, and makes certain other changes to questions dealing with obscenity and its definition.

I would point out that this bill in no way offends the report coming from the justice and legal affairs committee regarding pornography, and is quite the opposite.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALVAGE OPERATIONS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-435, to amend the Canada Shipping Act (pollution).

[Mr. McCain.]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, this is one of a pair of bills that are for the purpose of preventing shipowners and salvage operators from haggling over the division of the salvage of a tanker in distress. There was a recent event which increased the hazards, and I hope this bill will prevent such occurrences.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

• (1522)

AMENDMENTS TO INCREASE FINES FOR POLLUTION OFFENCES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-436, to amend the Canada Shipping Act (pollution).

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING DIVORCE EXPENSES

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-437, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, under the present act certain payments made by one person on behalf of another in cases of separation or divorce are not permitted as a deduction for income tax purposes. My bill will make it clear that such payments will be classed as income for the person on whose behalf the payment is made and as a deduction for the person making the payment.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

NATIONAL ANTHEM

MEASURE TO CHANGE WORDING

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-438, respecting the national anthem of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Herbert: The purpose of this bill is to change in the English version only of our national anthem the word "native" to the word "cherished", in order to include the millions of Canadians who were not born in Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO RESTRICT COMMISSION'S POWERS

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-439, to amend the National Transportation Act (review and re-hearing).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is formally to restrict the power of the Canadian Transport Commission to hold new hearings on public matters that have already been decided.

At present, the discretion of the Commission to review, rescind or alter its orders and decisions and to rehear applications, is somewhat unclear. In many cases the rehearing of matters can cause tremendous hardship, especially to public interest groups that wish to oppose applications made by regulated industries, because these groups do not normally have the funding to fight a prolonged legal battle. The re-hearing of decided issues by the CTC should therefore be strictly regulated by legislation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

POSTAL SERVICE OPERATIONS ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF REGULAR POSTAL OPERATIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-45, to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved that the third report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Thursday, April 6, 1978, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it would not be amiss to borrow a few minutes of the time of the House to elaborate on the reasons for this particular motion which was passed unanimously by the committee, and to refresh hon. members' minds.

It provides, in the event a final report cannot be presented by the joint committee dealing with our terms of reference related to the green paper on legislation and access to government documents, that after the summoning of a new parliament the order of reference to the committee be renewed and all evidence and proceedings given in relation to this matter before the committee be included in the said order of reference.

Of course the committee knew that all it could do was make a recommendation in the hope that, when a new parliament is called, there will be a new government which may be more sympathetic to the situation, and that those hon. members on the government side who worked their battered way to this side of the House might also be able to give support to the proposal contained in this motion. This is a request from the existing parliament to what hopefully will be a new and more lively one, to move quickly and finish a task which should have been done long ago.

In February, 1976, this House unanimously approved a motion supporting, in principle, freedom of information legislation, which clearly inferred that the government should get on with the job. In supporting the 1976 motion, the House accepted the views of the committee which had been studying the issue for well over a year, and the House also adopted the position of a government task force on information. Furthermore, government officials had been studying the matter, both in Canada and abroad, and had at their command all the facts, statistics, and studies on comparative legislation, necessary to draft a bill. But those of us who expected the government to act were sadly disappointed. I am instructed that the matter was considered at least twice at cabinet or cabinet committee level, but the assorted dinosaurs who make up the top level of government, both elected and appointed, just would not hear of it.

Freedom of information means that the truth is likely to come out, and these people and their leader react to truth like the devil to holy water.

Joseph Pulitzer said, "There is not a crime, there is not a dodge, there is not a swindle, there is not a vice, which does not live by secrecy." This can be equally applied to the errors and evils of government.

After 15 months or more, in June, 1977, this House was given a green paper, designed to delay and divert the request for "right to know" laws, and this tactic now seems to have succeeded. It took six months to drag the government into referring the paper to the committee last December, and it now appears as if there will not be time to complete the study and to report before dissolution.

A large number of organizations and people have appeared before the committee, or have presented briefs, and it would be a great shame to compel them to repeat their efforts. Nearly all who have appeared support the proposition that there be a law giving the public the right to know the facts about government operations, with limited exemptions and a clear and binding appeal process. There is the all-party committee on freedom of information, representing members in both Houses. In fact all parties have given their blessing, including the Liberal party which took a very strong stand in support of judicial review at its last convention.

Freedom of information is also supported by an impressive number of groups and organizations whose views should not have to be repeated, like the CLC, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Association of University Teachers, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and dozens of others, including consumers' associations, library associations, community workers, newspaper associations and unions. In fact the entire spectrum of policital, economic, and social groups have a consensus favouring a more open and honest system of government.

There are those who stand in the path of this progress—a small group of willful, perverse, and arrogant people, who say, "Why should the public and parliament know what we know or why we act? It is for us to rule and for them to obey". And so they frustrated the unanimous wish of this House, flouted the views of all the organizations I have mentioned, went against the recommendations of their own advisers on this matter, and even rejected the twice-expressed position of their own national party. They are saying no to a motherhood issue, which makes me wonder what secrets must be protected by such obstructionism. I am sure that I am not the only one who wonders.

● (1532)

There is a particularly valid reason for speeding up the proposal to restore a more open face to government at this time. The absolute breakdown of trust and confidence in the apparatus of government is the most alarming phenomenon of our times. Unless this situation is repaired at once, if it can be, we are unlikely to get out of the swamp in which we are bogged down.

Tonight I sincerely wish the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) good fortune with his budget. But I suggest anything he proposes will be worthless unless it is accepted as being credible, and there is the rub. Until this and other governments can restore credibility and truthfulness his proposals and programs are unlikely to succeed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is by Mr. Baldwin, seconded by Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton). The hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis).

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to rise and say that I have acted as chairman of an all-party committee which has been concerned about freedom of information. Certainly I feel that the efforts which the government has made in producing the paper which was referred to committee, the terms of reference of the committee, the hearings that have taken place, and the statements made by a number of responsible persons, indicate the concern of members on this side of the House as well as of members on the other side of the House on this matter.

I know the hon. member who has just spoken is impatient with these matters. We recognize his great interest, of long standing, but I also recognize that good legislation arises out of the process of careful examination of what is really not a simple business but a complicated business. Those of us who are concerned about it are determined that progress should be made.

I support the general principle of this resolution and I hope it will receive acceptance. I hope that perhaps in some way it will expedite the work of another parliament which must inevitably come to grips with it.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have the answers to some 47 questions, and perhaps that will help to alleviate some of the concern expressed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The following questions will be answered today: Nos. 837 to 880 inclusive, and questions Nos. 1,176, 1,178 and 1,196.

[Text]

ARDA ASSISTANCE IN MANITOBA

Question No. 837—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Delta Fishermen's Federation in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In September of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Delta Fishermen's Federation I, the head representative was Mr. Gilbert Ducharme, president.

2. (a) Thirty-nine members of Delta Fishermen's Federation I were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the Special ARDA contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 838—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Delta Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal—Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In February of 1974, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Delta Local Fur Council I, the head representative was Mr. Gilbert Ducharme, president.

2. (a) One hundred and forty-six members of Delta Local Fur Council I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on September 30, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

Question No. 839—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Lake Manitoba Narrows Lodge in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In July of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Lake Manitoba Narrows Lodge was Mr. Peter Stasiuk, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, November 1, 1976, this enterprise employed eleven people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 840—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Cross Lake Fishermen's Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In April of 1974, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Cross Lake Fishermen's Association, the head representative was Mr. Donald McKay, president.

2. (a) Seventeen members of Cross Lake Fishermen's Association were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improve their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on September 30, 1975, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 841—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Fisher River Fishermen's Federation in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In June of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Fisher River Fishermen's Federation, the head representative was Mr. Norman Murdock, president.

2. (a) Forty-five members of Fisher River Fishermen's Federation were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1978, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 842—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Louis Riel Cooperative at St. Laurent, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In June of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Louis Riel Industrial Co-op was Mr. William Dumont, president.

2. (a) At the start of operations, the enterprise employed eighteen people, but was forced to cease operations for some time as the result of a severe fire. The operation is starting up again with the same employee level. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 843—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Einarsson's Trailer Court and Store in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Einarsson's Trailer Court and Store was Mr. Henry Einarsson, owner.

2. (a) At the start of operations, the enterprise employed three people, but has since ceased operations due to bankruptcy. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 844—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Nor-East Enterprises Ltd. in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Dapartment of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In June of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Nor-East Enterprises Ltd. was Mr. Arthur Bostrom, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, November, 1976, this enterprise employed three people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Order Paper Questions

Question No. 845—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Pikwitonei Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In March of 1974, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Pikwitonei Local Fur Council I, the head representative was Mr. William R. Cordell, president.

2. (a) Seventeen members of Pikwitonei Local Fur Council I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result.

(b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1976, all members were still registered as trappers.

Question No. 846—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the York Landing Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to York Landing Local Fur Council I, the head representative was Mr. Horace Saunders, president.

2. (a) Seven members of York Landing Local Fur Council I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

Question No. 847—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Red Sucker Lake Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In April of 1974, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to *Red Sucker Lake Trappers' Association, the head representative was Mr. Billy Harper, president.

2. (a) Fifty-six members of Red Sucker Lake Trappers' Association were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

---

* Now known as Red Sucker Lake Local Fur Council.

[Mr. Wood.]

Question No. 848—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Shamattawa Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to *Shamattawa Trappers' Association I, the head representative was Mr. Joel Beardy, president.

2. (a) Seven members of Shamattawa Trappers' Association I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

---

* Now known as Shamattawa Local Fur Council.

Question No. 849—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Split Lake Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In July of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Split Lake Trappers' Association*, I, the head representative was Mr. Dan Flett, president.

2. (a) Thirty-seven members of Split Lake Trappers' Association I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

---

*Now known as Split Lake Local Fur Council.

Question No. 850—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Nelson House Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1975, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Nelson House Local Fur Council, the head representative was Mr. Angus Linklater, president.

2. (a) Thirty-four members of Nelson House Local Fur Council were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on September 30, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

Question No. 851—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Cormorant Local Fur Council in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Cormorant Local Fur Council I, the head representative was Mr. Leslie J. Turner, president.

2. (a) Thirteen members of the Cormorant Local Fur Council I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1976, all members were still registered trappers.

Question No. 852—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Grand Rapids Service Station in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1974, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Grand Rapids Service Station was Mr. Oscar Olson, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to December 5, 1977, the enterprise has employed eighteen people. (b) This company is still within the control period specified in the letter of offer. See 2 (a) above.

Question No. 853—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Molson Lake Lodge in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the representatives of Molson Lake Lodge were Messrs. Joseph J. and Edward A. Paupanekis, co-owners.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, December, 1976, this enterprise employed six people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 854—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Brochet Fishermen's Cooperative in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Brochet Co-op Ltd., the head representative was Father A. Darveau, secretary.

2. (a) Twenty-five members of Brochet Co-op Ltd. were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 855—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the St. Ambroise Fishermen's Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In December of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to St. Ambroise Fishermen's Association, the head representative was Mr. S. Lavallee, president.

2. (a) Seventeen members of St. Ambroise Fishermen's Association were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 856—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Oak Point Fishermen's and Trappers' Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In December of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Oak Point Fishermen's and Trappers' Association, the head representative was Mr. Lloyd Clegg, president.

2. (a) Twenty-three members of Oak Point Fishermen's and Trappers' Association were able to engage in commercial fishing and trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen and trappers.

Order Paper Questions

Question No. 857—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Cormorant Fishermen's Co-op in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In January of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Cormorant Fishermen's Association, the head representative was Mr. Louis J. Ducharme, president.

2. (a) Three members of Cormorant Fishermen's Association were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 858—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Indian Rice Producers in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Indian Rice Producers Co-op Ltd. was Mr. Walter Courchene, president.

2. (a) At the start of operations, the enterprise employed three people, but has since ceased operations due to bankruptcy. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 859—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Camperduck Trappers Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In October of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Camperduck Trappers Association I, the head representative was Mr. George Butler, secretary-treasurer.

2. (a) Seven members of Camperduck Trappers Association I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered as trappers.

Question No. 860—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Wabowden Trappers Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

[Mr. Wood.]

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In October of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Wabowden Trappers' Association I, the head representative was Mr. Abel Hall, president.

2. (a) Thirteen members of Wabowden Trappers Association I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as trappers.

Question No. 861—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Tri-Star Construction Company Ltd. in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In June of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Tri-Star Construction was Mr. William Dumont, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, November, 1976, this enterprise employed three people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 862—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Lac du Bonnet Trappers' Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In October of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Lac Du Bonnet Trappers' Association I, the head representative was Mrs. Theresa Ledin, president.

2. (a) Seven members of Lac Du Bonnet Trappers' Association I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered trappers.

Question No. 863—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Oak Point Hotel in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In March of 1974, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the representative of Oak Point Hotel was Mr. Peter Torbiak, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, May, 1977, this enterprise employed seven people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 864—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Moak Lodge at Grand Rapids, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the representative of Moak Lodge was Mr. Herman Kutzner, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, May, 1977, this enterprise employed nine people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 865—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Hole River Trappers Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In October of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Hole River Trappers' Association I, the head representative was Mr. Alfred Favel, president.

2. (a) Eighteen members of Hole River Trappers' Association I were able to engage in trapping during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered trappers.

Question No. 866—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Barren Land Band at Lac Brochet, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In October of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Barren Land Band Council, the head representatives were Mr. Pat Hyslop and Father Darveau, spokesmen.

2. (a) Ten members of Barren Land Band Council were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered commercial fishermen.

Question No. 867—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Yellow Quill Co-op at Swan Lake, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In June of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Yellow Quill Co-op was Mr. Harry Mousseau, president.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, June, 1977, this enterprise employed four people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 868—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of Mr. Laubman's at Pitwitoei, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In July of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of P. Laubman's was Mr. Percy J. Laubman, owner.

2. (a) At the start of operations, the enterprise employed three people, but has since ceased operations due to bankruptcy. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 869—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Interlake Custom Killing at St. Laurent, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Interlake Custom Killing was Mr. E. Schon, president.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, May, 1977, this enterprise employed four people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 870—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Northern Meat and Sausage at Scanterbury, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In July of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Northern Meat and Sausage Co. Ltd. was Mr. Ira Dallman, owner.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, April, 1977, this enterprise employed five people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 871—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of A. MacAuley in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of A. MacAuley Camp was Mr. A. M. MacAuley, owner.

2. (a) At the start of operations, the enterprise employed four people, but has since ceased operations due to bankruptcy. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 872—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of E. Monkman at Loon Straits, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of E. Monkman's was Mr. Ed Monkman, owner.

2. The proposal did not proceed as the applicant was unable to arrange for interim financing.

[Mr. Wood.]

Question No. 873—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Pine Tree Inn at Richer, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In June of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Pine Tree Inn was Mr. Allan R. Jones, owner.

2. (a) At the start of operations the enterprise employed three people, but has since ceased operations due to bankruptcy. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 874—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Crane River Feedlot in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Crane River Feedlot Co-op Ltd. was Mr. James J. Moar, president.

2. (a) At the start of operations, the enterprise employed eight people, but has since ceased operations. (b) See 2. (a) above.

Question No. 875—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Fisher Bay Fishermen's Association in Koostatak, Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Fisher Bay Fishermen's Association, the head representative was Mr. Theodore Govereau, president.

2. (a) Three members of Fisher Bay Fishermen's Association were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1975, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 876—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the South Indian Lake Fishermen's Co-op in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In July of 1976, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to South Indian Lake Fishermen's Association, the head representative was Mr. William R. Dysart, president.

2. (a) Thirty-six members of South Indian Lake Fishermen's Association were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on September 30, 1977, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 877—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Lake Manitoba's Fishermen's Co-op in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In May of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Lake Manitoba Co-op Fisheries was Mr. Frank Bruce, secretary.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, May, 1976, this enterprise employed four people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 878—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the St. Laurent Fishermen's Association in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In August of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to St. Laurent Fishermen's Association, the head representative was Mr. W. Dumont, treasurer.

2. (a) Twenty-two members of St. Laurent Fishermen's Association were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on March 31, 1974, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

Question No. 879—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Norway Nursing Home in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In September of 1973, when Special ARDA assistance was offered, the head representative of Pinaow Wachi (Norway House Nursing Home), was Mrs. Amy Monias, president.

2. (a) From the start of operations to the end of the Special ARDA three-year control period, April 1977, this enterprise employed twenty-eight people annually. (b) As the control period of the financial assistance has expired and final payment has been made, this information is no longer collected.

Question No. 880—Mr. Epp:

1. Who was the head or chief representative of the Grand Rapids Fishermen's Co-op in Manitoba at the time when the organization received funding under the Federal-Provincial ARDA Programme?

2. (a) How many people were employed as a result of the grant and for what period of time (b) how many are presently employed?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. In April of 1972, when Special ARDA assistance was offered to Grand Rapids Fishermen's Co-op Ltd. I, the head representative was Mr. Colin McKay, president.

2. (a) Nineteen members of Grand Rapids Fishermen's Co-op Ltd. I were able to engage in commercial fishing during the contract period and improved their incomes as a result. (b) At the time of expiration of the contract on July 4, 1972, all members were still registered as commercial fishermen.

CANADIAN COLOUR AND FASHION TREND SERVICE

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Canadian Colour and Fashion Trend Service as administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. The Crown has no financial interest in the Canadian Colour and Fashion Trend Service as administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The Crown's financial involvement is limited to annual contributions toward the operating costs of the service over a maximum period of seven years. Formed in October 1975 as a non-profit organization without share capital, the equity of the corporation is limited to the net value of the fixed assets which amount to $5,773.00. The reason for the contribution was to promote the development of an organization that could accumulate and disburse national and international colour and fashion information to firms in the clothing, leather and allied industries.

2. The residual assets of the company as shown in (1) will revert to the Crown upon liquidation.

3. To date, the Crown's contribution to operating funds are as follows:

	Year		Total Contribution
Inception	1975-76		$ 45,000
	1976-77		45,000
Final Year	1977-78	(as at Dec. 31, 1977)	40,000
			$130,000

The Crown has realized no financial profit from its contributions.

4. A Board of Directors was comprised of nine selected representatives, of which eight were recruited from industry. Government representation on this Board was provided by an officer from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce who assumed the position of vice-chairman.

5. It was the Board of Director's decision to recommend dissolution of the corporation in view of the poor industry support and the unlikely prospect that the service would be self-supporting by year seven. The membership voted in favour of the dissolution at a general meeting held September 15, 1977. In view of this decision all assets of the company revert to the Crown according to section (10) of the agreement between Her Majesty the Queen and the corporation.

FASHION CANADA

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in Fashion Canada as administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. Fashion Canada is the promotional name given to the Fashion Design Assistance Program initiated in May, 1970 as an integral part of the Textiles Policy announced by the minister, Jean-Luc Pepin. The program was set up to assist Canadian apparel and textile industries achieve a more competitive position in domestic and world fashion markets by: (a) advancing the development of Canadian fashion design talent and strengthening the innovative fashion design potential in the Canadian apparel and textile industrie, and (b) promoting the recognition of Canadian designers, and the acceptance of Canadian fashion design in domestic and international markets. Fashion/Canada was incorporated in May, 1973 under Part II of the Corporations Act. The Crown's precise financial interest in Fashion/Canada, as administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is limited to contributions toward the implementation of the projects and the operating costs of the organization. The Crown has no shares in the corporation.

[Mr. Horner.]

2. Fashion/Canada was set up as a non-profit corporation without share capital.

3. Up to the end of December, 1977, the Crown's total contribution was $972,028.00. The Crown has realized no financial profit as a result of it's contributions. Contributions from its inception are as follows:

Year	Total Contributions
1971-72	$ 60,000
1972-73	58,000
1973-74	104,000
1974-75	202,000
1975-76	199,000
1976-77	202,000
1977-78 (As of Dec/77)	147,028
	$972,028	Total Contributions

Contributions to projects have been mainly on a cost-sharing basis with industry.

4. The Board of Directors of Fashion/Canada is comprised of 24 selected representatives from the federal government, provincial governments, and sponsoring industry associations. The current president is a director of the Textiles and Consumer Products Branch, Industry, Trade and Commerce. The executive director of Fashion/Canada is an employee of the department.

5. At the time of the inception, no policy decision was made in respect to the future disposition of the corporation's interest. The mandate of Fashion/Canada is reviewed annually by departmental management in terms of the overall departmental policy relevant to the apparel industry sector.

CENTENNIAL COMMISSION

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Andre:

1. What is the Crown's precise financial interest in the Centennial Commission as administered by the Department of the Secretary of State and on what date was such interest acquired, at what cost and for what reason?

2. What was the book value of the Crown's equity on the date of acquisition and what is its latest estimated book value?

3. To date, what is the Crown's total investment, including equity costs, contributions to operating funds, debt forgiveness and what is the Crown's total realized profit from such investment?

4. In what manner is the Crown's interest represented (a) on the Board of Directors (b) in its senior management?

5. Did the government make a policy decision in regard to the future disposition of its interest?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. The Centennial Commission was established in 1963 by the Centennial of Confederation Act (S.C. 1963) and was designated as a schedule C "Agency Corporation under the Financial Administration Act reporting to the Secretary of State (PC 1964-1956)". The Commission formally closed operations effective April 1, 1968 at which time the Department of the Secretary of State assumed responsibility for all assets and liabilities. In addition to the normal wind-up activities, this involved primarily the administration of the Centennial of Confederation Fund. This fund was established in co-operation with the provinces and territories to provide capital grants to municipalities for the construction of centennial projects. This fund was terminated during the 1972-73 fiscal year and the operations of the Centennial Commission were terminated.

[English]

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS PLACED ON ORDER PAPER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested in the observation just made by the hon. gentleman that the answering of 47 questions, generally asked towards the end of the record, constitutes something of approval of the stand taken by the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) and myself the other day. Forty-seven answered out of 1,532! If that represents any indication that this government wants information given to the Canadian people, all I can say is that if parliament goes on to the year 2300 we will still not have answers to these questions.

I decided to raise a question of privilege for, as has been pointed out today, and in particular by the last hon. gentleman who stated it, freedom of information is an objective of this government. Indeed, it should cover the entire field of political endeavour. I decided to look at the questions which have not been answered, and that look revealed a most interesting situation. The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Balfour) asked a series of questions beginning with No. 1 and going up to some 40, I think the number is, which have been on the order paper since October 18.

I know the civil service is busy. I know it is overworked, with the tremendous number of official employees that it has, but it strikes me as unusual that these questions should not be answered because, after all, the answers are available. They are as simple as A, B, C. The government has all the answers.

I might read two or three of them to indicate their nature. October 18, No. 1:

Are private companies or individuals hired by departments or agencies for activities related to advertising and, if so, in each case, how many contracts were awarded and in what amount for the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977?

Mr. Speaker, they have the answer to that. Why would they not answer it? Why would they wait five months? These questions will die on the order paper unless they are answered.

Question No. 2 reads as follows:

For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977, what was the total cost of advertising in Canada for all government departments and agencies (i) in newspapers (ii) on television (iii) on radio (iv) in magazines (v) in all other forms?

The goverment has that information. Sometimes I listen to radio and television. I am interested in the fact that the government's interest seems to be the interest of those who are commenting, in many cases, and their favourable comments on the government are such that one wonders if that is the reason that question is not answered.

Question No. 3 reads as follows:

For the fiscal year ended March 31 (a) 1975, (b) 1976, (c) 1977, what was the total cost to the Department of the Solicitor General for advertising in Canada (i) in newspapers, (ii) on television, (iii) on radio, (iv) in magazines, (v) in all other forms?

Question No. 4 deals with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Question No. 5 deals with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Question No. 6 deals with the Department of Finance, and so on. I could go on page after page. Yet five months have gone by and these questions are still unanswered. Why are they not being answered? My answer is this, that the government is afraid to answer these questions as to do so would be embarrassing to the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: It would reveal the degree to which patronage is rampant under this government. I will not read any more of this group. They are all of the same purport, and the information is hidden in every case.

Then we come to another series of questions asked by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley). These are of interest here in the city of Ottawa. There is no difficulty getting this information. It is in every department. The following are some of the questions which have been on the order paper since November 14.

Question No. 560 reads as follows:

1. How many square feet are leased by the government in the Aaron Building, 1712 Carling Ave., Ottawa?

2. What is the cost per square foot?

3. Which departments are located there?

4. Who is the landlord?

5. On what date does the lease expire and will it be renewed?

6. How many square feet are currently classified vacant?

7. How many square feet will be vacated or refitted in the next five years because of decentralization?

Question No. 561 asks how many square feet are leased by the government in the Abrams Building, 2620 Sheffield Road, Ottawa. The next question we come to is No.562, which asks how many square feet are leased by the government in the Ala Kantti-Liff building, 222 Somerset Street West, Ottawa. Question No. 563 asks how many square feet are leased by the government in the Allstate Building. It even designates the address on Carling Avenue so the civil servants would have no difficulty in knowing where the building is. The next question is how many square feet are leased by the government in the American Can Company building. The address is given on Spruce Street. Going on—how many square feet are leased by the government in the Aselford-Martin Building on Woodward Drive, Ottawa?

● (1542)

So it goes, page after page, the Bank Building, the Bank of Nova Scotia building, the Bayview Road building, the Beamish building. That information is available to the government. All they have to do is look at the figures in the departments.

Those questions go from No. 563 to No. 645. It is a strange thing. Apparently the government cannot read. They have seen these questions here for five or six months, but have not answered them. Then they talk about believing in freedom of information.

I could go through the entire list. There is only one reason why these questions have not been answered. It would be embarrassing to the government if the answers were given. You cannot run parliament in that way. When I was Prime Minister, the total expenditure in Canada was $6 billion. Now it is over eight times that.

What is being paid for these various rentals? Why should that information not be available? Is it because it would reveal information to the Canadian people that would not be to the credit of the government? There can be no other explanation. Some questions will take time to answer, but that information is available in every department. I am not going to say more about that except to add that what this government is doing is hiding the information.

We are getting to the position today where you cannot believe the government. We had an example of that in the 1974 election. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), placing his hand over where his heart is, said that if he were re-elected they would not bring in wage and price controls. He pointed out the awful Conservative stand on that. Within a matter of weeks and months, he brought about that which he said he would never do. With that kind of leadership, it is no wonder we cannot get answers to these questions.

I can go on from there. Could it be suggested that the failure to answer these questions is that they have not the information? Parliament is being treated by this government as though it were a pawn. Mention was made today by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) that principles effective in the British parliament do not necessarily apply here. Principles of integrity do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to point that out. One should not have to say that. Some ministers answer the questions. I could even give a list of them because it would not take me long. I think there are three or four who answer the questions. One sits directly opposite me at this moment.

It is deliberate. The concealment is flagrant. Hiding information is contempt of this parliament, a grievous contempt. Is it any wonder that the expenditures of the Government of Canada have gone up and up and up by billions? They are $48,000 million this year. Since the present Prime Minister has been Prime Minister of Canada, they have gone up by approximately 78 per cent.

Hiding information enables the government to get away with these vast expenditures. We have now come to the point where this government treats this House with a disregard that I have never seen equalled. I have been here under three Prime Ministers and I have never seen anything to equal this. I remember Mackenzie King saying on one occasion, "We will give full information, by and large, excepting in connection with defence", which one could understand during days of war. Parliament got that information. It was the same under Mr. St. Laurent; meticulous, careful. We did not end a parliament with 1,450 questions unanswered. Never!

I witnessed something today that I did not think I would ever see, so unusual it was. When a parliamentary secretary to a minister starts to answer as to what the government is going to do, he has no such right. He does not sit in the cabinet. He is simply an assistant of the minister he represents. However, day after day one of the primary rules of parliament, that ministers ought to answer, is deliberately being set aside. Why? What does a parliamentary secretary know in connection with what the cabinet has done? He has no responsibility. All he has is a decorative position of giving assistance to the minister.

I made a mistake a while ago, and I am a Conservative. I mentioned the increase in the expenditures since the present Prime Minister became Prime Minister ten years ago. It is an 80 per cent increase, not the percentage that I gave speaking off the top of my head.

Because this government knows it can get away with this, it refuses to answer. It deliberately neglects to answer questions, giving parliament information to which it is entitled. Do you think it will hurt anybody? Will it hurt the security of Canada if we find out that a favourite landlord of the government receives a tremendous price for a rental and that an equivalent rental is only half that amount? It would not hurt the reputation of those landlords to have the truth out.

With all the power at my command, I condemn this practice, whereby when this House ends, whether it be on Thursday or Friday, of 1,500 questions unanswered, although the people have the right to that information, they will have no information on them. If this is the way they treat parliament, then no wonder the expenditures have increased as they have over and over again, year by year.

In 1978 we are told that although the expenditures have gone up, "look at the wonderful government we have." I have never before known a government going to the country saying they have spent more than ever before, that spending has increased by 80 per cent, that the cost of living, which was 1½ per cent in my time, today is 7 or 8 per cent and still going up.

An hon. Member: It is 9½ per cent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nine and one half per cent. The same is true of interest rates. In the days ahead we will hear the argument advanced that we have a government so solid, so stable, so protective of the Canadian interest.

I am going to make a simple request of the House. Every few minutes as I go on I get an increase in the expenditures of the government. These are accountants who are not speaking from memory. They point out that I have been so generous in my words that I have appalled them. The latest is from an accountant. Expenditures under Mr. Trudeau in some areas have risen 800 per cent during his term.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to speak any longer. Somebody else will check the figures as far as the increase in expenditures is concerned, but I am advised it is 800 per cent.

● (1552)

Sir, the reason for not answering is simply that the government will not answer any questions which are embarrassing. That is the case all across the board. Today, in all its benevolence and with the great heart revealed by the words of the parliamentary secretary, some 40 questions are being answered. I suggest the House has a right to demand that the government, with the information in its possession—and it has every bit of information needed—should table the answer to those questions tomorrow or the day after, if we are still here. And if those questions are answered, the people of Ottawa will be shocked as never before by the degree of political patronage practised by this administration.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) I thought for a moment that the budget debate had already commenced. The right hon. gentleman ranged over the whole area of economic policy, rising expenditures, and the growth of the national debt.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I never mentioned the debt.

Mr. MacEachen: He did all this under the guise of a spurious question of privilege or point of order, the grounds for which do not exist in fact. The right hon. member is obsessed with the possibility of an election.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not!

Mr. MacEachen: He is totally obsessed by the possibility of an election. He has told us we are in the last days of this parliament, that there is to be a dissolution on Thursday or Friday. I do not want to relieve him of his anxiety—

Mr. Diefenbaker: You don't know, yourself. The Prime Minister has not told you yet.

Mr. MacEachen: For my part I am content that this parliament should live on for an indefinite period and I would suggest that the right hon. gentleman not hold his breath on Thursday or Friday—not yet, anyway. I must also tell him he has totally distorted the facts with respect to the answering of questions. The fact of the matter is that this government has provided more information and answered more questions than any government in the history of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If the right hon. gentleman would take a look at the order paper when he was prime minister and compare it with the order paper for today, he would find that the increase in the number of questions put down has been exponential. Their number has grown, in part because we have made possible the establishment of research staffs for opposition parties who have nothing better to do than dream up ridiculous questions and put them on the order paper.

It is appropriate that we should have an opportunity such as has been provided by the right hon. gentleman to comment upon the nature of questions which have been placed upon the order paper. Many of them relate to information which is already available to hon. members and which they can find in the Canada Gazette, or in the Canada Year Book which is the great source of constitutional authority for the official opposition. Many of these questions could be answered by a simple reference to government publications.

Then again, I wonder what a question like this, for example, has to do with the public interest—here is one question which apparently the right hon. member finds intriguing, otherwise he would not be urging that it be answered:

> As of the date of this question, what is the (a) total number, (b) percentage of cabinet minister whose mother tongue is (i) English, (ii) French?

That, Mr. Speaker, is a question which was put down on the order paper, a mischievous question which should be dismissed out of hand as being insulting in its purpose.

Another question on the order paper to which we are expected to pay a lot of attention is this:

> During his early February 1978 visit to British Columbia, did the Prime Minister meet with a group of labour leaders and specifically did he say to them "Do you think we are out to screw the Canadian people?" and, if so, (a) what is a full explanation of what the Prime Minister meant by this remark, (b) is the Prime Minister prepared to immediately produce evidence to Parliament showing that he is not out to "screw" the Canadian people?

That, too, is a question which was put down on the order paper in the expectation that it would be treated seriously by the government. There are many such questions on the order paper, and I believe we would be doing a great service to the operation of parliament if we were to take a closer look at these questions to determine whether they are useful and in the public interest. Many of them are not useful and are not in the public interest, but they are placed on the order paper and a lot of time and money has to be spent in answering them.

We have provided answers to questions and we shall continue to do so. We have already answered over 900 questions this session—60 per cent of the questions appearing on the order paper have been answered. We cannot, of course, answer them in advance. At every moment of every day there will be unanswered questions appearing on the order paper. That is inevitable. We have, however, answered a very large number of them, and we shall continue to do so. We shall have answered more questions before the session ends. If the right hon. gentleman feels there is to be a dissolution on Thursday, or that parliament has very few days to live, I suggest to him that when any parliament ends, either by dissolution or the adjournment of a session, a number of questions are left unanswered. But the record of the government is extremely good in this respect.

The right hon. gentleman has allowed his suspicious mind to wander all over the order paper. With that suspicious attitude of his, he found some evil purpose lurking behind the questions left unanswered. There was the question of the rents which are paid or the square footage rented in a particular building. Mr. Speaker, that information will be made available.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. MacEachen: Nobody is hiding it. The right hon. member is creating straw men, trying to make us believe there are sinister motives behind the failure to answer some of the questions which take time and money to answer. I ask him to dispel this suspicious attitude from his mind. If he were to do so he would have better peace of mind as he contemplates the election date which is so much his preoccupation these days.

● (1602)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is just one comment I should like to make with respect to something which was said by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). Before I come to the point which concerns me, may I just say that I assume that if that question about mother tongue had included one about one's mother tongue being Gaelic, the Deputy Prime Minister would not have been so offended.

However, what concerns me is a particular statement made by the Deputy Prime Minister. If I remember correctly, he said that perhaps we should look at these questions before they go on the order paper.

What does the Deputy Prime Minister have in mind? Is he going to have the government censor questions and deny members the right to put them on the order paper? It seems to me that if members put irresponsible questions on the order paper, they have to take responsibility for that in the eye of the public, but I have to say that I do not like the idea or the suggestion that some government body or board somewhere should have the power to review our questions. That would mean censoring or eliminating questions which members wish to put on the order paper.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is sound indeed. I do not think that the government House leader ought to condemn too quickly opposition members of parliament for their questions. He ought not to condemn members at all for putting questions on the order paper. If there is to be a condemnation, let the government House leader speak to the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) about the host of questions which appear in his name starting at page 76 of the order paper. Let me indicate just briefly what question No. 62, in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), asks, as follows:

> For the fiscal year 1975-1976, what contracts for professional services were let (a) for studies, surveys and analyses into present or future policies, programs or information analysis, and their efficiency and effectiveness (b) into the examination of the administration or internal operation of the Post Office Department?

That question has been kicking around unanswered on the order paper since October 18, 1977. I see the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is waving his arms as if he has taken leave of his senses. I could talk about one of his questions which appears on the order paper. There is a whole host of questions on the order paper, asked not just by members of the opposition but by members of the government as well. All members of parliament have the right to have their questions answered, and if we review the order paper, we find that there are many questions.

It is the responsibility of members of parliament, not that of the government House leader or of anyone else, to see that their questions are proper, but it is the responsibility of the government to answer questions on the order paper.

I speak now as a member of parliament from the national capital area. I see from the order paper that there are questions put there by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley) with regard to rentals of buildings and square footages. At a time when departments are leaving this city in droves, and when we are in the midst of a decentralization program which is not even supported by some members on the government side, it is not appropriate for the government House leader to say that certain questions are inappropriate and that they ought not to be answered. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is absolutely right, they should be answered, and those answers would be fairly revealing to the people of the national capital area.

While I am on my feet, let me deal with one other matter with respect to questions, and that is the whole matter of starred questions. Starred questions are answered here in the House rather than by way of written answers. By their very nature they require some immediacy in terms of dealing with them. I have noticed that they have been treated neither as important nor urgent in terms of the answers given by the government.

All members of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments dealt unanimously with the right to freedom of information. The Canadian Bar Association, labour unions, and every responsible organization which appeared before that committee have indicated that opportunities for information and knowledge, not just for members of the opposition but for all members of parliament, are wanting.

The government refuses to answer ordinary questions. It delays and drags its feet with respect to starred questions. I think we have to examine our system and our rules because they are not functioning in the terms that the 20th century requires. This is very important. As our parliament and our society become more complex, more and more questions will be asked, and our procedures with respect to questions are becoming farcical and irrelevant. I comend the right hon. member for Prince Albert for raising this matter today, and I condemn the government House leader for giving the same old rote and the same old nonsense, rather than taking his responsibility and looking toward improving the procedures which are important to all of us.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for just a few moments about this matter. I think Your Honour has a special responsibility to individual members because the order paper is not something which is exclusive to members of the opposition. This was pointed out by the previous speaker. The order paper is available for all members of parliament so that they can seek information and obtain facts.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) endeavoured to indicate that there should be a set of rules to determine how questions are put before they appear on the order paper, but there is definitely a determination made by members of Your Honour's staff as to the form of questions before they appear on the order paper. Questions must seek information and must not be partisan or political. The approximately 1,400 questions which at the moment are unanswered are not partisan political questions, but questions asking for facts. Members of parliament, whether they be Liberal, Social Credit, New Democratic or Progressive Conservative, have a right to ask questions, and the public has the right to know the answers.

Unfortunately, questions on the order paper have been taking up more and more of the time of this House because of questions of privilege of this nature. There is unwillingness on the part of the government to provide individual members of parliament with facts to which they have a right. As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has pointed out, the more the government involves itself in the lives of individual Canadians in one way or another, the more questions will appear on the order paper.

Since I have been here I have watched the attitude of the government change toward questions on the order paper. When I first came here, a starred question which appeared on the order paper was usually answered within a period of two weeks. The starring of a question indicated an urgency that the question be answered orally in the House more or less like an oral question, but that no longer is the case. We have come to the point where a starred question does not mean any more to a minister than any other kind of question.

Unfortunately, questions on the order paper do not mean very much to ministers these days. Your Honour is here to protect individual members of parliament, and Your Honour is here to prevent the rights of individual members from being trampled upon by the government, but that is what is happening when the government refuses to answer questions.

● (1612)

I do not know what Your Honour can do. I do not know if Your Honour can be the boss of the executive branch of government, but I realize it is your duty to assist us in our work. If Your Honour set down some ground rules, that would assist individual members of parliament. In the last three or four years, I have put a question in one session and have been required to put it again in the next session. By the time an answer is provided, in my experience it has been worthless. As a matter of fact I have stopped using the order paper to secure information, as I once did. The government almost places a time limit on answering questions. Thus, when I receive the information, it is well beyond the point where it is of any value or significance whatsoever.

There must be a time limit in which the government answers a question. For example, if the government does not answer a question within three months, then the minister responsible should be required to stand in the House and explain the reason for that. At least the public would know whether the government is preventing the individual member from securing the information he and the taxpayers of Canada have a right to know. It is similar to the tale of Rip van Winkle. The government goes to sleep for 20 years before it awakens and decides to provide the facts which were requested by a particular hon. member. Parliament is made to look foolish by the government, because government or opposition members cannot obtain facts to which they have a right.

Once again the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has indicated his great concern for this institution. In his own way he is endeavouring to tell Your Honour what has to be done in order to ensure this institution remains viable in the minds of all Canadians. Because of that, I hope Your Honour arrives at a solution to a problem which has been a continuing, growing, and worsening problem in this parliament and in previous ones.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to extend the debate on that point of order but since it is very important, I think it is my duty to state the views of my party on the matter. I would like to say first that all the points raised by right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were unbiaised and that in his answer the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) wanted to justify the fact that many questions have remained unanswered.

Mr. Speaker, what surprises me is the fact that since I have been elected here I have often heard the Chair say to an hon. member that his question should be put on the order paper. I think the Chair should let the hon. member ask his question and if an oral answer cannot be obtained during the question period or the information requested is too exhaustive, the hon.

member should put his question on the order paper of the House. I suggest that this is part of our procedure.

But I cannot go along with the assertion that we are putting too many questions on the order paper since indeed we receive a great many requests from Canadian taxpayers who want to put such or such question on the order paper of the House because they have not received from department officials answers to questions they have asked.

For instance, when one wants to know the price paid by the government for leasing offices in a given building in a Canadian city, I think we pay public servants to give that answer and to avoid wasting time in seeking the answers or information requested.

Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister pointed out a while ago, answering questions that should not even be put is also a waste of money, because hon. members could find the answers themselves in the reports of the various departments. He said it was a waste of time and money. If we want to talk about economizing, we should think very seriously about the large number of hours civil servants spend writing documents that fill our letter boxes with insignificant and useless literature. As for useful information, we are quite willing to get it and read it but every single day we get a huge quantity of useless papers that represent a waste of time, paper and money. We should also have a look at that, to see that there is no abuse in that field, and that people are not being paid for nothing, for the mere pleasure of writing things that are of very little interest.

Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of continuing to use that formula, that means of getting from the government the information we need when we want to answer the taxpayers' questions. That is why I am opposed to the government having the authority of deciding which questions should be put or rejected, because even the government members ask a lot of questions. I find that quite normal. Nobody is shocked because members of the government side can now ask questions during the question period, because they are considered private members like the rest of the House. And I am not shocked because their questions appear on the order paper. I would not want anybody to be shocked by the number of their questions appearing on the order paper, but I do wish that ministers would do their utmost to give an intelligent answer, so as to satisfy the member who asked the question. As long as democracy and the respect of members' responsibilities remain our chosen way of life, government will have to accept that questions continue to appear on the order paper, and those questions will have to be answered. The question is important, but so is the answer.

Such, Mr. Speaker, is the view of the hon. member for Bellechasse and of the members of the Social Credit Party of Canada. If ever this question is brought before the Committee on Procedure and Organization and members of the committee, after careful consideration of the situation, find there have been abuses and that the standing orders should be amended so as to be more relevant and efficient, then I am willing to have the orders changed with a view to making them more democratic and allowing quicker answers to members' questions. This, I believe, would lead to a decrease in the number of questions, because the answers given would eliminate other questions. That is the view that I wanted to express, Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege put by the right hon. member for Prince Albert.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

• (1622)

[English]

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I simply want to point out that, if my ears did not deceive me, the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) perpetuated something of an incorrect or misleading impression. Not all 1,532 questions on the order paper remain unanswered. I thought the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) pointed out quite explicitly that somewhere over 900, or over 60 per cent of those questions, have been dealt with already.

Since the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North has intervened this afternoon, I would just like to point out to him and to the House that I did receive a question from him this morning demanding a rather immediate answer. That question asked me, as a "supporter" of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, whether I might kindly remit as soon as possible some $25 or more. I just want to assure that hon. member that this question in particular will remain outstanding and unanswered.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on just a brief point. I am happy that the parliamentary secretary has indicated the matter of numerical numbers. The numbers game is very easy to play. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) left the House with the impression that there were 1,532 questions unanswered. That is totally false. As the House Leader explained, some 900, or 60 per cent of those questions, have been answered to date.

In answer to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker), who tried to imply that I had a number of questions on the order paper, let me say that I have one question more than he has, and that is one question, and he has none. We do not abuse this. There are fewer than 500 questions on the order paper at this time, and there are 264 members in this House. If we all asked two questions, that is not a great number.

I recognize, as do all members here, the freedom to ask questions. I do not reject the point that some of the questions are difficult to answer. There is one thing I should like to see done, and that is, attached to the answer should be the amount of money representing the cost of providing the answer. Maybe we should be talking in terms of saving money in respect of the questions to be asked. It is about time this House knew that some questions are very expensive to answer. Perhaps in changes to the rules, and maybe the House will agree to this some day, we should require that the cost involved in answering some of these questions be placed alongside the answers. Some of these questions are far fetched, very very deep, and sometimes very expensive.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

STANDING ORDERS

MOTION TO AMEND STANDING ORDER 65(1)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council) moved:

That Standing Order 65(1) be amended by adding immediately after subsection (s), the following:

"(t) Northern pipelines, to consist of not more than 15 members, to which shall stand permanently referred all reports, orders, agreements, regulations, directions and approvals mentioned in sections 12, 13, 14, 15 and 22 of the Northern Pipeline Act; provided that the said committee shall report thereon at least three times in every session."

Provided that this subsection shall be deleted from the Standing Orders on the day on which the Northern Pipeline Agency ceases to exist.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

* * *

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AUTHORIZE IMPOSITION OF LEVY ON DOMESTIC PETROLEUM AND IMPORTS

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-19, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gillespie moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am most pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon, or what remains of it, of introducing for third reading today Bill C-19, which amends the Petroleum Administration Act. This bill will help to foster the development of Canadian resources and help to minimize our dependence on foreign oil.

I think it is worthy of note that this should be seen as one of a number of very important measures which the government has taken to minimize our dependence on foreign oil imports. For example, the extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal has minimized these oil imports, probably to an extent very close to $1.5 billion a year in foreign exchange, and at the same time has reduced our vulnerability to a cessation of oil imports from the Middle East.

This bill, which will foster the development of domestic petroleum resources, should be seen very much as a part of a series of measures the government has taken to develop Canadian oil resources and to develop other energy resources which can replace oil imports. As I said previously in the House on second reading, the principle aim of this bill is to fulfil a commitment of the federal government given at the time of the massive salvage operation, and I refer to the operation in which the government of Alberta and the government of Ontario joined with the federal government in protecting, preserving, and continuing that huge project, the Syncrude project in Alberta. At that time a commitment was given that this particular project should receive international prices for the synthetic oil produced by Syncrude of Canada from these Athabasca tar sands.

This bill does a number of other things. It establishes, for example, the levy out of which will be paid the funds to provide for that international price. The proceeds of the levy are to be used to fund the compensation paid to purchasers of the Syncrude material. It is expected that the levy will approximate one half a cent per barrel. This cost will ultimately be borne by the consumer of the petroleum products who, I believe, should be prepared to pay the price to secure such development both in respect of Syncrude and other selected energy projects.

So we have the international price, the levy, and the mechanism of a board, the Petroleum Compensation Board, previously known as the Emergency Supplies Allocation Board, as the three main elements of the bill. There are one or two others to which I will refer.

A moment ago I referred to the fact that this levy could be used for other major oil products in the west. It is important that we realize the potential that might be brought into being for the advantage of Canadians. The tar sands and heavy oil sands of Alberta and, yes, of Saskatchewan as well, represent a potential recoverable reserve of crude bitumens of roughly 330 billion barrels, and 250 billion barrels of ultimately recoverable reserves of synthetic crude oil. That compares with roughly 7 billion barrels of recoverable oil from our conventional resources. Clearly the opportunities for Canadians are enormous, and that is why this bill is so important.

I referred to the possibility of certain other major projects being involved. Let me just list them. In addition to Syncrude production, which in the first phase may be up to 125,000 barrels a day, there could be through an expansion additional production of some 75,000 barrels a day, for a total of 200,000 barrels. There is the possibility of increasing the production of Great Canadian Oil Sands to about 60,000 or 70,000 barrels a day. There is the possibility associated with the tar sands III consortium, headed up by Shell, of 125,000 barrels a day. There is an announcement by Imperial about bringing the Cold Lake project to fruition, which would provide 140,000 barrels a day.

● (1632)

The Saskatchewan government has indicated its interest in heavy oil development, roughly in the order of 100,000 barrels a day, in association with Petro-Canada. There is also another group in Alberta headed up by Pacific Petroleum that has been talking about the possibility of producing heavy oil and conventional oils in the area of 100,000 barrels per day. This, essentially, represents new production for Canadians and new security for the Canada of the future—a security for our economy which does not exist so long as we are dependent for a large proportion of our oil on imports from abroad. The numbers that I have mentioned total between 600,000 and 700,000 barrels a day. It is quite clear that these resources will only be brought into production for the benefit of Canadians if those resources, because they are high cost resources, receive the international price at the market place.

I refer to two other aspects of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to conclude my remarks by mentioning them. Essentially, they are minor changes to the Petroleum Administration Act. First, they provide for the payment of special compensation to importers of petroleum in cases of undue financial hardship. This provision would only be employed in situations where the regulations do not and cannot foresee special circumstances faced by importers. The second change in the amendments to the Petroleum Administration Act is one I referred to in my preliminary remarks, the change of the name of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board to the Petroleum Compensation Board. The change of name will more properly reflect the functions today of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board.

During the committee stage there was consideration of a number of amendments. The committee decided to adopt four of those amendments. These amendments will improve and strengthen the bill. I would now like to outline the purposes of the amendments, which have been incorporated in the revised bill before us.

The first two changes affect clause 1. I should also point out that three of the four changes are of a technical nature. The other is more of a policy review nature. I will deal with the three technical amendments. Clause 65.1 has been added specifying that revenues from this levy will be used to meet the cost of paying import compensation to those classes of petroleum designated by the governor in council as being eligible to receive international crude oil prices. The purpose of that particular amendment is to clarify the relationship between clauses 1 and 2, and it does that.

The second technical amendment affecting clause 1 deletes a provision which would have permitted the governor in council to allow exemptions from the levy in instances where it would be in the public interest. This amendment is in line with the principle that all domestic consumers who benefit from the additional security afforded by the increased availability of domestic oil should be prepared to meet their share of the cost of providing incentives for its development. Further, given the small size of the proposed levy, there was no foreseeable need for an exemption provision.

The third technical amendment concerns clause 2. Essentially, it clarifies a definition. It substitutes for the word "purchaser" the words "first uses" Syncrude material. That amendment was found necessary because some of the Syncrude partners will use the oil in their own refineries and, technically speaking, do not purchase it.

The final amendment, Mr. Speaker, submitted by the committee and reported to the House, has to do with the policy review that I referred to a moment ago. This amendment provides that once the Petroleum Compensation Board has designated classes of petroleum to receive import compensation, those particular designations would be permanently referred to the committee of the House which at the time considers oil and gas matters. This is an important change to the bill in that it gives the relevant committee an opportunity to hear explanations of and to discuss such designations.

You will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that I have abbreviated my remarks this afternoon in the hope that we may be able to conclude this debate very shortly. I would like to re-emphasize that the Syncrude project, for which this particular measure is designed, is the largest project of its kind in the world, of which I am aware. It is the largest mining project by far in this country; and Canada is no small mining country. Indeed, we are one of the great mining countries of this world, but the material moved each day at Syncrude is equivalent to all the material moved by all the mines in Canada every day. That gives some idea of the size of the Syncrude project.

The other point that I would like to emphasize is that there are a number of other very significant projects which are available for the benefit of Canadians. The tar sands III that I mentioned, the expansion of GCOS, the Cold Lake project of Imperial Oil, the heavy oil project of Alberta, the Saskatchewan Petro-Canada project—projects which could produce 600,000 barrels a day or more by the mid-1980's. These particular projects will depend upon the decisions to move forward on those projects and the House taking a decision to accord world price, or to give authority to the government to negotiate with these projects so that world price could be made available to them, along with other incentives that will have to be negotiated with the provinces concerned.

That massive Syncrude project, that world first, will be delivering oil to Canadians this summer. We can ill-afford to delay any longer in taking a decision, and I hope that we will be able to conclude promptly and decisively this debate this afternoon.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words about Bill C-19, not only because the tar sands are located in my constituency but also because it could have a significant effect on national energy policy as a whole.

Everyone will agree on what an extremely valuable asset that this country has in its natural resources as far as petroleum products are concerned. It has been valuable in the past and will become even more valuable in the future.

In fact the economic well-being and security of this nation are directly related to the development of energy supplies for this country. This is a matter which is of great concern to me, because the minister, while attempting to sound optimistic, has no justifiable reason to be optimistic because his projections have been that by 1990 we will still be producing only 42 per cent of our country's needs in energy supplies. This illustrates a very basic difference between the governing party which is in power and the policy of the Progressive Conservative party. We are not satisfied with the weak-kneed effort which will leave Canada dependent on foreign supplies in 1990 for 58 per cent of its petroleum needs. Imagine the cost to the country of such foreign sourced oil.

● (1642)

I have said many times in this House and other places that I believe, and my party believes, that Canada should not be satisfied with anything less than complete self-sufficiency in petroleum. That goal is not a pipe dream. It is possible and could be achieved, given proper government policies and a government with the will to do the things that need to be done to achieve it.

I subscribe to the view that every barrel of oil produced in the tar sands plant means that one barrel less will be imported from foreign sources. If we depend on external suppliers to the extent the minister predicts, for about the same expenditure we could build a tar sands plant to produce oil at the same price. This would provide thousands of jobs for Canadians and would bolster our economy. The plant would continue producing in the future, guaranteeing jobs for generations to come. It would be ironic if the national economy were to flounder through lack of expansion of Canadian energy supplies when the solution to the projected energy shortages is near at hand.

We need companies with entrepreneurial skills, and we have them. We need to encourage them, however. We also need a government that understands the situation, and finally, we need far more action in the development of energy than we have seen thus far.

We believe that Canada has the energy potential and the ability to develop it, given the proper business environment. If we review the record of this administration over the past ten years or so we can conclude that the proper business environment does not exist because the government has not had a long term energy policy. It still does not. The government seems to be playing musical chairs with the policies it had. It changed them so often that it was impossible for the industry to make long term plans based on anything this government said on any given day.

One of the most serious drawbacks to development in the tar sands so far has been this rapid shifting of policy at the federal level. The tar sands deposits in my constituency, and which extend into the constituencies of Peace River and Vegreville, as well as Meadow Lake in Saskatchewan, contain an estimated one trillion barrels of bitumin. Without a doubt this is one of Canada's major resources and will be a source of energy, wealth, and employment for decades to come. Through lack of government policy and foresight, however, there is still a question of whether this vast resource can be developed economically to its full potential.

The petroleum industry has experimented and worked with tar sands for many years. Great Canadian Oil Sands, a company located at Fort McMurray, developed the first tar sands mining project in 1967. The company had many difficult years in the initial stages, but today there is the prospect of profitable operations. We must encourage groups with this kind of vision if we are to be self sufficient in energy, which is a desirable goal.

The petroleum industry in general has shown in the past that it does not fear taking risks with its investments, but it must be able to justify those risks to its shareholders. It must see a financial return in keeping with the amount of risk. Stable, long term government policies are required in order to create a proper environment for such risk-taking.

The second major tar sand mining project at Fort McMurray, the Syncrude project to which the minister alluded, is nearly completed now. I am told it is expected to go on stream in June of this year. At the peak of construction the project had a labour force of 8,400 people. It is now just beginning to process the tar sands. I think Syncrude must be congratulated for its performance. By building that plant it made a significant investment for its shareholders, and a great contribution to the country as a whole from the standpoint of ensuring energy supplies. The project is ahead of the construction schedule and is expected to exceed the projected budget of $2 billion by only 2 or 3 per cent. If we compare that with some other projects in this country and the degree of error in the projected costs and scheduling, we see that the Syncrude project has been managed very well. This in itself, in today's environment, when major projects usually greatly exceed budgetary allocations, is a major accomplishment.

When the production of Syncrude is on stream, it will produce more than 100,000 barrels per day of synthetic crude. Canada will be able to reduce its net oil imports by that amount, thereby improving our over-all balance of payments position. The project also keeps at home some 3,000 permanent, direct jobs, which in turn produce many thousands of secondary jobs through the employment multiplier effect.

We know that Syncrude itself is not enough. As I have mentioned before, there is an estimated one trillion barrels of bitumen in place and waiting to be developed in my riding, in northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan. I agree with the minister that a great portion of that cannot be developed with the current technology, economically speaking. At least a portion is economic, however, given the proper business climate.

This party recognizes Bill C-19 as an encouragement to industry. We recognize that it will be absolutely necessary for the industry to be guaranteed the equivalent of the world crude oil price if it is expected to take the major investment risks required to bring the tar sands into production. Congratulations are due to the oil industry which, fortunately for Canada, has been planning ahead diligently without knowing the specifics of the business environment in which its major development investments will be made. It is in this area that the government has failed to gain the confidence of the industry. The government, and particularly the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), are to be severely castigated for their lack of foresight and their inability to make decisions regarding how the proper development of energy supplies should proceed. How can we as a nation achieve our goal of self sufficiency if these major projects do not know the long term business circumstances? How can they be encouraged?

I was rather amused at the minister's statement that these projects were all about to begin, when only two or three days ago he said in this chamber that he has not as yet reached any kind of agreement with the tar sands industry and Shell Oil so that they would know under what conditions their plants are to be constructed, and under what circumstances they might be able to predict their financial returns and their economic picture. That is unknown still today.

● (1652)

The minister runs around trumpeting the onset of the third tar sands project, knowing full well that he is responsible for the inordinate delays which have been happening in the construction of this plant. I am rather surprised he did not take the opportunity to tell us today why he is dragging his feet on this matter. I am sure he must accept the fact that development should be more rapid. I hope the minister will be serious because he has not been so far, particularly from the point of view of his policies not being matched to his words. He says one thing in this chamber about how he wants to see the developments take place, but he certainly does not follow up his statements with any kind of policies or long-term commitments. As a result of that we are in a situation where, by 1990, we will be importing 58 per cent of our total energy needs. That is a rather shameful performance on the part of the minister. He has nothing at all to smile about when he talks about his policies—or lack of them—as far as tar sands development is concerned.

As a result of a lot of foot dragging by the minister, Shell Oil is not starting its construction.

Farther south of Fort McMurray near Cold Lake, Imperial Oil has announced its proposed project, which is the first commercial in situ tar sands recovery project. This project is expected to cost in excess of $4 billion, and is pioneering new technology. The company has been experimenting with this production technology for nearly 14 years. They have said so in their television advertising. I think this television advertising has been important. It has let the public know that in spite of the lack of interest of this particular administration, and under adverse circumstances, the entrepreneurial skills of oil companies have indeed continued, with the ever-optimistic hope that the government would be replaced. Perhaps even some minister of the government could be appointed, if the government is not replaced, who would be more amenable to accepting his responsibility in terms of long-term tar sands development policy.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

I can say that the industry has had no reason for confidence in this particular government's policies. As a result of that, industry is not sure that the kind of development will take place that they want.

Imperial, Shell, and other projects will provide more jobs, as well as an industrial stimulus across Canada. The industrial ripple effect will also be felt in all parts of the country and will give long-term stimulus to the economy as a whole. I am sure we all agree that is badly needed. I recognize that these projects have a long-lead time and their benefits will not be felt until the early 1980's, but this is the type of entrepreneurship we need in this country, which should be encouraged every day. The present government has for too long denied industries in Canada a clear and stable industrial business climate which would encourage industrial development.

Bill C-19 itself has been a long time coming. I was amused that the minister was able to say today with a straight face how anxious he was to get this bill through. I would ask him how long it took that bill in gestation. I would suggest that it was longer than the gestation period of an elephant, which is a long time. Now, all of a sudden, he is in a great rush to get it through. I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that we do not agree it should be put through in a hurry, but I am saying that he should have given the matter a little forethought a long time ago, and the bill would have been passed by now.

As it is, the bill is before the House right now. It has to be considered before passage, and it is now only two or three months before the Syncrude project is going on-stream. This bill should have been in place before that project even began construction. That reflects quite clearly the foot dragging attitudes of this minister and the lack of incentive that his foot dragging has created as far as the other projects are concerned.

We have the opportunity in Canada to become self-reliant in energy and thus self-sufficient. We also have the opportunity to generate national wealth by encouraging the export of surplus energy supplies as they are made available. The petroleum industry has repeatedly shown that it has the drive and initiative to develop Canada's petroleum resources. But to do so it needs a national government with a stable economic policy to stimulate the long-term investment and project planning which is necessary. Everybody accepts that a stable economic policy is necessary for massive projects such as these.

Industry must have confidence that it will be repaid, that its efforts will not be thwarted, either by intergovernmental bickering, which this minister has been engaging in widely, or by changing the rules of the game, which this minister and his predecessors have been doing.

To sum, up industry and potential investors in the petroleum industry need assurance that government policies will be stable and that the incentives to develop and invest in the next generation of energy projects reflect the costs and the risks involved. Such incentives must also offer the opportunity for a good return on the capital invested.

I would like to conclude by saying to the minister that I hope in future—for whatever future he has left in that job or whatever future the government has left, I feel quite confident it is very little—the minister will take his job more seriously and put into place the policies required to create stability in the business climate. I would like to see business be given the ability to make long-term planning projections in some kind of a reasonable way to justify their risks and expenditures so that they can expect reasonable returns for their efforts in the long run, and through that method create greater assurances that this country will produce its required energy supplies in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Don Mazankowki (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to make a few remarks concerning this particular piece of legislation. It is a very important piece of legislation, but perhaps it might be wise to call it five o'clock in view of the fact that private members' hour is almost upon us.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as shown on today's order paper, that is notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I understand that there have been the normal consultations and there might be unanimous consent to proceed at this moment expeditiously with Bill S-10. As a result of the same consultations there is agreement to proceed with notice of motion No. 22 standing in the name of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). If we do that, I would ask that all notices of motions preceding No. 22 be stood by unanimous consent.

Mr. Paproski: That is so agreed.

Mr. Peters: No. What is No. 10?

Mr. Paproski: The Legion bill.

Mr. Peters: Call the bills.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Peters: No, there is not unanimous consent to proceed with Bill S-10 at this time.

• (1702)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed in the normal order. I will ask at this time whether there is unanimous consent to stand motion No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), motion No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), and motion No. 21, and proceed directly to motion No. 22 appearing in the name of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger). Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

OIL

REPAYMENT OF EXPORT TAX TO INDIANS

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to ensure that the question of repayment of the export tax on oil taken from Indian lands be satisfactorily dealt with.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today on a matter I have introduced in this House many times, not in the form of a motion but by way of questions during the question period, questions in the committees of the House of Commons, and by way of the late show which we have from ten o'clock until 10.30 in the evening.

In September, 1973, the federal government saw fit to place an export tax on oil leaving this country for the United States, to make up the difference between our domestic price and the price oil had risen to as far as world price was concerned. It promised at that time that 50 per cent of the tax would be returned to the producing province and 50 per cent would be held in the federal treasury to be used for research and development of ways and means of finding new oil, getting oil out of the tar sands, and heavy oil. At the same time, the government collected the export tax on oil that was produced on Indian lands. Technically or legally, it was believed that Ottawa was not in a position to tax the oil on Indian reserves. That aside, this money was collected.

The government collected this tax from October, 1973, to April, 1974. In committee I was not able to get the exact amount that was collected and whether interest was going to be charged to this account. However, it was speculated that the amount was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $4 million.

Hon. members who have native people within their constituencies realize that when it comes to statistics, comparing the number who are unemployed and the number who are employed, it is very much the number who are employed which is greatest. A large percentage of our native people are unemployed. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is working diligently through its economic division to create industries and jobs for natives on their reserves.

In the case of Alberta, there are approximately ten Indian bands or reserves that have oil on their land and upon which export tax was collected. If the statistic is $4 million, that amount of money could be put to tremendous use on the Indian reserves in my constituency and the constituencies of other Alberta members. I speak of the Hobbema and Enoch who have put the money they have collected from their royalty to great use in providing for trailer factories, a home furnishing factory and drapery factories. Still they find that more than 50 per cent of their people are unemployed. This $4 million could have been put into those economic areas. In my opinion, we have been dragging our feet on this issue for the past four years.

As I understand the minister and the departmental officials, the province of Alberta will first have to decide whether it will get back its 50 per cent. For a number of years, the subject bounced back and forth between the federal government and the provincial government. On February 15, 1977, I suggested that, in order to expedite the situation, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) should take the initiative and call a tripartite meeting between the native people, the provincial Department of Indian Affairs, and the federal Department of Indian Affairs.

The minister acknowledged that it was a very important question and that he would do everything he could to provide me with a satisfactory answer. However, almost a year has passed, and still we have no definite word on what is going to happen to this money. These native people are looking forward to the kind of development they could proceed with if the money were returned to them.

I checked with the department early this year. They informed me this was on the list of priorities for the cabinet in January. I then checked with the province of Alberta. I received an assurance from the province that they were prepared to give back their 50 per cent to the producing bands. As it looks now, it is the federal government that is holding up the return of this money to these people in Alberta.

In this motion I am asking that the House and the government do everything in their power to have the Department of Indian Affairs and Treasury Board act expeditiously on the return of the export tax which in fact is money belonging to those Indian bands. This money has been collected from them and held in the treasury. After four years, it is time that we make the decision and return that money to these people so that they can put it to use.

I urge the government to take immediate steps on this issue in order that this money, and hopefully the interest that has accrued, can be returned to the Indian bands because it is rightfully theirs.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as usual the hon. member raises in a sincere way an interesting and complex problem, for which I would like to thank him. It has given me the opportunity to do some research into a problem with which I have not been completely familiar. It leads me rapidly to the conclusion that this is a complex problem raised by the hon. member. Some detailed background information as to the tax itself and how the tax affects the Indian people is necessary before one can enter into a debate on the subject.

The motion, as presented, appears to deal with all moneys derived from the oil export tax since its inception in 1973, as it now exists and as it is likely to exist for some years to come. On the other hand, the total formal claim on record that has been made on behalf of the Indian bands from Alberta and Saskatchewan deal only with the amount of money collected under the oil export tax during the first six months that it was levied.

In the first case, we are talking about a sum of money which could amount to $100 million, whereas the Indian claim is slightly less than one tenth of that figure. Lest anyone question the $100 million figure, let me point out that no attempt has been made to refine the rough estimate since it is sensitive to the rate of oil export, the price differential between Canadian and foreign oil, the types of oil to which it applies, and the length of time it will remain in effect, together with a number of other imponderables.

I do not want to over-stress the dollar value of the oil export tax levied on oil production from Indian reserves. I merely want to emphasize that it is necessary to be specific about the size and nature of the problem introduced by the hon. member in his motion.

A moment ago I referred to the fact that the claim on record only deals with the first six months. I believe the hon. member has made that reasonably clear. By that I meant that all correspondence received indicates that the Indian people are claiming only that portion of the tax collected during the first six months. Nothing has been presented to indicate that the Indian people feel that they have a claim on the tax collected since that time. In fact, correspondence specifically states that the claim is made on moral grounds and will not set a precedent for possible future claims.

Perhaps the hon. member is suggesting in his motion that there is a basic principle that Indians shall not be taxed and that on this basis all of the tax levied on oil from Indian reserves should be returned to the Indian people. This, of course, would introduce a number of parallel situations with respect to any form of taxation of any product from an Indian reserve.

If this is the direction we are going in this debate, then we will be heading into some rather complex technicalities. I would prefer to think that this is a special case which is based on the handling of a specific tax during a specific period. On the assumption that we are considering only the first six month period, I have not attempted to look into the ramifications of the more general situation. The hon. member seems to agree that we are talking specifically and purely about the six month situation.

• (1712)

This is a complex problem. In order to place things in their proper perspective, I intend to discuss the oil export tax, past, present and future; the Indian involvement; the amount of money involved; the legal and moral implications of the claim; the chronological order of involvement of the Indians and the federal government; the provincial involvement, the Indian Association involvement, and interrelated developments.

First, by way of an introduction, let us look briefly at the tax itself, and then see how the Indians themselves are involved. I would like to present the general picture before examining the question in detail. During 1973 the price of oil rose rapidly, with an increase of 25 cents a barrel in May and a further increase of 40 cents in August. The price of oil thus rose to about $3.85 a barrel. In September the Middle East oil producing countries imposed a partial export embargo, and followed this by a series of price increases affecting the international price of oil. At that time the government placed a price freeze on oil in Canada and effective October 1, 1973, initiated an oil export tax. This was intended to prevent companies exporting oil from Canada from reaping windfall profits. During the first six months, the tax rose from 40 cents to $6.40 for each barrel of oil exported.

To understand how the Indian people became involved, it is necessary to be aware that both oil and natural gas are being produced from a number of reserves in Alberta and Saskatchewan. All revenues derived, including bonuses from the sale of exploration rights, rentals from mineral and surface rights, and royalties from production, go to the band for which the particular reserve was set aside. Somebody will ask: how much production and how much revenue? We take pride in the fact that revenues during the current fiscal year from development of oil and gas will amount to about $80 million, most of which comes from royalties from oil and natural gas production.

I realize this will immediately raise the question of why we should be considering a claim for return of oil export tax revenues to bands which are already "wealthy", if I may use quotation marks. I intend to cover this point at greater length later. For the moment, I would raise the following points: first, not all the bands concerned are wealthy; second, we are discussing a depleting, non-renewable resource; finally, the Canadian taxpayer also reaps benefits in a number of different ways.

It is necessary to examine the oil export tax in some detail to appreciate fully the mathematics involved in the claim as presented by the Indian people. I might say that the mathematical and statistical figures put forward have been checked by our Indian minerals division, oil and gas specialists. These figures were, in turn, checked and verified by the provincial authority in Alberta since that province is also involved in the claim.

Before reading into the record the extent of the claim put forward by each of the various bands, I feel it is necessary for me to describe what is meant by the provincial and federal share of the tax. For the moment it is sufficient to say that, as a result of one or more provincial-federal conferences, it was arranged that half of the revenues received from the oil export tax during the first six months would be returned to the producing provinces in proportion to the oil production of the province. This is popularly known as the provincial share. Of the remaining half, which is known as the federal share, the federal government agreed to invest the tax collected during the first four months in energy-related development in the producing province, again in proportion to production. The federal government later decided that its investment in Syncrude satisfied its commitment to Alberta.

The Indian people questioned why tax on oil produced from Indian reserves was returned to the province. They further questioned whether investment in Syncrude will bring any direct benefit to the Indian people.

We are debating the return to the Indian people of the oil export tax collected from the production of oil from Indian reserves. I suppose one might take the attitude that since the federal government returned half of the revenue to the provinces, rightly or wrongly, it should be responsible to the Indian people for the total amount of the tax. Actually the Indian people have made a simultaneous claim to the province for the return of the provincial share and to the federal government for the return of the federal share. In a sense, this has been outlined by the hon. member.

Now, for the record, let me list the claims by the various reserves concerned. These figures give the calculated dollar value of the export tax on the exported portion of production from October, 1973, through March, 1974, on crude oil production:

The two columns list Indian reserves in Alberta and the tax figures which apply:

Amber River No. 211	$ 7,319.67
Ermineskin No. 138	184.27
Hay Lake No. 209	14,275.46
Pigeon Lake No. 138A	7,190,768.45
Samson No. 137	4,632.04
Sawridge No. 150G	278,170.16
Stony Plain No. 135	1,031,457.91
Sturgeon Lake No. 154	24,593.46
Utikoomak No. 155A	72,635.60
Total	$ 8,624,031.02

These figures relate to crude oil production. In addition, of course, there are condensate sales upon which tax is levied, as follows:

Alexander No. 134	$ 1,340.67
Blood Timber Limit No. 148A	300,819.00
Buck Lake No. 133C	27,535.14
Pigeon Lake No. 138A	160,478.67
Sarcee No. 145	34,620.39
Sawridge No. 150G	2,660.25
Stony No. 142B	60,059.88
Stony No. 142, 143, 144	112,008.15
Total	$ 699,523.15

The Alberta total thus becomes $9,323,554.17. To this must be added the tax on condensate sales in Saskatchewan, White Bear No. 70, $7,279.48, for a grand total, Alberta and Saskatchewan, of $9,330,833.65.

These figures represent the total tax on crude oil and condensate from Indian reserves deemed to have been exported during the first six month period. In order to arrive at the calculated percentage of oil produced from reserves which was deemed to have been exported, it has been assumed that the same percentage of Indian oil would have been exported as calculated for the total amount of oil produced in Alberta which was exported. These export percentages were provided by the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board. The provincial and the federal share would, of course, be half of the totals given.

It will be noted that the total deemed to have been derived from oil exported from Saskatchewan reserves is very small in comparison to Alberta totals. This will explain why Alberta is used almost exclusively as a base for discussion. Early in the processing of the claim it was decided that any submission to the Province of Saskatchewan for the return of its provincial share should wait until the federal and Alberta claims were settled. The band concerned has been kept advised.

● (1722)

Now let us examine the tax in a little more detail. I have already pointed out that the expressed intent of the tax was to prevent oil exporting companies from reaping windfall profits by purchasing Canadian oil at the frozen price and exporting it at the international price.

The level of the oil export tax is established on a monthly basis by the National Energy Board and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. It is necessary to change the level every time there is a price change in either the Canadian—domestic—or the international price.

Unfortunately, there is no clear-cut international price, since the price of foreign oil depends on many factors. For the purposes of the oil export tax, the average delivered price of foreign oil at Chicago is used for the international price. This seems reasonable since virtually all of the oil exported from Canada is purchased by our neighbour to the south. As previously pointed out, during the first six months a single price was used for all classes or grades of oil. Under present conditions, different prices are determined for a number of different classes.

Natural gasoline and condensates are defined as oil for the purpose of the oil export tax. This explains why some of our natural gas producing Indian reserves such as the Blood and Stony reserves are included as having a claim for an oil export tax rebate. If we were to read our Indian oil and gas regulations, we would note that "condensate" is defined as a part of the natural gas and is so classified for royalty purposes. Incidentally, the same is true for the province of Alberta. The fact that "condensate" would be classified as oil for the oil export tax purposes did not become clear until the Oil Export Tax Act was promulgated. This is the reason that condensate producing bands were not included in some of the earlier discussions respecting the possible rebate of the tax.

Confusion often arises from the reference to a particular oil price. One has to be very specific as to the grade of the oil and the location to which the price is quoted. For example, press releases would indicate that a single price for a particular grade of oil exists at any one time.

[Mr. Daudlin.]

The July, 1977, Alberta Petroleum Marketing Comission price bulletin states that prices are based on a price of $11.18 per barrel for marketable petroleum having a quality of 42 degrees or higher API gravity and containing less than 0.5 per cent sulphur by weight at the Edmonton terminal of the Interprovincial Pipeline Company. On this basis, Indian oil from the Pigeon Lake reserve, D-3 pool, was valued at $11.085 per barrel, while the Stony Plain Indian Reserve D-3 production was valued at $10.94. Both of these carried a tax of $5.60 per barrel. At the present time oil from both reserves is worth $1.01 per barrel more. This may sound complicated in that the most recent pricing agreement indicated that the price of oil would be allowed to rise by $1 per barrel as of January 1, 1978.

To return to the tax itself, it was first imposed under the provisions of the Excise Tax Act and became effective October 1, 1973. During October and November the tax was set at 40 cents per barrel. It was raised to $1.90 in December, $2.20 in January, 1974, and finally to $6.40 per barrel for the months of February and March, 1974.

It is interesting to note that at that stage the flat rate applied to all crude oils and condensates, regardless of gravity. Although easy to calculate, this had undesirable effects in that it overpriced the heavy crude oils on the export market.

The oil export tax was formalized under the Oil Export Tax Act which was assented to on January 14, 1974. The Oil Export Tax Act was later replaced by the Petroleum Administration Act which became effective April 1, 1974. The latter act remains effective to this date. Over the years the tax itself has become more complex, with different tax rates applying to diffirent classes of oil.

If we assume that our claim applies only to the first six months, we will then not be overly interested in the fact that there are presently eight different classes of oil, each with its own tax level. I mention this only in support of my earlier contention that it would be difficult to place a monetary value on the long-term application of the oil export tax. At present, oil produced from Indian reserves comes under several different classifications.

Tables are availablee showing the oil export tax levels that have been established from time to time since the tax was established. I do not propose to attempt to produce such a table at this particular time. However, I will comment that there have been about 45 changes to the tax for light and medium grade crude oils since the end of the first six-month period. During that time the tax on that particular class or grade has varied from a low of $3.20 to a high of $5.60 per barrel.

If anyone is tempted to do a few mental calculations, let me caution that the level of oil export over the period has varied considerably. Further, it must be remembered that my government has had the policy of gradually reducing the amount of oil that is permitted to be exported.

Hon. members may recall that, when the tax was initiated, there was considerable opposition by the oil producing provinces, particularly those with appreciable oil exports. The oil producing provinces contended that the price of Canadian oil—sometimes referred as domestic oil—had been frozen at an unrealistically low level.

This, of course, meant that the provinces received lower revenues for their provincial royalty share. It also meant that oil and gas exploration was less attractive to the industry than would have been the case if the price had been allowed to seek the level of the international oil price. This in turn meant that the provinces received less revenues in bonuses from the sale of oil and gas rights. At that time several provinces considered the possibility of forming marketing boards, with the idea of exporting in the name of the provincial Crown to avoid payment of the tax or, conversely, to sell as much oil as possible on the export market at the international price.

After several federal-provincial conferences it was agreed that the federal government would return to the producing provinces, in direct proportion to production, half of the tax revenues collected during the first six months. Part of the agreement relating to the disposition of the tax moneys collected during the first six month period was an undertaking by the federal government to invest the money collected during the first four months in energy-related projects within the provinces concerned.

Later the federal government decided that the commitments to the Syncrude development at Fort McMurray satisfied its commitments respecting investments in Alberta.

Part of the agreement also included the fact that domestic, or Canadian, prices would be increased in accordance with a given formula or as re-negotiated between Canada and the provinces from time to time. The tax revenues collected during the last two months of the first period and all future tax revenues were dedicated to the equalization of the cost of the oil to the consumer in eastern provinces where most of the oil used is imported at international prices.

It must be realized that largely as a result of increased Indian royalty rates initiated in 1974 as well as increased oil and gas prices, the current revenues to Indian people are in the order of ten to 15 times those received in 1973. Nevertheless, the Indian people and their advisers at that time were very much aware of the effects of the price freeze and the oil export tax on their revenues, resulting not only from production royalties but also from the sale of exploration rights.

Questions were immediately raised by the Indian bands, particularly the oil-producing bands. The natural gas producing bands were not yet aware of the condensate situation. However, concern was expressed as to the possibility of a parallel gas export tax as well as lower revenues, since gas prices were also being kept lower than would have been the case if the oil price had been set at a higher level.

I have been talking about the concern of the Indian bands. Perhaps it is time to give a few details as to how many bands benefit from their oil and gas resources.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired. If he wishes to continue, he will need unanimous consent.

Mr. Paproski: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to this debate. The hon. member has suggested that the oil export tax, as implemented in 1973 to avoid windfall profits for oil companies, be turned over to Indian bands as a result of settlements on treaty obligations. I think we must realize that as it operates today the export charge is used to compensate for the very expensive oil coming in from the Middle East, Saudi Arabia, Venezuela and other offshore points, and to bring the price down to a Canadian administered price, which is some $3 below the world price. There is not in fact a kitty or a build up of revenues for the government.

According to reports to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, the revenues derived from the export charge and the excise tax of ten cents, which was implemented, I believe, in 1974, roughly balance the oil compensation program which has been so beneficial to eastern Canada right from Cornwall, Ottawa and the Ottawa Valley to Quebec and all the maritime provinces. Literally hundreds of millions of dollars have been paid in compensation to have that offshore oil reduced from the world price down to the Canadian domestic administered price.

• (1732)

The price of oil shot up rapidly in the fall of 1973 and 1974 as a result of the OPEC cartel. However, it firmed down and we were able to maintain the price. At that time half of the revenues which the federal government imposed and received were returned to the provinces. Thus, the obvious question would be whether the hon. member is referring to returning all the funds to Indian bands in the west where the oil is produced, or just the federal portion of it.

Most people do not fully realize the value of oil export tax funds for energy purposes. The fund is being utilized by Alberta and all of Canada for research into various projects. The agreement was approximately $100 million. It is a very significant amount of money which is being utilized for research and development. Surely there is a great deal to be done in that regard.

If we refer to enhanced recovery from the producing fields, a great deal of research and development must be carried out in that regard in order to increase the fairly small amount of oil which can be extracted in western Canada. The Syncrude project is a full scale research and production project. Even though it is a production model research facility, it will make a very significant contribution to Canadian energy supplies, approximately 125,000 barrels of oil a day. The federal government, as well as the governments of Alberta and Ontario, ought to be congratulated for the $600 million of equity which they have invested in that. Even though it is a production scale research project, it will pay off handsomely to the government. The information given before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works by officials of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources indicated that some 77 per cent of the gross revenues from the Syncrude project over its lifetime will accrue to the governments of Canada. We are not talking about a provincial oil field, nor a technique regarding the production of oil which has been completely proven.

The Sunoco project at the great Canadian oil sands produces 45,000 or 50,000 barrels a day. It is my understanding that that type of project would not meet all the environmental requirements of a new plant. The Syncrude project will come on stream this spring and will make a significant contribution to our oil supplies. Our governments have invested 30 per cent of the equity. Alberta has the right to increase the equity in the plant to 50 to 55 per cent. At the same time, 70 per cent of the revenues from the Syncrude plant will flow back to the governments. Three levels of government—two provincial and one federal—are investing together in a massive full-scale production and research facility. This facility will provide excellent returns. Hopefully Alberta will use successfully the $100 million of export revenue tax provided by the federal government. As well the government of Alberta has received funds from the export tax being pumped into exploration and research in heavy oil. Research must take place. I am not sure whether research in renewable energy will occur; but the problems relating to heavy oils, the tar sands, the environment and the disposal of waste must be looked into.

A great deal of funding has been provided by the federal government to the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan. That funding can be employed very well in the field of heavy oils, tar sands research, as well as to enhance the recovery from the conventional oil field areas. Without getting into the aspects of transportation systems and renewable energies, there is great scope. The Alberta government is mainly interested in the petro-chemical aspects.

The export charge has been utilized to bring the price of offshore oil coming into Canada down to the Canadian domestic price. When Bill C-19 went before committee, at the time of the Syncrude project, it was explained that they would receive world price for the production of oil. Syncrude is a Canadian project which utilizes Canadian resources. It makes sense to provide the world price, if that project is to be brought on stream this year and to produce 125,000 barrels of high grade crude a day to displace the 125,000 barrels of oil a day which is being imported from Venezuela and the Middle East. We have the advantage of an insignificant outflow of capital from Canada in order to pay for the offshore oil which is coming into Canada. Bill C-19 will provide for that. Initially the estimated cost was ten cents a barrel on all oil sold in Canada. Thus, it is a very small amount at the gas pumps.

If an incentive can be provided for the Syncrude project, perhaps similar incentives could be provided to other tar sand projects in order for them to come on stream in the west. It seems to me this is one ace in the hole which Canadians have: the tar sands and the heavy oils. The exploration that is taking place in the artic and offshore is significant, but so far has only found gas.

● (1742)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Patterson) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, I was listening this afternoon to a debate dealing with the Syncrude project. It seems to me this is just a continuation of that debate, interrupted at 5 o'clock to discuss this motion:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of taking steps to ensure that the question of repayment of the export tax on oil taken from Indian lands be satisfactorily dealt with.

I do not think we have heard any statement from the hon. member regarding this particular motion.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it very clear we were talking about the export charge and that these funds amounting to something like $100 million have been utilized by the federal government for energy research and development in Alberta.

That is a very good example of the kind of thing I could have gone into in considerable detail, but in considering this motion we obviously must realize that the export charge which was levied by the federal government is not just sitting in some bank account. It is being utilized, first of all in research projects such as those in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and more recently the export charge has in fact been used to compensate in respect of oil imported from offshore, reducing it to an administered price in Canada that is significantly below the world price of crude. I did not want to go into too many examples, but rather just sufficient to clarify the point for the hon. member in order that he would appreciate that this is not a separate fund which exists, but are funds that have been utilized to reduce the price of energy in eastern Canada and at the same time conduct the energy research in the province of Alberta which I know is so important to that province and to Canada as a whole. It is extremely important to the Canadian economy and the Canadian energy supply.

I hope I have not taken too much of the hon. member's time, but I thought it worthwhile to explain this in some detail so he would appreciate it.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter we are dealing with this afternoon has certainly been the subject of discussion in the past, not only through questions asked in this House, as the proposer said this afternoon, but as well with the present and previous ministers who have had responsibility for the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

During the remaining minutes this afternoon I might take the opportunity to review some of the aspects of this matter from the point of view of the native people affected by the issue raised. To begin with, I should point out that oil and gas resources underlying nearly all Indian reserves in the four western provinces have been set aside for the individual bands for which the reserves were set aside. There are a few exemptions, but not many.

From time to time most of the reserves in Alberta have received revenues from their oil and gas rights in one form or another. Likewise, quite a number of the British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Manitoba reserves situated in the sedimentary basin have received revenues. In Ontario a number of reserves have received substantial revenues, notwithstanding the complications arising out of the land agreement of 1924.

At present in Alberta there are some 18 bands receiving revenues from production, and 15 other bands that have active oil and gas leases. In Saskatchewan they have two producing bands and a number of other bands with active leases. In Manitoba and British Columbia there are a number of leases, but to date to the best of my knowledge there is no active production.

A few weeks ago at a sale of Indian oil and gas permits and leases, Indian bands in Alberta received over $8 million in bonuses and rents. As I said earlier, the Indian people are very much involved in the oil and gas industry and, in fact, in a number of aspects of that industry.

Immediately after the oil export tax was initiated the Indian people began to ask a number of key questions. They were questions such as these. Should oil produced, both lessee and lessor shares, from under Indian reserves be exempt from the tax under the provisions of the Indian Act? If either or both of the shares should be exempt, would it be possible to have the oil exported to share in the higher price of exported oil? Could Her Majesty—that is the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development—form a marketing board to export either the royalty share of oil taken in kind or both the lessee and lessor shares, thereby avoiding the tax and obtaining higher prices? Could the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development obtain a rebate for the producing bands on an appropriate share of production which might be deemed to have been exported? What could be done to get higher prices for domestic oil? These are all questions that have been brought forward by members in this House, and directly to the department.

In the normal course of events, once oil is placed in a pipeline and it leaves the reserve boundary it loses its identify. In most cases it is impossible to say whether a specific barrel of oil goes to a Canadian consumer or finds its way into the export market. Even if there were some way of identifying the oil that was produced on the reserves and put into the system, we would be left with the problem of why the oil from one reserve should all go to the export market while oil from another reserve should go entirely to the domestic market.

I think it is pretty generally agreed that if Her Majesty, as represented by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, attempted to export the oil then Her Majesty, as represented by the Minister of Finance, would try to find a way of making the oil subject to the tax. A somewhat similar situation existed when the Department of Finance made royalties payable to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources subject to a tax ruling related to corporate income tax.

Incidentally, as a result of a submission made by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on behalf of the Indian people, the lessees of Indian mineral rights were allowed to deduct from income before tax the total royalties paid to Indians. In the case of the provinces and other federal agencies there is a specified maximum limit to the royalty that may be deducted. This has allowed the Indian people to charge higher rates of royalties.

The Indian people supported the provincial point of view that frozen domestic prices for oil were unrealistically low. As in the case of producing provinces, this reduced the revenues to the producing bands. This line of reasoning seemed to have been accepted by the federal government and the consuming provinces when it was agreed that half of the tax revenues collected during the first six months should be returned to the producing provinces.

It seems to have been further confirmed that the tax rebate was based on production and not on the amount of export. If one agrees that the general result of the price freeze and the tax was a loss to the producing province, then the rebate should be based on production. If, on the other hand, it is based on a philosophy related to export of oil, then the rebate should be based on the amount of export rather than on production. Since we have assumed the same percentage of export from all the Indian reserves except the Saskatchewan reserve, it would not matter whether we used production or export figures.

● (1752)

Unfortunately, neither the Indian people nor officials of my department were involved in the federal-provincial negotiations leading to the splitting of tax revenues or the setting of future oil prices. Prior to the promulgation of the Oil Export Tax Act, representatives of some of the producing bands had attended meetings in Ottawa with officials of my department and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. Letters were written at that time to request that the Indian interest should be considered. Realistically, one should not be surprised that the Indian point of view might not have been properly considered. Although the Indian oil production is important to them, it represents only about 3 per cent of the production for the province of Alberta.

The Indian people and my deparmental officers were involved in a number of meetings respecting the oil export tax. There were two more significant meetings. On January 8, 1974 a large delegation met with the assistant deputy minister of Indian and Eskimo affairs in Ottawa. In addition to departmental staff and legal advisers, others attending the meeting included a band lawyer, an independent consultant, advisers of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and advisers of the Department of Justice.

Oil Tax

On September 8 and 9 the Hobbema Four Bands convened a meeting of all producing bands at Hobbema. A committee was formed and it was decided that all producing bands should be canvassed with a view to making a united claim and co-ordinating their points of view. A proposed band council resolution was drafted for circulation. This resolution requested return of the tax collected during the first six month period. It further requested that the rebate totals previously presented to the minister in this discussion should be used. The other major point related to the fact that the bands requested that the money be placed in their capital accounts, and agreed that all money would be used for the betterment of the band community.

I am advised that all except one band signed the resolution. The one remaining band was late in meeting the deadline set by the committee and as a result made a separate submission through their own lawyer. The figures for this band, the Stoney Indian Band, are included in the totals presented here today.

During the latter part of 1973 and 1974 there were a large number of meetings involving Indian oil and gas matters. At that time, we were discussing with Indian people the establishment of a new royalty rate, new Indian oil and gas regulations and the need for an act of parliament to permit changes to royalty rates applying to existing leases. These discussions gave rise to changes to the land and gas royalty scales and to passage of the Indian Oil and Gas Act. Discussions at the various meetings invariably included the oil export tax situation.

I briefly mentioned that the Indians of Alberta, largely through the work of the Hobbema Four Bands and the Enoch Band, presented a claim to the Alberta government for a return of the "provincial share". A formal meeting was held in Edmonton in the legislative building on February 12, 1975. The figures presented to the Alberta government at that meeting are the same as quoted by me earlier today. Representing Alberta were Mr. Dickie, the minister of mines and minerals, and Mr. Adair, minister without portfolio.

The Alberta government at that time indicated in writing that they were sympathetic to the claim and that they would follow the federal lead. Informal conversations since that time would indicate that the province would probably still be agreeable to returning the money if, indeed, the federal government returned its share.

As I mentioned earlier, no representation has been made to the Saskatchewan government as a result of the small size of the claim. The band council of the only band concerned has been consulted, and the chief has attended some of the meetings wherein the tax was discussed. If rebates are received from the federal government and Alberta, we would then bring the matter to the attention of Saskatchewan, and treat the matter there the same as in the resolution for Alberta.

The Indian Association of Alberta under Mr. Cardinal, the president of the association at that time, and the producing bands did not see eye to eye in the claim, and this probably resulted in a lack of mutual support. The association president felt that half of the tax rebate should be dedicated to producing bands and half to a general economic development fund to be used for all Alberta bands. The producing bands argued that since oil and gas are depleting, non-renewable resources, the bands should make the best use of them while available. After all, other bands do not share their assets.

Mr. Joe Dion, the current president of the Indian Association of Alberta, has given his total and unqualified support for return of the tax money directly to the bands concerned. He and his legal advisers are actively working for the early settlement of the problem on the federal and provincial levels. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it was only days after the appointment of the present minister and the present parliamentary secretary that Mr. Dion came to Ottawa to meet with us and to talk about a number of concerns, the first and foremost of which was this whole question.

The present Indian affairs minister, as well as his three immediate predecessors, have all given moral support to the claim. They have all taken the view that there is no legal claim to the tax as it exists today. On the other hand, they have seen some justification for a moral claim on the basis that the tax moneys should not have been returned to the provinces. In view of the large number of reserves involved, it would be difficult to attempt to invest the federal share in energy related projects in each of the reserves to the amount of the claim by each band. The only practical solution would be to return the money.

This, finally, leaves me to deal with the contention of some people that the Indians already receive favourable tax concessions and that the tax rebate is inequitable in that it would be made to "wealthy" bands. To these people I would offer the following comments. First, we are dealing here with non-renewable resources and some of the bands concerned will have their oil and gas pools depleted in the near future. Second, when bands receive large revenues from any source, the department exercises considerable discretion in responding to requests for grants, loans, etc. Third, bands use their capital moneys, such as bonuses and royalties, for capital development on the reserve—the cost of which otherwise would be paid out of general public funds. Fourth, bands use revenue moneys such as rents for general purposes that also offset funds normally received from public funds. Fifth, when bands decide to distribute some of the capital moneys on a per capita basis, the welfare authorities apply rigid "means test" principles in welfare applications. Finally, the provinces and Canadians as a whole benefit from the infrastructure and spin-off effects of oil and gas developments on reserves.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being six o'clock, the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the Chair until eight o'clock, at which time, if I may remind hon. members, there will be consideration of the ways and means motion by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance) moved:

That this House approves the budgetary policy of the government.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my budget tonight is to take positive and responsible action to deal with the problems which face the Canadian economy in a very troubled world. These problems are complex and difficult. We are being held back by serious unemployment and inflation, and we must do all we can to deal with them. But we also face longer-term problems and opportunities calling for structural adjustment in many industries, sectors and policies. These were the challenges brought out very clearly by the recent Conference of First Ministers.

In the past days and weeks I have sought the advice of many individual Canadians. I have spoken to all provincial finance ministers. I have benefitted from vigorous public discussion of our economy. My cabinet colleagues and I have considered briefs from groups large and small, national and regional.

Many of the suggestions made to me for this budget would be popular politically but unwise economically. I will not follow such suggestions. I believe this is time for Canada to face our problems critically and realistically. If we do, we can turn the tide against inflation and unemployment. The measures of this budget should secure and reinforce the progress we have already made.

It is now clear that many of our current difficulties have their roots in the period of extraordinary growth Canada experienced between the mid-1960s and the mid-1970s. With the great advantage of hindsight, we can see that we did not always use our good fortune wisely.

Our economy boomed. The world environment was good to us. Canadians enjoyed a very large increase in their standard of living.

But we all came to expect too much of the economy. Governments increased their spending too quickly. The money supply was increased too fast.

Too much was asked and given at the wage bargaining table. Other forms of income also rose too rapidly. Too little attention was paid to the long-run efficiency of the Canadian economy, and its ability to compete.

And so Canadians were not well prepared to deal with the shocks of the early 1970s. Sharp increases in the price of oil, food and other major world commodities speeded up our inflationary spiral.

World recession arrived and compounded our loss of competitiveness. A large deficit opened up in our balance of payments. Our growth slowed down. The loss of sales meant the loss of jobs.

At the same time, we experienced more conflict and confrontation in Canada. Conflict between the provinces and Ottawa. Conflict between separatist and federalist forces. Conflict between employers and employees. All of these things breed uncertainty and weaken the economy.

[English]

The Signs of Progress

By the fall of 1975 it was clear that strong economic action had to be taken. The anti-inflation program launched at that time has made a major contribution in turning our situation around.

The expenditures of all levels of government in Canada have since been brought under better control. In our own case we have cut back the growth in our total outlays from 26 per cent in 1974-75 to 18 per cent in 1975-76 to 10 per cent or less since then.

The Bank of Canada has brought down the rate of increase of the money supply in line with its announced targets for continued growth and declining inflation.

Wage increases have returned to more realistic levels. New settlements came down from 17 per cent in 1975 to 10 per cent in 1976 and under 8 per cent in 1977. They are now down to the guideline of 6 per cent.

The underlying rate of inflation has also been reduced. We can see this in the trend of non-food prices which has been improving steadily. Another indication is the fact that the average price of all the goods and services which Canada produces rose only by 6.5 per cent last year, compared with 9.5 per cent in 1976 and 11.2 per cent in 1975.

• (2012)

The controls program has played a key role in these developments. Controls over prices and incomes cannot succeed unless they are supported by the right setting of fiscal and monetary policy. But the underlying rate of inflation would not have been brought down so quickly without the controls. Without their help, we would have had less growth and more unemployment.

Given the erosion that our competitive position suffered over several years, it was inevitable that an adjustment of the exchange rate would be required sooner or later. That adjustment has taken place in several stages. The government has permitted it to occur by allowing the exchange value of the Canadian dollar to move in response to changes in the balance of supply and demand in the foreign exchange market. That continues to be our policy.

It also continues to be our policy to intervene directly in the market to moderate short-term fluctuations in the rate of exchange. This intervention dampens the more erratic short-term movements. It also provides resistance to appreciable movements of the rate in either direction. The intervention does not prevent the exchange rate from moving in response to the market situation. It moderates the speed of change.

Such intervention gives rise to changes in Canada's official reserves. In the event of a sustained declining trend in the exchange rate, such as we have been experiencing, the drain on the official reserves can be considerable. In such circumstances it is prudent for the government to replenish the foreign exchange component of reserves by borrowing foreign currency. As hon. members know, we have been following just such a policy.

Changes in the official reserves arising from exchange market interventions reflect the over-all balance in Canada's international payments. When, as at present, we have a deficit in the current account of our balance of international payments, changes in official reserves can be regarded as adjusting the net inflows of capital that finance the current account deficit.

In recent months the net inflow of capital to Canada, particularly that arising from the usual foreign borrowing of Canadian provinces, municipalities and corporations, has been low in relation to the size of the deficit on current transactions in goods and services. For seasonal reasons, this deficit is normally much larger in the first several months of the year than in the other months. In these circumstances the Government of Canada has used exchange reserves to supplement the inflow of capital. The Bank of Canada has raised the bank rate on two recent occasions to encourage Canadian borrowers to raise funds abroad. In summary, it is our policy to undertake such foreign borrowings as are required to replenish our reserves and to provide assurance that the government is in a position to supplement the net inflow of capital to Canada.

With our costs now under better control and a lower exchange rate, we have become more competitive internationally. This has helped us to turn around our trade balance from a deficit of $500 million in 1975 to a surplus of almost $3 billion in 1977.

In other ways, our progress has been no less important, but perhaps harder to measure. Expectations have changed. Hopefully they are more realistic. Some of the divisions in our society have been narrowed or closed.

We have also seen a remarkable improvement in relations between labour and management. In 1976 we lost 11.6 million man-days in strikes. Last year that number fell 70 per cent to only 3.4 million man-days. More important, labour and business are talking to each other about their common problems.

There is also a more effective dialogue among governments and between governments and business, labour and other groups in our society. It is not a matter of choice whether we pursue this dialogue. We must achieve more agreement on economic issues and find more ways to co-operate, or we cannot get the best out of our economy.

[Translation]

The Challenge of Structural Reform

The federal government discussed co-operation and structural change in the paper entitled Agenda for Co-operation. The first minister's conference was a milestone in federal-provincial relations both in terms of the range of policy agreement and the commitment to structural reform. A comprehensive work program is now underway as a result of the meeting. For example, studies are proceeding with the private sector in 22 manufacturing industry categories. A major effort is underway to cut down the burden of government regulation. Measures have been taken to help arrest and reverse the tourist deficit. Food and agricultural policies are under review. We are looking forward to developing the potential created for our fisheries by the 200-mile limit.

For my part, I can encourage useful structural adjustment as minister responsible for tariffs and tax policy.

Commercial Policy and the Tariff

The multilateral trade negotiations now taking place in Geneva have longer-range potential for the productive sectors of our economy. We are participating actively in the talks, and seeking reductions in both tariff and non-tariff barriers to give us better access for our exports, especially highly processed resources and manufactured goods. We will also be prepared to reduce Canadian tariffs, but only in return for concessions of real value. Canada's development in the 1980s will depend very largely on the ability of our industries to grasp significant new export opportunities and compete more effectively against imports at home. As First Ministers have urged, we will be ready to support the private sector adjustments that will be needed for our success in the trading environment of the decade ahead.

The Geneva talks are moving ahead quickly and we hope for a successful conclusion in the coming months. In the meantime I am not submitting any major amendments to the Customs Tariff. However, I am proposing tonight that most of the temporary tariff reductions introduced in 1973 on a broad range of consumer products be extended for another year beyond their scheduled expiry date of June 30. The extension will contribute, as it has in the past, to our efforts to minimize inflation.

I am also proposing to withdraw the British Preferential rate from certain goods imported from Britain and Ireland, including certain diesel engines, radio and television apparatus, truck-mounted cranes, knitted goods and confectionery products.

To assist Canadian producers, increases in the MFN rates are being proposed for certain chemicals and industrial tires and tubes.

I have received a number of inquiries about implementation of the Tariff Boards's proposals for changes in the tariffs on fruits and vegetables. We have notified our trading partners that we intend to renegotiate certain GATT commitments which currently prevent us from increasing existing rates of duty on products covered by the Board's report. The government will try to conclude these negotiations as soon as possible and then introduce legislation to provide for a new schedule of rates for fresh and processed fruits and vegetables.

[English]

The Tax Structure

Our tax system is another instrument which can support innovation and change. I want to proceed immediately with major structural changes in three areas of industrial policy highlighted by First Ministers. They are research and development, transportation and energy.

Research and Development

We must continue to encourage Canada's research and development efforts. An adequate level of R&D is crucial to achieve gains in productivity and to strengthen Canada's position in an increasingly competitive world. At present, corporations are allowed to write off immediately 100 per cent of all R&D capital and operating expenditures. Last year these outlays also became eligible for the federal investment tax credit of from 5 to 10 per cent. In many cases they also qualify for direct assistance under significant federal grant programs.

● (2022)

I now propose that for 10 years starting tonight, taxpayers be allowed to deduct from their income a further 50 per cent of additional R&D expenditures. The deduction will apply to both current and capital expenditures to the extent that they exceed the average amount over the preceding three years. This means that there will now be a special incentive for companies to expand their R&D. I want to emphasize that this special allowance comes on top of the incentives already in place.

The new allowance will make Canada's tax treatment of research and development one of the most generous in the world. The after-tax cost to companies of one dollar's worth of additional expenditure will be reduced to as little as 20 cents. I hope this incentive will lead to significant improvements in R&D performance by the private sector. And I look to companies to ensure that the resulting new technology is used within Canada to create new jobs.

Railway Investments

Discussions at the First Ministers' conference underlined the importance of transportation for industrial and regional development in Canada. Railways continue to be a crucially important mode of transportation, particulary for long hauls and heavy commodities. Recently, the government has announced significant changes in the organization of the CNR to improve the efficiency of its operations. Measures were introduced in the last budget to encourage track and grading investments by railways. Looking to the medium term, major new investments are needed in this sector if efficiency and productivity gains are to be captured.

I am therefore proposing a significant increase in the capital cost allowance for railway investments. This will take the form of an additional depreciation allowance of 6 per cent per year for five years for most capital expenditures of a railway. It will apply to investments undertaken after tonight and before 1983. The measure will help improve the railway system in all regions of Canada and will be of benefit to suppliers of railway equipment.

Energy Development Incentives

We must also continue to place high priority on our national energy policy, and in particular the need to extend self-reliance for oil and gas. We are fortunate in our existing and potential resources, and many tax incentives and other measures have been put in place to encourage their development. But increasing attention is now focussed upon the heavy oil reserves and oil sands deposits of the western provinces which can be tapped only by advanced technology and multi-billion dollar investments. These are projects requiring long lead times for planning, organization, design and construction. It is important to get them moving now, and I have concluded that some modification and clarification of their tax treatment can be helpful in that regard.

First, I want to make clear that the up-grading plants to process the heavy oil produced from wells into a type of oil similar to conventional crude will be treated as a manufacturing facility, eligible for fast write-offs and the reduced tax rate.

Second, it will be important to extract as much oil as technologically possible from all deposits. It has already been established that enhanced recovery systems can greatly increase total production. After today, therefore, special machinery, equipment and other facilities acquired for enhanced recovery systems—specifically, so-called "tertiary" recovery—will be able to earn depletion at a rate of $1 for every $2 of expenditure as compared to the normal earning rate of $1 for $3.

Finally, earned depletion may be applied at present only to reduce taxable resource profits, and only up to a ceiling of 25 per cent. This provision will be significantly improved. Effective immediately, corporations may deduct depletion earned through certain qualifying investment in non-conventional oil projects up to the extent of 50 per cent of total income—both resource and other profits. The qualifying investment will include expenditures on tertiary recovery equipment and certain depreciable property acquired for use in a bituminous sands mining project.

I am confident that these measures, added to the ones already in place, will in future years help reduce our dependence on imported oil, especially in eastern Canada.

I would like also to say a word about the mining industry. The First Minister's conference directed Finance and Resource Ministers to undertake an early review of the taxation of the mineral industry. The government is proceeding with its review and looks forward to further consultation with the provinces in the near future.

Retirement Income

Almost two million Canadians have Registered Retirement Savings Plans, enabling them to set aside funds to provide income after retirement. The wide range of choice allowed in setting up these plans and the generous tax treatment for contributions have made them very popular.

I have some concern, however, over the limited choice available to RRSP holders when the time comes to turn their savings into retirement income. A taxpayer is now required to invest his RRSP proceeds in a life annuity with an insurance company prior to his 71st birthday. The only alternative he has is to withdraw the funds in a lump sum and pay income tax on this amount in the same year.

I propose to introduce two additional alternatives that will increase flexibility while retaining the basic principle that RRSP funds are intended to be used for retirement income.

The first alternative will allow the purchase of a fixed-term annuity to provide benefits to age 90.

The second alternative will allow the taxpayer to have his RRSP savings placed in a new kind of investment vehicle to be known as a Registered Retirement Income Fund. Each year a set fraction of the total assets in the Fund—capital plus accumulated investment earnings—will be withdrawn and taken into income. This fraction will be determined by a formula designed to provide benefits to age 90. Payments would grow over time at a rate reflecting the investment performance of the Fund and thus provide a degree of protection against future inflation. There will be provisions enabling a taxpayer to manage his investments in much the same way as he can now with a self-administered RRSP.

Institutions with the right to issue RRSPs will be permitted to sell fixed term annuities or retirement income funds. At present this includes mainly life insurance and trust companies.

● (2032)

The transfer of an RRSP into any of the retirement income options must occur between age 60 and age 71.

I am confident that the added alternatives will provide the range of choice that taxpayers desire in planning for retirement. They respond to concerns expressed to me by many Canadians.

Family Law Reform

A number of provinces have introduced fundamental changes in the laws relating to the division of certain properties between marriage partners. These changes in law raise a number of important issues which are far from being resolved. Because they affect several provisions of the Income Tax Act, I am monitoring the developments in this area very closely. In the meantime, I am proposing a change in the provisions so that transfers of property between spouses pursuant to provincial family laws will not give rise to taxable capital gains.

The Ways and Means Motion contains several other important changes. First, the current provisions which permit the transfer of farm land and buildings by a farmer to his children without payment of capital gains tax will be extended to incorporated family farms. Second, single employees will now receive the same tax exemption as married employees on the value of free board and lodging provided at logging camps and other remote work locations. Third, I am proposing certain tax changes to further promote the production of good Canadian films.

Problems of the Past Year

The structural changes in the economy which these measures will encourage will help us achieve the growth we need over the next four or five years. I have also had to consider what measures would be helpful in dealing with the immediate problems which confront us.

[Translation]

Although the prices of the things we produce continued to slow down last year, the prices of the things we consume have risen more sharply. There were two major factors—higher prices of imported foods and the decline in the exchange rate. I do not believe the price surge will last. I believe the direct impact of our dollar's decline is now largely behind us. Further, an improving supply situation should help to slow the rise in food prices.

The growth of output was disappointing last year. The rate dropped from about 5 per cent in 1976 to 2.6 per cent in 1977, according to the preliminary estimate. The most unfortunate consequence was the rise in unemployment. Unemployment has reached unacceptable levels despite a substantial increase in the number of Canadians who are working. Employment has increased more than 3 per cent in the past year. Almost 300,000 more Canadians are working today than one year ago. But our labour force has also been growing rapidly, much more rapidly than in other countries. Since 1970, our labour force has increased by about 3½ per cent a year, compared with 2 per cent in the United States and well under 1 per cent in the United Kingdom, France and Japan. In Germany, the labour force has actually dropped over this period.

An important reason for the growth of our labour force has been the growing number of Canadian women who are working. Since 1970 the number of adult women in the labour force has increased from 1.9 million to 2.7 million, a rise of more than 40 per cent. There has also been a surge of young people coming into the labour market. This surge will not last; in many schools, there are now empty desks. But the immediate challenge is to create enough jobs for all our young people. Youth unemployment is one of our most serious problems. It cannot be dealt with only by general economic policies. Our manpower training and direct job creation programs are pointed specifically to this problem.

In 1978-79 a total of $458 million will be spent for the Canada Works, Young Canada Works and other continuing job creation programs. Some of these programs, notably Young Canada Works, Summer Job Corps, Youth Apprenticeship and Job Experience Training are directed exclusively to young people. However, this does not represent our total effort in favour of young people. I must stress that the young also have complete access to our general programs such as Canada Works and the Canada Manpower Training Program where they represent roughly half of the clientele. I estimate our job creation effort for young people under these programs to be over $225 million.

Further, an additional $150 million is being provided for seasonal works projects with a high employment content in high unemployment areas. The new employment credit will directly stimulate private sector employment.

The stimulus will be especially strong for jobs which young people are most likely to fill. We are also making a manpower training investment of the order of $500 million, about half of which is to be spent on youth.

Mr. Speaker, if I may summarize, we are going through a difficult period of adjustment, with some recent factors working against the pace of our recovery. Forecasts for 1978, including my own, have been shaded down. But the recovery is proceeding. Employment is rising. Confidence is improving, although not as quickly as I would like to see. The question now is whether the gradual recovery that has been established should be given an added push from policy. I have decided that it should.

The size of such a push must take into account the forces of expansion that are already in place. Much of the tax action I took last winter has not yet worked through the system. Moreover, the decline in the exchange rate over the past year, by improving the competitiveness of our exports and domestic industry, will have an impact of major dimensions—provided we do not waste it through cost increases. Very large resource projects lie ahead of us. So while further action is desirable, it must be responsible action, and action aimed at the right target.

The Action We Need Now

Any further stimulus should obviously be fast-acting. It should encourage consumer spending, not more spending by government. It should offset some of the temporary factors which are pushing up prices. This is particularly important now, on the eve of the start of decontrol.

A reduction of retail sales taxes fits these requirements best, and has the added advantage of benefitting all those who spend in Canada, even those who do not pay income tax. It will stimulate retail sales and therefore benefit, among others, the many small businessmen in this sector. The idea has been advocated widely by economists, business associations and others. Indeed, I made a proposal to the provinces last fall under which the federal government would compensate them for half of the cost of reducing retail sales taxes by two percentage points. Most provinces were unable to accept the proposal at that time in view of their fiscal positions, and I therefore proceeded with an income tax cut of up to $100 per person for January and February of this year.

Tonight I want to announce that I have made a broader proposal to my provincial colleagues.

I have offered to compensate them for a reduction of two percentage points in their retail sales taxes for a period of six months. In return, I have asked them to bear the cost of either a further one percentage point for the same period, or an extension of the two-point cut for a further three-month period.

● (2042)

[English]

I recognize that the Atlantic Provinces are less able than the other provinces to bear this additional cost. I have therefore offered to compensate them for the full cost of three percentage points for six months.

To focus the tax cut on essential items, the reductions will not apply to amusements, tobacco products and alcoholic beverages for home consumption.

The federal compensation to the provinces will be made in the form of a temporary transfer of $800 million in personal income taxes, with small balancing payments in cash where necessary. Equalization payments will be insulated from the impact of the retail sales tax and the personal income tax changes.

Alberta does not have a sales tax and therefore does not benefit in the same way as the other provinces. However, the fiscal position of Alberta is very strong as a result of its oil and gas revenues and this has permitted significant further cuts in other provincial taxes. The government of Alberta has raised no objection to our proceeding with the proposed arrangement.

Mr. Speaker, this measure can be an outstanding example of federal-provincial fiscal co-ordination and I want to express my deep appreciation of the co-operation I have received from my provincial colleagues. If all provinces accept the federal offer, this will mean a tax cut to the economy of about $1.1 billion. About one-third would be paid for by the stronger provinces, about a third by federal deficit financing, and about a third by a cut in federal expenditures to which I will refer in a moment. The measure will boost real income by holding prices below the level which would otherwise be expected. The impact on the average price level should be about one per cent for the period the cut is in effect. This cut provides a specific incentive to consumers to take advantage of temporarily lower prices. Its impact will be reflected in an early stimulus to retail and wholesale business, a call on output from the production line, and a lowering of tax cost on business.

With this measure now officially committed in the budget tonight, I am glad to report that I finally contacted all provincial ministers of finance this afternoon and that the four Atlantic provinces—which I will come back to later—Ontario and Manitoba all propose to reduce their retail sales tax rates by three percentage points for six months. The provinces of British Columbia and Saskatchewan propose to apply the federal compensation to a two-point reduction for the first six months and to make their own contributions over subsequent periods.

[Translation]

As for the province of Quebec, it is still studying the federal offer. I asked my Quebec colleague to let me know his decision in the next few days and he has agreed to do so.

[English]

Under these cooperative arrangements, provincial governments respectively will take steps to reduce retail sales taxes from 11 per cent to 8 per cent in Newfoundland; from 8 per cent to 5 per cent in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island; from 7 per cent to 4 per cent in Ontario; from 7 per cent to 5 per cent in British Columbia; from 5 per cent to 2 per cent in Manitoba; and from 5 per cent to 3 per cent in Saskatchewan.

Fiscal Position and Outlook

Mr. Speaker, I would like now to table the Notice of Ways and Means Motion, projections of the government's revenues and expenditures, and supplementary information outlining details of the measures proposed tonight. This material also provides background to the tables on the government's accounts and information on the relation between domestic borrowing, foreign borrowing and our financial requirements.

I would also like to ask for the consent of the House to include in Hansard the usual tables on the government's accounts together with the usual notes.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has the right to table documents but needs the consent of the House to include them in Hansard as if they were printed as part of Hansard. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Editor's Note: For notices of ways and means motions and tables referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Chrétien: On the basis of close to final information, financial requirements excluding foreign exchange transactions totalled $8.5 billion in 1977-78. This is $300 million less than I forecast recently, mainly because it now appears likely that our total outlays were $200 million below the budgeted amounts, and I would like to thank the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) for that.

[Translation]

For 1978-79, we have reduced our expenditure ceilings by $350 million below the total announced by the President of the Treasury Board when he tabled the main estimates. This will require very tight control over spending under existing programs and over the introduction of new programs. Taking last year together, our financial requirements will be $550 million lower than they would otherwise have been as a result of these expenditure savings.

Taking into account the measures announced tonight, which will reduce revenues for this year by some $900 million, I now expect 1978-79 financial requirements to total about $9.5 billion if one excludes the $2 billion of accrued interest on Canada Savings Bonds which will be encashed this year. While the total requirement of $11.5 billion is large, I am confident it can be financed without creating undue pressures on markets, particularly in light of our very large cash balances at the present time.

The revenue side of the 1978-79 fiscal outlook is based on a forecast increase in total ouptput in current dollars of about 11 per cent.

I expect about 6 per cent of this increase to consist of price changes, as measured by the price index of total gross national expenditure, and close to 5 per cent of growth in real output. This rate of real growth should bring about some modest decline in unemployment. Whether we in fact obtain as much output growth and as little price increase will be influenced by wage and price behaviour in the decontrol period, as well as by international developments. The increase in the consumer price index is likely to be about 7 per cent because it includes import prices which are directly affected by higher food prices and the decline in the exchange rate.

[English]

Conclusion

In summary, this budget is aimed at creating the proper conditions for a strong and prosperous economy. In conjunction with the provinces, in the short term I have taken steps to increase consumer demand and to lower consumer prices; in the medium term, I have put into place tax changes designed to meet some of the major challenges of the future—in energy, transportation and research and development. In doing these things, my objective has been to strengthen the private sector without government interference.

● (2052)

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that Canada has a potential for economic growth and higher living standards second to none in the world. We have the skills, the natural resources and the proven ability to work together in solving our problems.

To translate promise into reality we must meet certain conditions.

First and foremost, we must keep Canada united.

Second, we must carry through structural reforms in the Canadian economy to make it more efficient and competitive.

Third, we must restore reasonable cost and price stability. The experience of recent years has made it very clear that inflation is the enemy of growth, because it weakens consumer and business confidence and erodes our ability to compete in world markets.

Individual Canadians must accept the need to be reasonable in their wage and salary demands at a time when the issue for more than a million Canadians is not getting a pay increase but getting a job. There will be times when we will have to pay more for some of the things we buy without expecting any offsetting increase in our incomes. It is futile and damaging to try to compensate ourselves for the higher costs of imported goods.

I look to the business community to explore markets aggressively and demonstrate the faith in Canada that is merited by its great material and human resources and its sound institutions.

Governments must pursue with discipline the policies that will encourage as much growth as possible at declining rates of inflation. We shall continue to restrict the growth of our own spending to less than the trend growth of the gross national product. In doing so, we will continue to pursue greater efficiency in government. In setting the wages and salaries of our own employees, we will follow—not lead—the private sector.

If we all play our part, we can advance into the 1980s with rising investment, declining unemployment, an improving balance of payments and strong growth in all parts of this country.

There is only one way to get out of our difficulties and that is for all Canadians to apply themselves diligently to build a better future for our children and our grandchildren. It is through hard work, imagination, determination and discipline that we will succeed.

Tonight, despite the prospect of an early election, I have refused to make iresponsible promises to the people of Canada because I respect the intelligence of those who will be choosing the next government. The theme of the budget which I have brought down tonight is responsibility, and responsibility is what Canadians deserve.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members of the House know, this is the first budget brought in by this Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). The minister has been in office for seven months, and frankly I believe most feel that we were entitled to a better effort tonight than we have just received.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: I sincerely hope that this minister will be a little better at skate boarding than he has been in preparing a budget, or he is going to damage himself very cruelly. Let us face it, this budget tonight is another example of the half measures that this government has been offering to the Canadian public for ten years, half measures which have caused the number of unemployed in this country to rise from 375,000 to over one million today and caused inflation to more than double in the ten years that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has led this country. I say "half measures" because if we add up the total revenue stimulant offered by this minister to trigger the proper reaction in the Canadian economy at the present time, it totals $900 million. That figure is not half of what is needed to trigger our economy into the exciting growth that Canadians frankly deserve from any government that wishes to lead them to the prosperity which can be theirs.

We have said that we believe in one form of tax cut or another designed to trigger consumer confidence and consumer buying again in Canada. At least this government should be willing to give up $2.2 billion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: When I say "$2.2 billion", it is because we can pinpoint enough fact, as well as sloth on the part of this government, to save well over $2 billion for the Canadian public. I do not know how the minister could read those words into the record with a straight face, namely that he has been following a policy of restraint.

I refer hon. members to the budget given by the previous minister of finance, Mr. Macdonald, in this House on March 31, 1977, at which time he indicated that for fiscal 1978 the total spending, as far as his estimate was concerned, would be $41,900 million. Tonight we learned that estimate was $1.1 billion out of whack alone.

Mr. Andras: That is absolutely incorrect, absolutely inaccurate.

• (2102)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) says "incorrect". I would recommend that right now he pull out the March 31 budget of Donald Macdonald where he will see the figure in Table 1.

One of the serious problems of this country today is that this government does not believe the facts. We have a budget tonight full of half measures. Frankly, I believe the government has become an administration full of half measures.

We recall that on October 20 the concept of an employment tax credit was announced. We gave support to that concept in the earnest hope that it might get some Canadians back to work who otherwise would not be gainfully employed. We supported it and gave it one day passage in this House. What has happened since? It now turns out that the government proposes to tax back a good proportion of that tax credit. Not only does it propose to tax it back, the program is not completely operational even to this date, April 10, 1978, after being announced on October 20, 1977.

I could also refer to many other things. Most Canadians are humiliated to see our dollar fall and fall in value. Frankly, that dollar would not have fallen as low as it has today had it not been for the sheer mismanagement and inept handling of the foreign exchange situation in Canada by this Minister of Finance.

In this regard let me refer to two specific things. When it was clearly understood that the bank rate should be raised one point, this government raised it half a point. As a result this had little effect and the government had to raise it an additional half point, without realizing that in the world of international finance an increase of two one half points within three weeks would undermine confidence as opposed to renewing the confidence of international financiers in the Canadian economy.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, the government went into the international market and borrowed $750 million to help prop up the dollar which the government said was floating. That was at a time when the government was told it should raise at least $1.5 billion to $2 billion. Having followed that half measure this government is now faced with the unique situation of having our dollar fall out of bed, and the government still has to go back to the trough for more money. The government has to go back to that trough now when even more of the confidence once held by those international financiers has been lost.

One of the clear examples of a half measure tonight is the government's approach to the provincial sales tax reduction. This is an example of a good idea. It was a good idea when Darcy McKeough first advanced it in Ontario, and the way he set the mechanism in place was good. He did it at a crucial time in respect of unemployment in Ontario.

What has this minister done? First of all, it has apparently taken him seven months to fiddle around trying to get his plan into position and apparently talk from time to time with the provinces, yet tonight we understand he still has not got it operational in the sense that all provinces have agreed to go along with it. We find it is a program that starts tonight and runs for about six months until October, just before the wintery months when unemployment will begin to soar again. What totally inept handling of the situation.

To go further, Mr. Speaker, what will the effect be? Hopefully it is going to stir up some demand. We have advocated that this approach should be taken, but to put this into a six month time frame ending next October or November will telescope orders into the summer period, and in all likelihood these orders will be filled by plants working over-time during summer months. When we need the orders to alleviate the unemployment situation next winter the money will be gone and the program will be over.

Clearly there was another motive behind the minister's timing tonight in respect of that provincial sales tax reduction and the six month limitation. That motive clearly indicates that, as far as this government is concerned, political expediency comes first and economic reality comes second. In short, one million unemployed Canadians are tonight being sacrificed on the altar of political expediency.

[Mr. Stevens.]

Let me touch briefly on some of the things I think should have been included in this budget tonight. First, we must accept the fact that consumers in Canada have lost confidence. They are no longer willing to purchase to the extent we would like in order to trigger a more buoyant economy. We on this side of the House believe it is a must that those consumers are triggered once again to continue buying as in other years, to ensure that our factories are producing once again and that Canadians are put back to work in factories as they should be. What is contained in this budget tonight will not ignite the Canadian consumer. His confidence must be restored.

Let us think of the infrastructure that is needed in this country. Think of what our fishermen need on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in order to ensure that they can fish at least up to their allotments. Think of what the grain growers in the Canadian west need to facilitate the delivery of their product. Think of what we need in certain urban areas—Toronto, for example, which is starved for good urban transportation facilities. These infrastructures must be put in place.

I find it difficult to understand why this government should say it has no loan money available for this type of project, but that it has, through the Export Development Corporation, lots of money available to help build pulp and paper plants in Poland, to help Iran with its forestry industry, to give lines of credit to Cuba and to build, if you can imagine, Mr. Speaker, steel factories in New Jersey to help the United States with its unemployment situation there, even though unemployment is lower there than here at home.

Mr. Gillespie: Jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) in his usual fashion says "jobs for Canadians". Let me suggest to that minister that we should have jobs for Canadians building what Canadians need in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: The third thing this budget should have done tonight was trigger more productivity among Canadian workers in our plants. We will be enunciating a program to do that, and I sincerely hope it will be embraced by the majority of Canadians. Having witnessed the government's performance and realizing the impact of its ever increasing spending, is it any wonder that our dollar now trades at a 16 per cent discount compared to the US dollar? Is it any wonder that it costs us 60 per cent more to buy a Swiss franc than it did in October, 1975 when the government brought in its so called anti-inflation program? Is it any wonder that it costs us now 42 per cent more to buy the German mark and 51 per cent more to buy the Japanese yen, if we compare today's price with what it was when this Prime Minister brought in his anti-inflation program?

• (2112)

We were told we would have restraint with regard to the public service. When this Prime Minister took office the strength of our public service in Canada was 221,000 and he said he would reduce it. On the last recorded entry, Mr. Speaker, with respect to our total federal civil service, we find that there are 580,000 employees in the federal government.

Let me put it another way: just before the Prime Minister took office there was one federal employee for every 30 taxpayers in this country. Today it is one federal employee for every 15 Canadian taxpayers. If we express it yet another way, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that the taxpayers of this country have increased by only about 50 per cent, the total number in the bureaucracy employed by the federal government has gone up by 155 per cent. That is why it is important to reduce the size of the public service by allowing attrition to take hold.

We believe that it is time to stop filling the vacancies that occur in the public service so that the government may get that service down to a more manageable level. That is why the Conservative party has advanced the idea that it is time to have zero base budgeting and sunset laws in Canada to review various programs.

I have said certain critical things about the budget. I would like hon. members to know that we welcome the 150 per cent increase that has been put into this budget in regard to research and development. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, we are disappointed that the minister did not go further. As the minister probably knows, he has merely brought his government back to the point that the Diefenbaker government already had us in in the 1960s with regard to research and development. The Liberal government cancelled that program in 1965.

We are pleased that the budget now allows the family farm to include corporate family farms where capital gains are concerned. It is a good move, and I am pleased that the government have responded to those requirements. I am also pleased that the registered retirement savings plans have been made a little more flexible to deal with the moneys that people have accumulated in anticipating retirement. Those are good measures.

Generally speaking, we must accept that this budget is a patch up job. The government has taken a line from here and a line from there. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the government has even taken a line from Edgar Benson's old budget, and that is going back a few years. In short, this budget tonight is not relevant to the critical economic situation Canada is in today. It has been framed by those whose thinking is rather stale, and who, in fact, have a vested interested in previous mistakes. I do not doubt that within three months this budget will be completely forgotten by all, with the possible exception of those who wrote it.

In considering this budget, let us not forget that it would likely not be before us tonight had it not been at the insistence of Washington. This budget is a necessary preliminary to the filing of a further prospectus in Washington which must reveal the fiscal 1979 figures for this government. In other words, it is not the tragic unemployment situation in Canada that has triggered the budget; it is not our inflation figures, our falling dollar or our lack of real growth. It is simply a budget that has been dictated by Washington to meet the requirements of the Wall Street barons who might be asked to lend further money to this government.

I hope to be given an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to continue with certain further remarks concerning this budget at a later date. At this point, it can be summed up by simply noting that with the size of the deficit put before the House tonight, the government has revealed that, based on its estimates for the deficit for 1978, it is 43 per cent out. In short, the deficit that we have now as revealed tonight for 1978 is 43 per cent higher than we were led to believe on March 31, 1977. Who could afford such miscalculation?

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like at this moment to move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield):

That the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On motion of Mr. Stevens the debate was adjourned.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I should like to move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 9.19 p.m.

Notice of Ways and Means Motion
Income Tax Act

Notice of Ways and Means Motion to Amend the Income Tax Act

That it is expedient to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

Remote work sites

(1) That for the 1978 and subsequent taxation years, an individual be entitled to exclude from income the value of board and lodging received in respect of employment at a remote work site at which he could not reasonably be expected to maintain a self-contained domestic establishment.

Shareholder loans

(2) That a loan made by a corporation after March 31, 1977 to an employee to enable him to purchase from a related corporation fully paid shares of its capital stock, not be included in income.

Interest on policy loans

(3) That for the 1978 and subsequent taxation years, the rules relating to the deductibility of interest on policy loans made after March 31, 1977 apply to all policy loans.

Additional allowance for scientific research

(4) That for taxation years ending after 1977 and before 1988, in computing its income from a business carried on in Canada, a corporation be permitted to deduct an extra allowance equal to 50% of the amount by which its qualified current and capital expenditures on scientific research in Canada exceed the average of such expenditures made by it during a base period and that for the purposes of the allowance

(a) the base period in respect of a year be the three immediately preceding taxation years or such lesser number of years as ended after 1976,

(b) the deduction for the 1978 taxation year be calculated by reference to the number of days in the year after 1977, and

(c) rules be provided to determine the amount of the deduction where the corporation is a member of an associated group and to recapture an appropriate part of the allowance when a research property is disposed of.

Family farm corporations and partnerships

(5) That where, after April 10, 1978, a taxpayer transfers to his child resident in Canada shares of a qualifying farm corporation or an interest in a qualifying farm partnership, substantially all of the assets of which were used in the business of farming in Canada, any capital gain that would otherwise arise be

(a) deferred, in the case of a transfer on death, and

(b) determined on the basis of the lesser of the proceeds actually received and the fair market value, in the case of an inter-vivos transfer.

Transfers of property pursuant to provincial legislation

(6) That for the 1978 and subsequent taxation years, the provisions of section 73 of the Act relating to the transfer of property by a taxpayer to his spouse be extended to apply to transfers of property under provincial legislation relating to marital property.

Agricultural quotas

(7) That the rules in subsection 73(3) of the Act applicable to the inter-vivos transfer of property by a farmer to his child be extended to apply to the transfer after April 10, 1978 of agricultural quotas and other eligible capital property.

Employee loans

(8) That for the 1979 and subsequent taxation years, subsection 80.4(2) of the Act be amended:

(a) to extend the definition of "excluded loan" and "housing loan" to include a loan received by an employee from a person other than his employer, and

(b) to extend the definition of "housing loan" to include a loan made to an employee who has moved from a location outside Canada.

Reduction of capital

(9) That any amount paid by a public corporation after April 10, 1978 as a reduction of paid-up capital in respect of a share of its capital stock be treated as a dividend unless the amount was paid on the redemption or cancellation of the share, on the winding-up of the corporation or in the course of the reorganization of the capital stock of the corporation.

Non-arm's length sale of shares

(10) That the rules in sections 84.1 and 212.1 of the Act be modified to apply to a non-arm's length sale of shares of the capital stock of a corporation after April 10, 1978 to another corporation with which it is connected within the meaning of section 186 of the Act as modified by paragraph (18) of this Motion.

Losses of certain insurers

(11) That, for the purpose of computing the taxable income of a life insurer for its 1978 and subsequent taxation years, its non-capital loss for the 1977 taxation year be determined as the amount, if any, by which its 1977 carry-forward deduction exceeds the aggregate of the amounts referred to in subparagraphs 138(4.2)(a)(i) and (ii) of the Act.

Northwest Territories

(12) That sections 120 and 124 of the Act be amended effective January 1, 1978 to recognize the introduction of an income tax by the Northwest Territories.

Abatement for provincial sales tax reduction

(13) That for the 1978 taxation year the tax otherwise payable by an individual resident in a prescribed province on December 31, 1978 be reduced by $100.

Cumulative deduction account

(14) That in computing the cumulative deduction account of a Canadian-controlled private corporation, no deduction be made in respect of a dividend paid after April 10, 1978 to another corporation (other than a corporation associated with it) with which it is connected within the meaning of section 186 of the Act as modified by paragraph (18) of this Motion.

Cost basis of life insurance policy

(15) That in computing the adjusted cost basis of a life insurance policy after March 31, 1978, the premium paid on the policy exclude any interest paid before 1978 on a policy loan.

Registered retirement savings plan

(16) That after Royal Assent to any measure giving effect to this paragraph,

(a) a registered retirement savings plan shall mature only after the annuitant attains 60 years of age and before the end of the year in which he attains 71 years of age;

(b) benefits under a registered retirement savings plan that matures after April 10, 1978, may be received as

(i) an annuity for life,

(ii) an annuity for a fixed term equal to the number of years remaining before the annuitant attains the age of 90, or

(iii) an annuity under a new plan to be known as a registered retirement income fund out of which payments shall be made to the beneficiary in each year equal to the fraction of the value of the property of the fund at the beginning of the year that one year is of the number of years then remaining before the annuitant attains the age of 90; and

(c) except where the spouse is the beneficiary, benefits pursuant to a registered retirement savings plan shall be required to be commutable at death and the annuitant shall be deemed to have received the value thereof immediately before death.

Penalties

(17) That the penalty provided in subsection 163(2) of the Act for a false statement or omission made by a person after April 10, 1978 be calculated by reference to all unreported income or overstated expenses.

Part IV tax

(18) That subparagraph 186(4)(b)(ii) of the Act be deleted with respect to dividends received after April 10, 1978.

Interest on Part X tax

(19) That for the 1972 and subsequent taxation years, interest on the refundable portion of the Part X tax on non-qualified investments of a deferred profit sharing plan not accrue after the plan disposes of the non-qualified investment.

Insurers branch tax

(20) That for the 1978 and subsequent taxation years,

(a) subsections 219(5) and (6) of the Act be deleted, and

(b) the rules in subsection 219 (4) of the Act be amended to limit the amount by which a non-resident insurer may reduce its Canadian investment fund by paying the 25% tax to the portion of its surplus that exceeds a minimum required level to be prescribed by regulation.

Notice of Ways and Means Motion
Customs Tariff

1. (1) That An Act to amend the Customs Tariff (No. 2), being c. 14 of the Statutes of Canada, 1976-77, be amended, except with respect to tariff items 805-1, 810-1, 825, 8901-1, 9001-1, 9002-1, 32606-1, and 93402-1 listed in subsection 3(1) thereof, by deleting all references in subsections 7(3) and 7(4) thereof to the year 1978 and replacing them with references to the year 1979.

(2) That Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 805-1, 810-1, and 825-1 and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting in Schedule A to the said Act the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to February 20, 1973
					B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
805-1	Canned pork	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
810-1	Canned hams	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
825-1	Canned meats, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.

2. That Schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 2300-1, 7802-1, 7804-1, 14100-1, 18405-1, 40960-1, 42701-1, 42815-1, 44043-1, 44047-1, 44205-1, 44533-1, 44540-1, 56805-1, 61810-1, 68205-1, 85000-1, and 91510-4, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of those items, and by inserting in Schedule A to the said Act the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
2300-1	Preparations of cocoa or chocolate, n.o.p., and confectionery coated with or containing chocolate	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Except that in the case of any such goods that are the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.
7802-1	Gladiolus corms, n.o.p.	15 p.c.	17 1/2 p.c.	25 p.c.	15 p.c.	17 1/2 p.c.	25 p.c.
7804-1	Hydrangeas and other pot-grown plants, n.o.p.; rose stock and other stock for grafting or budding, n.o.p.; bulbs, corms, including gladiolus corms, tubers, rhizomes and dormant roots, n.o.p.; dwarf polyantha rose bushes;
	All the foregoing for use by florists or nurserymen for bona fide forcing purposes or growing on prior to disposal	Free	Free	20 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	Free 17 1/2 p.c.	20 p.c. 25 p.c.
14100-1	Sugar candy and confectionery, n.o.p., including sweetened gums, candied popcorn, candied nuts, flavouring powders, custard powders, jelly powders, sweetmeats, sweetened breads, cakes, pies, puddings and all other confections containing sugar	12 1/2 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.	12 1/2 p.c.	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Except that in the case of any such goods that are the growth, produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.
18405-1	Periodical publications, bound or unbound, printed and issued at regular intervals, not less frequently than four times a year, and bearing dates of issue	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	Free	25 p.c.

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
40917-1	Articles of any material designed to be ejected from aircraft for use as markers in crop spraying or crop dusting operations	Free	Free	Free	15 p.c.	17 1/2 p.c.	35 p.c.
40960-1	Roofs, chutes, ladders, wall sections with or without doors incorporated therein, materials and parts; all of the foregoing for the construction or repair of silos for storing ensilage	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.	10 p.c.	10 p.c.	25 p.c.
42701-1	Articles which otherwise would be classified under tariff item 42700-1, namely: compressor sets, electricity generating sets, fork lift trucks, front-end loaders or tractor shovels, gear reducers, pumps and pump sets, motor operated valves, positive displacement blowers and vacuum pumps, metal working lathes, metal working milling machines, cutting tools for use with metal working machines, articulated folding boom-type cranes designed for mounting on trucks; accessories, attachments and control equipment for use therewith; parts of the foregoing	2 1/2 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	2 1/2 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.
	Except that in the case of any such goods that are the manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.
	Except that in the case of the importation into Canada of any goods enumerated in this item, the Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce may, whenever he considers that it is in the public interest and that the goods are not available from production in Canada, remit the duty specified in this item applicable to the goods, and subsections 17(2), (3), (4), (5) and (8) of the Financial Administration Act apply in the case of a remission granted under this provision.

80033—61½

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
42815-1	Diesel and semi-diesel engines, of a class or kind made in Canada, and parts thereof, n.o.p.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.
	Except that in the case of any such goods that are the manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.
42816-1	Diesel and semi-diesel engines, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and parts thereof, n.o.p.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	30 p.c.
	Aircraft, not including engines, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe:
44043-1	When of types or sizes not made in Canada	Free	Free	27 1/2 p.c.	Free	Free	27 1/2 p.c.
	on and after July 1, 1979	Free	7 1/2 p.c.	27 1/2 p.c.	Free (on and after July 1, 1978)	7 1/2 p.c.	27 1/2 p.c.
	Aircraft engines, when imported for use in the equipment of aircraft:
44047-1	When of types or sizes not made in Canada	Free	Free	27 1/2 p.c.	Free	Free	27 1/2 p.c.
	on and after July 1, 1979	Free	7 1/2 p.c.	27 1/2 p.c.	Free (on and after July 1, 1978)	7 1/2 p.c.	27 1/2 p.c.
44205-1	Materials, including all parts, wholly or in chief part of metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada, when imported for use in the manufacture of goods entitled to entry under tariff items 41100-1, 41105-1, 41110-1, 42723-1, 42726-1, 42729-1, 42732-1, 42733-1, 42741-1, 42805-1, 42815-1, 42816-1, 42817-1, 44037-1, 44040-1, and 44705-1, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	Free	10 p.c.	Free	Free	10 p.c.

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
44503-1	Parts of electric light fixtures and appliances which would otherwise be classified under tariff item 44500-1, but not including electric cords, plugs, sockets, switches, connectors, high intensity discharge ballasts, or assemblies incorporating any of the foregoing	15 p.c.	15 p.c.	30 p.c.	17 1/2 p.c.	20 p.c.	30 p.c.
44533-1	Radio and television apparatus and parts thereof, n.o.p. Except that in the case of colour television receiving sets having an overall diagonal measurement across the picture tube of sixteen inches or more that are the manufacture of any country, colony, protectorate or territory to which the benefits of the British Preferential Tariff have been extended, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies until December 31, 1979. Except that in the case of television apparatus and parts thereof, for use in community antenna television transmission lines, that are the manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
44540-1	Loudspeakers; audio-frequency electric amplifiers; parts thereof, n.o.p. Except that in the case of audio-frequency electric amplifiers and parts thereof, for use in community antenna television transmission lines, that are the manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
56805-1	Knitted garments, knitted fabrics and knitted goods, n.o.p.	20 p.c.	27 1/2 p.c.	55 p.c.	20 p.c. or 25 p.c.	27 1/2 p.c.	55 p.c.
	Except that in the case of any such goods that are the manufacture of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, or Eire, the Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff applies.
61810-1	Tires and tubes, wholly or in part of rubber, for equipment of the agricultural implements and agricultural machinery specified in tariff items 40904-1, 40906-1, 40908-1, 40910-1, 40912-1, 40914-1, 40916-1, 40918-1, 40920-1, 40924-1, 40928-1, 40932-1, 40936-1 and the tractors provided for in tariff items 40938-1 and 40940-1 when such tractors are used for farm purposes only	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
68205-1	Articles and materials for use in the manufacture or repair of the goods specified in tariff item 68200-1	Free	Free	Free	Free Various	Free Various	Free Various
68705-1	Catgut, n.o.p.	Free	Free	Free	15 p.c.	17 1/2 p.c.	25 p.c.
	Materials of all kinds for use in producing or manufacturing the products of heading 93811, when imported exclusively for such use, whether or not otherwise enumerated in Schedule A, subject to such regulations as the Minister may prescribe:
85001-1	Other than the following	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free

Tariff Item	Description	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget B.P. Tariff	M.F.N. Tariff	General Tariff
85002-1	2,4 dichlorophenoxyacetic acid, 2 methyl – 4 chlorophenoxyacetic acid, and their esters and amine salts	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	Free	Free
	91510 – Industrial mixtures, including reaction blends, of fatty acids not containing 90 per cent or more by weight of any one acid; acid oils from refining, n.o.p.; industrial mixtures, including reaction blends, of fatty alcohols not containing 90 per cent or more by weight of any one alcohol:
91510-4	Higher fatty alcohols, unsulphated, for use in the manufacture of the goods enumerated in tariff item 93402-1	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free Free	Free 15 p.c.	25 p.c. 25 p.c.
	93811 – Chemicals for use exclusively as, and preparations compounded exclusively for use as disinfectants, insecticides, fungicides, herbicides, anti-sprouting products, rodenticides, or otherwise in combatting pests of a plant or animal nature; all the foregoing subject to such regulations as the Minister may prescribe:
93811-3	2,4 dichlorophenoxyacetic acid, 2 methyl – 4 chlorophenoxyacetic acid, and their esters and amine salts, when in packages exceeding 3 pounds each gross weight	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	25 p.c.	Free	Free	Free

3. That the Schedule to subsection 3.1(3) of the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff item 52306-1 and the enumeration of goods and the rate of duty set opposite that item, and by inserting in the Schedule to the said subsection the following item, enumeration of goods and rate of duty:

Tariff Item	Description	General Preferential Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget: British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	General Preferential Tariff
52306-1	Industrial shop towels, hemmed but not bleached or dyed except for identification markings, not less than 17 inches nor more than 22 inches in width and not less than 17 inches nor more than 24 inches in length, made from woven fabrics wholly of cotton or of cotton and man-made fibres in yarn counts from 6 to 14, either single-ply or double-ply, and having not less than 20 yarns nor more than 32 yarns per inch in the warp and not less than 20 yarns nor more than 22 yarns per inch in the weft and weighing not less than 4 ounces nor more than 6 ounces per square yard	Free	22 1/2 p.c. 22 1/2 p.c.	22 1/2 p.c. 22 1/2 p.c.	35 p.c. 35 p.c.	Free —

4. That Schedule B to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out item 97056-1 and the enumeration of goods and the rate of drawback of duty set opposite that item, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods, and rates of drawback of duty.

Item	Goods	When Subject to Drawback	Portion of Duty Payable as Drawback
97012-1	Costumes or parts thereof, designed or decorated in a manner reflecting a specific ethno-cultural heritage.	When for the use of bona fide ethno-cultural groups, who are recognized as such pursuant to regulations established by order of the Governor in Council, and who require such costumes for the public manifestation of their ethno-cultural heritage, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	99 p.c.
		Any goods which are sold or otherwise disposed of within twelve months after drawback has been claimed under this item are subject to the duties otherwise prescribed.
97056-1	Materials, including all parts, wholly or in chief part of metal, of a class or kind not made in Canada.	When used in the manufacture of goods entitled to entry under tariff items 41100-1, 41105-1, 41110-1, 42723-1, 42726-1, 42729-1, 42732-1, 42733-1, 42741-1, 42805-1, 42815-1, 42816-1, 42817-1, 44037-1, 44040-1 and 44705-1	99 p.c.

5. That any enactment founded upon subparagraph 1(2) of this motion shall be deemed to have come into force on the 1st day of July 1978, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said paragraph imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

6. That any enactment founded upon subparagraph 1(1) and paragraphs 2, 3 and 4 of this motion shall be deemed to have come into force on the 11th day of April, 1978, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the said paragraphs imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

7. That any enactment founded upon subparagraph 1(2) of this motion shall expire on the 30th day of June, 1979, and all rates of customs duty established by such enactment shall be deemed to be restored on the expiration thereof to the rates that were in effect immediately prior to the 20th day of February, 1973, and such restored rates shall thereupon, subject to the Customs Tariff, apply after the 30th day of June, 1979, as they applied immediately before the 20th day of February, 1973.

8. That where, as a result of an amendment made to Schedule A to the Customs Tariff by an enactment founded upon subparagraph 1(2) of this motion, a rate of duty on any goods is reduced from the rate applicable thereto immediately prior to the 20th day of February, 1973, the Governor in Council, at any time during the period commencing with the coming into force of the enactment and ending on the 30th day of June, 1979, may by order restore the rate applicable in the case of the goods to the rate that was in effect immediately prior to the 20th day of February, 1973, and such restored rate shall thereupon, subject to the Customs Tariff, apply thereafter as it applied immediately before the 20th day of February, 1973.

Table 1
Government of Canada
Summary Statement of Transactions
Public Accounts Presentation

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Budgetary transactions
Revenues	32,640	32,700	36,000
Expenditures(2)	-38,930	-43,000	-46,900
Surplus or deficit (-)	-6,290	-10,300	-10,900
Non-budgetary transactions
Loans, investments and advances(2)	-2,148	-1,250	-1,550
Annuity, insurance and pension accounts	2,368	1,570	2,250
Other transactions	676	1,480	-1,300
Net source or requirement (-)	896	1,800	-600
Financial requirements (Excluding foreign exchange transactions)	-5,394	-8,500	-11,500
Foreign exchange transactions	1,122	1,170(3)
Total financial requirements	-4,272	-7,330

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-points of ranges of estimates.
(2) Total outlays are composed of budgetary expenditures plus loans, investments and advances.
(3) This figure reflects actual transactions to the end of fiscal year 1977-78. No forecast is made of foreign exchange transactions in fiscal year 1978-79.

Table 2
Government of Canada
Fiscal Position
Public Accounts Budgetary Revenues

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Personal income tax	14,620	13,575	14,915
Corporation income tax	5,377	5,775	6,270
Non-resident tax	451	500	540
Customs duties	2,097	2,280	2,660
Sales tax	3,929	4,355	4,905
Other duties and taxes	2,681	2,465	2,325
Total tax revenues	29,155	28,950	31,615
Non-tax revenues	3,485	3,750	4,385
Total budgetary revenues	32,640	32,700	36,000

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-points of ranges of estimates.

Table 3
Government of Canada
Summary, Extended National Accounts Presentation

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Current transactions
A. Revenues	36,599	36,400	40,525
B. Expenditures	-40,458	-45,200	-49,775
Surplus or deficit (-)	-3,859	-8,800	-9,250
Loans and other transactions
A. Loans, investments and advances	-2,030	-1,375	-1,150
B. Cash vs accrual	486	1,325	-1,225
C. Other transactions	9	350	125
Net source or requirement (-)	-1,535	300	-2,250
Total financial requirements (Excl. foreign exchange transactions)	-5,394	-8,500	-11,500
Foreign exchange transactions	1,122	1,170(2)
Total financial requirements	-4,272	-7,330

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-points of ranges of estimates.
(2) This figure reflects actual transactions to the end of fiscal year 1977-78. No forecast is made of foreign exchange transactions in fiscal year 1978-79.

Table 4
Government of Canada
Revenues and Expenditures
National Accounts Basis

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Revenues
Direct taxes, persons	18,535	17,455	19,305
Direct taxes, corporations	5,810	5,685	6,320
Direct taxes, non-residents	522	555	625
Indirect taxes	8,596	9,090	9,820
Other current transfers from persons	9	10	10
Investment income	2,611	3,015	3,780
Capital consumption allowances	516	590	665
Total revenues	36,599	36,400	40,525
Expenditures
Current goods and services	10,139	11,300	12,400
Transfer payments to persons	11,803	13,400	14,650
Subsidies	2,431	2,500	2,400
Capital assistance	312	400	525
Current transfers to non-residents	574	675	775
Interest on the Public Debt	4,672	5,425	6,650
Transfers to provinces	9,048	9,750	10,475
Transfers to local governments	197	350	375
Gross capital formation	1,282	1,400	1,525
Total expenditures	40,458	45,200	49,775
Surplus or deficit (-)	-3,859	-8,800	-9,250

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-points of ranges of estimates.

Table 5
Government of Canada
Revenues, Public Accounts and
National Accounts Reconciliation

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Budgetary revenues –
Public Accounts	32,640	32,700	36,000
Deduct
Post Office revenues and deficit	-1,103	-1,240	-1,310
Deficit of government business enterprises(2)	-144	-175	-130
Excess of accruals over collections
Corporate income tax	496	-30	110
Oil export charge	-64	-40	-20
Add
Government pension and social security receipts(3)	4,676	5,310	5,900
Capital consumption allowance	516	590	665
Miscellaneous adjustments(4)	-418	-715	-690
Total revenues –
National Accounts	36,599	36,400	40,525

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-points of ranges of estimates.
(2) In the Public Accounts, deficits of government business enterprises are a charge to budgetary expenditures whereas in the National Accounts, these deficits are deducted from remitted profits of other government business enterprises.
(3) In the Public Accounts, these government pension and social security receipts and disbursements are treated as non-budgetary transactions whereas in the National Accounts, these transactions are included in government revenue and expenditure.
(4) These miscellaneous adjustments arise as a result of conceptual differences between the two forms of presentation. These items represent, for example, the proceeds from the sales of existing capital assets; budgetary revenue items offset against budgetary expenditures; imputed items; and, an adjustment for the treatment of revenue in the supplementary period.

Table 6
Government of Canada
Expenditures, Public Accounts and
National Accounts Reconciliation

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Budgetary expenditures –
Public Accounts	38,930	43,000	46,900
Deduct
Transfers to funds and agencies(2)	-2,896	-2,885	-3,475
Post Office expenditures	-1,103	-1,240	-1,310
Deficit of government business enterprises(3)	-144	-175	-130
Add
Expenditures of funds and agencies(2)	1,500	1,510	2,065
Government pension and social security disbursements(4)	4,115	5,130	5,450
Capital consumption allowance	516	590	665
Miscellaneous adjustments(5)	-460	-730	-390
Total expenditures –
National Accounts	40,458	45,200	49,775

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-points of ranges of estimates.
(2) In the National Accounts, budgetary appropriations to various funds and agencies are replaced by the expenditure actually made by the funds and agencies.
(3) In the Public Accounts, deficits of government business enterprises are a charge to budgetary expenditures whereas in the National Accounts, these deficits are deducted from remitted profits of other government business enterprises.
(4) In the Public Accounts, these government pension and social security receipts and disbursements are treated as non-budgetary transactions whereas in the National Accounts, these transactions are included in government revenue and expenditure.
(5) As in the case of revenues, the miscellaneous adjustments arise as a result of conceptual differences between the two forms of presentation. These items represent, for example, reserves and write-offs; purchase of existing capital assets; budgetary revenue items offset against budgetary expenditure; expenditures of reserve accounts and revolving funds; imputed items; and, an adjustment for the treatment of expenditures in the supplementary period.

Table 7
Government of Canada
Non-Budgetary, Public Accounts and Extended National Accounts Reconciliation

	1976-77 Actual	1977-78 Estimate(1)	1978-79 Forecast(1)
		($ millions)
Non-budgetary transactions –
Public Accounts	896	1,800	-600
Deduct
Loans and advances to funds and agencies	118	-125	400
Government pension and social security accounts	-2,366	-1,585	-2,190
Excess of accruals over collections
Corporate income tax	-496	30	-110
Oil export charge	64	40	20
Miscellaneous adjustments(2)	249	140	230
Loans and other transactions –
Extended National Accounts	-1,535	300	-2,250

(1) Numbers in these columns should be interpreted as mid-point of ranges of estimates.
(2) As in the case of revenues and expenditures, the miscellaneous adjustments arise as a result of conceptual differences between the two forms of presentation. These items represent, for example, the adjustments for the treatment of revenues and expenditures in the supplementary period; the change in the reserves and revolving funds; and the adjustment required to bring financial requirements of entities included in the national accounts government sector in line with the requirements of these entities which are met through the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Notes to Fiscal Tables

Status of 1977-78 Figures

Although the fiscal year ends on March 31, the books remain open for some time to permit payments made up to April 30 in discharge of debts incurred before March 31, together with receipts in transit at March 31, to be included in the accounts for the fiscal year. Since the books are not yet closed, the 1977-78 figures in the fiscal tables should be regarded as estimates. The government's preliminary financial statement for 1977-78 will be published this summer in The Canada Gazette.

Fiscal year-end levels of cash balances are already known and the preliminary data on debt and foreign exchange transactions should be subject to only minor revisions. Thus, close to final figures for "Total Financial Requirements" and "Financial Requirements (excluding foreign exchange transactions)" may be derived. Budgetary revenues and expenditures, the resulting budgetary deficit, and the figures for non-budgetary transactions are based on actual data for the first 11 months of the fiscal year, estimates for March, and forecasts for the supplementary period.

Differences from Forecast in October Economic and Fiscal Statement

The current estimate of 1977-78 budgetary revenues is $350 million lower than the forecast provided in the October 20, 1977 Economic and Fiscal Statement of the Minister of Finance. The individual revenue category showing the largest difference is personal income tax revenue which is $525 million below the October forecast. Of this reduction, $260 million reflects a transfer to the provincial tax collection account in respect of 1976 assessments. Adjustments in respect of prior years' entries to this account are calculated every January when data from individual tax returns for the taxation year which ended 13 months earlier become available. While reducing budgetary revenues, this transfer does not increase financial requirements as it constitutes a non-budgetary source of funds. The remaining part of the reduction in personal income tax revenues reflects a slightly lower tax base growth than expected earlier and the latest available collections information.

Total outlays, i.e., budgetary expenditures and non-budgetary loans, investments and advances, are now estimated to total $200 million less than the target level of $44,450 million established last March and restated in October. Budgetary expenditures on certain statutory programs, such as public debt charges and payments to provinces under the new Established Programs Financing arrangements, were higher than originally expected but more than offsetting reductions occurred in the loans, investments and advances categories. In addition, it was decided to provide budgetary appropriations to write off loans totalling $444 million to the Canadian Dairy Commission and Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and to forgive loans totalling $232 million to least developed countries under the foreign aid program. These additional increases in budgetary expenditures resulted in no increase in total outlays, as they gave rise to corresponding reductions in net loan requirements.

The decrease in budgetary revenues and the increase in budgetary expenditures resulted in an estimated budgetary deficit which is $1.1 billion higher than the deficit forecast in October. The reduction in loan requirements and the increase in non-budgetary receipts turned out to balance this increase in the budgetary deficit, leaving financial requirements at the same level as in the October forecast.

Foreign Borrowing, Foreign Exchange Transactions and Domestic Borrowing

There was a significant amount of foreign borrowing in 1977-78 for the first time in several years. The following table shows how such borrowing is reflected in the Summary Statement of Transactions (Table 1), and also provides summary information on the domestic borrowing record.

Financial Requirements and Debt Transactions

	1976-77	1977-78
	($ millions)
Financial requirements
(Excl. foreign exchange transactions)	-5,394	-8,500
Foreign exchange transactions
Unmatured debt outstanding – payable in foreign currency (increase (+)/decrease-)	-2	850
Other	1,124	320
Total	1,122	1,170
Total financial requirements	-4,272	-7,330
Unmatured debt transactions (increase (+)/decrease-)
Marketable bonds	2,270	3,443
Treasury bills	1,760	3,040
Canada Savings Bonds	787	1,747
Total	4,817	8,230
Change in cash balance	545	900
Cash balance at end of period	3,597	4,497

Foreign currency borrowing is shown under "Foreign Exchange Transactions". At the time of the borrowing, assuming the funds are not immediately converted into Canadian dollars, there are two offsetting entries: a positive entry under the "Unmatured Debt Outstanding — Payable in Foreign Currency" sub-heading which represents the Canadian dollar value of the foreign currency borrowed, and a negative entry included in "Other Foreign Exchange Transactions" which reflects the 'use' of the funds to add to our foreign exchange reserves. The $850 million positive entry shown for "Unmatured Debt Payable in Foreign Currency" in 1977-78 represents the value, in Canadian dollars, of the $750 million U.S. drawing in 1977-78 under the standby credit facility with the Canadian chartered banks. (The recent borrowing of $750 million U.S. through an issue of marketable securities dated April 1, 1978 will appear in this category in 1978-79.) The $320 million shown for "Other Foreign Exchange Transactions" in 1977-78 is the net result of the source of funds which arose from exchange market intervention and other transactions, and the 'use' of funds corresponding to the replenishment of the reserves from the foreign currency borrowing.

"Total Financial Requirements" represents the total requirements for Canadian funds arising from budgetary and non-budgetary transactions and foreign exchange transactions. These requirements are equal to the increase in unmatured debt less the increase in cash balances.

Direct Borrowing by Government Agencies

Direct market borrowings, of $463 million in 1976-77 and some $350 million in 1977-78, by agent Crown corporations, specifically Petro-Canada, the Export Development Corporation, and Eldorado Nuclear, which have been authorized to borrow under their respective statutes, are not included in Government of Canada financial requirements. In the projection of financial requirements for 1978-79, it is envisaged that such direct borrowings by agent corporations will continue, and that in particular the Export Development Corporation will raise the bulk of its requirements through direct borrowing. In addition, the 1978-79 requirement for loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is reduced due to the anticipated sale of mortgages by CMHC from its existing holdings.

Canada Savings Bond Interest and Financial Requirements in 1978-79

Provision for interest on Canada Savings Bonds, including an allowance for the accumulating liability under the compound interest and bonus interest features of bonds issued prior to 1974, is made each year on an accrual basis and forms part of the "public debt charges" component of total budgetary expenditures. To the extent that interest accruals exceed interest actually paid in a particular year, because some holders of Canada Savings Bonds allow coupons to accumulate uncashed and/or because the compound coupon or the bonus payment do not come due in that year, the government is provided with a source of funds which is included in "Other non-budgetary transactions" in Table 1. The accumulated amounts of "interest accrued" and "interest due and outstanding" are recorded as components of the public debt in the statement of the government's assets and liabilities.

In a year in which the compound interest coupon and/or bonus interest payment on a Canada Savings Bond series come due, cash interest payments will exceed interest accruals on that series; there is then a use of funds under "Other non-budgetary transactions". There is a corresponding reduction in the "interest accrued" and "interest due and outstanding" components of the total public debt.

The SR series of Canada Savings Bonds (issued May, 1968, $120 million estimated outstanding) and the large S24 series (issued November, 1969, $2.5 billion estimated outstanding), mature in 1978. Both series have compound interest provisions and are eligible for bonus interest. It is estimated that in 1978 compound interest coupons and bonus interest totalling $850 million will be paid on these series, together with $1,450 million in regular interest coupons. Only $300 million will correspond to interest accruing on these bonds during fiscal year 1978-79. Thus, unlike recent years in which the excess of interest accruing over interest encashment on these two series provided a substantial source of funds (some $350 million in 1977-78), in 1978-79 the excess of encashment over accruals gives rise to a requirement of some $2 billion. On other series of CSBs, accrued interest continues to exceed cash payments. Overall, the interest accounts switch from giving rise to a source of funds of almost $800 million in 1977-78, to giving rise to an estimated requirement of $1,300 million in 1978-79.

The unusually high level of interest encashment in 1978-79 affects financial requirements but not the budgetary deficit. Nor does it affect the National Accounts deficit (Tables 3 and 4) as interest on the public debt is also treated on an accrual basis in the National Accounts.

Supplementary Information

Research and Development Costs

There has been growing concern in recent months about the adequacy of scientific research and development activity in the Canadian industrial sector, given the importance of R&D as a contributor to long-run economic performance.

At the conclusion of the federal-provincial Conference of First Ministers in February a statement was issued announcing, among other things, that joint steps would be taken to improve the tax incentives or credits to private industry for R&D activities.

Since 1961, the Income Tax Act has allowed a 100 per cent write-off of current and capital R&D expenditures in the year they are made. This fast write-off was supplemented last year by an investment tax credit on current and capital R&D outlays varying by region from 5 to 10 per cent.

As an added stimulus, it is now proposed to introduce for a 10-year period beginning in 1978 a special allowance of 50 per cent of the increase in R&D activity. The allowance, which is deductible in computing income, would apply to the amount by which a company's R&D expenditures in a year exceed the company's average R&D expenditures over the previous three-year period. The effect would be to reduce a company's after-tax cost of each additional dollar spent on R&D to as low as 20 cents.

Because of the incremental nature of the new incentive, its impact on tax revenues will depend upon the extent to which industry responds. However, it is estimated that in the initial years the reduction in federal revenue will be about $50 million a year. Provincial tax revenue would also be reduced in those provinces that have tax collection agreements with Ottawa and those outside the collection agreement who decide to adopt these new provisions.

Energy

Additional tax incentives are being introduced to stimulate the production of energy, in the immediate as well as long term, particularly by new methods that increase the rate of recovery from known oil deposits. Two changes are made in the depletion allowance.

First, the cost of machinery, equipment and other facilities acquired after tonight for use in an enhanced or "tertiary" recovery system will be eligible to earn a depletion allowance of $1 for each $2 of expenditure as compared to the normal depletion allowance earning rate of $1 for $3. An enhanced recovery system is one that uses new technology to recover additional marketable oil from either conventional or heavy oil fields. Depletion is a special allowance, deductible from taxable income, based on the eligible costs of recovering minerals and petroleum.

Second, the amount of the depletion allowance that may be claimed each year will be increased for depletion earned on certain investments in non-conventional oil. At present the maximum deduction for depletion is limited to 25 per cent of resource profits. This limit will be increased, effective this year, for depletion earned on certain eligible expenditures to 50 per cent of total taxable income — that is, resource profits and any other profits of the corporation. For this purpose eligible expenditures will include investments in machinery and equipment forming part of an enhanced recovery project and depreciable property in class 28 that is acquired for a bituminous sands mining project.

For tax purposes, plants established to upgrade heavy oil, other than those established in connection with a bituminous sands mining project, will be treated as manufacturing and processing facilities. This will place them on the same tax footing as oil refineries and other manufacturers. These plants process the heavy, thick types of oil that cannot be sold now in volume, and turn them into a marketable form.

Rail Transportation

Major investments are needed in the railway transportation system to improve efficiency and restrain cost increases. More modern equipment is required in many areas of railway operations including signalling, track and equipment maintenance, motive power and rolling stock.

An additional straight line capital cost allowance of 6 per cent will be provided on all railway system assets (other than certain non-rail automotive assets) acquired after April 10, 1978 and before 1983. This additional allowance will be available in the year of investment and in each of the four subsequent years.

For example, signalling equipment now qualifies for an allowance at a rate of 4 per cent a year on the reducing balance. The special depreciation will permit a further deduction of 6 per cent of the original cost of the equipment in the year in which it is purchased and the following four years.

New investment stimulated by this measure will benefit suppliers of railway equipment, including Canadian producers of rail locomotives and cars, strengthening output and employment in this important manufacturing sector.

Certified Canadian Films

To assist the financing and development of the Canadian film industry, the tax law provides a special write-off for investment in certain Canadian motion picture films or video tapes certified by the Secretary of State. The budget proposes a number of changes to this incentive designed both to improve the quality of Canadian film production and to eliminate abuses.

Under the present capital cost allowance system, the incentive is technically available for a taxation year only if the film or tape is brought into existence by the end of the year. This has tended to rush the completion of the photography, at a sacrifice of quality in many cases. To allow for a more orderly pace of production, a change will be made to permit the deduction to be taken under certain circumstances even though principal photography was not commenced until after the end of the year. This special rule, applicable to the 1978 and subsequent taxation years, will allow the incentive claim provided principal photography of the film is completed within 60 days after the end of the year.

Changes are also necessary to curtail the use of this incentive provision as a device for the undue deferral or avoidance of tax. The principal area of abuse involves a special guarantee arrangement the purpose of which is to increase the amount that an investor may deduct beyond his investment in the film. To curtail abuse, the amount deductible by an investor will be limited to the amount he has at risk. Effective for the 1978 and subsequent taxation years, the amount deductible will be reduced by any revenues or repayments that have been guaranteed.

The Registered Retirement Savings Plan

The Income Tax Act now requires a taxpayer, prior to reaching age 71, to use the funds accumulated in a Registered Retirement Savings Plan (RRSP) to purchase a life annuity from an insurance company. The annuity benefits are then taxable as they are received. The only alternative now available is to withdraw the full amount of the RRSP and become liable to pay income tax on it in the same year.

There have been many complaints that this compels holders to buy a life annuity and denies the holders any control over the investment of funds from RRSPs.

The budget of March 31, 1977 referred to this situation and reported that the government was examining the matter. As a result of that examination, it has been decided to add two alternatives for providing retirement income from RRSP funds:

1. A fixed-term annuity may be purchased to provide benefits to age 90.
2. The savings may be transferred into a new kind of investment vehicle — a Registered Retirement Income Fund (RRIF).

Financial and other institutions that are now eligible to issue RRSPs will be permitted to offer the new options. At present, these are mainly life insurance and trust companies. Under the second, or RRIF, option, a specific fraction of the total assets in the fund — capital plus accumulated earnings — would be withdrawn each year by the holder to provide annual income to age 90. The fraction will be related to the age of the taxpayer in the year and will simply be equal to one divided by the number of years remaining to age 90.

As an example, for a purchaser aged 70 an RRIF would run for 20 years. In the first year, with 20 years remaining, the holder would be required to take into income 1/20th of the total value of the plan at the beginning of the year. After another year 1/19th would be withdrawn, a year later 1/18th, and so on until the final year, when the taxpayer reaches age 90, withdrawal would exhaust the fund. A table at the end of this section shows the results for each $1,000 of investment in a typical RRIF.

The essential purpose of the RRSP, with its exceedingly generous tax treatment, is to provide income in retirement. Since more than 40 per cent of men and more than 50 per cent of women at age 70 would, for example, live longer than to age 85, retirement income must be assured well beyond that age. The new alternatives assure retirement income to age 90 which covers the retirement span of most Canadians.

A taxpayer will be limited to ownership of one RRIF. But he may, if he chooses, allot only a portion of his RRSP accumulations to the establishment of an RRIF and invest the remainder in any number of fixed-term or life annuities.

A taxpayer may base the term of an annuity or RRIF on the age of a spouse, if the spouse is younger, thus securing benefits to age 90 for the spouse. Should a person die before age 90, the benefits under the new options, as well as life annuities with a guaranteed term, could be transferred to the spouse. Otherwise, the value of any remaining benefits must be included in the person's income in the year in which he dies.

The current requirement that an RRSP be matured before attaining age 71 will be modified to require that it be matured during the calendar year in which the holder reaches age 71. This will allow the taxpayer more time to choose the combination of options best suited to his retirement income needs. A new provision will stipulate that a taxpayer may transfer an RRSP into any of the retirement income options, including a life annuity, only after reaching the age of 60.

An RRIF owner will be allowed to manage his own investments through directions to the trust company holding his funds, similar to the existing provision for a self-administered RRSP. There will be a wide variety of qualified investments available, matching those allowed under RRSP investment rules. These include stocks, bonds, bank certificates, savings bonds and mutual funds.

The changes proposed will be effective from the date of Royal Assent. There will, however, be a special provision for taxpayers who reach age 71 between the date of the budget, April 10, 1978, and 60 days following the date on which the enabling legislation receives Royal Assent. If such taxpayers choose to withdraw funds from their RRSPs prior to attaining age 71, they may do so without incurring a tax liability to the extent the amount withdrawn is invested in any of the permissible retirement income options within 120 days of the legislation receiving Royal Assent.

The following table illustrates the characteristics of the RRIF and how it would operate. It shows the annual payments that would be received on a $1,000 investment in an RRIF assuming 5 per cent and 8 per cent rates of interest. Payments under an RRIF grow from year to year at the rate of return on investments in the fund. To the extent that the rates of return reflect price increases, this will tend to protect the real value of the benefits over time. Indeed, if the rates of return exceed the rate of inflation, this will enable the pensioner to improve his real standard of living along with other Canadians.

Payments Under a Registered Retirement Income Fund for Each $1,000 Investment by a Taxpayer at Age 70

Taxpayer's age on Jan. 1	Fraction of plan assets to be paid	5% Interest		8% Interest
		Balance at start of year	Payments during the year	Balance at start of year	Payments during the year
70	1/20	$1,000.00	$50.00	$1,000.00	$50.00
71	1/19	997.50	52.50	1,026.00	54.00
72	1/18	992.25	55.12	1,049.76	58.32
73	1/17	983.98	57.88	1,070.76	62.99
74	1/16	972.40	60.78	1,088.39	68.02
75	1/15	957.21	63.81	1,102.00	73.47
76	1/14	938.07	67.00	1,110.81	79.34
77	1/13	914.62	70.36	1,113.99	85.69
78	1/12	886.47	73.87	1,110.56	92.55
79	1/11	853.23	77.57	1,099.45	99.95
80	1/10	814.45	81.44	1,079.46	107.95
81	1/9	769.65	85.52	1,049.24	116.58
82	1/8	718.34	89.79	1,007.27	125.91
83	1/7	659.98	94.28	951.87	135.98
84	1/6	593.98	99.00	881.16	146.86
85	1/5	519.73	103.95	793.04	158.61
86	1/4	436.57	109.14	685.19	171.30
87	1/3	343.80	114.60	555.00	185.00
88	1/2	240.66	120.33	399.60	199.80
89	1	126.35	126.35	215.79	215.79

Note: It is assumed that the required withdrawals from the Fund are made at the beginning of the year, that simple interest is credited at year end, and that no change occurs in the market value of the investments.

Family Farms

Changes are proposed to broaden the special rules that permit the tax to be deferred on a transfer of farm property by a farmer to his children. This is generally referred to as a tax-free rollover and now applies only to the transfer of farmland and depreciable farm property owned by a farmer. It will be made to apply to an incorporated family farm effective immediately.

The rollover will cover transfers to children of shares in qualifying farm corporations and of interests in qualifying farm partnerships. To qualify, the farm corporation or partnership must be carrying on a farming business in Canada, substantially all of its assets must be used in the business and one or more members of the farmer's family must be actively engaged in running the farm. The rollover will also be extended to cover transfers of agricultural quotas.

Family Law Reform

Several provinces are enacting important basic changes in their laws relating to the division of certain properties between parties to a marriage. In some provinces the new laws for the division of property will apply to all married couples, while in others they will relate to property division only in the case of a marriage breakdown.

Although property law is a field entirely within provincial jurisdiction, these changes affecting marital properties give rise to a problem in the application of federal Income Tax Act provisions relating to capital gains.

Technical changes will be made to the Income Tax Act to facilitate the division of property between spouses without incurring a capital gains tax liability. No tax would arise on the original transfer. On a subsequent sale of the property, each spouse would report an equal share of any capital gain.

An example would be a cottage (other than a principal residence) originally bought by a husband in Ontario for $10,000 and valued at $25,000 at the time of a divorce or legal separation. Under the existing Income Tax Act, the husband would be deemed to have disposed of a one-half interest in the property. The difference between the fair market value of his half-interest ($12,500) and his cost thereof ($5,000) would represent a capital gain of $7,500 and the husband would be liable to tax on half of that amount. Since the taxpayer's wife would not have paid anything for her interest in the property, she would have no cost. This means that on a later sale of the property, she would be required to treat her full share of the proceeds as a capital gain and would be required to bring one-half the proceeds into her income.

The change proposed ensures that a capital gain will not arise on the division of the property. The husband will be deemed to transfer his half-interest in the cottage for $5,000. On any subsequent sale of the property, both the husband and wife would include one-half the gain in income.

Federal Compensation for Provincial Retail Sales Tax Reductions

The federal government has offered to compensate provinces to effect a temporary reduction in their general retail sales tax rates.

This offer to finance the provincial reductions takes the form of full compensation for a reduction of three percentage points for six months in the Atlantic Provinces. In all other provinces except Alberta where no retail sales tax is imposed, the federal government will compensate for the revenue forgone arising out of a two-point reduction for a period of six months, provided that these provinces agree to effect a further cut of one point. However, these provinces will have the option of reducing their sales taxes by three points for six months or by two points for nine months. In either event, the federal government will compensate these provinces to the extent of a two-point reduction for six months.

The federal share of the provincial sales tax reductions will be provided to the provinces in the form of a transfer of personal income tax room and, where necessary, by an additional cash payment. This transfer will be made through a temporary abatement of federal personal income tax which will reduce every taxpayer's federal tax liability by $100 or net federal tax otherwise payable, whichever is less. Provinces accepting the offer will increase their income tax on each individual by exactly the amount of the federal abatement. In this way there will be no change in a taxpayer's total tax liability. Taxpayers will not be burdened by any extra calculation when they file their returns since the necessary adjustments will be made by Revenue Canada. In provinces where the amount of the federal reduction of income taxes is not sufficient to fully compensate the province for the agreed level of sales tax revenue forgone, the federal government will make a supplementary cash payment. Similarly, where the federal transfer results in over-compensation, a recovery will be made from the province.

The federal abatement and provincial income tax increase will not apply to residents of the Yukon and Northwest Territories since, like Alberta, these jurisdictions do not levy a retail sales tax.

The accompanying table shows the forecast values of the provinces' retail sales tax reduction and associated federal-provincial financing arrangements.

Estimated Federal Compensation for Provincial Retail Sales Tax Reductions

Province	Present provincial retail sales tax rates	Reduced provincial retail sales tax rates	Value of sales tax reduction
	(%)	(%)	($ millions)
Newfoundland	11	8	24
Prince Edward Island	8	5	5
Nova Scotia	8	5	28
New Brunswick	8	5	27
Quebec	8	6 or 5*	340
Ontario	7	5 or 4*	433
Manitoba	5	3 or 2*	62
Saskatchewan	5	3 or 2*	53
British Columbia	7	5 or 4*	176
Total			1,147

(*) These provinces have the option of reducing their sales tax rates by 3 points for 6 months or 2 points for 9 months.

Proposed Method of Financing Sales Tax Reductions

Province	Federal share			Provincial share	Total
	Tax abatement	Cash payment	Total
			($ millions)
Newfoundland	15	9	24	–	24
Prince Edward Island	3	2	5	–	5
Nova Scotia	27	1	28	–	28
New Brunswick	22	5	27	–	27
Quebec	222	5	226	113	340
Ontario	346	-57	289	144	433
Manitoba	37	4	41	21	62
Saskatchewan	28	7	35	18	53
British Columbia	102	16	117	59	176
Total	801	-8	793	354	1,147

Note: Totals may not add due to rounding.

Employees at Remote Work Sites

The Income Tax Act specifies that free board and lodging provided to an employee is a benefit subject to tax. However, it allows an exemption for persons working at remote locations far from their homes who have married or equivalent status. Single persons in similar circumstances are deemed to have a taxable benefit. Typical remote work sites are logging camps, construction projects and drilling locations.

It is now proposed to apply the exemption to all workers at remote sites.

Part IV Tax

Another budget measure concerns the special Part IV tax — that is, the tax of 25 per cent on intercorporate dividends. To assist small business financing and joint venture operations, the 1977 budget removed this tax from dividends received on any shareholding that represented an interest of more than 10 per cent in a corporation provided that the investor corporation's cumulative deduction account did not exceed $750,000. A change is proposed to eliminate the Part IV tax on all dividends received by a private corporation from another corporation in which it has an interest in excess of 10 per cent.

The change described above would by itself permit an inappropriate increase in the amount of business income that qualifies for the special low rates of corporate tax. To prevent such an unintended increase, a consequential change is proposed that will prevent the deduction by a payor corporation in determining its cumulative deduction account of dividends paid by it to any other corporation (other than an associated corporation) that owns more than 10 per cent of its shares.

Deferred Profit-Sharing Plans

The Income Tax Act imposes a special refundable tax on the acquisition by a deferred profit-sharing plan of certain non-qualified investments. Interest is charged where the tax is not paid at the time the investment is made. A change will ensure that interest on any such unpaid taxes ceases to accrue on the refundable portion of the tax as of the date the non-qualified property is disposed of.

Employee Loans

Rules were introduced in 1977 to treat as taxable the benefit an employee enjoys on loans that do not require him to pay a reasonable rate of interest. Certain housing loans and loans to enable an employee to purchase shares were exempted from these new rules. However, the exemption for such loans was available only if the loan was made by the employer. A change will ensure that the exemption will apply on loans made by a person other than the employer. This is needed because in some provinces companies are prohibited from making such loans directly and must do so through a financial institution. Another change will exclude any benefit on housing loans made to persons moving from a location outside Canada.

Surplus Stripping

The Income Tax Act contains special provisions designed to prevent surplus stripping — that is, the tax-free distribution of corporate earnings through a series of transactions involving the sale of shares. One of the rules applies on the sale of shares of one corporation to another by shareholders who act in concert to control the purchasing corporation. The rule presents a number of problems from the point of view of administration and compliance. A change is proposed to eliminate the "acting in concert" rule. The existing provisions relating to surplus stripping will be extended to those situations in which, immediately following a non-arm's length sale of shares, the purchasing corporation owns more than a 10 per cent interest in the corporation whose shares it acquired.

Reduction of Capital

To prevent the possibility of an unintended tax deferral on distributions by public corporations, a change is proposed to treat as a dividend a payment made to a shareholder as a reduction of capital except where the capital reduction takes place on the redemption or cancellation of the share, on the reorganization of the capital, or the winding-up of the corporation.

Insurers Branch Tax

A special 25 per cent branch tax applies to non-resident insurance companies carrying on business in Canada. To implement a change announced in the March 31, 1977 budget, the branch tax provisions are amended to limit the amount by which an insurer can reduce its Canadian investment fund — that is, the assets producing income subject to Canadian corporate tax. Thus an insurer will only be able to reduce his Canadian investment fund to the extent his surplus exceeds a level to be prescribed by regulation. This change is designed to bring the tax treatment of non-resident insurers into agreement with that accorded resident insurers.

Life Insurance Company Losses

A change is proposed to deal with losses of certain life insurance companies. The existing provisions in the Income Tax Act deny the carryforward into 1978 of losses and deductions from prior years to the extent that they arose as a result of the deduction of certain reserves in those years. The technical formula by which this is achieved produced a harsh result for certain small insurance companies that have suffered losses. The proposed change provides relief for losses in those cases where the losses and deductions of prior years exceeded a company's reserves.

Insurance Policy Loan Interest

Loan Interest Paid in 1978 and Subsequent Years

Two changes are proposed relating to life insurance policy loans. The first relates to the deductibility of interest. A policy holder who uses the proceeds of a policy loan to earn income can deduct the interest he pays from his income for tax purposes. However, he must have the insurance company verify that such interest has not been added to the cost of the policy. A change is needed to ensure that such verification is made for loans taken before April 1, 1977 as well as after.

Loan Interest Paid Prior to 1978

The Income Tax Act also provides that all interest paid prior to 1978 is included in the cost basis of an insurance policy. Because the records needed to establish amounts paid in previous years frequently do not exist, a change is required to ignore this interest paid before 1978.

Loans to Shareholders

Amendments were made in 1977 to broaden the rules relating to the inclusion in income of certain loans by corporations to shareholders. An exception was provided for loans to an employee of a corporation where the funds were to be used to acquire shares of the corporation. A further technical amendment is to be made to provide a similar exception for loans made after March 31, 1977 to an employee to assist him in acquiring shares of a related corporation.

Northwest Territories

Effective in 1978, the Northwest Territories introduced its own income tax. Consequential changes are introduced in this budget to provide for a corresponding reduction of the federal tax. The changes ensure that the Northwest Territories is treated on the same basis as the provinces, which already impose their own taxes. This does not result in any change in the level of tax paid by individuals or corporations in the Northwest Territories.

Penalties

The Act will be changed to correct a technical deficiency in the wording of Section 163 that leaves some categories of unreported income outside the calculation of the penalty that applies when a taxpayer has made a false statement on his income tax return.

Customs Tariff Reductions

Temporary tariff reductions on a wide range of goods, initially introduced as an anti-inflationary measure in the 1973 budget and scheduled to expire June 30, 1978, are being extended to June 30, 1979. Exceptions to this extension are canned and frozen asparagus and frozen Brussels sprouts for which the Tariff Board has recommended increased protection, glass tableware which a Canadian manufacturer intends producing in increased quantities if the pre-1973 rate is restored, and surface-active agents or synthetic detergents which are now being imported in such increased quantities as to threaten continued expansion of production in Canada. The temporary rate of 10 per cent on certain canned meats will also expire at the end of June; it will be replaced by a 15 per cent rate, which is more in line with the rates on other meat products and the needs of the industry but still substantially lower than the pre-1973 rates.

Importations of the products on which tariff reductions are being continued were valued at about $1.5 billion in 1977. The main trade items are raw sugar, motor vehicle parts, cameras and films, vacuum cleaners, pharmaceuticals, chinaware, bottles and hand tools. It is again proposed to have Order in Council authority to withdraw any reduced rates that adversely affect employment or production.

The temporary duty-free provisions covering aircraft and aircraft engines of types or sizes not made in Canada initially established in 1952 and scheduled to expire on June 30, 1978, are to be continued for another year. Free entry is also being proposed for markers used in the aerial spraying or dusting of crops and for catgut used mainly for stringing sports racquets. An existing free-entry provision for fatty alcohols for synthetic detergents is being extended to cover fatty alcohols used to make all kinds of surface-active agents.

A reduction from 20 per cent to 15 per cent is proposed for certain parts for electric light fixtures to help Canadian manufacturers compete with imports.

A few amendments of a more technical nature are being introduced as a consequence of those outlined above or to broaden the coverage of existing duty-free provisions (e.g., for gladiolus corms, and certain periodical publications).

Customs Tariff Increases

It is proposed to withdraw the benefits of the British Preferential Tariff from certain goods imported into Canada from the United Kingdom and Ireland. These goods include confectionery, cranes for mounting on trucks, certain diesel engines, certain apparatus used in community antenna television transmission lines, and knitted garments. The main reason for this action is to assist Canadian manufacturers who are operating at below capacity or who have lost significant business to imports from the United Kingdom and Ireland. These imports will now be dutiable at Most-Favoured-Nation rates of duty. Since Britain and Ireland ended Canada's preferential access by joining the European Economic Community, Canada no longer has an obligation to extend preferential tariff treatment to British and Irish goods. Many of the remaining margins of preference will disappear as a result of tariff reductions made in the multilateral trade negotiations.

An amendment is being introduced to exclude tires for non-agricultural tractors from duty-free entry. This change is to assist Canadian manufacturers of industrial tractor tires and to correct an anomaly whereby tires used on the tractor portion of some equipment are free of duty while the same tires used on the non-tractor portion are subject to duty.

An amendment is also being proposed to impose a tariff on two basic chemicals used in the manufacture of pesticides. This action will result in substantial investments being made in expanded production of these chemicals and will help ensure a reliable Canadian source of supply. Formulated pesticides used in agricultural and other applications are now free of duty and will continue to be so.

Effective Dates of Budget Measures

Jan. 1, 1978 — Special allowance to permit deduction from taxable income of 50 per cent of the costs of increases in research and development activity.

Jan. 1, 1978 — Rules on tax incentives for Canadian films certified by the Secretary of State modified to allow additional time for completion of photographic work.

Jan. 1, 1978 — Federal income tax rates reduction in the Northwest Territories to facilitate introduction of a territorial income tax with no tax increase for individuals or corporations.

April 10, 1978 — Costs of machinery, equipment and other facilities for enhanced oil recovery systems become eligible to earn depletion allowances of $1 for each $2.

April 10, 1978 — Limit on the deduction of depletion earned on certain expenditures on non-conventional oil projects increased to 50 per cent of total profit.

April 10, 1978 — Tax-free rollover provisions apply to incorporated family farms.

April 10, 1978 — Plants established to upgrade heavy oil deemed to be manufacturing and processing facilities.

April 10, 1978 — Additional capital cost allowance provided on depreciable railway system assets acquired by railways before 1983.

April 11, 1978 — Tariff changes.

July 1, 1978 — Tariff reductions on a wide range of consumer goods, due to expire, renewed for one year. Duty-free entry of aircraft and aircraft engines of types not made in Canada, also due for expiry, continues for another year. Other tariff changes take effect April 11, 1978.

Upon Royal Assent — Changes relating to retirement income options for owners of Registered Retirement Savings Plans. A special provision will allow RRSP owners reaching age 71 after April 10, 1978 to make use of the new options proposed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 11, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

• (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ORDER PAPER—ERROR IN DISPOSITION OF BILL C-45

Mr. Speaker: Before calling motions pursuant to Standing Order 43, may I inform hon. members that yesterday, under Introduction of Bills, Bill C-45, an act to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations, was introduced, given first reading and ordered for second reading at the next sitting of the House. Unfortunately, through inadvertence and through an administrative error on our part, the order for second reading and reference of this bill does not appear under Government Orders on today's order paper.

Therefore, Order No. 45 under Government Bills (Commons) which should have been printed on today's order paper should read as follows:

No. 45

April 10, 1978—Second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration of Bill C-45, an act to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations.—The Minister of Labour.

Accordingly, I have directed that the order paper be corrected by the addition of order No. 45.

May I also point out to hon. members the presence of a film camera in the gallery. This relates to a film which we began last summer when we had under transformation the entire House of Commons in respect of seating and the introduction of broadcast and television facilities. For posterity, we began to record on film all of the operations at that time. I think that film will be a very useful addition to the Archives of Canada.

Upon request of the editors of the film, and after consultation with the House leaders of all parties, I have agreed that the termination of that film ought to be an episode about the chamber as it is now. I have, therefore, agreed that the cameras be put in under limited use for that purpose for today only.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ENTRANCE OF WOMEN AND YOUNG PERSONS INTO WORK FORCE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Because this government continues to use as scapegoats in its failure to deal with unemployment the entrance of women and young people into the work force, and because in particular last night, in introducing his budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) when referring to problems of the last year specifically singled out the entrance of women into the work force since 1970, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald):

That this House once and for all reject the notion that the entrance of women and young people into the work force is a basic cause of unemployment.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGATION BUDGET MEASURES DO NOTHING TO IMPROVE SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under provisions of Standing Order 43. Since last night's budget was introduced, the Canadian dollar has declined in early morning trading, Imperial Oil stocks have increased 50 cents a share, and unemployment has risen to another all-time level with 1.6 million Canadians out of work. For this reason, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the Minister of Finance, who preached responsibility in last night's budget, to practice what he preaches and accept the responsibility for his government creating this mess, and acknowledge that his new budget has already been seen both at home and abroad as a failure in getting us out of this mess.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

[Translation]

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST GOVERNMENT ACT TO PREVENT STRIKES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an extremely urgent and important matter.

Considering that the government has just tabled a piece of legislation which would prevent any postal strike during the electoral campaign so that such a strike would not disturb the basic democratic process; considering that democracy is democracy in name only when citizens are not properly informed; considering that this right to information is particularly important during electoral campaigns and that one seems to be imminent; and considering finally that the three major daily newspapers in Quebec have been paralyzed for six months and are not likely to be in operation during the next electoral campaign, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House inform the owners and unions concerned that it is very much preoccupied by this situation and urge them to show goodwill so as to reach a negotiated agreement as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

GRANTS TO PROFESSOR KONINGSTEIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43 concerning Professor Johannes A. Koningstein, Carleton University, resident at 443 Echo Drive, Ottawa, who took a laser device to Moscow against a specific request of the National Research Council and the security services of Canada that he should not do this. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

In view of the fact that after this incident the National Research Council granted Professor Koningstein $28,000 in 1976-77, $31,000 in 1977-78, already $32,000 for 1978-79, and authorized an additional $31,000 for 1979-80 for a project involving physical-chemical research into the use of utilizing lasers, that the Prime Minister make an immediate statement as to whether it is the policy of the National Research Council to give thousands of dollars in grants as rewards to those who have in the past freely given, against goverment recommendations, highly developed and sophisticated scientific devices to the Soviet Union.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REMARKS OF MINISTER OF INDUSTRY CONCERNING ECONOMIC SITUATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) is now more circumspect in his views and opinions, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That this House endorse the statements made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his speech of July 6, 1976, when he accused the Prime Minister of "undermining the monarchy, degrading parliament and placing Canadian society and the economic system in jeopardy" and request the minister to explain why he now aids the said undermining, degrading and placing of our economic system in jeopardy.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin).

* * *

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF RAIL LINE IN SASKATCHEWAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The Prairie Rail Action Committee set up by the federal government to subvert the Hall commission recommendations wants to close down the rail line between Liberty and Dilke, Saskatchewan. Since abandonment of this part of the Colonsay subdivision is unacceptable and would have a destructive impact on farmers and the communities of Penzance, Holdfast and Dilke, and since the Hall commission said that the line should be maintained and is required for grain service, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House condemns the Prairie Rail Action Committee for recommending closure of the rail line from Liberty through Penzance and Holdfast to Dilke which the Hall commission said should be maintained and placed under a prairie rail authority, and that this House calls upon the Minister of Transport to reject the PRAC recommendation and to bring forward legislation immediately to set up the prairie rail authority so all lines under its purview can be upgraded and turned over to the basic network to prevent the betrayal of these communities and subversion of the Hall commission report.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

POST OFFICE

LEGISLATION TO PREVENT STRIKE DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion regarding a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

As a bill was tabled yesterday prohibiting any postal strike during the coming election campaign and as the date for the election has not yet been announced, and that this legislation will hinder the negotiations between the Treasury Board and the postal employees, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House direct the government to delay the passage of this bill so that all members of this House as well as all those concerned can discuss the matter in a more relaxed and open climate.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS TO CREATE JOBS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance will know that thanks to his direction of the economy, for the second month in a row there are now more than one million Canadians out of work in Canada. He also knows, because it is the statement of his own officials, that in order to make any significant change in this respect we must have a real growth rate at a minimum of at least 5 per cent. The minister admitted last night that we are not going to reach that level under the budget he is proposing.

Will the minister tell us whether he intends to introduce any new measures to create jobs in Canada, or is it the plan of the Government of Canada to simply sit back and smile while more than one million Canadians are out of work?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, again the hon. Leader of the Opposition has forgotten to mention that on a year-to-year basis the Canadian economy has created 330,000 new jobs in one year.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: You are bankrupt of ideas.

Mr. Chrétien: That is 100,000 more than the average over the last ten years.

An hon. Member: Change the broken record.

Mr. Chrétien: On top of that, the participation rates increased this month and we have now reached the very high level, compared to the previous year, of 62.4—

Mr. Stevens: It is still not as high as the Americans.

Mr. Chrétien: I think the Canadian economy is creating a lot of jobs for Canadians who come into the labour force. Yesterday the budget was aimed at solving part of this problem. I wanted to be responsible, and I am not trying to create false expectations. We have said that the stimulus we provided yesterday in collaboration with the provinces will make the g.n.p. growth in 1978 close to 5 per cent. I maintain that position. If everything works well, we could reach 5 per cent.

• (1417)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister of Finance seems unable to get through his head is that responsibility in government involves helping to create jobs for the more than one million Canadians who are out of work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The budget he introduced last night absolutely ignores and abandons those one million Canadians. One of the measures the government brought in last night on which the minister has pinned his hopes is a reduction in the provincial sales tax, which reduction, at the government's own direction, will endure for about six months: in other words, the program ends when unemployment becomes most acute.

Will the Minister of Finance explain to the House, to the million Canadians who are out of work now, and to the many more who will be out of work when this stimulus ends in October or November, why this six-month limit was imposed on the provinces and on the unemployed of Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the very simple reason is that a stimulus of that nature aimed at a period of time will induce Canadians to go and buy now.

Mr. Hees: What will they do then?

Mr. Chrétien: It is a technique used in other jurisdictions in the past which producd good results. I have discussed that procedure with my provincial colleagues and they have agreed to come along. I think it is a novel thing. It is the first time we have managed to put forward measures in conjunction with the provinces. The hon. Leader of the Opposition should read the comments of the minister in charge of the treasury in Ontario, who said it was a very good measure and who supported it all the way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, what the minister, in his incompetence, does not seem to recognize—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —is the very fact—Mr. Speaker, I will let them attempt to shout me down. My question can wait until members on the other side stop shouting. The Prime Minister is trying to quiet down you fellows. Thank you very much.

An hon. Member: He is not.

Mr. Clark: The precise difficulty with this limitation is that if people go out and buy at all, they will go out and buy now, and spending plans which might have created a demand in October, November or December when unemployment will be high will be bunched into the immediate period. You are creating problems for the fall because the government wants to have an election document now, rather than an economic document for the country.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Clark: I come back to the Minister of Finance and ask this question: Why did he choose to limit this to six months instead of bringing in at least a year long some more permanent stimulus to the economy? Why is he sacrificing the interests of the unemployed for the electoral interests of the Liberal party?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a novel measure which was agreed to by the ministers of finance of all the provinces except one, and I am awaiting that answer. The political stripes are all over the place and they are not the same as mine. The hon. member should know it is designed to stimulate the economy right now. If we stimulate the economy in a short time, utilization of the capacity in the Canadian industrial sector will be increased. That will induce industrialists to make plans right away to expand that capacity. I think the hon. member should know that.

It is aimed at stimulating the economy in a short period of time. I think it is very novel. It was experienced before in Ontario. When that was done some years ago in Ontario, when its sales tax was cut for a period of time experience proved that it stimulated the economy in Ontario; and with the push they received from the same stimulus, they kept moving after that, using the push they received at the time of the cut.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, the minister well knows the Ontario government introduced its measure in the winter and not in the summer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The minister is saying that this is a novel approach. Certainly it is a novel approach for the Government of Canada to introduce a measure which will probably make unemployment worse. I am asking the Minister of Finance to tell the House of Commons why he gave us this half measure; why he gave us a six-month measure instead of a measure which could really address the problem of unemployment in the country. Why did he place this limitation on the effectiveness of this stimulus?

● (1422)

Mr. Chrétien: I gave one reason earlier: I wanted to give the economy a push right away. There was another reason we did not go further than that.

Some hon. Members: An election.

Mr. Chrétien: No. It was because we could not afford to go further.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE TOWARD HIGH LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the unemployment rate is now running at 8.6 per cent, a figure which was predicted by the Conference Board as likely to be the rate at the end of this year—and we are not even half way there—and given the fact that the measures announced by the minister would reduce unemployment by only .3 per cent, is it the position of the government that one million Canadians should be doomed to unemployment for the rest of this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have chosen this incentive so that our economy could improve immediately. This measure has helped the economy out of stagnation and we hope that once the economy is better it will enable us to reduce the rate of unemployment during the coming year. I hope we can achieve a growth rate of 5 per cent this year. This is why I have added another incentive yesterday; it should help us achieve the objectives we set last fall.

[English]

MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): My supplementary is to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Given the fact that unemployment in Canada has risen substantially over the past month and that we are now experiencing the pressures of long-term unemployment—43 per cent of those without work have been unemployed for three months or more—and that the number of jobless is likely to be further increased through the closing of universities for the summer, I ask the minister whether he is prepared to tell the House what new measures or directions he is contemplating in terms of job creation to alleviate this critical situation. Or does he subscribe to the view of his colleague, the Minister of Finance, that we are to have a million unemployed to the end of the year? Is that his view, because if it is, it is time this tired government went.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): From that diatribe I would think all the politics is on the other side and that all the responsible positions are being taken on this side of the House. The hon. member should recognize, if he has made any study of the statistics at all, that there is normally a peak in March. One notable aspect—it is almost always ignored by the opposition—is that there were 103,000 more people working in the period than there were in the month before. So there is an improvement in the labour market. The labour force participation rate is 62.4 per cent higher than it has ever been in the history of this country; higher, indeed, than in most countries of the world.

We do face a challenge, but we have programs in place at the present time. We did not make them this winter; we made them earlier, last fall, so that we could put 300,000 students to work this summer through our student manpower offices. That is just one illustration.

● (1427)

REDUCTION IN SALES TAX—EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. However, I would like to say at the outset that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is quite right in saying that the government is responsible. It is responsible for creating this hideous mess. It is responsible, all right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Would the Minister of Finance acknowledge publicly, here, what an official in private session admitted yesterday, that this part-time tax cut budget he has brought in will, at the very most, create 40,000 new jobs in Canada, in the context of our learning today that in one month only unemployment increased by 35,000?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot subscribe to that figure. I say that with a 5 per cent growth in the g.n.p. in 1978, the unemployment rate will decrease. But we have to keep in mind that giving a precise figure is very difficult because we are subject to a very big increase in the participation rate in Canada. In the last ten years, the labour force in Canada has increased by an average of 3.5 per cent, per year, compared with 2 per cent in the United States and less than 1 per cent in Great Britain and France. In fact, in Germany there are now fewer people in the work force than there were ten years ago.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say, in all seriousness, that I would like the minister to answer. He gave that answer to the Leader of the Opposition and now he is repeating it to me. Is the minister saying that the real reason we have an unemployment problem in Canada is that people want to work? That is what participation in the labour force is all about. If the minister is saying that, does he not realize that it is perfectly absurd and that it is the government's task to create jobs for people who want to work? Does the minister not agree that it is the responsibility of the government to make sure that people who want to work can find work? The answer the minister is giving is no answer.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I said and I repeat that when compared with any other economy in the world at the present time, the Canadian economy creates more jobes. During the last year, our economy has created 330,000 new jobs, which is probably a success second to none since it represents 100,000 new jobs more than the average for the last five years. Some people underestimate that performance. Obviously there are too many unemployed in this country and one of the reasons for that situation is that more people want to work. I will agree about the fact that our economy cannot at the present time produce jobs in sufficient numbers to satisfy all those who want to work. This is obvious. However, hon. members would be well advised to face reality, that is to acknowledge the fact that 330,000 new jobs have been created in the past 12 months. I for one think that Canadians should be proud of such a performance.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not realize that other countries do not have to create the same number of new jobs if their labour forces are not increasing? Does he not realize that it is absolutely stupid, economically, to suggest that those other countries should be creating more jobs than they need? The failure of the government has been in not creating the jobs Canadians need. According to his own figures, private investment in 1978 is going to drop from what it was in 1977. And it is investment that creates jobs.

If that is the case and the minister has already said it is the case, could he explain why the government is cutting back on its own public sector investment in the coming year by more than $200 million? Would the minister explain why it makes more sense for the government to pay people $4 billion in unemployment insurance handouts than it does to use that money to create jobs so that people can work?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member always uses epithets which apply to him pretty well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The debate with which we are presently involved has to do with the health of the Canadian economy. We recognize that there are too many unemployed in this land; there is no doubt that. We are doing the best we can.

An hon. Member: You are not.

Mr. Chrétien: At the same time, we have to recognize that this economy performed pretty well in creating 330,000 jobs in the last year. If we want the economy to regain a strong position, we must ensure that Canada is competitive in world markets. If we overburden the public sector now, we will lose our competitive position, we will lose our markets, and whenever we lose markets we lose jobs. We must look at the present situation realistically. I think the people appreciate those who can face these problems and not lose their cool, as the hon. member does.

● (1432)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC ON REDUCTION OF SALES TAX

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance.

Yesterday morning on my way to Ottawa I heard a comment on radio to the effect that in his budget the Minister of Finance was going to propose reduced tax points on the provincial sales tax. Therefore I would like to ask him the following question: Is he prepared to say to the House whether he had discussions with the Quebec minister of finance and with those of the other provinces and, if so, how long did those talks last? Is he also in a position to tell us whether Quebec, through its minister of finance, will soon give an affirmative answer to that effect?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I spoke to the Quebec minister of finance several weeks ago on the phone about my plans and afterwards I met him in Montreal where we spent several hours discussing the matter. Again, I contacted him last week and yesterday and he assured me that he would probably give me an answer today or in the next few days.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

As the minister seems quite convinced that this measure will considerably improve the Canadian economy, can he tell the House whether he expects his forecasts to come true and whether he will be willing after those six months to continue to apply the same policy and make sure the economy really grows strong in Canada?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, to my mind it would be unwise to speculate about the steps the government might take under other circumstances.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on another supplementary.

I should like to ask the Minister of Finance to kindly answer a very serious question. For two hours last night we met representatives of the officials of the Department of Finance. To my astonishment, at one point I learned that those officials had met the press before meeting the elected representatives of the people. I found that rather bold because, after all, the elected representatives of the people are really the ones who are responsible to the people. I have nothing against the press, but as we were kept waiting for an hour, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he would be willing, next time, to set up a meeting so that it is held at least at the same time with the press and with the members of parliament.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there is a problem in that regard. Yesterday we endeavoured to give explanations to both the press and hon. members of the opposition, as tradition would have it. However, if the hon. member has suggestions to make on how to improve that system, I shall certainly be happy to consider them.

* * *

[English]

NATIONAL SECURITY

DISTRIBUTION OF SECRET DOCUMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General: it concerns the so-called Top Secret document which received such wide circulation. I ask him first, what is the basis upon which this document was sent to the Deputy Minister of Supply and Services, what interest would he have in this matter to the Assistant Deputy Minister of Finance, to the Assistant Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration, or to the representative of that department?

I should like to know something of the basis upon which 58 copies of this highly secret document were distributed to these officials, aside from government members of the security committee of the cabinet. It is something that has not been answered yet. I know that the minister is full of information now, in view of the fact that two weeks ago he said he would have no difficulty in getting an answer to that question.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, I was not here on Friday when that question was put pretty well in the same terms by the right hon. gentleman.

However, I have read the reply that was given by the Deputy Prime Minister; I am satisfied with it and have nothing to add.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly the attitude of this government, to give no information and to be satisfied with the fact that none has been given. I ask the minister, again, to tell me the basis upon which distribution of these copies was made. If he cannot answer that question—and the security of the government would depend entirely on this answer—can he say how many of the 58 copies that floated all over Canada have been searched for, ferreted out and found and are now in the possession of the Solicitor General or the appropriate minister of the government?

Mr. Blais: The question is of the same nature as those asked of me some time ago by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot. I have nothing to add and no further comment to make.

Mr. Peters: Nothing is nothing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is nothing more indefensible than ignorance and refusal to answer. The minister realizes that if he does answer, the truth will be out.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT FURTHER DECLINE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. With the dollar this morning touching a new low over the last 45 years, the government having lost $1.5 billion in U.S. reserves, borrowed $750 million in the U.S. market, borrowed another some $700 million from Canadian chartered banks, raised the bank rate one clear percentage point, and having brought in the budget last night, would the minister indicate if the government plans any new steps to prevent a further fall in the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The policy of the government was announced yesterday in the budget speech.

Mr. Stevens: Would the Minister of Finance indicate if discussions are now under way with underwriters with a view to placing a further issue on the U.S. market; and does he anticipate that a new registration will be made with the SEC shortly, or has it already been made?

Mr. Chrétien: Whenever we decide to borrow, we make the announcement in the normal fashion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stevens: Having read the minister's remarks in the budget speech last night and having heard his answers today, I ask him to indicate, if the usual market forces—to which he likes to refer—take the dollar down to 85 cents, will he care and will that be all right with him?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, the question is hypothetical.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stevens: Hypothetical?

Mr. Chrétien: You said "if".

* * *

SMALL BUSINESSES

INQUIRY WHY INCENTIVES NOT INCLUDED IN BUDGET

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Business. In view of the fact that everyone agrees that small business is the backbone of a free market economy as well as the largest potential employment sector in Canada, can the minister tell us why he was unable to persuade the Minister of Finance to include much needed incentive oriented programs for the small business community in his budget last night?

● (1442)

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, many thousands of small retailers are more than gratified at the cut in the sales tax, which will have a very stimulative effect on that important part of the small business community. Of course, if the hon. member or others do not agree with me, perhaps they will agree with Mr. John Bulloch who strongly endorsed the budget of last night as a real stimulus to small business.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, if this minister is suggesting that he is satisfied with last night's budget in regard to small business, I would suggest he resign and let someone with guts take over.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

INDUSTRY

REDUCTION OF TARIFFS ON COLOUR TVS—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the information given out by a study done in his department, entitled Manufacturing Performance, that this country's manufacturing industry has lost 80,000 jobs in the last four years, and as sales of colour television sets manufactured in Canada dropped 45 per cent last year, and as the closing of Canadian General Electric's television plant in Toronto is the fifth such closing in the past year, could the minister tell the House how this government can possibly justify the negotiating downwards of import tariffs on colour television sets when he knows perfectly well that if carried out, it will put this once important industry completely out of business?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, when reading that publication put out by my department on manufacturing performance, hon. members will note the comparison between manufacture in Canada and that of other countries. They will see that compared with other countries in the western world in comparison with Japan, we are doing very well in maintaining a high level of manufacturing within Canada.

With regard to the manufacture of colour television sets, we are negotiating on nearly everything in Geneva. We have entered the negotiations in good faith but what we come out with can only be determined by the negotiators there. Certainly, we are well aware of the colour television industry in Canada and the severe competition which television manufacturers face.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the minister's idea of a good performance is to lose 80,000 jobs in the manufacturing sector in the past four years, and as the minister has given no answer at all to my question about the possibility of tariffs on colour television sets—or any other manufactured product, for that matter—is it not obvious that it is "dynamic, imaginative" leadership like this that has caused the economy to be in the mess it is in today. This is the kind of minister who put us there.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER CARTOGRAPHERS AT SHERBROOKE WILL ENJOY LINGUISTIC PRIVILEGES OF MILITARY

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since the Quebec government proposal to allow the federal public servants who would settle in Sherbrooke a six year maximum during which they could send their children to English schools has been rejected by the Canadian government, and given the fact that a large percentage of the geographical maps drawn and used in Canada are used by the military and civil aviation, could the minister tell the House whether the Canadian government would be prepared to discuss with the Quebec government whether, under the 101 legislation, the cartographers who expect to be moved to Sherbrooke might enjoy the linguistic privileges of the military?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would surely be interested in discussing such a proposal with the Quebec government. I feel it would be very desirable to have a certain number of public servants transferred to Sherbrooke as provided in the decentralization plan.

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGED DISCLOSURE OF CPIC RECORDS TO DEPARTMENT STORES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General: it concerns recent allegations that the CPIC records of the RCMP are being used by major department stores such as the Hudson's Bay company and are being sold at $12.50 a copy to department stores to assess their personnel and to making hiring decisions. The solicitor general of Ontario is presently investigating this question. Is the Solicitor General of Canada also investigating the allegations, that private and personal records are being sold to major department stores, including juvenile records?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the investigation being conducted by the attorney general for the province of Ontario, I do not know the nature of that investigation. That is information that I have gleaned from the press reports as, undoubtedly, has the hon. gentleman. With reference to CPIC information an investigation has been conducted, and I wish to advise the hon. gentleman that there is no indication of any unauthorized release of information from those records by any people within my responsibility or within the RCMP to any unauthorized individuals.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, would the Solicitor General confirm whether or not he has interviewed Rosemary Morgan, the person who made these very specific allegations? Have his department or the people under his jurisdiction actually inquired of the person making the allegations and determined who had access to the records, since there is no dispute that the records were delivered? The only question is how they were obtained. Thirdly, has he considered referring the whole matter to the McDonald inquiry, to put something else on their plate? Since they have such a big job, they should have this one as well.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, with reference to the last point, I have had an investigation conducted and I am satisfied that there was nothing untoward in the conduct or the activities of any member of the RCMP or any individual relating to the control of CPIC records themselves within the RCMP. The hon. gentleman, of course, knows how the information is made available to various police forces throughout the country in accordance with very specific, formal arrangements and procedures. Indeed, in terms of the provision by the RCMP of that information, we have been assured there is no leak.

We are satisfied that a proper investigation is being conducted with reference to the locale from which this information is alleged to have been leaked, and undoubtedly a report will be forthcoming. There is no control that we can exercise over the use of that information by the departments which are using it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

THE BUDGET—STIMULUS FOR CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance: it has to do with the near record depression levels in the construction industry. Keeping in mind that each month the construction industry in this country loses 10,000 jobs, I am wondering if the Minister of Finance can tell the Canadian people why his budget of last night had no measures whatever to stimulate the construction industry, considering that new house sales are not subjected to provincial sales tax and therefore the sales tax reduction will be negligible where they are concerned.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the best way to stimulate the construction industry is to have investment and growth in Canada. The policies we put forward last night are to achieve a potential growth of close to 5 per cent for 1978. In this way we hope to stimulate the construction industry.

Mr. Whiteway: In view of the fact that any kind of economic recovery in this country is critical to the construction industry, would the minister explain to the House why there were no measures in the budget to offset the higher interest rates on residential mortgages as a result of his economic policies and, in particular, why there was no interest rate deductibility for residential mortgages?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have two points: the first point is that the interest rate in Canada at the present time is lower than it was a year and a half ago; secondly, the increase in the bank rate by one point in the last month has not resulted in an equivalent increase in the mortgage rate. In fact, when we raised the bank rate the first time by half a point, there was no change in the level of interest rates for mortgages. When it was increased by another half point, the mortgage rate increased by only a quarter of a point, not a point.

● (1452)

[Translation]

ALLEGED DEFICIENCY OF BUDGET TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

Considering that, according to the figures announced today, 1,045,000 people are officially without work in Canada, and more particularly that in Quebec we have 17,000 more people out of work than the previous month, and that the unemployment level is now more than twice as high as in two of the Atlantic provinces, I ask the Minister of Finance why in his budget he did not come to grips with the sad and serious unemployment situation with precise measures throughout Canada and more particularly in Quebec.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): If the hon. member listened carefully to the speech I made yesterday, he heard the reasons I gave concerning the budget I brought forward. I gave an incentive of $200 million to the economy this year through which we hope to reach a rate of growth of 5 per cent, thereby reducing the unemployment level.

I would like to tell the hon. member that a 5 per cent increase in the gross national income will be one of the best performances of all countries in the western hemisphere.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question and a most explicit one. Considering that today's unemployment in the province of Quebec is largely due to the fact that many labourers have been fired, for instance in the textile, clothing, furniture and footwear industries as well as in other secondary industries, I ask—yes I said "fired"—

[English]

I do not take any partisan delight in putting these questions to the worst government since confederation.

[Translation]

I ask the minister why the budget does not contain any measure specifically aimed at helping these industries and stimulating the economy, particularly in the province of Quebec where the unemployment situation is so serious today?

Mr. Chrétien: If the hon. member actively follows the trend in Quebec's secondary industry, he will see that the measures we have taken about 15 months ago concerning textiles and some six months ago concerning footwear have given very positive results. It is common today to read that there is a recovery in this sector of the economy. So I do not see why we should add to a set of measures which seem to give good results right now.

* * *

[English]

NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

REASON DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES NOT BROUGHT BEFORE STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I would address my question to his parliamentary secretary. Can the parliamentary secretary explain why the department's expenditures for the province of Saskatchewan are several million dollars over the appropriated funds for the past fiscal year, and is this one of the reasons the minister's estimates have not been brought before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are concerned about budgeting and the Saskatchewan allocation and the fact that it is over. It is one of the issues we have been discussing with the regional director this past while. We hope that when the estimates are considered by the committee, we will be able to discuss that matter fully with hon. members opposite.

Mr. Brisco: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the parliamentary secretary confirm or deny that his minister has accepted the single agency concept put forward by the Federation of Saskatchewan Indians, and can he confirm or deny that they are planning to enter into an agreement with the FSI to the tune of $500 million?

Mr. Milne: Mr. Speaker, to the best of the knowledge I have, I would deny that.

* * *

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTION INCREASED NUMBER OF WOMEN IN WORK FORCE CONTRIBUTING FACTOR IN HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that today's figures show that unemployment among women has jumped to 10 per cent, the biggest upsurge in some months, the fact that this could very well be a result of the minister's earlier statements about the increased number of women in the work force being a cause of high unemployment, and considering that last night the minister again pursued this tactic by referring to the growing number of women in the labour force as "one of the problems of the past year", I should like to ask the minister when he is going to stop this reprehensible practice of making a correlation between women in the work force and unemployment, a practice which is making it much more difficult for women to find work?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. lady has listened to me—

An hon. Member: Hon. member.

Mr. Chrétien: —yesterday, I said in my speech that I do not quarrel with the fact that women have joined the labour force. What I want to illustrate is that there was an increase of almost 900,000 women in the labour force in the last seven years. That is a fact, and I am not blaming it on the situation. I welcome women participating in the economy, but I want to illustrate the fact that it is one of the new components of the economy of Canada.

We have to cope with this problem, and that is why I have to refer to a fact. I do not know that there is anything wrong when I say there are more women in the labour force. We welcome women in the labour force but, of course, that is extending the difficulty because we have to create sufficient jobs to accommodate everybody.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the minister that there are four million women working in this country because of necessity, not because it is a luxury. There are 20,000 more women out of work this month than last month; 430,000 women, in total, are unemployed. Many of these are single, widowed or divorced and have to work.

I should like to ask the minister if he is really sincere in saying that he is no longer going to make women in the work force the scapegoat for unemployment. Will he tell me why he found it necessary last night to refer to the growth of women in the labour force as one of the problems of last year? Why?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I was not referring to a problem; I referred to a fact. I tried to explain why we have such a growth in the labour force in Canada. I said that society is changing for the good, but there are 800,000, almost 900,000, more women in the labour force now than in past years. I referred later to the problem of young people coming into the labour force. I referred to the fact that in years to come, because there is less enrolment in the schools, the problem will stabilize.

I do not think anyone should be offended just because I refer to the facts of life. I was very cautious in saying in my remarks that I did not blame it on the women. I just said that it is a fact of life that the labour force is increasing because of the young people who have come into the marketplace, and more women than ever; that is all.

* * *

MANPOWER

REQUEST THAT PROGRAMS BE ESTABLISHED TO CREATE JOBS FOR YOUTH

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that each time we ask questions of this minister, he reiterates the old, tired youth programs which have not done the job of reducing youth unemployment, in view of the fact that last night's budget did not announce any new stimulus or proposals to encourage youth employment, and acknowledging the announcement of Statistics Canada this morning which indicates that youth unemployment is now up to 15.1 per cent—an all-time high—which means that half a million young people are out of work, instead of blaming Canada's young and the so-called baby boom which he could have seen from Statistics Canada figures ten years ago, will the minister tell the House when he is going to start fulfilling his mandate by creating programs and an environment in which young Canadians can find work, and meaningful work?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. member is playing with words and twisting them. The fact is, we did try an innovative program, a job experience training program, which was objected to by members of the opposition. It went from 1,000 to 15,000 participants. We tried to bring in work sharing and job creation. Amendments were moved to the act to withdraw those innovative measures, but we stuck to our guns and we have them in place and are making them applicable.

Of the Canada Works Program, some 40 per cent of the people who participated are young persons. In the training programs there is heavy emphasis on young people. We are endeavouring to meet that particular challenge. This year, $96.2 million will be spent directly in creating 60,000 jobs for young people, and we will be placing 250 million people through Manpower. So we are doing our share of the job.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is so uninformed and unknowledgeable that he does not even know we do not have 250 million Canadians, let alone that he is able to place that many. He has just confirmed that they are spending less money and hiring fewer young people this year than they have in any year since 1972, with the exception of 1976.

• (1502)

Because of past and present failures to address the youth unemployment problem, will the minister reassess the current youth employment proposals so that they may be made effective? On the last occasion I questioned the minister concerning this matter, he said that the youth advisory board had met twice. Has the advisory board yet made any recommendations and, if so, will the minister share these recommendations with parliament and with Canadians by tabling the recommendations, together with any other advice given by the youth advisory board?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, because we have so many excellent programs in place, I think it is appropriate that the National Youth Advisory Group should at least be given an opportunity to study them. They are not studying them on an ad hoc basis; they have set up a schedule of meetings so that they will be in a position to concentrate on the various programs which we have in place, how they might be made more effective, how the job experience training program might be made even more effective than it is at the present time, the employment tax credit program and what impact that has on youth unemployment. There is a whole series of things. These people are there to advise me so the youth of this country can derive tremendous benefit from people who are prepared to volunteer their efforts in this regard.

Mr. Dick: Will you announce them?

An hon. Member: Are you waiting until the election to make the announcement?

EFFECTIVE DATE OF SALES TAX REDUCTION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister please elaborate—because last night it was not clear—as a result of the agreements with the provinces, which of the agreements with regard to the sales tax are effective immediately, and which must await action by the provinces?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as it is a cut in the provincial sales tax, it is up to each legislature to decide when it will become effective. I understand most of the provinces issued statements yesterday that the sales tax would become effective as of last night.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As a result of what the minister indicated in his speech, in his last-minute discussions with the provincial ministers of finance will he indicate to us which provinces are prepared to have their agreements effective as of today, and which will take legislative action which may take them some time in the future? The minister should know that precisely and be able to tell the House.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the ministers of finance of the provinces who make their own announcements. All provinces agreed to participate in the program on the basis that we were to pay two points out of three for the cut in sales tax. But we have made a special offer to the maritime provinces. As it was sales tax, according to their own legislation they have to make their own announcements. Most provinces made the announcement yesterday that it was to be effective immediately.

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED LEAK OF BUDGET DETAILS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice yesterday that information which was contained in the Saturday, April 8, edition of the Toronto Star indicated, in its language by the way it was written, that a leak had taken place concerning information about the budget.

We heard the budget last night, and the precise information which was conveyed in the Toronto Star article was actually to be found in the budget. Having advised you yesterday, sir, that if such a leak had transpired I would rise today to pursue the question of privilege, I now find that I am under an obligation to do precisely that. Not only was the information contained in categorical language in the Toronto Star found in precise detail in last night's budget, but I would also like to draw to your attention that since looking at the Toronto Star of Saturday, April 8, I have had brought to my attention a column in the same newspaper of the previous day, by Mr. Dalton Camp, who also outlined in precise detail the content of the budget as it pertained to tax changes as it affected a number of provinces.

I want to stress that the information was not given in general terms, that this would be the general direction of the budgetary proposal, it was given in both instances in precise detail. Variations of tax rates as they would affect different provinces were shown. That information is to be found in the column by Dalton Camp in the Toronto Star for Friday, April 7, and as well in a news report in the Toronto Star for Saturday, April 8.

I learned yesterday that the CTV "National News" on Sunday, April 9, contained not only the same detailed information about the budget as it pertained to changes in the sales tax as it would affect the various provinces, but in addition the same news broadcast on CTV referred categorically to the fact that there would be changes in research and development benefits for corporations. It was also indicated that there would be a $1 billion stimulus provided in the budget for the economy. These were alleged to be facts in the news report. I stress again these items were not put forward in conjectural language, that these might be in the budget, were rumoured to be in the budget, or in language of that kind; it was categorically asserted that this information would indeed be found in the budget.

All three reports, the Toronto Star of April 7 and April 8, and the CTV "National News" on Sunday, April 9, made absolute assertions about factual details which were to be included in the budget, and which we found last night were indeed there.

I would like to make it clear that my concern about the budget leak is not based on any misguided concern about perpetuating old traditions. There are a lot of traditions certainly worth keeping, but I am not among those who believe that anything that has gone on in the past should be infinitely perpetuated into the future. The essence of the argument, as I understand it, the traditional parliamentary concern about budget secrecy, pertains directly to avoiding the possibility of private gain being made, or corporate gains being made, as a result of obtaining premature information contained in the budget.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), that there was indeed important corporate information in last night's budget. It contains, among other proposals, further tax concessions that are to be made to the oil industry of Canada. With so much obvious detail having been leaked, and in my judgment that is beyond question, about the budget as it affected tax changes, the sales tax levels in the provinces, and as it affected stimulus in the economy and as it affected other matters to which I have already alluded, the question then remains that if the people who found out about these proposals got that information so readily, perhaps they found out also there was to be a special tax concession to the oil industry. The immediate consequence of that would be to cause changes in the stock market.

Mr. Speaker, the stock market changed this morning. The value of Imperial Oil went up on the stock market today. Imperial Oil was one of the principal beneficiaries of last night's budget. Therefore, the issue for me is not merely an abstract concern about maintaining an old budgetary tradition of secrecy. In this case the secrecy pertains very much to the importance of parliamentary government, of maintaining by severe restriction all budgetary information to the minister and his officials in order to avoid the possibility of people cashing in, as a result of the budget, in a significant way.

● (1512)

There is the very strongest indication, whatever its source, that there was a budget leak of major proportion. In my judgment, very substantial parts of last night's budget were in fact made available, whatever the source, to a number of news sources. Perhaps one news source received that information and spread it to another news source. The important point is that a leak has taken place.

I should like to refer to two precedents in modern history of parliamentary government. They took place in 1936 and 1947 in Great Britain. As soon as the evidence became very clear that there had been a leak, in one case the minister resigned, because inadvertently he had slipped out the information to a journalist on the evening of the budget. Thus, he resigned forthwith. In the other instance, when the evidence was brought to the attention of the minister in 1936 that it looked like a leak had taken place, automatically he ordered a formal inquiry, because he recognized the fundamental importance of the question of budget secrecy. Prompt, responsible, and thorough action was taken in both cases.

Because the budget contains information which affected very directly the value of the stocks of Imperial Oil, as well as perhaps of other companies, and the fact that we have had clear evidence of the possibility of a leak of budgetary information, we have to face the clear possibility that some people might have bought stocks of Imperial Oil just a few days ago in clear anticipation of a budget which would increase the value of those stocks, therefore raising the possibility of thousands of dollars of windfall profits to those individuals within a period of days or hours. It is a serious issue.

Unless the Minister of Finance announces his intention this afternoon of ordering a thorough inquiry and naming specific individuals to conduct this inquiry, then I have no other course of appropriate action, following Your Honour's ruling that I have a prima facie case, than to suggest that the matter of a possibility of a leak of information in last night's budget be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, of course when I was made aware of the story in the Toronto Star, I was a bit preoccupied; but I should like to give some information to the House which probably will clarify the situation.

First, I talked about this proposition of a sales tax cut in which we were to share in the cost. I made it clear to the provincial ministers of finance some weeks ago it was always a hypothetical possibility. I went to them, and we discussed all sorts of matters such as the dollar, the monetary and fiscal policy of the government, what we should do, and what were their views. In the discussions, I discussed that possibility. I said to them that there was some interest in that, and that I was just trying to find out if they would be interested in participating.

All along I said that they would learn by the night of the budget if we were going or not going. That was discussed as a possibility. I was very frank with them, because when one discusses something with the provincial ministers of finance, it is a noble attitude to express to them what one feels about it.

Personally I was interested in putting it forward, but I always said to them that "it will depend on the response I have from the other provinces." All along I said to them that I was not sure to go. So, this week the ministers of finance of the provinces knew that it was a possibility. At no time did they know I had the intention of going. In fact, when it was written in the paper, no provincial ministers of finance knew, because even at that time I was not sure that I would be able to proceed.

It was a working hypothesis which we utilized. In sending the documentation in relation to that, always I was very careful to say, "if we go along". Thus, at no point could one conclude that I was to go. Particularly in my case it is quite evident that I have not leaked to Dalton Camp, because I do not know the gentleman and he does not come into Liberal circles too often. I just want to say that I take it lightly, because it was only yesterday afternoon after two or three o'clock that I started to talk to some of the ministers. First I talked to the minister in Alberta, who was not really involved. After that I went across the nation and I reached all of them, but one. The one I have not talked to had told me in previous conversation that if I were to go, he had no problem with it and he would come along. Always I said to them that they would have a definitive answer just before the budget. Some of them were making contingency plans in order to be ready.

Two of the provinces brought down their budgets last night. The minister of finance for British Columbia learned definitely of it some hours before the House knew. When he got up in the legislature in Victoria, he cut his own sales tax by two points, but did not refer at all to the contribution which the federal government was to make. This is that part of the story.

Of course we are running the risk, in discussions with the provinces, that sometimes these things can get out. I was very aware of it. I remember the many debates in the House about the too great secrecy there is in this land about the budget.

An hon. Member: About a lot of things.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, about a lot of things. I am trying to do something in my own field. I talked to them, knowing there was some danger. I am very grateful the provincial ministers of finance collaborated and dealt with this proposition in a hypothetical way.

This was a suggestion which I made public myself as a possibility, in October, to the provincial ministers of finance meeting. Again it was raised at the ministers of finance meeting in January. So, a lot of economists, political commentators and so on were writing about it. They indicated that probably it is the best mechanism we can use to make sure that any tax cut will go into the hands of those who spend their money, and that it will not go into savings.

An hon. Member: As well as some hon. members of the opposition.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes, some members of the opposition made that suggestion often. I just worked on that hypothesis. So, I do not think I should be too embarrassed by this story. In fact, the other article referred to R and D. I do not know the term they used regarding the R and D decision, but it was something about a tax credit. I did not go for tax credit. I chose another vehicle to stimulate R and D in Canada. Who would be surprised that I moved into R and D? At the first ministers' conference it was one of the recommendations of the first ministers. It was quite evident that anybody in his senses ought to listen to what the premiers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had to say.

● (1522)

A lot of groups were asking that something be done about research and development. I listened to them, but no one knew exactly what I would do. In fact, I did not take the route of tax credits. I chose another route. So I do not think I ought to be embarrassed about it at this moment. I checked with my officials—and very few of them were involved—to see whether any of them had been responsible for a leak. I asked them, although, of course, I would not expect them to tell me if any one of them had been responsible. The precautions concerning budget secrecy have been taken in my department.

Of course, I did discuss with provincial colleagues in a hypothetical way the possibility of action along the line I eventually took. But going over debate in this House and the precedents which have been cited, I can assure the hon. member that there is no leak from the department and that I have not talked to the individual who wrote the story in the Toronto Star. Where he got it from, I don't know. This presents a difficult problem because the proposition had been discussed with the cabinets of all the provinces to find out whether they were willing to accept that hypothetical suggestion of mine, or not.

Should we now hold an inquiry and call in the ministers of all the legislatures? Perhaps one of them has spoken. Perhaps officials in other departments of finance in the provinces have done so. I have tried to work with the finance ministers in all the provinces, ministers of differing political stripes, in an attempt to come to an arrangement which would make sense to all of us. I do not think I should apologise for doing so. The reality of the economic situation in Canada today is that 60 per cent of the tax "take" goes to the provincial and municipal treasuries, leaving only 40 or 42 per cent for the federal treasury. We try to work in close co-operation with the provinces so as to harmonize our tax policies. I believe the House should welcome this new approach.

I am willing, Mr. Speaker, to make a reference to a committee so that members might look at some of the taxes proposed before a budget, and could recommend to me what action I might take. Of course, I cannot undertake to accept those recommendations; ministers do not always accept recommendations made by committees. But I think I would gain a great deal if a standing committee were able to look at specific proposals and make recommendations to me before I reached a decision. I want to take a noble approach and to engage more people in the elaboration of the government's approach to economic policy.

As to the other matter, I am satisfied that I am not responsible for any leak, nor is any member of my department, to the individual who wrote the article in the Toronto Star. It was a rumour, and it was a rumour on the wrong wicket, because I did not choose tax credits but another avenue. So I do not see why an inquiry is needed at this time. As I say, it could involve all the ministers of finance. Would it be reasonable to ask me and all the provincial ministers to resign? We do not know who it was and, in fact, it was not a federal tax which was cut yesterday; it was a provincial tax. It is not my tax. I do not have any sales tax under my control.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You have nothing to do with it, then?

Mr. Chrétien: No.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Of course you have something to do with it.

Mr. Chrétien: I am very pleased hon. members have shown such concern about this matter because we should all be careful to guard against budget leaks and make sure that no one makes a buck out of budget preparations. Consider what has been done with regard to oil and gas, the tar sands, in terms of tertiary recovery. There was no mention of that at all.

As a result of the budget, the value of some stock went up today on the market. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the stock had gone up yesterday, perhaps the hon. member would have a case. But today, he has no case, in my judgment.

I have tried to be as candid as possible with the House. I want to say to the hon. member that I do not feel guilty of any wrongdoing. I am satisfied I have acted in the best interest of the nation and I do not have any intention of resigning, because you know how much I like being a member of parliament and a member of this government.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the statement made by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) was at best speculative, but I think it was proper it should have been made yesterday because of the story which appeared, and I think it is proper that the minister should have returned to the subject today by making a statement, to which I have listened with great care.

The minister has told the House that there has been no leak, and the House is bound to accept that statement from him.

Mr. Chrétien: From our level.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): From the level of the federal government. The minister has also told us that, if there were discussions, they were discussions at federal-provincial conference meetings between finance ministers with regard to matters of a hypothetical nature. I accept that. If that is the extent of it, and that is what the minister has told us, then I do not think this constitutes a leak in the classic sense.

It is interesting to examine the precedents for this kind of thing. The precedents cited by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby arose in a unitary state where there was no mixture of taxation authority, no sharing of authority or possibility of one level upsetting the tax proposals of another. In that context the possibility of discussion even in a hypothetical way takes on a completely different sense. As we move ahead and rationalize relationships between the provinces and the federal government, in order to bring the provinces into the federal picture in a way which has been denied them during the last ten years there must be increasing use made of this kind of hypothetical discussion, otherwise the two levels of government would find themselves working, as it were, in a vacuum.

The minister has told us he is open to consider some changes in our procedure. I would be the last to argue that parliament should involve itself in the budget-making process as such. That is an executive function. Nevertheless, the executive functions leading up to the budget are not an exclusive jurisdiction enjoyed by members on the treasury benches opposite and, in my judgment, this parliament has a long way to go before a satisfactory mechanism for dealing with this question is found. The minister's predecessor made some suggestions for procedural improvement, and I recall that the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Sharp), when he was House leader, also made certain proposals. None of them have been acted upon, though.

If the minister is, indeed, serious, we must pay more than lip service to the idea that before the finalization of the budget by the executive branch, parliament should be allowed an opportunity to make its contribution based on specific proposals. What ought it to be based on? First, it ought to be based on the documents governments prepare to advise themselves with respect to options. Second, it ought to be based on pre-budget submissions which are made by manufacturers' associations, labour unions, and trade associations and others. Those submissions ought not to be made only to the government; they ought to be tabled in the House of Commons in the ordinary way so that they are part of the process.

• (1532)

Certain changes must be made with respect to the budget-making process. It has to be more open not only in the executive function but also in those parts leading up to that function, because what happens in terms of budgets is that the government takes a position in parliament, but that position is not tempered in any way by any prior intervention by members of parliament who, as representatives, are just as concerned about the form of budgets as are others.

As I said at the outset, there may be differing views, and I respect them, but I listened carefully to what the minister said, and as a member of parliament he undertook that there had not been a leak.

The minister stated that he had not told anyone in advance what was going to be in the budget which he presented to the House last night. He said he had hypothesized about things which might have been in it. If that is the case, I think members of this House must accept the representation of the minister. There may be some questions about his wisdom in doing that, but in the traditional sense I do not think there has been a leak.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) raised the matter of what was in the budget regarding resource industries and tax measures regarding the oil industry in particular.

I wonder if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) would not agree that he should at least check into trading on the stock market on Friday and yesterday prior to his budget. This morning's Globe and Mail shows yesterday's trading in Imperial Oil A stocks at 92,000 shares, which is highly unusual compared with the rest of the page. I notice that the volume for Consolidated Gas is 20,000 shares, and for Pacific Petroleum it is 13,500. Dozens of other companies which are not in the resource or petroleum business experienced share trading which seems to be nominal or insignificant. I think it is reasonable to suggest to the Minister of Finance that he and his officials look into that.

The Globe and Mail says the following:

> Imperial Oil A rose 12 cents on 92,013 . . .
>
> Among the bigger gains: Texaco Canada . . . Ram Pete and Canadian Superior . . . Union Oil Canada . . . Pan Canadian Pete . . .

—which is CPR.

All made big jumps yesterday in the market. I am no expert on this, but it seems to me that it is worth looking into. It seems to me that the volume of trading in the shares of those particular oil companies was higher than one would expect on an average day, and I think the minister, if not yourself, Mr. Speaker, should look into that.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I confess I must express some surprise at the statement made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). I do not disagree with his contention that we have to accept the word of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) that he did not leak any of the information in last night's budget, but to move from that to the assertion that there has been no leak strikes me as preposterous. The fact of the matter is that material which was in last night's budget was printed in newspapers two or three days ago.

Let it be said again quite clearly that what we are discussing is not speculation. The stories were not written in those terms. The stories were written in very firm terms as to what would actually happen.

Mr. MacFarlane: What do you want to do? Send them to jail and make them reveal their sources?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When it turns out that statements in the press as to what would happen were confirmed by the announcement last night—and, as I say, we can accept the word of the Minister of Finance that he did not do the leaking—certainly there has been a leak. It seems to me that in the interests of the whole budgetary process this matter should be thoroughly investigated.

The Minister of Finance today, as the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) did yesterday, made allusions to discussions which have been taking place about some possible changes in our budgetary procedures. I think there is merit in the idea that perhaps there should be a discussion of economic matters in which all members participate before a budget is drawn, and there are other changes which might well be made.

As my leader has said, just because something is traditional, we do not have to stay with it forever, but surely, no matter how far we might go in making procedural changes, we should not abandon the principle that information should not get out in advance of the presentation of a budget which would permit individuals or corporations to make private gains. That is the reason for all this. It is not just because of some tradition, something we should stay with, for the fact of the matter is that if the information which is in a budget is out a few hours or a few days ahead, it puts some individuals or companies in a position to make windfall gains. Therefore we feel that what has happened is indeed serious and should be investigated. The point made by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) is well taken. I think it is something which should be part of any investigation.

When he was on his feet the Minister of Finance said that if there had been stock market increases yesterday, that would have been something to worry about. We would not have expected any stock market changes yesterday; the stock market would have had to wait until the budget was announced. However, if it is true that there was a run on Imperial Oil stocks yesterday, that would add weight to the proposition that perhaps someone knew what was going to take place with respect to the budget last night.

These are reasons why, in my view, the matter ought to be investigated. I realize that it gets a bit awkward when the minister has to tell us that hypothetical discussions took place with the provinces and when he says that so far as he can ascertain nothing wrong was done among those under his control. It is a bit awkward when we start inquiring about others, but if there are going to be federal-provincial discussions about tax matters, we still must maintain the principle that individuals should not be able to make special gains because of leaks that they get.

I noticed that the story which appeared in the Toronto Star on Saturday was very specific in terms of what would happen in Ontario. It said that the sales tax in Ontario would be reduced from 7 per cent to 4 per cent and that that would result in a certain reduction in the total price of cars in Ontario. I admit that that throws suspicion somewhere else and not here. It throws suspicion on those in Toronto who may have known, but just because that is uncomfortable or embarrassing, that is no reason for us to stay away from an inquiry when something as important as budget secrecy has been broken.

I say to the minister, to Your Honour, and to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton that, notwithstanding the speech the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton made, there has been a leak, and it is a serious matter.

● (1542)

I think that my friend, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), is quite correct in what he has requested. I notice that yesterday he made quite a bit of the precedents in the United Kingdom, and while he did not call for this minister to resign, he pointed out that there have been ministerial resignations. I believe he has taken a very responsible attitude today in admitting that there is probably nothing that the minister did that is wrong and in not calling for his resignation. But the other thing that has not happened which should have happened is the investigation, and I regret very much that the Minister of Finance tried to dismiss this matter so easily. I think it is serious, and I hope that the House will insist that there be such an investigation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) gave the Chair notice of his intention to raise this question of privilege. He put forward a motion at the conclusion of his remarks today, and I will take the matter under consideration.

There are, however, some remarks that should be made now. It is a matter of course under our practices that any budgetary leaks are considered very serious. Two examples in the British precedents were put forward in support of the notion that a minister who assumes responsibility for any complicity in a budget leak should resign, and that an investigation should take place. In fact, I think it will be interesting for the House to know that in both of those precedents in the United Kingdom that matter was not treated as a matter of privilege. In fact, what happened was an agreement in the House that some investigation in each case would take place; in one case there was the resignation of the minister, and a committee of the House examined the matter, and in the other case a judicial committee was set up. But it is interesting to note that in neither of those cases was the matter treated as privilege.

In addition, we do not have in this situation an acceptance of responsibility. We have an argument which begins with the publication by a newspaper over the weekend or before the weekend. So one of the ingredients that exists here and that did not exist in the U.K. examples is the fact that we have to argue from the very presentation of a newspaper as to whether or not that can be taken as speaking for itself, and therefore leaving the very conclusion which would indict either a minister in the House or someone on his staff who might be responsible. In other words, there is a chain of events that seems to be missing here, and that is something to which I must give consideration.

Furthermore, there is an extraordinary situation related to this budget, and that is, as the minister developed today and as hon. members know, we are not dealing with federal tax cuts; we are dealing with provincial tax cuts. Indeed, it would not have been possible for the minister to come to the House last night without having had some prior consultation, I assume, with his provincial counterparts with whom he was collaborating in effecting some sales tax cuts.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

That being the case, the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) was in a rather extraordinary position in relation to this particular budget. He was not coming to the House to announce tax cuts only in his own jurisdiction; he was announcing tax cuts on which he had elicited co-operation in prior consultations with provincial ministers. The minute the minister is under obligation to consult with some of his colleagues across the country, there is the risk and danger that the information has gone beyond their ears to other sources because, by the very terms of the budget, he had obviously started some sort of consultation which had not been the practice in previous budgets because there had not been the need for this kind of interprovincial and federal co-operation. That is another ingredient which I want to examine.

Finally, the Minister of Finance made this afternoon a most significant revelation, namely, that the original article which gave rise to the question of privilege yesterday raised by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby was an article which appeared in the Toronto Star on Saturday afternoon. The Minister of Finance indicated here this afternoon, in the argument, that his final decision in respect of the reduction of the sales tax could not have been taken until he had the accord of his provincial counterparts, which he did not have until late yesterday afternoon.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: That is exactly what the Minister of Finance said. Therefore, his own final decision could not have been made until yesterday. Therefore, the possibility of a positive, confirmed revelation, in advance of a decision taken in respect of the budget, as early Friday or Saturday seems to me to be a logistic impossibility. However, once again let me say that I will have to examine the record to see exactly what the minister said. That is an argument that I must take into account.

These are four very significant aspects of the situation before us which did not exist in the U.K. precedents, and therefore I will give the matter serious consideration before coming down with a final decision.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a correction. Perhaps I have not been understood correctly. What has happened is that I consulted the ministers of finance of the provinces. During the course of the week I was able to make up my mind. I told them that I was not sure to go, and it was only yesterday that I told them I was going. Of course, at no time did any one of them know precisely if I was going or not going. Of course, they could have guessed that I was interested because I was calling them, but at no time did I say I was going. It was only yesterday that we had an agreement that only a few hours before the budget I would tell them if we were going or not going, and I did it yesterday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would allow a question. I listened to his argument. I am always very impressed by him, and I have said that to him personally and publicly.

I listened today to his explanation and found that the one thing which stands out is that he dealt exclusively with the sales taxes, in other words, with those matters in respect of which he discussed the probabilities and possibilities as to what course would be taken with the provinces. However, he did not refer to the petroleum and gas terms. Did he deal with those matters in his talks with the provinces? That is a simple question. No reference was made by him at all with regard to gas, oil, and petroleum. Naturally one wonders when one hears a good argument which covers everything but the facts which might be embarrassing. Did he discuss with the provinces matters concerning changes in terms regarding oil, petroleum, and mining?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I did not discuss those matters at all with the provincial ministers of finance. We discussed the general economy, we discussed the situation of the Canadian dollar, and so on. The only specific item that could have been in the budget that I mentioned to them and on which I asked them if they were agreeable, was the sales tax. I did not raise the matter of the RRSP, nor did I discuss with them the questions of oil, gas, and any of the other items. The only specific item that was found in the budget that I discussed in a hypothetical way with the provincial ministers of finance, who, I understand, discussed it with their own cabinets, was the possibility of a joint agreement on the sales tax.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the statement made now by the minister clarifies the situation. Apparently Your Honour was under the impression that the representations or the discussions with the provinces covered the whole gamut. They did not, and the minister frankly said so. Therefore, there was a leak, and it has no reference whatsoever to the discussion with the provinces. That is the point I am making, and I have listened to the minister with great care. He has been frank, and his answer indicates that somebody within the Department of Finance or within the cabinet, or some of the officials, did discuss this matter and did make it available to the press.

I point out that a couple of years ago in 19—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) might have a separate question of privilege. However, I would remind him and the House that we are dealing today with the continuation of the question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby based his question of privilege yesterday on an article in the Toronto Star, which contained in its opening sentence the assertion that in his budget the finance minister would put forward a provision which would enable the provinces to reduce the sales tax—I do not remember the exact wording. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby raised yesterday a question of privilege based on a specific assertion in that article which related to an agreement between the federal government and the provinces in respect of the sales tax. If there is another point on other aspects of the budget relating to petroleum or any other features in the budget, in my opinion that is a separate point entirely, which the right hon. gentleman, of course, has the right to deal with as he wishes. However, the argument that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is confined to is the sales tax provision. That was the nature of his argument yesterday, and which was addressed by the Minister of Finance today. It is that point on which I have to make a ruling.

• (1552)

If there is another matter of privilege with respect to the budget, I would be glad to hear it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I may complete my remarks, I am glad to have it clarified that we are dealing only with the question of sales taxes. There would be no particular opportunity to make a profit there if the information got out. The essence of the rule concerning budget secrecy was dealt with in 1977 by the seminar held in Ottawa in Canadian Studies. It states:

—no one should be able to gain a private advantage by reason of advance information about matters to be dealt with in a budget.

If it is restricted to the question of sales taxes, I cannot argue that. However, as far as oil companies and mining companies are concerned, they would be in a wonderful position.

We have often wondered in connection with investment if it would be wise to go to fortune tellers to find out what is going to happen. Those who read this article in connection with the oil industry and the like certainly must have had second sight, perfect sight, psychopathic sight, or fortune teller sight.

MRS. HOLT—STATEMENT ON WOMEN IN WORK FORCE

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of something that was said during the question period. As one of the few women members in this House I feel obliged to correct a misleading statement—I am sure an inadvertently misleading comment made by the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald). Women are not only in the work force out of need, but also by choice and as a right to share in the building and growth of their country. It is as a result of this government's leadership in recognizing women as vital partners in the economic and social strength—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

First report of Standing Committee on Agriculture—Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Introduction of Bills

[English]

ENERGY

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORTS OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR LIMITED AND PETRO-CANADA

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I table in both official languages the annual reports of Eldorado Nuclear Limited and Petro-Canada for the fiscal year ending December 31, 1977.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION ACT

TABLING OF BOARD'S REPORTS TO ADMINISTRATOR

Mr. Ed Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to subsection 17(2) of the Anti-Inflation Act, I wish to table, in both official languages, copies of four reports sent to the Administrator by the Anti-Inflation Board.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

FREE POLITICAL EXPRESSION FOR PUBLIC SERVANTS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-440, respecting political partisanship.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this private member's bill is to amend two acts, the Human Rights Act and the Public Service Employment Act. At the present time some 500,000 public servants in Canada are denied the right to participate in the political process as a direct result of section 32(1) of that latter act. The effect of my bill would be to amend those clauses to deny only the deputy heads the right to participate in this process, and to allow those generally employed by the civil service to participate, as we all have a right to do.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL TAX DISCOUNTERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-46, relating to the discounting of overpayments of tax under the Income Tax Act and related payments.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Mr. Speaker.]

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order:

Motions—Mr. McGrath:

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 22, 1978, be concurred in.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, this is the fifth day that this motion has been called. By way of a point of order, I would like to point out to the House that my colleagues and I are prepared to allow the motion for the concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs dealing with a number of subject matters from a number of private members' bills, mainly the subject of pornography under the Criminal Code, to go without debate. Our party does this because the recommendations of the committee were unanimous. It is an excellent report, and I commend it to the members of the House.

However, in the event that there is not a disposition to allow the motion to go forward without debate, perhaps then it could be the subject of consultation between the House leaders so that time could be arranged to have debate without taking up a full parliamentary day. I put this suggestion forward by way of a point of order, Mr. Speaker, so that with the limited time we have left in this parliament we will not have to take a full day debating the unanimous report. I commend the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), the chairman of the committee, on an excellent report. His motion takes precedence over mine, and I allowed that to happen because, after all, he is the chairman of the committee. But I do say that I would like to see concurrence in this motion, and I suggest that perhaps it could form the basis of discussion so that time could be taken—not a full parliamentary day—to deal with it.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): With regard to the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I rose in my place several days ago to indicate that there was not unanimous consent that this matter proceed without debate in the House. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) is perfectly correct in pointing out that it is a unanimous report. However, it is the view of my party that this is a far too important a subject to go routinely through this House without debate. We would agree with the suggestion of my hon. friend of allocating some time. We are not interested in stalling the process of the House for very long, but we think a reasonable time should be set to debate this very important subject that has been raised by the Justice and Legal Affairs committee.

Mr. Speaker: I take it from the intervention by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that what he is telling the House is that, since no agreement is present to let the matter go without debate, he is asking that his motion be stood in the hope that consultation might take place on the subject.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 377, 1,078, 1,089, 1,299, 1,317, 1,335, 1,339, 1,411, 1,412, 1,413 and 1,421.

[Text]

"OPTION NORTH" PROJECT

Question No. 377—Mr. McIsaac:

1. Under the Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands, what amount of federal funds have been allocated to the "Option North" project?

2. (a) What are the titles of the various sub-projects (b) what amount of federal funds was expended to date, in each case (c) how many persons were assisted under each sub-project (d) what share of the total cost of the sub-projects is represented by the federal contribution?

Mr. Donald Wood (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The reply for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Under the Canada-Saskatchewan Interim Subsidiary Agreement on the Saskatchewan Northlands, from April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1977, $951,000 of federal funds has been allocated to the "Options North" Project.

2. The titles of the various sub-projects, the amount of federal funds expended to date, and the number of persons assisted under each sub-project are listed in the following table.

(a) Sub-project Titles	(b) Options North Total Expended April 1, 1974 to March 31, 1977 Federal Funds	(c) Persons Assisted
1. Community College Development	$ 36,058	See Footnote 1
2. Manpower	4,178	See Footnote 2
3. Northern Careers	156,399	120
4. Northern Training Program	42,086	156
5. Training in Government	141,842	30
6. Training Opportunity Program	337,883	439
7. Staff Training Career Counsellors	14,321	5
Total	732,767	750

(d) The federal contribution to each of the sub-projects is sixty per cent.

Footnote 1— Indirect benefit was provided to students of the West Side Community College at Beauval under the Community College Development sub-project. As well, residents of the West Side and LaRonge regions of northern Saskatchewan would receive indirect benefit.

Footnote 2— A study called "Options North—A General Program Outline" was undertaken under this sub-project. The results of the study have an indirect impact on the 750 persons who are directly exposed to the sub-projects on training (items 3 to 7 inclusive).

GRANTS—PLANNED PARENTHOOD FEDERATION

Question No. 1,078—Mr. Epp:

Did the government make any grants to the Planned Parenthood Federation and, if so, in what amount, by year?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The Planned Parenthood Federation has received the following grants:

Year	Amount of Grants
1972/73	$ 500,000
1973/74	498,200
1974/75	600,000
1975/76	785,909
1976/77	448,129
1977/78	600,000
Total	$3,432,238

This includes sustaining and training grants as well as demonstration grants.

PLANNED PARENTHOOD FEDERATION AND SERENA, CANADA

Question No. 1,089—Mr. Reid:

1. What are the amounts provided by the Department of National Health and Welfare as (a) sustaining (b) training (c) research (d) printing grants, over the past five years to the Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada, its affiliates and Serena, Canada?

2. If there are differences in the amounts provided in each category in Part 1, what are the reasons and on what policy are such judgments based?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

	Year	(a) Sustaining	(b) Training	(c) Research	(d) Printing
Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada	1972-1977	2,757,500	34,038	Nil	Nil
Planned Parenthood Federation of Canada-Affiliates	1972-1977	86,694	488,925	103,671	Nil
Serena Canada	1972-1977	852,000	9,079	5,000	Nil

Introduction of Bills

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 1,299—Mr. Bawden:

1. As the government is an investor in the Syncrude project, was Crown Assets Disposal Corporation asked by Canada Bechtel to handle the disposal of surplus assets?

2. Did the Minister of Supply and Services give his approval to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation?

3. What was the estimated recovery value of the assets to be sold?

4. What was the acquisition cost of the assets?

5. Did Crown Assets Disposal Corporation implement the programme and, if not, for what reason?

6. Who is to manage the disposal of the surplus assets?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. Not applicable.

5. Not applicable.

6. Not applicable.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 1,317—Mr. Bawden:

What is the policy of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation as to determine the value of merchandise prior to selling, so as to be a guide for the acceptance of bids?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Crown Assets Disposal Corporation investigates the selling price on prior sales of a like material, as well as the current value on the open market, if available.

CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION—CUSTODIAL POLICY

Question No. 1,335—Mr. Bawden:

1. What is the custodial policy of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation when items are missing?

2. What is the policy of the government and the Corporation in cases where major quantities of surplus Crown assets are found to be missing or unavailable at time of delivery to the purchaser?

3. How many claims did Crown Assets receive for non-delivery of goods to bidders in the years 1974 to 1977 inclusive?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. The corporation ascertains from the declaring department the reason for non-availability of the material.

2. After investigation, the corporation negotiates with the purchaser to effect an equitable settlement or refund.

3. The corporation has not set up a system particularly aimed at retrieving this information. To provide an accurate reply would entail a lengthy and costly examination of each Report of Surplus (10,000 a year) which cost in manpower and time would be exorbitant and prohibitive.

[Miss. Bégin.]

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—ENGINEERING SERVICES

Question No. 1,339—Mr. McKinnon:

Has Davis, Eryon and Associates Ltd., 2540 Sheffield Road, Ottawa, provided engineering services to the Department of National Defence in the amount of $34,105 and, if so, what were such services?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. "Study of Canadian Commercial Options for Replacement of the One-Quarter Ton Truck".

RETIRED ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL ON PENSION

Question No. 1,411—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired Armed Forces personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the following brackets (a) less than $20.00 per month (b) $20.00 to $29.99 per month (c) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (d) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (e) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (f) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (g) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (h) $80.00 to 89.99 per month (i) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (j) $100.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 to $249.99 per month (m) $250.00 to $299.99 per month (n) $300.00 to $399.99 per month (o) $400.00 to $499.99 per month (p) $500.00 to $599.99 per month (q) $600.00 to $699.99 per month (r) $700.00 to $799.99 per month (s) $800.00 per month and over?

2. How many widows of Armed Forces personnel or of retired Armed Forces personnel are receiving pensions, including their basic pensions and any supplement or supplements added thereto, of amounts within each of the brackets indicated in the above question?

3. What is the total number of retired Armed Forces personnel and also the number of widows of Armed Forces personnel or of retired Armed Forces personnel presently residing in each province?

4. In respect of how many orphans of Armed Forces personnel are pensions being paid and what is the average amount?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. As of February 28, 1978 the number of retired Armed Forces personnel receiving monthly pensions totalled 52,500 within the following monthly brackets: (a) less than $20.00, 31; (b) $20.00 to $29.99, 55; (c) $30.00 to $39.99, 131; (d) $40.00 to $49.99, 238; (e) $50.00 to $59.99, 233; (f) $60.00 to $69.99, 178; (g) $70.00 to $79.99, 230; (h) $80.00 to $89.99, 437; (i) $90.00 to $99.99, 437; (j) $100.00 to $149.99, 1,998; (k) $150.00 to $199.99, 4,651; (l) $200.00 to $249.99, 6,856; (m) $250.00 to $299.99, 6,468; (n) $300.00 to $399.99, 9,930; (o) $400.00 to $499.99, 7,234; (p) $500.00 to $599.99, 4,546; (q) $600.00 to $699.99, 2,825; (r) $700.00 to $799.99, 1,864; (s) $800.00 and over, 4,158.

2. Number of widows receiving monthly pensions—5,689. (a) less than $20.00, 26; (b) $20.00 to $29.99, 32; (c) $30.00 to $39.99, 46; (d) $40.00 to $49.99, 29; (e) $50.00 to $59.99, 36; (f) $60.00 to $69.99, 38; (g) $70.00 to $79.99, 77; (h) $80.00 to $89.99, 107; (i) $90.00 to $99.99, 128; (j) $100.00 to $149.99, 1,024; (k) $150.00 to $199.99, 1,151; (l) $200.00 to $249.99, 1,019; (m) $250.00 to $299.99, 658; (n) $300.00 to $399.99, 740; (o) $400.00 to $499.99, 333; (p) $500.00 to $599.99, 137; (q) $600.00 to $699.99, 51; (r) $700.00 to $799.99, 25; (s) $800.00 and over, 32.

3. Retired Armed Forces Personnel and widows residing in each province.

Provinces	Personnel	Widows
Newfoundland	258	15
Prince Edward Island	489	59
Nova Scotia	5,336	512
New Brunswick	2,104	201
Quebec	4,364	596
Ontario	19,821	2,388
Manitoba	2,287	258
Saskatchewan	820	102
Alberta	4,938	403
British Columbia	10,767	975
Northwest Territories	100	5
Outside Canada	1,216	175
	52,500	5,689

4. Number of Orphans 179; Average monthly amount $69.24.

	CFSA
(a) Mar 31, 75	2,116,679,314.41
(b) Mar 31, 76	2,186,562,695.73
(c) Mar 31, 77	2,263,362,998.98

2. Rates of Interest for: (a) 1974-75: 1. Quarter ending June 30, 1974, 1.5642 per cent; 2. Quarter ending September 30, 1974, 1.5900 per cent; 3. Quarter ending December 31, 1974, 1.6259 per cent; 4. Quarter ending March 31, 1975, 1.6363 per cent. (b) 1975-76: 1. Quarter ending June 30, 1975, 1.6612 per cent; 2. Quarter ending September 30, 1975, 1.6724 per cent; 3. Quarter ending December 31, 1975, 1.7109 per cent; 4. Quarter ending March 31, 1976, 1.7209 per cent. (c) 1976-77: 1. Quarter ending June 30, 1976, 1.7471 per cent; 2. Quarter ending September 30, 1976, 1.7488 per cent; 3. Quarter ending December 31, 1976, 1.7707 per cent; 4. Quarter ending March 31, 1977, 1.7891 per cent.

	CFSA
(a) Mar 31, 75	82,790,414.91
(b) Mar 31, 76	85,565,010.91
(c) Mar 31, 77	88,547,963.29

4. Payments out of CFSA during fiscal year ending: (a) March 31, 1975, $154,976,541.24; (b) March 31, 1976, $172,-352,486.95; (c) March 31, 1977, $189,680,605.01.

ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL RETIRED TO PENSION

Question No. 1,413—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. In each year 1959 to 1977 (a) how many personnel of the Canadian Armed Forces have commenced drawing pensions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act (b) how many widows have commenced drawing pensions under the said Act?

2. In each year 1959 to 1977, how many pensions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to (a) retired Canadian Armed Forces personnel (b) widows of such personnel, have been discontinued because of the death of the annuitant?

3. In each year 1946 to 1977, how many service personnel contributed to the pension or annuity account under the former Part V or under the provisions of the present Canadian Forces Superannuation Act?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. (a) Personnel of the Armed Forces retired to pension: 1959, 752; 1960, 1,048; 1961, 1,418; 1962, 1,343; 1963, 1,623; 1964, 2,454; 1965, 3,419; 1966, 3,407; 1967, 2,983; 1968, 2,787; 1969, 4,050; 1970, 4,075; 1971, 4,267; 1972, 4,405; 1973, 3,357; 1974, 3,478; 1975, 3,459; 1976, 3,003; 1977, 3,124; (b) Widows who commenced drawing pensions: 1959, 98; 1960, 121; 1961, 166; 1962, 179; 1963, 207; 1964, 208; 1965, 283; 1966, 263; 1967, 303; 1968, 303; 1969, 371; 1970, 323; 1971, 375; 1972, 420; 1973, 441; 1974, 478; 1975, 470; 1976, 554; 1977, 527.

2. (a) Retired pensioners deceased: 1959, 91; 1960, 103; 1961, 114; 1962, 127; 1963, 142; 1964, 169; 1965, 190; 1966, 208; 1967, 243; 1968, 295; 1969, 353; 1970, 356; 1971, 331; 1972, 323; 1973, 379; 1974, 524; 1975, 496; 1976, 513; 1977, 507; (b) Widows of pensioners deceased: 1959, 9; 1960, 12; 1961, 17; 1962, 19; 1963, 26; 1964, 28; 1965, 34; 1966, 39; 1967, 45; 1968, 56; 1969, 50; 1970, 52; 1971, 24; 1972, 11; 1973, 12; 1974, 30; 1975, 39; 1976, 58; 1977, 28.

3. Number of CFSA contributors: 1946, 212,692; 1947, 36,535; 1948, 34,762; 1949, 41,676; 1950, 47,185; 1951, 68,427; 1952, 95,394; 1953, 104,427; 1954, 112,529; 1955, 118,077; 1956, 116,678; 1957, 117,092; 1958, 119,038; 1959, 120,412; 1960, 119,597; 1961, 120,055; 1962, 126,474; 1963, 123,694; 1964, 120,781; 1965, 114,164; 1966, 107,467; 1967, 105,584; 1968, 101,572; 1969, 98,340; 1970, 93,353; 1971, 89,563; 1972, 84,933; 1973, 82,402; 1974, 79,921; 1975, 79,639; 1976, 79,772; 1977, 80,546.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION ACCOUNT

Question No. 1,412—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount at credit in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account as at March 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977?

2. What rate of interest has the government paid for the use of this money during the fiscal years ending on the dates noted above?

3. What amount of interest was credited to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending March 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977?

4. What was the total amount paid of the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account during the fiscal years ending March 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976 (c) 1977?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Balance in the Canadian Forces Superannuation Account (CFSA) as at:

	Actuarial Liability Acct.	Total
(a) Mar 31, 75	3,655,541,539.68	5,772,130,854.09
(b) Mar 31, 76	4,270,267,250.56	6,456,829,946.29
(c) Mar 31, 77	4,742,803,872.70	7,006,166,871.68

---

3. Amount interest credited to CFSA during fiscal year ending:

	Actuarial Acct.	Total
(a) Mar 31, 75	134,902,988.41	217,693,403.32
(b) Mar 31, 76	157,615,710.88	243,180,721.79
(c) Mar 31, 77	176,486,622.14	265,034,585.43

Order Paper Questions

MANUAL ON ISOLATION TRAINING

Question No. 1,421—Mr. Jones:

1. Is the Manual on Isolation Training available to civilian health personnel and, if so, when will it be available?

2. Is the Department of National Defence preparing this bulletin?

3. Does the department feel that a core of isolation trained experts would be advisable in all provinces and territories and, if so, would periodic refresher courses not be required in this regard?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1 and 2. A training manual for the maintenance and operation of the "Containment Bed Isolator" is being written at this time and is expected to be completed by mid-1979. A second piece of isolation equipment, the "Transit Isolator" is being evaluated by DND and a manual will also be prepared for this equipment, however, no date is available for its completion. Both manuals will be available to civilian health personnel.

3. Yes. Until such time as provinces develop their own expertise for local training DND nursing personnel will be available to offer refresher training on an as-required basis to those agencies acquiring isolation equipment.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered.

* * *

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 135 and 713 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: It is proposed that questions Nos. 135 and 713 be deemed to have been made orders for returns, with the returns to be tabled immediately. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND THE ENVIRONMENT—RESEARCH CONTRACTS

Question No. 135—Mr. Crouse:

1. Were research contracts undertaken by the Department of Fisheries and of the Environment, Department of Supply and Services or any other department concerning science contracts on behalf of the Department of Fisheries and of the Environment and, if so, what (a) is the name and address of the individual or company carrying out the contract and what are their qualifications (b) was the nature of the work undertaken?

2. What are the names and addresses of the chief officers of any company employed?

3. What were the names of the ships utilized for this work and the number of men employed?

[Mr. Danson.]

4. What was the total amount of the contract awarded to each individual or company employed?

5. How much time was spent carrying out fisheries research?

Return tabled.

MR. T. G. BEYNON

Question No. 713—Mr. MacKay:

1. On what date did Mr. T. G. Beynon of Statistics Canada take over the position of Director, Manufacturing and Primary Industries Division, and on what date did he leave the position?

2. Did Mr. Beynon take over the position as a result of a competition and, if so (a) who were the board members and, in each case, what was his/her title, rank and salary range (b) how many candidates were interviewed and how many qualified?

3. What was the salary range of the position on the date Mr. Beynon started to work in the Division and when he left the position?

4. (a) What surveys were conducted by the Manufacturing and Primary Industries Division during the period Mr. Beynon was its director and what (i) was the name of each survey, periodicity of data collection, coverage (description of universe and of each sample, if appropriate, industries covered) (ii) were the names of the resulting publications and/or reports and their periodicity (b) in the case of each survey, were any questionnaires used and, if so, in each case (i) was the content of the questionnaire, when completed, confidential or otherwise restricted under the provisions of the Statistics Act, or any other instrument of the government (ii) what were the questions asked (c) did any of the surveys involve (i) automobile manufacturers (ii) automobile dealerships (d) was Mr. Beynon, by virtue of his position as Director of the Division, entitled to have access to any of the completed questionnaires?

5. Was Mr. Beynon sworn to secrecy under the Statistics Act and/or under the provision of any other instrument of the government?

6. On what date did Mr. Beynon of Statistics Canada take over the position of Director, Labour Division?

7. Was he transferred to the position without competition and, if so, what is the name, title rank and salary range of the individual responsible for such decision?

8. What was the salary range of the position on the date Mr. Beynon started to work in the Labour Division and on November 12, 1976?

9. (a) What surveys were conducted by the Labour Division during the period of Mr. Beynon's arrival to the Division and November 12, 1976 and what (i) was the name of each survey, periodicity of data collection, coverage (description of universe and of sample, if appropriate, industries covered, etc.) (ii) were the names of resulting publications and/or reports and their periodicity (b) in the case of each survey, were any questionnaires, when completed, confidential or otherwise restricted under the provisions of the Statistics Act or under the provisions of any other instrument of the government (ii) what were the questions asked (c) did any of the surveys involve (i) automobile manufacturers (ii) automobile dealerships (d) did any of the surveys involve automobile dealers in (i) Arnprior, Ontario (ii) the Ottawa metropolitan area and, if so, in each case, what was the name of the survey?

10. Did Mr. Beynon, since he became Director of the Manufacturing and Primary Industries Division and until November 12, 1976, have access to other data within Statistics Canada, than those generated and/or stored by the Divisions of which he was (or is) Director, and which were confidential under the provisions of the Statistics Act or any other instrument of the government and, if so, what kind of data were involved?

Return tabled.

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before we move forward. With respect to the amendments to the Farm Credit Act, a measure which is of interest to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), who is in the House. I want to tell him that, if he would be prepared to call those amendments, I am advised by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise), our critic for agriculture, that they could proceed through all stages and we could complete them. I gather there is some anxiety about this because of the necessity for funding the corporation. We regard this as a very important statute.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, it is not quite clear from the remarks of the hon. opposition House leader whether the agreement was that the bill proceed through all stages without debate. If that is the agreement of the House, that the Farm Credit Act amending Bill be called right now and that it proceed through all stages without debate, I think it could be called now.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if I did not make myself clear, I apologize. That was the purpose of my intervention.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I take it that is agreed with the other parties also?

Mr. Speaker: Is it the disposition of the House to proceed through all stages of the Farm Credit Act amendments without debate? If so, is there a disposition and agreement to call that legislation now? Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed and so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

FARM CREDIT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-29, to amend the Farm Credit Act, as reported (with amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Whelan moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

POSTAL SERVICE OPERATIONS ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF REGULAR POSTAL OPERATIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-45, to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief remarks with respect to this particular bill. As hon. members may have noted, the bill is of a single page so it will not require much analysis other than to indicate that it is to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations during the period of a dissolution of parliament.

By way of background, may I briefly outline to the House the history of the current round of collective bargaining between the Canadian Union of Postal Workers and the Treasury Board, as employer.

The collective agreement expired June 30, 1977. Direct negotiations did not lead to agreement, and on November 30, 1977, the employer requested the Public Service Staff Relations Board to appoint a conciliation board, in accordance with the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

The chairman of the conciliation board, Mr. Louis Courtemanche, was appointed on February 3, 1978, to complete the three-man board which includes Mr. Irving Gaul and Mr. Roy Heenan as members. The chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board set out terms of reference for the conciliation board on March 29, 1978, and the board commenced its hearings yesterday, on April 10, 1978.

By introducing this bill I am not attempting in any way to interfere in the process of negotiations by officers of the Post Office and the bargaining committee of the trade unions in the Post Office. Nor do I anticipate that the amendment proposed by the bill would interfere with that orderly process in the future—with the single exception of a breakdown in negotiations that could occur during a federal election.

I would like to assure hon. members that the government continues to rely on the voluntary determination of any new collective agreement by the parties. The officers of the Post Office and the bargaining committee of the post office unions can, and may, reach a collective agreement by their own devices. When the conciliation process is invoked, the parties can, and should, be able to settle any dispute either before or after the chairman of the board of conciliation has delivered the report.

However, there is always the possibility that no settlement will be reached and a strike could occur during an election campaign. I would be among the first to recognize that public employees have normally used their democratic rights as trade unionists wisely and responsibly. Public service unions in Canada have not been strike-happy in the past, and I do not believe they are quick to call a strike at this time. However, during a period in which parliament has been dissolved, a strike in the postal service would put the public at a severe disadvantage. I am also advised, as far as the possibility of an election is concerned that should a strike occur during an election campaign it would be most disruptive and costly as far as the election process is concerned.

It is fair to say also that this could well put postal workers at great disadvantage. The point is that the country's preoccupation at that time would be with an election campaign, and the possibility of achieving a resolution of a dispute of this kind would be considerably lessened.

Let me remind hon. members that no new principle is involved in the bill. A provision already exists in Part V of the Canada Labour Code. I refer to Section 181 of the Code, which provides that a strike or lockout that would adversely affect the national interest during an election could be deferred until after the return of the writs.

I would also recall for your consideration the references in the Finkelman report dealing with this question. The Finkelman report recommended that the Public Service Staff Relations Act should contain a provision of this character. In addition, the joint Senate-Commons committee which reviewed the Finkelman report endorsed the principle.

Finally, I have reviewed the debate in the House in 1972 when Part V of the Canada Labour Code was passed, and I cannot find any statements which would be opposed to the principle of this bill.

In other words, there was a similar provision in Part V of the Canada Labour Code when it was debated in this House and when it was examined in the standing committee, but there was no antagonistic reference by any of the parties to a provision of this kind including, I might add, the New Democratic Party. I think that indicates that it is not an unusual provision with respect to a deferral of the right to strike during an election campaign or during dissolution.

I should also like to emphasize that this only defers the right to strike and in no way impairs it.

I should also like to refer to a point drawn to my attention by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and I thank him for making the point. There has been some question about whether the existing collective agreement would continue to operate throughout the period during which the right to strike would be deferred. It was thought that this is covered in the bill, but there is some doubt. In order to ensure that there is no doubt and will be no doubt, I propose to move an amendment at the appropriate time that will make it clear the collective agreement does remain in force until the right to strike accrues, or until a new agreement is concluded.

● (1612)

In view of the fact the bill represents reasonable protection for the democratic rights of unfettered elections and only postpones the right to strike during election campaigns, I would urge all members to support this motion and give the bill speedy passage.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill I want to endorse some of what the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has said, but certain comments must be made.

It is true, as the minister said, that under the Canada Labour Code there already exists provision to deal in advance with situations which might arise during an election period which could cripple the economy of the country, or parts of it.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Without this provision, parliament would find itself helpless to act because there is an election campaign proceeding.

The minister is right when he says that the principle is already in the other statute which governs those workers who come within the federal jurisdiction of the Canada Labour Code. Having said that, there is a strange ironic inconsistency in the government coming to us a couple of days before an election call saying, "Hurry this bill through". We may be caught by the fact that we let months and years go by without addressing ourselves to this problem.

Once again my friend, the hon. Minister of Labour has been thrown into the breach at the last minute. Whatever he might have wanted to do, however he might have wanted to address himself to this problem, he had a cabinet which kept pushing it aside and saying, "Leave it alone, it doesn't have to be dealt with".

I remember that it was only a couple of months ago I was asking the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when we would be getting the government's proposals now that the Finkelman Report and the joint House and Senate committee report had been submitted. The Prime Minister said that it was a priority and the government would get to it as soon as it could. There have been many years to do something about this problem. Now the Minister of Labour has come in at the last minute and said, "Please, we really think the public would be terribly inconvenienced if there were a postal strike during the election period."

Where was this government when the public was inconvenienced for nearly 50 days during a postal strike only two years ago? The Prime Minister said in November or December, when being asked about this, that he did not care whether the strike went on till Easter. He said in the House of Commons on November 19, 1975:

. . . we have to realize that a strike is a strike and it hurts people. That is the very nature of a strike.

The reason the minister is here today with his piece of legislation is simple. A strike in the postal service during this campaign will hurt one person a lot more than anyone else, and that is the Prime Minister. That is why the government has come here. Anybody who thinks this is being done now because there is concern for public suffering during a postal strike, just has to go back to the last postal strike two years ago. There was not one bit of sympathy then from this government for the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who were put beyond inconvenience, and suffered social strife and economic loss.

Obviously, this government has postponed coming to grips with the problem of how to handle strikes in the Public Service, in essential services, and in those areas where, because of the ultimate effect of a strike, the House of Commons has to be assembled to do something about it. This government is ten years old and it is ten years tired. During all of those years, and right up until tonight, there has still been no meaningful legislation brought forward to deal with this problem.

The government says over and over again, "Oh, we are not interfering with the right to strike. Heaven forbid, we do not want it on the record that we will ever do that." But it just continues to do it. What ministers will not do is have the common sense to recognize that there are times when there must be mechanisms used on a selective basis to decide whether the public interest is so badly and so seriously affected that some other ordinary rights must be put aside at least on a temporary basis under certain conditions.

There has been an absolute absence on the part of the government to be honest about this. They played the game of trying to say to labour all the time, "Why, we would never take away the right to strike". How many times have they done it since I have been elected to the House of Commons in 1972? There has been a rail strike, a grain strike, the river ports, the traffic controllers—

An hon. Member: How many times did you vote for it?

Mr. Fraser: One of my hon. friends on the other side has asked how many times did I vote for it. Mr. Speaker, the point is that every time I advocated that something should be done, it took the government weeks and weeks to do anything about it. In Vancouver, during the grain strike, there were 85 ships in the Vancouver harbour. Members from the prairies and from my province got up in the House day in and day out and said to this government, "Why will you not do something? When are you going to face up to your responsibilities?"

The government was asked how long it would play this silly game of putting the country and everybody else through endless torment, trouble, and difficulty, when everybody on both sides of the bargaining table knew that sooner or later parliament would be called to step in. The question was asked, which way did I vote? I ask, where was the responsibility on the government side in coming to grips with this matter of putting legislation on the floor of this House to give parliament, government, people, labour and management some reasonable mechanism to solve these problems under the unusual and difficult circumstances that often prevail when they occur?

I want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that we will support this legislation because we do not think there should be a strike in the postal service during the campaign. But I want to make it equally clear through you, Mr. Speaker—and the minister has said this, if anyone was listening—that nobody should be under the illusion that this represents a change in attitude on the part of the government. This does not represent any sort of repentance or any changed position. This does not represent the start of a search for some mechanism to solve strikes in essential services that affect the public interest to the point where parliament has to be called to act. This is a piece of "ad hocery". The problem which must be solved on the eve of an election should have been addressed months and years ago. It could have been, if this government had had the courage and common sense to address it.

An hon. Member: Where is the Woods committee report of ten years ago?

Mr. Fraser: As my hon. friend from St. John's East says, in the Woods committee report ten years ago—

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No solution.

Mr. Fraser: My friend, the Minister of Labour says there was no solution in the Woods report for this sort of a problem. There was no solution so far as the government had eyes to see or ears to hear. The establishment of a public interests dispute commission has been the policy of this party.

• (1622)

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It does not ban the right to strike in the essential services.

Mr. Fraser: Certainly it does not, but it provides a mechanism for those strikes, which are intolerable and which everyone knows will be interfered with by the House of Commons, to be dealt with in advance in a fairer, more proper and more appropriate way than continued ad hocery.

Several years ago the right hon. Prime Minister indicated that if anything is going to be done about strikes in the Public Service, in essential services, or where a strike is so severe that it has to be dealt with by the House of Commons, then the right to strike in the Public Service has to be eliminated entirely. That is the kind of baloney which the Prime Minister has uttered on other issues. Either he should know that is not correct, or else he is doing it mischievously or maliciously with intent.

The entire function of that commission is to avoid taking away the right to strike across the board, and to give the flexibility and the mechanism to deal with those strikes which cannot be tolerated under some conditions and at some times. Sooner or later the issue must be faced. It is not being faced by this piece of legislation.

The hon. minister is correct when he said the provision he seeks tonight is in the Canada Labour Code. In principle, I concede to the hon. minister that it is not an unreasonable provision to be requested, but it is a pathetic plea to come before us a few days before the government wishes to call an election. It is pathetic for the government to say, "Despite the fact that we have been in power for ten years, that we have had two majorities and lots of time to do something about this, would you please help us out now, because it would be an awful shame if some of the Liberal propaganda did not get through the mails in time for election day?"

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the first thing I want to say to the government in connection with Bill C-45 is that this is no time to push the panic button. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) can stand up and say that what he has introduced is a very simple bill because it consists of only one page; but it is a bill which can do serious damage to labour relations in this country, particularly labour relations in the Public Service.

The bill has an innocuous title, an act to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations. I suggest to the minister that the accurate title of this bill should be: an act to guarantee a postal strike during the federal general election.

The minister said that the bill does not interfere with negotiations and that it does not place any barrier in the way of the parties reaching an agreement. But surely it is clear that it holds over the heads of the members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers a very clear threat, namely, if they exercise their right to strike, which is in the Public Service Staff Relations Act, that right will be interfered with. The Minister said that it will only be delayed. I point out that the very terms of the bill make it clear that the purpose would be to delay that strike long enough for a new parliament to be assembled, so that the new parliament could do as parliament has done in the case of so many of these labour stoppages.

I have been here quite a while, long enough to realize that there can be a lot of fine talk about human rights, fundamental freedoms, and the liberties people should enjoy. What counts is to stand by those concepts when the minority is concerned or when unpopular people are affected. It is very nice to talk about the human rights of the majority, whether we are talking about language, race, culture or what have you; but what really counts in human rights is to protect the freedoms of the smallest minority.

I remember my respected colleague of many years ago, Angus MacInnis, standing in just about this seat during the middle of World War II. At that time, because we were at war with Japan, Japanese Canadians were looked upon with suspicion, to the extent that very drastic action was taken against them, even many who were born in this country. It was an unpopular stand that Angus MacInnis, M. J. Coldwell and some of the rest of us took at that time; but I was proud to be a member of a party which was prepared to defend the rights of unpopular people. That is the only way to defend rights. Also one remembers the struggles of the Jehovah's Witnesses in Quebec, one remembers the Duplessis padlock law. One remembers some of those incidents. Now we look back with some pride and approval with respect to those who defended unpopular people like the Jehovah's Witnesses.

This is what we have before us today. We are concerning ourselves about a union which is not the most popular organization in Canada. If one wanted to take a poll about organizations and their popularity, I suppose CUPW would be at the top of the list or the bottom of the list, whichever way the question was set up.

Mrs. Campagnolo: Even within the ranks of the CLC.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): If I heard the hon. minister opposite correctly, she said even within the ranks of the CLC, CUPW is not the most popular union. That sets out exactly what I am talking about. If rights are rights, they should be protected, even for those whom the country as a whole may not like. If the Public Service Staff Relations Act accords to the Canadian Union of Postal Workers the right to choose the strike route, rather than the arbitration route; and if it accords to that union, having chosen the strike route, when it finds itself dissatisfied with proposals made, the right to go through with that proposal, I suggest to change the rules in the middle of the game, and to indicate to that union that it cannot do so, is to deny all the fine protestations we make about being defenders of human rights, freedoms, and in particular, defenders of the rights which come under collective bargaining.

The Minister of Labour attempted to make a point out of the fact that there is something like this contained in the Canada Labour Code. Even though I do not like it being contained in the Canada Labour Code, I point out to him that what is there is a general proposition applying in advance to any union which might get itself into that kind of situation. The unions under the Canada Labour Code know that that provision is there, but at the moment such a provision is not contained in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

• (1632)

The negotiations in which CUPW and the Treasury Board have been engaged have been on the basis of the Public Service Staff Relations Act. The government now plans to change the rule in the middle of these negotiations. Not only is this being unfair and undemocratic, not only is it a denial of all the things we profess that we stand for, but it is exploiting the fact that CUPW enjoys a certain amount of unpopularity in Canada. Because of this, whatever I may think about CUPW or about the inconvenience likely to be caused if postal service were interrupted during a general election should a strike come in May or June, I think we have to stand for the rights of people like the members of CUPW when those rights have been given them by legislation passed by parliament. Since that is the situation, we certainly intend to vote against this bill.

The Minister of Labour made reference, of course, to the Canada Labour Code. I think it is a piece of irony that for many years the postal workers under unions of various names have proposed that the Post Office be made into a Crown corporation. I remember on one occasion when representatives of CUPW appeared before a committee and this question of the Post Office being turned into a Crown corporation came up. I put the point to them in these terms: do you want to be a Crown corporation for its own sake or do you want to be a Crown corporation so that you will come under the Canada Labour Code instead of under the Public Service Staff Relations Act? The answer was that their main concern was to come under the Canada Labour Code.

I go back to 1967 when the Public Service Staff Relations legislation was before us in committee. The postal workers, represented by their various unions, appeared before us, and the same issue arose. They talked about wanting a Crown corporation, but when we put the question to them we found they wanted the kind of labour relations available under the Canada Labour Code rather than under the Public Service

Staff Relations Act. The government has refused that request year after year. The unions had to stay with the public service staff relations legislation which is under the direction of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen). But now—and this is what I find ironical—when an election is coming along, who brings in this bill to amend the Public Service Staff Relations Act? Not the Deputy Prime Minister as President of Privy Council, responsible for the Public Service Staff Relations Act, but the Minister of Labour. He is the minister under whom the postal workers have wanted to be for years. It is he who brings in this bill. Is it to do what they want him to do? No. It is to give them the one provision of the Canada Labour Code which they do not like. It really takes a lot of gall.

The minister is behind the curtain now—I see him smiling at himself—for it really takes a lot of gall to seek to give these workers the one provision under the Canada Labour Code which they do not like. He wants to change the rules in the middle of the game.

CUPW has been a problem. It has seemed to be a nuisance, an inconvenience to the Treasury Board and to the government. Moreover, the public is annoyed when a strike occurs. But what kind of a place is this if we pass rules and then say to minorities we do not like, "We shall not allow you to take advantage of these rules."

If the government thinks this is going to work, it is out of its mind. There is no denying that CUPW is what is described as a militant union. If, in the middle of May or June, the point is reached at which under the old rules the union has a right to strike, and if it is told it cannot do so because of an act passed by this parliament, the likelihood of a wildcat strike is so high that it is a wonder to me the government does not realize that it would have been far better to have dealt with this whole situation on the basis of reason and understanding rather than on the basis of this sword of Damocles. I might add that perhaps that was not the phrase to use, because the sword of Damocles never fell, but this is one which will fall if the union should exercise the right they possessed at the start of the process.

Let me say one other thing about the rule under the Canada Labour Code which is now being transposed into this bill. Under the Canada Labour Code it is a general rule applying to any unions which come under the provisions of that labour legislation. In this case, though, it is a specific clause relating to one specific union and one specific contract negotiation. The bill is designed especially for CUPW in May or June of 1978. I think somebody over there is out of his mind to bring in such legislation at this time.

I know that the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons which met for a year and a half and dealt with the Finkelman Report recommended that a general Clause such as the one in the Canada Labour Code be placed in the Public Service Staff Relations Act but, as members of that committee will recall, that was one of the reasons I voted against that report. If I recall correctly, when that report was finally brought to a vote there were 11 votes in its favour and one against. The 11 votes were cast by the Conservative and Liberal members on the committee, and I was the one who voted no.

I have taken the view that the increased penalties, stricter conditions and all the other things that are now in Bill C-28 amounted to a green light to the government to be so severe as to damage irrevocably the whole collective bargaining process available to public service employees. That is one of the dangers I see attached to this bill. I know it is a simple one-page bill. But beware of simple, one-page bills. It is a bill which would put into effect in the case of this union one of the provisions which is contained, along with many others, in Bill C-28.

I feel very strongly about Bill C-28. The things it does to limit the rights of collective bargaining in the Public Service, the exclusion of persons, additional penalties and all the rest, are leading to the point at which we shall see collective bargaining in name only in the Public Service. Mr. Speaker, you may say that Bill C-28 is not before us today. That is so. Instead, we have Bill C-45. It is a beginning. It is a first step.

I am sorry my friends in the Conservative party, who do not like this legislation any more than I do, say they intend to vote for it. In that case we shall have put on the statute books one of the provisions which is contained in Bill C-28 and it is only a matter of time, in my view, until the great principle of collective bargaining which was embodied in legislation under Lester Pearson in 1967 becomes so much form and very little substance. A far better way to deal with this situation would be to continue to rely on the negotiating process of collective bargaining and to continue to rely on an appeal to reason.

• (1642)

For all their militancy, members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers are Canadian citizens. They are very much concerned about the election process as well, and I think that there just might be a chance, if we do not pass this bill, of appealing to them, if they have a right to strike during the election period, not to do so. The appeal might fail. The strike might come off anyway, but if we do not pass this bill, and if we rely on reason and a sense of fair play, there is a chance that they will not do it. However, if we pass this bill when we try to appeal to the union not to proceed with a strike, how much of a response can we expect to get when the members of that union know that behind all of those appeals to reason will be Bill C-45, which says that they cannot strike anyway.

Decent labour relations are extremely important to our democratic way of life. I cannot go along with some of the ideas my friends to my right have as to how these things might be solved, but I will at least give them credit for thinking about things and trying to come up with something new. However, my friends across the way are not coming up with anything new. They are coming up with something very old, just prohibition. "No, you can't do it, we are boss and it has to be that way". If we do this to one group of employees in the Public Service, other will fear that it is coming their way too, and it will not be long until the whole question of public service labour relations is in a hopeless mess.

I know that a recommendation for a prohibition of strikes during the period of dissolution was in the report of our committee. It was there despite my vote against it. I know that there were many things in that committee's report which went too far and which I certainly cannot support, but I also know that in the report there was a serious—even philosophical—discussion of the whole principle of collective bargaining, including when it results in strikes. There were statistics in that report as to how minimal the strikes really are in the Public Service compared with the number of agreements which are reached without disruption, but the philosophy of that report is that we cannot go back on the principle of collective bargaining, including the choice of arbitration or strike, which was laid down in 1967.

I want to say to the Minister of Labour that he is being used by the government to do the work of the President of Privy Council and to start to break this thing down, and that the end result can be a deterioration in relations between the Treasury Board of Public Service generally. It is also a fact that this will have a very serious effect on what can actually happen during the period when the election is in progress. We could get into a situation in which negotiations break down, the report gets put into the hands of the Chairman of the Public Service Staff Relations Board, a report that does not satisfy the workers, and with this threat hanging over them there could well be a strike. It would not be a legal strike. It would be a wildcat strike. It might not be with the authority of the officers in charge of the union, but it could be just as hard on postal service as if it were a legal strike. Then not only would politicians and the election process suffer, but also the public as a whole would suffer, and one of the reasons would be this very bill, which is a threat which hangs over the heads of postal workers.

I know that it is being argued that it would almost stop the democratic process if there were a postal strike during the election period. I am not convinced of that. We have not had very much evidence of that. It is amazing how much ordinary business and intercourse go on in periods when postal strikes are on. We seem to find ways and means through the use of couriers and other services to get messages transmitted across the country. I am not so sure that in an election period, even if the mails did stop, we could not still carry on the election. Some of the other parties might have to do what we have to do with our literature. They might have to deliver it by hand, door to door.

Mr. Dinsdale: We do that, too.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My friend says they do that too. That is good. It is far better, is it not? It is faster, and when it is done with some canvassing, it is more effective. I do not think we would suffer greatly if we had to spend less money on postage to deliver our material to all the people during an election campaign.

As the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) says, it is the Liberal party which will suffer the most because it has the money to spend on this kind of thing. It is strange that it has pushed the panic button in this particular regard.

I am not standing here defending the obstinacy and the militancy, at times, of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. Mind you, when you look at some of the conditions they have had to work under, when you look at the Montpetit report and the things which were set out in that document which still have not been corrected, and when you look at the monotony of the work, the hours and all the rest of it, they do have a case for better treatment, and the only way to get better treatment is through the collective bargaining process, not by counting on some benign management to give them their rights. If the Liberals believed in collective bargaining when they brought it in in 1967, I think it should stand. Just because a union which is not popular in the country is threatening, or may threaten, to make trouble, is no reason to bring in this kind of legislation.

The fact of the matter is that there is no threat of a strike yet. It is one thing to call parliament back after a strike has started and to tell the union that it will have to go back to work, but surely it is going a little too far and becoming a little too excited even before it happens to say that if this particular union wants a strike during a certain month, it will have to wait until later when parliament can come back here to put that union back to work.

I think the government is utterly stupid to bring in this bill. I believe the bill will guarantee a wildcat strike during the election period. If that happens and if the government is looking around for someone to blame, it could not blame parliament. It could not even blame the Conservatives because, even if they voted against the bill, it would still pass with Liberal support. The Liberals could blame only themselves for having been so unwise as to bring in this kind of legislation. In the name of the rights of minorities and unpopular people, in the name of the rights we laid down when we accepted the principle of collective bargaining for public servants, and in the name of the principle that we ought not to change the rule in the middle of the game, I say that we ought to vote against Bill C-45. That is what we in this party shall do.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, this bill is entitled "An act to provide for the continuation of regular postal service". My first comment is that this is an objective toward which members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have been aspiring for ten years. I have read the bill and listened to the debate thus far, and that title is wrong in terms of guaranteeing regular service.

I am not going to use this opportunity this afternoon to recite trials and tribulations of the Post Office and the hypocritical postures which have been assumed by the government as it has carefully avoided any advice of the opposition to resolve the continuing and growing problems in the Post Office Department. That has been done here on many occasions, and I do not think there is any necessity at this time to prolong the debate on that score.

Actually, the first initiative to achieve what the bill purports to do came ten years ago from the then postmaster general. I refer to Mr. Eric Kierans, who departed in disgust from the government because he could not get anywhere in his attempts to make rhyme or reason in the Post Office situation.

● (1652)

Just to show that I am not expressing a partisan bias in this regard I will quote from the excellent article covering the Post Office problem written by Mark Nichols in the Maclean's magazine of July 11 of last year. It appeared under the title of "Dissatisfaction Guaranteed", and it reads:

> The cure suggested by Canada Post '75 might be to cut the Post Office loose from Ottawa's close embrace and turn it into a Crown corporation that would be able to function, like any other business, on a profit and loss basis—and without constant bureaucratic intrusions. Eric Kierans, during his stint as Postmaster General between 1968-1970 championed the idea—he told Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau that "if you don't make the Post Office a Crown corporation nothing is ever going to change"—and came closest to bringing it about. He successfully pushed the principle through cabinet, and, by the fall of 1970, a bill was ready to be tabled in parliament. At the last minute, Trudeau backed off, on the grounds that once the bill was tabled, no other legislation would have passed through the Commons during the session. Since then, the idea has been resurrected periodically.

I spoke on this subject as recently as last Thursday in the House and I pointed out that Treasury Board was very concerned about the problem because the report, known as Canada Post '75, which was produced by members of the Treasury Board and officials of the Post Office, indicated in one of its recommendations that there must be a further study in this regard if the difficulty were going to be resolved. The Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne), who is not with us this afternoon—he was here for a while, but perhaps he does not want to get involved in the discussion today—said that it was not possible to make that report available to other members of parliament because it would be embarrassing to members of the Post Office in that it dealt with internal matters. The document has been leaked, of course, and has been widely circulated since that time. Those of us who have had a chance to read it consider it a searing indictment of management within the Post Office Department.

Remarkably enough, to show that what we are doing here this afternoon is more a political gesture than anything else, a document has been circulated which, I think at this stage of delicate and critical contract negotiations, should be regarded as being in the same category as that in which the department places Canada Post '75, because the document which was circulated, dated April 10, 1978, is the preliminary submission of the employer to the negotiations that are going on now with respect to the dispute with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. This document, of course, is a searing indictment of the labour side of the conflict, and it is significant that while the government refused to table the indictment of management, it is quite happy to release, while the negotiations are going on, a searing indictment of labour.

Obviously there is not much desire to bring about a reconciliation of the alienation and confrontation that have brought us to the impasse where it becomes necessary for the government to rush through parliament, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, a specific item dealing with a particular area of the problems of labour-management relations in the Public Service; problems which require broad consideration. We had the recommendations of the joint committee which studied the Finkelman report. They have been in the hands of the government for two years and nothing has transpired. As a result, there has been a continuing deterioration in relations between the government and its employees.

As I have already indicated here today, I will not prolong the debate, but I think it should be pointed out that the Canadian Union of Postal Workers is, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, a militant union. That is true so far as some of the top leadership is concerned, but there is also a growing movement in CUPW towards a more moderate posture with respect to labour-management relations, realizing that unless there is a reconciliation of the confrontation and polarization which exist at present between management and labour, there will be a complete breakdown in the Post Office service, which is of course essential to the economic well-being of Canada as well as to national unity. This emerged incidentally, during the great crisis to which reference has been made, that is, the 42-day strike in 1975, just before Christmas.

I was involved in the discussions in the early part of the negotiations, and hon. members might recall that just as they reached a critical stage I had to retire from the scene for hospitalization. But before that happened, I sent a letter to the leadership of CUPW which indicated that it was essential for the well-being of Canada, and also in the interests of resolving the growing crisis in labour-management relations, that a strike be avoided at the time. Shortly thereafter my office received a call from the then president of CUPW, the well known Joe Davidson, who asked to speak to me. When he was informed that I was not available, that I was in hospital, he asked, "What is his trouble, is he sick in the head?" That represents the militant side of the postal union.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health and Welfare—Establishment of geriatric chairs in medical schools; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Health—Availability of saccharin; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—National Defence—Government policy on acceptance of neutron bomb.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Pinard: Mr. Speaker, I am told that after consultation unanimous consent was reached to proceed with Bill S-10 through all stages without debate. If so, then we could proceed with C-233, and I would ask then that the previous bills be allowed to stand with the unanimous consent of the House.

● (1702)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Bill S-10, as I understand it, is in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) and it involves the Royal Canadian Legion. I am pleased to say that we consent to the procedure as outlined by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Peters: We are quite pleased to agree with it, but not without debate.

Mr. Francis: In view of the agreement perhaps the hon. member from Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) might make a short statement at the committee stage.

Mr. Peters: I believe we might.

PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West) moved that Bill S-10, respecting the Royal Canadian Legion, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that that is what the hon. member has in mind. I think that if there is an agreement, it is to pass it and not refer it to the committee, and for this reason I would like to say a few words.

I saw this bill for the first time yesterday. I noted that one of the things being asked for is the inclusion of members other than those initially understood to be eligible for membership in the Canadian Legion. Being a Legion member, and having no other reason, I objected yesterday to that procedure. Since then I have had an opportunity to talk to the Dominion Commander of the Royal Canadian Legion. He indicated to me that he and a lot of other members had the same reservations that I have in not only allowing retired RCMP personnel to be members, but also RCMP who are still in active service.

Normally, Legion members have been retired army veterans, and indeed, that is what the title means. Because of the fortunate circumstance where we have not a war for the last 30 years, it has been obvious—because many of the veterans are getting older—and most of them are my age or more, or at least in their fifties—that membership in the Royal Canadian Legion would run out if it were to depend entirely on veterans. It was decided by the Legion—and it is indicated in the work they have done in the last 20 years in such fields as sports, the training of hockey teams, public speaking debates, community advancement and community assistance—that they would have to take in other members. They originally took in, without any particular objection, sons, daughters, relatives, wives and others closely associated with the veterans, because it was felt that they would carry on the tradition of the Legion. More than that, it would maintain the benefits to older veterans—as a place to go, a place to own, and a place to feel at home with colleagues—in a manner to which they have been accustomed.

Personally, I saw the bringing in of active members of the RCMP, not just retired officers, as something that would change the Legion considerably. I have talked to a number of people and they agree with me. The Legion itself at their last convention had some considerable discussion about this, during which they took into consideration several other facts which were unknown to me and, I suppose to most Legion members.

When the Legion was founded in 1928 they did take in the active members of the RCMP because it was considered a para-military organization, although the impression is that it is less of a para-military organization today than at that time. RCMP officers were brought into the Legion as full members, and this continued until 1948 when they changed from the corporation they had at that time to letters patent. The Dominion President informs me that there was an oversight at that time, and they inadvertently left the RCMP out.

I could say that that would be with some justification, but that probably is not true because I and most other veterans were unaware that they had the right to full membership in the first place. I belong to the Legion, and have done so for many years. I am not particularly active because duties keep me from participating. I am prepared, Mr. Speaker, to accept the decision of the membership of that organization, duly constituted at a convention where this matter was raised to satisfy the problem that they had created of inadvertently removing the RCMP by letters patent to allow the RCMP personnel to become full members again.

I am informed by the Dominion President that the vote was in excess of the two thirds that is necessary to make such a change, and they were instructed by that convention in 1976 to make the change. It is interesting to note that much of the support for the action that they were taking came, I am told, from western Canadians. The RCMP play a much closer role to the average citizen in the small rural communities of western Canada than they do in eastern Canada. The support was very large in western Canada, and they overwhelmingly supported the motion. While I am still not personally convinced that this is the direction in which I would like to see the Legion go, it is the direction which the membership chose.

I am pleased to support the changes introduced by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) in presenting this bill on behalf of the Legion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair understands that the House could be disposed to consider this bill in committee of the whole rather than refer it to the standing committee. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It is so ordered.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

● (1712)

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[Translation]

RAILWAY AMENDMENT ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO ENSURE METROPOLITAN TRANSPORTATION IMPROVEMENTS NOT EXPENSE TO REST OF COUNTRY

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton) moved:

That Bill C-233, respecting the policy of financing transportation in non-metropolitan areas, be read for the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill C-233 which I introduce this afternoon deals with the financing of transportation in non-metropolitan areas and more especially in outlying areas removed from the important economic centres of Canada. It is aimed at amending the Railway Act so that improvements of transportation in metropolitan areas should not be prejudicial to the remainder of the country. You understand that it is my duty to object to some plans to reduce or even eliminate services as well as to any increase toward self-financing which would lead to higher costs to users. As for us, and I want to be the spokesman for areas in Canada more or less remove from large urban centres, it would mean that we would still be farther from economic centres, that there should be increasing possibilities of massive exodus from our peripheral areas. However, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to admit that there are difficulties and that the solutions are complex, but what we do not accept is that service reductions should be justified by the need to reduce government expenses and the profitability of transportation companies. The arguments of the minister are valid, but he must defend them since he has all the talents and the effectiveness of a true Minister of Transport. We must therefore be even more cautious if we want to ensure the protection of our regions. The government should not suggest across-the-board answers to reduce costs and eliminate services since we would consider this unacceptable. In fact, what the government is now doing is subtracting, subtracting grants, subtracting services, driving people away from certain areas, which means that certain regions are becoming increasingly vast and under-populated with fantastic costs per capita when you consider the distances and the transportation volume.

In short, Mr. Speaker, what we want is for the government to bring out a comphrehensive transportation policy instead of any changes that it would want to make. We do not want to be conned into co-operating with those who would find arguments to deprive us of services if tomorrow those same people do not give us the promised solutions. This is a matter of distributive justice; we should not think only of the number of people whom we will have to learn to serve in this country, but also of serving the people wherever they may be.

The facts that I want to submit to this House are as follows. First, in our peripheral areas, in the Montreal region, for instance, the problems with passenger and freight transport are increasing every day. Second, if we consider present and future energy costs and potential, and the need to conserve energy, we believe that the government has the responsibility to give not only direction, but also assured leadership in this area. Third, as taxpayers and on behalf of other Canadian taxpayers, we cannot accept that this government be content to suffer deficits, even if they are real, without requiring this same government to take the means to find true solutions for now and for the future. And for us, this answer is not to eliminate deficits and to continue to increase the population of urban areas.

Another fact: remote areas are becoming increasingly remote, so it is not true to say that distances have become irrelevant. You just have to evaluate the cost to be convinced that we are moving backwards, that we are becoming increasingly remote from all points of view, thus more vulnerable and with ever fewer economic incentives.

If the government considers that Montreal and Toronto are the end of the world, it should tell us so, otherwise the same government should give back the initiative to those who in the past had found and paid for means to promote development, particularly a railway transportation system in remote areas.

Thus, before curtailing further any of the existing services, the CTC and the government should introduce a global transportation policy for today and tomorrow. We cannot accept less. It is not only a matter of profitability, but a matter of viability. In other words, who will have the means to stay in a remote area, at what condition and at what price? Profitability has been proven and it always spells reduction or even unavoidable elimination of services. No one has the means to pay for that profitability but no one can accept the elimination of services, not even the government, and the only answer to which we are entitled is a global transportation policy in which the government will assume its responsibilities, as will the citizen in full awareness of the situation.

I for one would think that railways will regain their status as they become again the only means available for passenger and freight transportation. We should right now plan the infrastructures, the equipment and the services our regions need to become economically, commercially and industrially competitive. It is an absolute necessity. To accept a cut-back of services is too risky and too costly. We would be shortchanging ourselves by being complacently understanding and showing good faith.

So the government must take position: either it will continue to tolerate or encourage abandonment, and the recent urbanization statistics clearly prove it, or it will reduce distances through a subsidized and appropriate public communication system and through a transportation policy that will give to our regions the economic stimulus they absolutely require.

As concerns the companies presently involved in rail transportation we also recognize their problems but we cannot accept that they share those profitability problems with municipalities for instance or private organizations. Here are two examples of that exploitation of municipalities and private organizations.

The companies require from municipalities a contribution to build access roads to some grade crossings. The contribution to the works themselves seems acceptable to me but the participation in maintenance costs is totally unacceptable. In my opinion, it is a cost transfer imposed upon a municipality which has no justification.

The Canadian Pacific wants to force snowmobile associations to reimburse expenses for the maintenance of railroad crossings used by snowmobiles. That is another example of the cost transfer unfairly imposed upon a group which has neither the will nor the financial means to take it. Is that supposed to mean that railways are going to become a nuisance rather than a service in addition to others in regions such as ours?

Here is a list of questions which arise from the present situation. Are railway companies going to keep on persecuting poor people? Do they intend to reduce their services to the point where nobody will be interested in using them anymore? As companies contributed at a certain time to create subdivisions, do they contribute today to their isolation or even their disappearance? Or else, are the Canadian Transport Commission and the government prepared to introduce an over-all policy on transportation which would aim at saving peripheral regions from disappearance and would allow each citizen to adjust with full knowledge of the facts?

In short, we do not and we will not accept any decrease in services and we demand that an over-all policy on transportation be established.

Mr. Speaker, I am inspired in my action by fear and fear, as they say, is the beginning of wisdom.

There is an attempt to convince us with arguments which seem logical but in fact one thing only is accomplished and it is to make us more vulnerable by destroying us through our own co-operation for in the last resort we will have no other choice than folding out.

[Mr. Tessier.]

We know that the government has recommended to the Canadian Transport Commission that passenger trains serving scarcely populated areas be replaced by buses so as to eliminate the need for federal subsidies. Yet at the same time, the railways increase their rates beyond the means of present and future train users.

This policy of "user pay" is detrimental to areas such as mine and Bill C-233, by limiting further service reduction and price increases, would contribute to a fair treatment policy for all regions.

Furthermore, this bill would give us an assurance against the great schemers who are constantly alienating us and persecuting us with economic arguments.

Mr. Speaker, may I ask that if these brilliant economists do not succeed in their great urban designs, that they at least do not come to pollute our countryside with their theories, least of all make us pay for them.

I wish our Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) were the best minister ever in his field but he will certainly not be so by saving on the backs of those who are economically speaking the weakest in our society and he will indeed be recognized as our best minister ever, when his transportation policy will enable the population to continue dwelling on this land by facing fair and reasonable costs and will transform our regions into economic areas where it will be possible to work and produce goods at competitive prices in order for them to stay on the market.

That is one of the objectives of a rational transportation policy to be established before we are asked to put up with reduced services and higher costs.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, it is worth mentioning that the transportation policy we are calling for would not only apply to trains but should also study all the transportation methods and put forth solutions which would take into account the particular needs of remote areas.

● (1722)

[English]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I understand the purpose of this bill is to ensure that transportation improvements in the metropolitan regions of Canada are not carried out at the expense of the rest of the country. May I sincerely say "Amen" to the hon. member's explanatory note.

In my own area I have a great interest in what has happened over the last few years regarding the Esquimalt-Nanaimo Railroad, which is the only railroad on Vancouver Island. It may be interesting for members to note that we also have a narrow gauge highway as our only means of communication on the east side of Vancouver Island. The Esquimalt-Nanaimo Railroad which was taken over by the CPR in 1912 has, for the last number of years, been trying to do two things. First of all it tried to cut off passenger service entirely, and secondly to discontinue freight service by letting the trestles rot. Then it told the Canadian Transport Commission that it was too expensive to repair them, and it would have to let the freight service go as well.

I would like to give some background on a situation which I consider heinous. I think the CPR have done the worst job of public relations that I have ever seen them do in the way that they have handled, mishandled, or botched the situation on Vancouver Island concerning the Esquimalt-Nanaimo railroad. I would like to quote a condition concerning this railroad:

> In 1883 and 1884, legislation was passed by the Dominion and Provincial Governments for the construction of a railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo. The contractor was a Vancouver Island businessman, Mr. Robert Dunsmuir and Associates. The terms of construction specified that "The character of the Railway and its equipment shall be in all respects equal to the general character of the Canadian Pacific Railway, now under contruction in British Columbia and the equipment thereof." It also stated "that the said Contractors shall commence the works embraced in this Contract forthwith and shall complete and equip the same by the 10th day of June 1887 . . ."

One of the other conditions for this railroad was that the federal government, through legislation, authorized the construction and contributed the sum of $750,000 to the construction of a railway from Esquimalt to Nanaimo. The Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, as a result of this grant from the federal government and as a result of a grant from the province of British Columbia, agreed to carry out, and I quote:

> —truly and in good faith to keep and maintain the same, and the rolling stock required therefor, in good and efficient working and running order, and shall continuously and in good faith operate the same—

After making that statement, and receiving grants from the province of British Columbia and a grant from the federal government, the railway said they would carry out in good faith and in good order the operation of that railway continuously.

Let me tell you what has happened since then. I will let you decide, Mr. Speaker, whether in fact the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway, which was subsequently taken over by the CPR in 1912, has carried out that promise. It is almost like a tale of horror. Starting in approximately 1969 the CPR, in one form or another, have sought to cut off this service which they said they would maintain as a result of obtaining funds and land from both the provincial and federal sources.

● (1732)

In 1970 public hearings were held on an application by Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company to discontinue passenger service. I should like to quote some of the evidence given before the Canadian Transport Commission in order to apprise the House of the situation which was existent regarding passenger service. The CTC indicated that it became apparent, as far as advertising was concerned, that very little had been done by E & N. One must remember we are talking about a railway; we are not talking about a service from one house to another in a town. In 1969, E & N spent the grand total of $150 advertising the services of the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company which serviced Victoria to Courtenay. I realize $150 was a grand sum of money in 1969, and that $150 was spent on advertising the service of a railway line on Vancouver Island. That amount was used to publish a timetable. That was the total expense of the Canadian Pacific Railway on Vancouver Island to advertise its service. I hesitate to say that Canadian Pacific was in fact doing no advertising because it allocated the $150. But I wonder about the sincerity of that organization and whether it really wanted to keep that line in operation. Were they ready, willing or able to advertise to people from all parts of Canada and the United States that such a service existed and that they would actually promote it for tourism? Even if the local residents were forgotten about, it appears to me that particular corporation had no intention whatsoever of advising people who would use that service that in fact it even existed.

I should like to refer to some of the things E & N did to maintain its passenger service:

> According to the evidence given at the hearing, many station platforms were in dangerous condition or overgrown with weeds and various undergrowth; station buildings and shelters were in a state of disrepair, and all stations were closed and locked on Saturdays and holidays. The equipment used at that time was one RDC-3 (rail diesel car) unit consisting of a baggage compartment (where no baggage, express or mail was carried) and a passenger compartment with 48 seats. Further evidence indicated that "the baggage compartment is used to seat passengers when from time to time all the seats in the passenger compartment are full . . ."

I am not sure whether the E & N was really concerned with providing a passenger service. The stations were in a state of disrepair. As I say, they were closed on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays. At times passengers were put in the luggage compartment because there was no room in the passenger compartment. When I indicated that this was a tale of horror, I meant it. Is this indicative of a company which wishes to progress and carry on with its passenger service, or would this be a company which was attempting to get out of passenger service by providing the worst possible service under the worst possible conditions to encourage people not to use its service?

The answer to that is obvious. At that time the CTC laid down certain regulations which E & N would have to abide by. It is almost unbelievable that the Canadian Transport Commission would have to tell a transportation company such elementary things as, first, that it must maintain in a good state of repair all its passenger stations, shelters and platforms on the line between Victoria and Courtenay, British Columbia; second, that it has to keep all such stations and shelters in a clean, sanitary and safe condition. Is it revolutionary to have to tell the CPR to keep its facilities clean? The CTC had to do that because E & N were not keeping them clean. In other words, the customers were being told that their business was not wanted, and the faster they quit using the service, the faster E & N could go to the CTC in order to tell the commission that its operation was non-economic. The CTC was required to tell E & N that it must keep its stations and shelters in a clean, sanitary and safe condition. In other words, they were not in a safe condition when these recommendations were made.

Third, they were told to keep their stations and shelters open for suitable periods of time on all days on which the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company trains 1 and 2 operate. It is ridiculous for the CTC to tell a transportation company to keep its stations open when its trains are running.

Fourth, they were told to remove all weeds and undergrowth from station platforms.

Fifth, they were told to provide sufficient accommodation on their railway cars so that people did not have to travel in the baggage compartment. If I told someone this type of thing happens in Canada today, perhaps they would say that I am referring to a third world country. Surely Vancouver Island is not a third world country. If E & N was interested in running a service, these elemental things had to be taken care of.

Following this, the CTC indicated that E & N could not stop its passenger service. The CPR said that it spent funds to upgrade its service and stations, as well as not put people in baggage compartments but actually allow them to sit on the seats. That may or may not be the case. In 1976, the same railway company applied to the CTC to do two things. The first was to discontinue freight service because the trestles going across gorges had fallen into such a state of disrepair that it was unsafe for trains to cross them. The second thing they were applying for was to have the passenger service discontinued once again. It is unbelievable in this and age to hear such stories.

The city of Nanaimo and its council recently sent me a telegram. It read as follows:

> ... by announcement that Canadian Transport Commission will permit the company to discontinue the E & N dayliner service on Vancouver Island and urge you to challenge the ruling of the commission.

I am not going to challenge the ruling of that Commission. I say that not because I agree with the ruling which came out, namely that because of loss of operating capital, E & N could shut down its passenger service. The reason I will not challenge it is because the course of action of a member of parliament is to petition the Privy Council to overturn that decision. I do not want to challenge decisions of the CTC, but in a recent letter which I sent to Mr. Pitfield, the Clerk of the Privy Council, I requested that under provision 641 of the National Transportation Act that order No. R25960 be rescinded.

Complications have arisen since that time. In the Supreme Court of Canada the province of British Columbia challenged the right of the CPR to discontinue its service, due to the fact that moneys and land were granted to E & N under the original construction grant in order to provide a continuous service on Vancouver Island.

Prior to challenging the decision of the CTC, the province of British Columbia should have contacted the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Privy Council to determine whether they in fact would overturn the decision without going through a long legal process where normally lawyers are the only ones who come out ahead. However, in its wisdom the province of British Columbia decided to go through the Supreme Court of Canada. I think the question could have been resolved more speedily if the province of British Columbia had made an application, as I did, to overturn that decision by means of a Privy Council decision. As I mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker, we have a narrow highway on the east side of Vancouver Island which runs from Victoria to Kelsey Bay. It is totally inadequate to handle the number of people who travel on it during the summer months. With good planning, good management, good equipment and a reasonable timetable the service would make money, not lose money. It is ludicrous that at a time when more and more people are coming to Vancouver Island for a variety of reasons the company should cut down the service by half.

• (1742)

The public relations of the CPR must have reached an all-time low when they brought forward this latest proposal to discontinue passenger service on Vancouver Island. The people of Vancouver Island have a great distrust of a company which was given an enormous amount of land upon which to build a railroad in the first place. If we take into account the value of that land today we would probably find it would be worth around a billion dollars. Yet we are talking about losing a few hundred thousand by operating a passenger service. The reason the service is not profitable is that the bloody railway has done everything possible to provide worse service in order that they can lose money and then say to the CTC: My goodness, this is awful, we are losing money, please help us, rescue us from our predicament.

I do not think they should be rescued from their predicament. I think they should be made to provide better service with better equipment and make money. I hate to tell the CPR people how to make money, but it is very simple: provide reasonable, low-cost service which meets the demands of the people of the area. Do not start trains running at midnight to reach Victoria at dawn. You don't start your service out of town at midnight, because there is not much you can do at midnight in Victoria. My point is that, given a reasonable schedule, people will use the service, thus avoiding the tie-ups which they face on the highway. They will use the service if fares are reasonable and the cars are clean—they do not want to be put into the baggage compartment.

For these reasons I heartily endorse the bill introduced by the hon. member who spoke before me. I think companies such as the CPR have used poor service to discourage people in order that an application might be made to the CTC on a spurious basis. This has happened not only in Victoria but across Canada. I hope these companies will be brought to task and obliged to provide the service they undertook to provide in return for the land which was given them a long time ago.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to support what has obviously become a violent attack on the structure of the CTC and particularly upon the atrocious Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) who holds office over there. Both the hon. members who have spoken sound like opposition members. It is going to be some election if they vote one way for four years and suddenly get on the opposite side.

The remarks of the previous speaker brings tears to one's eyes because his story reminds everyone of what has happened in their own areas. I can see in my mind's eye all those little stations which have not been painted for years, beside which grass is growing between the rusty tracks. I am surprised, though, that all this should have come to the attention of those hon. members only in the last few days of the present parliament. I heard their Minister of Transport outlining his great schemes, schemes which all hinge upon one simple proposition—user-pay. This means that if a line does not make money for the railways it ought to be closed down. The Minister of Transport is, without doubt, one of the most hard-hearted, hard-headed, thick-headed ministers of transport we have had. If the story we have just heard had come to the attention of the former minister of transport he would, I am sure, have done something about it. But to the hard-hearted minister we have now, nothing else matters except user-pay. He does not care about the service provided; just let the company show a profit at the end of the year.

We in this party have been saying for a long time that service, not profit, was the purpose of the railways. We own one of them and whether it makes a profit or not is, in our view, incidental to the provision of service. The bill before us is a private member's bill, so the idea is to solve the problem in a way which will not cost the taxpayers any money. To some extent, the hon. member is right. If the company were to decide to provide a service in the cheapest and most beneficial way possible, it is likely it would be profitable.

Not too long ago I attended a CTC hearing and shocked the CNR by supporting its application to drop passenger service between North Bay and Toronto. I might explain that the company did not really intend to drop it. All the company wanted was to get a subsidy so that they would be paid for whatever mess they had made along that route. They did not only screw up the CN, Mr. Speaker, they screwed up the Ontario Northland Railway as well. They did not care whether it was easier for passengers to get from Moosonee, Timmins, Kapuskasing, and other points, to Toronto. All they wanted was a huge subsidy. Ask them if they will sell the operation and allow someone else to operate it, and the answer is "No way".

● (1752)

I sympathize with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) when he refers to a very picturesque little railway on Vancouver Island. We are talking about the great expense of getting the Canadian people to travel and to see Canada. I have been to Vancouver Island many times, and I can think of no better way of seeing the beauty of Vancouver Island than to travel on that railway and visit the little communities along the railway. It would be particularly advantageous for eastern Canadians to do so.

In 1978 I expect that there should be some degree of comfort and that passenger trains should not have to travel over trestles which have been condemned for freight. I expect that there should be modern, up-to-date railways to provide service. The Liberal party has sat on its hands in this House and listened to the Minister of Transport talk for several years about abandoning the transportation system in Canada, not making repairs and not updating it. The minister has been talking about abandoning the transportation system wherever it does not make a profit.

The minister says we should provide user-pay service, and that when it becomes profitable we should sell the operation piece by piece. He says we should sell only those sectors of transportation which are profitable. Hon. members opposite are not going to be able to go across the country during an election campaign and say that they are in favour of improving the system because they were too weak to stand up to the Minister of Transport, who has decided on a totally different policy. He is going to put money into Mirabel, into the turbo train between Montreal and Toronto and into that corridor to Windsor. Why? Because those publicly owned ventures will be profitable, and when they are, the minister will sell them. The government bought railroad cars to transport grain and lent them to the railways so that they can haul the grain without having to make that expenditure. Granted, the railways are losing money, but we are providing them with many components. Now they are asking us to fix roadbeds, upgrade stations and to do other things.

Like the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, I have a story to tell, but mine is about northern Ontario. The government of Ontario went to Europe and bought a train which the Europeans were no longer going to use. The train which was purchased is the train movies are made about. It is a beautiful little train. The Swiss, the Belgians, the French and others who were using that train were getting rid of it, so we brought it into Canada. The United States violently opposed its coming into North America because it is European built, has European parts and will need European repairs. Canadian National opposed it. The Canadian Transport Commission opposed it. They went over that train as if they were looking at a new aeroplane which would fly at twice the speed of sound. However, it was finally approved.

The train ran from Kapuskasing to Toronto. It was faster than any other mode of ground transportation. In Europe the train ran at 80 or 90 miles an hour. But what happened? Canadian National said the train had to fit into its time schedule and the CN did not want it going that fast on its track. CN did not want to meet the kinds of commitments which were possible with that kind of train. According to CN, the train started at the wrong time, arrived at its destination at the wrong time and sat on the track too much. Instead of making the trip from Timmins to Toronto in five or six hours the train was put on a schedule which would mean a longer trip than a trip by car. The train could travel safely and efficiently. It could provide a beautiful service and much quicker than any other mode of ground transportation. Let not the Liberals say they are now prepared to support proper transportation in areas other than urban areas where it would obviously be profitable. We know that has not been done yet, and we know that the Liberals have not voted for anything which would accomplish that.

Unfortunately this bill will be talked out. It is being used for propaganda, and I say that is a disgrace. If hon. members are honest, if they believe that in the next parliament we can change the user-pay concept and provide service for all Canadians in all parts of Canada, then if a bill of this nature is introduced again they should support it, as I will.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to speak for very long. The title and the purpose of the bill are clear. The purpose is well outlined in the bill. It is to remedy some of the things referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). The present Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is famous for his user-pay policy. I am interested in the manner in which the explanatory note is worded. It says the following:

> Government consultants have recommended to the Canadian Transport Commission that passenger trains serving less populous regions be replaced by buses in order to eliminate federal subsidies. At the same time the railways are increasing fares beyond the ability of many passengers to pay.

That is exactly what the Minister of Transport tried to sell and did sell to the premiers of the maritime provinces. For that reason I think the bill is very constructive. It is a private member's bill which is a reversal of existing government policy; and I have no hesitation in saying that I support the bill because it seems to be maritime-oriented.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles Lapointe (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, obviously, the underlying philosophy—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Lapointe: Mr. Speaker, I had the decency to keep quiet and listen closely to hon. members when they made their speeches. I trust they will extend the same courtesy to me.

Mr. Speaker, the underlying principles of this bill are of course very praiseworthy and justifiable, but I feel that the present national transport policy provides all necessary barriers to enable the Canadian Transport Commission to take into account precisely those concerns expressed by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier). He himself, when he made his excellent speech earlier, was able to take advantage of those CTC rules last spring when he appeared before the commission and pleaded his case for extending passenger services in his area which case he actually won.

Mr. Speaker, though I find this bill very attractive in some regards, and because I come from an area which is also far removed from Canadian metropolises and which, unfortunately, lost its only passenger service running from Quebec City and Murray Bay, though, as I say, I find this bill very appealing, the fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that neither the minister nor anyone else can be blamed for trying to put some measure of order in our national policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. The hour allotted for private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

POSTAL SERVICE OPERATIONS ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF REGULAR POSTAL OPERATIONS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) that Bill C-45, to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. At five o'clock the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) had the floor. He has 29 minutes remaining to him.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, as you will recall, at five o'clock I was making the point that there is an encouraging development within the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, and that is a growing sentiment among the responsible members that confrontation and polarization must end before the existence of the Post Office Department is threatened. This situation has not been developing overnight. As a matter of fact, I am sure hon. members will be aware—those who follow postal affairs closely—that it was emerging during the crisis that was brought about in the 42 days strike in 1975.

I should like to quote again from the article by Mark Nichols in the July issue of Macleans magazine where he refers to the following incident:

> At times, the hard line positions taken by CUPW leadership appear to have run far ahead of rank and file sentiment. Toward the end of the tumultuous 1975 strike, says Bryce Mackasey, who was postmaster general at the time, "it became very evident to me that the majority of the workers were satisfied with Ottawa's offer, and equally obvious that the leadership didn't want to settle." "Had the strike continued for just a few more days," says Mackasey, the workers would have begun returning to work and the union leadership would have been effectively broken. Rather than have that happen—"because I am not malicious"—Mackasey made a few minor concessions that enabled the leadership to save face and the strike was over.

That was my own impression at the time. The loss of business was becoming critically evident, even two years ago, and the deficits have been going up astronomically since that time. The advent of private courier service, including the attempts of the United Postal Service from the United States to come to Canada, and also the availability of electronic communications technology, all made it necessary for the postal workers to reappraise their militant position, and as I have indicated, responsible members of CUPW were expressing themselves publicly and have done so since that time in even stronger terms. I would say—and I think I can say it without fear of contradiction—that leaders such as Joe Davidson, who says that the public can go to hell, no longer carry the judgment of the great majority of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers with respect to post office matters. This was evident in the situation that developed in Toronto just before Christmas last year when it appeared there would be another pre-Christmas strike. Wiser sentiments prevailed and wiser judgments were listened to by the vast majority of the workers at this very critically important post office centre, and that strike was avoided.

● (2012)

Unfortunately, as has been said earlier during this debate, to bring legislation such as we are facing precipitously into the House of Commons on the eve of the dissolution of this House will do nothing to help this encouraging development within labour that has been emerging over recent years. I know that the government is attempting to create a law and order image, but the public of Canada can detect hypocrisy. The public was fooled during the last election by the hypocritical stand of the government in respect of wage and price controls. The hon. member who was then the leader of our party, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), said in a very forthright and honest manner that what Canada needed was restraint because public expenditure was out of control. That hon. member went to the people with a program of wage and price restraint that was ridiculed by the Liberal party from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down, only to have that group reverse itself within a year. I do not think the public is going to be confused or fooled by the cynical turn-about-face in respect of its lackadaisical and delinquent attitude in failing to come to grips with the problem of labour management relations in the public service.

Perhaps I should read from an interesting ComTeam Bulletin that came to my attention. The ComTeam Bulletin represents an attempt by post office management to establish dialogue between labour and management in the Post Office Department. This bulletin was issued on February 8, 1978 under the heading "The Right to Strike in the Public Service". It states in part:

> According to Prime Minister Trudeau, the right to strike isn't the problem. In a letter to a major mailing organization Mr. Trudeau said that stifling the worst symptom of the ailment is not a cure.

That is what we are trying to do tonight. The bulletin goes on to state:

> He suggests that we must deal with the perceptions that labour and management have of themselves as adversaries. Mr. Trudeau sees the basic challenge as one of securing from labour and management a sense of shared responsibility for making sure the enterprise survives.

> Mr. Trudeau points out that, while cynics may scorn this approach in favour of a hard line, experience has proven that conflict between labour and management is neither inherent nor inevitable. Mr. Trudeau said, "Consider the more harmonious relationships that exist in some other countries, for instance, West Germany. And in our Post Office, the letter carriers union is participating with management in a problem-solving program, which has succeeded in defusing some potentially explosive grievances."
>
> Mr. Trudeau closed by insisting that his government will pursue its efforts to get all participants in collective bargaining in the public service to make the process work so that increased regulation doesn't become necessary.

The Prime Minister has reversed himself completely since that statement was made and reported in the ComTeam Bulletin.

While it is necessary to go along with this arbitrary piece of legislation, it will do nothing to solve the long standing problems that were recognized ten years ago by the then postmaster general, the hon. Eric Kierans. An election is the only process that will resolve the problem, because it will provide the opposition, when it goes to the other side of the House, with an opportunity to consider the setting up of a Crown or public corporation, which we have been advocating for a number of years and which was advocated by Mr. Kierans those many years ago. This has also been suggested by a Treasury Board study and other documents well known to members of this House. It will then be possible to get management, postal workers and postal users working together on a management committee to resolve problems as they arise.

This is another recommendation we have been making repeatedly, and to which the Prime Minister refers in respect of the harmonious labour relations in West Germany. It will be possible to provide training for shop stewards and supervisors. This will provide them with the knowledge of industrial relations needed when dealing with sensitive people issues such as those at the heart of the present confrontation in the post office. Finally, it will provide an opportunity to establish a public interest disputes commission to help defuse explosive issues.

I have been in touch with members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers today in an attempt to get their reaction to this arbitrary piece of legislation. The majority group I referred to briefly in my remarks tonight has assured me it will obey the law provided the workers have the protection of the present contract until such time as a new contract is agreed to. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) has indicated he will be introducing an amendment to this effect before this legislation is approved. I certainly urge that he proceed in that direction. We will support him reluctantly, realizing it is stop gap and temporary, believing that the election will ultimately resolve the problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on this new bill. This is not the first time that happens here in the House of Commons, but here we are again discussing a measure which shows that the labour legislation is far from being geared to present needs. I have already said that many laws are drafted and passed, mostly labour laws, much more out of a sense of fear of what an election may bring than for the good of people. Bill C-45 is a good example that government jugglers do not always come up with the best suggestions. Having made concessions without sufficiently taking into account the adverse effects they might have, the government now feels compelled to enact legislation to take away from a certain group of workers the right to strike they had granted them.

According to the definition in the dictionary, that process could be termed as absurdity, for it is really absurd to legislate to give a group of workers the right to strike and, after a while, pass a legislation to take it away; that has happened before at the time of the railway strike and, unfortunately, we are now again discussing a legislation with the same object.

I understand, and I had the opportunity to read the recent announcement by the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) who said today that he supported fully the preliminary statement made by the employer before the conciliation board concerning the controversial points. Of course, it is another passage of this announcement. The statement made today repeats the employer's point of view on the events and the facts which prevented both parties from coming to an agreement and the salary increase sought represents a considerable amount of money. This is also one of the reasons why the government introduces this bill but particularly, and I repeat, it is the fear to have a strike during the election campaign which would make it more difficult for those hon. members to communicate with the electorate. I recognize frankly that this reason is questionable. The essential would rather be—and here we act urgently—to introduce a labour legislation which would meet the needs.

Hon. members know just like me that there were written documents published in various places, big books dealing with these questions, but among other things I have here a fairly simple article which is full of good sense. It reads, and I quote:

> This is surely no longer a time for this kind of pressure on employers. If every person, rich or poor, would care, we would surely find a solution. We should put human value on top of everything. Sooner or later, we shall have to do so. Why not start immediately?
>
> As a matter of fact, in the past we have always followed the United States. This time it would be a good thing to find ourselves a substitute for strikes. Personally I think that if a jury can judge whether an individual is guilty or innocent, they could also decide on a collective agreement. Surely there are other people who have better ideas than these awful work stoppages.

● (2022)

I remember having made that suggestion to the House and besides our party has looked into a number of questions related to strikes. I had the opportunity to do union work during ten years, at a time when we were lucky enough to negotiate collective agreements with many employers, while always preventing a strike, because everybody knows that a strike is not a solution but a necessary evil which must be avoided as much as possible. It is a pity to see that there are still people with enough imagination to think that the solution to the various labour-management problems is a work stoppage. It is pure nonsense. We should logically recognize that all human achievements result from work. It takes only a few minutes of reflection to realize that we are going round in a vicious circle, without any practical solution.

The only concession possible to justify a strike is to view it as an attempt to catch up on the ever rising cost of living under the present system. The right to strike is not fundamental either. It is a phenomenon related to various states of generalized unrest. We must look for the cause of all such situations which have become generalized, but first of all, we must try to find the cause which becomes an eventual means of pressure, because the strike proposal is subject to a vote and the decision is often taken by a small percentage of the workers concerned.

Generally, strikes are aimed against those who pay instead of being aimed at those who deprive the workers. I have said before and I say again that a strike should be directed mainly against the infamous system under which everybody suffers. That is where the strike should be directed, and after changing our corrupt financial system, it would then be much easier to negotiate collective agreements and to get management and labour to agree.

It often happens that any misuse of the means resorted to prevents one from achieving one's aim. We have often noted that some agreements turn into disagreements. A certain percentage of negotiators persist in reinstating their right to have rights, with the result that there are many protests, often based on misunderstanding which more often than not leads to confusion.

Most people demand what they believe to be their rights, without much regard for duties, when a solution must be found to complex problems. I can understand that the situation can become complex. The longer the strike and the negotiations, the more different judicial levels are called upon to solve the conflict, the more the people get exasperated and willing to accept any suggestion. We must never forget, for example, that the right to live far outweighs the right to strike or to lock out.

In this stressful and conflict-ridden climate, whether in industry or elsewhere, and with a legislation inspired by fear in front of the dominating world of finance, it is difficult to find an equitable solution to the labour and management problems of the day. Governments will have to become conscious of their responsibilities with the group of experts they have available to them, and apply a true piece of legislation which does not reflect the control of profiteers on the one hand nor the fear of the behaviour of certain unions on the other, but an understanding, honest, human, just and truly social legislation which provides for an equitable distribution of profits and the guarantee of reasonable wages to workers. It should be possible to draft acts in a clear and concise manner that can be understood by those concerned. It is worth trying because peaceful relations between management and labour are at stake.

As long as we fail to replace the system of adversary confrontation by a completely different approach based on genuine cooperation, the bad faith stirred by economic conflicts will continue to be a sad reality. Management and unions will still be paralyzed by bitter conflicts which are only the logical result of a tense and quarrelsome atmosphere surrounding many collective bargainings. Nobody wants to yield; everyone wants to win. It is like the game of tug of war: the stronger wins, the winner takes all.

Considering the drastic changes occurring in our society, we should ask ourselves whether the present system of collective bargaining can really enable us to establish economic and dynamic social justice. The Woods task force stated it quite clearly and I quote:

Over the years an increasingly complicated range of issues has found its way onto the bargaining table. The introduction of elaborate fringe benefit schemes, especially in the health, welfare and pension fields, and intricate job and income security arrangements, have forced the parties into more sophisticated relationship requiring something beyond crisis bargaining.

According to Dean Woods and his colleagues, unions and management have failed to adapt the new technology to make work a more enriching activity of man. They insist that this regrettable failure is partly due to the fact that "unions and collective bargaining were not designed to handle problems growing out of the nature of work itself". The authors of the Woods report have expressed a sound criticism, and I quote:

Unions do not seem to have recognized the magnitude of the problem. Organized labour has long talked about alienation from work, but its answer seems to have been to ensure workers more generous pay to compensate for their frustrating life on the job with a good life off the job. This has not and will not solve the problem and overtime will likely become an increasingly ineffectual and expensive palliative.

It is obvious that we must interest the worker in his job. There are various means at our disposal to achieve that purpose. A few months ago the government was prepared to provide fairly large amounts of money to union organizations and it was inclined to do it—I have the statement before me to prove it—and actually accepted the idea. If that is the case, we must see to it that this money is properly spent and we must recognize at the same time that there is a genuine need for education among workers and the employer and we must also have those who are doing any kind of work understand that they must interest themselves in their job, what are the results expected from them and the reason why such a work has to be done.

So, if we insist upon maintaining an attitude which has existed for so long, we will continue to face situations which are often impossible and which require backward legislation such as the one which has just been introduced.

● (2032)

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I will quote an article which appeared in La Presse of Montreal quite some time ago now but which is still of current interest. The article is dated June 3, 1972, and is entitled "The freedom of others". And I think that we must consider the freedom of others. It is fine to be free, it is highly commendable but one must respect the freedom of others. And several examples are mentioned in that article which should bring those who love their own freedom to consider also the freedom of others.

We are witnesses to a strange situation as we enter the post-industrial age. We notice that the freedom of some may at times destroy that of others. One also notices that certain freedoms do not yet exist. The individual worker enjoys the right to join a union but not the right not to do so.

I have already spoken on that issue. One has to join a union because he is compelled to do so, he has to pay his dues but he has no right to get out of it. This is a point which I have already discussed to some extent in this House.

There is no freedom either to choose a union other than the one which is certified to the management.

Furthermore a newsman may for instance break his employment contract because of an ideological orientation change on the part of his employer but he has no right to withdraw from a labour union for the same reason.

This is somewhat pertinent to the circumstances where there are strikes in newspapers as is the case in the province of Quebec.

Hospital workers have the right to strike but when they do exercise that right, they jeopardize the lives of patients who have the basic right to receive attentive and intensive care. Civil servants have the right to strike but when they exercise that right they are depriving elderly people, pensioners and people on welfare of their right to receive in due time a cheque which is eagerly awaited.

Air Canada's controllers and technicians have the right to strike but when they do, they do so to the detriment of an essential right of the residents of the Arctic which is to receive supplies. They were almost responsible for the death of a child because a rare serum could not be forwarded by plane.

Teachers have the right to strike but when they do, they are depriving children of their essential right to uninterrupted and worry-free education.

Postal workers have the right to strike but when they do, they deny the population an essential service, thereby inflicting a serious prejudice to many businesses depending on the mail for their daily operations.

One should never forget that the right to live for each and everyone of us stems from a natural right and that it must take precedence over the right to strike.

[English]

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am going to take part for a few moments in this debate. At the outset I want to say how pleased I was to listen to the speech made by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). I think he has done a tremendous job in attempting—to the extent one can from this side of the House—to bring the parties together in what has been an ongoing and deteriorating situation between workers in the postal service and the Treasury Board.

The situation has reached the point where postal workers in Canada do not trust the Treasury Board, do not believe in the Treasury Board, do not find it responsive; and the Treasury Board has taken the same view that the post office management has taken of the union. Collective bargaining is adversary by nature, but if it is to be effective it must be based on some trust, some understanding and some communication. The fact of the matter is that communication has broken down. If we are ever to get rid of the problem and keep the postal service operating we must start from a premise. We have to get to the truth.

I do not believe a bill like this helps us to get to the truth. A bill like this does not necessarily improve relationships, and over the long run we have to get to the truth. That is why we have said from time to time when the occasion arose in this House that perhaps it was not such a bad idea to have some form of commission of inquiry to deal with this matter and go into the issue of technological change and all the other issues that affect relationships between employer and employees in the postal department. We must get at the truth and find out what has really happened, and have some premise from which we can start. Perhaps from that we can move to a new form of industrial democracy. I do not know whether it will work in Canada or not but in the present atmosphere we will not be able to try.

The management-labour committee mentioned by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, which is working well in Germany and in the United States, has been able to bring labour, management and postal users together in a new way. These things may be conducive to sound relationships within the postal service.

As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) said, the public interest dispute commission is not by itself a dispute resolving body; but it is one of the vehicles that can help understanding, develop trust and ease the way toward settlement. Surely we ought not to say it is ineffective. It is very important that we find vehicles by which the relationship can be effective and meaningful.

That is not the case in this country now. We have had ten years of disruption, then years in which, while there has been considerable difficulty from the point of view of the union and examples of bad leadership, there has been equally bad leadership by the government.

I think we have come to the point where most Canadians are saying, with respect to the post office and a whole host of other things, that this government is incapable of sustaining the leadership that is necessary. With respect to the economy and the post office, its time has come. It is despondent, dispirited, denuded of its best people and denuded of imagination and ideas. That is why we are facing an election in this country, Mr. Speaker. Leadership has gone. That is why we will be going to the country in a few days. I recall last year during the air controllers' strike—the minister will recall it as well—editorial writers, columnists and opinion leaders from coast to coast were shouting that strikes in the public service must end. The right to strike must be taken away from public servants and others who are qualifying their statements by saying that there should be no strikes in "essential services"—an easy thing to say when there is no necessity to define what those essential services are—or that we should not have strikes which "damage the national interests". That is the kind of rhetoric that was heard. Even the cabinet at that time was split wide open, if you recollect. I would suspect that it is still split wide open today if one lifts the corner of that sticky plaster.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

• (2042)

You will recall the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), who was smiling in his benign and friendly way—a smile for which he has become famous across this country,—said that all strikes, public and private, that would damage the nation "have to be outlawed", were his words. The Minister of Labour, on the other hand, who until today has been known as "Mr. Free Collective Bargaining" in Canada, said that the Minister of Transport did not really know what he was saying. There is Mr. Speaker, confusion in the government as to its position, so can you imagine the confusion in the minds of the public with respect to the whole process of collective bargaining in the Public Service of Canada.

We must look this situation over very carefully. We are dealing with postal matters tonight. What is important for postal unions is also important for public servants and public service unions. What is the reality in Canada? What can happen? What can we do to improve this situation? What can be done to eliminate the great inconvenience of strikes in the public service, or if not eliminate them, at least minimize them to some tolerable degree so that we can rely generally on efficiency and continuance in this branch of the public service and public enterprise. I always felt that the ability to communicate readily day by day was the foundation of an ordinary society.

There have been a lot of misconceptions about the position in the public service. Geoffrey Stevens, in a column published last summer in the Globe and Mail, gave us some statistics which a lot of people did not believe at the time. I think these statistics are quite important. There had been 405 collective agreements in the public service up to that time since the right to strike was instituted. In that time only 12 of them had been preceded by legal strikes. That is not a bad record. I think that record is perhaps better, at least in terms of numbers, than the record in the private sector which ranks somewhere close to that of Italy. I am not happy with those figures. No one is because when a strike takes place it means that the system has broken down.

There are certain other things which the public generally does not know about public service disputes. There are two routes which can be taken by public service unions. The route chosen is the option of the public service bargaining agent. The first route is the conciliation/strike route. That is the route which postal unions opted for, and certain others, and the reasons for their choice will become clear in a moment. The other route available is the arbitration route. Under this option the dispute is sent to a tribunal where it is resolved. It becomes binding on the public service union, the membership and on the government as well.

Given the existence of the choice of the bargaining agent, it is interesting to look at some statistics. In 1970, 81 per cent of the public servants chose arbitration at the end of their collective bargaining process and only 19 per cent chose the conciliation/strike route. In 1975, Mr. Speaker, five years later, the picture was almost completely reversed: only 36 per cent chose arbitration and a whopping 64 per cent chose conciliation/strike.

I think we are sitting on a time bomb. In Canada we have developed an increasing potential for difficulty on the public side. That potential for difficulty and the probability of it occurring will not disappear because we suddenly decide, by a stroke of the pen, to remove the right to strike in the public service. As I said, the blame can be shared. It can be shared by the unions and their leadership in some respects. It can be shared by the Treasury Board and it can be shared by the government.

One reason we have opted on the public side for conciliation/strike rather than arbitration is because the conciliation/strike route for the employee and his union is more attractive to what the employee wants. He wants certainty and swiftness of decision. We have made it more attractive because arbitration has not developed as something which has been trusted, at least on the public service side.

It is too bad we have been driven to the situation where public service unions, which generally do not move in the direction of strike, are adopting the method which can end in strike. We must devise ways in this country of making the binding arbitration route more attractive.

I represent thousands of public servants and their families. I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, that they do not want a strike; they do not want disrupted services. They are no different from you or me for that matter. Like everyone else, they would like to have the opportunity to work steadily and to be paid in the ordinary course, to receive their mail regularly and be able to plan a holiday, using the rail and air services of the country confident that their holiday will take place. They suffer as much as anyone when a segment of the public service decides to withhold its work and labour. Based on those statistics arbitration in Canada is still being viewed less and less as a trusted tool or method of solving disputes. In view of the statements by the minister, in view of what has occurred in the past, in view of the potential for difficulty in the figures which I have mentioned earlier, we must take a look at the situation in the public service. My constituents who are in the public service do not hesitate to speak to me. They tell me quite frankly that they are not interested in strikes or in striking, and that if there is a demonstrably better way, they would rather have their disputes settled in that manner than through the withdrawal of services.

The public interest disputes commission which we have suggested, and which we will continue to suggest, is one of the cogs in the wheel of that better way. The management committees discussed by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) is another of those ways. Public servants tell me in equally strong terms that there is a suspicion abroad about the arbitration process as it now functions in the public service. To put their views succinctly, Mr. Speaker, they tell me that the scope of arbitration is far too narrow. It is impossible for them to arbitrate what they can negotiate.

By choosing the conciliation strike route, subject to very few exceptions, the whole range of differences and opinions between employers and employees can be aired. They say there are delays in the process which cause frustration. It is a fact that the hopes and the fears of many ride on the outcome of a particular case, and as frustrations develop, anger builds up. They suspect that the arbitration process, as it is now practised, is not completely free of or independent from the influences of the government of the day. They feel the arbitration tribunal ought to give reasons for its judgment in many areas, which it does not do, certainly on questions with respect to pay. They do not feel the arbitration boards are particularly responsible, because unlike the conciliation process they do not have the opportunity to nominate members to the board in the same way, nor is the arbitration board necessarily composed of the most appropriate people from the point of view of the expertise appropriate to the dispute. They do not have a say in the choice of chairman through their representatives, as they would have on a conciliation board. Perhaps most importantly, the entire process is dependent upon data in which the employees have less than full confidence.

● (2052)

Those are only some of the reasons given to me from time to time by constituents who are interested in working and becoming involved in the public service, who do not want service withheld and want to live within a reasonable process. If those areas are the problems, nothing is insurmountable and I do not think we can ignore them. I do not think we can afford to set them aside with a simplistic sweep of the hand because we may face an immediate situation. Whether this bill is passed or not, the same atmosphere and demoralizing influences will be there. The same alarming statistics, with their potential for trouble, will be there for us to face, even though by this bill we may not have to face them in a general election.

No one in this House would condone law breaking in the public service or elsewhere. There is no one in this House who cannot feel somewhat sad that the situation in an essential service has been allowed to deteriorate to such an extent that now the government deems it necessary, whether for its own purposes or not, to defer the dispute for a time, rather than resolve it.

We must work on methods of improving the dispute resolution process. I know the Minister of Labour is not proud of the fact that this bill does not do that. Surely our best efforts in the next while have to be directed toward asking the public service and other labour-oriented groups and unions in the country to choose a form of dispute resolution which is not disruptive. That is the constructive way to go. When the dust settles from this piece of legislation and those issues, that problem is still before us waiting to be tackled.

I do not propose to speak any longer on the bill. The hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) indicated what our position would be with respect to the bill. It is appropriate for the debate to end quickly. It is important to resolve that question in the House tonight so that we can go on with other things and deal with them very quickly indeed.

The Minister of Labour has always prided himself on standing for the rights of labour. I would not be one to say that he has not. Again today he said that the government would continue to rely on voluntary agreements. He indicated that when he mentioned that the process of voluntary agreement in one department of the government had broken down. Although we intend to support the bill on second reading, and I presume it will move rather quickly through committee, there is a cancer in the dispute resolution process of the public service. This is only one cell. It is shown in the morale of the public service, the way the merit principle is being dissipated in the public service, the way rights are being denied in the public service, and the way 3,000 people were brought in out of the ordinary channels in the years 1976 and 1977, according to the evidence before the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. That is all part of this cancer. Now the public is being treated to the Public Service Commission reporting on the eve of an election with respect to what it will do with public servants. The public has not been consulted with respect to that, they have been told.

The government brought in Bill C-28 which has a disturbing effect on the public service, to say the least. As well, this section is pulled out of it for special treatment. The attitude of the government toward public servants is sick—as well as short term. The length or breadth of the government's vision is as long as the next two months. While this bill must be dealt with because it is a matter put before us by the government, there ought not to be any person in this House who can approach this entire subject without a rather heavy heart. Within the time limited to it, I suggest the government should work very, very hard at changing its attitudes, so that the entire process in government and the relationship between its employers and employees can change. Once again the Government of Canada can begin to provide some leadership for the public and private sectors of this country. This sense of leadership has been lost over the last ten years.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that second reading of any bill dealt with debate on the principle of the bill. I have to ask myself what the principle in Bill C-45 is. How do I square the way I stand and the way my party stands on the principle contained in this bill? I think the principle is one of confrontation.

This has been the pattern since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ran for office in 1968. It is reminiscent of a candidate for Prime Minister standing in Montreal waving defiance on St. Jean Baptiste Day, which caused the rest of Canada to say: "What a strong Prime Minister he will make. Look how he puts the rabble in their place. That is the type of man we want as leader". That is the same kind of confrontation which we experienced when the LaPalme drivers were demonstrating on Parliament Hill against the manner in which they had lost their jobs. It is the same kind of principle. The Prime Minister said to working class people who lost their jobs through no fault of their own: "Mange la merde". At the same time, the rest of Canada said: "What a tough Prime Minister! He has moxie, he has backbone. That is the man."

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

It is the same sort of principle we saw with respect to Quebec and the government of Quebec. It is the same type of confrontation where the Prime Minister is building on a scapegoat philosophy, so that the rest of Canada says: "It takes a French Canadian to put French Canadians in their place". That is the sort of cynicism, that is the kind of philosophy I find when I read this one-page bill. What else is the principle in it?

• (2102)

I was shocked to hear the Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) say yesterday in a CBC interview that all this bill does is to provide for CUPW a clause which is already in the Canada Labour Code. Section 181 of the Canada Labour Code says, in effect, that workers who are covered by it cannot go on strike during an election period. Mr. Speaker, he has not read the bill. I phoned up and said: "You have used section 181 but you have not put in section 148," which says, in effect, that the workers who are prevented from striking during an election period will be covered by the previous collective agreement. Ministers over there have not even read the bill properly. It is not often I feel sympathy with Liberals but I do feel a little sympathy for the defender of the Hamilton Ticats. I feel some sympathy for the men who try to keep Harold Ballard out of Hamilton. Here we have CUPW which comes under the public service act, under the jurisdiction of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), and lo and behold, the bill which affects them is being introduced by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). I cannot help feeling sympathetic toward him if he feels beleaguered and asks: Good God, what nonentity wrote this bill and expects me to clean it up?

There is no protection in this bill for the workers. The post office flunkeys in middle management would love to see the workers without a collective agreement during those 60 or 90 days when an election is being held. They have never shown themselves to be particularly efficient in the absence of whatever is admirable in public relations. Again, the principle is one of confrontation. On the very day the CUPW negotiations went to conciliation, yesterday, the Prime Minister was tabling this bill in the House. Since the Minister of Labour seems to have done so well last Friday he wants to press his luck; he wants us to put the measure through today.

What sort of reaction, Mr. Speaker, do you think this will provoke in any honest-to-goodness trade union with any kind of balls? What kind of reaction might have been expected? I am amazed at the patience and restraint with which CUPW has reacted to Bill C-45. As I say, there is only one concept here, and that is confrontation.

There is political confrontation as well to some degree, because if there is one union in Canada which is not persona grata in the hearts and minds of the public from coast to coast it is CUPW. So the Prime Minister is trying to hoist the opposition in the House of Commons. What a marvellous election issue—to be able to go across the country and say: "We want to be sure there are no strikes in the post office during an election." And if other parties vote against it, he can say: "The opposition tried to prevent us putting in that protection for you." This seems to me to be the height of cynicism and introduces an element of political confrontation.

For nine months CUPW has been without a contract from Treasury Board. Does anyone want to tell me that the Prime Minister got this sudden flash of insight only last week, that quite without premeditation he got the idea of bringing in a bill to make sure that CUPW would not go on strike during an election? Does anyone believe that the government has never foreseen that possibility in time to plan for it and to bring in a properly worded bill in time for it to be sent to committee where witnesses could be heard? Does anyone want to try to persuade me that the government was completely of far-sightedness in this respect? Mr. Speaker, this was planned. This was deliberate. This was cynical. This is confrontation politics and I cannot accept the principle which has been incorporated so blatantly in Bill C-45. I can see the minister shaking his head like a jack-in-the-box, but that is not what he was saying earlier today when he was stuck with this. He rolled out of bed this morning and said to his secretary: "Look what they have done."

Mr. Nystrom: When he rolled out of bed? His secretary was there?

Mr. Fraser: Explain!

Mr. Rodriguez: That is the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) with his chauvinist remarks again. It seems to me the height of cynicism was reached when the Postmaster General said the provision of the Labour Code was being followed with respect to an election in the case of CUPW. It is phony. He gives the union the worst of the Labour Code without giving it some of the better things in it. His mind sprang immediately to clause 181 but avoided clause 148. He argued vigorously against putting CUPW under the Labour Code, but here, when it is convenient, we see it done selectively.

I feel a little twinge of sympathy for the Minister of Labour. He has tried to improve his image as the minister who has done most for labour. It is on that basis that there is the suggestion that the trade unionists ought to be weaned away from their alliance with the NDP. It is suggested that only labour ministers and labour governments can do things for labour.

• (2112)

I believe this parliament is coming to an end very quickly, and there will be a blot on the minister's escutcheon. That blot will be legislation of this kind, which is based on the principle of confrontation and removing from workers the right to strike without providing protection for the collective bargaining process. A section from another statute is suddenly being sprung upon CUPW. The government is not giving CUPW a chance to know the rules of the game. It is springing this legislation at a time when the negotiations are moving into conciliation. That confrontation politics is inviting CUPW to react by saying that parliament can pass all the bills it wants, that the fines are not too high and that its members will hit the bricks anyway. This way the Prime Minister can look like a real tough guy in the middle of the election campaign. The Prime Minister will be able to say: "I have them with Bill C-45", and the government will be able to enforce the legislation to the full extent of the law.

Mrs. Holt: Be honest.

Mr. Rodriguez: I wish the hon. member would get up and make a speech rather than make smart aleck remarks from the back bench.

Mrs. Holt: Say something valuable and creative.

Mr. Rodriguez: The bionic woman from the back bench is making smart aleck remarks again.

The problems involving the post office have become a long saga. There have been many disputes, and the crux of the problem has been technological change. There was a great fight over getting a technological change clause put into the collective agreement the last time around. CUPW was saying it should be given the technological change clause which is in the Canada Labour Code. A strike went on for weeks and weeks. Finally that friend of labour, Bryce Mackasey, said in my presence one morning at three o'clock that he would be prepared to lay a technological change clause on the table for CUPW. After a five-week strike Bryce Mackasey laid on the table word for word the technological change clause contained in the Canada Labour Code.

Is that the way we should operate in this country with respect to industrial relations? How can this government hope to be an example and encourage the unions in the private sector when it has the worst labour relations record in the history of this country? The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) asked me to say something intelligent and to contribute something. I have just done so. This government is not fit to provide an example. It is not fit to lead with respect to bringing parties together to work out new forms of collective bargaining and industrial relationships. Under the present system the minister has direct control over the workers in the post office, and that leaves a lot to be desired.

As I said, there was a strike which dragged on for five or six weeks. Bryce Mackasey had claimed prior to that that the public servants of this country were the lead dogs of labour and that he was going to leash them and bring them under control. The then postmaster general, after a five or six-week strike, laid on the table a clause which would eventually solve the problem. That clause was section 129. I do not call that bargaining in good faith. Even when the workers obtained the technological change clause the Minister of Labour could have learned a lot from the way the post office was running around the ends on that one. He could have coached the Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

Mr. Gilbert: "Pussycats."

Mr. Rodriguez: He is no pussycat. He is a smart politician, and he has to live with this. No sooner did CUPW get the technological change clause than it got the runaround with regard to the notice required before the technological change clause came into effect. There was a requirement to sit down with the workers and to talk to them about how technological change would affect them. The government did everything possible to run around the ends with regard to the technological change clause.

In the last ten years the government has changed postmasters general more often than I change shorts.

Mr. Fraser: I can believe that, John.

Mr. Rodriguez: In the last ten years the government has changed postmasters general practically every year. I remember that in the first week the former postmaster general, who is now the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), took over the post office he made a press statement. He said he would stay out of collective bargaining because he did not study labour law and was not a collective bargaining expert. One week later he was in there giving advice about the technological change clause, and the contract and about how the workers must live up to their responsibilities with regard to technological change. It was like Moses being taken out of the bullrushes! Suddenly overnight the new minister had become the expert. He was involving himself in the collective bargaining process.

I have listened to the Conservatives to my right. I can tell it is close to an election. They all love public servants. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was not kidding when he said there were many public servants in his riding. That was his reason for condemning the bill, but I want to see how he will vote on the principle of the bill.

I am sure all those who will be affected by the proposed Bill C-28 are anxious to see how the Conservatives will react. The Conservatives talk about studying the problems further. We do not need to study the problems any further. There has been royal commission after royal commission. The post office has been studied to death. Postmasters general have recommended that the post office be made a Crown corporation. They have said that that would provide some sense of continuity and unity of direction, instead of dealing with three or four departments and having a spread in jurisdiction. As a matter of fact, Eric Kierans, a former postmaster general, has said that the post office ought to be made a Crown corporation. That is what the workers have been harping about since I came to the House of Commons in 1972. They have said that they would prefer to be put under the aegis of the Canada Labour Code. Royal commission after royal commission has come to the same conclusion. There has been dilly-dallying, and these decisions which must be made have been put off.

Technological change has been brought in. We spent $1 billion to purchase equipment for the post office. The West Germans said they would be very happy to sell Canada the automated junk they sold us for $1 billion. One would think that that automated equipment would have speeded up mail service. Mail used to be put on trains. There were carriages at the rear of those trains in which workers sorted mail. The mail was taken to the various communities and delivered. There was one-day service. The president of VIA, Frank Roberts, has spoken about going back to putting mail on trains. I asked Mr. Roberts if he envisaged the day when we would have a man sitting at a table in the carriage at the back of a VIA train sorting mail. He laughed. We have put in automated equipment, but that has not speeded up mail deliveries.

● (2122)

Somehow or other, the victim in that whole fiasco always seems to be the worker. By some means or other it is always the workers who are supposed to be delaying the mail, when in fact the government embarked on a very expensive technological change program in the post office. First of all, they did not know their elbows from a hole in the ground about how to work with the workers in the post office. I receive letters from postal locals right across the country. They write me about the problems they are having with their superiors in the post office. It seems to me that the middle management in the post office must have all been in the army at one time or another because they all seem to be the Colonel Jekyll and Colonel Hyde of the postal corps in the second world war and have no ideas, beyond barking orders to underlings, about how to handle workers on the floor. It is "yes, sir", or "no, sir", "don't question my authority, do as you are told and don't ask why". It seems to me that before the government embarked on this sort of technological process which involved changing the lives of workers, they should have been sent to some sort of humanizing schools to take a course on how to handle workers. Perhaps that is the first thing they should have done.

What they tried to do in the post office is to superimpose a technological operation and to fit square management personnel into round technological holes. It just did not work, and as a result tensions arose. For example, we went through the whole shamozzle in the last five years on the manner in which the Post Office Department uses casuals. That was one of the big fights that CUPW had. It was around the effective dealing with casuals in the post office. Invariably casuals had a "sweetheart arrangement" which involved every manager and his sweetheart getting jobs as casuals in the post office while other workers who had been casuals for ten or 15 years would be used in such a way that the contract or the terms of the collective agreement would not be followed with respect to those covered under the agreement. The workers had to put a lot of effort in to cleaning up the whole matter of casuals in the post office.

If the leadership in CUPW is militant, they have reason to be. We should look for the causes of their militancy; we cannot deal solely with the symptoms. They are symptoms of the frustration which emerges in what is called the angry leadership, the aggressive leadership. It seems to me that one of the causes for that relates to the way in which the post office is operated.

The former postmaster general—I have not heard the present Postmaster General (Mr. Lamontagne) on that—was going to have these tête-à-têtes around the table. "You tell me your trouble, I will tell you mine. We will both put our problems on the table and we will then have two problems". We have not heard the Postmaster General go into that. The best way to have industrial harmony and peace in the work place is to clearly define the rights and responsibilities of the workers and of management in a contract which will be observed by both parties. That is the best way to maintain peace in the work place, instead of these little love-ins that are held so often, the net effect of which is to put off making tough decisions, which has the long term effect of sloughing off the problems to another day. "Let us have another cup of tea and talk about that problem again". The present minister has not been on to that kick yet, but I expect it will start coming shortly.

I know the leadership of CUPW very well. They are dedicated trade unionists who represent the interests of the workers. After all, it is the workers who have elected them, so whose interests should they represent? Surely not the interests of management. Their purpose is to ensure that the collective agreements are kept. We have a situation where there are literally thousands upon thousands of grievances that are backed up and have not been processed properly or expeditiously. That is one bone of contention in the relationship between management and workers in the post office.

What is the principle in this bill? As I have said, we deal with principles at second reading. I say that the principle in this bill is one of confrontation rather than solution of the problems that exist in the post office. This is confrontation politics. It is the principle of confrontation which is envisaged in this bill, and I and my party cannot support that. That is the other little game the government is playing. I do not think the Minister of Labour has participated in that Machiavellian scheme, but one of the aims of this bill is to try to hoist the NDP with the bill. In effect, how are the New Democrats going to react to that? Will they go along with such a blatant anti-labour bill? If we do that, it will wean our labour base from the party politics. I think the Minister of Labour has more principles than that. It is the other yahoos who occupy the government front benches for whom I have no respect, and I make no bones about it. I have never had any respect for them in the House because they are politicians in favour of whatever is going. Those are politics of convenience. In principle I could never support making scapegoats of one group of persons and using them for my own interests.

I am glad the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) is here. His record with respect to the nickel miners is not one to hold up as an example. I will make sure that the workers of Sudbury remember that at election time, that they remember the fact that he does not give a hoot about workers in the nickel industry. If you have any principles at all, how can you go along with Bill C-45? Surely there is a principle involved there. How does one explain the fact that they did not even know that it did not cover the workers during the 60 day period under the collective agreement? Does that indicate to you a thoughtful and purposeful drafting of the bill? Either the legal minds in that government are incompetent and should be fired or, as I said before, they are guilty of collusion to try to foist this bill on parliament in its dying days, to run it through while the boys are all busy talking about when the election will come so that they will not notice it. That is the kind of cynicism they are demonstrating.

We on this side of the House cannot support the principle involved in the bill and we intend to vote against the bill. If the minister wants to put CUPW under the protection and aegis of the Canada Labour Code, then do it and give them adequate notice. Do not put them under section 181 or section 148. Section 148 is the crux of the problem.

• (2132)

The minister stands up in the House and says there seems to be some confusion. I suggest the confusion is on the part of the minister and not in this opposition member's head. The confusion lies with cabinet ministers who are supposed to have such "smarts". They have less "smarts" than my pet Scottish terrier has in his tail.

An hon. Member: Do not insult your terrier.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right, I refuse to insult my Scottish terrier who has quite an attractive name. His name is Mr. Davidson and I would never under any circumstances suggest such an insult.

We cannot in all conscience support this kind of legislation. I am really shocked that the Minister of Labour, for whom I feel a tinge of sympathy, has been given the responsibility of putting this mess of potage before parliamentarians. I know he has troubles, but he should be fighting Harold Ballard, not the NDP. As I have said, we will vote against this bill as we cannot support its principle on second reading.

I am really surprised that the Tories to my right would support it. Perhaps I should not really be surprised because this is the time in the fourth year period when they should love all civil servants. I know the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton will love all those civil servants to death. Of course, we know what his reaction was to the Finkelman report and all its recommendations embodied in Bill C-28 when it was before the committee. Where do the Tories stand on this? Now that we have television in the House I want the whole Ottawa valley to know that the Tories were all for the Finkelman report, with all its recommendations embodied in Bill C-28. The record is clear in that regard and we will put their views on record shortly in respect of Bill C-45.

CUPW has exercised a great deal of patience and forbearance. At the moment this matter is at the conciliation stage. I sincerely hope a settlement will result from the conciliation report. Surely there is a great deal of forbearance being shown. I know that their patience will endure and the interests of the Canadian people will always be paramount in their considerations.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, this is a sorry day not only for parliament but for labour-management relations in this country. We have just heard the dissertation of a person who is well qualified in the field of labour relations, the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). It is not necessary for me, nor is it my intent, to give a comprehensive report about the value of good labour relations. Bill C-45 certainly is not an example or evidence of bona fide good faith in the field of industrial relations. To attempt to force legislation of this nature upon a single trade union is in itself an example of discrimination of the highest order.

This type of legislation will create hard feelings and a hardening of attitude, not only between CUPW and the government, or the management of this union, but between labour and management across the country. The people of Canada deserve perfection and excellence in postal services in this country; I suggest that this bill will create hatred, suspicion and deceit. This bill is a terrible precedent for the future of Canadian labour relations.

Let me urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and his colleagues, even at this late hour of the night, to have the common courtesy and decency to withdraw this bill and get on with the collective bargaining process which is already taking place. There is no strike under way and the union is involved in conciliation proceedings. I would caution the Minister of Labour and the government in respect of this bill and suggest that they on this occasion put their right feet forward instead of both falling on something they do not want. On this eve of an election they should finish the job that has been started, and finish it properly. This government should not jump on the back of one union because there is an alleged disagreement between the executive management, or the government, and the union leadership. At this time we are not only penalizing the membership of this union, we are creating tension between labour and management right across the country, not only in the public sector but in the private sector as well.

The previous speaker indicated that the principle of this bill was confrontation. Surely that is not a principle in labour-management relations. The bill per se is hateful, will create more hatred and is really a deceitful piece of legislation. I have a good deal of respect for the present minister, and it is hard to believe that he and the Liberal party, as well as the Conservative party, would consider endorsing or supporting this type of bill. The bill should not even be before us, and there certainly should be no attempt to rush it through. It is the type of legislation which makes that man we call "Mr. T. C. Mitts", the celebrated man in the street, so cynical of this government and political parties generally. I urge the minister to use a little bit of common sense and common decency and to consider the common man in this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the motion of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Jones.]

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) which was agreed to on the following division:

● (2212)

(Division No. 39)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Baker (Grenville-Carleton)
Baldwin
Basford
Beaudoin
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blais
Blaker
Blouin
Boulanger
Brisco
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cadieu
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Caron
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Corriveau
Cossitt
Crosbie
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Darling
Daudlin
Dawson
Demers
Dinsdale
Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Duclos
Dupont
Dupras
Duquet
Elzinga
Epp
Fleming
Flynn
Forrestall
Foster
Francis
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Guay
Guilbault
Halliday
Hargrave
Harquail
Herbert
Hnatyshyn
Holt (Mrs.)
Hopkins
Horner
Huntington
Johnston
Kaplan
Kempling
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lachance
Lajoie
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Lamontagne
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Lawrence
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent)
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacDonald (Egmont)
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
MacKay
Malone
Marceau
Martin
Masniuk
Mazankowski
McCain
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich)
Munro (Hamilton East)
Murta
Neil
Nicholson (Miss)
Oberle
O'Connell
Olivier
Ouellet
Paproski
Parent
Patterson
Pelletier
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Reid
Ritchie
Roberts

Messrs.

Robinson	Smith (Saint-Jean)	Whiteway
Roy (Timmins)	Stewart (Marquette)	Whittaker
Roy (Laval)	Stewart (Cochrane)	Wise
Rynard	Stollery	Wood
Sauvé (Mrs.)	Tessier	Woolliams
Schellenberger	Towers	Yanakis
Scott	Trudeau	Yewchuk
Skoreyko	Trudel	Young—152.
Smith (Churchill)	Watson

NAYS

Messrs.

Allard	Gauthier (Roberval)	Lambert (Bellechasse)
Benjamin	Gilbert	Nystrom
Broadbent	Jones	Orlikow
Caouette (Villeneuve)	Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)	Peters
Dionne (Kamouraska)		Rodriguez
		Rondeau
		Saltsman—16.

● (2217)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH AND WELFARE—ESTABLISHMENT OF GERIATRIC CHAIRS IN MEDICAL SCHOOLS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on March 9 I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) a question concerning the increased demands made on health care as a result of the aging of the Canadian population. In particular, I asked her what steps were being taken to encourage the establishment of geriatric chairs in medical schools to train doctors in this special field.

I remember well that when I entered medicine pediatric teaching facilities were just being established, and what a difference they made to the mortality rate and to the number of hospital beds needed by the young. At the present time between 800 and 900 pediatricians are practising and doing excellent work. But the birth rate has swollen until today there are between 200,000 and 250,000 people aged 65 or over who are being cared for in institutions at a cost of $7,500,000 per day, or around $2 billion a year. The babies born during the post-war boom will be 65 and over by the year 2,000; by the turn of the century, based on present indications, there will be nearly four million people aged 65 or over. Economic strains may keep those people existing at poverty level unless they are allowed to continue to work as long as they wish to do so, contributing to society without restriction. The Americans now permit a man who is working and who wishes to continue to do so to carry on. Thus he has the additional advantage of feeling he is still useful.

A question which immediately comes to mind is this: Could three workers carry the extra load of two pensioners? The answer is: perhaps—if the proper training is given to doctors. Medical problems change as patients reach the age of 50 or more. As we age we may find we have more than one medical problem.

● (2222)

Geriatric medicine involves the treatment of the elderly and the maintenance of optimum health and mental and social aspects so that people may be returned to their own homes as quickly as possible. This is the reason for having geriatric chairs in the medical schools of Canada. Those who have a special aptitude for this and who are trained further in geriatric medicine departments should provide consultative services for older patients who occupy acute medical and surgical beds which are very expensive.

I might add that there may be a tendency to limit visits to the aged. No one has more reason than a doctor to dread old age, because during his professional career a doctor sees many of the worst features of this time of life. This may be one reason—and I have heard this many times—that doctors have an indifference toward older patients, while they might otherwise be excellent internists. However, doctors are far too ready to get old people into homes, often because of rising costs.

It is estimated that 75 to 80 per cent of the aged can remain in their own homes, while 15 per cent of those will require treatment, so they may need medical care and visits. Those who are experts in the geriatric field believe that of the 9 per cent of our population who are in homes today, 3 per cent could be in their own homes if some kind of home care was instituted. If we do not establish geriatric chairs at medical schools and if we continue as we are, we will not be able to provide beds for the elderly except by increasing health care costs and lowering the quality of medical care.

I want to thank the minister for writing to me on this subject. The minister shows an awareness of this very serious problem. Today we have only 27 trained geriatricians but 700 to 800 pediatricians. The time is now. Instead of 27, our need is for a minimum of 450 geriatricians across Canada. I hope the minister will take this to heart and keep the pressure on. Otherwise, this field will be neglected and people like you, Mr. Speaker, I and others in the House, as they get older, will all be in the old age group, and we will be the ones who will suffer.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard) for bringing this matter before the House once again. It is one of those questions of continuing concern to the hon. member, and I know also to the Department of National Health and Welfare and to the minister who has, on occasion, spoken on the matter eloquently. The minister has also written to the hon. member suggesting how the matter can be dealt with properly.

As the hon. member knows, this whole question is in the realm of education which falls within the purview of the provinces. It is, therefore, rather difficult for the federal government or for the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) to decide unilaterally what to do, even though the minister may have a great desire to carry out the suggestions made by the hon. member, with which I personally agree, certainly in part and almost in toto. There is no question that the minister does have a role to play in this regard, and my understanding is that she is more than prepared to act as a catalyst so that the federal government can show leadership with regard to geriatrics, possibly by bringing various parties on the provincial level together with members of her department who also have the same concerns about geriatrics.

● (2227)

So I say to the hon. member that this matter is receiving consideration at present and will continue to receive it, and I thank him for bringing it before the House.

HEALTH—AVAILABILITY OF SACCHARIN

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) asking her if the government would reconsider its proposed ban on the sale of saccharin, which is to be implemented in the near future to limit the sale to drug stores and to take it out of grocery stores and other stores where it is at present being sold over the counter and in tablet form.

The House will recall that last year the Minister of National Health and Welfare released a report which suggested that tests in laboratory animals showed an increase in cancer caused by eating massive doses of saccharin, which in turn caused bladder cancer in animals. The government acted by removing saccharin from cans of pop and food. In January of this year the health protection branch issued letter No. 518 which stated that saccharin would be removed from grocery stores as soon as an order in council is passed, and its sale will be limited to pharmacies only. I understand that it is proposed that later this year saccharin be removed from tablets and toothpaste as well. I understand that provincial pharmacies will interpret this decision in such a way that in many provinces saccharin will not only be placed in a controlled section in the pharmacy but will also be sold from behind and under the counter.

If the decision is actually carried out by the government, it will cause a great deal of inconvenience to people on low carbohydrate diets, to diabetics, and especially to those living in the more remote areas of our country where there are no pharmacies or drug stores. If toothpaste and tablets and other such items which contain minute quantities of saccharin will have to be reformulated, this will result in a tremendous increase in the cost of these items to the consumer. I understand that it costs about $25,000 to bring in a substitute for saccharin in pharmaceutical items. I believe that the government has exercised all due precaution by removing saccharin from pop and from foods, so that now it is available as a table top sweetener or in tablet form.

Studies which have been carried out in the United States, such as the inter-agency report put out in January of this year, did not deny or confirm that there were any harmful effects from saccharin to mice and certainly not to humans. In the United States an extensive study costing $1.4 million is being carried out this year to try to identify any harmful effects from the use of saccharin either on lab animals or on humans. Since reasonable caution has already been exercised, it seems to me we should not take the next step of limiting the sale of saccharin to pharmacies and taking it out of pharmaceuticals, where the amounts are minute, until we have further evidence from the studies which are being made in the United States and in other countries.

There are no proven harmful effects to humans from the use of saccharin. Indeed, I understand that one research project showed a lower level of bladder cancer in diabetics than in other people. So I think the government should wait until next year or until more proven results are shown of the harmful nature of saccharin. To remove it from general stores and limit it to drug stores at this time causes a great deal of inconvenience to consumers, especially in rural areas, to diabetics and to people on special low calorie diets.

● (2232)

I want to quote from a relevant study to show that no other country in the world has limited the use of saccharin in food, let alone restricted the sale of saccharin to drug stores. I want to quote from the German Cancer Research Center in Heidelberg, specifically Professor Dieter Schmahl, who had this to say after only two years of saccharin experiments with pregnant rats:

> —the fact that it was even possible to apply a food additive in such large overdoses as in the Canadian experiment for a whole lifetime, attest mainly that it is not poisonous.

Let me also quote from the British Medical Journal, The Lancet. It states:

> —the study by the Americans Wynder and Goldsmith which concluded that "users of saccharin have a smaller risk of bladder cancer than non users".

That is a very influential medical journal.

It seems to me it is premature, until more concrete evidence is laid before the scientific community, for the government to pass this order in council which will restrict the sale of saccharin to the drug store only. It is a product that has been on the market for many years. Thousands of tons of it in fact have been used by people who want to reduce their intake of sugar. I believe the health protection branch should consider this further before the government passes this order in council.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has spoken on this matter on a number of occasions both inside and outside the House. The point that he makes is one that will receive every consideration. It is true, as I understand it, that although there may have been an increase in the incidence of cancer in mice after receiving massive overdoses, there is no evidence at the present time to indicate that humans would be affected in exactly the same way. As I understand it, there have been no experiments or studies carried out in respect of humans regarding massive dosages of this substance known as saccharin, the substance about which the hon. member is concerned.

It is true that saccharin has been removed from pop and food, and in fact the over-the-counter kind of situation may no longer exist. In effect, the substance would have to be purchased from the drug store. It is appreciated that this could effect hardship on people, particularly those in rural areas where there may not be a pharmacy readily available.

The hon. member knows that the department is most concerned about the effect this may have on people. He has suggested that other countries have not seen fit to provide a ban on saccharin. This country has obviously done so in the interests of Canadians. Let me suggest to him that the health protection branch is still looking at the whole matter. Certainly we have to be cautious when we are making decisions in terms of the health of Canadians. The Department of National Health and Welfare will consider the whole matter further, along with the representations by the hon. member.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—GOVERNMENT POLICY ON ACCEPTANCE OF NEUTRON BOMB

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on April 5, I addressed a question to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) concerning the government's position, or lack of one, in respect of the deployment of the neutron bomb by NATO. I then asked this supplementary question of the same minister:

> Last Wednesday the minister said on television that we should give the neutron bomb to the Russians, ignoring the fact that it is not ours to give to anyone. Would the minister explain why he is so keen to give the neutron bomb to the Russians, when we ourselves seem incapable of deciding whether it should be deployed by NATO?

The minister answered by stating:

> Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member did a little more research in many areas, he might find out that that is not what I said.

● (2237)

I have a great deal of pride in the capabilities of my research staff and I resent the minister's ill-humoured remarks that he made on March 21 when the "Watson Report" was recorded for CBC television. I studied his words carefully before the "Watson Report" was aired and carefully read them after I watched the show live—partly because I could hardly believe what I had seen with my own eyes. The Minister of National Defence said this:

> I think even in terms of—it might sound a little way out, but I rather like to start way out and then come down to earth—is on the reduced blast weapon or the enhanced radiation of the neutron bomb if you want to use the dirty word. But somehow, perhaps we should take this and give it to the Russians.

MR. WATSON: Give the neutron bomb to the Russians?

MR. DANSON: Sure, we both have it.

Those, Mr. Speaker, were the minister's own words, and the crucial words were, when Mr. Watson asked: "Give the neutron bomb to the Russians?" and the minister replied: "Sure, we both have it." It is the minister who should do some research before he tries to pretend to the House of Commons that this was not what he said.

The fact is that the neutron bomb raises important issues for Canadians, as it does for all members of the NATO alliance. Not only must we as members of the alliance share a measure of responsibility for all alliance decisions, but we have 5,000 of our troops permanently stationed in central Europe, in positions which could be directly affected by decisions to deploy, and therefore one day to use, the neutron bomb.

Not only would the neutron bomb tend to lower the nuclear threshold and so threaten to make nuclear war more likely, it would almost certainly cause the Soviet Union to develop and deploy its own version of this weapon. I would estimate it would take only a couple of years for the Russians to be able to do that. Then we would be in a situation which would be fraught with even greater danger than the present, unstable enough "balance of terror" as far as nuclear weapons are concerned.

While using nuclear weapons remains a measurable and distinct step up the ladder of escalation, I believe their deterrent effect is preserved. If we introduce the neutron bomb this will change the situation. The Minister of National Defence either lacks the skill or the gumption to offer some indication to the Canadian people of what his government's views are on this question. This is peculiar to Canada. Other nations are discussing this matter. There has been wide public discussion in Germany, Belgium, Norway and the United States on this question. The minister of national defence in Belgium, in fact, resigned when he could not agree with his government's decision to deploy it.

The minister has in the past attempted to soften the reality of the debate on the neutron bomb by referring to it by such public relations names as "a reduced blast weapon" or "an enhanced radiation warhead". As everyone knows by now, this is a weapon which kills people at greater ranges than its blast destroys property or objects. For example, a one kiloton neutron bomb detonated as an air burst would emit fatal radiation for humans up to three-quarters of a mile away, while the blast and heat damage would perhaps extend for only 200 yards. Conventional warheads kill by blast and radiate heat with fallout as an unwanted byproduct. Neutron warheads kill by generating a sudden intense pulse of high velocity neutrons.

While very heavy neutron doses will incapacitate humans within a few minutes, they will not necessarily die for 24 to 48 hours. They will exhibit symptoms of convulsions, trembling, lack of muscular co-ordination, severe difficulty in breathing and intermittent stupor. There is no medical treatment. Those who receive less heavy, but nevertheless fatal, doses of neutrons will be initially incapacitated also within a few minutes, but will recover partially within half to three quarters of an hour. They will suffer nausea, fever, loss of appetite and extreme fatigue. Death may occur within four to six days as a result of massive infection and circulatory collapse. Once again there is no effective medical treatment.

The prospect of this latter group wandering around the combat zones—and they may include civilians as well as military—quite literally like an army of living dead is disturbing, not only on grounds of common humanity, but also in terms of military discipline, morale and military efficiency. To add to the all-round unpleasantness of this weapon, the neutron flux emitted by such a bomb is not invisible but can hardly be sensed except when very heavy doses are received, and then the victim feels a momentary tingling sensation.

● (2242)

I tend to agree with an American general quoted in the press but who insisted on anonymity to protect himself. He believes that neutron warheads come terribly close to chemical weapons such as poison gas, and that they may be illegal under international agreements which our government is bound by.

It is for these reasons that I believe that a minister of national defence with any real sense of his obligations to parliament and the people of this country would see fit to provide some leadership on this matter, and by that I mean doing more than trying to make a neutron bomb sound less horrible by using such names as a "reduced blast" or "enhanced radiation" weapon. Furthermore, I fail to see why he should be permitted to evade serious questions on this topic by making facetious or stupid suggestions, such as offering to give an American bomb which is not ours to give to the Russians.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Canada has already spoken out in regard to the neutron bomb. The government was asked what position Canada was taking in NATO on the neutron bomb. While Canada has no plans to acquire such weapons, we have been participating in discussions at NATO headquarters in Brussels regarding the possible acquisition by certain NATO countries of enhanced radiation, reduced-blast nuclear weapons. These discussions are continuing.

The military usefulness of the weapon is not in question but, like our allies, Canada is also conscious that its possible acquisition raises complex questions which must be examined with care. Any decision regarding these weapons will not be taken lightly.

In passing, I want to stress there has been an unusual amount of misinformation printed on the neutron bomb. Most of the available public reports cast this weapon as something new and awful; actually it is only awful. And at that, it is less awful than weapons it could replace. The only thing new about the neutron bomb is its name and its packaging.

To begin with, it is necessary to agree on a name in order to avoid confusion. On the basis of the technical details available, it seems more appropriate to call this device a reduced blast/enhanced radiation weapon, or RB/ERW. It is certainly not a bomb and that name should no longer be used in this connection.

The RB/ERW is essentially a very small hydrogen device or fusion device. In simpler terms, being much smaller, its effects are also infinitely smaller. Moreover, the peculiarity of this type of nuclear weapon is that it makes it possible, through appropriate design, to graduate in various modes the quantity of energy of the three physical effects which are common to all nuclear weapons: blast, heat and radiation. The latter are sub-divided into prompt and delayed radiation. The design of the RB/ERW is such that the partition of the total balance of energy yielded at the moment of the explosion favours radiation at the expense of blast and heat.

The RB/ERW will kill crews of tanks, which are the main threat to NATO, by nuclear radiation. In covering the same intended target area with a standard nuclear weapon, civilian casualties and damage to property from blast and thermal effects in a congested region would be much greater.

The decision to produce the RB/ERW has been from the very beginning one for the United States. The Canadian government is fully conscious of the dilemma which President Carter has been facing in the last several months regarding the production of the RB/ERW and we see merit in deferring the decision. In our deliberations, the suggestion of placing the weapon in an arms control context has not troubled us and we are looking forward to participation in future consultation on this matter with our NATO allies.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 12, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

AIR CANADA

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO METHOD OF DISMISSING EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the unorthodox action taken by Air Canada in firing 84 employees in New York, Cleveland and Chicago on March 29 by telephoning each employee's home between ten o'clock and eleven o'clock at night and giving the message, "You're fired. Don't report to work tomorrow morning," and in view of the fact that the only subsequent face-to-face contact these employees had—many of whom had 20 years' service—was a video-tape message from Air Canada's vice-president for the U.S. region, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House urge the Minister of Transport to immediately investigate this action by Air Canada to ensure these moves which undermine employee morale and damage the reputation of Canada's national airline will be rectified and not repeated.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion is possible at this time only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

SEARCH AND RESCUE

GOVERNMENT URGED TO IMPROVE SERVICE IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that evidence given in St. John's, Newfoundland, before the Bartlett judicial inquiry into the disappearance of the trawler Cape Royal and her eight-man crew on August 9th, 1977, reveals that while there are three larger vessels, the 200-foot vessels Daring and Alert and a 90-foot vessel Raleigh stationed at Halifax for search and rescue duties, neither of these ships were in Newfoundland waters at the time the Cape Royal vanished, and in view of the evidence that the only first-line rescue vessels in the Newfoundland region are four self-righting, 44-foot life boats that cannot go to sea in rough weather—that is, when winds are stronger than 35 or 40 miles per hour—and since the evidence reveals that coastguard radio stations in Sydney and St. Lawrence did not pass on to the Halifax search and rescue centre on August 9 distress messages received that evening, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the departments of Transport and of National Defence be censured for their neglect in failing to assign to Newfoundland at least two first-line rescue vessels of the same size and capability as those stationed in Halifax and that immediate steps be taken by the Ministers of National Defence and of Transport to have stationed in Newfoundland two such first-line rescue vessels with immediate steps taken to review and improve search and rescue capabilities in the Newfoundland and Labrador regions to ensure correction of weaknesses already revealed by evidence given before the Bartlett inquiry at St. John's.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CALL FOR IMMEDIATE INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION ON WAR DISABILITY PENSION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, and seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), I move:

That this House anticipates a bill respecting the basic rate of the war disability pension and urges the Minister of Veterans Affairs to introduce the said bill forthwith so that it can be passed before the present session is ended, it being clearly understood that the House will act quickly thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

● (1412)

[Translation]

BILINGUALISM

REQUEST THAT FRANCOPHONES BE BETTER REPRESENTED IN DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND ENVIRONMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 and request the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a motion relating to a matter of national interest and pressing necessity.

Given the fact that it is still difficult for the Francophone employees of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment to use French as their working language, owing to their low rate of representation of 13 per cent, and given the last report of the Commissioner of Official Languages in which he condemns the low rate of bilingualism of the English-speaking employees of that department and the excessive delays of the same departments in settling the many complaints relating to the Official Languages Act, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House direct the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment to take immediately all necessary steps to bring up the rate of representation of the Francophone employees of his department back to a level corresponding more closely to the proportion of Francophones in the country in order to ensure better services to French Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion concerns the collapse of the dollar, in response to Monday's budget, to a 45-year low of 87.12 cents at noon today. I would add that each cent of decline in the dollar's value adds at least $300 million to the debt burden borne by Canadians.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) stated yesterday that our dollar, now known as the "fuddle-buck", should be at 90 cents all the time, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House demands that the Minister of Finance make a statement on motions clarifying his colleague's position that the Canadian dollar should be indeed pegged at 90 cents, or confirm that he is content to allow it to float, float, float, float, and sink.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—DETRIMENTAL EFFECT ON LOW INCOME EARNERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dollar today took another sharp drop on the international money market. As of noon today it stood at 87.12 cents. It is now sinking like the proverbial millstone, showing beyond any doubt that the international financial community has no confidence whatsoever in the minister's budget.

Given the fact that the sharp decline in the dollar is driving up our rate of inflation, as indicated by Statistics Canada showing the annual rate of inflation now standing at 8.8 per cent—an increase, I might add, of 1.1 per cent over the month—and given the fact that this situation weighs heaviest on the poor, the unemployed and the low income earners of the country, I ask the minister why his budget does not address itself to the problems of low income earners. Why does he bring it in on the backs of the low income earners of the country?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is exactly because I was preoccupied with the effect of inflation on those people who work and pay sales tax that I chose to offer to the provinces a cut in sales tax. Sales tax is a tax that is paid by everybody, including those who do not pay any other taxes; for example, the low wage earner in society who does not pay income tax but pays sales tax. This is precisely the reason I decided to cut that particular tax.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: On top of that, the sales tax proposition which I made will reduce over the period the inflation rate by one point.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, that will be good news for the purchasers of automobiles, especially Cadillacs. I would ask the minister, given the fact that the sales tax does not apply to food and the food component portion of the consumer price index today rose by 1.4 per cent—

Mr. Clark: So much for that phony defence.

Mr. McGrath: —could he explain to the House, and more particularly to the country, the unemployed and the low income earners, why his budget leans so heavily on these people, and what relief can they expect from the rise in the price of food in this country?

● (1417)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the problem with the food index is one that varies substantially from one season or one month to the next. When you look at the components of inflation, non-food products are not increasing as fast. This month, unfortunately, the food component went up. If you look over a period of years, there is a very great variation in the food component, some of the food being imported and over which we have no control.

Mr. McGrath: If the minister knows what he is talking about, he knows that the rise in food prices is a direct response to the dollar crisis. Given this fact, and the fact that he talks about a free float in this House, does he subscribe to the view expressed by his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on television last night that we should have a 90-cent dollar? In his view, 90 cents is par. Is that the position of the government, or does the minister agree with most of us that his colleague was talking through his ten-gallon hat?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, in my budget I established very clearly the position of the government vis-à-vis the Canadian dollar. We let the market decide the level of the Canadian dollar. The interventions of the governor of the bank are designed to ensure there is an orderly market. The interventions are to make sure the dollar fluctuates in a normal way. However, the Canadian dollar is a floating dollar.

POST-CONTROLS MONITORING AGENCY

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. I hope he will be able to give us an answer in this regard, because it is an extremely important matter. It concerns the post-controls period. I understand the Prime Minister indicated that he wants the Economic Council of Canada to become involved with the monitoring agency. As yet, I do not know whether Mrs. Ostry has accepted that responsibility. Accordingly, I think the people of Canada would like to know whether, in fact, the Economic Council of Canada is going to accept this very important responsibility.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: In light of the fact that the Economic Council of Canada has accepted it, can the minister indicate what the time-frame is in terms of seeing to it that they are proceeding with their mandate? Is this an immediate thing, or what kind of date can the minister indicate will be in place in due course?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I understand the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada has accepted that role and is establishing the necessary mechanisms to play that role. I also understand she has made an agreement with the Anti-Inflation Board, which will remain in operation for the rest of the year to help her play that role for the first months. There has been a short term agreement between the Anti-Inflation Board and Dr. Ostry for exchange of services.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Am I to understand that any agreement that she or the Economic Council of Canada has with the Anti-Inflation Board will expire at the end of this year? Is that what the minister has just indicated?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to repeat his question. Unfortunately, I did not understand it.

Mr. Alexander: The minister indicated there is an agreement between the Economic Council of Canada and the Anti-Inflation Board. As I understand it, he has indicated that this is to be for the balance of the year. Is it the position that the agreement with the Anti-Inflation Board will expire at the end of this year?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I understand the agreement between the Anti-Inflation Board and the Economic Council of Canada is for a matter of two or three months. The Anti-Inflation Board will be phased out starting at the beginning of next year, as is provided in the law.

LOSS IN REAL INCOME DUE TO INFLATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In complete contrast to his forecasts, unemployment yesterday shot above the one million mark again. Today, the consumer price index increase mounted to almost 9 per cent. Statistics are making a complete liar of this government. I would ask the minister whether his officials have confirmed for him that the current rate of inflation will cost the typical Canadian this year some $700 loss in real income.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, when we make a prediction of the inflation rate for the year, we always include the figure for the month of March. Of course, March is always a very difficult month in terms of inflation. Last year inflation was as high in March as it was in March of this year. We predicted that it would be high in March. Unfortunately, it is a little higher than we predicted, but we made provision for a substantial increase in March.

● (1422)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Finance has revealed his predictions about growth, inflation and unemployed three times in as many months. He has lost all credibility, certainly on this side of the House and certainly with the people of Canada. The minister referred to a year over year change. One item the price of which went up substantially year over year is fuel. The price of fuel went up some 13.3 per cent.

Considering that the government's policy, which is to permit oil in Canada to reach world price levels, will cost the typical Canadian family, with the increase which is coming in July, another $150 a year, I ask the minister if he would cancel the intended fuel price increase.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the oil price increase was expected because we have a policy whereby eventually the price of oil in Canada will be raised to the international level over a period of time. We agreed with the governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta that there should be a price increase in the month of January, but there was a postponement of 60 days. That is why there was an increase in the month of March, and we allowed for that in our predictions.

As far as the hypothetical question put by the hon. member about future price increases is concerned, we have a long-established policy, and I would like the hon. member to talk to the Premier of Saskatchewan to find out if he wants us again to postpone the increase which would bring the price closer to the international price.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows full well that the Premier of the province of Saskatchewan wants revenues from that additional cost to go into research for future alternative energy sources. The minister knows that his Liberal government has given hundreds of millions of dollars, not to the people but to the oil companies. There is quite a difference.

Since the minister reiterated in his recent budget speech his policy of maintaining a dirty float, which entails increasing interest charges for consumers who want to make loans and for businessmen who want to expand—which will be harmful in its effects in terms of inflation and unemployment—will the minister now admit that he was wrong in his budget decision, and will he cancel his policy of increasing interest rates?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, because of the liquidity of institutions at this moment, the increase of 1 per cent in the interest rate over last month will not result in an increase in all interest rates. For example, mortgage rates have increased by only one quarter of a point over a period of time because there is so much liquidity in the banking system and because people are saving so much money.

To go back to the previous question, I am pleased the hon. member recognizes that it is the policy of the government of Saskatchewan to let the international price apply to Canadian oil.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

[Translation]

FINANCE

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT HAS NEGOTIATED WITH QUEBEC ON TRANSFER OF CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

The minister and the Prime Minister have often stated that the federal government was prepared to discuss arrangements with the Quebec government which would allow Anglophone public servants to send their children to English schools. The Sherbrooke area is still awaiting its 2,000 direct and indirect jobs through the arrival of map draftsmen. The six years delay for officials does not work, and since the province of Quebec, and mostly the Sherbrooke area, has a high level of unemployment and a sluggish economy as well, I should like to know if the Quebec government has made new proposals in order to deal with this problem?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday or the day before, the hon. member for Sherbrooke asked me a question along that line, and I said I was prepared to discuss an administrative arrangement with the Quebec government which would allow Anglophone public servants who will go to work for the Canadian government in Sherbrooke to send their children to English schools, just as there have been agreements with other provincial governments, when we proceed with decentralization, so that federal public servants' children could be educated in French.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

Can the minister tell us whether it is true or a rumour that the Quebec government has said it would welcome new jobs in its territory as a result of decentralization?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I did not quite get the question.

Mr. Beaudoin: Can the minister tell us whether it is true or a rumour that the Quebec government has said it would welcome federal civil servants as a result of the decentralization program?

Mr. Chrétien: The best way of proving they would be welcome is to ensure that the civil servants transferred to the province of Quebec through decentralization would have the right to have their children educated in their mother tongue.

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, on another supplementary.

The minister did not answer my question. I should like to know whether the Quebec government has expressed the wish to get federal civil servants in order to improve the financial situation in Quebec and especially to fight against unemployment.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, this is what I mean: if they are really interested, let them make the same allowances as the other provinces with regard to the decentralization program.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Prime Minister since I do not know who speaks for the government on financial policy. Last night, on a CTV program known as "Hourlong"—it seemed a lot longer—the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said the Canadian dollar should be worth 90 cents all the time; that par is 90 cents. The Minister of Finance has been saying that government policy is for a floating dollar, while the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce last night indicated the government's policy is for the dollar to be 90 cents; that par is 90 cents, not even a dollar.

Would the Prime Minister tell us who speaks for the government on financial matters and who is stating the policy of the government, the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Industry, Trade Commerce? Does the Prime Minister agree with the prediction of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, made last night, that the dollar will not strengthen for another two months at least? These are important questions which I should like the Prime Minister to deal with.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker that question was asked of the Minister of Finance a few minutes ago and he made it quite clear our economic policy was that of the floating dollar.

Mr. Crosbie: Then the Prime Minister is stating that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce spoke out of turn and was not enunciating government policy; he was on a flurry of his own in this matter. The hon. "Loose Lips". He is well named.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce last night also stated, during the same program, when questioned about the government's deficit—he didn't like them at one time, but he likes them now to the tune of $11 billion worth—

An hon. Member: He changed his tune.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to be reasonable in allowing the hon. member to come to the end of his preamble, but I would ask him now to put his question.

Mr. Crosbie: My question is this: When the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce said last night that we still might increase our revenue, was he speaking for the government when he stated that the government might bring in tax increases and revenue increases later this year? I quote him: "We still might increase our revenues", the minister said. Is that the government's position?

Mr. Trudeau: It is surprising to see the hon. member paying so much attention to the statements of the hon. member for Crowfoot.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: If members on that side had been more attentive to him a little sooner, he might still be sitting on their side.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: My question is to the Prime Minister. He has said I am very attentive to his Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. What I want to know is, is he very attentive to him? He is doing you untold harm. Who speaks for the government on financial matters: is it the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, or is it the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

● (1432)

LEVEL OF INFLATION HAD CONTROLS NOT BEEN IMPOSED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As it is the government's intention to commence phasing out the AIB program on April 14—this Friday—and as today's inflation figures give us an up to date account of the rate of inflation since the controls program began, and we find that we are 2 per cent higher at an 18 per cent rate of inflation than was anticipated for this time when the controls program was first instituted, would the minister indicate how much higher inflation would have been, in his opinion, had the controls not been imposed?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is really a hypothetical question which I cannot answer.

[English]

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed again to the Minister of Finance who, in rationalizing the inflation level in this country in his budget, referred to the impact of the falling dollar on prices in Canada. Would the minister indicate, with today's inflation levels as high as they are, what he would anticipate the inflation level to have been had the dollar not fallen so low, so fast?

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN COMMITMENT OF TROOPS TO SOUTHERN LEBANON

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. On March 22, the Globe and Mail carried a report concerning Canadian commitment of troops in Lebanon. The report quoted the Prime Minister as saying to a reporter in New York:

> Canada, if asked, will send a battalion of combat troops into southern Lebanon.

Can the Prime Minister inform the House if the quotation represents government policy or position?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not recall giving an interview to any person from the press in New York. The position of the government has been stated in the House by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think it is known now, although not publicly announced as yet, that the U.N. Secretary General has asked Canada, not for a combat battalion but for assistance with troops specialized in communications.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Someone is worrying over there. Mr. Speaker, I wish you would recognize him next for a supplementary, if they do not want to listen to the main answer.

An hon. Member: Getting a little touchy, Pierre?

An hon. Member: Horner is getting to you.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps I could give the hon. member the answer later on. The rest of the members of his party are not interested.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Don't be so fussy.

An hon. Member: Touchy.

Mr. McKinnon: The Prime Minister gets unusually sensitive at times.

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUMBER OF CANADIAN TROOPS COMMITTED TO SOUTHERN LEBANON

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): My supplementary question is for the Minister of National Defence. CBC news reported today that Canada has been asked to provide an additional 120 troops for the UN force in southern Lebanon and the government has agreed to supply 80 of them. Will the minister inform us if this report is true and, if so, why was the House of Commons not given an opportunity to discuss this new commitment?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in New York, at the United Nations, with some of my senior officers at this time to determine the precise nature of the requirement. It is for communicators, as the Prime Minister has said. We are in a position where we could, by calling out reserves and using some personnel trained for combat but with a signal capacity, make up a force of that size, if that is acceptable to the United Nations. It is being discussed this morning. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be back this afternoon following his discussions at the UN and will be able to answer questions on that subject tomorrow.

* * *

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

QUEBEC REJECTION OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO COMPENSATE FOR SALES TAX REDUCTION

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Following the licentious and insulting statements made by the Quebec premier against the sales tax cut advocated in the federal budget, is the minister prepared to return the federal share directly to Quebec consumers who are ever more concerned, frustrated, irritated and deeply confused by the inconsistent attitude of their government which has become really bad?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we made an offer to the Quebec government as we did to every provincial government of Canada. The nine other provinces have accepted the federal proposal to cut a tax which deeply affects all Canadian consumers, even those who do not pay income tax. I do hope that Quebec will accept this proposal of the federal government as did the other nine provinces.

* * *

[English]

AIR CANADA

LOCATION OF AIRCRAFT PAINTING FACILITIES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. On May 23, 1974, the Prime Minister made a special trip to Winnipeg to announce that a $15 million hangar would be built in Winnipeg. The hangar is now being built and it is virtually unused. Air Canada has recently conducted a study and has stated they would like to move their paint shop facilities from Dorval to Winnipeg so they could also paint their wide-bodied aircraft.

Will the decision to move the paint base from Dorval to Winnipeg be left to Air Canada, or is the minister or any of his colleagues in the cabinet involved in the decision-making of this move?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a question like this is ordinarily decided by Air Canada. However, I think the hon. member has some seriously incorrect information. As I understand it, Air Canada has no intention whatever to move its existing paint facilities from Dorval. There is the question of some new facilities to deal with some wide-bodied aircraft not presently handled at Dorval. The last report I had was that Air Canada was conducting a feasibility study in connection with the best location for those facilities. I have not heard that a decision has been reached by the management, but I will be glad to inform myself about that.

Mr. McKenzie: In a letter to me from the Canadian Aviation Fellowship, which is an organization made up of 2,200 Air Canada employees, they state:

> Air Canada's planned transfer to Toronto of heavy maintenance "C" checks on wide-bodied L-1011 and B-747 aircraft has been blocked—

That is, by the Minister of Transport

> —despite the fact that nearly all wide-bodied aircraft operations are centred in Toronto.

Is the minister involved in deciding whether the maintenance facilities should be removed from Dorval to Toronto for the maintenance of wide-bodied aircraft in Toronto, as most of them are there overnight, and could he give a clearcut decision on whether the final decision to put some type of operation in this hangar in Winnipeg will be left entirely with Air Canada officials?

Mr. Lang: That is the intention. I say again to the hon. member that if he believes the information from that group, which is always erroneous, he is making a serious mistake. No decision has been arrived at, and as usual—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: I think the Tories over there should realize they are dealing with a fairly extreme group which advises the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and I hope he is the only one who believes them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED SHIPMENTS OF ARMS FROM NEW BRUNSWICK TO ANTIGUA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs or the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister aware of a company named Space Research Corporation operating at a site which transcends the Canada-U.S.A. border near Highwater, Quebec, and Troy, Vermont, and if so could one of the ministers confirm reports that this corporation is involved in the manufacture, development, testing, shipment and international sale of armaments which include guns, shells and types of missiles? There are reports that such armaments have from time to time been shipped from Saint John, New Brunswick, to Antigua in the West Indies.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm such allegations.

Mr. MacKay: Would the minister undertake to check into these reports and report to the House at his early convenience?

Mr. Danson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will speak to my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, on his return.

* * *

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF REDUCTIONS IN EXPENDITURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board, who will no doubt recall that the Minister of Finance said on budget night that expenditure targets were being reduced by $350 million, without any specification. Could he indicate to the House where those cuts amounting to $350 million are being made?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the initial way in which we will do it will be to remove that from the reserve which was established in the expenditure plan totalling $48.8 billion. As I announced in the House on February 22, there will be a $350 million immediate reduction in the reserves available for new submissions for supplementaries. As to distributing that between the various departments, it will depend very much on what the submissions will be which will be rigidly restrained to the point where that money will not be spent.

Mr. Alexander: More flimflam.

Mr. Stanfield: If I were to say to the minister that this means no cut at all, or that the money was not necessary in the first place, would he have any response to that?

Mr. Andras: No, I would not agree that that is the proper interpretation. May I remind the hon. member and the House that last year when the then minister of finance, in his March 31 budget, announced certain tax concessions that were to be made, it was then agreed, and publicly announced, that the previously stated spending total for the fiscal year 1977-78 would be reduced by $670 million; in fact, from $45.12 billion to the final target for spending of $44.45 billion. We accomplished that. In fact, the other day I was able—the Minister of Finance announced it the other night—to indicate to the House that we will in fact come in $200 million below that final target. So I think it is evident that when we say that cut will be made, it will be made.

● (1442)

INDUSTRY

DISCUSSIONS WITH AMERICAN MOTORS CONCERNING PROPOSED LAY-OFFS AT BRAMPTON PLANT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that 1,000 workers at the AMC plant in Brampton will be laid off on an extended lay-off this summer and that 350 workers will lose their jobs entirely, I should like to ask the minister the following: Since American Motors has fallen short of the auto part requirements in terms of investment, production and jobs for several years running now, and in light of the fact that it has been given remissions on the duty payable on its car imports of some $80 million since 1974, can the minister indicate what discussions he has had with American Motors officials recently about these auto pact commitments, what effect these lay-offs will have on the auto pact requirements and about the efforts he expects American Motors to make to meet its job commitments under the pact?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that question I should like to inform the hon. member and the House that I will meet this afternoon with the union concerning the American Motors plant. We have had ongoing discussions with American Motors. They are transferring the production of that plant into jeeps, which is really their big seller. So on the long-term basis the move made by American Motors should help Canadian employment.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the same minister if he has had any discussions with AMC with respect to the amalgamation or joining together of AMC and Renault. If so, has the company assured him that this will result in an increase in the number of workers employed by AMC and/or Renault in Canada, instead of being simply of benefit to some of the dealers for Renault cars?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, discussions are ongoing with American Motors and Renault. I do not think I can add anything now which would be beneficial to those discussions.

* * *

INCOME TAX

REQUESTED ACTION TO PREVENT REFUND DISCOUNTING

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. In light of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue has accepted the other place in order to silence him, and that April 30 is the last day for filing income tax returns, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I appreciate that there is a bill which will never see the light of day.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to stop the financial sharks who are discounting refunds as much as 50 per cent? Cannot some kind of banking arrangement be set up in each city where there is an office of the Department of National Revenue so that low income people could receive their refunds without their being discounted by financial sharks?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there will be a bill which the House can pass quite expeditiously, if it wants, to meet this very problem. I am sure the House leaders of the various parties will agree to get it through very quickly.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have not made a thorough study of the bill, but I do not think it will stop the financial sharks from being able to discount. They will be set at a certain rate. Can the Prime Minister facilitate things for the taxpayers of the country by setting up a bank to which they could go with their income tax returns and receive 100 per cent on the dollar, in order to help the low wage earners of the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that a proposal has been made to the House of Commons. It was made with the support of all the provinces.

Mr. Woolliams: Bring the bill on.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member will have to make up his mind. Does he want the bill or does he want something else? I understand there is support from the New Democratic Party. Perhaps all parties could agree to pass it through all stages in a matter of a couple of hours. This would help.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE ON ADVERTISING PROGRAM

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. It arises from an article which appeared in yesterday's edition of the Globe and Mail in which the former chief media relations officer for the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Toronto was quoted as being very critical of the government's spending of $1 million on unemployment insurance advertising to polish up its image. He pointed out that if the government had simply sent slips of paper along with the cheques to advise recipients, it would have saved $997,000. He concluded by saying: "The common assumption of the people I worked with was that it was geared more to a spring election campaign than to informing the public".

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have a question?

Mr. Beatty: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister give some assurance to the House, with a budget deficit increasing by 35 per cent, that the government will put a stop to unnecessary, senseless and wasteful advertising which is designed only to polish the government's tarnished image?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, obviously I could not agree with the ridiculous interpretation the hon. member places on that action, which I think was required and was responsible.

* * *

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER CONSIDERING RUNWAY EXTENSION AT GASPÉ—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

The minister is back from a trip to the Atlantic provinces where he announced the spending of several million dollars on projects to improve the transportation system. Could the minister tell the House whether he is still interested in the construction of a 6,000-foot runway in Gaspé? Also, does he plan to announce shortly that he has authorized funds for the construction of an airport with all communication and navigational instruments so that Gaspesians might get better air service and receive from the minister as much attention as he gives to the Atlantic provinces?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very concerned and interested in the question of air service in the Gaspé. We are now looking at a study on the question of the best location for such airport improvements. Also, we are in the final phase of examining the potential of a Dash-7 type of service in the region which would allow for a different form of airport operation. In addition, we are looking at the potential usefulness of the airport at Bonaventure for additional service. I hope to be able to develop proposals arising out of these studies in the very near future.

* * *

NATIONAL PARKS

ERROR IN LITERATURE RESPECTING LOCATION OF FUNDY PARK

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I should like to direct my question to his parliamentary secretary. I have here a copy of a recent issue of National magazine which appeared in Reader's Digest and Chatelaine. There is a tremendous ad in there which I should like to bring to the attention of the department. It is entitled "Fundy National Park", and underneath it reads: "Parks Canada, Hugh Faulkner, Minister. Live it, Learn it, Love it. Fundy's in Nova Scotia—"

I should like to ask the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, if he would apologize to the province of New Brunswick, and New Brunswickers, for once again leaving out New Brunswick. The CBC did it on July 1. I hope the department will make a change and readvertise the park. It is a tremendous park. It is in the picture county of Albert, in the picture province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there is no question about the beauty of the park. We are aware of where it is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

FISHERIES

REPORTED RELOCATION OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment. It has to do with the widely circulated indications that at some point during the campaign which is soon to be upon us, the minister and government officials will announce the relocation of the federal Department of Fisheries and the Environment from Ottawa to the Atlantic area, probably in Halifax as part of the cornerstone development of the Halifax waterfront.

An hon. Member: Shediac?

Mr. Forrestall: Would the minister give the House the assurance, if this matter is in fact being considered, that he will not give any approval with respect to the construction of a 17-storey building on the Halifax side of the harbour so long as there remains on the Dartmouth side of the harbour a very adequate 18-storey empty building?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot respond to the hon. member's obvious need for rental or occupancy of some available space.

Mr. Clark: What about Shediac?

● (1452)

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): If the hon. Leader of the Opposition would like to ask a question about Shediac, I will answer it quite willingly.

Mr. Clark: That is about all you know.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): About all the opposition leader does is shoot from his seat.

Mr. Hees: He can shoot better in his seat than you can standing up.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, our Department of Fisheries is already a very highly decentralized one. In fact, the headquarters in Ottawa is one of the smallest headquarters for what still is a very large department in the government, with over 6,000 employees.

I do not think it is realistic that we move all of the department to that region. For example, how would you choose between the west coast and the east coast? If I could have the headquarters in Vancouver for six months, and for six months on the east coast, I would have the perfect solution.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING RENTAL OF OFFICE SPACE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister. It is a very serious proposition because it arises out of the factual situation with respect to the rental by the government of office space and office requirements in the metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth area. My question is, does it continue to be a matter of government policy that office space shall be leased only from such corporate citizens as Mr. Zeitzman, Mr. Medchuck, Mr. Fisk and some other high-ranking members of the Liberal party of the province of Nova Scotia?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. member had given me notice of this question and I could have inquired. I will take note of the question and give him an answer perhaps next week.

* * *

INDUSTRY

REASON GOVERNMENT PURCHASED ELECTRONIC EQUIPMENT MADE IN AUSTRIA

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In light of the minister's boast yesterday regarding the supposedly healthy status of the Canadian electronic industry, can he explain why the government saw fit to purchase hundreds of electronic devices from Austria such as those found on members' desks here in the House of Commons, rather than purchasing them from Canadian manufacturers?

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday that the Canadian electronics industry is in keen competition and we are well aware of the problems of the industry. With regard to Canadian purchases, my department is going to launch an advertising campaign to familiarize Canadians with the advantages of buying Canadian-made products. In carrying out that program, naturally I would hope that we could also convince the government to purchase Canadian-made products.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same minister. If he will look on his desk,—desks which members use every day—he will see "Made in Austria" on all the mikes. This must be very discouraging to Canadian manufacturers who are trying to survive in this competitive world.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the hon. member's point is well taken. As I said, we are going to launch an extensive advertising campaign to convince Canadians that there are advantages to buying in Canada. I would like to think, in launching that campaign, we will also convince the government to buy in Canada.

* * *

NATIONAL SECURITY

ALLEGED ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES OF POLICE AND INTELLIGENCE AGENTS IN CANADA

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. I would like to ask him, in light of the revelations that came out at the McDonald inquiry and the revelations that were made in the House of Commons with respect to illegal activities of law enforcement agencies and intelligence services in our country, is the minister prepared to tell the House whether he has received reports from military intelligence agencies as to possible activities within our country which may have been, or were, as illegal as those perpetrated by the security services of the RCMP?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have had no such reports. I have investigated the matter and had discussions with the senior commanders and, particularly, those responsible for intelligence. No illegal acts have taken place. There was some electronic surveillance prior to 1972, but no more has taken place since that date, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister whether the new military head of intelligence, Walter Dabros, reported to the minister with respect to his involvement in some of these illegal acts and his involvement with the security analysis group before he assumed his new position. Is the minister prepared to state categorically that there are no skeletons in the closet, and he is perfectly satisfied that military intelligence did not commit any illegal acts within our country in their domestic activities?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, General Dabros is, indeed, the director-general of intelligence service. He has briefed me on those situations. I have every confidence in him.

SOCIAL SECURITY

INCREASE IN OLD AGE PENSIONS TO COMPENSATE FOR INCREASE IN CPI

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare? In view of the fact that a substantial increase in the cost of living such as we had in March will not reflect itself in an increase in the old age pension for several months, and in view of the difficulties that older people—particularly those who live alone—are experiencing, will she make every effort to find some way to provide for an increase in old age pensions before this session ends?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have to disagree with the hon. member who is usually not mistaken regarding the social programs of the government. Old age security pension and the income supplement that goes with it are the only Canadian government pensions that are indexed every three months to reflect as much as possible the unforeseeable rises in the cost of living.

Accordingly, on June 1 all old age security pensions will reflect the rise as determined by Statistics Canada.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the minister not realize that the increase that will come July 1—not June 1—will be based on a period of five months back compared with three months behind that, so that the current increases in the cost of living will not be reflected in that increase; and is she not aware of the fact that promises have been made before to reconsider the formula on the cost of living index for older people? Will she take another look at this matter?

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I will take another look, but I am a little disappointed. The hon. member is correct when he says it is three months' time on July 1, because the old age pensions have just been indexed. Both programs are indexed every three months. This is the mechanism which was passed by this House. Except for a few cents, the increase in the cost of living will be reflected on July 1.

When I was a witness last week at the committee hearings, not one member—including the hon. gentleman—made reference to this problem of refining the tool, which is already very effective, in indexing pensions every three months. However, I will check with the officials to determine if there is a better way of attacking this problem. But that means there will have to be a legislative amendment. I do not understand why it was not brought to my attention by the hon. member last week.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Because we have been at it for years.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED DISCLOSURE OF DATA BANK RECORDS TO GENERAL PUBLIC

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice: it is supplementary to one asked by the hon. member for New Westminster yesterday.

[Translation]

Considering the astonishingly easy access to data banks at every level of government and since it is difficult to assure the imperviousness of those banks owing to the numerous points of entry into computers, is the minister considering the possibility of increasing penalties for unauthorized use of information robbed or pinched from data banks, whether they are public or private?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Solicitor General answered the hon. member for New Westminster with regard to questions relating to the CPIC index. In so far as other data banks are concerned, they are covered by various rules relating to confidentiality. I am not aware of any instances of abuse, but I will have my officers review the situation and determine whether it would be appropriate to increase the penalties for breaking such confidentiality.

* * *

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

INQUIRY WHETHER PHASING-OUT DATE WILL BE EXTENDED

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. If I heard the minister correctly earlier today, he said that it was the government's plan to begin to phase-out the Anti-Inflation Board in January of next year. As the minister knows, under the law that parliament has passed, the termination date of the Anti-Inflation Board is December 31 of this year.

• (1502)

Can the minister tell the House whether it is the present policy of the government to have the Anti-Inflation Board stay in place after December 31, the termination date set out in the law?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the phasing-out of the program is starting this week. There will be many people who will get out gradually. By the end of the year, the law will still apply for the corporations because their year will not have been completed. We have to make sure that during the year 1978 the books were kept in proper fashion and that they followed the law.

Members of the Anti-Inflation Board will have to monitor that for some months to make sure everything was done properly during 1978. After December 31, 1978, there will be no more control, but there will have to be an operation to make sure the program was followed during all of 1978.

Committee Report

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister indicate to us how far into 1979 it is the present intention of the government to have the Anti-Inflation Board stay in place?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the personnel will diminish according to the workload, but it will have to stay in operation until the books of the corporations are closed. Some have a year that starts, say, in March of this year and finishes in March of next year, so it will take some time before the board receives all the reports, analyses them, and so on. It will phase out during the year 1979 in terms of personnel, but there will be no more control after December 31 for anybody.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the following communication has been received:

Government House
Ottawa

April 12, 1978

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the twelfth day of April, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS

Second report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts—Mr. Huntington.

[Editor's note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[Mr. Chrétien.]

CRIMINAL CODE

COMMERCIAL USE OF LIE DETECTORS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-441, to amend the Criminal Code (commercial use of lie detectors).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Criminal Code so that the use of lie detectors and similar tests by private businesses in the evaluation of their employees and in the investigation of their employees' conduct be outlawed. It is intended to restrict the use of the lie detector to the criminal investigation process and eliminate it from the private sector, for the protection of the civil liberties of the individual.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

[Translation]

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 131, 480, 778, 1,201, 1,207, 1,263 and 1,435.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES POLICIES

Question No. 131—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. For each department, which units in Ottawa are designated (a) unilingual English (b) unilingual French (c) bilingual?

2. On what criteria were the designations made?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): 1. (a) Not applicable. Official Languages policies do not involve the formal or informal designation of units as "unilingual English". (b) While no units within the government have been "designated" or formally recognized as "unilingual French" there are several units where the majority of their positions have been informally identified as "Unit working in French" according to the criteria set forth in the Treasury Board circular 1975-111. The following departments and agencies have informally identified "Units working in French" during the exercise in November, 1975. The formal designation has been deferred by Treasury Board and will be reconsidered upon completion of the bilingualism plan in the year of 1978. Agriculture Canada: 11; Forms Services Section, Management Consulting Services, Finance and Administration Branch; Property and Buildings Management Section, Administration Division, Finance and Administration Branch; Operation Section, Staffing and Development Division, Personnel Administration Branch; Public Services Section, Information Services; Education Section, Education and Development Division, Health of Animals Branch; Biological Products Section, Animal Diseases Research Institute, Health of Animals Branch; Research and Diagnostic Unit, Animal Diseases Research Institute, Health of Animals Branch; Food and Fertilizer Laboratory, Plant Products Division, Food Production and Marketing Branch; Statistics Unit, Poultry Division, Food Production and Marketing Branch; Section of Food Advisory Division, Food Production and Marketing Branch; Bilingualism Programmes, Personnel Administration Branch. Canadian International Development Agency: 2; Francophone Africa Division, Latin America Division. Energy, Mines and Resources: 2; French Editorial Section of Information, Drafting Unit of Surveys and Mapping Branch.

Indian Affairs and Northern Development: 13

Administration Program

Branch	Unit
Office of Native Claims	Claims Analysis
Personnel	Program Personnel Adviser
Public and Parliamentary Affairs	Audio-Visual Section
Public and Parliamentary Affairs	Parliamentary Relations Division
Departmental Administrative Services	Departmental Security
Departmental Administrative Services	Manuals and Directive Division
Departmental Administrative Services	Records Management
Departmental Administrative Services	Stenographic and Typing Services
Engineering and Architecture Branch	Policy and Planning Division

Indian and Eskimo Affairs Program

Branch	Unit
Program Personnel Adviser	Human Resources Management Section

Northern Affairs Program

Branch	Unit
Northern Economic Planning Branch	Data Management Division

Parks Canada

Branch	Unit
National Historic Parks and Sites Branch	Policy and Planning Division
Program Financial Management Advisory Services	Contract Administration

Industry, Trade and Commerce: 1

Branch	Unit
Information Service	French Editorial Division

Justice: 1; Civil law. Privy Council and Federal-Provincial Relations Offices: 6; Privy Council Office: Operations; Co-ordination and Scheduling, External Policy and Defence, Science, Culture and Information; Personnel: Staff Planning, Development and Employment Section; Plans: Priorities and Planning; Federal-Provincial Relations Office: Policy and Program Review Section; Finance, Economy and Resources: Secretary of State: 2; Multilingual Services Division, English Translation Division. Public Service Commission: 9; Personnel Division (Unit A). Computer Services (System Maintenance). Financial Management Advisor (SDB), Information Services (Special Projects), Research and Development (Studies Division), Learning Support Division (SDB), Staffing (5 Units within the Operation Directorate), Appeals (Appeal Officers working in French), Cap (Assignment Division), The Language Training Branch of the Public Service Commission (Language Bureau) and the Official Languages Directorate were excluded for the purpose of that particular exercise in accordance with the above noted circular. However, the Official Languages Directorate did identify two units working in French. They are the Administration and Co-ordination and the Operation Divisions.

REMARKS: The major changes in the Public Service Commission organization that took place in the summer of 1977 have, in some cases, modified the proposed structure of the units working in French. Furthermore, the commission is undertaking an analysis of its present situation and such initiatives as the units working in French will have to be re-assessed and considered in light of the new policy on official languages.

Solicitor General: 3; Ministry Secretariat; Policy Planning and Program Evaluation Branch, Police and Security Planning and Analysis Branch, Research Programs Division of the Research and Systems Development Branch. Veterans Affairs: 1; Personnel Management Division—Employee Participation Group; Other departments have no information on this matter. (c) Not applicable. Official languages policies do not involve the formal or informal designation of units as bilingual.

2. The informal designation of units working in French was based on the following criteria: To help ensure that the French language will increasingly take its place with English as a language of work in the federal administration; To facilitate the recruitment and participation of unilingual Francophones on a more equal footing with unilingual Anglophones; To provide a milieu in which Anglophone public servants who have acquired second language skills will have the opportunity of becoming more fluent in the French language; To make possible a greater degree of individual bilingualism at senior levels in the public service.

TOUR CONDUCTED THROUGH EUROPE

Question No. 480—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. What was the total cost of the tour conducted through Europe by the Minister of Fitness and Amateur Sport, Dr. Roger Jackson, Director of Sport Canada and Mr. Geoff Gowan, Technical Director of the Coaching Association of Canada from April 24 to May 12, 1977?

2. What was the total cost for each individual involved?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): In so far as the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport is concerned; 1 and 2. See reply to question 147 answered March 2, 1978.

U.I.C.—MR. HI PONG NO

Question No. 778—Mr. Cossitt:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 2,765 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament which stated in part that no internal fraud squad or anything similar existed in the Toronto area within the Unemployment Insurance Commission, has further investigation on the part of the government shown that such a squad or group does indeed exist?

2. (a) Is Mr. Hi Pong No a member of the group (b) what is a complete history of his employment or association with UIC (c) what are the qualifications he possesses for his job and what work has he been doing since his appointment?

3. Is the government aware if Mr. Hi Pong No is a former South Korean internal intelligence agent and (a) if so, what details does the government possess in this regard (b) if not, will the government investigate in this regard and furnish details?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. No.

2. (a) Not applicable. (b) Mr. No was hired on February 11, 1974, as a benefit control officer and was continuously employed in that capacity until October 3, 1977. (c) Mr. No met the following qualifications for a benefit control officer position: university graduation combined with evidence of definite aptitude for general administration or demonstrated capacity for administrative work combined with the ability normally required to complete secondary school education. Evidence through work history of achieving good results, or of showing potential in, the following areas: the interpretation and application of the Unemployment Insurance Act and Regulations and in-person interviewing or investigation (either civil or criminal). Mr. No was performing the duties as per 2(b) above until October 3, 1977, at which time he was loaned on a training assignment to the immigration division in Toronto.

3. (a) and (b) Information pertaining to an employee's past employment history when supplied to the public service by the individual concerned is given in confidence. Therefore, we are unable to provide information relating to Mr. No's past employment.

AIR CANADA PASSES

Question No. 1,201—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the government aware of a statement made to the news media by Mr. Hugh Riopelle of Air Canada to the effect that certain of the Airline's public affairs officers, managers, salesmen and other senior representatives were given folders of free tickets "to dispense the passes as we see fit" and, if so, how many such passes were issued in the past four years and what is the breakdown, by year, of first-class and economy class tickets issued?

2. What loss of revenue to the Airline is represented by the dispensing of such passes?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Yes. See answers to questions 1,523, 1,559, 2,316, and 5,266 of the first session, 30th parliament.

[Mr. Cullen.]

2. Blackout periods during heavy travel peaks apply to passes issued for commercial promotional purposes, with the result that such passes are normally used when there are empty seats on flights and loss of revenue would be minimal.

MAIL DELIVERY

Question No. 1,207—Mr. Epp:

1. What is the cost per letter of door-to-door mail delivery in Canada?

2. What is the cost per letter of mail delivered in rural Canada pertaining to (a) rural post boxes (b) general delivery?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): 1. The letter carrier portion of the cost per letter of door-to-door mail delivery in Canada is 7.890. This does not include the other costs of handling such as collection, processing, transportation, etc.

2. (a) This information is not available due to lack of volume data. (b) The cost per letter of mail delivery in rural Canada pertaining to general delivery is 4.220. As indicated in 1 above, this does not include the other costs of handling such as collection, processing, transportation, etc.

WOMEN HOLDING SX POSITIONS

Question No. 1,263—Mrs. Pigott:

What is the number of women holding SX positions in the Public Service and, in each case, what is her (a) name (b) official title and on what date was she appointed (c) education level?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): As of January 31, 1978, 31 women held SX positions. Five other women were classified as SX, and seven held positions equivalent to SX. The names, official titles and dates of appointments of these employees are as follows:

Name	Title	Date of Appointment
J. R. Smith	Director, Food and Agriculture Division, AIB	September 2, 1977
C. F. Robertshaw	Director, Research and Internal Affairs, CCA	March 14, 1977
M. E. Hynna	Secretary General, CHRC	November 1, 1977
M. R. Prentis	Director General, Telecommunications Economics, COM.	April 12, 1976
E. Cooper Stein	Director, Adjudication, EIC	September 7, 1977
I. E. Johnson	Associate Executive Director, EIC	March 1, 1976
V. A. Sims	Director General, Priorities and Program Co-ordination, EIC	May 1, 1976
M. Johnson	Regional Director General, Fisheries, ENV	April 1, 1976
J. A. K. MacDonnell	Executive Director, Deer Lodge, DVA	May 14, 1973
M. Chartier-Gauvin	Director, Social Development and Manpower Programs Development, FIN	July 5, 1977
B. A. Mercer	Assistant Director, Economic Development, FIN	December 16, 1974
K. B. Cooke	Director, Research Division, IAN	August 3, 1976
E. Kriegler	Director, Public and Parliamentary Affairs, IAN	April 1, 1977

Name	Title	Date of Appointment
M. H. Labelle	Director General, Policy Research and Evaluation, IAN	October 12, 1976
G. St. Marie	Departmental Secretary, ITC	September 6, 1977
A. Desjardins	Director, Advisory and Research Services, JUS	April 17, 1974
E. I. MacDonald	Consultant, Status of Women and the Family, JUS	April 17, 1974
B. A. Darling	Project Director, Industry Projects Division, MOS	December 1, 1975
R. Swann	Project Director, Industry Projects Division, MOS	August 26, 1976
S. Blais Grenier	Director, Welfare Grants, NHW	November 17, 1975
S. M. F. Brazeau	Director, Family Planning, NHW	April 1, 1976
M. J. Flaherty	Principal Nursing Officer, NHW	August 29, 1977
M. M. Law	Director General, Health Consultation Directorate, NHW	September 1, 1976
A. K. Liljefors	Director, Program Planning and Evaluation, NHW	August 15, 1975
M. P. O'Neil	Director, Social Assistance and Services Analysis, NHW	August 1, 1976
M. Savoie	Regional Director, Québec, NHW	January 1, 1972
C. P. Scott	Director, Bureau of Drugs, NHW	January 1, 1976
J. R. McQueen	Assistant Secretary General, Programs, NMC	February 17, 1975
C. Roy	Senior Scientist, NMC	June 1, 1977
S. Popham	Assistant Secretary to Cabinet, Public Information, PCO	April 1, 1977
M. G. Y. Fraser	Director, Administrative Staffing Program, PSC	January 4, 1977
J. W. Edmonds	Director General, Manitoba, REE	January 2, 1977
C. A. Racine	Director, Public Information, REE	September 1, 1976
L. Ouimet	Secretary General to CRTC	March 14, 1977
J. Dobell	Director, Languages Administration Branch, SEC	January 2, 1975
D. Moncion	Assistant Under Secretary of State Citizenship, SEC	June 6, 1977
F. E. Goodspeed	Director, Operations, PSSRB	May 27, 1976
G. Oja	Director, Consumer Income and Expenditure, STC	June 28, 1976
J. R. Podoluk	Director General, Household Statistics, STC	February 1, 1973
N. Gendreau	Director, Evaluation, Analysis and Data Services, TBD	September 1, 1977
A. Lefebvre-Anglin	Group Chief, Programs Branch, TBD	March 31, 1977
W. E. Porteous	Tap Policy Advisor, TBD	October 17, 1977
R. Hubbard	Group Chief Industry and Natural Resources, TBD	March 31, 1977

The educational level of this group of employees is as follows:

Level of Education	No. of Women
High School	1
Bachelor's Degree	10
Master's Degree	16
Doctorate	7
Other (including medical doctors, lawyers, etc.)	9

The Budget—Mr. Stevens

THE WAY AHEAD FOR CANADA

Question No. 1,435—Mr. Whiteway:

Were responses received by the Prime Minister's Office to the Questionnaire for a Paperback Referendum printed in The Way Ahead for Canada, edited by Robert K. Logan and printed by Lester and Orpen Ltd., Toronto, 1977 and, if so, how many?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): (a) Yes. (b) Fifteen.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Monday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, as we continue our debate on what has become known as the three-penny budget, I should like to deal with three or four separate matters which are interrelated.

I should like to deal first with the unfortunate unemployment situation in this country, to spend some time reviewing the effect of Canada's falling dollar on Canada generally, our inflation level, our unemployment level, and the deficit that this government revealed only two nights ago. I should also like to touch on the general question of inflation in Canada but, most important, I wish to tell this House and the Canadian public what we in the official opposition, what we in the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, would have wished to see in the budget that was brought in on Monday night.

I am sure all hon. members have noticed the references made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) with respect to unemployment. Surely two of the most startling statements he made were when he stated, "An important reason for the growth of our labour force has been the growing number of Canadian women who are working" and, secondly, "There has also been a surge of young people coming into the labour market." If we put those two comments into proper context, what the Minister of Finance, on behalf of this government, is saying is that we should not fault them for unemployment, we should fault the women of this country for unemployment because they are looking for work, and fault their children because they are also looking for work.

Can we tolerate much longer an administration that takes perhaps one of the greatest assets we have in this country, namely, our labour force, and treats it in such an utterly disdainful way?

Some hon. Members: No!

Mr. Stevens: Surely it is the main challenge of any government in power in any country to ensure that those who wish to work in that country become gainfully employed at the occupation of their choice.

With a budget so short of proper fiscal stimulus to ensure we will have less unemployment in this country, with a budget that virtually assures us that, if no changes are made, unemployment will not only stand at the current level of 1,040,000 but it will be higher next winter, surely there can be absolutely no confidence left in this House in an administration which, through its Minister of Finance, says "Do not blame us, blame the women of this country, and blame their children who happen to be looking for work." They happen to be looking for work, Mr. Speaker, because many families are finding it so tough to make ends meet in Canada today that more than one breadwinner must go out to work, simply to get bread on the table for those families.

● (1512)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Women and children first.

Mr. Stevens: To deal with this question of unemployment, Mr. Speaker, we must also deal with the inter-related problems.

I would like to make a few comments concerning our falling dollar. First of all there is the great uncertainty this administration has brought into the entire picture of where it feels the dollar should be properly trading at the present time. It has been reliably estimated by those in the financial community that the handling of the falling dollar by this Minister of Finance has been inept. It has cost us three to four cents more than normally would have been expected if the dollar had been left to find its own level as far as international currencies are concerned.

Can there be much doubt left why the international world is confused as to where a dollar in Canada should trade? For example, we have a Minister of Finance who says that a floating dollar is a floating dollar, and presumably they do not intend to intervene. And yet it has been revealed that they have lost in United States dollar reserves $1.5 billion of precious reserves in defending what they said was only a floating dollar.

We know the government has borrowed $750 million in the U.S. market in an attempt to replenish some of those funds. We understand it intends to borrow further. There can be no doubt that one of the most pressing reasons why we have this budget before us today is that this administration was told it could not go back to the trough in the American money markets without showing the current fiscal 1979 figures, including the budgetary figures, for its administration. It was a Securities and Exchange Commission requirement in the United States which helped produce the budget we are now debating in this House.

Can there be any doubt left why the international community is disturbed and concerned when we have a Minister of Finance who speaks about a floating dollar and presumably is almost indifferent as to where that dollar will settle, and we have a Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) who says that he kind of likes a 90-cent dollar, for some reason?

On the other hand when my colleague, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), put a very telling question, I thought, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in a finance committee meeting, asking:

> —would the Minister be concerned if the Canadian dollar went down to 85 or 80 cents?

Here is what a minister of the Crown, speaking on behalf of this administration, replied:

> I would be concerned if the dollar went down to zero. I would be mightily concerned, because that would prove to me that nobody would want it.

An hon. Member: What a bright fellow.

Mr. Stevens: That is not a newspaper account of what this minister said. That is the transcript from a finance committee meeting of this parliament, where a minister of the Crown said that about the only time he would really be disturbed was if our dollar went down to zero.

I know it has been jokingly stated that the government at the present time is not too disturbed about the dollar because it thinks it has 87 cents left to go, but until I heard the comment from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in that finance committee meeting, I did not realize how totally indifferent it is to the plight of our dollar.

Let us put it into perspective. It is sometimes stated that a lower valued dollar is good because it makes our exports more competitive.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Stevens: Here is one of the loyal backbenchers who would support this government through thick and thin. In fact if they were led into hell that backbencher would say, "Let's move a little faster, if that is where you want to go, Mr. Leader."

An hon. Member: Do not interfere with the apple I am polishing.

Mr. Stevens: As far as that member is concerned, let me assure him that when he gets to hell, if that is where he is going, he will have so many friends he will spend most of his time greeting them.

An hon. Member: They will all be Liberals.

Mr. Stevens: Most of us will accept, at least temporarily, that a lower priced dollar gives a country an artificial competitive edge over other countries—

An hon. Member: Not artificial.

Mr. Stevens: —in the sense it lowers its prices in relation to the currency of other nations. This consequently results in a country being more competitive, as I say, at least for a temporary period. If a nation that chooses that route of discounting its dollar does not get a hand on its own productivity, and does not control inflation in its own country, whatever temporary advantage it gains by a falling dollar is quickly eroded, and it finds that it must devalue its currency still lower to get the shot in the arm needed to continue with its export trade. This is demonstrated by the unfortunate position the United Kingdom got into when it attempted to devalue its currency two or three times, with disastrous results.

Let me come back to the Canadian situation with respect to the falling dollar. Sometimes this government gets so trapped with its policies because it picks them up second hand from something stated in the United States. It follows the Brookings Institution type of thinking almost religiously. What has happened is that somebody in the United States has said that it might be wise for the Americans to lower their dollar, or have other currencies go up in relation to the American dollar. Quickly this government said that "if it is good for the Americans, it must be good for Canada; let us have our dollar fall even faster."

When they set us on this course they totally ignored the fact that a fall in the American dollar has approximately one third the effect on the U.S. inflation level on imports that it would have in Canada. Let me be specific. Our dollar in relation to the American dollar has fallen 16 cents since the plunge began. As far as our imports are concerned, the Minister of Finance's own department clarified for us in committee that the fall will mean, built in to our inflation level, a further 4.5 per cent inflation level in Canada. That is 4.5 per cent more inflation in Canada than what we are already destined to have.

However, if the United States allowed their currency to go down in relation to other currencies by a comparable 16 cents, the total effect in the United States would be 1.5 per cent on their inflation level. First, I would suggest that it is totally wrong for this government to have blindly led us into the psychology of accepting a falling dollar without realizing the consequence of inflation on Canada compared to the American position.

It is as simple as this. We in Canada have roughly 25 per cent of our total gross national product in trade. The Americans have 7 per cent. That is why it has only about a third of the effect in the United States that a falling dollar has in this country.

Let me touch the second, almost more important ingredient this government forgot when it played with a falling dollar. It forgets that in Canada, unlike in the United States, if our dollar falls, it causes various commodities in this country, domestically produced and domestically consumed, to go up in price because they are priced in accordance with the American dollar pricing. Let me be specific. Our lumber, zinc, natural resources, energy resources, cattle, and now even the fish, know about our falling dollar. Fish produce is also priced in accordance with the American dollar pricing.

● (1522)

What this has caused in Canada is dramatic. This is not due directly to import increases, but because so many commodities are priced in relation to an American dollar price. It is estimated that the effect of the falling dollar will cost us 3 per cent more inflation in the country. Through its inept handling of the situation, this government has triggered the falling Canadian dollar to the point where it will result in 7½ per cent additional inflation for the Canadian public to bear, a Canadian public that is already bearing an unacceptably high level of inflation as a result of the policies of this government.

Earlier today in the question period various questions were put to the Minister of Finance and certain other ministers concerning the unfortunate inflation figures that were revealed today, the fact that we had 1.1 per cent inflation in the last reported month alone, 8.8 per cent year over the year. It was also mentioned that the government's anti-inflation program as announced in October, 1975, was going to be phased out beginning this Friday. In that context, it is only fair when we are debating this budget to take a fresh look at what in fact has happened with regard to inflation in this country, certainly since this administration has been in full saddle.

In my constituency, as I am sure other members have done in their constituencies, we have maintained what we call our own grocery basket. We kept track of 15 specific grocery items just to see what in fact is the impact of inflation for the typical resident and housekeeper. My constituency is on the outskirts of Toronto. They say that Toronto is a suburb of where we live.

It is unfortunate that something is sometimes lost in statistics. When we speak about 1,045,000 out of work, I do not think it conveys the true tragedy that means for those who are out of work and looking for work. When we quote figures about 8.8 per cent inflation, or whatever figure you like, I do not think it gets through as to what that means to people who are trying to put various products that they need to eat, on the table.

Let me come down to some specifics. As I say, in my constituency, we deliberately chose 15 items that are among the most usual items for the average family. I chose November, 1970, because that was when we were assured by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that he had licked inflation. Presumably we had nothing more to worry about with regard to inflation. In november, 1970, those 15 items would have cost a Canadian family $9.97. We shopped the same items last week. The cost today is $23.83.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stevens: In case some think we have selected unusual items, I hasten to add that this is a list we have maintained every six months to see what has been the progress, or lack of progress, with regard to inflation as it affects in a meaningful way the housewife trying to put groceries on the family table.

Let me give some examples of what has happened in that period since November, 1970. A 12-ounce jar of Billy Bee honey has gone from 31 cents to 83 cents. Kraft Canadian cheese slices, eight in number, weighing eight ounces, have gone from 37 cents to 93 cents. A 48-ounce tin of Mitchell apple juice has gone from 34 cents to 77 cents. Six ten-ounce cans of Coca Cola were 66 cents in 1970. Now the same number of cans sell for $1.62.

A ten-pound bag of sugar cost 96 cents then. Today it is $1.87. Two cans of Campbell's tomato soup, ten-ounce, each tin cost 24 cents in November, 1970; now they are 40 cents. Libby's pork and beans, two 19-ounce tins, 54 cents then; now $1.18. Maxwell House coffee, one-pound tin, $1.19 then; now $4.45. Sirloin steak, 99 cents a pound then; now $2.58. Special K, 15-ounce box, 56 cents in November, 1970; now $1.08. I could go on and give the whole list of those 15 items. However, the point I want to make is that those items are only typical of the effect that inflation has had on the consumer in Canada.

When this government is cornered with the facts, it loves to start looking for an escape. We used to have a minister of finance, I have forgotten how many back he was, who blamed anchovies off the coast of South America for inflation. He really turned it around two or three ways. Either they could not find them and that was a problem, or they could find them and that was a problem. In any event, when we start quoting prices, the government often blames the farmer. Let me assure you, Mr. Speaker, you cannot blame the farmer for the prices to which I am referring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: You cannot blame the farmer, because his costs in relation to his production have gone up even faster than the prices I have been putting on the record. The reason I wish to get on record some of the impact of inflation we are living with is that I believe the time has come when this government must be called to task.

• (1532)

We could go through budget after budget and, in the terms of data processing, if they had a new word processing apparatus such as are now available I would recommend that they put every budget into that word processing machine, which would save them a lot of time when they bring in another budget, because they repeat time after time the rhetoric which did not work in the preceding budget.

Now that the controls program has been in place for 30 months we should take an objective look to find out whether it has produced the result the government said it would produce. Did it bring inflation down to a lower level than might otherwise have been expected? The answer is, no. I give the figures as of February, because that is the latest date in respect of which I can make a comparison with the situation in the United States. Since then, inflation has risen by 18.3 per cent in Canada, whereas in the United States, where there are no controls, it went up by 14.3 per cent. In short, inflation here is 4 per cent worse than the level in the United States, yet we share the same continent and basically the same problems. So there is no reason to believe that anything other than the inept handling of the situation by the government has caused us this extra 4 per cent inflation as compared with the United States.

Even worse is what happened during that period. Not only was inflation in Canada 4 per cent worse, but our real growth was 3 per cent less than real growth in the United States. In the current year, the total gross national product in Canada is running approximately $6 billion below where it should be if we had simply achieved as much growth as the United States was able to achieve since October, 1975. We are talking about big money. This represents $600 of lost revenue for every Canadian taxpayer during a period of so-called government restraint, income which has been lost because of the absence of an imaginative approach by the government to ensure that our economy reaches its proper growth levels so that we can share, if you like, in the prosperity which would be the heritage of Canadians, not just for us but for our children and their children.

In short, the government does not care. It does not care what has been happening to Canadians. I understand they are polishing up a slogan for the coming election. The slogan is supposed to be "Show You Care".

Mr. Darling: Get rid of Pierre!

Mr. Stevens: As my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka says, "Show You Care; Get Rid of Pierre".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, if they go to the country with that slogan I think it is only fair to remind them that they have not cared much about Canada or the Canadian people. All that possibility of real growth has been lost by the government. If we were able to get the Canadian work force back to work there would be no deficit—there would not be the $10.9 billion deficit which the Minister of Finance disclosed Monday night.

That deficit he is talking about represents $500 for every man, woman and child in Canada. That is the extent to which the government has gone into the hole.

I have compared inflation and real growth in Canada with that in the United States. I could go on and make comparisons with the situation in other industrialized nations. Perhaps it would be only fair for me to say that, compared with the countries of the OECD, we have the highest unemployment level of any, our inflation level is running higher than average inflation in those countries, our real growth is below that in any of those countries, our current account trade deficit, worsened by such things as our imbalanced tourist account, is higher than that in any of the OECD countries. And all this results in our being the only industrialized nation which has run a current account deficit consistently for the past four years.

Mr. Stanfield: But they are keeping cool.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, they are keeping cool, as my hon. friend says. They are indifferent. They do not care. They care about one thing. They care about their political hides.

Consider the decade which has passed, one which began after the first hundred years of Confederation, at a time when we had reached one of the highest peaks of prosperity ever reached by any country in the world. As that decade began, the philosophy guiding this administration was one of government expediency. That was the order of the day. Economic realities came second.

Let me go back to the subject of the Anti-Inflation Board. The Board was set up in October, 1975, when we were told that along with this program the government would introduce other measures of financial restraint—which it did not. At that time we were promised additional monetary restraint. Once again we were deceived.

They said there would be a general regulation of the economy—which there wasn't—plus the AIB program. They were to get us down to an 8 per cent level of inflation the first year, to a 6 per cent level the next year, and to 4 per cent in the year which is now current. But we find, Mr. Speaker, that today we are at about the same estimated level of inflation we were told we would be seeing at the end of the first year. One thing the government has excelled in, Mr. Speaker, is the ability to create inflation in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: When I say they know how to create inflation in this country I think every member of this House is under an obligation to remind the Canadian public that inflation is literally manufactured by this government by the excess printing of money in relation to the real growth of our economy. Last year, for example, with a real growth of 2.6 per cent, is it any wonder that we ended up with 9.5 per cent inflation? Consider this: they printed 12 per cent more money last year. Less 2.6 per cent, the difference is almost exactly the 9.5 per cent inflation which plagued this nation as of December, 1977. But that is not only the impact of the controls program.

● (1542)

The fact is that the approach of the government has been counter-productive. That approach has killed business initiative. It has contributed to the unemployment we are living with, and let me give figures. In March, 1975, which was the March before the controls program was imposed, there were 739,000 Canadians out of work. On a non-adjusted basis that was 7.6 per cent of the work force. On an adjusted basis it was 6.8 per cent of the work force. This March unemployment is up 300,000 compared to what it was in March, 1975. There are 1,045,000 out of work today compared with 739,000 prior to the beginning of the controls program. Expressed on an adjusted basis there is now 8.6 per cent of the work force out of work compared with the 6.8 per cent to which I referred as of March, 1975.

I think the Canadian public is aware of the inadequacies. It is aware that there must be a better way to get the Canadian economy achieving the potential which most feel—and certainly that includes members of this party—can be achieved in Canada.

In the few moments I have available I would like to touch on what this party would have liked to have seen, or would have put into the budget Monday night if we had been given that opportunity. There are three essential things which must be accomplished if we are to reach a new prosperity. First, we must once again restore consumer confidence. We must take the consumer willing to buy more because, the more he buys, the more our factories will produce, the more people they will employ, and the more prosperity there will be for all. If we had been writing a budget on Monday night, we would have put into it stimulative fiscal measures in order to ensure that the consumer would start to get back his confidence and would start to do the buying which is so sorely needed in the country.

Second, if we had had the opportunity, we would have proposed certain infrastructure investments which are sorely needed to aid fishermen on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, to aid those who handle grain in the Canadian west, to aid commuters in Toronto and other urban areas of Canada, and to help with sewage treatment plants in areas such as Montreal which need that kind of help.

The third thing we would have suggested is that it is time to put some meaningful productivity incentives into our system so that people at work benches, in factories, or wherever they produce, will produce still more to ensure that our competitiveness is restored. To that end we would have suggested on Monday night that there should be personal income tax cuts. Consumers need a break, and by reducing the tax burden on Canadians, in our view the economy would be set firmly on the path to recovery.

I know people often ask how there can be a tax cut without running up the deficit. The unique thing is that both problems can be solved at the same time. If a tax cut is stimulative, it will produce the gross national wealth which is needed to increase tax revenues, and the net effect is a deficit which is smaller that it would have been if the situation had been allowed to continue, and it is in a lethargic state now. That proposal was not just pulled out of the air. Before we enunciated our program with respect to a minimum $2 billion tax cut, we asked economic consultants to program their computers in order to tell us what a $2 billion personal income tax cut would do for Canada.

Two computer programs came back. They both suggested the same results. I would like to put on the record the net effect of such a measure. We were told that the rise in the level of gross national product would be 3.9 times the initial tax reduction. In relation to a $2 billion permanent personal tax cut, if such were implemented in 1978, the gross national product in 1980 would be $7.5 billion to $8 billion higher than it would be without the tax cut. That is why we would have announced a tax cut if we had brought down a budget on Monday night. The economy needs it. The economy needs that type of stimulant to get us producing, to bring our unemployment down and, at the same time, to bring our inflation level down.

Let me be more specific. As consumer spending accounts for more than 60 per cent of our national output, sustained weakness in this sector aborts any economic recovery. Revived consumer spending can lead the way to reduced unemployment, higher disposal incomes, and that most desirable of all things, real growth.

Increased consumer spending would allow Canadian industry to produce more goods. More production means more jobs. As industry produces more, business investment increases, thus creating more jobs. If we had had the opportunity to write that budget, we would have proposed personal income tax cuts generally, but we believe they should be oriented to help where it counts, that is, to put more spending money into the pocket of the consumer. For many Canadians the tax cut we propose would be $300, not on a temporary basis but on a permanent basis, so that people can count on more money in the coming weeks, months, and years ahead. To be most meaningful we believe that a tax should be oriented to low and middle income Canadians, who are the greatest spenders or consumers because they need every nickel they can get to make ends meet.

It is very important that a tax cut be permanent. When the government instituted its $100 tax cut, $50 in January of this year and another $50 in February of this year, it missed the point. In allowing that tax cut the government lost revenue totalling $700 million. The government said that tax cut would have a stimulative effect, but as far as I know very few wage earners in Canada even know their taxes were ever cut.

In fact most people are left with the impression that somehow their taxes went up $50 in March, and they do not understand why. I believe that fiscal measure was perhaps one of the most stupid things ever done by a department of finance. If the government wanted to produce the maximum benefit from a tax cut, that was not the way to do it. We say a tax cut must be on a permanent basis so that Canadians can count on it and so that, if they want to buy something, they know what their take home pay will be for the next 12 months. Canadians do not want gimmicks of the kind the government introduced in January and February.

We have in this budget a proposal to institute a 3 per cent provincial sales tax reduction. Here again the government has what could be a good idea, but from an administrative standpoint the effects of this proposal will be minimal. The government says provincial sales taxes should be cut for only six months, and possibly nine months in certain provinces. That would tend to cause people, if they are going to buy as a result of this tax concession, to telescope their buying into the period of the tax concession, which would result in a bigger problem in getting factories to produce in the winter months ahead. That is the time when jobs are needed, because traditionally unemployment in this country increases in the winter months over its level during the summer months.

● (1552)

Again, by putting it on a temporary basis, somehow or other they do not give any certainty to the would-be buyer or consumer in this country. Again they clouded the issue, and it may be that while it will cost them $800 million in loss of revenue, they will get a minimum benefit from their approach as compared with the benefit they could have had if they had taken the $700 million which they spent in January and February, and the $800 million they are now proposing to spend, and lumped them together with a permanent personal income tax reduction of $2 billion plus which we are suggesting.

I could go on to demonstrate why those half measures do not work so far as fiscal policy is concerned. I have suggested that our approach would tend to lower inflation, but I want to stress that it is conditional upon having a proper cutback in government spending. We believe that the government, in budget after budget, has talked about restraint, but we do not think it is sincere. In fact, it is rather startling to find in the budget which is now before us an admission, a confession, if you like, by the Minister of Finance that the government has made mistakes in the past concerning spending.

At the beginning of his budget speech the minister stated:

> It is now clear that many of our current difficulties have their roots in the period of extraordinary growth Canada experienced between the mid-1960's and the mid-1970's.

He went on to say:

> Governments increased their spending too quickly. The money supply was increased too fast.

Surely the Minister of Finance does not need to be told who was in power when that mistake was made. To come in now on April 10 and say it was a mistake, and to create the impression somehow that his predecessor or he himself should not be blamed, is absolutely ludicrous.

If we had had the opportunity to bring in the budget on Monday night, we would have been proposing a three-year program to cut $2 billion plus from federal spending. We feel that this can be done without reducing transfer payments to Canadians, without cutting back on federal capital expenditures, and without disrupting essential services in this country.

Mr. Blais: How?

Mr. Stevens: Is it not truly remarkable that the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), who is freshly out of the absolute shambles in his Post Office portfolio, now asks me "how"? For anybody who is a member of an administration which has allowed the Post Office Department, which was profitable in 1970—

Mr. Blais: Come on.

Mr. Stevens: —to run into a position where it now has a deficit of $500 million to $600 million, in spite of repeated postage rate increases, to ask that shows lack of depth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: It also shows the lack of control which the government has of financing and of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Beatty: Go steam open some letters, J.-J.

An hon. Member: Go lick a stamp.

Mr. Stevens: I hear the former postmaster general say he does not agree with my figures. I would be very pleased to take him down and show him the national financing figures and show him, year by year, where the deficit has occurred and how the expenses have risen much faster than the revenues. I think that even he, if I spend enough time, will understand exactly what I mean.

Mr. Stanfield: I would not count on that.

Mr. Hees: It would be a waste of time.

Mr. Stevens: Even he would understand how the Post Office got into trouble.

I have said that if we had had the opportunity to present a budget on Monday night, we would have proposed trimmings in federal spending which would have resulted in the federal spending being reduced by $2 billion within a three-year period. First of all let us note that operating costs account for more than 32 per cent of government spending, and it is in the area of operating costs that the government has allowed a growth of 56 per cent in the last three years. The government has allowed those costs to jump by 56 per cent during a period when it has implored the private sector to be more restrained in its own spending. If operating costs had increased only at the rate that workers' wages were allowed to increase during the time when the anti-inflation program was in effect, federal spending today would be $3.3 billion lower than at present.

I heard one of the faithful backbenchers on the government side ask where we are going to get these savings. My leader is on record concerning certain areas where we intend to make savings when we have the opportunity to write a budget. The hon. member is asking for details. We believe that a program could have been instituted on Monday night providing for a public service hiring freeze. That is the first thing we would have done.

Mr. Blais: We have had one for three years.

Mr. Stevens: The former postmaster general says they have had a hiring freeze. Surely even he could count up to 25,000, which is the number of extra employees his Post Office has hired since the 1970 period to which I have referred. When they talk about a public service freeze, what they mean is that the number of public servants has increased less quickly than it did the year before. What we are saying is that the number should not go up at all, and that there should be no replacement of the attrition that is normal in any public service. For example, there would be no replacement of the people who retire or of the people who choose to leave.

In short, over a one-year period there are approximately 20,000 employees who, for one reason or another, leave the Public Service. We simply propose that those positions not be filled. That would result, over a three-year period, in a reduction of 50,000 to 60,000 employees at the federal government level. That is what we mean by a freeze.

I think I should make clear that it would not be our intention to make any reductions in our military personnel, in our prison guards, or in our Mounties.

Mr. Chrétien: That is already half of all the government employees.

Mr. Stevens: Not including those fields, the figures I have given are figures which the Minister of Finance could have mentioned in his budget on Monday night had he had the courage to be a responsible minister rather than the part-time minister he has been.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: We would also propose that the personnel supports which go with the Public Service also be reduced. That is another cost saving which we would have proposed on Monday night. For example, it means there would be lower accommodation and equipment charges, lower transportation and communication expenditures. One must recall that taxi cab fares in Ottawa run up by the government are over $1 million a year.

● (1602)

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Stevens: Additional reductions in spending can be achieved through sharply reduced advertising and consulting expenditures. If we are given an opportunity by the Canadian public to take over the reins of government in this country, there will be a great many Liberal advertising hacks, friends, and consultants who will lose their contracts pretty fast.

Significant savings can be made from the $50 million spending spree this government is on by implementing the concept of having sunset laws instituted, with zero based budgeting.

Basically that means, rather than accepting last year's spending figures without question, we would propose that every new spending estimate be assessed as to why it is needed in the coming year. Unless it can be justified and shown to have significant value for the Canadian public, we would say it should be dropped and the saving should be passed back to the Canadian public.

The sunset law concept works the same way. No law should be regarded as so sacred that it cannot be reviewed. It is as natural to discontinue programs as it is to create them. Surely the government of the day should be assessing constantly the impact of the programs available, thus discerning if they are an advantage or a disadvantage, if they should be continued or dropped. That is what my party would have included Monday night, if we had had the opportunity of presenting the budget.

Many of the 400 Crown corporations were created under this administration. We believe some of them can be dismantled, integrated within departments, or sold to the private sector. Non-budgetary borrowings of Crown corporations must be curtailed, especially where the interest rate does not reflect market conditions.

The economic stimulus given by the tax cut, to which I referred coupled with reductions in federal spending, would combine to hold the budgetary deficit steady at first, and then to reduce it. New consumer spending would increase. Incidentally, it would increase sales tax revenue, excise tax revenue, and customs duty revenue. The newly created jobs would produce new taxpayers. As the business climate because more healty in response to increased consumer demands, there would be more revenues from federal corporation taxes. In addition to the savings of the expenditure reductions which I have outlined, federal spending on unemployment benefits would also drop the more we were able to get Canadians back to work in gainful jobs.

Perhaps I could simply sum up by saying: if we had the opportunity of presenting the budget Monday night, we would have made federal spending restraint a way of life in Ottawa.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevens: In our minds, the three-year program to which I have referred would be just the start. It would be the start of a comprehensive effort to reduce the federal presence in our economy, to reduce the dead hand of government which is stifling individual initiative and which is stifling people from achieving Canada's dream that has disappeared so much under this government.

We have referred to the rather small provincial sales tax reduction. There is room to reduce the federal manufacturing tax as well. For example, that tax is very inflationary, because at its 12 per cent level it goes on to the manufacturing level, simply to be magnified as the goods eventually go through to the consumer. When the wholesaler takes his add-on, when the retailer takes his add-on, and the province adds its provincial sales tax to that 12 per cent, in short it means that a 12 per cent tax at the federal government level results in a 28 per cent higher price for most Canadian consumers. There is room to remove and reduce that type of tax to ensure that it is not as regressive as it is at the present time. That is our reason for proposing to reduce it. By reducing federal tax, it would be stimulative but non-inflationary, as far as the economy is concerned.

There is room for more imaginative corporate tax measures than the government has proposed. In that category, it is important that tax measures designed to encourage productivity within corporations should have a hooker on them to ensure those corporations respond in a manner which the government of the day feels is advantageous to Canadians. This has been advanced repeatedly in the House by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). Certainly the government is aware of it. Because he was a former minister of industry, trade and commerce, the hon. member knows how important it is to design a package of tax stimulants to receive the impact and the benefit we are looking for, and not take anything for granted.

I should like to touch upon a more meaningful manner of implementing incentives to encourage research and development. We are pleased the government went part of the way on Monday night to encourage research and development, but we feel much more can be done. There is room to allow for inflation in corporate accounting before paying taxation. This is long overdue. There should be meaningful ways to get Canadians investing, especially in Canadian small business. On Monday night we would have introduced some concrete measures to accomplish that end.

Perhaps what is most missing in the government's approach is a longer range perspective. On Monday night the Minister of Finance should have given the nation a five-year performance projection. Why must we always be dealing in fiscal and monetary positions over the next few months, without realizing that it is the two-year, three-year, and five-year positions which should be concentrated on, to ensure that today's severe problems will not be worse in three to five years down the road? That is why, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is most unfortunate that we do not have the five-year targets written into the budgetary papers presented Monday night. Let the country know the real growth targets of the government. What are the employment targets, the inflation levels? What does the government foresee in its own expenditure plans in the next five-year period?

• (1612)

Every industrialized nation is starting to set up such plans. Presumably this government would do it if it knew what to show over the next five years in those forecasts. The hard fact is that it literally does not know what to do tomorrow to help the Canadian economy, let alone what should be done five years down the road. In that context, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move:

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "—in the opinion of this House the failure of the budget to curtail federal spending constitutes an admission by the government that it has lost control of the economy, and the temporary sales tax cut, to end before next winter, will not reduce unemployment and inflation, stimulate real growth, reduce the budgetary deficit or stabilize the dollar, as would a minimum $2 billion permanent tax cut for Canadians."

My motion is seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): It has been my pleasure, Mr. Speaker, over the years to follow the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and I must confess that at times I have had a twinge of conscience about doing so because it has offered me the opportunity of rebuttal and to take exception to some of his remarks, without giving him the same opportunity when I speak. I must admit, however, that I have no qualms today after listening to the hon. member for an hour and a half in his oration. As erudite and wise as the hon. member is, and as interesting as the things he says may be, since we are on live television I suspect it is a Conservative plot to make sure that the NDP do not have an audience.

It was my original intention to deal with the government's budget in my remarks; however, I think I must comment on some of the matters raised by the hon. member for York-Simcoe since they are being put forward as alternatives to the government's proposals.

In this day and age it is fashionable to talk about cutting back on government expenditures and such things. The first issue I would like to raise, and I think it is important, is the one and a half million people unemployed, most of whom are young men and women. Most of these young men and women have had some expectation of finding jobs for which they have been trained. But the private sector is not hiring at all. There are virtually no opportunities for our young men and women to find employment. Yet the proposal put forward by the Conservative party through the hon. member for York-Simcoe is that we put a freeze on public service hiring.

Let us look at the ramifications of such a proposal. What it means is that there is not going to be an opportunity at all for young people who are coming out of our school system. Is that what we want? We are not going to let them starve, so will unemployment insurance, Opportunities for Youth, or some similar organization make work projects for them? It sounds great when they say, "Freeze hiring in the Public Service," but translate that into what it means to the people coming into the labour market.

The government's budget is a prescription for disaster, but the kinds of suggestions that we are getting from the Conservative party are a double subscription to total disaster and are completely thoughtless. As the hon. member for York-Simcoe and everyone in this House knows, the mood of the public is against public expenditures. But standing up to this mood and saying, "Look, there are limits to public expenditures, we agree that there has to be efficiency in the public sector," is not enough. Instead, they pander to the worst kind of prejudice regarding this kind of situation and say, "We are going to freeze all hiring in the public sector." Think about what that really means.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, to have to disrupt my talk on the budget in order to deal with this, but I think it has to be dealt with because, again, it is this pandering to fears that exist in our society that is worrisome, and it should not happen. We talk about a permanent tax cut of $2 billion. That sounds great, but what happens if you have a tax cut of $2 billion? If you lock a government into saying, "We will not raise taxes regardless of what happens to the cost of living", it means the government's revenues are locked in. If I thought for one moment that the prescription of the Conservative party, the Liberal party or any party in the western world really had an answer to inflation—some of us have better answers than others—that would be fine. However, we all know that in the western world inflation is a very troublesome issue and nobody has a total answer.

If you have an adjustment because of indexing and you say there is not going to be a raise in taxes, what happens? The cost of living goes up; old age pensioners have to be told the government revenue is not there, so we cut back the old age pension; there is no money to give to the hospitals, so we will throw the patients out; we cannot deal with medicare; we cannot deal with people who need social services—throw it out; and we cut back on veterans' pensions. It sounds great when they say permanent tax cuts, but I would not like to have a permanent tax cut because it is dishonest. It cannot be done. If it is done, it is done at the expense of those people who look to the government to provide them with some of the services they are entitled to expect because of their own contributions to society. This is a great danger.

We all know there is somewhat of a right wing swing in the country and, therefore, there are certain kinds of prejudices. Instead of dealing with some of the prejudices and saying, "Look, while there is some truth, there is always some truth to these things, let us look at the whole picture", we have a situation where the Conservative party goes out and irresponsibly inflames these prejudices. It is irresponsible for that party to do such a thing, particularly when they are standing here today trying to criticize the government on the measures in the budget. There was hardly a word of criticism about the specifics of the budget.

● (1622)

For an hour and one-half I listened very carefully to the hon. member for York Simcoe, and he had hardly anything to say about the proposals in the budget. Although this is supposed to be the budget debate, he scarcely dealt with any of those issues. Particularly, he did not deal with the issue we thought he would have welcomed, the cutback in the sales tax at the provincial level in conjunction with the provincial governments. After all, this was a Tory idea that the Liberals stole. It is rather rude when you deny your paternity. I think you can make a great case out of it. It is quite obvious why the Conservative party had to deal with the other measures—they did not want to acknowledge the Liberal party was becoming as right-wing as they are.

Looking at the budget there can be no doubt that we are going into an election. In his opening remarks the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), when he was being very sanctimonious, said:

Many of the suggestions made to me for this budget would be popular politically but unwise economically. I will not follow such suggestions. I believe this is time for Canada to face our problems critically and realistically.

I wish he had done that. I would have applauded him myself. He did not do it, however, but did just the opposite. He took a whole bunch of short-term, short-sighted ideas, put them into a package that he thought would have the maximum appeal for an election, and brought that forward as a budget. I want to examine each of those proposals he has put before us, Mr. Speaker, and that he has asked us to consider as some sort of answer to the deep problems facing the country.

When I first read the budget I had doubts about the authorship. I suspected that, rather than being written by officials in the Department of Finance, it had the hallmarks of the fine hand of Keith Davey and "Boots" Coutts. It was written in the marble halls of the Senate and the Prime Minister's office. It was a political document designed for political purposes. I think there should be resentment that, facing the kind of problems we face in this country, the government would stoop so low as to try to put this piece of cosmetics before us as a budget and as a way of suggesting it is going to do the job.

I suspect there would have been a great deal more criticism with a different Minister of Finance. Most people like and admire the minister. He looks very honest, and sometimes even manages to be one of the few on that side of the House who look somewhat humble.

On budget night we had a picture of self flagellation by the minister in admitting that the government in the past might not have done everything it should have done, but claiming they are now very contrite and humble and are asking forgiveness. We even had some pictures in the newspapers showing the minister as a human being with his lovely family. It was all part of an attempt to say that "what is past, is past, and now we are on the right road." I am sorry that the respect most of us have for the minister cannot be translated into any kind of respect for the budget he has put before us.

The old villains have been trotted out. It is the fault of everybody except "us chickens on the government side." There is a nice phrase where the minister said the money supply was increased too fast. I think he has been listening to too many of the speeches of the hon. member for York-Simcoe and has picked up his wisdom there. Sometimes it is hard to know them apart without a road map.

I am glad to see the hon. member for York-Simcoe in the House. I want to say something in connection with a remark he made during his intervention when he talked about the money supply and, in ominous terms, pointed out that the growth of the money supply was around 12 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: Real growth, 2.6 per cent.

Mr. Saltsman: A real growth of 2.6 per cent, and that the rate of inflation was the difference between 2.6 per cent and the money supply. What he was saying was that if the money supply had not been increased to 12 per cent we would not have had any inflation—that the entire inflation came about because the money supply was increased. That was certainly the impression he meant to leave.

Mr. Blais: It is what he said.

Mr. Saltsman: I ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe, as a reasonable man, is it not possible that if prices go up by 12 per cent, you have to increase the money supply by 12 per cent in order to get identical circulation in a society?

Mr. Stevens: No.

Mr. Saltsman: Is that not a reasonable assumption? Why would you assume, if you saw an ostrich with its head in the sand, that what was poking out was its face?

Mr. Stevens: You missed the whole point.

Mr. Saltsman: I am sorry. I shall have to take a private lesson on this because that is certainly the impression I got—that if only you could control the money supply that would be the end of inflation. This simple little manoeuvre does not occur to that stupid government over there. I am not saying the government has the greatest brain or greatest genius in the world, but if it were that simple the problem would have been solved a long time ago. After all, the opposition must have something to say. The minister did not stop with the money supply but pointed out the other people involved—too many young people coming on the labour market, too many women coming on the labour market, and too much appropriation in Canada. All these things are apparently the fault of the economy.

I am not prepared to say that everything that goes wrong is the government's fault, but a lot of it is. We know the world is facing serious economic problems, not just Canada, and not just the United States. I am not going to make the kind of comparison made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, who pointed out that the rate of inflation in Canada over an 18-month period was 16 per cent, while it was only 14 per cent in the United States, and that therefore the AIB program is a failure.

The government is to blame for this. It has been wrong in virtually every one of its forecasts. It has learned nothing from the past, and does not seem to be willing to learn from the experience it is presently going through. It still pursues the same course.

In the election I hope the government or those others here do not win a majority, both for the sake of the country and of my own party. If they do, we will have a perpetuation of the disastrous social and economic policies we have seen over the years.

Mr. Chrétien: Why did you chicken out last time?

Mr. Saltsman: I am sure they could teach us. They could teach us to be more successful as a political party, but I doubt whether they could teach us to be more honest, more straightforward, or have better ideas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1632)

Mr. Saltsman: When you are not the winner, success is not everything.

I would like to look at some of the specifics in the budget just to show how effective some of the measures will be. The first one is research and development, and we will start with motherhood as it is always a good place to start. Everyone is in favour of research and development. After all, who can be opposed to extra grants and special benefits to encourage research and development? We are all in favour of it.

What has been the experience in Canada? Canada, over the years, has had one of the most generous policies of research and development of any country. Over the years we have allocated sums of money in the budget for research and development. It was one of the few items in federal budgets which was never spent because it was never picked up. It will not be picked up this time either. The problem is quite clear. You will get some research and development, and to the extent that it will create some jobs for Canadian scientists I am happy for that and I will not knock that, but to expect that there will be any kind of significant improvement in research and development is nonsense.

The reason research and development are not carried out in Canada is not because we have not tried to give encouragement; it is because most of our firms which are in a position to do this are foreign owned. And because of this they will not get into research and development in Canada, and they have not done any. Even where they have carried out research and development in Canada, we still do not benefit. We might get a few jobs for engineers and scientists, but the real benefits from research and development come with the creation of the mass production jobs. When the technology is applied to the plant, it will go back to the head office. There is no provision which says that technology must stay here.

There are fewer patents registered in Canada than anywhere else in the world. Even if something is invented in Canada and we pay for it through tax dollars, we do not receive the benefits from that sort of thing. Research and development are very valuable. Who will argue against research and development? But it is not true that we have done anything effective in that area, and we cannot do anything effective in that area until the government develops an industrial strategy which deals with the question of foreign ownership.

With respect to energy development incentives, it is remarkable that we are living in an age where, in less than 100 years, we have virtually consumed all the fossil energy which has taken nature billions of years to create. In one generation we have consumed it. Where do the incentives go for that small dwindling resource that is still left of fossil fuels? How much is left? No matter what we do or how we reduce our consumption, do we have more than 50 years or 100 years left? Is that where the incentives should go to reduce it even further than it is at the moment? My friend, the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth) says, "Let it stay there, it will not go bad". It has been there a long time.

I think we need to give incentives in the field of energy. If we are going to do that, surely it should be in the area of renewable energy. There are lots of areas in which incentives are required. There are lots of jobs which could be created in the area of nuclear energy, tidal power, and solar energy, and work could be done in those areas. But we do not do that. Instead, incentives are given to the oil companies which really do not need it all that badly. If in fact it turns out these companies become very profitable, the province of Alberta will take it away from them, and the province of Saskatchewan as well, to a smaller degree; Saskatchewan is a little more sensitive. Those are two of the great items in the budget.

Let me demonstrate, Mr. Speaker, the difference and the attitude which our party would take on a certain item as compared to what the government has proposed. I am speaking particularly of railway investment. We know, and I think all of us acknowledge, that rail beds must be improved, the rolling stock must be improved. In an era of tight energy, rail transportation is an important development which we should be looking at, especially passenger services.

Our party proposes that one of the fastest and most useful ways to invest in the future is by putting people to work fixing up roadbeds, and getting the work done on the roadbeds now while the unemployment level is high. This is in preference to paying them unemployment insurance. We have suggested this before as a government program. I am not talking about doing it out of current taxation. The money could be borrowed, special bonds could be issued; after all, it is a capital investment. It would solve two problems. It would give us the type of infrastructure we need for the future, and it would correct this horror of unemployment of the present. But no, the government will not touch it. However, it has to deal with it in some way. It does this by giving the railroads a special concession of 6 per cent depreciation allowance, an extra allowance, if they will make some of these improvements.

What is the difference? If it is done on a national basis, it is done for the national interest. If it is done on a business basis through depreciation allowances, for example the CPR and the CNR later on, because they say they will operate just like the CPR—Gresham's law the bad drives out the good, it is not the good that reforms the bad—when will they do it? They will do it when it suits their corporate interest, when it suits their balance sheets, not when it suits the national interest. I am not critical of the way the CPR is doing it; this is the way the world is. It is the government which must be condemned.

In effect the government is saying if companies feel like going along with improvements when it suits their interests, then it could be done. We in this party think it is of critical importance to this country that these programs should be commenced immediately. That is an example of the difference in policies. Even if you take an idea which has some merit, by the time the government gets through twisting and distorting it and trying to find some way to make it fit into its precious free enterprise system, there is not much left of it for the nation.

Let us go on to another matter, that of the retail sales tax. I think this is not a bad measure, either as a temporary or a long-term measure. I want to say there is some benefit to this. If one is to give a fast stimulus to the economy, the most effective way to give that stimulus is to cut the retail sales tax. What is the consequence? Six months, nine months, depending on which option is taken. In the six months now when employment generally is a little better than average, the stimulus will occur.

This stimulus will work, but not to the extent the government thinks. This six-months period will end just before the winter. People will have made their large purchases. There will be ads in the last month saying "Quickly, Quickly, Quickly; Buy, Buy, Buy Now. Do Not Wait, The Tax Is Going Back On". Instead of the seven years of the pharaohs, the seven good years or the seven lean years, we will have six good months, and then six disastrous months in the middle of the winter when we need employment the most. That is irresponsible. That is short-term, and it is designed for no other reason than to make the government look better in the middle of an election period. I think it is wrong, and it must be said that the budget should not be used for this purpose.

I understand, to the credit of the minister, that he did not want a budget. That is the rumour. I do not know; I have not asked him. He has not volunteered the information. But I assume he did not want the budget because he knew the kind of budget for which he would have to be responsible. I guess the politicians and the boys in the finance department could have told him that there is not much that you can do with short-term stuff; longer term measures have to be undertaken if they are to succeed. But my good friend in the other place, Senator Davey, probably said, "We have to have a budget. We may not gain any points from this budget because it will be a little transparent, people will see through it, but if you go into an election and the Tories are screaming at you "How dare you go into an election without a budget" then it might cost us some votes. If you break even on the budget, you have done well.

They certainly are not going to win any kudos from this budget, but they may break even. People will say there is a lot of truth in what you say, and criticism is valid. They will say they can get a car for a couple of hundred dollars less. A break is a break. People are not ungrateful.

● (1642)

The budget was designed, and I greet this with some approval, to stimulate consumption. That is one of the chief problems as far as unemployment is concerned. Our society is suffering from an inadequacy of consumption. Our subamendment will try to deal with that in a somewhat better way than the amendment.

We have been suffering from under consumption. Consumption has to be stimulated. We do not object to the kind of stimulus such as the sales tax measure, but to the short-term nature of it and the problems it will create. However, the problems will be created after the election. If they have a majority, they do not need to worry about it for four years.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: God help us!

Mr. Saltsman: As my friend says, God help us! They are trying to stimulate the economy, trying to create consumer demand. Then they turn around and find here is another groups of disaffected people whom they think they can buy off very cheaply. The way to buy them off is to sweeten the provisions of the Registered Retirement Savings Plans. After all, it is mostly the rich who use them, not the poor.

By sweetening the benefits, they increase the amount of savings. On the left hand, they are trying to encourage consumption by cutting taxes. They do not know their left hand from their right. With their right hand, they are encouraging savings. What kind of a policy is that, with one offsetting the other? If the minister did not understand it or was not aware of the problem, you could say it was pure stupidity. It was not that, because the minister understands. For six months he has been going around the country, and he made reference to it in the question period today, saying that we in this country are saving too much money, that we should be spending the money, not saving it.

Saving is a private virtue, but if everybody starts to save, it becomes a public disaster. That created the depression in the thirties to some extent. We may in fact be saving ourselves into a depression right now. One reason we cannot recover as quickly as we could is because the level of savings is just too high.

Mr. Chrétien: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: The minister applauds. I thank him for that. I know he understands. However, why perpetuate programs like the Registered Retirement Savings Program, and then sweeten it to encourage more savings at a time when the problem is consumption? This is the difficulty. How can anyone be asked to look at this budget with credibility and without suspicion, seeing these two contradictory items side by side? This is what makes the whole thing so difficult.

I want to conclude, not because there is not a great deal more to say, but I am not in the fortunate position of the spokesman for the official opposition in having unlimited time. I do not have unlimited time. I also have a subamendment that I want to move.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have another ten minutes.

Mr. Saltsman: My unofficial leader, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has just checked the clock. He tells me I have another ten minutes. Now I want to talk about what we need to do.

We need to start thinking about what is happening to our society. We must stop kidding ourselves. The government kids us by saying "everything is all right, it is the money supply, there are too many young people, too many people are getting into bed with each other and having too many children and we have to do something about that." They say that is creating all the problems. The opposition state we have too many public servants, we have to get rid of the public servants and we have to freeze taxes, without really thinking out the consequences about what they are saying. I know it is a difficult time we live in, difficult in the sense that a lot of the old rules just do not apply.

I am supporting a tax cut in my subamendment. A tax cut will do some good, particularly if it is as suggested in our subamendment, at the very lowest end of the income scale, and if it is coupled with a tax credit so that those who do not have the income to pay tax will get some benefit and do some spending.

We, in effect, have two societies side by side. Every time you cut the tax of one, you increase their savings. They have reached that kind of satiation point. They do not need things that badly. The other group needs things very badly, but does not have the money.

What we are seeing in our society is the old, old problem, except now it has become an economic rather than a social problem. It is a problem of income distribution. Those who have it do not need to spend, and those who would spend and get the economy rolling again do not have it. We need something similar to an internal Marshall Plan. We see no signs of it in anything the government proposes.

In fairness to the government, I must say one of the reasons I like the sales tax proposal, in contrast to some of the other proposals, is that it has a leveller effect. It tends to help people at the lowest end of the income scale as much as it helps the others. Of the options, that is the preferred one.

We need to have income redistribution in some way. That does not mean more incentives for people with money. We have to be prepared to tax those who have money, for their own sake. This is the great irony of our times. People do not want to pay taxes to help the unemployed. They do not want their money to go to some of the depressed areas of Canada. But it must go whether they like it or not, unless they are prepared to see people starving in the streets.

Those who are working complain about the taxes they are paying. They are paying unemployment insurance and other things. With better income redistribution, the consequence would be to put more people back to work. A lot of what they are now paying for would not be necessary. Even though taxes might seem to be a little higher, Canadians would be infinitely better off than now. The work would be shared. More people would be happy. The burden of maintaining society would be borne by everyone instead of a few.

There is no escape from this dilemma in a modern society. Either everyone works and everyone carries some of the burden, or those who are working carry the burden for those who are not. That is the choice. It is not a matter of saying "I am going to work, and the hell with the other guy." Fortunately our society has gone past that stage. We are much too civilized and decent to do that sort of thing.

When taxes were cut previously, it turned out to be a very powerful stimulus. Now, depending on whose taxes are cut, it can either be a stimulus or it can result in more savings. Much of the tax cuts of the past have not gone into consumption, but into savings. This has compounded the problem. For tax cuts to be effective, they must take place in areas where the benefits or the returns for those tax cuts are going to be spent. That is what must be done if you want to stimulate the economy and stimulate consumer purchasing power.

In many ways what I am saying is that income redistribution is no longer just a question of morality. It is no longer what the socialist believes in, that income redistribution is good, that one person should not be very rich while another is very poor. It is more than just morality more than just political ideology. Either it will be done or our society will not survive. It is an economic necessity. Therefore, when we look at these measures, we must look at them with great care to ensure that the tax cuts do not go into those areas which will compound the problem but go to those areas which will improve the situation.

• (1652)

Therefore, in the light of what I have said, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

That the amendment be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"and this House calls for such an income tax cut to be directed mainly to those in the lower income brackets, including the provision of tax credits to those who are below the exemption levels, to stimulate production and provide jobs for unemployed Canadians."

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, every time I have had the opportunity of commenting on a budget, I always did take time to think of the minister who had introduced it. I have witnessed a succession of finance ministers in this House during nearly 16 years and I have noticed that they never lasted long in this office. This is why I am more inclined to sympathize with these men who have at least the courage to face up to a department which is perhaps fatal for any minister, since most of them lose their hides and those who do not succumb are disabled or sent to rest in the Senate, which is not a better fate. I do not wish that to happen to the present minister who is still young but I simply want to tell him before starting my remarks that I sympathize with him because he has been compelled by circumstances to present this budget. Some weeks ago people were wondering if a budget was actually going to be presented and the government did not seem to have the capacity or the will to do so. There was a change of mind every week on the subject and finally we end up with a semblance of a budget.

While reading over the financial statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) I acknowledge with him that we are living in very troubled times and that our problems are as complex as they are difficult. With an unprecedented unemployment level that is a total of 1,045,000 workers seeking jobs and collecting benefits as long as they are eligible, not to mention all those who cannot draw any unemployment insurance benefits because their entitlement period has expired; with a still threatening inflation which will not slow down as long as the government does not have the courage to reduce the interest rates to allow consumers no longer to have to pay from 30 to 40 per cent extra for the goods they purchase, with export prices which have doubled on account of the excessive tariffs set by the government, with the quotas imposed on consumer goods regulating the distribution of the production to ensure the highest possible price, with this stubbornness on the part of the government not to grant milk and food products the necessary quotas so that the producer may match his production costs rather than having to curtail his production or even destroy it, these are all the reasons why we are going through a time when our economy is very weak and the problems we are facing today so complex and difficult. They have become even more serious because of the chronic incapacity of the minister to try and cure the evil at its roots namely, the excessive interest rates which are the prime cause for this whole economic disarray. I still remember the debate I had some ten years ago before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs when the Bank Act was last revised. When it was suggested to remove any existing ceiling on the interest charged by the chartered banks, I told them at the time that Canada would face a rate of inflation higher than ever because of their mistake. That is what is happening today. The government did nothing to correct its mistake. I would even say that it made the situation worse by allowing the floating dollar. Our dollar is not the only thing that is floating now. Our entire economy is adrift while our Canadian dollar sinks and drowns. Our businessmen are sinking with it while our new Minister of Finance is fooling around on the deck of the ship claiming that everything is just fine and dandy. Except of course that our dollar is worth only 87 cents, our foreign markets are no longer competitive, the deficit of our balance of payments is enormous, our industries too poor to modernize their facilities. Other than that, no problem.

● (1702)

His mini-budget gives us some reason for hope. The only measure which, I think, could or would attract the attention of Canadians. In his speech the minister said

> Any further stimulus should obviously be fast-acting. It should encourage consumer spending, not more spending by government . . .

That is what he said, but we shall see later on.

> A reduction of retail sales taxes fits these requirements best.

However, everybody knows that the retail tax is under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. The minister intrudes without hesitation in the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces and tells them: Here I am the big federal chief. And he lays it on thick. As elections are coming I want to give the impression that I relieve the burden of tax-payers by asking the provinces to reduce their retail sales taxes by 3 per cent. I shall repay part of it but the provinces will have to make up the difference. What a magnificient gift. Not only he intrudes in the jurisdiction of the provinces but he asks them to pay for it. Listen to what the minister says to the province:

> I have offered to compensate them for a reduction of two percentage point in their retail sales tax for a period of six months.

Do you realize how long the long-term policies of the government are for; six months!

> In return, I have asked them to bear the cost of either a further one percentage point for the same period, or an extension of the two-point cut for a further three-month period.

And the minister seemed surprised by the refusal of the province of Quebec faced with such an intrusion. Have we lost all the common sense of the Canadian confederation concept because of our federalist mind? Do we know at least that we have today a real Confederation made up of autonomous provinces that want to keep their autonomy? If we want Canada to survive we shall set aside our strong federal state to truly live a Confederation that commands the integrity and respect of both government levels. Why did the Federal Government not reduce the excise tax which is hidden in the price of goods so that nobody notices it?

Why not remove the tax on building materials? Why not even reduce the tax on gasoline when it is levied by both levels of government? They take their own share of the tax on gasoline, considering that we are paying today more taxes for a gallon of gasoline than for the gasoline itself. Mr. Speaker, one of these days one might suggest designing an engine which would run on taxes rather than on gasoline and that might prove to be more economical. At least the government would stop invading provincial fields of jurisdiction since they are partly or totally under federal jurisdiction. The government is even more ridiculous. It reduces the retail sales tax by 3 per cent for six to nine months after allowing the Bank of Canada to raise its interest rate to 8.5 per cent. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the consumer who wants to save 3 per cent tax during this period of six months will be forced to pay an additional 1.5 to 2 per cent in interest for five, ten, or 20 years to obtain the goods available during those six months.

That is how the government takes Canadians to the cleaners by giving them a mouse and having them pay for an elephant. And the minister goes on to say that the consumers have to be the ones who, by spending more, will stimulate the economy during the next six months. The minister sets at $1.1 billion the revenues he will draw from these operations. I doubt it very much. Even if it were true, the provinces will still have to pay $300 million and the federal government will pay only $800 million, including $350 million off the estimates of Treasury Board. The most tragic part of it all is that consumers are asked to go deeper in debt. And the example is set in high places, Mr. Speaker, since in 1977-78 Canada was going into debt to the tune of $25 million every day, whereas in 1978-79 we will be up to a daily rate of $31 million. As we see, everything is fine, thank you. We are progressing, Mr. Speaker, we are getting closer to the day when we are totally broke.

When we know that the interest on our debt accrues at a rate of $18 million every day, it makes one wonder, Mr. Speaker. In 1978, we will pay every day $18 million in interest on our debts. In 1975, Canada's debt was $19 billion while it was $39.8 billion as of March 31, 1978. On the same day next year, it will be $51.3 billion. When will we see the end of it, Mr. Speaker?

Did you know that in this day and age debts are considered as assets? People have laughed a lot about "Caouette's buck", but "Chrétien's floating buck" will make them laugh to death, because it is worth even less. With 1,045,000 unemployed, the minister has no solution other than to ask people to spend more. Increase your consumption, increase your debts, your children will pay the interest for you if they are still able to do so! The minister blames workers for not spending enough and those who have savings for not trying to invest. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I say that before the minister makes his calculations, he should meet the families who want to concentrate their savings to be able to use them for members of the family and who have a family deposit or account so that if one member of the family needs to buy a car or furniture, he can take what he needs from the family deposit and then later repay this amount, without interest charges, of course. The family deposit is part of the family and does not call for interest charges.

● (1712)

Many people already do this, Mr. Speaker, and I know of some people who have built a house for their son with their family deposit because it had become large enough—this can happen when 15 or 20 people make a deposit each month. This young man paid $30,000 for his house, and otherwise it would have taken him 30 years to pay for it. At the current interest rate, he would have paid $90,000 in 30 years. This young man built his house with the family credit. He will pay exactly $30,000 for it by making a monthly deposit of $200, and in seven and a half years, he will own his house. If he had gone to a finance company, he would have finished paying for his house in 30 years just before his death and he would still not be a homeowner. Indeed, this is what happened to a friend of mine who died recently. He had worked hard all his life and raised nine or ten children before dying suddenly and his wife's only consolation when I saw her was that at least his death benefits had cleared the debt on their home. This man worked all his life and he had to die to leave something to his children.

I say that we must educate people about this and if we can convince them to reduce their expenses for five years to accumulate some capital, this would kill off all the little financial plans under which money is available at interest rates of 20 and 24 per cent. We would eliminate them if we could convince the population to do this. Mr. Speaker, this is social credit and it is applied very successfully in certain areas. In this way, there is no perpetual debt. In this regard, I have here a newspaper article written by Richard Johnson which states the following:

The debt of every Canadian worker amounts to $10,600.

According to the latest Statistics Canada figures, the Canadian debt on the international market has just reached $106 billion, which is an increase of 10.4 per cent over last year.

An increase of 10.4 per cent over last year is rather high, Mr. Speaker.

This simply means that every one of the ten million Canadian workers now owes $10,600 compared with $9,600 last year. A lot of good that's doing us! And then one wonders why the Canadian dollar is losing more and more value!

That amount of $106 billion represents the total debts of governments (federal, local, provincial), corporations and individuals to foreign lenders.

All we are trying to get abroad is money, because we are too cowardly to do so at home.

Canada's debt abroad has increased very fast in recent years because corporations and various governments in particular have borrowed heavily on international markets and on the New York market. Our debt has increased by more than $18 billion in the last three years alone whereas it took 15 years to reach such an amount.

The reimbursement cost for those loans in U.S. dollars, Swiss franks, German marks and Japanese yens will get increasingly higher as our dollar loses value. For example, last year Canadians paid about $9 billion in interests alone on borrowings abroad. No doubt you will be happy to learn that this interest is paid out of our taxes, our income tax and the goods we buy. The more our dollar gives down, the more we will have to pay in interest on our debt.

And so, servicing the debt costs every worker about $900.

Everyone is convinced today that shockingly high interest rates are the first cause of inflation and the ruination of our economy. What does this government suggest to fight against inflation? It increases interest rates even further. Today, a young man who wants a house will have to pay three interests to big business and one to the builder. Everyone is aware of that. Everyone understands it. The figures prove it and people recognize it. That is a fact. Everyone agrees that it is senseless, that the government should lower or freeze interest rates. Those infamous interest rates, and what's more, they are capitalized, are the ruination of our people.

The minister says that in 1974-75 he reduced the growth in expenditures by 26 per cent. That sounds good. But let us have a closer look. He reduced the growth of expenditures by 26 per cent; in 1975-76, by 18 per cent and by 10 per cent in following years. But it all depends on the rate of growth he had foreseen. Was it 20, 30 or 40 per cent? It would be interesting to know, but he does not say.

If the minister wanted to be honest with the people, he would use language they understand and tell them what the annual rate of increase in expenditures is, since, after all, they go up every year. So why speak of a decrease? Always a word to please. Why speak of a decrease when in fact it is an increase? In many services anyway. Of course, our friends must be protected, that is the civil service. All the former hon. members are there now, of course. We are well managed by a bureaucracy that has but one purpose in mind: that of doubling, if at all possible, the number of civil servants. The officials who prepared the minister's statement have thought of everything so as to make our economy look as if it was progressing whereas in fact it is seriously regressing.

A few years ago, we had one public servant for five people, today the ratio is one to three, and tomorrow it will be one to one. Meanwhile, the minister is trying to convince the public that he is controlling expenses. Expenses cannot go down if the number of public servants double. When the federal administration alone costs $2,000 per capita, we cannot be made to believe that this is normal. Mr. Speaker, as time is getting short, I would like to touch upon my last item, concerning the grants offered to research. Public servants certainly will not get any grey hair thinking about the incentives announced by the minister for research and development. Whereas there were numerous reports of the frustration encountered by university researchers because of the 20 per cent and over cut in medical research by the Canadian Medical Research Council, the minister purported to be the good samaritan of research and development in industry, usually the larger, rather than the small or medium. While it may seem that we are giving with one hand, we are taking money away from our most productive researchers, which ends up costing millions of dollars to the taxpayers. Indeed, after the government has spent considerable sums of money on training and on the purchase of laboratory equipment, it cannot earmark the amounts necessary for the actual research once all the arsenal is there.

In that regard, Mr. Speaker, the Social Credit Party of Canada shares the view of the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies which repeatedly asked government to increase R & D funds to 2.5 per cent of the GNP by 1985, which would eliminate the unforeseen changes of the Minister of Finance, which scientists end up paying for in the wake of an election. I reiterate to the minister that he must recognize that his first budget can only disappoint the Canadian population and possibly make it reject his government.

● (1722)

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my first words today must be ones of compliment and congratulations to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who has shown the courage, under very difficult conditions, to be what he describes himself as being—a thoroughly responsible Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

Mr. Jamieson: Hon. members opposite have a choice this afternoon. Either they can listen to a very serious discussion on the international situation as it relates to the economy or, if they want to mix it up a little, I would be very glad to do that too. Since I understand we are a little on the short side for time, I hope they will bear with me and give me an opportunity to resist the tendency to point out in much detail some of the errors in their ways.

In any event, this afternoon I wanted to talk primarily about the context of the international situation as it relates to the Canadian economy. Before I do that, and in adding to my congratulations to the Minister of Finance, I want to speak as a Newfoundlander. In that capacity, it is with gratitude that the people of my province thank him for a reduction in the highest sale tax in the whole of Canada by a full 3 percentage points, without any payment by them for that particular gesture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I find it rather odd that hon. members on the other side of the House would wish to dismiss a very significant reduction of that magnitude, from the highest in Canada at 11 per cent down to 8 per cent, when they were singularly silent a few weeks ago, when hon. members from Newfoundland on this side of the House were complaining that the Tory provincial government of Newfoundland had increased its sales tax by 1 percentage point. Not only have we rolled back a Tory increase of 1 per cent which occurred two weeks ago, but we have taken it down a full additional 2 percentage points.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): For how long?

Mr. Jamieson: Having been in Newfoundland only a few days ago—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): For how long?

Mr. Jamieson: I will come to the hon. member's question in just a moment. I suspect if that gentleman were given a roomful of ponies, he would pass them up for the manure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member should listen to what is being said.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): That is what is being spread over there.

Mr. Jamieson: I must confess the hon. member is not contributing much to the calibre of the debate by his interruptions. He was asking how long the tax cut will last. I will get to that in a moment. However, I was in Newfoundland as recently as this past weekend, and the general level of concern about the sales tax was the biggest single item on most people's minds—that it had been escalating so steadily over the past three years. In one fell swoop, the Minister of Finance has rolled back that rate to where it was three, four or even five years ago. That is a very profound change in the cost of living of a large number of Newfoundland people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member asked: "For how long?" It seems to me the Minister of Finance deserves commendation and not criticism for being very specific in what he wished to say about the sales tax and the duration of this particular cut. It could have been done in a way in which there would have been an implicit arrangement between himself and the provinces, but no specific declaration as to when it was going to expire. In other words, we could have played hanky-panky between the public and ourselves. At least we could have let them think that it was going to continue interminably. That would have had two effects. In the first place, it would not have been the appropriate course to take. In the second place, as the Minister of Finance said yesterday, surely it is the proper response, in terms of the requests and demands that we stimulate the economy and consumer spending, to indicate that there is a period over the next six months when consumers can take advantage of a very significant saving. The more significant it becomes, the larger the items that are purchased. Therefore, really it makes good sense to say that this measure is going to be in effect for a fixed period of time; that "here is your opportunity to take advantage of this."

Furthermore, to suggest the end of the six-month period will be the end of federal-provincial co-operation is to give the lie to the tremendous progress we have made as a result of, for example, the first ministers' conference and other discussions over the last several months. This consultative process will proceed. There is nothing to suggest, at the end of the six-month period, that there will not be other new, imaginative and creative ideas flowing from this unique process, which was introduced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and reinforced in these last few days by the Minister of Finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I should like to say something else in reply to hon. members who say: "For how long?" Let them also ask the provincial governments: "For how long?" Let them remind themselves and the public that these are provincial sales taxes which are being reduced. There is nothing in this law, or in any other piece of legislation which is likely to be introduced, that will compel any province, including Newfoundland, to restore the 3 per cent at the end of six months or not to take any other kinds of measures.

In my judgment, as well as the judgment of many provincial ministers of finance, the vast majority of the economists who have commented upon it, and the editorial writers who have commented upon it, this was a creative, new approach which reflected not only the wisest and best means of getting additional funds into the hands of consumers, but at the same time ensured that this government meant it and that the provincial governments meant it, when several weeks ago they said that they were prepared to embark upon a new era of co-operation. This is a prize example, and I predict that it is the first of many which will flow from it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: When I rose, I indicated that I intended to talk primarily about the international situation as it affects the Canadian economy. Unfortunately, and perhaps inevitably in this kind of debate and atmosphere, there is an unreasonable tendency to assume that in some way or other Canada exists in a vacuum; that we are totally immune to the forces at play in an unprecedented way in all parts of the world; and that it is possible for us, through our own actions within Canada, to turn a situation around that is bedevilling societies and economies in every developed country of the world, and which in fact in some of those countries is actually threatening their democratic stability. One has only to look at the recent developments in many countries of the European Economic Community to see that they are in very serious difficulties, that there is a frankness in admitting this, and that in fact, as long as that situation continues, it is going to be impossible for any single country such as Canada to extract itself totally from this situation. Now, this is not to say that we cannot take measures within this parliament and the provinces to improve our position.

● (1732)

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that not only this Minister of Finance but his predecessors also have taken a whole series of measures which, though ridiculed on the other side of the House, have, in the eyes of any objective assessment that you wish to make, produced an economic performance for Canada over these last number of years that the OECD and all the other international indicators show is better than that of all of the countries in the European Community and in the OECD membership itself. These are facts, and I ask the hon. members to look at them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Only this morning when I was in New York at the United Nations, on entirely different government business, I had an opportunity to discuss this matter with a number of people and to learn what is happening in the international community. I want to say to hon. members, and I put this to them, that despite the seriousness of our problems in Canada, if you were to measure them against those, for example, of the United States—where only yesterday the President had to make a further appeal to his countrymen to curb their inflationary tendencies and to take the measures necessary to curb rising prices in that country—we have done very well.

In the European community just last week when the nine leaders met in Copenhagen, they resolved that during the next 12 months they would have an increase of growth in their productivity of something in the order of 4½ per cent. Taking that yardstick—a sober assessment by those leaders of what they are going to be able to achieve—surely it is not unreasonable to commend the Minister of Finance for saying that he is not only going to meet the world average in terms of growth, but also he is anticipating that our situation will be modestly better than that of the average of the countries in the OECD.

I realize that it is not as exciting to talk about the world situation as it is to hammer away at this or that matter which has a purely domestic application, but the truth of the matter is that until members of this House and the people of Canada realize it, we are not going to be able really to undertake the kind of concerted policies which have widespread support and that will bring us out of this extremely difficult world-wide situation.

I see next to me the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), and I am sure that he would confirm that the energy problems that we are facing in Canada—whether they are of tremendous magnitude or not—by world standards are much less onerous upon the Canadian consumer than those, for example, in many of the countries that I have mentioned. It is pointless for us to confuse the public or delude the public—as is often done by members opposite, and perhaps, in fairness, by all members of this House—into assuming that in a world in which there has been a quadrupling of oil prices in the last three to five years it is possible to shield consumers in this country from the effect of something which occurred in the Middle East and which is very much wrapped up in the international situation.

Surely we can pass on to the Canadian public the message that there have been fundamental changes in the world's international economic structure. Unless we have the willingness and determination in Canada, first of all, to recognize this, and then to take the steps that are necessary to counteract the problem, then not only within Canada but in the western world in general we are not going to achieve the kind of progress that all of us are anxious to have. It will not be solved by some of the measures which have been proposed by members opposite which, surely, must open them up to the accusation that they are, in fact, speaking out of both sides of their mouths at the same time.

To suggest—as has been done in this House, I understand, as recently as today—that you can introduce a $2 billion permanent tax cut and at the same time not affect the level of transfer payments, the level of service to the Canadian public, or in any other way affect the public in Canada is at the very least hypocrisy. At the very worst, it is deception of the worst possible kind, because I say it cannot be done. Hon. members by their actions daily demonstrate the inconsistency of their position. On the one hand you have this insistence or this pledge for significant across-the-board tax cuts of a permanent nature, and on the other hand they say that all of these are going to be achieved without any of the reductions that I have suggested. They say in a very general way that they would curb government spending, one after the other, day after day, week in and week out.

It would be an interesting exercise to total the value of the new demands which continue to be made by hon. members opposite on the public purse. Again, it is fair to say that you cannot have it both ways. You either have to understand that there must be limitation, or you must be prepared to recognize the larger realities to which I have been referring. The opposition has consistently refused to do that.

What is going to happen in terms of the international community, and what hope is there if, as has been said,—not only by me but many others—that at least part of the answer, a significant part, lies outside of Canada's direct control? What are the prospects that those actions will be undertaken by the world community? I think those actions are very good. I think the prospects are very good. Canada has been recognized internationally by all countries, both developed and developing, as a country which has an excellent record in terms of economic management and the perspective that we are bringing to world problems.

If hon. members want to look askance at that kind of remark, they do not have to rely on me for the answer. They can look at the comments made by world leaders at the summit meeting which was held in London last May or June, at the OECD, and most recently, right here in Ottawa, by the vice-president of the United States when he made some most complimentary and highly deserved comments with regard to the competence and respect with which the Prime Minister of this country is held in the international community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I must say, Mr. Speaker, I have had a kind of nightmare—if 400 could describe it as such—but, certainly, it is a very disturbing prospect that comes to me when I think of the next summit meeting which is going to be held in Bonn. Just imagine the situation where the world leaders of the developed countries sit down—Giscard d'Estaing of France, James Callaghan of Britain, Mr. Fukuda of Japan, President Carter of the United States, Mr. Schmidt of West Germany, Roy Jenkins of the European community—and then they pull out the Canadian chair, and the representative speaking for this country and holding up our end of the plank is—Joe Who?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are going to lose your job.

Mr. Jamieson: I can say that the hon. member opposite is not going to have that kind of nightmare visited upon him. The hon. member sounds like a stick rattling around in a half empty bucket of swill.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Get on with it.

Mr. Jamieson: We are trying to have a reasonable debate on this subject.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why don't you sit down then.

Mr. Jamieson: Let us try, at least for the few minutes that are left—

An hon. Member: You are on national television; carry on.

Mr. Jamieson: I have not even thought about it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. Minister has the floor for the purpose of making a speech, and I suggest we all listen to him.

Mr. Jamieson: What I wanted to say is that the international negotiations presently under way do provide some grounds for the hope that we will emerge from this situation starting this year. It is going to call for a tremendous amount of cooperation by all of us. Canada cannot do this on its own. If we are going to get a solution to the balance of payments problem, one has to recognize that it must be done in concert, particularly, with the European community and with Japan.

● (1742)

I am not sure if the statistic is familiar to all hon. members opposite or, indeed, to members on this side of the House, but it we look at Canada as an exporting country which, of course, is what we are, 87 per cent of everything that we export from Canada—everything—goes to either the United States, the European Economic Community, or Japan. That is a simple, straightforward statistic which we must recognize, and as long as there is slack in the European Community, as there is at the present time, as long as many of their basic industries are functioning at as low as 60-65 per cent capacity, as long as there are the difficulties which Japan is experiencing and, incidentally, as long as there is the confrontation between many of those countries as to how this extreme balance of payments problem is going to be resolved, then it is not going to be possible to get the kind of solutions and the kind of answers we want. I think, happily for all concerned, that this is now more in the minds of the world leaders to whom I have made reference, than at any time previously.

The decisions made in Copenhagen a few days ago may not be ones that will capture the headlines in Canada, but they are at least as important as many that are made within this country. Similarly, that summit meeting to which I referred will, as the indication in the press release said a few days ago, direct itself very clearly to the establishment of goals for increases in productivity, among other things. May I say parenthetically here, Mr. Speaker, that when members opposite talk about the low productivity in Canada, they should look at the most recent figures that have been provided, which show that not only in the last few months, or even in the last year or two, has our productivity record been better, but, in fact, over the last seven or eight years, with a couple of relatively short aberrations, there has been nothing particularly wrong with the general productivity levels in Canada in relation to those of the other developed countries.

What I am saying here is that I do not believe that it is valid to argue that in some way or other this country has lost its dynamism in terms of export markets and the like, but that in fact it is going to turn around as these markets continue to be more receptive and as their own economies improve. I do not particularly care what kind of proposal is put forward for stimulation of productivity and the like; it is not going to bite as firmly as it should in our traditional markets until cooperatively we manage to bring the whole world economy along with us.

That has been the policy of this government and it is the policy of the Minister of Finance. I think it is certainly showing results. I repeat some of the statistics I referred to earlier. With regard to any measurement you wish to apply, obviously the Canadian performance has been as good as or better than most of the other countries in the developed world.

Mr. Stevens: Over what period?

Mr. Jamieson: I would think if you took the last ten-year period there have been very few times when the Canadian performance has not been at least as good as, and in some cases better than, other countries, even including the United States.

Mr. Stevens: What about the last two years?

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member talks about the last two years. Had he been in the House earlier he would have heard me acknowledge that for the last two years there had been even more acute and special problems. If the hon. member looks at these problems objectively—which I admit is not an easy thing for him to do—he would see that in that period also, not only have we had our difficulties but they have been matched in all countries of the world, including, if he wishes to look at today's newspapers, the United States. President Carter made a very important statement yesterday with regard to the concerns in that country about what has been happening on the economic front because of a general failure—I believe these are conclusions one can draw from his remarks: everybody is to be concerned and conscious of the energy crisis and the necessity to control—not to curb or to wipe out aspirations—but to limit the demands everybody is making on the economy.

We have been doing and saying the same thing for many years. I repeat that many of the things now being proposed and introduced in other countries, and upon which consultations are taking place with Canada virtually all the time, are measures which we introduced in this country many years ago. They have come to be highly regarded, and other countries are proposing to employ them.

I believe we are going to be summoned to the other place in just a moment—

Mr. Stevens: Permanently?

Mr. Jamieson: I can assure the hon. member I would not enjoy being in the other place—unless he is talking about being with him somewhere down below—not over there.

In all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, the message that I wanted to leave with hon. members, and I suppose it is an unreasonable expectation that it will be very receptively greeted by the other side, is that if you look at the circumstances of world economies today, you cannot fail to conclude, as we have been saying consistently on this side, that while we have problems in Canada, the Minister of Finance is seeking to diminish them. While we have those problems, we have been coming through this extremely difficult international period in a manner which is consistently better than most other societies.

I end with an invitation to hon. members to analyze the problems of the 30-odd member states of the OECD. Take each of them individually, starting with the United States and going through all the countries of Europe. Put down their record of performance and their present economic position, and then put the Canadian performance alongside. I ask hon. members under these circumstances to suppose they have the opportunity to switch Canada's problems for those of any of the other developed countries—

Mr. Stevens: What about Switzerland?

Mr. Jamieson: I said the OECD. The hon. member asked what about Switzerland, but I am not sure he would even want Switzerland. I should like him to make that comparison. If we had the opportunity to switch Canada's problems with those of another country, I think the vast majority of Canadians would decide, without qualification, to take our own problems, because we continue to be one of the most fortunate countries in the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Friesen: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think the House deserves the opportunity to thank the minister for all those detailed and concrete statistics he gave to support his broad generalizations.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, on that point, I agree. I should have given the statistics. They are not very comprehensive and will be on the hon. member's desk within the hour. If any other member opposite would like to see the supporting data for anything I have said, I will be glad to provide it.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps we can consider it six o'clock, because I understand there is a problem at this time—

Mr. Speaker: I understand it is unfair to any person participating in the debate to expect him to commence his remarks at this moment, knowing that a message will arrive summoning us to the Senate for the purpose of Royal Assent. For the benefit of members attempting to organize their time, I think there is some merit in the suggestion of calling it six o'clock. The difficulty is that we must wait for the message to arrive.

• (1752)

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the opposition that we want to collaborate. I understand it is the opposition leader who wants to speak tomorrow and we want to be sure that he does not lose his position. We would love to see a presentation of his fiscal policies because that will provide us with a great deal of ammunition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, there is a verse in the Book of Revelation which says that there was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour. I do not think it would hurt us to be silent for two or three minutes.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not think it will hurt a bit, but I do not think it is possible.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I simply rise on the point of order by the Minister of Finance (Mr.Chrétien). I will convey to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) his comments. At last he is prepared to listen to some advice which has been long overdue to him in view of what he has said in his budget. To what the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has just said, I say "Amen".

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1802)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-25, an Act to establish the Northern Pipeline Agency, to facilitate the planning and construction of a pipeline for the transmission of natural gas from Alaska and Northern Canada and to give effect to an Agreement between Canada and the United States of America on principles applicable to such a pipeline and to amend certain Acts in relation thereto—Chapter No. 20.

Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act—Chapter No. 21.

Bill C-41, an Act to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, and other Acts subsequent to 1970—Chapter No. 22.

Bill C-1001, an Act respecting Bell Canada.

Bill S-10, an Act respecting the Royal Canadian Legion.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At 6.08 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 13, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SALES TAX—REQUEST GOVERNMENT REPLY TO QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL AS SOON AS POSSIBLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a very important matter.

In view of the fact that the sales tax proposal in the recent federal budget is aimed at fostering an economic recovery in Canada and the creation of jobs for over a million unemployed; that the proposal made by the Quebec government to the federal government takes into account those two objectives without additional expense; and finally, that it is in the best interest of the federal government to improve the fate of the 340,000 unemployed in Quebec and in such vital sectors as textiles, footwear and furniture, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey):

That the Minister of Finance be required to reply as soon as possible to Quebec's proposal.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

FAILURE TO CURE ECONOMIC ILLS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, pursuant to Standing Order 43. On Tuesday there were 1.5 million Canadians unemployed; on Wednesday there was an inflation rate of almost 9 per cent; today we have a Canadian dollar trading at a depression level of 86.88. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Finance seriously consider the proposition that perhaps he is doing something wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

* * *

[Translation]

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED INCREASE IN PERSONAL BASIC EXEMPTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that a study conducted by the Economic Council of Canada has shown that the situation of low income Canadians is worsening by the day; that these same workers are taxed at the highest level and are the least protected; that the inflation rate continues to escalate at an uncontrollable rate and that these workers and their incomes are the most affected by it; and that the personal basic exemption for a Canadian resident is now limited to $2,270, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the House urge the Minister of Finance to take the necessary measures so as to increase to $5,000 the personal basic exemption of Canadian residents.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

● (1412)

[English]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST CHARGES AGAINST NEWSPAPER EDITOR BE WITHDRAWN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the Liberal government's vendetta against Peter Worthington, editor of the Toronto Sun, thus making him the Donald Woods of Canada and underscoring this government's commitment to freedom of the press only if the press does not expose its failures, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston):

That the Minister of Justice be instructed to withdraw all charges against Peter Worthington and the Toronto Sun as its demonstration and commitment to an open and free press.

Mr. Speaker: Such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

YOUNG CANADA WORKS

REQUEST FOR RESTORATION OF FUNDS TO PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That the cabinet restore the funds of at least $17 million to the Young Canada Works program to prevent serious discrimination against students from low income areas of this country, and thus fulfil the Prime Minister's promise to work for equality of opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SCRUTINY OF DEPARTMENTAL ESTIMATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner) has refused to meet with the National Indian Brotherhood to discuss measures of his department to relieve the dependency situation on some reserves, and in light of the fact that the minister's budget for Saskatchewan is now several million dollars over budget, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

That the minister of Indian affairs immediately call his department's estimates before the standing committee, a condition which he has failed to live up to at this time, and provide the committee with the opportunity to scrutinize the estimates, which they so richly deserve.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

[Mr. Friesen.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

GOVERNMENT URGED TO AMEND PROPOSALS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Whereas the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) announced on October 20, 1977, in his so-called economic and fiscal statement an income tax reduction for certain taxpayers for the year 1978, and whereas the said tax reduction as stated in a letter dated March 28, 1978, was allegedly to be done "to provide a quick stimulus to the economy", and whereas the said tax reduction was only for the period of January and February, 1978, causing a great deal of additional problems for employers and employees, and whereas the present Minister of Finance in his budget of April 10, 1978, announced a reduction or cut in provincial sales taxes, where applicable, for a period of six months, alleging that it would "provide fresh stimulus for industrial growth", and whereas the number of unemployed persons in Canada continues to rise and is now far in excess of the one million mark, and whereas there is still a desperate need to remedy the unemployment situation forthwith and at the same time give greater incentive to Canadian industry by encouraging production and the purchase of Canadian goods, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher):

That the House of Commons urge the Minister of Finance and his colleagues to amend the budget proposals now before the House to include the following:

(1) A reduction in personal income taxes for the entire year 1978 similar to that granted for January and February 1978, and;

(2) Elimination or substantial reduction of federal sales taxes on all Canadian made and/or produced and/or processed goods to help provide both incentive to industry and to provide needed employment for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the presentation of such a motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

• (1417)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO REPLY TO QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Given the fact that the minister surely has taken into account the proposition made by the government Monday evening in the budget relating to a cut in provincial taxes and the fact that he must have studied the proposal made by the government of Quebec, and given the fact that that proposal provides for a cut in the sales taxes on certain items, could the minister tell the House whether he intends to give Quebec an answer today and what that answer will be?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to talk with Mr. Parizeau a few minutes ago and I told him that his counter-proposal was not acceptable in the present circumstances, that during the coming six months we would be willing to pay two cents on each item on which he intends to cut the sales tax. If he decides to cut taxes on other items of the Quebec economy, the money is always available.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, is the minister in a position to tell us whether, before bringing down the budget, he had had negotiations or discussions with the provinces with regard to the intentions of the government? If so, did he make any specific proposals and how much time did he give the provinces to accept or turn down the proposal dealing with the budget?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to visit most finance ministers and spoke to the other ones over the telephone over the three-week period prior to bringing down the budget. We discussed that proposal and changed it to meet some of the requirements of the provinces. At no time in those three weeks did the Quebec government even allude to the proposal they put forward yesterday.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking to a minister who has a good knowledge of the province of Quebec and its current rate of unemployment. On behalf of 340,000 unemployed, I would like to know if he is prepared to reconsider the answer he gave today to the Quebec government and, considering the number of members from that province in the House, to give a positive answer to a proposal which would solve the present problems of Quebecers.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, for the hon. member who represents, I understand, the city of L'Assomption where refrigerators are manufactured, there are obvious distinctions made about those producers. Victoriaville is home to manufacturers of rowboats, pleasure boats and other similar products. I say that I am happy to contribute to the program of the Quebec government by paying 2 per cent for six months. If they want to use their own means to assist some sectors of the economy, fair enough. For the rest of the economy, the offer we have made and which has been accepted by the other provinces is still open to Quebec and they can reconsider their proposal and proceed with reductions in the sales tax for a period of six to nine months as was proposed to the other provinces.

SALES TAX—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT READY TO DISCUSS QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I hope we will be able to run our federal policy not in a spirit of confrontation with the province of Quebec but in a spirit of flexibility.

In view of the lay-offs in the textile, clothing, footwear and furniture industries in the province of Quebec and, as the hon. member for Joliette has pointed out a few moments ago, the high level of unemployment in Quebec, and in view of the fact that in his speech Monday night the Minister of Finance stated many times that his policy was a striking example of federal-provincial co-operation, is the federal government prepared not to forget the present real economic needs of the province of Quebec and of our fellow citizens, those of the textile, clothing, footwear and furniture industries, and to discuss seriously with the Quebec minister the proposals made yesterday?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I discussed the proposals very seriously during a three-week period with the provincial governments. Mr. Parizeau made no proposal to me along the lines of those he made yesterday, all the more as the sales tax cut applies to all other small businesses in Quebec, not only to those in that special area. Furthermore, the sales tax cut in the rest of Canada is going to help the Canadian people outside the province of Quebec to buy textile, footwear and furniture manufactured in Quebec. I think it is an extremely important item. Well, Mr. Speaker, we made some offers in good faith to the provincial governments. All the other governments had counterproposals to make; I even made adjustments to meet the particular situation in British Columbia and Saskatchewan, and at that time Mr. Parizeau did not mention any counterproposal. He listened kindly, politely, and he only made this proposal yesterday, after the other provinces had made their decision. What I said, and I say it again, is that we are prepared to pay for each of the items exempted under Mr. Parizeau's plan, namely 2 per cent for six months, and if he decides in future weeks or months to cut the sales tax on the other products to assist the other sectors of the Quebec economy which are also very important, we shall be prepared to pay them the amount as promised.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

I fully agree with the Minister of Finance that we must take into account the whole secondary industry in the province of Quebec, but in view of the fact that in that province the textile, furniture, footwear and clothing industries hold the highest percentage of lay-offs, could the minister tell the House if he is really prepared to examine more seriously Quebec's proposals in that light.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is up to the provincial government, within the limits of their fiscal capacity, to help clothing and footwear industries in addition to the support I personally offered. It is up to them to decide, within their jurisdiction. They took that decision, and so much the better if they accommodated those industries with their own financial resources. On my part, I maintain my offer. My proposals involve tremendous support to the footwear, textile and clothing industries since they will prompt other Canadians to buy those products manufactured in Quebec; moreover, I think that if the Quebec government wants to help the other sectors, the money will remain available.

• (1422)

[English]

VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—PEGGING WHEN U.S. DOLLAR STABILIZES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport was quoted on April 5 of this year as saying:

> The federal government will move to fix the value of the Canadian dollar on the international money market once the U.S. dollar stabilizes.

Can the Prime Minister advise the House if that reflects government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the quotation and verify its accuracy.

INTEREST CHARGES ON FOREIGN BORROWINGS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Can he now confirm that it is costing the Canadian taxpayer approximately $750,000 a day in interest charges, or an annual cost of $275 million and, if so, would he not agree it would be better that we use this kind of money to put Canadians to work and stimulate the domestic economy, rather than tossing it away on foreign speculators?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): The hon. member should check his figures again, because the figures he uses are completely false. We are not spending that much money.

An hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Chrétien: I can give you the figures. It is a very complex formula.

Some hon. Members: Oh oh!

Mr. Chrétien: Tomorrow I will give hon. members the exact amount of money involved. I will look into that. The figure mentioned by the hon. member does not represent the cost, and I have checked it very carefully. The figure used by the leader of the hon. member's party is unbelievably out of range. I will be delighted to make a comparison tomorrow. It would be better for the leader of that party, who claims to be an economist, to use a little calculator.

Mr. Leggatt: I am sure the minister can agree that it is in the hundreds of millions of dollars, or at least a very substantial figure.

Mr. Chrétien: No.

Mr. Leggatt: When the Minister of Finance was looking after the foreign investment review legislation, we started a welcome-wagon process in Canada. In terms of the current balance of payments situation, our merchandise trade surplus is $2.9 billion; we are running a surplus on merchandise trade. But when you get to the service account and to what we are paying in interest and dividends to foreign ownership in Canada, that is when we find ourselves in a deficit position.

• (1427)

My question to the minister is this: Can we now expect some meaningful foreign investment legislation so that we can stop paying our absentee landlords these massive amounts and driving down the Canadian dollar?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I am surprised an hon. member of a party that is always claiming there are not enough jobs being created in Canada would want to take measures to restrict the inflow of capital into Canada which would create jobs.

[Translation]

SALES TAX—EFFECT OF REDUCTION ON QUEBEC MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is of course for the Minister of Finance. It is unfortunate that such a controversy would create even more division to reduce the harmony that should exist in Canada. In any event, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he considered, when he made his budget speech and as concerns the retail sales tax reduction that he suggested to stimulate the Canadian economy, what impact this policy will have on the income of Quebec municipalities which get a very large part of their income from the reimbursement of the provincial sales tax?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a point that Mr. Parizeau raised in his statement yesterday during his press conference. He said in effect that the sales tax proposals would in no way affect the income of municipalities and that the provincial government would make the necessary adjustments.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, since the proposal of the Quebec finance minister will result in the complete removal of the provincial retail sales tax on the products of the textile, furniture and footwear industries and since this will apply over a period of 12 months instead of six months as announced by the Minister of Finance, can the minister tell the House if this delay, or this margin of six months was discussed with the Quebec finance minister and if this will result in a difference of compensation to be paid to the province of Quebec as provided in the budget speech?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, we have amended our proposal to the provinces and this has allowed British Columbia, for instance, to apply a tax of 2 per cent instead of 3 per cent over a longer period, up to at least nine months. Our proposal was given some flexibility, as Mr. Parizeau was well aware.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A supplementary Mr. Speaker. Since this is boiling down to a revenue battle between the federal government and the provinces, would the Minister of Finance consider reviewing having a fresh look at the possibility of subsidizing those tax reductions amounting to a discount for consumers which, as announced in the budget, is going to be paid from the taxpayers' money? Would the minister be prepared to study in depth the possibility of creating extra credit through the Bank of Canada, increasing the money supply since the minister's aim is to increase the consumers' purchasing power? I think this should be considered. Is the minister prepared to have this financial proposition studied by his officials to accommodate both the Canadian government and the provinces?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I entered politics in 1963 it was my pleasure to go into social credit theories, and I am now more convinced than ever that I was right to oppose them at this time. Therefore in 1978 I am still against them.

[English]

GOVERNMENT PLANS RESPECTING FOREIGN BORROWINGS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We witnessed the dollar falling even further today, to 86.79 cents, having lost $30 million this morning in trying to defend the floating dollar. So far this month, $300 million has gone out.

• (1432)

Would the minister try to give some stabilization to the market by indicating to the House what the government plans to borrow in the foreign markets? How much of their $11.5 billion total financial requirements will be raised in foreign markets?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stated the policy of the government in my budget statement on monetary policies, and I have nothing to add to it. Of course, when the time comes for the financing of cash requirements, the market will be informed of the form of borrwing we will be adopting at that time, and where.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Whether the Minister of Finance likes it or not, there is growing anxiety in the inernational market about this monetary policy which the minister says is so clear. In particular, last year it caused the Bank of Canada to buy 23 per cent of their total financial requirements at the federal level.

Would the minister indicate if they plan to cause the Bank of Canada to buy debt of the federal treasury to that extent this year and, if they do, does he not feel that will demoralize the international money market still further?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, the monetary policies are executed by the governor of the Bank of Canada, and when we decide to act we will make it public at that time.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question to the Minister of Finance is based upon a report put out by Friedberg and Company Limited this month, in which they assess the monetary policy the minister appears to be so proud of and indicate that if the government persists in their approach, it will result in a 25 per cent devaluation in Canada, to be taken out with a falling dollar or inflation, or both.

In consequence of that type of a devaluation, would the minister not reconsider the statement he made to the House and indicate that he will at least take the matter up with the governor of the Bank of Canada with a view to having a saner monetary policy in this country.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like the hon. member to tell the House and the country if he is for pegging the Canadian dollar at a certain level, and where. I am not about to speculate on that in the way the hon. member does.

An hon. Member: Ask Jack Horner.

Mr. Chrétien: I am not about to speculate on those matters. The policy is well known, and the Canadian dollar is a floating dollar.

Mr. Hees: What does "Loose Lips" say?

Oral Questions

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

REQUEST FOR REFERENDUM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. I feel it should be directed to him and not to the Prime Minister because of the somersault with the truth the Prime Minister took in connection with capital punishment.

Having regard to the fact that it is estimated authoritatively that 75 per cent of Canadians, having regard to the tremendous increase in mortal crime and the number of police officers being shot down in cold blood, want the return of capital punishment, would the government, refusing to do anything to meet this problem, bring about a referendum on the question of capital punishment so that Canadians can speak and let the Government of Canada today and after a change of government in the election know what Canadians demand?

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there was only one who said no, which indicates they realize they are on their way to defeat.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the question from the right hon. member who all his life has been an opponent of capital punishment.

An hon. Member: What is the answer, you coward?

Mr. Basford: —and who obviously, for partisan political reasons, is trying to squeeze away from what has been his lifetime position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: The question was whether the government would hold a referendum on the question of capital punishment. That being a question of government policy, it should be answered by the Prime Minister. However, giving my personal view and what my advice to the government would be, I would say that we should not hold a referendum.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am naturally interested in the expression of the view of the hon. gentleman that I was for abolition through the years—and I was. I voted for the bill. Does he not recall that I voted for the bill when the government decided to abolish capital punishment although, by another bill, preserving it for the murder of police officers and peace officers?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the same outfit over there that interrupts all the time. All I have to say to them is: as the cuckoo in June, heard but not regarded. When the Prime Minister introduced legislation to provide for capital punishment for the murder of police officers and the like to be effective until December 31, 1977, I voted for the bill. Then the Prime Minister turned around, somersaulted and set aside—

[Mr. Hees.]

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I will have to ask the right hon. gentleman to put the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I know the truth hurts. I ask why the law was changed, when there were seven murderers—vicious murderers—and the Prime Minister brought in legislation to do away with the law that was brought in by him earlier. Why the change?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when a man claims for the whole of his life that he is against capital punishment, and then when the test comes and a bill is presented which abolishes capital punishment completely—

Mr. Diefenbaker: I voted for that.

Mr. Trudeau: —the man somersaults, he is the one who does the somersault, not me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister knows that statement is as false as so many others that he has made, and I ask him to withdraw. I voted for abolition and then I voted against the bill that the Prime Minister introduced.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The matter ought to finish there. I can scarcely condone the right hon. gentleman beginning his question by accusing the Prime Minister of a somersault, and then asking that the same representation made against him be withdrawn as being unparliamentary.

Mr. Trudeau: You landed on your head.

* * *

POST OFFICE

MISHANDLING OF MAIL

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. I believe the minister would agree that everyone makes mistakes, as this government more than anyone else is well aware, but does he really believe that 60 million errors per year, or 10,000 mistakes per hour, by the Post Office is acceptable to the Canadian people?

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer the hon. member in English. If he would read the article from which the question was taken, I said that the Post Office handles six billion pieces yearly and that we could have an error factor of 1 per cent. That means maybe 60 million errors in the Post Office.

I asked the Businessmen's Club yesterday if anyone in business could claim to have an error factor of only 1 per cent. If anyone can claim that, they are very good. It must be realized, too, that the consequences of a 1 per cent error factor may be a little more important in the Post Office than anywhere else. It is still a very good average for a business the size of the Post Office, however, which handles 6 billion pieces of mail each year.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Postmaster General has announced the possibility of the Post Office refusing to handle uncoded mail some time after the election, will the Postmaster General inform the House if, in fact, this is being practised unofficially in the Post Office at the present time, and will he at least come clean with the public and state clearly at this time what his intentions are with respect to the handling of uncoded mail in the future?

● (1442)

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, on that issue I answered quite clearly to my audience there was no question for the moment of refusing uncoded mail. I would like to point out however that in other countries certain procedures and standards have been applied which brought about better efficiency in mail delivery, because everyone finally was using the code. As an illustration, Australia has a legal requirement that a letter must show the code if it is to be delivered. Moreover, I have here an article indicating that in the United States, envelopes larger than or otherwise violating post office standards will be returned. What I meant on that occasion is therefore that in the future we will have to try and standardize the way people send their mail. If everyone were using the code as requested, certainly this would help bring about a tremendous increase in postal efficiency.

[English]

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is for the Postmaster General. It concerns Bill C-45 which is presently before the House. Is it the government's feeling that the material circulated to the Canadian people during an election campaign is more important and deserving of the immediate attention of the government, with this bill, than the millions of pieces of mail for old age pensioners and the rest of the Canadian public, including businessmen? Is the junk mail that will be going out during the election campaign more important than the important mail—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely the question is argumentative.

Oral Questions

LABOUR RELATIONS

AMBASSADOR BRIDGE—GOVERNMENT'S CONTRIBUTION TOWARD SETTLING LABOUR DISPUTE

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. Given the fact that the Ambassador Bridge is one of the principal transportation links between Canada and the United States at Windsor, that there is a labour dispute on both the Canadian side and American side of the bridge at the moment, and that the dispute on the American side has succeeded in greatly halting commercial traffic on the bridge, to the considerable loss of businesses in Windsor, could the Minister of Labour report to the House on the state of the labour dispute on the Canadian side and indicate whether he believes he will be able to make a contribution toward the settlement of the problem on the American side?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that there is an interrelationship in the dispute because it involves Teamsters on both sides of the bridge. We have jurisdiction only with respect to the Canadian side. The matter is in the conciliation process. We think we have very able mediators trying to resolve the dispute and I am hopeful it can be resolved. If the matter is resolved on the Canadian side, undoubtedly it will have a beneficial impact on the American side.

* * *

ELECTIONS

REPORTED USE OF COMPUTER IN PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE FOR ELECTION PURPOSES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. I realize that my question, quite frankly, has a partisan aspect—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame.

An hon. Member: It is too much, Pierre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —but I shall ask it in as low a key as possible and I hope the Prime Minister will reply in a similar vein. In view of a Canadian Press report to the effect that a $1 million computer, which belongs to one of the departments of the government, is now in a basement room of the Prime Minister's office and is being geared for use against campaign trail attacks by opposition parties, and in view of the fact the same report says that a number of those who are the Prime Minister's aides and whose salaries are paid for from public funds are spending the bulk of their time acting as election advance men, and so on—

Mr. Paproski: You wouldn't do that, would you, Pierre?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —will the Prime Minister refer this matter either to the Auditor General or to the newly appointed Comptroller General for their views as to whether this is a proper expenditure of public funds?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the computer question, I draw to the hon. member's attention that this is an old story which appeared in the Globe and Mail in October, 1977. The two news people who were looking into the allegations that the computer was being used by the Liberal party for political purposes interviewed the high-level civil servant who is in charge of it, and he said that the story, and I quote him—the words were stated outside the House—was "absolute crap". I think the story was that then, and it still is today.

In so far as aides in the Prime Minister's office are concerned, of course the people working for me in the Prime Minister's office are paid out of public funds. The people working for the Leader of the Opposition are paid out of public funds also. With regard to people working in the office of the Leader of the NDP, the hon. member knows they are paid from public funds; and I would wager a large amount with the hon. member—I know he is not a betting man—that they are engaged in political pursuits, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, perhaps before I ask my supplementary question I might be permitted to point out that I asked my question, not on the basis of reports last October but on the basis of a Canadian Press report which appears in this afternoon's Ottawa Journal.

May I put my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister, in view of his responsibility for the Canada Elections Act? In view of the very strict regulations as to the amount of money, either directly or indirectly, that can be spent on election purposes, will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Chief Electoral Officer to check on these expenditures to see whether they should be reported as part of the election expenses of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not find it necessary to consult the Chief Electoral Officer, because it is impossible to incur election expenses in the absence of an election.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

EMIGRATION OF CANADIAN-TRAINED DOCTORS AND SCIENTISTS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that we are losing about 1,500 physicians a year from across Canada by emigration, costing us for their medical education alone between $100 million and $150 million, many of them trained scientists, has the minister any plans to stop this haemorrhage?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member refers to a phenomenon where different forces are at play, one of them being that the growth in the number of physicians graduating from universities every year is around 13 per cent in Canada, a country with one of the highest doctor-patient ratios in the world, namely, one doctor for every 673 persons, as of 1977. It also has to do with the attraction of certain booming economies in the southern states of the United States. This trend may be reversed, however, if the United States decides to adopt a medicare plan.

I am very concerned with the emigration of Canadian physicians, but I am not alarmed. Last week I received representations from the Canadian Medical Association, and we are looking into the matter.

* * *

● (1452)

ELECTIONS

PRIME MINISTER'S PRE-ELECTION TOUR PLANS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister planning a pre-election tour of Ontario such as he undertook in western Canada a few weeks ago? If he is not so planning, will he reconsider and do so, because we have found that the quickest way to switch people over and get them to vote Conservative—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —is to have them see and hear the Prime Minister close up. We want him in our province as much as we can between now and election day.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

CATTLE—STABILIZATION PAYMENTS FOR FIRST QUARTER OF 1977

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Will the minister indicate if and when a stabilization pay-out for fed cattle for the first quarter of 1977 will be announced and, if so, what that amount will be?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, using the 90 per cent, according to what the act states the pay-out for the first quarter would be very small. We are having discussions at the present time on what percentage we should use, because the act states that we may go higher than 90 per cent, if we desire. That is what we are doing at the present time.

Mr. Hargrave: With regard to the joint announcement by the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on March 30, 1978, on beef and veal import controls, will the minister carefully explain the phrase "adjusted for changes in domestic beef consumption since this base period"? Why not relative to the base period? Is the minister now actively contemplating an upward revision of the firm quotas that he announced for offshore beef?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why anyone would want to increase those quotas. We made it specific that those quotas would not be increased. I am sure the hon. member knows as well as I do the GATT rules on trading, consumption within our country, and the rights of our trading partners. Those have to be considered. They have been considered. We made what we think is a very strong statement, putting our position very firmly that those quotas would not be changed and that that principle would be used for the next three years.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Northumberland-Durham.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my questions were for the Minister of Finance, who has temporarily left the chamber.

* * *

AIRPORTS

VICTORIA INTERNATIONAL—POSITION REGARDING INSTALLATION OF RADAR

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. In asking it, I would like to warn my hon. friend from Gaspé not to pay too much attention to the promises made yesterday by the Minister of Transport in connection with airports. My question is, where does the matter stand with regard to radar at Victoria international airport? An undertaking was given to this House as long ago as January, 1977, that the report and recommendations in that direction would be made by January of this year.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I want to refresh my memory as to exactly what that exchange was. We have made it clear that the question of radar at Victoria was a matter of priority as between it and other airports where aircraft movement may be more numerous. In the case of Victoria, there is largely adequate coverage out of Vancouver: that is a very important factor.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Has the minister checked lately the relative figures as between Vancouver and Victoria with respect to traffic, both small and commercial aircraft, pointing out the need for radar at Victoria international airport?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the most recent information from my officials was that there would be other locations having higher priority, and that up to that point no decision had been made. I can assure the hon. member, however, that we are watching these situations at all times. When it is appropriate, equipment will be put in place. However, that is not a promise to him about the specific date: it is quite the contrary.

* * *

THE BUDGET

DEPLETION ALLOWANCES FOR OIL INDUSTRY—ASSISTANCE FOR MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. There are at least two points in the budget statement of Monday night relating to the resource industry which require some clarification. Are the depletion allowance provisions announced on Monday night applicable to the expansion of existing heavy oil and oil sands facilities? If not, why not?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Not at this moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawrence: "Not at this moment", was that the minister's answer? The second part of my question was, if not, why not? In relation to the admittedly sick portion of the resource industry, namely, the mining industry in this country, there was very little of any substance relating to that industry in the minister's budget statement. For years, to the minister and his predecessors, from the provincial governments as well as from the industry itself, there have been requests that provincial mining royalties be deductible in computing federal tax. Prior to the budget, did the minister also receive representations along this line from his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it was agreed at the first ministers' conference that there would be a meeting of the ministers of finance and ministers of resources of this country to discuss that very problem. I said in my speech that we intend to do that. Some discussion is going on at this time with regard to finding a location, a date and agreement on the agenda.

* * *

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

NEWS REPORTS ON AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE SECTION RESPECTING CHILD ABUSE

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that it is stated in the lead article on page 1 of today's Globe and Mail that "Ottawa may kill law allowing use of force on child by parent, teacher", and in view of the fact that section 43 of the Criminal Code gives parents and teachers permission to use reasonable force in the disciplining of children, is the federal government considering the removal of section 43 from the Criminal Code?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I feel very sorry for both the Globe and Mail and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation who have been sucked in by someone. Those reports of some great confidential report in the Department of Justice was a report given to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs on February 24 and tabled in this House on July 7, 1976. It was an analysis by an officer in my department of the issues that are raised in this whole, sad question of child abuse and the laws relating to child abuse and parental and teacher discipline. It made no recommendations; it simply, for the guidance of the committee, raised the issues that it should examine. The committee of this House recommended not repealing section 43 of the Criminal Code, and I accepted that recommendation.

While there is a very great need to examine the law relating to child abuse, and to provide children with protection and rights, if I might express a personal view as a parent, whether I use spanking in a reasonable way is a matter for me, and not the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

NATIONAL REVENUE

APPLICATION OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX TO FARMING

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whoever on the other side is responding for Revenue Canada. I would like to draw attention to the fact that in the last budget brought down by the former minister of finance, Donald Macdonald, he had a roll-over clause for capital gains tax. We now have a situation where there should be a roll-over provision for the purchase of new farmland. The regulations are now so restricted that we find the application simply does not apply. An example of this is in a letter I received, which states that the replacement of farmland used for wheat farming—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question, would he put it?

Mr. Malone: That was the question, Mr. Speaker. Why have the regulations been made so restrictive that they simply do not apply to farming because of the differentiation between the styles of farming being practised? Can he give a justification for those regulations?

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Demers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, the Minister of Finance answered a similar question from one of his colleagues of the Progressive Conservative party. I shall be pleased to look into this matter again in order to give more information to the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the parliamentary secretary if he can indicate how finite he intends to make the regulations, because at the present time the situation is simply making the law not applicable. If you have a situation where a person changes the context to any degree, then the law of last March will simply not apply. Where do they get the quality to so easily make the simple so complicated?

* * *

BROADCASTING

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING SATELLITE STATION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State. His office has had notice of this matter for about three years. I know the minister is relatively new in this portfolio and may not be fully aware of this. It has to do with the satellite CBC station proposed for western Nova Scotia. Could the minister exercise, especially at this point in time, the weight of his good offices to expedite the negotiations being conducted by the CBC, the CRTC and affiliated stations so that we might finally get this satellite station which was promised me by Dr. George Davidson when he was president of the CBC in 1969?

● (1502)

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I remember I heard tell of this. All the good offices I have I will exercise on behalf of the hon. member's representation.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, to ask the government House leader whether he is in a position to tell us the business of the House for next week and, possibly, even further on. Can he tell us whether it is intended to carry on with the budget debate in the usual way, and what his intentions are with respect to Bill C-45 in particular? I know it is of some importance to him and to the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is my intention to call the budget debate for today, and when the report is received from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, if it is received today, I propose to ask whether I can get a waiver of the standing order so that we could deal with all the final stages of Bill C-45 tomorrow. If this were done, I would call the budget debate for the next sitting of the House. I cannot, of course, proceed with Bill C-45 until I have received a report from the standing committee, but I shall do so as soon as a report is received.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I realize the government House leader is very interested in getting Bill C-45 through, but should unanimous consent be denied in some corner of the House, what is his intention with respect to government business during the course of the coming week? Further, is the House leader in a position to make an announcement concerning days customarily allotted to the opposition, since we have now reached the last part of the session for dealing with allotted days?

Mr. MacEachen: I shall know in a few moments whether I can get unanimous consent. If consent is denied, we will go on with the budget tomorrow. But I would ask the House to waive the standing order so we could dispose entirely of the bill related to postal operations.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the point raised by the government House leader, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that this is a matter which might be the subject of consultation?

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

Fourth report of Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments—Mr. Robinson.

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S REPLY DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a separate point of order having to do with what, in my view, was a piece of misinformation given to the House during the question period. I realize it was probably given "off the cuff" or inadvertently, but it is serious enough to invite correction before we go any further.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), responding to a question I put to him concerning moneys being spent now for material or information which might be used during the election period, said, "Since there is no election, there is no need to consult the Chief Electoral Officer." Sir, all of us in this House know that under the new rules governing election expenses, money spent before an election on material or information which is used during the election period has to be reported as part of our election expenses. I suggest, therefore, that before members generally get the wrong impression and think they can spend money now and not report it at election time, the Deputy Prime Minister ought to consult the Elections Act, with which he is very familiar, and revise the information he gave to the House a few moments ago.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): I think I ought to revise the information, but only because the hon. member revised his question.

MR. HNATYSHYN—QUESTIONS DEALING WITH NATIONAL REVENUE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): I rise on a separate point of order, Mr. Speaker. Today the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) addressed a question to the Acting Minister of National Revenue. The question was answered by a parliamentary secretary. I realize that the government is in the process of final disintegration, but I think we are entitled to know who is the acting minister for this particular portfolio since the hon. gentleman who was the minister has been appointed to another place. Could the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) advise us to whom we should address questions having to do with national revenue?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): The parliamentary secretary is available to answer questions. I believe there are acting ministers and I will provide this information as soon as I have had an opportunity to refresh my memory.

* * *

[Translation]

LABOUR, MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

Second report of Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration—Mr. Guay (Lévis).

[Editor's Note: For text of above report, see today's Votes and Proceedings.]

* * *

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacEachen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it is possible to secure a waiver of Standing Orders in order to deal with Bill C-45 in all its stages tomorrow.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I understand a reasonable proposition was put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) with respect to consultation. The hon. House leader may have legitimate reasons for his request, and I believe we are prepared to listen to them, but I think the suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is a reasonable one.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member asked me what my intentions were with regard to the bill, and I gave him an answer. I want to call it tomorrow, if I can get consent. I am having consultations now on a very broad basis on the floor of the House of Commons so that we and the Canadian people may know who is not prepared to agree.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This seems to be the day on which the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) has chosen to play with words. Surely, what he is now doing does not amount to consultation. I suggest this question be delayed until there has been real consultation among the House leaders.

Mr. MacEachen: Open decisions, openly arrived at.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The suggestion by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) that we should consent to that bill coming on tomorrow simply means that the House is being asked to bail the government out of the position in which it finds itself, and I, for one, will not agree to do so. That bill is not necessary at the moment. Let us get on with the budget and do something for the economy of this country.

* * *

● (1512)

MULTICULTURALISM

TABLING OF STUDY

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I wish to table, in both official languages, a study entitled "Multiculturalism and Ethnic Attitudes in Canada".

TABLING OF COUNCIL'S ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Norman A. Cafik (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with Standing Order 41(2) I would like to table, in both official languages, the report of the Canadian Consultative Council on Multiculturalism for 1977.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

STATEMENT ON DAIRY POLICY

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce the broad outline for the 1978-79 dairy program. As of April 1, 1978, total market sharing quota remains unchanged for the dairy year ending March 31, 1979, for a total of 103.7 million hundredweights. The level of the federal subsidy paid on all industrial milk produced within Canadian requirements remains unchanged at $2.66 per hundredweight. The target price will be increased by 24 cents, to $12.42 per hundredweight. This will mean a five-cent increase in the support price of butter, to $1.27 per pound. The support price of skim milk powder also goes up by two cents, to 74 cents a pound.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

The extra 24 cents, plus two other increases during the year, will raise returns to producers by a total of about 76 cents a hundredweight compared with what they got at the same time last year. That means a producer of 300,000 pounds annually will get an additional $2,300. However, let me remind the House that those increases are less than the present general rate of inflation and are needed to maintain producer incomes in the face of rising costs.

The direct levy on in-quota production is reduced to $1 per hundredweight, but every hundredweight of in-quota industrial milk and cream will be subject to a new contingency level of 20 cents, refundable to those producers who, at year end, have managed to keep their production within national requirements.

There will be a levy of $1 on every hundredweight of surplus cream diverted from fluid to industrial use. I should remind the House that this levy is equivalent to 20 cents per hundredweight on fluid shipments which, in fact, were subject to a 25 cents per hundredweight levy last year.

The over-quota levy will be raised by 50 cents, to $7.50 per hundredweight.

Some good news for those hon. members who have long been asking questions about the difficulties faced by Canada's cheese industry is the new level set for cheese imports. Total imports of cheese will not be allowed to exceed 45 million pounds over the dairy year, down 5 million pounds from the previous 50 million.

The market sharing quota period is being changed to a new basis, which will be August 1 to July 31, starting next year. This will provide the framework within which a more even milk production pattern can be achieved, which will benefit all sectors of the industry.

Our federal budget for the 1978-79 dairy program is made up as follows: $260.7 million in producer subsidy payments; $24.8 million for export assistance; $17 million in carrying charges; and $20 million for international food aid. This $20 million remains unchanged from the amount provided to the Canadian International Development Agency last year to buy skim milk powder and distribute it as part of its food aid program.

Finally, there is in that total an allowance of $6.5 million to the Canadian Dairy Commission to assist in exploring new ways to utilize skim milk powder. This amounts to a total of $329 million in federal assistance.

So far as the Canadian national requirement is concerned, this year's total has been estimated by the Canadian Milk Supply Management Committee to be 98 million hundredweights. Total market sharing quota is made up of these market requirements plus a 5 per cent sleeve. The Canadian Milk Supply Management Committee will, as it normally does, be monitoring production and demand during the year and will make any adjustments needed in quota allocation according to the policy.

I should point out that it is the responsibility of provincial boards to allocate and monitor individual quotas. It certainly is my personal hope that provincial boards will show a special concern for the administration of their quota policies when it comes to the small producer who may have been hard hit by some of the quota cutbacks in the past. I also hope that if a quota cut is needed during the coming dairy year, then it will be made through transfer assessments or reallocation and not through direct quota cuts.

Some will be concerned because this announcement was not made prior to April 1. However, I do not believe there has ever been as much discussion and consultation between the different dairy producers concerned, provincial organizations, the market share quota committee, the management committee, and the Canadian Dairy Commission as there has been with respect to the program for this year. The last meeting of the consultative committee took place on the day the House adjourned for the Easter recess. It has taken some time to put the program together, but I know it is one of the best we have had, and I congratulate the provincial people and the marketing boards which make up the committee which worked out this program along with the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this occasion to respond on behalf of my colleagues to the minister's statement regarding the 1978-79 dairy program. I want to begin by saying that, generally speaking, the dairy year just completed has been one in which the industry has adjusted with a fairly high degree of accuracy to the policy announced a year ago.

Given the many factors which are beyond the control of our producers, they must be commended for their efforts—some at very considerable expense—and for their ability to match milk supplies with domestic consumption and that of the export market. This government ran the very serious risk a year ago, when it applied the 25-cent per hundredweight export levy on fluid milk producers, of destroying the whole national plan. That statement is not an exaggeration, and it appears that the minister today has paid a nickel's worth of attention to that particular problem.

The plan could not have been achieved without the clout of subsidy dollars. The manner in which it was put into force caused disunity among producers within their own provinces, and concern between provinces, and embedded suspicions and anger in the minds of producers and their leaders at all levels.

I am convinced that this minister and certain officials of the Canadian Dairy Commission have not recognized to this date, or choose to ignore or forget, the seriousness of their unilateral action. It is true that time is a great healer, but it is essential if this program is to continue— and it is in everyone's best interest that the program does continue—that this or any similar type of action be avoided in the future. Practically all the provinces rejected this levy, and, indeed, most of the participating provinces did not sign the agreement until well on into the last dairy year. This should provide the government with a clear indication of their dissatisfaction and their deep resentment about this type of action.

I do not know the exact situation today, but as recently as last week British Columbia had not signed the national agreement. In not doing so B.C. signified its desire to withdraw, and in accordance with the terms of the agreement B.C. is at liberty today to exercise its right to withdraw from the program. The minister said nothing about this problem today in his statement. It is important and vital to the survival of the national plan, and it must be addressed and resolved immediately.

Another issue which still remains not completely resolved is the matter of the collection of the levy based on fluid milk sales. Whatever policy is followed, it must be brought clearly into conformity with agreements reached on the obligations of the participating provinces. Changes in the sleeve portion, and indeed any changes in the plan, must be administered to eliminate any possibility that producers in any one province can gain an advantage over producers in any other province.

● (1522)

Maximum flexibility and autonomy should be given to each province in the management of its quota system. It is not clear from the minister's printed statement today, but the minister did indicate in his remarks that the changes in the quota year have been made from April 1, 1978, to August 1, 1979, for a 16 months' period. I believe that the intention behind such a move is to level out seasonal production. Although such a move is desirable, I doubt that any real success will be achieved in this regard without such a move being accompanied by a financial incentive.

While it is generally agreed that complete integration of fluid and industrial milk production is desirable, it must be recognized that it would not be in the best interests of the industry to have such a plan forced upon it by the federal government. But it is important that the provinces be allowed to carry out their own plans and to establish their own timetable to achieve this desirable result.

The industry people indicate that there are severe inadequacies in securing accuracy and quality of information regarding production, disappearance of products, and the movement of milk, cream, and milk products. This problem has caused serious difficulties in the past and it can and will cause difficulties in the future, if the accurately of product volumes are not more accurately identified. The Dairy Farmers' Association of Canada has made a recommendation and has called for an improved system of provincial auditing.

The government has a responsibility to ensure that when a surplus is created by certain producers who consistently overproduce, and consequently cause a general reduction in the national quota, that reduction should not be applied across the board but rather should be assessed to those producers who cause the problem and not to those who have kept within their quota. The statement today containing the new contingency level of 20 cents per 100 pounds takes this disturbing factor somewhat into consideration. In addition, in applying price increases under the federal formula, the rule of triggering price adjustments with a 4 per cent change in the formula should be changed to 2 per cent in the interest of price stability in relation to inflationary change.

Dairy producers, and particularly the manufacturing sector, continue to call for a reduction in the level of cheese imports by 10 million to 15 million pounds. The statement today goes in the right direction, but it calls for a reduction of only five million pounds. It is interesting that only recently the minister said that import levels were not reaching that particular level. If we could find out the exact level, we would be in a position to assess intelligently whether or not this five million pounds reduction would have any benefit at all.

An import levy could be placed on imported cheese products and the revenues used to reduce the export levy or for sale and promotion of dairy products. It must be stated that every ten million pounds of cheese imports result in a loss of over $3.6 million to Canadian producers, and heavy losses to the manufacturers as well. Greater restrictions should be placed on the importation of skim milk powder and other dairy products which are imported as components. I do not have the latest figures on these amounts, but the products to which I referred have increased by some 80 per cent between 1973 and 1975.

There is no mention in the minister's statement today of the reinstatement of even a portion of the skim milk powder consumer subsidy which was recently withdrawn by the government. I spoke at some length on that issue on March 9, and I will not go into any great detail today except to say that the program should be continued in areas where no fresh milk supplies are available, in areas of high unemployment, and also in areas where the wage rates are less than the national average.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wise: But it remains incumbent on this government to make every effort to foster and encourage a greater degree of good will and trust between government, the Canadian Dairy Commission, and the industry, than now exists. Some may scoff at that comment, but those who do give an indication that they have been out of touch with people in the dairy industry. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that that is a major concern.

Finally, it is unfortunate, unfair to the dairy industry, and completely unacceptable to us, that policy changes continue to be announced after the effective date rather than well in advance of it. It should be noted that subsidy payments to producers have been reduced by $5.3 million, the carrying charges have been reduced by $3 million, and the $20 million commitment for food aid remains the same. There is certainly a great need to increase that $20 million for the purchase of about 60 million pounds of skim milk powder. Next time the minister consults people from the industry perhaps he would be prepared to ask them what kind of commitment they are prepared to make in that area, because I am sure they would be ready to increase their commitment from 60 million pounds to 100 million pounds of skim milk.

The minister continues to refer to this plan as being the best, to use his own favourite terminology "in the whole wide, wide world". In fact, Mr. Speaker, it is not uncommon for the minister to use the same modest description in referring to himself.

I agree that the Canadian dairy industry must be the best in the world to survive many of the programs and policies of this government. With some of the changes I have suggested today, with more consultation and co-operation and more forward planning by the government with the dairy industry, the goal referred to by the minister could be achieved.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was impressed by the last remarks made by the hon. member when he mentioned the fact that the minister always refers to "the best minister" and "the best program". I think this is one of the times when the farmers thought it would be a better program. However, this is a program which will not change very much, and in fact will not provide even the changes that were recommended by the Dairy Council of Canada at its recent convention.

The minister stated that the target for this year will be about the same as last year, that there will be a slight increase in industrial milk, but that we are still plagued with the same problems we had before. In that respect he did not mention the contribution made by individual farmers. Farmers have been plagued by two things: the actions taken by the governments, both provincial and federal, and the inability of the government and its agencies to ascertain exactly what the market will be in the forthcoming year.

Over the last four or five years the concept of establishing the dairy year has become very important to farmers and has become increasingly difficult to establish for the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). The one thing on which I wish to congratulate him is the fact that he has only been 13 days late this year. This is an improvement on the past. The delay is caused in part by our inability to decide what the target will be and exactly where we stand in terms of quotas, because we have not done the one thing for which the dairy farmers have asked, that is, we have not been able to achieve an understanding between the marketing boards in the various provinces, the provinces, and the Canadian Dairy Commission with regard to quotas and how to operate them. As the hon. member who preceded me has said, we are unable to bring all provinces into line, with the farmer down at the bottom agreeing that this is the manner in which the program has to work and these are the contributions he will be required to make.

● (1532)

In drafting the press release, the minister got the best out of it. That is normal, of course. Several weeks ago I spoke with a young farmer. He is not a big farmer, nor a small farmer. He has approximately 40 heads of milk cows. At that time he indicated that his over quota levy would amount to approximately $5,600. The minister indicated that we were to receive an additional 300,000 pound quota. I think 40 cows would produce something over that. Thus, the average probably would be something over that. He indicated they would receive $2,300, and that the increase did not meet inflation. Most farmers have not been able to make that $2,300 because they would be required to make the over quota payment. The minister is faced with a problem which most dairy farmers thought would be solved in this statement. I am referring to the recommended change in the dairy year.

One problem we have been faced with in arriving at a target quota is the movement of the dairy year to a point in time further in the year, with a period of adjustment of perhaps three or four months. Perhaps it could be from April to July. It could be a 16-month year in order to arrive at a more even quota structure. The dairy year would take into consideration part of the problem with respect to seasonal milk. The elimination of summer milk was discussed at all farm meetings. I am sure the Dairy Commission has great difficulty with this problem. Certainly it is a problem with which the industry has great difficulty. In his statement the minister did not give much consideration to that particular problem.

Like the fluid milk producers of Canada, the industrial milk producers should be required to produce milk under a monthly quota which will involve the total year, so that producers in the industrial field will not make their total production in the summer months. Total production in the summer months causes great difficulty to the cheese industry which operates year round. That particular problem has not been faced as yet.

Another problem we are faced with is skim milk powder. It would be wise to sit down sooner or later and decide whether we are going to produce any skim milk powder, whether it is worth taking off the $7 over quota levy, whether it is worth supplementing by approximately 50 cents the production of skim milk powder for international sales. Perhaps we are not receiving any advantage from the skim milk powder program. Perhaps there is a better way of handling it.

There are things which can be done in Canada to assist in levelling out surplus production. As the minister is aware, it comes from the industry as well as the producers themselves. When the average Canadian buys milk, he is not buying fluid milk from the cow. He is buying 2 per cent, skim, or some other product or by-product from the fluid field. We should put some money into the disposal of skim milk powder. It is a valuable commodity. We are attempting to give it to other countries, at the same time as indicating that it has nutritional value. Perhaps it could be distributed in Canada through a school milk program. That would cost a few dollars, but it would be better than what is occurring at the present time. Farmers are finding it easier to dump milk down the drain than putting it into the system. That is a waste of a nutritious and very useful resource. It should be distributed through a school milk program or through a food stamp program which would benefit poorer families.

Several other things should have been included in the minister's statement respecting the sales program of quotas. Last year when some farmers had huge quotas, quota was available and many people borrowed, rented or loaned quota, and it was fairly satisfactory. This year the price of quota fluctuated to an unreasonably high level. In fact, most producers have indicated that it will take two to four years of production to pay for the industrial quota, and there is no assurance that the price will remain at that level.

There are a number of programs which could be implemented. If time permitted, I could outline a number of ways that are better to utilize skim milk powder than paying people to take it off our hands. In many cases it is delivered to countries where, if their water were added to the powder, it could become a poisonous substance. There are better ways of handling skim milk powder.

Farmers will not be very happy with the dairy program this year. It does not indicate anything of substance or any value, with the exception of the reduction of cheese imports. I am surprised and pleased with the industrial developments which have taken place in the production of cheese in Canada. Unfortunately, Kraft is one of the companies which has been involved, but companies have been able to produce probably 30 or 40 types of cheese which previously had to be imported from Europe and other parts of the world. At the present time probably 110 types, varieties or brands of cheese are being imported. With the help of the Department of Agriculture, perhaps Canada would be able to manufacture every one of those specialty cheeses.

How was the minister able to change the only thing which developed the contractual link of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with the European Common Market? Cheese imports were reduced by another ten million pounds, but most Canadian farmers feel those imports should be stopped altogether, or a tariff should be placed on those imports in order for Canada to double its specialty cheese production.

The minister will not receive any kudos out of this year's announcement. Many things should have taken place. There should be federal leadership from the Canadian Dairy Commission to the pooling of industrial and fluid milk sales in Canada. Most farmers have made the expenditure which would allow them to produce the high quality milk which has always been available to Canadian fluid milk users. In the main, industrial milk producers are now meeting those standards. It appears to me it is time for us to give some leadership in the pooling of all milk so that it is not handled in a different manner in different provinces.

● (1542)

The minister has not solved the problem of over production by food-milk producers although this is something that has caused difficulty. I am sure he would not have collected from most people if we had not been paying the subsidy.

I think there are many things that can and should be done to make our dairy industry a more viable industry.

In closing, I should like to say that Canadians in general should appreciate the efforts of the dairy producers in this country. Under great hardship over the last two or three years they have been able to overcome their difficulties and establish a sound industrial and fluid milk industry which has provided milk for Canadians at a reasonable price.

Dairy Policy

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of Agriculture to announce as soon as possible the dairy policy for the current year. At that time, the minister answered proudly that he would announce it soon and that we should certainly be happy to learn that it would be the best in the world.

Now, as it looks very much like the one we had last year; it is nothing new since the quota is still 98 to 103 million hundredweights. So it is exactly the same as last year. As concerns the subsidy which remains at $2.66, I thank the minister on behalf of dairy producers, because there were rumours in my province to the effect that the federal government intended to discontinue the subsidies paid to industrial milk producers. This is further proof that the public is not always adequately informed, since I received many calls from people inquiring whether that was true or not.

Mr. Speaker, the target price per hundredweight of milk, as mentioned in the minister's statement, has been raised to $12.42, or a 24 cent increase per hundredweight. I feel, and the minister agrees with me, that this increase is far below those made in other sectors. I am convinced that at least farm and dairy producers will not be blamed for the rising inflation in Canada and the fall of the Canadian dollar.

I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the import levy has been reduced to $1 per hundredweight. I wonder how it came to be set at $1, because a little further in the statement we find that "every hundredweight of in-quota industrial milk and cream will be subject to a new contingency level of 20 cents, refundable to those producers who, at year end, have managed to keep their production within national requirements."

So, it is $1 or $1.09. Who is going to decide whether it is really only $1 or $1.09? In what circumstances is this really going to be set at $1.09? Mr. Speaker, the levy on surplus cream diverted from fluid milk for industrial use, which is equivalent to 20 cents on fluid milk, is also announced in the dairy policy. This is a matter, Mr. Speaker, which gave rise last year to terrible discussions, manifestations, even confrontation here in front of parliament and this problem was solved very late in the year. I would like the minister's assurance on this question, so we could know if the management committee, the Canadian Dairy Commission and the minister really reached an agreement which will prevent manifestations of the kind we had last year.

What is less welcome, Mr. Speaker, is the raise to $7.50 of the over-quota levy and as I often said before, as have others, it is not easy for a dairy producer to control precisely the production allowed by his quota. I have been a dairy producer for some time, and I always preferred a great unit production. Our agronomists and our technicians were teaching us various formulas for improving the milk production of our cows, and with this penalty policy, as milk production is not as simple to control as a tap, some producers must have their cows treated with injections to reduce their production, and this certainly upsets the cows. So instead of giving milk, they give "spite", because this is against the law of nature. Thus, the quality of our herds depreciates, and I am afraid that in the next few years we will have to pay for that, because it is not normal to give chemical injections for keeping the dairy cow from producing milk. Mr. Speaker, I now would like to discuss cheese imports. The minister is telling us that there will be a reduction to 45 million this year. Last year they were at 50 million.

On behalf of producers, I would like to urge the minister to stimulate research programs to make greater use of our dairy production and develop various kinds of cheese which could be made available to our Canadian consumers to eliminate the surpluses that will be penalized, according to the minister's statement. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the minister is sincere because he mentioned in his statement that last year small and young producers experienced problems as a result of the quotas but he also added: I also hope that if a quota cut is needed during the coming dairy year then it will be made through transfer assessments or reallocations and not through direct quota cuts.

Now if we want to ensure that a new generation will carry on in agriculture, we must not discourage the young people who run into debt and decide to buy the family land and adjoining lands to have a productive operation. Yet our laws force them to get into debt and to buy quotas to be able to. I am sure the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) who is listening to me very carefully sees those things happening, because it also happens in this riding. So we should devise a formula to encourage them.

Mr. Speaker, the rise in the price of milk falls far short of the rise in production costs. It is a well known fact that electricity costs went up sharply, that gas costs went up sharply, as did the cost of farm machinery parts. On that matter, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to see to it that the recommendations of the Barber Commission be implemented as soon as possible, so that farmers are not forced to pay prohibitive prices for replacement parts. Something must be done in this regard to help milk producers and improve their situation.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, to conclude I must confess that I am a little disappointed that the school year, I mean the dairy year, has not been changed. I am sorry if I said school year but I was a school commissioner for a long time and we had to talk of school years then, but what I meant was dairy year. I believe it would be an excellent solution and it should be studied further. The dairy year should be changed to run from October 1 to September 30 of the following year so that the producers would be able to eliminate from their herd the necessary number of heads for the winter months and maintain it at the established level of the quota. As everyone knows, during the winter beef prices are higher and the dairy producers could then dispose of their cattle at prices which would bring them additional revenues. Mr. Speaker, I think that the minister should retain this proposal, and apply it to the current year as it is not too late to do so; but if they did change the dairy year, why not say so in the statement?

Mr. Pinard: But it is in the statement.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Well, I must have some pages missing then. I know it was late reaching me in any event, and if it has been done, it is all for the best; it will be August 1, so that is already a step forward. But I think it would be preferable to postpone it to October 1. In any event, I am quite pleased and things could have been worse. I hope that other countries will follow the example of Canada and that their producers will be as satisfied as Canadian producers.

● (1552)

[English]

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I have a three-pronged question. The reason cheese is being imported is because there is a profit in it. In the past brokers have been receiving profits from its importation. I was wondering if there has been any discussion in the department to ensure that the Canadian Dairy Commission receives the profit on the importation of cheese.

With regard to the advertising program relating to cheese, will there be greater flexibility given to provinces like Alberta which has its own program? Has there been any discussion with the Department of Manpower in devising ways and means whereby manpower could be provided for the dairy industry? Up to the present time it has been very difficult for those in the industry to get employees.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, on the question of import/export of cheese and that profit must be there for importers/exporters to be in the business of bringing in this product, I would agree with the hon. member that we have discussed the same type of an operation which we use for butter at the present time. We need butter. On the butterfat exchange program last year we did import some butter, but that is brought in and put on the market at a domestic price. If there is any money to be made, that goes into the treasury. For instance, if butter was brought in at world price last year it would have been around 35 cents a pound, plus a little bit, I believe towards the end of the year. That was put on the domestic market at our price in Canada. The money that was made belonged to the Dairy Commission, or the Treasury of Canada, I believe you would say.

With regard to sharing of advertising, I think I know what the hon. member wants. Alberta was the only province that asked that it be given the money to advertise provincially. That decision was made by all the producers, etc., that the advertising should be national, that electronic and paper media be used. We think it has been very successful because the consumption of cheese has gone up, in the case of cheddar by over 3 per cent, and specialty cheese by over 6 per cent which is a sizeable increase in any one year.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, very briefly I would like to ask the minister, in view of the fact that we will now be changing the dairy year, for the first time with an additional four months for a total of 16 months, could he indicate how the quota will be determined for those four months in view of the fact those four months are in the spring and shippers generally have a higher amount of shipping during that period of time, and yet our regular shippers through the year—12 months—have a fairly steady supply of milk? How will this be determined, and will there be very close monitoring and increased monitoring by the CDC in order to make sure that whatever arrangement there is, it will not be misused by those in the shipping of milk for specific periods?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the whole idea of changing the dairy year has come about not from the Dairy Commission solely but from the producers themselves. We want a constant production of fresh milk for those markets that are developing. Of the $6.5 million that will be used to develop new programs and new ways to sell the industrial dairy products, part at least will be going for that kind of development. We need the fresh milk for yogourt, etc. These types of products are rapidly expanding for consumption in homes and restaurants. This is an area in which we think we should be involved.

We have increased the sales of condensed milk on world markets last year by around 40 per cent. That lessens the need for butter and skim milk powder. When you can sell the complete product, condensed in a can, in some other part of the world it is better to do that even if, as the spokesman for the New Democratic Party has said, some of our fat needs must be imported, and it is better to do that because it is not so costly.

I think the monitoring system is the best we have had for a long time. The co-operation between the provinces, the provincial marketing boards, and the CDC I feel is excellent at the present time, to make sure that they know when they are getting out of line with production. I believe the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) made a comment about that when he spoke.

When one section or the other is getting out of line it is watched much closer. Under the program for this year, no longer will it be that one province over-produces and the other one pays a penalty. If a neighbour over-produces, no longer will the other neighbour pay part of that penalty. If they get out of line on the quota allowed to them, they will be the ones who will pay for it; in other words, the individual who breaks the rules. This is something which the producers want, and we want.

The four months will be reported month by month to the Dairy Commission. We know there will always be that production in that four months the hon. member is talking about. That should be taken advantage of and can be used for those products we are discussing. That is a time of year when there is an extra consumption of dairy products. Those are also some of the better months for tourism. The advertising program will be geared to using as much of that in as many new ways as we can possibly think of.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Speaker, my question relates to the movement of people within Canada. If I might use the example of Alberta, in the last three years Alberta has increased its population by movement, from within Canada, by some 60,000 per year. This has placed the province of Alberta in a shortage of supply situation at times. Will the minister instruct the milk supply committee to meet again in order that we can come up with an adequate quota to reflect the movement of people in this country in order to solve the problems, particularly in Alberta and British Columbia?

● (1602)

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the supply management committee and the Dairy Commission are very much aware of the different areas of consumption in Canada. Even without the movement of people, certain parts of our society consume more of the product than others because of income, their way of life, and so on. It may be because of the kind of program a province may have. For example, the province of Nova Scotia has a milk program for school children. Therefore, the children there are trained, if not at home, at school, that milk is a good protein product and is highly nourishing. That has a consumption factor built in from the time they go to kindergarten. This is being tried by some of the other provincial groups. Provincial marketing boards have special advertising programs.

The Alberta producers are not in the difficult position the hon. member talked about. If he has evidence about a shortage in Alberta, it has not been brought to my attention. They had a slight surplus problem in Alberta last year. They distribute within the province, not by the federal Dairy Commission.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, we are all anxious to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). However, I would first like to ask a short but important question. I hope it will elicit a brief reply. It is a simple question. The consumer subsidy on powdered skim milk has been removed. Concern has been expressed by his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), who stated in committee the other night that it should be placed back on for certain groups. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) has also expressed concern about it. Has the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) had consultation with these two colleagues to see what can be done to offset the 40 to 50 per cent price increase on powdered skim milk which will flow from his announcement, and which will lean pretty heavily on poor people, native people, and particularly on people in the north?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, if there is a 40 or 50 per cent increase in the price of skim milk powder, something is very wrong. It should not amount to anything more than 34 cents a pound. Thirty-four on to 74 does not make a 50 per cent increase in the price of that product. Even if they add the total on to it, and there is nothing saying the store has to do it, they will supply a quart of a healthy, life-giving substance with many of the minerals that all age groups need, for about 28 cents a quart. You cannot buy Pepsi, Coca Cola, Seven Up or any other soft drink beverage for that amount. With regard to the question of whether I am consulting with my colleagues, yes I am. I again say that I do not think that it is the position of the Department of Agriculture to be in the subsidy business. Possibly transportation should be considered. Over half the cost of food in some of the northern parts of this country is transportation. Maybe it should be in the form of more direct aid through subsidization. We are looking at all these matters at the present time.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a very simple question. Why did the minister not include in his statement in the House the information that he provided in his press release in relation to the dairy year? If the minister is going to make a statement, he should make the whole statement in the House rather than making part of it in a press release where he is apt to get away with a lot of things which may be of doubtful authenticity.

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member thinks I did not want all that in the statement, he is mistaken. We are cautioned not to make too long a statement in the House. That is why it was narrowed down. Those who drafted the notes for my presentation were more conservative than I thought they would be. They left out two of the articles about the fund for export costs, $24.8 million, and the fact that the dairy year was going to be extended for four months. I added in both of those. If the hon. member was not in the House when I made my presentation, I am sorry. I did ad lib those comments when I made my presentation.

[Translation]

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

AVAILABILITY OF INFORMATION TO MEMBERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of privilege.

Earlier in the day, while commenting on the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) on the dairy policy, I made certain suggestions and I made them on the basis of a document which was delivered to me, namely the statement made by the minister to the House today and which I received just before coming to the House. So, in view of the fact that I did not have the official communiqué which the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) handed me some time after, I therefore raise the question of privilege because I suggested a change of date in the dairy policy while the official communiqué contained precisely a change of date which is official.

As a result I have found myself stating things which I should have known and the fact is that it makes you look very silly when you take a position regarding a document in your hands while there actually exists another document which is more complete and more informative. I do not intend to blame the minister for that, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to seize this opportunity so that in the future, when there is a minister's statement of such significance, we may get at least the full text of the communiqué while the minister himself could summarize it before us. That way, we would be in a position of total awareness regarding all the facts. I do not wish to complain needlessly, but I am convinced that my question of privilege is quite justified and well-grounded so I would appreciate if it could be taken into account.

* * *

[English]

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO ENSURE STANDARDIZATION OF FORMS USED BY BANKS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-442, to amend the Bank Act (standard forms).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is to allow the Inspector General of Banks to regulate the contents of standard bank forms. The reason this is necessary is that in some provinces, particularly in British Columbia, "seize or sue" legislation has been passed. There is now evidence that banks have been refusing to amend their standards to comply with provincial law, thereby leaving the customers to believe there is a necessity to pay deficiencies where by provincial law this is not required. In brief, this will bring bank forms into compliance with provincial law.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

TRADE

MEASURE RESPECTING IMPORTATION OF BEEF

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-443, respecting the importation of beef.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill would be to put in the hands of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the legislative authority to protect the economic and national interest of Canada and the primary producers of beef from unfair or unwarranted interference in domestic beef markets. The intent would be to put in place a mechanism that would allow beef producers in this country to plan and develop better their production schedule while knowing that a legislative device is in place to avoid those wide fluctuations in the levels of offshore imports which can so adversely affect their industry.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 747, 788, 1,235, 1,341, 1,353, 1,366, 1,367 and 1,461.

[Text]

OFFICIAL HOSPITALITY

Question No. 747—Mr. Howie:

Since April 1, 1976, what amount was spent for entertainment by the Department of External Affairs?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): April 1, 1976 to March 31, 1977, $1,640,371; April 1, 1977 to October 31, 1977, $719,330.

In so far as the Canadian International Development Agency is concerned, the reply is as follows: The amount spent for entertainment was $66,339.10 for the period April 1, 1976 to December 31, 1977.

FAMILY PLANNING CENTRES

Question No. 788—Mr. Herbert:

Does the government share any part of the cost of the family planning centres recently announced by the Quebec Provincial Government?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. The federal government has shared in the costs of establishing family planning centers by the Quebec provincial government. The family planning division assisted the department of social affairs, Quebec, in setting up family planning centers in the centres locaux de services communautaires by contributing $220,000 in 1974/75, $100,000 in 1975/76 and $330,150 in 1976/77. The role of the family planning centers in the centres locaux de services communautaires is to provide the whole range of family planning services, counselling, information and medical advice in fertility and contraception. Most centers employ a nurse, a social worker and a medical doctor. There are no abortion services within the centres locaux de services communautaires.

CBC—FUNDS ALLOCATED FOR RADIO AGRICULTURAL BROADCASTS

Question No. 1,235—Mr. Towers:

1. Have additional funds been allocated to strengthen CBC Radio agricultural broadcasts since the report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts was presented in the House in July 1977?

Order Paper Questions

2. Have amounts designated for CBC agricultural broadcasting been reduced since the Committee's hearings in December 1976 and, if so, by how much?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Additional funds have been allocated to produce the new program "The Food Show", which began January 8, 1978. Some extra moneys have also gone to strengthen the syndication of agriculture and food items, i.e. the exchange of topical items among regional production centres for use on local and regional programs.

2. No.

RCMP—PURCHASE OF MORTICIAN SUPPLIES

Question No. 1,341—Mr. McKinnon:

Is the RCMP buying $19,210 worth of mortician supplies from Finnie Mfg. Co. Ltd. and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Rod Blaker (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Yes. Finnie Manufacturing Co. Ltd. supplied 247 body bags and 200 body bag liners to the RCMP for use at various locations across Canada. These items are used when bodies are removed from fatal motor vehicle accidents, scenes of suicides and sudden deaths, etc. The body bag is made of a heavy rubberized material and the liner fits inside the bag and is disposable.

PSC—TERMS OF REFERENCE OF LANGUAGE TRAINING BRANCH

Question No. 1,353—Mr. Brisco:

What are the terms of reference of the Public Service Commission's Language Bureau?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The mandate of the Language Training Branch is to aid departments agencies and other organizations of the federal government, in the realization of departmental and individual plans regarding language training and the continual application of such activities as orientation, curriculum development, teaching, evaluation and counselling.

N.B. On July 1, 1977, the language bureau and its regional operations directorate became the Language Training Branch.

OLD AGE SECURITY

Question No. 1,366—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

During the 1976-77 fiscal year, did the government pay old age security pensions and guaranteed income supplements to spouses and, if so (a) what was the (i) total amount (ii) amount per province (b) to how many recipients (i) in all (ii) per province?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No old age security pensions or guaranteed income supplement benefits were paid to persons between the ages of 60 to 65. However, information concerning the spouse's allowance program during the 1976-77 fiscal year is provided below:

[Mr. Towers.]

		Amount Paid ($000's)		No. of Recipients
(a)(i)		100,626	(b)(i)	71,781
(ii)	Newfoundland	5,456		2,849
	Prince Edward Island	1,158		696
	Nova Scotia	6,264		4,104
	New Brunswick	4,397		3,027
	Québec	31,898		21,535
	Ontario	20,614		17,714
	Manitoba	6,096		4,215
	Saskatchewan	5,916		3,998
	Alberta	7,443		5,371
	British Columbia	11,272		8,215
	Northwest Territories	90		45
	Yukon	22		12

OLD AGE SECURITY PENSION

Question No. 1,367—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. During the 1976-77 fiscal year, how many persons, 65 years and over, received the (a) old age security pension (b) guaranteed income supplement?

2. In each case, what (a) was the amount paid (i) in total (ii) per province (b) was the number of beneficiaries per province?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1.

	The number of recipients in 1976-77 of Old Age Security (a)	in 1976-77 of Guaranteed Income Supplement (b)
Newfoundland	37,595	30,820
Prince Edward Island	13,421	9,966
Nova Scotia	81,376	54,461
New Brunswick	61,914	41,379
Quebec	492,172	310,704
Ontario	737,867	343,891
Manitoba	107,891	62,231
Saskatchewan	103,638	57,002
Alberta	137,406	78,510
British Columbia	239,333	124,505
Northwest Territories	1,096	863
Yukon	592	346
Total	2,014,301	1,114,678

2. The amount paid per province in 1976-77 for:

	Old Age Security ($)	Guaranteed Income Supplement ($)
Newfoundland	61,896	30,711
Prince Edward Island	22,148	9,487
Nova Scotia	134,248	51,461
New Brunswick	103,542	39,434
Quebec	808,042	294,238
Ontario	1,215,438	299,586
Manitoba	177,809	55,999
Saskatchewan	172,011	51,598
Alberta	226,901	71,789
British Columbia	393,961	111,487
Northwest Territories	1,908	977
Yukon	1,015	361
Total	3,318,919	1,017,128

EXPENDITURES IN CONSTITUENCY OF NICKEL BELT

Question No. 1,461—Mr. Rodriguez:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,131, what were the major programme areas under which the money was spent and what was the amount going to each area?

Hon. Joseph-Philippe Guay (Minister of National Revenue):

Operating costs of the Sudbury District Taxation Office	Customs and Excise Program
1969-70—1,245,108	Not available
1970-71—1,341,857	$ 62,931
1971-72—1,595,678	66,459
1972-73—1,815,946	82,571
1973-74—2,081,095	100,280
1974-75—2,560,100	100,323
1975-76—2,731,566	122,288
1976-77—3,139,299	133,303
1977-78—2,625,191 (to date)	128,380

* * *

[English]

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 1,446 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Does the House agree that question No. 1,446 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Text]

ETHNIC NEWSPAPER

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Mitges:

1. How does the Department of National Revenue define "ethnic newspaper"?

2. In which ethnic newspapers did the Department advertise (a) in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977 (b) since March 31, 1977 and, in each case, what was the total amount of advertisement placed?

3. What criteria does the Department use to determine which ethnic newspapers will receive government advertising?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Pinard: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Wednesday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government; the amendment of Mr. Stevens (p. 4439), and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Saltsman (p. 4443).

● (1612)

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is appropriate that moments before I rise to speak on a budget which should have been brought in long ago, we saw introduced as a private member's bill a piece of legislation—a meat import law—which should have been introduced by a minister of the Crown, by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), some time ago. He promised three years ago he would introduce such a bill, and again he promised it would be introduced by the government this session. That responsibility was abandoned by the government and passed off to a backbencher, in the certain knowledge that, because of the way in which this government works, that piece of agricultural legislation would never see the light of day in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, in dealing with the budget which was brought down on Monday night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) I have to say with real sadness that my response, as I listened to the minister deliver his first and last budget address, was very much like my reaction to the speech given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—the latest in a series of televised speeches shown on CBC and CTV across the country—when he went to New York. What happened with this budget, as happened with the speech made by the Prime Minister in New York, was that the government, presented with an excellent opportunity to give Canadians some sense of economic leadership and to give the international community some certainty and confidence that there was a government here which was prepared to give economic leadership and to give some direction to our economy, failed to meet that opportunity to respond.

That opportunity was lost for two fundamental reasons. First, the government just does not want to admit how very serious Canada's economic problems are today. Second, this government no longer has the energy or imagination to give the Canadian economy the leadership it needs. The problems are only too well known to all of us. The Canadian dollar has fallen far below the level it should reach. The point which troubles most of us as we look at daily declines in the value of our dollar is the incompetence of this government which has created such concern among the international community. This government alone has cost us at least three points on the value of our dollar. I say "at least". It has cost this country somewhere between a billion, and one and a half billion dollars—a billion, or a billion and a half dollars wasted already because the international community—people who have to make decisions about the value and worth of the Canadian currency—just cannot find in this incompetent government anyone in whom to place their confidence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We see the situation in this country where investment money—money which should be invested in this country to create jobs in this country, Canadian investment, and money which could come in from abroad if there were a climate in which foreign and Canadian investors could have confidence—instead of coming into this country is flooding out of it. Again, we see the rise of inflation in this country. Yesterday the figures showed it has risen once more—up to 8.8 per cent on an annual basis, an inflation rate which has been driven even higher by the finance minister's handling of the Canadian dollar.

We know the grievous situation which exists among the unemployed in Canada. More than a million Canadians are out of work now, and the government's answer to those million people is to say: It does not matter; they have unemployment insurance; they do not need to work; they can go on welfare. That is the philosophy of this government—

Mr. Paproski: Shame!

Mr. Clark: —and then they go on to say: Besides, that's not the real figure. Those are not real people, they are just women who want to work. Or: They are just young people who want to work. Mr. Speaker, that is a shameful attitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: A heartless minister.

Mr. Clark: Of course women in this country want to work. And they have the right to expect that this will be a modern community in which they can find work to do, if that is what they want. Of course young people in this country want to work. And they want to be able to start their careers with jobs to go to, rather than having to go to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. They should want to work. But in too many cases, among women and among young people, it is not simply a matter of wanting to work; it is a matter of having to work.

If the Minister of Finance, who so cavalierly blames unemployment on the women of Canada, would take a look at the actual situation of many of the women who are working, he would know that in many cases they are working because they have to work. He would know that if they did not work, or if they were not seeking work, their families would be without bread on the table, their children would be without the kind of future which should be theirs in a country such as Canada. These women have to work because we have a government which has let costs get out of control and which has destroyed the sense of possibility which used to be the basis of the Canadian nation.

The Prime Minister, with that lack of concern for economic matters and for the situation of the ordinary Canadian which he has demonstrated over the years, blames these problems on the world. He says they result from world conditions. It used to be the weather that he blamed, but now he needs a different explanation. The real problem is the ten-year failure of this government. Of course the world is tough. The Prime Minister should have known this from all his reading and all his travels. We live in a tough, hard world, but no matter how tough it is, ours is a country which should lead the world and not fall helplessly behind as we have under the direction and policies of this government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The difficulty is that the government is just worn out. Even when it was a young government—if you can cast your mind back that far to a point at which this government had some energy—when its best ministers were coming in instead of going out, and I refer to those like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) who is across the aisle, back when it had energy and imagination, this government even then laid the basis for many of our economic problems of today by putting its priorities in areas other than the Canadian economy. It is uncontestable that by focusing so much exclusive attention on language policy and on theories like the contractual link, the government ignored the realities of the Canadian economy. Not only did it set the stage for the economic problems we now have, but it also sowed fresh seeds of separatism in the province of Quebec. That is the legacy of this government.

When it is forced to face the economic reality of Canada, this government is just too worn out to take command. Government members content themselves with trying to fool people instead of trying to lead them. There has been an absolute failure in economic leadership. I ask the House to consider these facts.

● (1622)

Tomorrow, April 14, is the date for the termination of controls, and two points are important for the House and the country to recognize. This government broke its word when it brought in controls. That is well known, but the government also broke its word in the way it operated the controls. Hon. members and the people of Canada will recall that when the Prime Minister introduced controls, he went out and promised that there would be major reforms in housing policy, in energy policy, and in other areas where change was needed, and that we would use the period of controls and the atmosphere of emergency to achieve those changes. Well, none of those reforms has come about. Untold millions in Canadian investment left this country because of the uncertainty that was generated by the controls regime, and inflation today, which was "wrestled to the ground" and which this government said it would end, stands at 8.8 per cent, and is rising.

Mr. McGrath: A shameful record.

Mr. Clark: In October the new minister took a half step toward dealing with this problem when he brought down a budget which was not a budget. It was a document marked by a stimulus which was not a stimulus. The centrepiece of that proposal, as hon. members will recall, was a two-month tax cut of about $700 million, and the evidence is that it had almost no impact on the Canadian economy because the initiative of the government in October was too timid and far too limited. We asked for a real budget to be brought forward, and this government ducked, delayed, refused, sought every refuge and subterfuge it could, and finally brought in a patch-up budget which has the same weaknesses as the last excuse for stimulus. There is no over-all economic framework in this budget. There is no commitment to cut government spending, and no stimulus permanent enough to make a real difference in creating jobs and growth for Canadians.

[Translation]

Of course the budget features one or two provisions which we can support; there has never been any budget which did not contain valid proposals. I am pleased to note that the minister has complied with our request for action to promote research and development and has at least restored the tax deduction for research and development set under the Diefenbaker administration, a deduction which was subsequently removed by the Liberals. We are also pleased to note that our suggestion for a more equitable treatment of incorporated family farms has been accepted. We were also satisfied with the necessary options suggested for the pension plan as well as the limited incentives granted in the transportation and energy areas.

[English]

The Minister of Finance faced three major challenges in preparing this budget, but the sad report card is that he failed on each challenge. The most immediate challenge was to create jobs for Canadians. More than one million Canadians are out of work, and the challenge was to create jobs by stimulating the economy. By the government's own calculations, the stimulus the minister proposed will create just a few more jobs in six months than the government lost last month alone because of its economic policies.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: The second challenge was to halt the costly run on the Canadian dollar. Well, the results are in. Every half measure this minister takes drives the dollar further down. Just an hour after the minister finished reading his budget statement, the vice-president of the Bank of America said on CBC television from New York that nothing in the budget would help bolster the dollar or help assure international investors about the long-term prospects of the Canadian economy. In this morning's Montreal Gazette a senior trader was quoted as saying:

> The events of the last few days have only increased downward pressure on the dollar. First came what was seen as a neutral budget, then poor unemployment figures and (then) figures showing a sharp rise in the consumer price index.

Every action this government takes makes our dollar figures worse, and one of the reasons is that this government will not come clean with the Canadian people, spell out its strategy, and take full measures instead of half measures. The government knows it must do that.

The third and perhaps most important challenge the minister faced was to restore some sense of confidence in Canadians and to demonstrate that we have here a national government which is doing more than plugging the leaks in a sinking ship. The centrepiece of this budget reflects the minister's view of Canada's future. That reflection of his view causes alarm among many Canadians because he thinks of our future in terms of six months, and he brings in a stimulus which will stop after six months. It will stop when it is needed most, when unemployment grows most acute in this country.

That measure may be considered to be politically clever. That measure provides election stimulus—or so the minister hopes—if not economic stimulus, and it perpetuates the old pattern of this government of creating problems for the provinces. We can be sure that particularly in the next two or three months the federal government will be going around this country and taking credit for introducing this measure. However, the provinces will bear the burden of restoring this tax, and that will be a particularly heavy burden because the provinces will be seen to be increasing sales taxes when this half measure ends. That will happen at precisely the time when unemployment in Canada becomes most acute. One wonders how Premier Regan of Nova Scotia will welcome that particular burden from his Liberal friends in Ottawa.

Mr. Nowlan: He won't be there.

Mr. Clark: As my colleague from Nova Scotia reminds me, Premier Regan, who represents the western beachhead of Liberal strength in this country, will probably not be there come fall. If he is, and if he goes to the people and has to defend the re-introduction of sales taxes because of the short-sighted economic policies of his colleagues in Ottawa, he will certainly be on his way down the road after an election in his province.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Then he will know how Bourassa felt.

Mr. Clark: With an aptness which Canadians who are concerned about the national unity debate should clearly understand, my colleague says that Premier Regan will know how Premier Bourassa felt, because Premier Bourassa was betrayed in every step and in every initiative he took by people in his own party.

The Minister of Finance could have met the challenges which were before him. He owed it to Canada at least to try to meet them. He could have produced the major permanent economic stimulus which is needed to create jobs in this country. He could have learned from his own experience of last October that half measures just will not work. They did not work in October; why does he think they will work now? We told him then that a two-month tax cut would not turn the economy around, and I tell him now that a six-month tax cut will not do so either.

Granted, there might be some small economic bump this summer. That might help the Liberals just a little bit during the only period in which they are interested, the period of the election campaign. I hope that we do get that economic bump, I hope there is some effect. But, sir, I repeat this because it is the fundamental weakness, not only in this legislation, but in the thinking of this short-term, part-time government. The impact of this measure stops when it is needed most. We have a stimulus that stops when a stimulus is most needed. We have a job creation measure that stops in October and November when the need for jobs in this winter country is at its most acute.

● (1632)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The minister says he cannot afford a larger stimulus. He said the government cannot find another nickel to cut. They could not find it in AECL, they could not find it in "Air Otto"—I see the flying minister has temporarily left the House—they could not find it in the advertising programs that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) told the House yesterday he intends to bring in to encourage buying in Canada. Get this, the Government of Canada intends to run advertising programs to persuade the Government of Canada to buy in Canada!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: That is the only way he can reach his colleagues.

Mr. Clark: It may well be that the impact of this budget upon the native province of the temporary member for Crowfoot indicates that the only way he can reach his colleagues and influence their deliberations is by advertising.

I say to the minister that I could find some saving in AECL, and I could find some savings in the advertising programs of the government, as well as in the extravagant travels of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and in a number of other areas which I spelled out for the minister before, and which I will spell out again later in this debate. I could find some savings also in the fact that if we get more Canadians to work in this country, we will get them off the unemployment insurance rolls.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I just cannot conceive of how a modern government which dares to call itself liberal, which dares to follow its tradition of building in this country, would prefer to spend on unemployment insurance rather than to spend on jobs, this from the party of C. D. Howe, from the party of people who have encouraged Canadians in the past to go out to build and to work. The tradition of the builders in the Liberal party has been put in the ground and buried by that party which prefers to encourage Canadians to go on welfare rather than to go to work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: We need a tax cut of at least $2 billion now. It should be a permanent tax cut, not some kind of six months' wonder. It should be a tax cut which gives Canadians back some of their money rather than just lending it to them for 180 days.

We propose just such a permanent measure, putting money permanently in the hands of lower and middle income Canadians, people who are most likely to spend that money quickly, to spend it in Canada, to spend it on Canadian goods, and by spending to allow Canadian plants and industries, which are now operating under capacity, to produce more goods and to go out and hire some of that army of Canadian unemployed. That is what we need to create jobs in this country now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Among other advantages, that proposal is guided by an elemental sense of social justice. The Trudeau government offers the rich the same kind of stimulus as it offers the poor. Indeed, in many ways this minister offers the rich more. Under its proposal, the cost of Cadillacs will go down but the price of food will remain the same.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: That shows the priorities of this government. Among other dangers, the failure to bring in a budget which would be a document of economic leadership has added to the great sense of uncertainty about our future in this country. That is not the first time, because if this government is expert in anything, it is expert in uncertainty.

[Translation]

One of the basic causes of the problems which occurred during the Trudeau years was the government's refusal to consider the provinces, business and labour as true partners in our society. It refused to consult the unions before deciding on the Economic Council of Canada for the post control period and it refused to clearly state the regulations which would allow oil companies to expand their exploration in the north. It refused to divulge to the provinces the outline of its national policy, which would have given the provinces a basis on which to develop their own plans of action. It even refused to publish the new Bank Act. We know, Mr. Speaker, that the new act is drafted and ready, but the Trudeau government continues to hide it. Why? That is true and the minister knows it is.

Mr. Chrétien: It has not yet been translated into French.

Mr. Clark: It is available. The minister can answer questions asked in the House on the policy, on different aspects of that piece of legislation. I asked a question regarding the directions. I asked the minister to tell Canadians, here in Parliament and throughout the country, if the government intends to include caisses populaires and credit unions in that legislation. He refused to answer. He replied that we had to wait and study the legislation. The first time he said it was not for the House of Commons. Now, his excuse is that it is not translated. This is a matter which involves the government's policy and we are wondering whether the Trudeau government intends to include the Quebec caisses populaires and the credit unions in the Bank Act.

Mr. Chrétien: What are your views about it?

Mr. Clark: My policy, as leader of the opposition, is to force the government into putting an end to the practice of hiding the truth from Canadians and, when it has a policy or a bill it must say so here in the House of Commons. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is hidden somewhere, not because of the translation, but because the government intends to act against the interest of the Quebec people and caisses populaires. They want to keep their intentions quiet until the election. The impact will be serious on the province of Quebec, and it is irresponsible on the part of the Trudeau government to hide the truth about its intentions from Quebecers.

The minister wants to speak now. Perhaps later, since he is in the frame of mind to speak now, he could indicate exactly what the government intends to do about the Quebec caisses populaires. The bill is ready, he said so today, the policy is very clear on the matter. Why then should the policy be kept locked up, why does the minister refuse now to tell the House of Commons, Parliament, the Quebec people, the truth about the policy of the government? Why hide it? That is the question I now put to the government.

It must be remembered that it was that same Trudeau government that condemned the controls program, and then adopted one. Clearly, the Trudeau government cannot be trusted. Today the government must reveal its intentions with regard to the caisses populaires. They are threatened now by the government; the government should at least put out the bill: it is ready and only awaiting translation. It cannot be kept hidden any longer and serve to betray the Canadian people as it was betrayed in the case of the controls program.

● (1642)

[English]

This budget and this budget debate demonstrate the fundamental difference between the Liberal party and the Progressive Conservative party, in our view of the country, in our view of the economy, and in our view of the purpose of the budget. They regard the budget as a place to bluff. We regard the budget as a place to build.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Instead of a temporary tax cut which stops when unemployment becomes acute, we would have introduced a permanent tax cut which would have created jobs into the foreseeable future. Instead of ignoring Canadian small business, which is the backbone of the Canadian enterprise system, we would have introduced a tax credit to a limit of $5,000 per year to encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian small business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Instead of six months' help in the summertime in Atlantic Canada, we would have combined the permanent stimulus of a permanent tax cut with the introduction of long term tax contracts to draw strong industry to build and to stay in Quebec and in Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Most important, instead of a budget which takes such a limited view of Canada, which sees Canada as a six months' place, we would have used this budget to start the process of building a national development policy for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: This budget fails completely to give Canadians any sense of national direction. In that respect, I regret to say it is a budget very much in the Trudeau tradition. We have had a full decade of such budgets, budgets which tinker with the tax rates but offer no framework, no direction, no development plan on which Canadians can count and in which they can lay their own plans and set their own priorities. There is no excuse for any of that full decade of drift, this full decade of opportunities lost for Canada.

This minister has even less excuse, because at the first ministers' conference in February, the provinces of Canada, which take their responsibility by and large much more seriously than this government does, gave the government a lengthy list of positive, constructive proposals which could form part of a new national development strategy. Thanks to the premiers, the minister had plenty of raw material from which to draw. Yet this budget does not implement and does not even deal with a single one of those proposals. It merely confirms that, having succeeded in getting the government a few hours of television time, the first ministers' conference is as dead as a dodo. In terms of a policy instrument, it has been a deliberate waste of the time of the premiers of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Had this budget been ours, it would have spelled out a comprehensive plan for national development, not for a few months but for at least the next five years. As well as permanent stimulus, it would have spelled out the means we would take as the government to reduce significantly government's demands on the productive sectors of our society. I have presented this proposal to the government before. It is a proposal including sunset laws, which this nation very urgently needs. It is a proposal involving new means of budgetary control; a proposal involving deregulation; and a proposal requiring a tough-minded review of Crown corporations by this government which has more Crown corporations than it can count.

The Prime Minister talked about it being a tough world. Well, it is a tough world. He should stop just talking about that and begin to develop policies which recognize that we have to compete, grow, and build in a tough world. It is clear that the basis of any national development plan that we have to bring in, and certainly the basis of the plan we intend to bring in when we form the government, would be to build upon the great natural strengths of this country, build upon those strengths where we can become competitive in the world. Not just competitive, we should build upon those strengths where we can become leaders in the world. That used to be a concept of Liberal governments. There was a lot wrong with C. D. Howe, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) will remember. There was a lot wrong, but he was a man who believed in making Canada a leader in the world. That used to be a tradition of the Liberal party. It is no longer. That tradition has gone from the Liberal party and it sits now in the Conservative party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Who is C. D. Howe?

Mr. Clark: The minister indicates not only has he forgotten the traditions of C. D. Howe, he does not even know who the man was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I suppose we cannot expect much more vision backward than we find forward from a minister of the Crown who brings in an economic policy for only six months.

Miss MacDonald: Does he remember Laurier?

Mr. Clark: I hope he remembers Laurier. Laurier was the prime minister who said that the twentieth century can belong to Canada. The Progressive Conservative party is the only party in Canada today which can begin to realize the promise of making the twentieth century ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should like to enumerate some of the natural strengths upon which we can build as a country. For example, Canada already is one of the world's major producers of food. We can build on that strength by increasing our investment in food products and processes; by developing the storage vessels and processing capacity which our fishermen need to get the most out of the 200-mile limit; by aggressively seeking markets for our dairy products in places like Britain where cheddar cheese is actually being rationed today. We would stop talking about the OPEC crisis of the past. We would start acting on Canada's energy potential for the future by accelerating development of tar sands and heavy oil deposits, by getting on with tidal power.

Mr. Gillespie: Look at the budget.

Mr. Clark: I am pleased to hear from the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). He is the minister who is left at home when Canada goes abroad to negotiate treaties in his domain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: As I indicated, we would do that by getting on with tidal power and by moving forward on the construction of a reversible pipeline to Atlantic Canada. We would acknowledge the success of a company in this country like Northern Telecom, in becoming a major exporter of communications equipment. We would build on the strength of that industry, especially its expertise in long distance and remote area communications. We would use the billions of dollars Canada is going to have to invest in fishing, defence and energy vessels. It would be used as the base for a world scale shipbuilding industry in Atlantic Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: As the premier of Ontario has proposed, we would use our domestic need to improve rail services in the Windsor-Quebec corridor to assist our transportation industry to meet competitive world standards. We would end the atrocious situation at the port of Vancouver where, on average, 24 vessels are always waiting two to six weeks to load Canadian grain.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: At the expense of farmers.

• (1652)

Mr. Clark: We would recognize in our national development policy the fact that in the Middle East alone countries are planning to invest more than $200 billion over the next decade in infrastructure—in schools, in communications, in transportation and in housing. In this country we have companies like ATCO which have succeeded in this kind of world market despite the obstacles governments have put in their way. We would get behind more Canadian companies that have the experience and expertise to serve these markets.

The budget refers to research and development. By our debate in parliament some weeks ago, we forced the government to stop ignoring innovation in this country. But it is ironic to note what they count as an accomplishment. They have reinstated precisely the policy that a Progressive Conservative government introduced in 1961—the government of my colleague, the right hon. member for Prince Albert. A Liberal government abandoned that policy as quickly as it could. We are glad to have it back; but bringing back the status quo in research and development is not enough.

One of the fundamental failures of this government has been the failure to recognize how important it is for Canada's research and development policy to become the basis of our ability to grow in the world. We have a serious problem—more serious, probably, than that faced by any other industrialized nation—in that so much of our natural research capacity is drained out of Canada to head offices elsewhere. That means that the specific intent of much of Canada's innovation policy must be to encourage Canadian scientists to stay at home and to encourage Canadian companies to build on Canadian strengths in a world that needs our innovation. The government has opened the door it closed several years ago. But there is no sense of direction to their innovation policy—just as there is no sense of direction to their economic policy.

That is the tragedy here. We have a nation of people who want to go to work—of provinces who want to cooperate as partners in economic growth—and of plants that are operating well below capacity. We are a nation that was once respected in the world, that was once a source of pride at home. Now we are a country whose Prime Minister tells its young to leave.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Clark: This is a government which, in a decade, has debased our currency, divided our country and destroyed the natural confidence of Canadians in this country. They had an opportunity, in this budget, to begin to turn that around. But they are too old, too worn out, and once again they show themselves blind to the possibilities of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I thoroughly enjoyed the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark). I felt it could have effectively been divided into two parts. The first part, and I think the most interesting in many respects, was the proposals he made to indicate how he would have cut taxes in the budget and how he would have cut services in the government. I think that is an appropriate position for a Tory leader.

The second half of his speech, however, was devoted not only to spending all the money he was going to cut but to spending that and more. It seems to me that the Leader of the Opposition is trying to have it two ways. He is trying to say that on the one hand he would cut taxes, cut services, and have a lean and hungry government, and that, on the other hand, there are a great many things they would want to do and a great many things that have to be done, and they are not only prepared to spend the $2 billion or whatever amount they are going to cut, but even more.

It seems to me the speech of the Leader of the Opposition would have been far more effective had it concentrated on one of those two themes, instead of trying to combine the two, which just will not wash. If I could give the Leader of the Opposition any advice, I would suggest that he pay some attention to the two themes he was discussing and choose one or the other, but not choose both, because that will make the next election much too easy for the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

The Leader of the Opposition took the opportunity to quote some comments favourable to his side. I think it is only fair to indicate that there is a division of opinion in terms of the situation with the budget. Let me quote from this morning's Globe and Mail some remarks made by the chief economist of the Bank of Montreal. An article on the first page of the Business Section reports him as follows:

'It follows that in my view there is no basic justification for the Canadian dollar to continue to slide, and before long, one could expect to see some improvement,' Jack Toten told a seminar on Canada in the world economy.

The article goes on to say:

The lower Canadian dollar, causing higher prices for necessary imports, does increase inflation in Canada, he said. 'Quite obviously, if we fail to hold down increases in wages and costs to something like those experienced in the United States, our position will once again deteriorate and the dollar will inevitably decline.'

He pointed out that jobs would be created in Canada as a result of the decline of the dollar, because our costs are too high. There is no indication by industry or labour that they would voluntarily lower those costs, so the market is doing it for us. I think we have to admit on balance that if we cannot sell what we are producing at high wages, we are better to produce what we can at a cost which is more reasonable in the world economy. That will put people back to work and get our dollar back to where it belongs and ensure that jobs are created.

In the same newspaper the columnist Ronald Anderson had some comments to make about the way the budget was perceived by the business sector of Canada. He said:

Reaction to the budget indicated that the private sector, by and large, regards it as an acceptable and responsible budget. It is questionable whether it would have been so regarded if the sales tax program had been more ambitious, with a federal cost of, say, $1.5 billion. Furthermore, provinces that are prepared to cooperate in a six-month program may not have agreed to a one-year reduction.

That seems to me to be eminent good sense. I think the Leader of the Opposition hit on a good point by accident when he commented that if you want to stimulate the economy by spending, you help people at the lower end of the income scale. I think the point is made explicit in the subamendment presented by the New Democratic Party. There is an argument to be made about how best to stimulate spending at the lower end of the income scale, however.

It is obvious to anyone who has looked at economics that the most regressive tax is a sales tax levied by the federal government, and more particularly a retail sales tax levied by a provincial government. I think we understand why those taxes are there, but if you were trying to stimulate the economy it seems to me the fastest, most expeditious, and easiest way to do it would be through the reduction of sales tax.

The important thing—and it is difficult for hon. members opposite to acknowledge it—is that this was done with cooperation from provincial governments. It was a joint economic effort, not an initiative of the federal government alone. It followed upon what was decided at the premiers' conference instead of what the Leader of the Opposition says, that it was initiated by the Minister of Finance. Let us give credit where it is due—to the provincial premiers and the provincial ministers of finance as well. It means that in Canada we have entered into a new era of trying to determine federal and provincial priorities together. This is a unique achievement, it is the first time, to my knowledge, that it has happened.

● (1702)

We should go further and point out to members opposite that this follows up the agreements which were reached when the House of Commons passed the federal arrangements bill that took a fair chunk of federal spending. This was turned over to the provinces without strings, and is surely a tremendous initiative in federal-provincial relations. I should also point out it is a substantial area of federal budgetary funds over which the Minister of Finance now has no control and is not able to direct.

I want to take a look now at some of the proposals which the Leader of the Opposition has produced in terms of cutting spending. The question of the dollar is a question in many respects of confidence, of how sound our economy is and how sound our policies are. Let us be frank; we have a problem in Canada in that the federal government has a policy and we have ten provincial premiers who may have different policies. Often it is difficult to coordinate these policies.

As Premier Davis said at the first ministers' meeting, it is very difficult for an investor to understand that he must deal with ten separate industrial policies. I think Premier Davis is right to point out that an industrial policy is not necessarily within the purview of the federal government but rather is within the purview of the provincial government.

What would happen if we had the policies as enunciated by the Leader of the Opposition and the official critic of the opposition? It seems to me that the first effect it would have would make the dollar even more unstable than it is now—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is impossible.

Mr. Reid: Why do I say that? I say it because the calculations which I have before me indicate that the programs of tax cuts and other tax measures which they have just suggested would appear—and I use the word "appear" because nobody can get a grip on them since they have been so unspecific—to cost in the range of $2.5 billion to $3 billion. They would seek to offset a part of this through a reduction in government spending.

I am sure it would be possible for a Conservative government, if it ever formed that at the federal level, to follow the example of Premier Lyon in Manitoba who has shown the way to destruction of social services by putting the burden of inflation on the backs of the poor. In Manitoba, I am told, if they do not have a display of at least 2,000 people on a regular day that it is a boring day in the Manitoba legislature. Those members on the Conservative side should ask the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) just what the cuts have meant to his constituency and ask what it means for his chances of re-election.

It seems to me the deficit that is envisaged by the Conservative party would be enough to send the dollar scurrying down faster than anyone could anticipate. Let me give you three responses to this. First of all, the Canadian dollar exchange rate could drop sharply, leading to an accelerated rate of inflation through the price of imports. This would cause financial markets to view such an increase in the deficit as constituting irresponsible action. I emphasize the word irresponsible. The point is, as I quoted Mr. Anderson from the Globe and Mail earlier, that the business community, the private market, consider that the cuts which were made by the Minister of Finance to be appropriate under the circumstances. They further consider that the means taken to get that money quickly into circulation was appropriate, and done in as speedy a way as could be devised.

Secondly, if the money supply was not increased, and we are not clear at the moment just what the status of the official opposition is on this, the larger deficit would force interest rates up higher, hurting all private borrowers and increasing the cost of maintaining the public deficit now.

It seems that some of us were disappointed in the speech made by the Leader of the Opposition. From the build-up he received we anticipated he would come in as a knight on a white charger and be able to produce the necessary miracles from his hip pocket. We found no miracles, unfortunately. We did find a rather interesting stump speech which he was trying out on the House of Commons. He made a number of charges which I feel are totally irresponsible and not valid.

One of these charges deals with the question of the unemployment figures for women and young people. I am sure we all agree without question that this is indeed a very serious matter. In the comment which the Leader of the Opposition made in speaking of the high unemployment rate we have in Canada, he made a remarkable omission. He did not admit that from March last year to March this year some 305,000 new jobs have been created in Canada. This is a remarkable achievement for an economy which we all agree is not performing as well as we would like. I would go further and point out that that increase in the number of new jobs created in Canada is the third highest in the last 15 years. That surely is a remarkable record, Mr. Speaker.

If one wishes to discuss the economy and the budgetary problems, one has to put these things in proportion. Canada is in a unique position. A baby boom occurred in Canada. Those of us who pay attention to what is going on in local communities know that the result of that baby boom has moved now through the elementary system causing schools to be closed and along with that teachers are finding it difficult to get jobs. This lack of people coming into the school system is now beginning to affect the high schools, and the universities are planning for it. It is a remarkable phenomenon which is unique to Canada. So in the 1960's and 1970's the Government of Canada threw the economy wide open to make sure there were as many jobs as possible available for these people coming into the work force. That tends to be the same principle we have in effect today.

It is also important to note, Mr. Speaker, that Canada has one of the highest participation rates in the work force by women and young people. That is a fact. If to admit these facts is an attack on youth and women in the work force, then I suppose anybody who looks at the facts is guilty of pointing out these embarrassing things.

It is important to recognize what is going on and, on the basis of those facts, to look for solutions. Let me take a look at the situation in terms of the labour force.

Canada's unemployment problem should be looked at in the context of the baby boom and the young people coming into the work force, and in the context of this not happening in the world economy as a whole. If we look at the Canadian record of youth employment from 1971 to 1976 we find that employment increased more rapidly in that period of time in Canada than in almost any other country in the world; three per cent per year on average in Canada; two per cent per year on average in the United States, and less than 1 per cent for the countries of Europe, and Japan. It is surely a remarkable record, Mr. Speaker. This is a record which the Tories would be well to recognize when they make their speeches.

Youth unemployment is a phenomenon which is not unique to Canada. The severity in Canada, however, is less than it is in the United States, less than it is in Italy, less than it is in France. It is the same as it is in the United Kingdom, and it is worse than it is in Japan and Germany. Not a bad record. If you measure this as a ratio of youth to adults unemployed you come up with a figure in 1977 of 2.5 in Canada and three in the United States. Certainly a creditable performance indeed. I would like to point out also that in terms of youth unemployment the money which the government is putting into Young Canada Works this summer amounts to direct job creation.

• (1712)

We all agree that jobs in the private sector, permanent, steady, well paying jobs, are the ideal. However, if you want to deal with an economic problem you cannot pull levers today that are going to have an effect further down the line in a year or two. It is often said that by the time you pull one of the major economic levers, what you get is a result within a year or 18 months. The problem is more urgent.

The government has moved smartly and quickly into the field of direct job creation. The programs we have initiated in Canada, and I stress the word initiated, are now being copied throughout the world. We have been innovators in dealing with direct job creation. That should be acknowledged by the opposition parties. I believe it would make their job much more honest and easy.

There have been tremendous gains in real income in Canada. Real personal income per capita in 1971 was $3,426. In 1977, and I am using a constant 1971 dollar, that had risen to $4,650. That means, after accounting for inflation, personal incomes rose by $1,224. That is a very impressive performance in anyone's income.

We always forget the international context. In the speech today by the Leader of the Opposition, he did his best to denigrate any external influence. He said it is a tough world out there, but basically we can solve all our problems domestically. If he takes that attitude, he does himself a disservice.

The Leader of the Opposition should cast his mind back to what was the turning point in modern world economic history, August 15, 1971, the day President Nixon took the world off the gold standard, the day he imposed wage and price controls in the United States. That basically was the day which signalled the breakdown of the Bretton Woods economic system that was constructed so laboriously after World War II.

We have not yet got a truly functioning, operating international economy. We have a system that has been patched together. Canada, as one of the countries so heavily dependent on foreign trade and the international exchange markets of the world, has suffered the most from this change.

If we do not take these changes into account, we really do not understand what happens. Canada, above all nations, is dependent upon world trade. We certainly cannot expect our economy to grow any faster than those of our competitors.

The Leader of the Opposition would have been wise indeed to have read the transcript of the President's address on inflation that was given yesterday. The President of the United States pointed out he was losing some $45 billion a year on oil imports. That means $45 billion in purchasing power is leaving the United States.

Our figure, now that we have become a net importer of oil, is about $2 billion a year. That money goes basically to the Middle East. Even more important, it is going into the hands of people who have no background in spending. By and large, there is a great gap between that money going out and being recycled.

The kind of money you could look forward to in past years to taking and recycling through our economy is no longer available to us in those amounts. This massive transfer of wealth is unparalleled in modern history. It has gone from the North American continent, the Common Market nations and Japan, what we call the western industrialized nations, to the Middle East, an area of tremendous political instability. That does not make anybody sleep well at night. It is an important factor we have to remember.

Who can remember the time in 1972-74 when there was tremendous world demand for North American food supplies, and when the growers of Australia, New Zealand and Argentina were virtually wiped out? In 1974 nobody protested the rise in food prices. We were all worried where the next supply would come from. Who can forget the droughts suffered in the western part of the United States and the western part of Canada?

Let me take it a step further. One of the most unique things that happened in the economic front in those days was the fact that for the first time the economies of all of the western world came together in synchronization. Normally the situation was that there were some strong economies going up and some going down. Now we are all in synchronization. In 1972 to 1975, we went up together, a single boom. We have gone down together since. We are all in recession together, and we are all fighting to get out. The amount of international cooperation which is required at the present time is not forthcoming.

I want to refer hon. members to an interesting article in the March 18, 1978, edition of the Toronto Star by Anthony Westell. He refers to an interesting speech made by a Labour member of parliament in Great Britain. He indicates that one of the problems facing the western economies is the question of moving the surpluses and deficits around. He makes the point that countries like Germany and Japan are desperate to create substantial surpluses in their trading accounts in order to have the funds necessary to buy the oil which they require to keep their economies going. What they are doing is deliberately, from self interest, and who can blame them, moving in this way. What it means to us and to North America is that this mad scramble for surpluses is forcing recession in a number of countries, particularly the United States which has the most grievous outflow of all. Let me quote from his column:

> In short, in the scramble to earn enough in trade to pay for oil, developed countries are forcing each other into recession. They ought to realize what is happening and stop before it is too late.

He then quotes Mr. Lever:

> 'The surplus countries must not seek to impose, and the deficit countries must not accept, mutually injurious deflation with currency wars and lengthening dole queues.'

That is the fact of the matter. It is an analysis that makes some sense and indicates some of the substantial nature of the problems we face.

When I take you back into this little history lesson, I then come to the formation and effective action of the OPEC oil cartel. The increases in North America, the price we had to pay for imported oil on which we were all dependent, were massive. If western society has an Achilles heel anywhere, it is the way we use energy. Energy is North American society's Achilles heel.

Since World War II, our whole economy has been based in terms of cheap and abundant energy. Now we find that oil is no longer cheap, nor is it abundant. Two of the major terms on which we have based our economy have been demolished in one blow.

Perhaps it should be pointed out that the Arabs and the OPEC nations did us a favour. To some extent Canada and North American society at that time were living in a fool's paradise, thinking this could go on forever. Now we know it is not possible, that changes have to be made.

North American society, and Canada in particular, will have to go through a massive change. No longer can we base our economy on cheap and abundant oil. We have to re-examine the roots of this social and industrial policy, based on these two fundamental concepts. This is serious business indeed.

I would have thought the Leader of the Opposition would have dug a little deeper into what is going on and explained his view on these matters to the House. He cannot cavalierly dismiss them as being outside his purview or outside his concern.

The Leader of the Opposition had an opportunity to develop some interesting points and engage in a debate of some substance. He did not. He deliberately chose not to do that. I can certainly understand why. It would have forced him to change his views on a number of the points that he made.

I read with a great deal of interest the speech made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), who always makes an interesting speech in the House of Commons. At this point I should indicate that I am one of those who are sorry to see the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) make the decision to retire. I can certainly understand the pressures he went through, and the reasons. He is another gentleman who has always had something interesting and of substance to say. I must say that in economic matters it is difficult to get substance in this House.

● (1722)

Let me deal with the point which was made very well indeed by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge, namely, that the minister's forecasts were all wrong. I agree. I think there is no one who would agree more with that proposition than the Minister of Finance himself. If you take a look at the forecasting institutions in Canada you will find that in the sixties, by and large, their figures were accurate and could be relied upon. But if you look at the seventies, you will find that nobody's forecasting figures are worth the paper they are printed on.

Mr. Orlikow: But nobody is as wrong as the minister.

Mr. Reid: But the point I am trying to make is that the traditions and experience built up in the sixties which allowed the government, by and large, to run the economy reasonably well and to provide a remarkable number of jobs for the tremendous number of people entering the labour force, have all been wiped out by the changes which took place and which I have described, starting on August 15, 1971.

The old techniques no longer work. And if anyone doubts this let them take any of the major economic houses, and they will find that, by and large, the accuracy rate has dropped off substantially. What this means is policy makers are increasingly in the dark as to what is going to happen.

A perfect example is what happened to the mini-budget of last fall. Certain things were expected to take place as a result of the tax cut. It was expected that additional money would go into the consumer spending side of things. What do we find? According to the figures which are coming out, we find that very little of that money went into the consumer spending side. Where did it go? I think it went into savings. I think the bulk of it went into savings. So it strikes me that when you find personal tax cuts going into the savings side instead of into the spending side, although the concept is, in my judgment, virtuous for private persons but almost disastrous for society as we have constructed it, it makes no sense for the Minister of Finance to contemplate personal tax cuts at all. It makes no sense, either, in this economy for any party to advocate them.

It does make sense, though, to attack the retail sales taxes because this can exercise a direct and immediate effect not only in terms of consumption but in terms of the inflation rate. We do require these cuts in sales tax at the retail level in order to cut down the inflation rate caused by the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. One will balance the other.

I think the budget met a number of disparate points remarkably well and that both the minister and the provincial premiers deserve a great deal of credit for the action they took.

I want to deal with one last point. The last point I want to deal with is the question of where do we go, how do we go, from here.

An hon. Member: Go Conservative!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Reid: It seems to me we have to look at a number of things which are rather foreign to the way in which Canadian governments, and I include the provinces, have approached the business of stimulating the economy. I have given the example of personal income tax cuts and its relative uselessness in current circumstances.

Take another favourite fiscal tool which was used with great success during the sixties. I refer to the corporation tax cuts. They do not seem to be effective any more, either. There are a variety of reasons for this, but I shall not enlarge upon them at this time. I am simply pointing out that two of the major engines of economic growth and stimulant in the sixties no longer apply as they did then.

I want to quote the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge who has given this matter some thought. He said on a television show:

> It is fairly obvious that some profound change is taking place in our society and governments are no longer able to cope with this kind of change . . . It's an old society that is dying and there's a whole set of rules that we have to apply now and I don't think anyone is quite sure. In my conversations in the States I was very impressed with some young, bright people who had been brought into the Carter administration for the purpose of rethinking the economics and the kinds of things the government can do, and while they haven't come up with any solutions, all of them are pretty gloomy about the prospects and the abilities of governments to manage the economy in the way that was once thought possible.

If the hon. member is correct, that is a gloomy prescription for us all.

An hon. Member: He is not correct.

Mr. Reid: My hon. friend from Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) says he is not correct. I hope my hon. friend is right. But the conclusion we have to draw from his comments, and from what I have said earlier, is that governments will find themselves called upon to experiment with many new techniques, because the old ones are inadequate. New economic conditions are different. The crucial test of a budget, it seems to me, is whether or not the minister has experimented with new techniques and used new techniques in a way likely to stimulate the economy to a meaningful extent. I believe the judgment of the Canadian people, of the provincial premiers, and of this House, will be that the Minister of Finance has done just those things.

I want to take a look at a last point, to run through some things I should like to see the government deal with, and I want to say that these apply not only to the federal government but to the provincial governments as well. Both levels of government suffer from the same symptoms.

First, all governments in Canada have limited fiscal flexibility. The western democracies, and particularly Canada, have all run substantial deficits over past years to meet the widening expectations of their people and, in Canada, to provide jobs for new entrants into the work force. As growth continues, this is not a serious matter. We could cope with it. But growth has slowed down and governments now find themselves in a fiscal bind. It seems clear we are not likely to experience the high growth of the sixties while we are in the process of transforming the economy. This is a consideration with which policy makers will have to deal. The tax policies we have developed at federal and provincial levels were useful during the sixties but are no longer so in the seventies. There has been a preoccupation with equity and redistribution in our tax system. Now I think we shall have to refocus, and look not only at those two principals—

Mr. Clarke: Order! Mr. Speaker, I have a recollection that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) began his speech well over 30 minutes ago and that, under the rules, there is a time limit of 30 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry. The hon. member is quite correct. I have to tell the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) that his time has expired by almost four minutes. I regret that this should have happened. I will now call the next speaker.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope hon. members opposite will forgive any sign of self-interest I might have shown in raising that point of order, but I thought the House had probably heard enough from the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid).

● (1732)

I think it would be a good idea to start off by mentioning a few of the good points about the budget, because there are a few good points. It is a good news-bad news budget. We have already stated that we agree with the changes made in the research and development field. Write-offs with respect to research and development expenditures will be helpful. It is strange that it has taken Liberal governments 13 years to come back to the idea that we should be encouraging research and development expenditures. It was a Liberal government in 1965 which reversed a policy instituted by the previous Conservative government which allowed the very same 150 per cent write-off for research and development expenditures.

I am sure that the changes in transportation policy will help the industry, and we welcome those changes.

In the energy field, fast write-offs and other special write-offs for machinery and equipment and an increase in the depreciation write-off allowance will also be helpful and do their little bit toward getting the economy going again.

Coming from British Columbia, I am disappointed to note that the only mention of the mining industry, which is very important to British Columbia, was a statement by the minister that the government would keep mining provisions under review. Reviews will not help us very much. We need action.

I am sure that many Canadians, particularly older Canadians, will be glad to see that the government has finally bowed to pressure from consumer groups, particularly the Consumers' Association of Canada, supported by members of parliament, particularly members on this side of the House. The government has finally agreed that the rather harsh provisions of the Income Tax Act as they relate to registered retirement plans should be relaxed and that it should not now be mandatory for a Canadian taxpayer to purchase his life annuities before his 71st birthday. The flexibility provided by these new provisions will be welcomed.

The proposed revisions allowing free transfers between spouses for capital gains purposes will be helpful, as will free transfers of incorporated farms to children. However, none of the residents of my riding of Vancouver Quadra are farmers, and many of them will wonder why the government considers that their incorporated family businesses—or unincorporated—are not afforded the same advantage afforded to the farming businesses of Canada's great prairies.

I said there were some good points and I think that pretty well covers them. I would like to dwell for a moment on the bad points of this budget. The effect of the sales tax measure, increased business and so forth which will be created and about which I will be saying more in a few minutes, will amount to a change of less than one-half of one per cent in the unemployment rate. It is clear that we need some program to increase productivity, and in the opinion of hon. members on this side of the House the proposed measures will not do very much. There is absolutely no sign that the government plans any measures to control its expenditures. Without that control the measures contained in the budget will perpetuate the deficits we have had, and debt and interest will mount year after year. It is clear that this budget contains inadequate stimulus for the economy.

When we consider both the good and the bad things in this budget, we might ask whether the government cares about whether its effects will be good or bad. It seems clear that the government does care to a certain extent because I have here a list of the bills introduced by the government since the beginning of this session. Up until the end of February, which covers about four and a half months of this session, 26 items of legislation were introduced. Over five months, that would be an average of five pieces of legislation per month. After February the government felt it might be going to the people and that it should show a little more concern, so in the month of March 11 pieces of legislation were introduced in the House. In April, up until yesterday, seven pieces of legislation were introduced.

Some might congratulate the government for introducing all that legislation and say that the government is demonstrating forward thinking, but if we look at the list of legislation, we find that the government's forward thinking extends only to the date of a proposed election. For example, what does the government intend to do with Bill C-28, the amendments to the Public Service Staff Relations Act? I think we can safely assume that it will not be debated on the floor of this House before the election and that during the election hon. ministers opposite will traipse around the country telling taxpayers of their intention to pass that legislation, telling them what a great team they are, asking why they should not be re-elected and telling them to forget about the bad things they have been doing for the last ten years.

Another bill which has "election" written all over it is the bill dealing with a public referendum on questions relating to the constitution, Bill C-40. I am sure government ministers will be telling voters what good fellows they are and how well they will do in the next little while. I must confess that hon. members on this side will be doing the same thing in support of our policies but, thankfully, we do not have the record of the government opposite to drag behind us. I can assure hon. members opposite that voters will not forget the last ten years. They have been fooled before by this government, but they will not be fooled again. There are a few items on the list of legislation I have in my hand which indicate what the government will be telling us in any coming election campaign.

As to whether or not the government cares, I would like to refer to the employment tax credit bill which was passed in this House with the co-operation of all opposition parties within one day, which is a very unusual happening. That day was January 26, nearly three months ago, and we are told that there is no sign of the effective date of that tax credit program. The forms are not ready. The government is in disarray, and nobody knows when the program will get started.

The Bank Act is another example of the procedures adopted by this government. The Bank Act expired in 1977. It was extended for, I think, nine months, and it has been extended for another year. Perhaps it will be extended even longer if the House is not in session during the month of March, 1979. What we need is some certainty so that businesses and individuals will know what the government expects of them and they can in an orderly fashion shape their lives and make their own plans. However, the government has presented no measures to stimulate the economy, to make people confident in the government, to stop them from taking their capital and fleeing to other countries to invest, or taking their expertise to other countries. How foolish is it, for example, to have Canadian expertise in building housing for residents of the U.S.A.? Why does the government think that Canadians are saving at a greater rate than ever before? Of course, it is because they do not have confidence that the government will protect the value of the dollar or the value of any investments they might make.

● (1742)

I want to say something about the past policies of the government, since the government likes to defend them so well, to see how they have affected our country recently. Yesterday we saw the cost of living figures rise again. We found that the increase in the Consumer Price Index based on year over year was 8.8 per cent, and we are now in a position where something that cost $100 in 1971 now costs $170.08. The most notorious rise in prices is to be found in food. The index on fruits and vegetables stands at 226.9, and on housing the index for fuel and utilities stands at 221.5—hardly figures which indicate that any of the government's policies have worked. They say: "We have the policies, but you fellows do not have them". We have the proposals and we are expecting very soon to be able to make them into policies. Clearly the policies that have been devised by those fellows opposite have not worked, and there is no way one can say that the figures I have quoted are the result of any kind of good policies.

Yesterday we had cost of living figures. On Tuesday of this week we had the latest figures on unemployment. Total unemployment in Canada stands at 1,045,000, which means a rate of unemployment of 8.6 per cent. Youth unemployment stands at 16.1 per cent. Can the government tell us what great policies they have and how their economic policy has created new jobs in Canada? They say they have created 330,000 new jobs. I say, how nice! It would be wonderful were it not for the fact that there was an increase in the labour force of 432,000. What does that mean? It means that job creation has lagged behind the labour force growth by 102,000 people. Naturally the number of unemployed and the rate are on the increase.

I should point out at the same time that because of the faulty economic policies of the government, not only have the new jobs not kept pace with the new members of the labour force but employment in manufacturing has fallen by some 12,000 through lack of confidence and lack of use of the capacity of industry, thus further aggravating the problem.

What we need is some confidence in the government, as I said earlier. How are we going to get it? Let us have a government that is willing to bite the bullet, to use the old expression. Let us have a government that is ready to put the lid on expenses. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras), in introducing his estimates this year, took great pride in announcing that the government was cutting down on the rate of increase of government expenditures. You have to stop to think about that statement for a minute because it sounds good, but what he was saying is that the government is not spending as much this year as it spent last year or the year before. All that is coming down is the rate of increase. That might be a step in the right direction if it were not for the fact that the annual growth in the GNP will not be as large as the increase in the rate of growth in government expenditures.

Every time we try to suggest some place where the government could cut down on its expenditures, the government gives us a reason why that cannot be done. They have the facilities over there to determine what the priorities should be, and they are the ones who must make the decision about where they are going to trim. It is impossible to continue spending at an ever increasing rate of deficit. The country will not stand it, the people will not stand it and the economy will not stand it.

The result of the continual policies of overspending and deficit financing by this government over the past ten years can surely be seen in the present low value of our dollar. They call it the floating dollar, and they ask what is wrong with a floating dollar, but a sinking dollar is pretty awful. Today our dollar compared with the U.S. dollar is at a lower point than it has ever been in my lifetime. Not for 45 years has the dollar been as low as it is today. There is no way in which the government can explain away the present level of the dollar compared with the U.S. dollar. The present situation does not even reveal the total problem, because we know that the international economic community does not favour the U.S. dollar very much either and that in relation to the currencies in other industrial countries, such as Germany, Switzerland and Japan, both the Canadian and U.S. dollars are in very bad shape. It is the government that is to blame, and I do not know how they will try to explain that away if we go into an election campaign soon.

The national policies which the government is giving us and which do not work have their effect in British Columbia as well. Every time I go to my riding in Vancouver overlooking English Bay I see 15 ships. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) said today there were 24 ships in the harbour. In any event the figure does vary slightly, but I have never seen less than 15 ships at anchor in English Bay waiting to pick up cargoes which this government cannot get to port. Why can they not move the grain? We do not know. A few years ago they told farmers not to grow more grain because there was too much. Then they turned around and said they needed all the grain that the farmers can grow. Now that the farmers are growing lots of grain, where is it? The minister responsible for moving it to port is saying that it is being moved at the right levels.

Mr. Lang: No, at record levels.

Mr. Clarke: I wonder what the growers of that wheat are saying. What about the ships lying at anchor? I am afraid it is my friends on the farms in the prairies and my friends back home in Vancouver Quadra who are paying for the storage of grain and for those ships at anchor in the harbours. What we need is someone who will take the grain from the farmers and arrange to move it in orderly fashion down to where the ships are. The minister is saying they are doing it in orderly fashion, but I ask: who arranged the ships? I ask the minister to answer this question.

Mr. Lang: I am delighted that the hon. member allows me to answer the question because he missed my interjection. I want to ask him whether he recognizes that while there are some ships waiting in Vancouver because of difficulties in getting grain there as well as weather conditions, grain is being moved at record levels and we are almost certain to get a record level of exports in this country. The difficulties are there because of the fact that, in trying to achieve those record levels, we are pushing the system to the full. The hon. member might reflect back—and I wonder if he knows about it—to February of 1961 when his party was in power and when ships were waiting 28 days. At that time the exports were about half those we are achieving this year.

Mr. Clarke: I am glad to be able to answer the minister's question because I need the practice. I realize that what he says is correct, but obviously the minister does not understand my complaint. I am glad that the farmers are producing grain at record levels and I am glad Canada is selling grain at record levels. All I ask is why can the government not get the same rate of ship loading as the rate of grain arrival? What is the point of having ships lying at anchor if the grain is not there, although I admit that it adds to the seascape.

The government is always asking us what we would do. What do we need in this country? We need an economic stimulus, and we have been saying that for a long, long time. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) told the government in a very interesting speech yesterday of about one hour's duration, and earlier in another speech of about three and a half hours' duration, quite a few things they should be doing and things we would be doing. The essential thing which the hon. member for York-Simcoe has urged upon the government is meaningful permanent tax cuts. I do not know how it can be said any more clearly than that. There is a minor temporary tax cut in the budget. It is going to be shared with the provinces. In his statement the minister said we needed action on this now. He said:

● (1752)

> Any further stimulus should obviously be fast-acting. It should encourage consumer spending, not more spending by government.

I agree with that, but I cannot see how spending will be increased by a reduction in the sales tax of 2 per cent, except for government spending as it will be contributing money to offset the reduction of revenue at the provincial level. People who are spending in Canada will spend their money regardless whether there is a 5 per cent sales tax or a 7 per cent sales tax; that is not where the judgment is made as to whether a person is going to buy.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition made reference to the saving on a purchase of a Cadillac. That is a dramatic example. Not many Cadillacs are sold. Certainly on a large purchase like that, there will be a large saving. We are talking about everyday spenders, people who are spending money on essentials. We are not referring to the purchase of food, because that is tax free. We are referring to the other things they are required to buy in their ordinary lives. This kind of stimulation of the economy will not have a permanent effect.

It is asked, what can be done to balance the budget? When a $2 billion tax cut has been given away, it is necessary to increase the revenues on the other side and/or reduce expenditures. There are only two sides to a balance sheet, simple debits and credits. Because I am an accountant, perhaps I understand it better than others. If credits are to be reduced by giving tax cuts, then we must increase our revenues. We could put a goodly number of those 1,045,000 unemployed people to work. We know there is an 18 per cent under productivity factor in our economy and our productive facilities. If those people are put to work, instead of contributing to the $2 billion deficit in the unemployment insurance account, they will become taxpayers and will contribute to the general revenue of the country. That money does not just go out once and end up there. There is a multiplier in the economy of Canada. When $2 billion is sent out into the economy, it is spent time and time again. That creates more jobs because there are more demands, needs and so on. I am not suggesting any funny money theory when I express that proposal, but it should be obvious to anyone who has studied the economy that it works in that manner. A step in the right direction would be to stop overspending in the unemployment insurance account by putting people back to work.

Many years ago in the United States when there was a tremendous tax cut of $11 billion, at the end of the fiscal year when the revenues were totalled up it was found that revenues were exactly the same because additional taxes paid by the citizens of that country had filled the gap of the $11 billion tax cut.

The Leader of the Opposition referred to some of the policies of our party. I do not think I need to repeat them. We heard the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) say that he did not understand or agree with what the hon. Leader of the Opposition said. That hon. member seemed to think the rules had changed and therefore it is all right for the government to overspend, have huge deficits and so on. Also he indicated that the government was not at fault, that circumstances had changed. We cannot agree with that and Canadians will not agree with that. They want measures to get Canada working again.

We require a little honesty from the government. I should like to remind hon. members opposite about some of their campaign promises made four years ago. How can people have any confidence in a government like that? A promise was made to Toronto regarding a $30 million waterfront park. Perhaps that won a lot of votes, even a few seats in that area. I wonder if the people of Toronto will think of the park which they did not receive when the next election rolls around. What about the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in 1974 during the same election campaign, when he campaigned against controls and 15 months later instituted a lengthy program of controls, which hopefully we will start to get out of tomorrow? Another 1974 campaign promise was that there would be aid to cities for rapid transit. I have been to at least half a dozen cities as a member of a special committee sent out by my party since the 1974 election. We find all across the country that every promise to cities of aid for rapid transit has been broken. How can we have confidence if the government behaves this way, overspends, breaks promises and does not do what it indicated it would do?

The leader of my party said it well today. Perhaps he said it somewhat better once or twice in other forums. In the remaining minute or two, I should like to refer to the five points he mentioned. Stop hiring in the federal public service. It is not that we are going to kick anyone out, nor that we think the public service is not doing a good job, but we think the public service has too many employees. They are tripping over themselves. For three years we would impose a freeze on hiring by the public service, and by normal attrition that will save 60,000 jobs at the end of that period.

Also my leader said we should turn back to the private sector Crown corporations like Petro-Can, Eldorado Nuclear Ltd. and Northern Transportation Ltd. There is an enormous amount of money involved in these Crown corporations, most of which do badly. Many of them no longer need the comfort of being owned by the government. They could be and should be turned back to the private sector.

Cutting back on federal regulations is another important point, especially in the manufacturing and mining industries. In particular, today small business is facing difficulties. With regard to cutting down on unnecessary government advertising and consulting, it is well known that the public service uses consultants or contract workers to circumvent the man-year limitations which are put on it. The most important point is the strengthening of parliament's power to control spending by introducing sunset laws and restoring parliamentary control of estimates.

The estimates will be ordered out in a few days. The possible consideration which can be given to the estimates in committee is appalling. The second report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts was tabled in the House this week. It shows many of the problems regarding the estimates, particularly those of Crown corporations.

I have referred to the unemployment numbers in general. I have some notes regarding the effect on British Columbia, but I see my time has expired.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

• (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on entering the debate this evening I want to concentrate on a number of what I think are very important aspects of Canadian life, the budget and the economy. In particular, I want to show how some of the economic measures in the budget reinforce Canadian energy policy, and how Canadian energy policy reinforces Canadian economic security.

Future economic security is going to depend upon the energy decisions we take now, and how we take them. It is going to depend upon the ability of the federal government to work with the provinces and to take decisions with those provinces. I hope to show in the course of my remarks the kind of progress we have made in this country toward that objective of taking big decisions now, and taking them in co-operation and conjunction with the provinces.

I should like to go back a little bit, about four years ago to January, 1974, when the OPEC nations raised the price of oil. Oil represents the single most important energy source in this world, and the OPEC nations raised the price of oil by four times. The economies of the western world have never been the same since.

Almost immediately the g.n.p. growth and the economies of the western world slowed down, prices rose, inflation became endemic, unemployment increased. The Canadian economy was no different from any other. It too was affected, notwithstanding the fact that our economy depends more than most other nations on export sales. For close to one half of all the goods produced in Canada are exported. To put it another way, close to one half of the goods we produce depends upon the health of economies outside Canada to purchase Canadian production.

• (2012)

The Canadian economy has suffered notwithstanding that fact, but it suffered less, not more, than the economies of other countries. I believe our experience with the performance of the Canadian economy, where it has in effect, in terms of g.n.p. growth, outperformed by a factor of two the OECD countries since 1973, is very significant. Equally, I believe the fact that since that massive price increase we have had less inflation than the OECD rate of inflation is also a considerable achievement as far as Canada is concerned.

To listen to members of the opposition and their leader one would think they had not read the figures. Has anyone in this House heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) recognize the importance of that Canadian achievement against that kind of international background? He has been silent on that.

The other important aspect of that OPEC oil price increase is the fact that it involved a massive transfer of resources from the consuming nations to the producing nations—from the western world to the OPEC nations. Again, Canada was no exception. But has the Leader of the Opposition addressed himself to this central fact of international life? Has he addressed himself to this central fact of the international economy? No, he has avoided it, as he has avoided virtually all the central facts with respect to the international situation. I listened very carefully and he did not once recognize the interdependence of the international trading system. He has not recognized that the health of the Canadian mining industry depends on the health of the consuming economies of the countries that buy Canadian mining products. The Leader of the Opposition has a very large blind spot. Other people, less kindly disposed, would ask why the Leader of the Opposition sells Canada short.

Mr. Stanfield: Because of the government.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, Canada's oil import bill was just a fraction over $1 billion in 1973. Last year it was about $3.5 billion. Had it not been for the extension of the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, our oil import bill would be running at about $5 billion per year.

Since 1974 the United States has had the same problem—indeed, a gigantic hemorrhage might be the way to describe it. Before the OPEC increase the oil import bill in the United States was around $7.5 billion per year. Last year it was well over $40 billion. The jump in the value of oil imports for Canada has hurt the Canadian balance of payments, but for the United States it has been a disaster. That $41 billion-plus for oil imports by the United States has affected the value of United States currency in world markets. The United States secretary of the treasury cites this as a major reason for the fall of the U.S. dollar. Unfortunately, it has also contributed to the decline of the Canadian dollar. International experts would ask, when the Canadian economy is so dependent on the United States, why would we not expect an adverse effect on the value of the Canadian dollar?

There was another important message that the OPEC nations conveyed. The first message was that the era of cheap energy was over. The second message was more ominous. They said, "Don't count on us for your future energy supplies." Some of the OPEC nations tightened the tourniquet on the life blood of the western world. I refer to the Arab OPEC nations which cut off a number of their customers, including the United States. That action underscored the position of the OPEC nations and the vulnerability of the economies of the western world. That message, "Don't count on us for your future energy supplies," has been restated many times.

It is against that background that Canadian energy policy has been developed. Two years ago we set forth as the objective of Canadian energy policy to reduce our dependence on foreign oil imports. We put a strategy in place to bring that objective about. The strategy had three basic elements. First came effective conservation measures. There were two others, both of which are part of the replacement. The first is to find substitute kinds of energy indigenous to Canada to replace foreign imports. I am referring, of course, to natural gas, coal, nuclear, hydro, tidal power and other renewable forms. The third main element was to develop our own indigenous supplies of oil, particularly the non-conventional sources—the tar sands and the heavy oils of western Canada.

I believe that we have made a good deal of progress in implementing this strategy. Let us consider conservation. Last year, for example, our record was roughly a 3.3 per cent annual rate of growth, which was perhaps close to one-half of what it had been prior to the energy crisis caused by the OPEC nations in 1973-74 and on the target which we set of less 3.5 per cent annual rate of growth, a target which we hope to be able to reduce to 2 per cent on an average in the 1980's and hopefully, eventually, to a zero rate of growth per capita.

The International Energy Agency has commented on the Canadian conservation program and described it as one of the best conceived and most comprehensive energy conservation programs in the world. They have, however, criticized one aspect of our policy on conservation because our oil prices have not risen to the international price. They have argued that if we had moved our prices up faster we could have reinforced Canadian conservation objectives. We recognize the merits of that argument. Clearly a faster and higher price would have had a beneficial effect on conservation, but in Canada we tried to balance the conservation objective with another, which is to maintain economic activity, to maintain the competitive advantage of Canadian companies and to sustain the employment and job-creating atmosphere in this country.

I think the record will show that we have been successful in this. At the present time we have met our energy conservation target, but more than that we have more exploratory and development drilling in western Canada than ever. There is not one spare drilling rig available. At the same time, there are more people employed in Canada then there were a year ago—330,000 more.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gillespie: Did the Leader of the Opposition once mention that there are 330,000 more Canadians at work in this country? Did he once suggest that this country was moving ahead of other nations? Did he once refer to the dynamism which would provide 330,000 jobs in one year? I listened very carefully, Mr. Speaker, and he implied the reverse—that there were fewer people at work in this country than a year ago.

I believe we have made a lot of progress on the second thrust of our energy strategy, which would use every indigenous source of energy to replace foreign oil imports. I believe we have been able to do it because we have been able to work out with the provinces a co-operative approach to the development of our massive energy resources. Was there one moment when the Leader of the Opposition suggested that the Canadian government had been successful in working out massive projects? He once talked about federal-provincial co-operation, but he does not now.

• (2022)

One is left with the impression that he does not want to draw attention to the successes of the federal government in working out co-operatively massive projects and an economic plan for this country. He does not want to draw attention to the success of the first ministers' conference. He does not want to draw attention to the fact that the major budget provision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) with respect to the sales tax arrangement was worked out co-operatively with the provinces. He does not want to draw attention to the fact that many of the major energy projects, which I am going to mention, have been worked out co-operatively with the provincial governments.

He does not want to talk about the maritime energy corporation, a corporation which, as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) knows, offers the people of the maritimes an opportunity they have never had before, an opportunity to work together with the federal government to bring on massive new projects which by themselves they could not afford. For example, an integrated electrical grid for the maritimes which people have talked about for years can now be a reality. We have agreement on a maritime energy corporation. We have an agreement with respect to the terms of reference, the operating and planning of an integrated maritime electrical system, the management, financing and construction of new generation and transmission facilities, the buying of power and the selling of surplus power. I believe that this particular corporation offers the people of the maritimes an opportunity to be sure of getting the power they need at the lowest possible cost.

The decision of the maritime premiers and the federal government to move forward with phase II of the Bay of Fundy tidal power project is yet another example of the kind of federal-provincial co-operation that I am talking about, but not what the Leader of the Opposition is talking about. He is not talking about these things to the Canadian people because he recognizes them as strengths, as successes of the federal Liberal government.

He has not referred to the conservation and the renewable energy projects we have worked out with the province of Prince Edward Island. He has not talked about the exciting new Cape Breton Island coal mine development project for the Donkin mine. He has not talked about the agreement with the province of Newfoundland for the creation of the lower Churchill Falls development corporation to develop the massive potential of the lower Churchill Falls, the 2,000 megawatts of power which is spilling out over the rocks and into the sea. He has not talked about that, Mr. Speaker, because he does not want to draw attention to yet another successful enterprise of the federal government with the provinces.

There are a number of other major projects which will assist Canadians to become less dependent on foreign oil. I am referring to the Canada/U.S. development of the emergency oil storage in Wabana, Newfoundland and in Canso, Nova Scotia, presently before our two governments. As well I am referring to the Petro-Canada activity off the Nova Scotian shelf and off the shores of Labrador. He has not talked about those Petro-Canada activities and he has not talked about the fact that, if it was not for the leadership of Petro-Canada, one would not see the kind of study that is taking place right now in Quebec and the maritimes with respect to moving western gas to the maritimes.

Hon. members have not heard from the Leader of the Opposition about the liquefied natural gas projects which have been developing in the minds of those in charge of Trans-Canada Pipelines and Petro-Canada, projects which could move high Arctic natural gas to the east coast, perhaps through the terminal at Saint John, New Brunswick at Lorneterm, or perhaps through another terminal at Canso.

Hon. members have not heard about these projects because the Leader of the Opposition wants to abolish Petro-Canada. That is what he has told the Canadian people.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Tell us about natural gas.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think it is for the Leader of the Opposition to judge whether that is good politics in Bow River. I think the Canadian people will want to judge it bad policy for Canada.

An hon. Member: Tell us about AECL.

Mr. Gillespie: The people of Atlantic Canada will be asking: "And what about us? Who is going to do the drilling off our shores?" If it was not for Petro-Canada there would not have been any oil drilling last year off the Nova Scotia shelf.

An hon. Member: The government relies on Alberta.

Mr. Gillespie: The Leader of the Opposition quite clearly wants to turn back the oil future of Canada to the international oil companies. That to me sounds like a sell-out, where he would put Canadian public interests behind the interests of the international companies and be prepared to see energy priorities for Canada settled in the board rooms of Houston, Rotterdam or London.

I listened very carefully to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) because he also expressed one of the favourite positions of the Leader of the Opposition. He has promised the Canadian people that if he is returned to form a government his government would sell Eldorado Nuclear Limited. Anybody who knows about Eldorado Nuclear Limited knows that it is the only company in this country which can produce the fuel for the world's most successful nuclear reactor, the Candu reactor.

Canadians would be well advised to ask the Leader of the Opposition why he would auction off a national asset, an asset which is part and parcel of the world's most successful system. Why would he turn that over to private entrepreneurs for private profit? Why would he turn it over to somebody else to peddle? Why would he put the national interests behind the convenience, as he perceives it, of selling a Crown corporation? Mr. Speaker, to me it is a sell-out to auction off an integral part of the Canadian Candu nuclear system. Perhaps it more than anything else reflects the knee-jerk reactions of an unthinking and very inexperienced leader.

An hon. Member: Tell us about AECL.

Mr. Gillespie: The hon. member has asked about AECL. If it had not been for federal initiatives, there would not be the massive nuclear program going on in Ontario, the significant program going on in Quebec and in New Brunswick, and the heavy water program in Nova Scotia, in Quebec and Ontario.

Nuclear energy has to be one of the major options for Canada in reducing our dependence on foreign oil. That is not something which the Conservative party have yet addressed themselves to.

I could go on about exploration and drilling in the high Arctic, the importance of the polar gas operation and Petro-Canada's position in that. The hon. member perhaps does not realize that one-half of all the wells drilled offshore last year in the frontier areas were drilled by Petro-Canada. But the Conservative party would sell Petro-Canada. They would abolish it. They do not give a damn for Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: I would like to deal with the third thrust of our energy strategy, the development of our own indigenous resources. Hon. members will be aware that the government has presented to parliament Bill C-19, which is presently before the House and awaiting third and final reading. Bill C-19 would provide authority for the government to offer international prices for the production of tar sands projects and heavy oil projects. That represents a truly massive opportunity for Canadians. The budget has introduced a number of very important measures aimed at helping to provide the fiscal climate or regime whereby these massive projects will be undertaken. This fiscal regime will have to be worked out and negotiated with the provinces concerned.

● (2032)

In addition to the incentives in the budget I have referred to, the depletion incentives, the fact we will move to world prices for these new products and the other new incentives which the Minister of Finance referred to, there are a number of important measures which I should announce this evening. One has to do with the federal government's decision to meet the costs of moving domestic crude oil through the Interprovincial pipeline between Toronto and Montreal.

Secondly, to make full use of this pipeline, to which I referred earlier, I believe we should increase the throughput of that pipeline from 250,000 barrels a day to 350,000 barrels a day. Such an increase of roughly 100,000 barrels daily would be the equivalent in balance of payments terms of a saving of $500 million a year. That is a truly significant saving in terms of balance of payments. To this end, I have initiated discussions with the Alberta government and the Interprovincial pipeline.

Hon. members will agree that the government has taken several important and very necessary steps to encourage expansion of non-conventional oil production. However, the federal government cannot do everything. I think this is recognized by the producing provinces. Alberta has already acted to provide heavy oil producers with alternative royalty incentives. It is my hope that Alberta and Saskatchewan will announce in the very near future measures they are prepared to take so that the total fiscal regime, including income tax and royalties, will lead without doubt to commercial development of these massive oil reserves in western Canada.

I believe the governments of Saskatchewan and Alberta are sympathetic to our objectives. In general, they appear willing to adjust their own royalty regime to provide the further incentives which are absolutely necessary if these projects are to go forward. Shell Oil has already announced its interest in a consortium. Imperial Oil has announced their interest. There have been discussions with respect to the Pacific petroleum group and another group headed up by Husky. We have also been—

Mr. Paproski: This is not new. It has been going on for years.

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but we are now waiting to hear from the provincial governments as to what royalty changes they are prepared to make. I am confident that in the spirit we have been able to work out these other arrangements we will also be able to work out the new fiscal regime which will bring on the kind of production we are looking for. I hope we will be successful in being able to produce close to one million barrels a day from the tar sands and heavy oils of western Canada by 1990.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You are whistling in the dark.

Mr. Gillespie: I am listening to the heckling of members opposite. That is not the kind of attitude that will build this country. However, that is the kind of complacency we have had from there. When will the Conservatives ever recognize a Canadian achievement? They do not talk about Canadian achievement. They just talk about gloom and doom. They are more interested in selling Canada short than in building Canada.

The large number of projects I have identified this evening will go a long way toward ensuring economic security of Canada in the years to come. During the construction and operating period, they will provide a significant number of jobs, hundreds of thousands of man-years of employment for Canadians, and the purchase of all kinds of Canadian goods and services.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the one million jobs?

Mr. Gillespie: Members opposite do not like this achievement either. They do not like our moving forward. They would prefer that the Canadian people not know about it. I guess if we were in their position, we would be a little envious too. They ought to get out and tell Canadians what our opportunities are and what can be done to help Canada go forward.

I believe in a very real way these projects can become a launching pad for a new decade of development in Canada. It will take determination and willingness to work with the provinces to work this out.

Mr. Crosbie: It will take a change of government.

Mr. Gillespie: These projects in Canada are not going to be developed by negative attitudes, by people who only look at the problems, who do not build a sense of achievement in Canadians, people who would try to deflect Canadian opinion away from the kind of opportunities which are in Canada.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. minister would entertain a question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Will the minister accept a question?

Mr. Gillespie: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, my question deals with one of the most innovative and exciting proposals in the energy field in Canada. I refer to the potential of methanol being blended with gasoline from our renewable resources, wood fibres. Since the minister did not include this in his speech, can he now indicate whether there is a time frame for a methanol test program in Canada for cars to test the 85 per cent gasoline, 15 per cent alcohol blend. Are there any announcements forthcoming? Studies undertaken by the federal government seem to indicate the feasibility of this form of fuel.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I did not have time to deal with this area in my remarks. I did refer to the importance we attach to renewable energy. This particular area of methanol research is one which several departments of the government are actively engaged in at the present time. Discussions have been carried on with several provinces. This again is a good example of a federal-provincial undertaking.

Reference has been made to Alberta. I believe there are two other provinces also actively involved. I am not in a position at the moment to announce when the participation of those other provinces can be made public. However, I can assure the hon. member that methanol is one of the major potential fuels that we regard as important to the Canadian future. Indeed, in talking about forests and forest wastes and the energy associated with forests and forest wastes, I expect that after hydro energy our forests represent the single most important renewable energy source for Canadians.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may ask a question only with the consent of the House because the minister's time has just expired. Is there consent to allow the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) to ask a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's claims of gloom and doom on this side and optimism on his side, I have two questions bound into one. I wonder if the minister can say when Canadians can expect the next agreement with regard to the Alberta oil sands to be reached. Can he give us a precise date as to when the next project will be going ahead? There have been negotiations between governments. Can the minister give us a definite date?

● (2042)

I would like to ask another question. On February 20 the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) said that if the House got on with the job and the bill on the northern pipeline reached committee stage, some advance contracts could be made with the steel making empire of this country in order for them to commence rolling plate and pipe. The minister said the government wanted to see immediate action to create jobs in this country. I wonder if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) can say whether any contracts have been awarded to the steel making industry in this country. If they have, have they been awarded on the strength of the pipeline company, or is the government proposing to guarantee the contracts to these steel makers or other suppliers in the interim while they build prior to the time when the pipeline is completely financed?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, the two questions of the hon. member underline one of the points I was making in my speech this evening—the importance of other governments in the decision making process when it comes to energy. The first question had to do with when the next agreement with respect to the tar sands will be reached. I would be much better able to answer the hon. member if he could tell me when the Alberta government will decide upon the royalty system it is going to introduce with respect to the tar sands.

Mr. Crosbie: You represent the national government. When are you going to decide about your tax system?

Mr. Gillespie: If the hon. member had read the budget speech he would not ask such an uninformed question. However, we have come to expect that from the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) asked a serious question about pipe contracts for the northern pipeline. Here again the Canadian government is waiting for another government to respond. I refer, of course, to the government of the United States.

Mr. Bawden: Blame it on somebody else.

Mr. Gillespie: Until the United States congress has dealt with the energy package of President Carter, contracts with respect to the purchase of natural gas and even the price of that natural gas cannot be determined by shippers in the United States. I think the hon. member knows that. He should know that contracts for the movement of gas will depend upon United States action.

He should also know that no orders for pipe will be placed with Canadian manufacturers of pipe until such time as the ability to finance the project is assured. If we follow that train of interconnected events to its source, we will see that the Canadian government and the Canadian economy are awaiting a decision by the United States congress and the United States administration.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think I should see the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) because the minister's time has expired. In addition, there is a vote tonight, so I think we should proceed to the hon. member for Joliette.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to miss the opportunity to make a few remarks on this mini-budget, because, in my opinion, that is exactly what it is. It would seem that the first part was presented before Christmas and, under pressure, the minister decided to add to it. But I do not think that this budget will impress economists, experts and Canadians.

Unfortunately I had to be absent from the House a few days as I was called to an important meeting in my riding last night. I would have wanted to make these remarks sooner, but as this was my nomination meeting, Mr. Speaker, I had to be there and prepare myself for a good fight with my opponent who will be a candidate in the coming election. I heard the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) recall the efforts made by his government and try to justify the proposals put forth by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) as well as the situation which exists today.

He even blamed our leader (Mr. Clark) for not having referred to certain government achievements. In view of the unsatisfactory performance and the shortcomings of this government in virtually all areas, our leader certainly did not have much time left after having noted the many failures of the government in meeting nearly all its objectives. Everyone will recognize that it is our duty to tell the Canadians about the sad performance of the government in its monumental failure to restore our economy. I do not think we can be prevented from doing so, not only in the House, but in all public forums. I think that it is our duty to tell the Canadians how miserably this government has failed to meet its objectives in the last decade especially in the last four years.

I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, how the minister can accuse us of seeing only doom and gloom in view of the present situation concerning unemployment, inflation, and so on. Members on the other side may well ask why we are so pessimistic about the future, and why we seem somewhat negative about the proposals made by the government.

I was listening to a member from Quebec City. He too is worried, but he would like Canadians to accept the unfortunate administration that we have had in the last ten years. But we will have the opportunity to describe our present situation to the people of Quebec City and of other areas of Quebec as well as of the rest of Canada. Monday night, the Minister of Finance seemed quite happy when he delivered his budget speech. In principle, he announced his budget. Perhaps we could ask this question: Why did he wait so long? As I recall, we have been requesting for many months a budget which could correct in part, or at least satisfactorily, the present situation.

• (2052)

The highlights of this budget show that unemployment and inflation have reached their highest level, while the dollar is at its lowest level. This bears out a forecast made a long time ago and according to which the deficit would reach $11 billion. This is not what we were told six or seven months ago. They were then trying to convince us that the deficit would not be over $6, $7, or $8 billion. About four months ago, one of my colleagues, our financial critic, predicted a deficit of over $10 billion.

Still our friends opposite accuse us of being prophets of doom, and of being responsible for the lack of confidence shown by Canadian and foreign investors. But we have been saying the truth for the last six months. We were also saying the truth when we reminded the government on many occasions or tried to warn it that Canada was heading toward a lengthy and costly depression.

Those are the highlights of the budget of the Minister of Finance: unemployment has reached a record high, as did inflation, and our dollar is at its lowest. The Minister of Finance argues that our Canadian dollar is still floating, but we believe it is sinking. We are certainly considered as prophets of gloom. But, Mr. Speaker, this is the present situation and we cannot hide it.

I also believe that this $11 billion deficit will certainly not encourage businessmen and that it will rather make them worry about the present situation. The predecessors of the Minister of Finance have already made economic projections. The present Minister of Finance also made his projections. It did not change the situation. And this budget confirms what we have been expecting for several months. But in spite of this, earlier the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tried to reassure Canadians by telling them that the situation is not too bad.

However, we are blamed for not being willing to endorse those projections without too much discussion. But, Mr. Speaker, how could we trust a government that is responsible for the unemployment of 1,500,000 workers. The Prime Minister told us last week that he had created thousands of jobs. But how would you explain that with such positive results we have four times more unemployed than when the Prime Minister came to power? How would you explain that this government has not been able to plan for new jobs to accommodate new markets and the people who arrive on the labour market every day? The Minister of Finance refused to make sufficient credit available for job creation for students. He knows that is true either in his riding or in mine.

The hon. member for Montmorency is also aware of the difficulties students will experience this summer. If I refer to what has apparently been the experience of the Prime Minister when he was a university student, there is no doubt that he can hardly understand the financial difficulties encountered by our students because he has never had to wonder where the money would come from. It is therefore difficult for him to think that our students will go through financial difficulties. We are perfectly aware that this government is asking us to put our trust in it and will soon ask the Canadian people to trust it, yet the government is indeed responsible for refusing to grant enough funds to create jobs for students. I can see members opposite trying to argue but in each of their ridings the students are in the same predicament as in mine; they are worried because they will not find summer jobs. Mr. Speaker, this same government is asking us to trust it while it is responsible for the 5,000 to 6,000 dairy producers who went out of business during the last two years.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. La Salle: I am being told that it is not true. But who can pretend that this is not true, Mr. Speaker? Dishonesty becomes obvious. It is clear that the government's poor administration and poor management of the dairy industry has thrown thousands of producers out of business. That same government is asking us to trust it when it refuses to compensate the cost of maintaining provincial police forces in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario, as it has been requested recently. There are no funds, no provision for that in the budget.

We will be asked to trust this government while it is responsible for the deterioration of the textile and footwear industry. Thousands of jobs have been lost because of the passiveness of this government. My friends opposite know that, some members in front of me have experienced serious problems in their own riding because of that and we are going to hide those facts. We should not mention it. This government is responsible for the highest inflation rate we have ever experienced; it is responsible for the declining purchasing power of Canadians; it is responsible for failing to provide sufficient grants for research which might have prevented the closing of plants in our country; it is responsible for the deterioration of our dairy industry and now we are called prophets of gloom because we have reasons, I believe, to blame the government for its inertia and its lack of success in finding the necessary solutions, Mr. Speaker.

We have been making proposals for quite a while, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to point out an important aspect of the budget where my friends from Quebec have a major responsibility as regards the proposal which was made by the Minister of Finance and which is rejected by the Quebec government.

The Minister of Finance rejects the proposal made by the Quebec minister and at the same time opposes the will of Quebecers, and not only of the Quebec government, since in principle the opposition parties of the Union Nationale or the Quebec Liberal Party have agreed on the position and the request of the Quebec government, and that is important. I suggest that is the most significant factor. The National Assembly has unanimously requested the Minister of Finance to answer affirmatively to the proposal of the Quebec government which is asking for only one thing—

Mr. Duclos: And your leader, what does he think about it?

Mr. La Salle: They are not asking for one cent more from the federal government. They are simply asking that Quebec be allowed to use the same amount of money as befit the realities and the needs of the province and the Quebec government is prepared to suggest any province which would like to get the same advantages. Obviously Quebec would not object to any other province getting the same advantages.

Something I find repulsive, something I feel is a scandal is the attitude of our members from Quebec on that question. I heard over the radio this evening a report I hope is true. The report on TV was that a number of members from the Quebec Liberal caucus were meeting this evening to oppose the decision or position taken by the Minister of Finance. I hope this is true, I hope I am not the only one of this side to understand Quebec's true interests.

There are 60 Quebec members on the other side, and their silence this afternoon is the worst act of betrayal I have ever witnessed in this House in respect of a highly legitimate request from the Quebec government, which the Minister of Finance apparently is refusing. I hope my friends opposite will take this opportunity to rise and take a stand in favour of Quebec's request. It is certainly not at odds with the rest of Canada. And when apparently the Minister of Finance is not in a position to accept such a proposal, he must be subject to unknown pressures. He is betraying his mandate to respond to his province's true interests, as every member has a responsibility to do so. If this measure that will not cost Canada one cent more could be implemented in a fashion more germane to Quebec's vital interests, it would allow Quebecers to take advantage of the 8 per cent tax reduction in vital areas, products of almost daily consumption. I feel this would meet the legitimate aspirations of Quebecers. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I call on people in authority on the government's side, Quebec members who took a commitment in 1974, who have been promising the province of Quebec these last ten years that if the federal government were represented in large numbers by Quebecers, the province would derive additional benefits. God knows what has been happening during those last ten years. After so many requests were turned down, and not only since 1976 because Mr. Bourassa also faced refusals from the same government, as much as Mr. Johnson, Mr. Bertrand and Mr. Lesage. Since they are now in power—

• (2102)

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member would accept a short question?

Mr. La Salle: When I finish my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will accept any question. I conclude, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has asked me to end my remarks in order to leave him the floor. In conclusion I appeal to my friends from Quebec, Mr. Speaker, I ask my friends from the province of Quebec to have the guts to urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to respect the interest of his own province. No member in the House would blame the Minister of Finance for assuming that responsibility as regards the interest of his own province. I thought I had to appeal to them tonight and I hope we shall get the answer from my Quebec colleagues on that specific issue.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important to underline this fact because the Minister of Finance did not consult the provinces sufficiently. I remember that at the federal-provincial conference, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised negotiations and consultations with the provinces, which he has not done in ten years. But as he was in difficulty at the last conference, he tried to reassure the provinces. However, if the federal government has $1 billion available to increase the purchasing power of Canadians, why did he not call on the premiers or the finance ministers to ask them how they wanted to spend this money—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): The Quebec premier left!

Mr. La Salle: It is not what this government usually does. If this government wants to make a decision, it tells the provinces: Take it or leave it. That is the attitude of this government and that is the problem. For our part, we believe in consultation to correct the situation. I have been asked what should be done to achieve that. We believe that in a healthy and viable federal state, it is important to allow the provinces to take part in the major national decisions. We all recognize that the provinces must participate fully and truly in the making of the major national decisions and that this would eliminate our present problems, including that raised in the House today. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Minister of Finance will reflect tonight about the request made by the Quebec government and approved, as I said before, by the opposition parties.

The measure proposed by Quebec is so reasonable, timely, desired and wanted by the people that it has been approved unanimously by the government. The acting leader of the Liberal party and the leader of the official opposition stated it was sound federalism. The colleagues, the friends of members opposite in Quebec consider that co-operating with this proposition is sound federalism.

I notice that the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) does not agree with me, and that is a scandal. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I see that some of my colleagues from Quebec do not care for the vital interests of their province, and in a few days they will ask the voters in Quebec to trust them when they have been betraying them so blatantly as they are doing today, when they have lied to them for ten years, they have forgotten their promises, and they have shown no respect for their own constituents. I hope this matter will be reconsidered, Mr. Speaker, that reason will prevail and that the requests and the interests of our province will be paid more consideration.

Mr. Béchard: Now that the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) is through with his speech, I would like to know if he would answer one question. And before I ask my question, I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the reason why the Progressive Conservative party has so few French Canadian members in Quebec is quite obvious after listening to such rubbish inspired by such intellectual dishonesty. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette said that since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been in office, his province did not receive anything. I would like to give one example: I would like to ask him if he could tell the House the percentage increase in equalization since 1968?

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, in no way did I suggest the government did nothing. In my opening remarks I stated the minister had stressed actions and accomplishments. What I said is that was done too late. This is what I said. When the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine accuses me of being intellectually dishonest, I must tell him I only stated the government's poor performance and failures. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine among others is objecting. He is only proving he is dishonest because he knows he is refusing once more, as so many other Quebecers, to support Quebec's position and best interests.

I am truly ashamed at that member's behaviour and certainly I cannot accept his accusations, because every time I rose in this House I endeavoured to enhance our responsibilities as members in this House. I feel therefore that the question or the interjection of the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine is quite malicious, and much more dishonest than anything I may have said since the beginning of my remarks.

Mr. Béchard: I was right in suggesting he is dishonest, because he did not even answer my question.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I answer intelligent questions only.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that both hon. members are now getting into a debate.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I want to begin by spending a few moments discussing the words of wisdom we heard today from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and the words of wisdom we heard from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who led off the debate for the official opposition a couple of days ago. As part of his prescription for what ails the government the hon. member for York-Simcoe suggested, among other things, that a Conservative government would reduce the size of the public service by attrition, would stop filling vacancies in the public service, and over a period of three years would reduce the public service by between 50,000 and 60,000 people. Of course, the impression he created was that this would be done very gradually and in a way that nobody would be hurt.

Those words had an oddly reminiscent sound. It seemed to me I had heard them somewhere before. I hear my colleague the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) say "in 1930". No. Mr. Speaker, I heard them just a few months ago, within the last year. I concentrated and suddenly I realized that in Manitoba we heard all that talk last year in August, September and October. The leader of the official opposition, the present Conservative premier of Manitoba, was telling the people of Manitoba just that kind of thing. One Conservative candidate in that provincial election was approached by a civil servant who said to him: "I am concerned, I am not happy with the NDP government. I have been thinking about voting Conservative but the way the leader of your party talks, it sounds to me as if there are going to be wholesale lay-offs of civil servants". So this candidate thought that he should find out what the party position was and he wrote a letter to the then leader of the opposition, Mr. Lyon, who sent him a letter which he authorized him to use in his campaign, and which was used in the campaign, in which he said that the Conservative party of Manitoba believed that the civil service in that province could be made more efficient and could be slimmed down, but that this would be done by attrition and that certainly no permanent employee would be laid off. The Conservative party won the election and Mr. Lyon is the premier of Manitoba. He has been in office for six months, and between 1,000 and 2,000 civil servants have been laid off in that time.

However, I want to talk for a few minutes not just about the people who were laid off but to put on the record what that Conservative government has done. I think members of the House and the people of Canada can get an idea of what the Conservative party of Canada mean when they talk about restraint and about cutting the expenditures of government. They can see what happened in Manitoba in six shorts months.

● (2112)

Before the NDP formed the government in Manitoba, the total number of senior citizens' housing units and public housing units, despite the fact the federal government for many years has paid 50 per cent or more of the cost of building those units, amounted to less than 1,000. That is the total which was built during the time of the Liberal government and the Progressive Conservative government. During the eight years in which the NDP formed the government, 12,000 housing units were built for senior citizens and for people who could not afford to buy or rent their own homes. The housing units are beautiful. Senior citizens who have no income except their old age pensions qualify for efficiency apartments. That program applied to senior citizens who received old age pension payments of $50 a month or less. That program has been discontinued, with no exception. The public housing unit program has been discontinued as well.

The provincial government inaugurated, with the federal government assisting in financing, a very impressive home repairs program for senior citizens who needed modest repairs to their electrical systems, plumbing systems or foundations. They were entitled to a loan, a grant, or a combination of the two, from the governments in order to have their homes repaired. Some 20,000 homes were repaired when the NDP was in power. That program has been stopped as well.

The government funded a school nutrition program in the core area of the city of Winnipeg. In that area there are a large number of students who come from new immigrant homes and native families. That program has been discontinued.

The universities have been told that the money they will get in this coming year will be not more that 2.6 per cent over what they received last year. That means a decrease in funding for the universities in Manitoba of approximately 6 per cent. The students' fees were increased by 20 per cent in one year as well. The grants to municipalities were very drastically pruned, so that the municipal taxes in Winnipeg, as well as other cities and towns in Manitoba, will go up between $75 and $125 this year.

During the last few years I have not used a car in Ottawa. I have used the public transit system. I have seen the ticket price go up from 25 cents in 1974 to 55 cents, or seven tickets for $3, in the three and a half years since the 1974 election. Until approximately two weeks ago, the fare in Winnipeg was 25 cents a ticket, with the provincial government picking up 50 per cent of the deficit incurred by the Winnipeg transit system. The new provincial government in Manitoba refused to increase its contribution, so the cost of a fare has risen from 25 cents to 35 cents, which is an increase of 40 per cent in one year.

The fees for people in nursing homes have been increased. Despite the promises made before and since the election by Mr. Lyon, today user fees were announced for elderly persons in acute care beds in hospitals. There are old people and sick people in Manitoba who should be in senior citizens' housing projects or nursing homes. Despite the job the former government did in building such facilities, there is still a shortage, as there is in most parts of Canada. There are people who have gone into hospital with acute illnesses and who are now ready to leave the hospital but cannot because there is no place for them to go. These are the people who are to be charged a fee.

Perhaps some of my friends, particularly my Conservative friends, will say that I am exaggerating. I should like to quote from a news story which appeared in the April 11, 1978 edition of the Winnipeg Free Press. Its headline is: "Take 3.2 per cent cut to avoid lay-offs, hospital asks". It reads as follows:

> Victoria General Hospital is asking its employees to accept a 3.2 per cent wage cut to avoid lay-offs.

The hospital told four unions late last week the province's 2.9 per cent limit in additional operating funds this year means substantial lay-offs otherwise.

Mr. Rodriguez: What about collective bargaining?

Mr. Orlikow: They have collective bargaining. They finalized an agreement which gave them a 6 per cent increase. It was the maximum permitted under the guidelines of the anti-inflation legislation. The hospital is acting under the instructions or direction of the new government. Since it can only get an increase in operating grants of 2.9 per cent from the province, the hospital must react in the only way it can. It has told the employees either to take a cut in wages or people will be laid off. Not only does that result in more unemployment, it means a drastic cut in the standard of hospital care in the province of Manitoba.

When hon. members of the official opposition talk about the government being wasteful, about a freeze in the number of public servants, slimming down the public service by not filling vacancies when they occur and so on, they are talking about a very substantial reduction in the services which are provided by the federal government to Canadians, similar to what happened to the people of Manitoba since the Conservative government was elected provincially there.

Now I should like to turn to the budget which was placed before parliament a few nights ago by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). We have been given a part-time budget to meet the needs of a spring election. That is how the budget speech was described virtually by every newspaper, radio station and television station. Now we are faced with a situation such as we have not seen since prior to World War II, such as we have not seen since the great depression of the thirties. For the first time in the history of Canada, for three months running, there are more than one million unemployed people. For the month of March, the last month for which we have figures, according to Statistics Canada the official figure is 1,047,000 unemployed people. That is an increase of more than 100,000 people over the same month last year. On a seasonally adjusted basis, that represents 8.6 per cent of our labour force.

There is not a member of parliament who does not realize that several hundred thousand people are unemployed but are not counted. Our estimate is that 500,000 people are in such a position. In order to be counted you must be actively looking for work. There are many areas in this country, such as in Newfoundland, Cape Breton Island and the Inter Lake District of Manitoba near my constituency, where there are no jobs and have been none for several years, and there is no real point in someone who is unemployed there looking for work.

● (2122)

The Minister said the other night in his budget speech that it is not possible to provide jobs for everybody in Canada who wants to work. He trotted out some stale figures and prided himself on the jobs that have been created in Canada. It is true we have more people employed than ever before in Canada, but that is cold comfort to the more than one million people unemployed at this time.

In the years I have been here I suppose I have heard one hundred or more speeches at various times damning trade unions because they are too demanding and because sometimes they call a strike. Many of those spokesmen have suggested that the people do not want to work. How many of us have asked ourselves what one million unemployed people really means?

Every day we have one million people unemployed we lose one million days of productive work. One economist has calculated that between 1974 and 1978 we have lost some $20 billion in lost production because of unemployment, and that is unemployment over and above the 3.5 per cent to 4 per cent which has always been taken as full employment. Every three and a half days we have one million unemployed we lose more than we lost during all the strikes in Canada last year. Every twelve working days we lose more through unemployment than we lost in total to strikes in 1976. Members will remember how the newspaper editorial writers talked about the terrible things unions were doing to this country by going on strike.

Almost 40 per cent of the unemployed today are young people between the ages of 15 and 24 years. These are among the best educated and trained young people this country has ever had. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in our school systems, our community colleges, our technical institutions and our universities training our young people, and now they find there are no jobs. Our young people are graduating as teachers, as social workers, as engineers and in almost every field, but are being told not only that there are no jobs, but in such a way it seems as though it is their fault they have so much training. What could be more cynical or more cruel than that?

The Minister of Finance interjected during the speech of the Leader of the Official Opposition this afternoon: "Who is C. D. Howe?" I do not know whether he was joking or in fact did not know. For the information of the minister, C. D. Howe was probably the most important cabinet minister in this country during World War II. He was in charge of war production and virtually everything that mattered. In 1945 when the war ended he was the minister of reconstruction. I think in April of that year he tabled on behalf of the then Liberal government a white paper on reconstruction in which he said on behalf of the government that a Liberal government would not be satisfied with anything but full employment. He did not refer to a "large number employed", or to "most people", or to 85 per cent, 90 per cent or 95 per cent, or to "people who want to work"; he referred to "full employment". That is what that Liberal cabinet minister, who really was the most important minister during and after the war, had to say about what the Liberal party felt in 1945. This Liberal government of 1978 could take a lesson from that Liberal government of 1945.

Not only did we get the latest unemployment figures this week showing more than one million unemployed, we got the latest figures on the cost of living. Lo and behold, in spite of all the huffing and puffing of this government, in spite of lectures ad nauseam to the people of Canada by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance, and in spite of that whole bureaucratic jungle of the Anti-Inflation Board, the cost of living in one month jumped by 1.1 per cent, and for the whole year, from March 1977 to March 1978, the cost of living rose by 8.8 per cent. This is in the third year of the so-called anti-inflation program.

We get lectures from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and occasionally from the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board in which they have told us that if we exclude fuel prices and food prices we are right on target, just as though the people could live without paying for heat and power and buying food. We are told we are on target and doing better than most countries, but occasionally even this government has to tell the truth.

Frequently when we read about some of the terrible things that happen in the United States, such as Watergate and other things a super power like the United States can become involved in, we like to think that cannot happen in Canada because we are better than they. However, there are some things the United States has that we do not have, and one of those things is a securities and exchange commission.

If any corporation, individual or government wants to borrow money by selling bonds in the United States, they must first file a prospectus with the securities and exchange commission. Unfortunately we do not have similar legislation in Canada and we do not have such a commission. If you want to sell bonds in the United States you must go to the securities and exchange commission and explain what you are trying to do, what collateral you have, what your assets are, and so on. Fortunately or unfortunately, depending on how you look at it, the United States government requires this kind of information to be made public. People in Canada who do not think this kind of information should be made public, such as the President of the CNR, would think this is unfortunate, and he in fact does think it is unfortunate.

● (2132)

When the Government of Canada went to the United States recently to sell bonds they had to file a prospectus with the securities and exchange commission there. I hear the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) say that was one of the first times ever. In our view it is fortunate they did because the prospectus has been published. Let me put on record what this great Liberal government, which tells us that inflation is under control, is on target and so on, put in their prospectus. In an article in the Montreal Gazette of April 12, Don McGillivray quotes from the prospectus as follows and adds his comments:

"Specific inflation targets, as measured by the consumer price index, were set"—

This refers to the Anti-Inflation Board and the guidelines.

—"at 8 per cent, 6 per cent and 4 per cent for the first, second and third program years ending in October 1976, 1977 and 1978, respectively. During the first program year, the rate of price increase was 6.2 per cent, but in the second year was 8.8 per cent."

No nonsense there about the 6 per cent target for this year or about the 'underlying' rate of inflation, minus food and energy prices, being within last year's guideline. The government evidently felt it had to level with foreign investors but could snow Canadians a little.

That is the situation, Mr. Speaker. Until budget night the Minister of Finance claimed that the rate of inflation for 1978 would be on target at 6 per cent. That in itself was a misstatement of the original target, because this is the third year of the program and the rate should have been 4 per cent. We will give the minister some leeway, however. He was saying that the rate of inflation should have been 6 per cent for this year, although he knows that devaluation of the dollar means substantial increases in the price of everything. Increases are particularly sharp in the price of all the food we import, which means virtually all vegetables in winter and all fruit in a large part of the year.

The minister knew that the government is committed to regular increases in the price of oil and natural gas until, within the next three or four years, they reach the international price. That means in the coming year at least two increases of $1.00 per barrel of oil and similar increases for natural gas. Those two increases alone will drive the cost of living up by about 2.5 per cent. When the minister spoke about a 6 per cent inflation target on Monday night, he must have known that it was in fact going to be substantially more. You can only bluff the people for so long, Mr. Speaker. On Monday night the minister finally admitted that the 6 per cent target for the cost of living increase in 1978 was not feasible and said the increase would be 7 per cent. It is obvious to anyone with the most elementary knowledge of economics that, unless the exchange rate on the Canadian dollar climbs in comparison to the United States dollar, we are facing not a 6 per cent increase in the cost of living or a 7 per cent increase but probably in the neighbourhood of 8 per cent.

We have not yet seen the effects of the things that are happening in the United States, such as the increase in wages won by the coal miners and the increase in prices that the steel companies imposed. These will work their way through the United States economy and will mean a sharp increase in inflation which will be reflected in Canada. As my colleague the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond says, it will be between 8 and 9 per cent. I am sure he is much closer to the truth than the Minister of Finance.

There were some goodies for various interested groups in the budget, but essentially it was a political budget. Sales taxes were cut by 3 per cent for six months. That means that in October when unemployment traditionally begins to climb and the economy needs a boost the cut in sales tax will come off. The minister hopes the cut will find favour with the Canadian people and help his party win the next election, after which they can face the consequences for another four years. I have more confidence in the Canadian people, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in the short time available to me I will try and go over the sad record of this government in the past ten years and judge just how much support it deserves in the election that is coming up shortly.

Let me take unemployment first. In 1968 there were 375,000 people unemployed; in 1978, there are over one million unemployed, almost triple the number. In 1968 inflation was 4.5 per cent; in 1978 it is 8.7 per cent, triple the rate. The cost of a new NHA house in 1968 was $18,900; today it is $40,500, more than double. The mortgage rate in 1968 was 8 per cent; today it is 10¼ per cent, an increase of nearly one-third. In 1968 the current account deficit was $97 million; today it is $4.5 billion, having increased 44 times. In 1968 the trade deficit for manufactured products, the ones that produce the jobs, was $3.1 billion; today it is $11.6 billion, an increase of almost four times.

From these figures it is evident that this is the worst performance ever put forward by a government in the history of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Let me look at who has resigned from this government in protest over the way the economy has been run. The first was Mr. Eric Kierans, economics professor at McGill University, president of the Montreal Stock Exchange and a provincial minister of revenue before he entered the cabinet. Then there was in succession Mr. John Turner and Mr. Donald Macdonald, both of whom served as minister of finance. These three gentlemen resigned because the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) insisted on following an irresponsible socialist line which they could see clearly was leading the country into economic disaster.

Another member of cabinet, Mr. Paul Hellyer, the then deputy prime minister, quit because the Prime Minister refused to bring in a housing program to benefit low income people. That took place, Mr. Speaker, immediately following the Prime Minister's campaign across the country on the program of a just society. What a farce that turned out to be when he took over with a majority after the election!

Let us see who is left running the store. First of all, we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who, in this budget, brought in a sales tax cut which is to expire in six months' time, in the fall when unemployment always starts to rise. This is going to bring about a disastrous slump which, of course, this government does not care about because there is only one purpose in bringing in that measure. That purpose is to tide this government over the election, which is to be called in the next day or so, and that is the only purpose of this tax cut.

● (2142)

Then, Mr. Speaker, we have a departmental study which was produced by the Department of Industry Trade and Commerce entitled "Manufacturing Performance". It states that the manufacturing sector of our economy has lost no less than 80,000 jobs in the last four years. The minister's idea of helping the manufacturing industry of this country is to lower tariffs. He stated that in the House of Commons recently. He said that all tariffs are going to be cut an average of 40 per cent. If under his direction and the direction of this government that proposal is adopted at the GATT negotiations in Geneva today, then later this fall those disastrous tariff cuts, will result in complete disaster for the manufacturing industry in this country and will produce far greater lay-offs than we have seen for a very long time.

This government is going to the country in the next few days with the slogan "Show you care". I have news for the Prime Minister: the people of this country are already adding four words to that slogan which the Prime Minister is going to hear. He will hear these words all over this country in his election campaign, and they are "Get rid of Pierre".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: The obvious alternative to the shambles this government has made of running this economy into the ground is the program of economic competence and responsibility which has been presented in the last two days by the hon. leader of this party and by our financial critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). This program is a positive program, a national development program which will get this country back on its feet. This is what this country deserves. It will restore the economic performance which the people of Canada deserve to receive from the government which they will have sitting over there, a Conservative government, as soon as the election results are announced on election night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m., it is my duty pursuant to Section (6) of Standing Order 60 to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith the question necessary to dispose of the amendment to the amendment now before the House.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment to the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the amendment to the amendment will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Saltsman) which was negatived on the following division:

(Division No. 40)

YEAS

Messrs.

Alkenbrack
Allard
Andre (Calgary Centre)
Bawden
Beatty
Benjamin
Brisco
Cadieu
Clark (Rocky Mountain)
Clarke (Vancouver Quadra)
Coates
Crosbie
Crouse
Darling
Dick
Dinsdale
Dionne (Kamouraska)
Elzinga
Epp
Forrestall
Fraser
Friesen
Gauthier (Roberval)
Gilbert
Gillies
Halliday
Hargrave
Hees
Hnatyshyn
Hogan
Huntington
Jarvis
Johnston
Kempling
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
La Salle
Lawrence
Leggatt
MacDonald (Miss) (Kingston and the Islands)
Mazankowski
McCain
McGrath
McKenzie
McKinley
McKinnon
Mitges
Muir
Neil
Oberle
Orlikow
Paproski
Patterson
Peters
Pigott (Mrs.)
Roche
Rodriguez
Schellenberger
Schumacher
Scott
Smith (Churchill)
Stanfield
Stevens
Towers Wenman
Wise
Woolliams—68.

NAYS

Messrs.

Abbott
Allmand
Anderson
Andras (Port Arthur)
Andres (Lincoln)
Appolloni (Mrs.)
Baker (Gander-Twillingate)
Basford
Béchard
Bégin (Miss)
Blaker
Boulanger
Buchanan
Bussières
Caccia
Cafik
Campagnolo (Mrs.)
Campbell (Miss) (South Western Nova)
Campbell (LaSalle-Émard-Côte Saint-Paul)
Caron
Chrétien
Clermont
Collenette
Comtois
Corbin
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Daudlin
Dawson
De Bané
Demers
Douglas (Bruce-Grey)
Duclos
Dupras
Duquet
Faulkner
Fleming
Foster
Francis
Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier)
Gendron
Gillespie
Goodale
Gray
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Harquail
Herbert
Hopkins
Horner
Isabelle
Joyal
Kaplan
Lachance
Lajoie
Lalonde
Lamontagne
Landers
Lang
Langlois
Laniel
Lapointe
Leblanc (Laurier)
Lefebvre
Lessard
Loiselle (Chambly)
Loiselle (Saint-Henri)
Lumley
MacDonald (Cardigan)
MacEachen
MacFarlane
MacGuigan
Marceau
McIsaac
McRae
Milne
Nicholson (Miss)
O'Connell
Ouellet
Parent
Pearsall
Penner
Philbrook
Pinard
Portelance
Prud'homme
Railton
Raines
Reid
Roberts
Robinson
Rompkey
Rooney
Sauvé (Mrs.)
Savard
Sharp
Smith (Saint-Jean)
Stollery
Tessier
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner
Watson
Whelan
Wood
Yanakis
Young—108.

● (2212)

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

It being after ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.14 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 14, 1978

The House met at 11 a.m.

• (1107)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

POST OFFICE

PROTEST AGAINST REMOVAL OF TELEPHONES FROM RURAL POST OFFICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Rural post offices are the lifeline of the community. Farmers and ranchers depend on the post office for mail-order service for garden seeds, clothing, and so on. It has been brought to my attention that telephones are being removed from rural post offices in my constituency. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart):

That the Post Office stop any further removal of telephones from rural post offices as many rural folk use the telephone to determine whether parcels have arrived rather than driving to town and wasting fuel.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

AGRICULTURE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING BEEF IMPORTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion under Standing Order 43. With an unusual degree of political cynicism, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has been supporting the idea of a beef import law administered by his department. Although there have been guarantees of support in expediting such a bill through the House, no import law has been presented by him. Yesterday, the member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) got first reading for such a bill. Mr. Speaker, if the government wants a beef import law now, and the Liberals do not object by shouting "No", I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House give unanimous consent to all stages of Bill C-443 before this session of parliament ends.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

FINANCE

SALES TAX—REQUEST GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Following the flat refusal of the Minister of Finance to accept the decision of the Quebec government concerning the removal of the sales tax for a year in weak economic areas; since the dictatorial move of the federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) is giving Quebecers further proof of his one-way negotiations with Quebec, when the exclusive responsibilities of the provinces guaranteed by the constitution are involved and following many telephone calls from Quebec taxpayers protesting against this unhealthy intrusion of the federal government to prevent Quebecers from setting their own priorities; and considering the grave danger of deepening further the differences between Quebec and Ottawa, which would be the worst threat to Canadian harmony, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the Minister of Finance reconsider and accept for once the decision of Quebec which wants to act alone within its own jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

S.O. 43

● (1112)

[English]

ELECTIONS

TRAVEL PRIVILEGES FOR DECLARED CANDIDATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the news report that the declared candidate for the Liberal nomination in the Keewatin riding in the Northwest Territories travelled aboard the N.W.T. government's Gulfstream aircraft with the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Faulkner), visiting numerous settlements in the eastern arctic, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith):

That this travel privilege at public expense by a candidate for the Liberal party be extended to declared candidates of the other two major parties.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for discussion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, would require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

[Translation]

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

REQUESTED INCREASE IN GRANTS FOR RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an extremely important and urgent matter.

Because of the glaring lack of efficient measures in the last budget as regards funds earmarked for scientific research, and further to the article published in The Citizen April 10 last on the ever increasing anxiety in which Canadian scientists live in Canada because the present government can at any time cut off all subsidies to scientific research, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House agree unanimously on the need for an adequate research and development budget, more specifically 2.5 per cent of the gross national product, and the necessity of adopting a national science policy for the long term, that is from three to nine years.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY THERETO

Mr. Speaker: Following a brief traditional ceremony which took place at the residence of the Governor General two days ago, I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Government House

April 13, 1978

Sir,

The Governor General has directed me to send you the enclosed message which has just been received from Her Majesty The Queen.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Edmond Joly de Lotbinière
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General

"To the Speaker of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Commons:

I have received with great pleasure the loyal and dutiful expression of your thanks for my speech at the opening of parliament on October 18, 1977.

Elizabeth R"

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX REDUCTIONS—EFFECT ON FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Four more provinces, the four provinces of the west meeting in Yorkton, Saskatchewan, have now expressed concern about the way in which the central government has used its fiscal powers to change the sales tax in provincial jurisdiction. Can the minister confirm for the House of Commons the accuracy of the communiqué issued by the premiers of the four western provinces yesterday, to this effect:

The provinces did not participate in the decision concerning the federal compensation formula which treats Canadian taxpayers differently depending on the region in which they live.

● (1117)

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very surprised that they should say so, because we have made a special arrangement to accommodate the situations of Saskatchewan and British Columbia. When I went for my first round of discussions, they had some problems with some aspects and asked me to change my formula. I changed my formula. My original formula was that they would contribute

1 per cent for six months. They changed it so that rather than reducing the tax three points for six months, B.C. and Saskatchewan have reduced their sales taxes by only two points.

That was at their request after discussions with them, so I am surprised that they say they have not participated. I think the point made by the premiers was to the effect that this question was not discussed between the Prime Minister and themselves at the first ministers' conference.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chrétien: Yes. It was not discussed. It was discussed last October among the ministers of finance, and at that time they decided not to proceed with it. When I had my meeting with the ministers of finance previous to the first ministers' meeting, I discussed this matter with them again, but there were no takers, if I may use that expression. That is why it was not raised with the premiers. If the premiers of the west were not in agreement, it would have been easy for them to say so. I did not force anybody. I even made some adjustments to accommodate them.

Mr. Paproski: You are a phony and a fraud.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where this government, in the course of its conduct of what it calls federal-provincial co-operation, has the Minister of Finance standing up and saying that the statement made jointly by four premiers, meeting together in consultation with their ministers of finance, was false.

Mr. Chrétien: I didn't say that.

Mr. Clark: That is precisely the implication, and the only implication, which can be drawn here. Is that federal-provincial co-operation?

Mr. Lang: He gave the facts.

Mr. Clark: I want to refer to another statement, the veracity of which might be questioned. I have here a transcript of the press conference yesterday of the right hon. Prime Minister in which he says that the agreement relative to the sales tax provision was reached, and I quote, "following something like six months of intensive co-operation". If there were six months of intensive co-operation, can the acting—I was going to say "the acting Minister of Finance"; that is exactly what he is.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Given the fact that the first ministers met in February, knowing that budgets had to be brought down in March or April, can the minister tell us with some precision why this matter which, in the words of the Prime Minister, had been under intensive discussion for six months was not placed upon the table of the economic summit which was called precisely for the purpose of ensuring that federal and provincial policies would go in the same direction, and that there would be co-operation? Why was this matter, which the Prime Minister says was discussed for six months, not raised at the summit in February and, instead, sprung upon the provinces in detailed form only four days before the budget came down?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I think it is very amusing that the hon. member has to take such a long time to make a point. Discussions began last October at the meeting of ministers of finance; we discussed this proposal, and we discussed it again when we met in January prior to the meeting of first ministers. The first ministers could have put this proposal on the table if they had wanted to, but they did not discuss it. I did not organize the agenda for the first ministers. The hon. member seems to be afraid to ask a question of the Prime Minister. However, I did not organize the agenda. I just say that we discussed it for six months. I travelled out west, met with the ministers and made some accommodations to suit the special cases of Saskatchewan and B.C.

It is very amusing that hon. members opposite should say that there was no consultation when I have made adjustments to meet provincial requirements.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, we have a situation here where the opposition is wrong, the premier of Quebec is wrong and the premiers of the four western provinces are wrong. Nobody is right except poor little Jean Chrétien. Isn't that an amazing situation?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: The Minister of Finance says this matter was discussed last October. It was discussed for five minutes over lunch; it was not brought forward in any serious way by the Minister of Finance. If he wants to deny that, let him stand in his place and say that in October or November of last year he put a detailed proposal to the ministers of finance of the provinces—because he knows he did not.

● (1122)

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON SALES TAX REDUCTIONS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Let me now turn to the Prime Minister, this man who has been watching these intensive discussions of the last six months. I ask him this question: In light of the fact that after those intensive discussions we now have five provinces—fully half of the provinces in confederation—expressing their view that the intrusion by the federal government into provincial fields in this manner was handled in a way that is dangerous not only to federal-provincial co-operation on economic matters but also to national unity, will the federal government give serious consideration to immediate discussions with all of the affected governments concerning modifications of the formula or of the proposal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to the extent that the western premiers want to further provincial co-operation and think that some mechanism should be set up so that the provincial budgets and the federal budget could be announced together and elaborated together, we are prepared to hear their views.

I have not read what they stated out west, nor am I privy to their discussions, but if this is the spirit in which they talk I would be happy to sit down with them—as we did in February—and find ways in which budgets at different levels of government can be co-ordinated and brought in together. But in so far as the past budget is concerned, particularly in circumstances where already a question of privilege has been raised in the House that already there has been too much consultation and, therefore, secrecy has not been respected in terms of the budget—

Mr. Grafftey: You're not serious.

Mr. Trudeau: —I find it difficult to understand how the Leader of the Opposition could quarrel with the statement of the Minister of Finance and myself that the subject was raised in October at the financial ministers' meeting. It was raised—

Mr. Clark: For five "intensive" minutes.

Mr. Trudeau: Maybe it takes only five minutes to make the proposition. If the finance ministers wanted to think about those five minutes, they had until the month of January when the Minister of Finance raised the matter again. Surely that is more than five minutes: it is a period of several months.

Mr. Clark: "Intensive discussions."

Mr. Trudeau: But in so far as making a specific proposal on budget night is concerned, the Leader of the Oppposition and, I am sure, the western premiers themselves realize that it would not have been possible for the Minister of Finance to say, several weeks in advance, that taxes would be cut three or four weeks hence, particularly sales taxes. He and the premiers know perfectly well that this would not have been possible.

The Minister of Finance approached them in confidence, some of them more than once, talked to them on the telelphone, met with them personally and made a proposal to them. They are big boys, Mr. Speaker, they are adults: if they thought it was not a good proposal, they could have said no; but they accepted.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Not only have they accepted, but they proposed modifications which were accepted by us. After you bring in the budget, one to which they have agreed, all nine of them, suddenly four of them have second thoughts. I repeat that I am not clear as to what they actually said in their deliberations, but I hope it was more constructive than the interpretation put on it by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, this government has so little taste for actual negotiations and co-operation among different levels of government that to them five minutes of talk over broccoli—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: —amounts to intensive discussion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I wonder if I might get the attention of the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: The word was "broccoli".

An hon. Member: It's what you eat.

Mr. Clark: The Prime Minister speaks about being ready to agree to any kind of mechanism the premiers might propose. The fact is that the premiers were led by the Prime Minister to believe that they had, in the economic summit, a mechanism by which co-operation among different levels of government could be worked out. They find, having been brought here for the television cameras, they are then betrayed by having a proposal, which did not emerge in February, sprung upon them six months later.

● (1127)

I should like to come back to the question I raised with the Prime Minister which he refused to answer. That question is: In light of the fact that half of the provinces of Canada have now expressed concern about the means by which the federal government has intruded, and used its fiscal power to intrude, into their jurisdictions, will the government commence immediate discussions with all the affected governments to see what changes might be brought in either to the formula or to the proposal relating to provincial sales taxes? Will they start those discussions now with all of those premiers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the meeting in February of first ministers was to establish the kind of co-operation for the short and medium run. We did not attempt, the premiers or myself, to negotiate what budget we would bring down, nor did they tell me what budgets they would bring down. They gave me no information on that.

In so far as information on budgets is concerned, various proposals were made; they were at the level of the finance ministers. The particular scheme of cutting provincial sales tax was in the public domain; it was being discussed publicly. It was not only over the hon. member's broccoli, but it was discussed publicly since the month of October at least. I believe it was made public in a statement by the minister of finance for Ontario.

Mr. Clark: You are a parody of yourself. Go ahead.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition expects to receive answers to questions and then he does not listen to them.

Mr. Clark: Not from you.

Mr. Trudeau: Then I wonder why the hon. member asks the question.

Mr. Paproski: There are no answers forthcoming. You are a phony; you are a fraud.

Mr. Trudeau: I take it the hon. member does not want me to answer his question. If he does, he should listen.

Mr. Clark: I do not think you can answer my question.

Mr. Trudeau: Let the hon. member say particularly what he wants me to say.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: For the third time, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The exchange has already lasted 15 minutes. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCREASE IN SALES TAX AFTER SIX-MONTH PERIOD

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the very clear feeling on the part of the western premiers that federal-provincial relations have been damaged by this experience, and in view of the Prime Minister's having stated just now that the federal government is prepared to do something to try to repair that damage, may I put this proposition to him: In view of the fact that the federal government is taking full credit for the reductions which will now take place in the sales tax of the various provinces, will the federal government—if it is still there six months from now—use all of its capacity to effect the news and to tell us what is going on; will it use that to make it clear to the people of Canada, when the sales tax goes back up six months from now, that the responsibility for it is that of the federal government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government on the budget is very simple. We gave room to the provinces to increase their income tax and cut their sales tax. This was done by depriving ourselves of federal tax funds, or federal funds from income tax. We decided to do this for a period of six months. In six months, presumably, when this ends, we will have to increase the taxes again to what they were. The people of Canada will know to whom they are paying taxes, unless we decide then to have another budget. They will know that.

● (1132)

In so far as the position of the premiers is concerned, I repeat what I said earlier: they, through the ministers of finance, accepted this proposition. They discussed it over a period of several weeks. I find it passing strange now that the premiers, not the ministers of finance, are saying there has not been co-operation. If the premiers feel that, I am prepared to see them. Let them come to Ottawa next week and I will make an appointment with them. I would be glad to discuss with them what budgetary processes they would like to establish in the future.

Here is a proposal in which the federal government said to the provincial governments, "We will both put some money in. The federal government will put in more than you. We will put some money in, and we will reduce sales taxes to the Canadian people in order to stimulate effective demand in the economy." And the finance ministers of the provinces accepted. They were not forced to do that; they could have said no, just as one province refused to give an answer. But no. Obviously there is some lack of communication between the ministers of finance and the premiers—the left hand does not know what the right hand is doing—and now they are complaining.

There could not have been a better attempt by the federal government to co-operate with the provinces in putting together a budget with which they agreed. The Minister of Finance travelled across the country to do that; he travelled across the country meeting the finance ministers of the provinces. After three weeks of consultations, we arrived at a budget with which nine provinces agreed and the other remained silent. I now find it passing strange that they are having second thoughts and playing politics to help the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the utter confusion that exists over this matter, and in view of the fact it is now clear that damage has been done to federal-provincial relations, I hope the Prime Minister will meet with the premiers of the provinces very soon to straighten this matter out and come to an understanding as to what is to happen six months from now.

SALES TAX FORMULA AS APPLIED TO QUEBEC

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance? My question relates to what is going on between the Minister of Finance of the federal government and the minister of finance of the province of Quebec. In view of the minister's statement that this government will provide to Quebec, having regard to the formula that province has set up, only $37 million of the $220 million that was to have gone to Quebec under this minister's formula, will he undertake that the other $183 million will be provided in some way as an economic stimulus in Quebec to create badly needed jobs in that province?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the money is all available at this time. If the Quebec government wants to cut sales tax by two points for six months, as described in the formula, for the rest of the retail sector in the province of Quebec, the money is available. If that province has decided on its own to stimulate further production of textiles, shoes and furniture, so much the better. It is their provincial budget and I cannot quarrel with it. I have some of the textile industry in my own district. I am pleased that Mr. Parizeau decided to do more, through his own budget, for that sector. I am glad he has decided to do that, because we did something about it when imposing quotas some time ago. The money is still available. He can still cut taxes on other items in the province of Quebec and we would be delighted to contribute and stimulate those other sectors.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Finance call this offer of a total of $220 million, only on the basis that Quebec accept his formula, co-operation when in fact it is dictatorship?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to this point because the second minister I called about three weeks before the budget was the minister of finance for Quebec. I wanted to know from him if he was going to say "Yes" or "No". He never said "Yes" or "No".

An hon. Member: What did he say?

Mr. Chrétien: He never said "Yes" or "No." He waited until I had made the proposition in the House. I could not read his mind. He was talking with other ministers of finance on the topic; he called other ministers of finance to discuss its advantages or disadvantages. I knew that, because the other ones mentioned that to me during my conversations. I had the maximum consultation I could have. He decided, himself, to wait and make his own decision after the fact; and he has to live with his own decision, just as I have to live with my own decision.

SALES TAX—NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. We have already determined that the Prime Minister did not see fit to discuss this major initiative on the part of the federal government at the economic summit conference in February. Since March was a month in which six provincial budgets were brought down, budgets which have been seriously affected by what the western premiers describe as severe distortion of provincial fiscal priorities as a result of the unilateral exercise of federal budgetary policy, and since this government speaks so glowingly of its commitment to federal-provincial negotiations, will the Minister of Finance tell us in precise detail, giving the exact dates, when the specific proposal was discussed in detail with the finance ministers of the provinces? I am not referring to general discussions over a lunch last fall; I am referring to specific details.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for saying that it is a major initiative, because in his speech yesterday the Leader of the Opposition said it was no measure at all. I am very pleased that the hon. member calls it a major initiative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: I said that I had travelled and started these talks during la semaine sainte with the ministers of finance of Ontario and Quebec—la semaine des bons chrétiens, monsieur le président. I spoke to the ministers of finance of Quebec and Ontario. The week right after that I went to B.C., Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and spoke to all of them. The ministers of finance of the maritimes were phoned by me during the same week, Holy Week. I am sorry; it was Holy Week in respect of the ministers of finance of Quebec and Ontario and the following week for the other ministers.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I think most of us recognize when Holy Week is held. I should like to point out to the minister that major initiatives are not always good initiatives; they can be bad major initiatives, too. Let me point out to the minister that the government's first action since the economic summit conference was held in February has been action that has brought about federal-provincial chaos, as we have seen now, and not federal-provincial co-operation.

This government's budgetary proposals have had different implications for six provincial budgets brought down prior to these proposals and after the economic summit conference in February. That is what the minister has said in stating he did not discuss this matter with his provincial counterparts until Holy Week. Since his proposals have had different implications for six provincial budgets than for the other four, and since in the words of the western premiers—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am trying to be lenient with the hon. member, but would she come to her question, please?

● (1142)

Miss MacDonald: I will put my question, Mr. Speaker. Since this measure could be prejudicial, as the western premiers have said, to ongoing discussions on national unity, dividing the provinces—which seems to be what the premier said—will the Minister of Finance undertake to reopen the discussions, at least with the six governments which introduced their budgets prior to the time the federal government put forward its proposals, and determine if any adjustment to what they have done is now warranted? Will he undertake to do that?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken with the ministers of finance for all the provinces. Some of my discussions were very short and, in fact, the maritime provinces were so happy that they said "Yes" within the first five minutes. So there was no problem there. As to the other provinces which had problems, I visited them and made some accommodations. They were not obliged to accept. I told them it was all apolitical and would depend on what resulted.

In fact, yesterday morning I called as many of the ministers as I could reach, to get their opinion on what Quebec has done. One of the ministers said, "I have made a decision with you, Mr. Chrétien, and what happens with the others is not my concern." I have been very frank with the provinces. They could have said "No," but they were pleased to say "Yes" because it was the first time that the minister of finance had ever gone to them. This was not the only matter that I discussed with them: we had discussions on various features of the economy of Canada—the situation with the Canadian dollar, the situation with imports and exports, and so on. Many of them said to me that it was the first time that the minister of finance had ever bothered to talk to them about the economy of Canada before a budget.

Miss MacDonald: Since this initiative has given four provinces an advantage which the other six did not have when they were introducing their budgets, I wonder if the Minister of Finance would consider changing the phraseology that he used with regard to this initiative and with regard to the economic summit conference, when he described it as a milestone in federal-provincial relations and, indeed, describe it as a millstone in federal-provincial relations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, there was one minister of finance who had made his budget some time previously, and it was the minister of finance of Ontario. However, he was a proponent of this idea and he was so pleased with what I was proposing that on his own initiative he called some of his colleagues to tell them that I was on the right track. Apparently some of these people were afraid that they would be helping me politically in bringing in this budget.

An hon. Member: Nobody can help you.

Mr. Chrétien: Every one of the ministers, except the finance minister of Quebec, put the national interest ahead of their political interests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

[Translation]

THE CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING NEW CONSTITUTION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. It is obvious that we are faced with a very serious problem which might degenerate into a constitutional crisis and once again we are given evidence that the basis of a new constitution is urgently needed. Would the right hon. Prime Minister tell the House whether he would look favourably on the provinces coming together to set the basis of a new constitution which would clearly establish the responsibilities and jurisdictions of provincial governments as well as those of the federal government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have already done that. Indeed from 1968 to 1971 the premiers and myself have met from 10 to 12 times to resolve the problem to which the hon. member referred. We have agreed on a number of conclusions. White papers have been published by the federal government. A conference was held in Victoria and we had the discussion which the hon. member is hoping for. I also urged the premiers when they met in Ottawa last February to resume that discussion next fall and they have expressed interest in that proposal.

* * *

FINANCE

SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF SYSTEM OF FINANCING PUBLIC SECTOR

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, and at the same time thank the Prime Minister for his excellent answer.

The whole problem is one of money; the provinces need income and so does the federal government. They are all controlled by finance, by monetary power. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Finance a question and he answered that I was advocating a change in the system of financing the public sector, which is known as the credit-debt system, and the replacement of this method which creates problems by a more social type of credit. In view of the events that have occurred in the last 24 hours, is the minister at least prepared to ask his officials to consider such a change? Only a study can show if that would be better or worse. Is the minister prepared to request such a study?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member could put his theories down on paper and forward them to me, I will ask my officials to study them and I will give him a reply.

* * *

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON VALUE OF CANADIAN DOLLAR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. As we have witnessed this morning an unbelievable foul-up in federal-provincial relations, I would like to deal with the foul-up in relation generally to the world. The dollar continues to fall, with another $30 million being lost today and possibly $350 million so far this month.

At his press conference yesterday, the Prime Minister stated that he hoped the dollar would reach a "just" level on world markets and that he will not intervene to prevent it from reaching that level. Would the Prime Minister indicate what that just level is, because the inference to be taken from his statement is that the dollar still has not reached this just level.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member knows the answer to the question. A just level is one established by supply and demand for the Canadian dollar on the world market. Supply and demand is established by thousands upon thousands of individuals—businessmen, speculators, and others—offering the Canadian dollar or buying the Canadian dollar. At one point the two curves cross and this establishes the price of the dollar as has happened on the world market.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again to the Prime Minister, who added to his earlier statement yesterday that he would intervene to normalize the jerks and spasms but not to prevent the dollar from seeking its normal level. My question, after the Prime Minister's little lecture concerning curves, is: Would he indicate why they chose to raise domestic interest rates in Canada by a full point, if they do not intend to intervene with these normal levels that he refers to?

Mr. Trudeau: Once again, Mr. Speaker, the central bank will intervene to prevent any movement which it feels is either speculative or abnormal. It does not intervene by establishing a rate beyond which the dollar will not fall or rise. It does not say that we have a fixed dollar: it says, let it float but we will help the dollar float toward whatever its eventual destination is by intervening to prevent an abnormal occurrence.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is to the Prime Minister. In order that there be less confusion concerning exactly what the government's and the Bank of Canada's stance is with respect to our dollar, and to avoid the confusion that obviously exists in the imposition of the provincial sales tax, would the Prime Minister arrange for a proper reference to a committee of the House on the subject of the falling dollar, so that the governor of the Bank of Canada, and even the Minister of Finance, would come to that committee and give us a first-hand view of what they feel is a normal level for the dollar and what is, in fact, government policy with respect to this very, very disturbing situation in Canada?

● (1152)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we are in the middle of a budget debate. There is no better place for the opposition to make its views known on that matter. It is even better than stating them in committee.

Mr. Stevens: We want to find out your view.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member wants to find out our view. Our view is that the dollar is a floating dollar, as are the other currencies of the world. Therefore, we are not determining in advance the proper level which the dollar should reach. We are not determining that. We are letting it float so that the markets of the world will establish its proper value.

An hon. Member: Horner says it is 90 cents.

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. gentleman opposite and members of his party want to express their views on that in committee, I suggest they do it during the next four days of the budget debate. We will be interested in hearing their views.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

EFFECT OF SALES TAX REDUCTIONS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. The Minister of Finance has just brought down his rubber-duck budget. It had a lot of leaks before, and it has had a lot of leaks since. The Prime Minister will agree that direct taxes are a provincially-shared responsibility. My question for the Prime Minister is this: Why is the government objecting to the province of Quebec directing the reduction of sales taxes on clothing, textiles and footwear when other provinces, such as Newfoundland, do not tax clothing, footwear and textiles at all—

An hon. Member: Nor does P.E.I.

Mr. Crosbie: —in their sales tax? Nor does P.E.I. And in Alberta they have no sales tax at all. Why isn't the province of Quebec being permitted leverage in this manner, if there is a policy of co-operative federalism? There is no tax on clothing, footwear and textiles in Newfoundland, P.E.I., or Alberta. Why is Quebec not permitted the same choice?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question seems to be singularly contradictory. The hon. member is indicating that because sales taxes are a provincial jurisdiction, Newfoundland has, in effect, reduced its sales taxes on certain items. Quebec has done that. We applaud that. They are perfectly entitled to reduce their sales taxes in the way they want. The province of Alberta is perfectly entitled to have no sales tax, if they want. That is the reality under the constitution and that is the political reality.

We are not objecting to Quebec cutting taxes on certain items. All we are saying is that when the federal budget is brought in we intend to compensate the provinces for certain fiscal actions which they can take; we intend to pay them in part for it. We put this budget together after three weeks of consultation.

An hon. Member: Six months.

Mr. Trudeau: We think it indefensible for one province to hold out, to wait until the budget is tabled, to wait until all the other provinces have agreed to it and stated so, and then to decide to go on its own and to high-grade federal money for its own benefit and not for the benefit of the total economy. We think it is contrary to federalism and to the notion of a common market which the PQ itself says would be the one they would fight for.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's answer shows why our federal-provincial relations are in such a barbaric state. The hon. gentleman realizes that the federal government has great fiscal strength compared to the provinces, and what you have said to Quebec is, "You are going to suffer a $180-million penalty if you choose to exercise your own discretion on your own direct sales tax in Quebec".

Mr. Clark: That is right.

Mr. Crosbie: My question to the Prime Minister is this: How can our confederation survive with this kind of strong-arm, bully-boy, kung-fu federalist tactic? How can we survive if he stays in office?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the opposition is demonstrating that it is useless to attempt to put a budget together in consultation with the provinces.

An hon. Member: Come on!

Mr. Trudeau: I am wondering if the four western premiers have really taken that view. I do not believe they have. They are probably arguing that the budget should be established together, all of us bringing in our budgets at the same time after consultation. We are prepared to discuss that possibility with them, although it does not seem a very realistic one. But this is the first time, Mr. Speaker. We could have cut other taxes.

Miss MacDonald: Manufacturing?

Mr. Trudeau: We could have cut income tax and left it at that. But we were attempting—

An hon. Member: How about manufacturing?

Mr. Trudeau: —to put together an idea which had been propounded by the finance minister of Ontario, which had been supported by many economic groups in Canada, as the best way to stimulate the economy at this time. Cutting the sales tax is the way in which you can immediately stimulate the greatest consumer demand.

An hon. Member: What about the federal sales tax?

An hon. Member: You have fouled it up.

Mr. Trudeau: Having accepted this thesis, and realizing that sales taxes are in the hands of the provinces, we said, "We will give you some money to do this. Do you accept?" Nine of them said they accepted, and they did it. Now the opposition is trying to criticize the decision of nine provinces to do something, and the reluctance of one—

An hon. Member: That is not what happened.

An hon. Member: Keep digging.

Mr. Trudeau: —to make up its mind so that it could come in after, make a better deal for itself and not for the whole of Canada. I find the opposition supporting a separatist government in Quebec—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, that kind of low, disgusting tactic will get the Prime Minister nowhere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I quote from the joint communiqué of the four western provinces. The four western premiers have said:

> —contradicted the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation and consultation . . . and could be prejudicial to ongoing discussions on national unity.

Are the four western premiers separatists? Is everyone who disagrees with the government a separatist?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am having difficulty hearing the hon. member's question.

An hon. Member: Ask it again.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister is: Are the four western premiers, including everyone on this side and everyone who doubts the veracity and wisdom of the government, separatists by definition?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that can be the inference the hon. member wants to draw. It is certainly not—

An hon. Member: It is yours.

An hon. Member: You said it.

Mr. Trudeau: It is certainly not what I said, Mr. Speaker. I was dealing with the support given by the Tory party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —to the scheme put forward by the separatist party of Quebec.

An hon. Member: Cheap.

Mr. Trudeau: They are telling us now that they want the federal government to go along with the scheme, the effect of which is to use national funds, funds of the Canadian taxpayer, to encourage certain industries in Quebec, when the rest of the provinces have accepted a proposition which would help all consumers in Canada—

An hon. Member: What about DREE?

An hon. Member: Half a billion in DREE.

An hon. Member: What does DREE do?

Mr. Trudeau: Now they want to ask a question about DREE, Mr. Speaker. Let them ask a question about DREE. We were talking, until now, about their support for a scheme which does not have the support of the other provinces. Yesterday, the Minister of Finance phoned several of the provincial ministers of finance—

An hon. Member: Support the Liberal party of Quebec.

Mr. Trudeau: —asking them if they would go along with the Quebec scheme, and they said, "Of course not."

An hon. Member: Raymond Garneau likes it.

Mr. Trudeau: We put a deal together, all nine of us plus the federal governement, and now we are not going to go along with the special proposal made by Quebec. The Tory party is distinguishing itself by saying that it will. We will not, Mr. Speaker. That is their position; it is not ours.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1202)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

COMMITAL OF DANGEROUS OFFENDERS UNDER "HOSPITAL ORDERS"

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-444, to amend the Criminal Code (hospital orders).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mrs. Appolloni: Mr. Speaker, this bill is premised on the acknowledgment of the fact that because brutal "justice" is frequently meted out by fellow inmates to child molesters, judges hesitate to sentence these offenders to prison terms. By granting special power to the criminal courts to make "hospital orders" as opposed to usual terms of imprisonment, this bill is designed to provide needed medical treatment to offenders suffering from psychopathic disorders and, especially important, to protect the public from the risk of further offences being committed if the offenders are at large.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

EXTENSION OF EMPLOYEE PROTECTION TO CERTAIN PRIVATE COMPANIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-435, to amend the Canadian Human Rights Act (private sector compliance).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Leggatt: Briefly, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend the protection of the Canadian Human Rights Act to employees of private companies carrying on business in Canada that are in receipt of federal government contracts or subsidies of any kind. The effect of the bill would be to deny such companies federal contracts or subsidies where they are in violation of the Canadian Human Rights Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

* * *

[Translation]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 313, 314, 490, 1,153, 1,243, 1,336, 1,354, 1,428, 1,437, 1,442 and 1,473.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

[Text]

CNR—EMPLOYEES FROM PRIVATE AGENCIES

Question No. 313—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has Canadian National Railways obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by Canadian National Railways in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. (a) CN obtained part-time employees from private agencies in the following provinces only:

	Number of Employees
Province	1975	1976	Total
British Columbia	16	20	36
Alberta	108	197	305
Manitoba	1	7	8
Ontario	12	11	23
Quebec	37	65	102
	174	300	474

(b) In 1975 only, CN obtained one (1) full-time employee from an employment agency in Ontario.

2. The fees for all of the above employees were paid from existing operating budgets. No supplemental budgets were set up to cover these fees. No such payments were made from government estimates.

3. (a) The average hourly rate paid to the employment agencies in the five provinces where agencies were used is shown below:

Province	1975	1976
British Columbia	$5.64	$5.96
Alberta	5.57	5.89
Manitoba	5.00	5.55
Ontario	5.10	5.59
Quebec	4.97	5.52

(b) The average hourly rate paid to the employees by the agencies, is unknown as the agencies do not disclose, to their clients, the wages paid to employees. (c) The total amounts paid by CN in the five provinces where employment agencies were used are shown below:

Province	1975	1976	Total
British Columbia	$ 2,531.99	$ 4,382.45	$ 6,914.44
Alberta	15,179.62	34,134.35	49,313.97
Manitoba	534.00	7,815.00	8,349.00
Ontario	6,896.58	6,303.60	13,200.18
Quebec	32,597.82	45,296.08	77,893.90
	$57,740.01	$97,931.48	$155,671.49

AIR CANADA—PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES

Question No. 314—Mr. McKenzie:

1. Has Air Canada obtained (a) part-time (b) full-time employees from private employment agencies in (i) British Columbia (ii) Alberta (iii) Saskatchewan (iv) Manitoba (v) Ontario (vi) Quebec (vii) New Brunswick (viii) Nova Scotia (ix) Prince Edward Island (x) Newfoundland and, if so, in each case, how many?

2. Are such employees paid from supplementary estimates and, if not, from what estimates are they paid?

3. By province, what was the (a) average hourly rate paid to employment agencies (b) average hourly rate paid to employees (c) total amount paid by Air Canada in (i) 1975 (ii) 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. (a), (b), (i) to (x), 2 and 3. Air Canada has a part-time and temporary and casual staff to fill peak work requirements, some of whom are obtained from outside agencies. In all cases, each of the more than 800 budget centres in the airline may employ such help if the necessary budget provision has been made and approved. These non-permanent employees do not form part of the company's automated payroll system and, while it is possible to reconstruct this information manually, the required expense to produce the information is considerable and prohibitive.

INTERNATIONAL TREATIES SIGNED BY CANADA

Question No. 490—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the answers to Question Nos. 5,359 of the First Session and 163 of the Second Session of the 30th Parliament, did the government receive representations from foreign governments or international organizations seeking to learn Canada's record in terms of implementing international treaties etc. signed by Canada?

2. Does the government have any current plans to compile statistics on what percentage of treaties it has signed but has never implemented and, if not, for what reason?

3. What is the government's best estimate of the percentage of treaties it has signed which have (a) never been implemented (b) been implemented (i) in part (ii) completely?

4. Does the government consider its record in terms of implementing treaties signed by it to be favourable in terms of international standards?

5. If difficulties exist in terms of implementing international treaties in Canada, what is the policy of the government in signing such treaties where such difficulties, if any, are foreseeable?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. No. The government, through the Department of External Affairs, does receive enquiries, however, from foreign governments or international organizations in respect of the implementation of specific treaties signed, ratified or acceded to by Canada. These enquiries are normally of a legal or technical nature.

2. The Department of External Affairs has no plans to compile statistics on treaties signed by Canada which have not been implemented. A search of the hundreds of entries in the Canada Treaty Register to establish the limited number of treaties signed subject to ratification and not ratified would require a major expenditure of budgetary and manpower resources.

3. The number of treaties signed by Canada which have not been implemented is insignificant.

4. Yes.

5. When the Government of Canada has determined that it is in the interest of Canada to enter into a treaty, if legislative action by the Parliament of Canada or the legislatures of the provinces is necessary to implement the treaty, the practice, subject to the terms of the treaty, is to sign subject to ratification, or alternatively, after legislation is in place, to accede to the treaty. In neither case will obligations normally be assumed by Canada by ratification or accession until the legislative requirements of implementation have been fulfilled.

SUBDIVISION LOTS ACROSS PROVINCIAL BOUNDARIES

Question No. 1,153—Mr. Herbert:

Has the government considered introducing legislation requiring companies that sell or lease subdivision lots across provincial boundaries, to file a detailed description of such property, including financial and legal information, information on sewers, water lines, possible flooding conditions, etc.?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: The information being sought involves matters which fall exclusively under provincial and municipal legislation, and the government has, therefore, not considered introducing legislation of this kind.

MORTGAGE STATISTICS

Question No. 1,243—Mr. Herbert:

Are statistics recorded on the percentage (a) of single family residences that are mortgaged (b) by various dollar levels of existing mortgages and, if so, by comparing mortgage figures in constant dollars was there a discernible trend in any change in the past five years?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: (a) Data on single detached dwellings with or without mortgages are available only from the decennial census. The table following summarizes the information for 1971.

Single-Family Residences, Canada, 1971

	Per cent
No Mortgage	47.2
One Mortgage	45.1
More than One Mortgage	7.7
Total	100.0

(b) Census data do not provide the information requested. The table following provides information derived from a special survey conducted in metropolitan areas in 1974, but the constant dollar deflation of residential mortgages is not available in any form.

Mortgages Outstanding on Single-Detached Dwellings
Metropolitan Areas, Canada, 1974

Amount of Mortgage $	Per cent
1— 9,999	37.9
10,000—19,999	37.4
20,000—29,999	16.6
30,000—39,999	6.2
40,000—49,999	1.4
50,000 +	.5
Total	100.0

CADC—PERSONNEL

Question No. 1,336—Mr. Bawden:

1. How many people are employed in Crown Assets Disposal Corporation?

2. In (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 (d) 1976 (e) 1977, how many employees were classified as (i) bilingual (ii) unilingual?

3. What is the policy of the Corporation on (a) hiring (b) promotion (c) demotion of employees classed as (i) unilingual (ii) bilingual?

4. How many employees in the Corporation were promoted from branch offices to the head office in (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 (d) 1976 (e) 1977?

5. How many employees from outside the public service have been hired in the head office of the Corporation in (a) 1973 (b) 1974 (c) 1975 (d) 1976 (e) 1977?

6. How many of the above are (a) bilingual (b) unilingual?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. As of February 28, 1978, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation employed 68 people.

2. January 1 to December 31:(a) (i) 19, (ii) 74; (b) (i) 20, (ii) 71; (c) (i) 21, (ii) 50; (d) (i) 27, (ii) 39; (e) (i) 31, (ii) 36.

3. (a) (i) and (ii) All qualified applicants are considered for appointment to vacant positions. In the case of bilingual positions, appointees have to be bilingual or be willing to undertake language training. (b) (i) and (ii) Unilingual and bilingual employees share equal opportunities for promotion. In the case of bilingual positions, appointees have to be bilingual or be willing to undertake language training. (c) (i) and (ii) The language status of an employee has no bearing on demotion.

4. (a) 1, (b) Nil, (c) 1, (d) 1, (e) Nil.

5. (a) 12, (b) 18, (c) 9, (d) 6, (e) 17

6. Bilingual (a) 1, (b) 5, (c) 8, (d) 6, (e) 12. Unilingual (a) 11, (b) 13, (c) 1, (d) Nil, (e) 5.

NAVIGABLE WATERS PROTECTION ACT APPROVALS

Question No. 1,354—Mr. Brisco:

Is the approval of the Minister of Transport or the Cabinet required before any obstruction in the form of a bridge, dam or similar structure is placed on/in or across a navigable waterway and, if so, what is the list of all (a) approvals that have been given in the past three years and, in each case, what is the name and location of the waterway (b) applications that are presently waiting approval and, in each case, what is the name of the waterway and its geographic location?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The approval of the Minister of Transport by virtue of the Navigable Waters Protection Act is required for any works constructed in, on, over, upon, under or across a navigable waterway in Canada regardless of whether the work is existing or proposed. Examples of such works would include bridges, booms, dams, causeways, marinas, fill, aerial and submarine cables, wharfs and many other smaller works. In response to part (a) of the question, the approximate number of applications approved by this department within the past three years is in the order of 4,500. Of these approvals issued, approximately 40 per cent would be generated from the west coast region. Resources within the department do not permit a further breakdown of this figure, which would require a comprehensive listing of waterways and geographic locations of the approvals involved. There is also no mechanism for identifying applications pending approval, which would enable the department to provide the information requested in (b). It would be necessary for the enquirer to provide the name of the applicant or the waterway involved.

BRICK DETERIORATION—VIRGINIA PARK AHOP SUBDIVISION

Question No. 1,428—Mr. McGrath:

1. Did the National Research Council, at the request of CMHC, conduct an investigation into the cause of brick deterioration at the Virginia Park AHOP subdivision in St. John's, Newfoundland and, if so, what are the results of the investigation?

2. Is CMHC prepared to compensate the owners of homes effected by the said faulty brick?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: 1. The National Research Council was requested by CMHC to provide its comments upon the brick deterioration occurring at the Virginia Park subdivision, St. John's, Newfoundland. As a result of on-site observations and of the testing of samples, it was indicated that the brick complied with the requirements of residential standards, i.e., Canadian Standards Association, A82.1 burnt clay brick.

2. CMHC is not authorized to offer assistance to the owners of the homes affected.

GRAIN-HAULING FREIGHT CARS

Question No. 1,437—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

How many freight cars capable of being used for grain hauling were in the United States on March 3, 4 and 5, 1978?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Many types of railway cars could be used to haul grain but of the railway cars dedicated to grain service, both CN and CP Rail advise that there were less than 100 cars in the United States on March 3, 4 and 5, 1978.

DND—ROCKET MOTORS

Question No. 1,442—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Has a contract been let to Bristol Aerospace Limited for $4,198,760 for rocket motors and, if so, what is the purpose for which the rocket motors are to be used?

2. How many rocket motors will be provided and are they all of precisely the same type?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. Yes. The rocket motor is part of a weapons system, and the number contracted for is equivalent to the annual consumption by the Department of National Defence in air-to-ground practice firings.

2. Twenty-four thousand rocket motors of precisely the same type will be provided.

PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 1,473—Mr. Huntington:

1. Does the National Harbours Board pay for fire boat protection at Montreal Harbour and (a) if so, what is the cost per year (b) if not, who does and what are the operating costs per annum?

2. Who owns the fire boat in Montreal Harbour?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Tugs owned and operated by private tug operators in the port of Montreal are equipped with fire fighting apparatus, the cost of which is borne by the operators.

2. There is no fire boat at the port of Montreal (see reply to 1(b)).

* * *

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

MR. McKINNON—DELAY IN ANSWERING QUESTION NO. 137

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have had a question outstanding since October 19, some six months, question No. 137, in which I ask if DREE or any other departments pay direct or indirect subsidies toward the operation or maintenance of Canadian Armed Forces bases. It is quite a simple question. Some money is going into the Department of National Defence to keep bases running. A department that spends $4 billion should know where its money is coming from, and I cannot understand why they have not been able to answer this question in less than six months. I do not see anything sinister about them withholding the answer. I believe it is sheer incompetence.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, to date we have answered more than 60 per cent of the questions on the order paper. Obviously the question referred to by the hon. member is part of the 40 per cent of questions we have not yet had time to answer. We will consider his request.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the House to return momentarily to the tabling of documents. I have overlooked an indication that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has a document for filing.

* * *

VIA RAIL

TABLING OF FIRST ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table, under Standing Order 41(2), two copies, in both official languages of the first annual report of VIA Rail Canada Incorporated.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE BUDGET

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, April 13, consideration of the motion by Mr. Chrétien that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government, and the amendment of Mr. Stevens (p. 4439).

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to take a few brief moments to enter this debate, I begin by expressing my congratulations to my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), both for the budget he presented on April 10 and for the way he is handling what I think anyone on any side of the House or anywhere in the country would recognize as a very difficult portfolio in admittedly difficult times of economic tension.

I believe it is a reasonable assessment to say that the general reaction across the country to the budget of the other night has been favourable. It is obviously correct to say it has not met with total acceptance by our friends across the floor. That is understandable, because they are the opposition. It would be a great surprise to see any measure presented by the government with which they could find favour, even if there were some elements of it they could find in their hearts to accept.

We have heard in response to the budget that it was too little, that it was half measures. The Progressive Conservatives stated they would have cut taxes by over $2 billion. Indeed, that becomes the option game for the Canadian people. They have said that the budget is short term, it is the wrong thing to do, and so on.

I would like to take a few minutes to put on the record the cumulative measures and the impact on the year 1978 in terms of tax reductions and the cumulative measures taken by this government over a period of time, most recently on April 10 with the cooperation of at least nine of the provinces. That was a phenomenal step forward in federal-provincial relations, despite the criticisms some members opposite have addressed to the one aberration, that is, the decision of the province of Quebec.

It was a step forward in federal-provincial cooperation on fiscal-economic matters. It fell very well into what I consider to be a very significant advance between the provinces and the federal government which took place at the first ministers' conference a month or so ago. At that time, nearly all the senior leaders of various levels of government met and, for whatever the reason, reached general agreement on a set of principles that were well enunciated and will be beneficial to Canada.

I return to the cumulative stimulus in the economy of tax reductions resulting from actions taken by this government over a period of time. In 1978 the total effective tax reductions from those actions will be $4,497 million. If anyone says that is a half measure, they are playing the option game with the Canadian economy. That would be totally irresponsible in some of the measures they are suggesting. Let me detail where that $4,497 million comes from.

On the personal income tax side, the automatic indexation that was introduced three years ago, which is casually dismissed on many occasions by members opposite, amounted to an effective $850 million personal tax reduction as of January 1 and continuing through the year.

The carry-on effect of the personal tax reductions in 1978 of the March 31, 1977, budget measures is another $675 million tax reduction this year on the personal income tax side. The measures taken by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, on October 20 last represent another tax reduction on the personal tax side of $730 million.

On the personal income tax side, in a measure which is considered to stimulate spending and alleviate the effect of inflation, particularly on lower income families, the total tax reduction effective January, 1978, amounted to $2,255 million. That is not a half measure.

The effective tax reduction flowing from the retail sales tax reduction announced on April 10 is $1,147 million, which will be put directly into consumer spending because it cannot be realized unless people buy things and take advantage of the tax reduction.

• (1212)

On the corporation tax side, the cumulative effect of 1978 taxes to be paid by corporations, will be a total reduction, as a result of action taken by the government, of $1,095 million. On March 31, 1977, the then minister of finance introduced in his budget certain adjustments in inventory tax measures and also announced the provision of investment tax credits. Those two measures combined amount to tax cuts for corporations of $895 million in this fiscal year. On October 20 the Minister of Finance announced access for corporations to employment tax credit and this, if used in the current year, will amount to another $100 million tax relief to the corporations.

In addition, on April 10, the other night, the Minister of Finance provided access to a higher level of write-off in connection with research and development which will amount to approximately $50 million this year. He also provided concessions in taxation applied to tertiary oil and other areas amounting to $50 million. So we are looking at a corporate tax reduction effective this year of $1,095 million, and at a total of tax reductions effective in 1978 of approximately $4,497 million. Mr. Speaker, I do not think those who talk about that as a half measure are acting responsibly or even in a credible fashion.

There has also been an attempt to say that this is the wrong way to go—that this is not part of a planned economic approach. I submit that this view is not the correct one. The personal income tax cuts, the income tax cuts, the corporations tax cuts to which I have referred, do focus not only on the short term but also on the medium and longer term. Certainly they are concerned with helping lower income people—I refer particularly to the personal tax cuts and to the retail sales tax reductions.

I would also point out that the April 10 measure especially deals directly with the stimulating of consumer demand—we are all concerned about the question of unused capacity in our plants resulting from an apparent reluctance to purchase goods—thereby stimulating further expansion and employment. That is the purpose of the retail tax deductions which took effect the other day. Their purpose was to stimulate consumer spending so as to absorb some of that unutilized capacity and thereby trigger the other measures taken by the government which address themselves to the medium and the long term, and, if I may say so, to structural problems as well.

What else is investment tax credit but investment in the medium and the long term growth of the economy? That is its purpose, to encourage people to invest in industrial and commercial activity, a process which will, in the end, result in the creation of more jobs. The inventory adjustment measure addresses itself to structural problems and to the medium and the long term. The employment tax credits are addressed directly to the reduction of unemployment through the stimulation of business activity and confidence. What else is the $50 million which is going into research and development—I hope it turns out to be more—but an investment in the medium and the long term and in the structural aspects to which we all wish to address ourselves?

Those who criticize this budget or the actions of the government for not addressing the deeper problems, had better tell me what else the tax reductions made the other night in the tertiary oil field and rail transportation are, what else are they but investment in the structure of our society which, we say, troubles us.

Finally, the change in the tax measures applied to family and corporate farms will also encourage our food producers.

Keeping all these things in mind, I submit that those who argue that government policy lacks continuity, lacks symmetry, lacks an over-all strategy, are failing, either deliberately or through lack of understanding, to give credit to the cumulative effect of all the measures which have been taken.

I intend, now, to make a statement which I think is indisputable but which may surprise some people. One hears from certain businessmen and others that they face a punitive corporate tax regime in Canada. That is not the case. The Canadian corporate tax structure is as favourable as that of any country in the world, including the United States. This was the case before the measures taken the other day, and the position of the corporations has now been enhanced by the concessions I have detailed. I think it is time for people to stop talking about how they are being punished and handicapped and inhibited when operating businesses in this country. The facts show that this is not the case.

One often hears from certain businessmen that they are over-regulated, that they are being hamstrung by the number of regulations with which they are obliged to conform, the amount of information they are called to supply, and so on. Let those people go down to the United States, into any state of the union, and start to operate under the much harsher regulatory regime applied there, and then tell us we are not competitive in that field.

The other side of the budget picture involves the question of fiscal responsibility. We have heard a constant stream of unreal statements from the opposition to the effect that no real restraint in expenditure is being shown by the government. I am glad to recognize that this is not believed by people who analyze the situation seriously. It is really nothing but a political statement, because the facts are indisputable.

Governments, not just the federal government but all the governments in this country—and thank goodness for that—have turned away from the admittedly excessive spending of the last ten or 12 years, which culminated in a bite on the economy by all levels of government of about 40 per cent. Incidentally, one hears the figure of 42 per cent as the figure for spending by all governments. That is not correct. National statistics clearly indicate that it was in fact 39.9 per cent—I don't know where these people are getting their statistics. At any rate, government expenditures are now declining from the peak of 1975. The same statistics show that the reduction as a percentage of the gross national product is taking place mainly at the federal level through the exercise of restraint in federal spending.

What is the story of our expenditure levels in the last three years? Two or three years ago we began to set out publicly what our total spending would be for the coming fiscal year. That had not been done before by any government, to my knowledge. We set out our commitment and said that we would not exceed it. We said that our objective was to restrain budgetary and non-budgetary increases, capital and non-capital spending, and total cash spending, to something less than the growth in the gross national product.

● (1222)

Our first commitment of a dollar figure ceiling was for the year 1976-77. Our original publicly stated and committed spending target was $42.15 billion. We actually spent $1 billion less than that in fiscal year 1976-77. We spent $41.078 billion. We stated our commitment and met it. Our percentage increase year on year was 10.2 per cent.

In 1977-78 we started off by making the same move. We laid out publicly and in this House what our total spending ceiling would be for fiscal year 1977-78. When I tabled the main estimates for that year on February 16, 1977, I stated that we would contain ourselves to a ceiling of $45.1 billion. Shortly thereafter, in cooperation with the then minister of finance and to provide an offset of expenditure reduction to enable him to make certain tax cuts which we all thought were then required, we reduced that spending target, again publicly. The then minister of finance stated in his budget speech of March 31 that spending would be $44.45 billion, a cut then of $650 million.

For the statement of the Minister of Finance of April 10—and I was glad to be able to do this; I had much cooperation from many people—I was able to tell him that we would come $200 million under that downward revised ceiling of expenditures for 1977-78, and in fact I am saying that we will be in, at, or under $44.25 billion rather than $44.45 billion. That will represent a 7.7 per cent increase over the previous year, which is very close to or even a little under the inflation rate for that year, and which means that we contained ourselves to no real growth at all in our expenditures for the fiscal year just ended.

Taking the same tactics again—and I think these are eminently responsible—when the Minister of Finance, in conjunction with his colleagues and in co-operation with the provinces, made the basic decision to cut retail sales taxes, provide research and development assistance, and so forth, the other day, we consulted. We said that there should be some kind of offset to the reduction of revenue inherent in those tax cuts to the federal treasury. The $1.147 billion of retail tax cuts plus the research and development tax cut and the tertiary oil and railway development tax cuts will end up costing in revenue to the federal government about $900 million.

Everybody knows we have a deficit and that we are concerned about it, and, of course, the provinces are sharing in that over-all tax reduction. However, for those who might have been concerned about the result and the effect on our cash requirements this year of that $900 million federal investment in tax reductions, the arithmetic is that with the $200 million under-spending for 1977-78 which I was able to announce, and with the commitment to cut another $350 million off our spending total for 1978-79, we will have offset that $900 million revenue reduction by a $550 million expenditure reduction. That means that there might be a net increase in our deficit as a result of the budget measures the other night of about $350 million. That $350 million will result in the stimulation of consumer demand.

There will be a $1.147 billion retail sales tax reduction, and there will be another $100 million in other structural tax encouragement for corporations. I think it was an eminently responsible budget. We recognized the limitations in our fiscal situation by virtue of high cash requirements, and we offset those to the maximum by about $550 million. I can assure hon. members that that $350 million expenditure reduction to which we are committed will be met, and I submit the track record of 1976-77 and 1977-78 as evidence that when we make that commitment we will make that expenditure reduction.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andras: As we do that we are reducing the reserve for supplementary estimates, which I detailed when I presented the main estimates on February 22, by that $350 million. I am not going to say that this will be an easy job for the government. I know from the experience of a year and a half in my present portfolio that it will not be easy for me.

We will have to deny submissions for new programs. We will have to cut back in some other programs. That will be difficult. Just saying, as the opposition does, that if it had the reins of power it would cut expenditures by $2 billion just like that, will not deceive the Canadian public. The Canadian public will not be deceived by that kind of nonsense. I would like very much to hear from what level the opposition would cut, and precisely where. We have been doing it. I would like to know what programs the opposition would attack. Whose ox are they going to gore? It is not an easy job.

Members of the opposition say that if they had power, they would cut taxes by $2 billion in addition to the $4.497 billion which I have delineated. They would cut expenditures by $2 billion just like that, but they really do not know what they are talking about. They have left no precision on the record as to where the money would come from or how they would do it.

My time is limited. There are one or two corrections I want to make. I want to correct some of the rather loose things the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) threw around the other day. He claimed that instead of the expenditure reduction I am telling the House we are accomplishing, our expenditures for 1977-78 were more than $1 billion more than had been forecast in the budget speech of March 31, 1977. I have already dealt with that. I will forgive the hon. member by saying that he probably took the wrong line from the book. Whether that was convenience or not, I do not know, but it was the wrong line, and therefore a distortion of the facts when the hon. member said that total spending was up.

I will forgive him for that, but there was another rather puzzling set of figures the hon. member used when he attacked the government for growth in the number in the federal public service. He said that in 1968 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to power there were 280,000 people in the total federal public service and that, as of the end of 1977, that number had grown to 580,000.

When the hon. member gave a figure for the base year 1968, he quoted the figure 280,000, conveniently leaving out the Armed Forces and all employees of Crown corporations. If he had included those employees, the base figure would have been 470,000. He conveniently left those employees out of the base year figure, but somehow they all turned up in the figure for the comparative year of 1977, 580,000. I am not sure whether that was because of poor research or because of absolutely blatant chicanery.

Mr. Cullen: The latter.

Mr. Andras: Again I will say that the hon. member probably took the wrong page or the wrong line, but he should not make statements like that and expect to be believed in everything else he says. It is curious that his errors are always in the wrong direction.

• (1232)

We are achieving restraint in the growth of the federal public service. We have chosen, in the expenditure pattern and those kinds of things, to do it on a responsible, gradual basis, because we want to direct it downward. We do not want to take Draconian measures today which could have a very serious impact on the economy later.

There is a tendency in these debates to throw statistics around. I did it because I felt I had to correct some of the very, very bad information that has been put out in this debate by members opposite.

I want to wind up my remarks, Mr. Speaker, with this point. Nobody realistically would say that in this country we are making economic progress. Nobody is saying that and nobody is failing to recognize, except in the heat of rhetorical debate and political opportunism, that many of the problems we have in this country are absolutely, correctly, and factually shared in most of the western world. We share those problems, and there is no amount of bombastic rhetoric that will convince people that we can isolate our situation from that in the rest of the world.

I have great faith in the mass wisdom of people in this country, and faith in their understanding that the world is facing economic tensions and that there is confusion. Even those countries we tout as having the best economies in the world are facing economic tensions. Helmut Schmidt is reported as having said the other day to a friend of his that he is totally puzzled about how the economy of the world is operating today. There is nobody who will stand before the electorate and say, "We have all the answers, we have the miracle wand to wave and, if you just trust us, all the problems will be solved". There are some people who will try to convey that, if they had the reins of power, all the problems in the world would be solved, but I do not think Canadians would be fooled about that.

In the process of overkill, of the constant verbal barrage of gloom, doom, and disaster, always talking about the negatives in our society and in our economy, and never admitting or playing up or putting into the balance the positive aspects of our economy which still in our country far outweigh the negatives, I question what consideration is being given to the psychological confidence of Canadians. So on that basis I look across the floor and I question, not only the matter of policy responsibility but also the question of psychological responsibility, when what we need in this country above all, and indeed in the western world, is an emphasis on the positive, a recognition that this country stands economically, socially, in terms of justice, and in terms of any indicator you want to look at, as one of the most favoured nations in the world. The only way in which we could louse that up is by an overkill of opportunistic negativism, which prevails in this House all too often and obviously in the press.

We really have nothing to fear but fear itself. I think it is time we faced our problems realistically. It is time we patched up our weaknesses, we recognized that things are being done, and we recognized that governments alone cannot do them but that the decisions of businessmen, unions and individuals in this country are collectively far more important than what we think we are doing here in the House. If we have a role to play as political leaders and public figures, it is one of presenting a balanced picture, and today I say what we need is a balanced picture that comes out positive and not negative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we meet to debate this budget in an air of crisis, and there is a crisis in this country, a very serious economic crisis. All we have to do is to examine what has taken place in this country in the three days following the bringing down of the budget by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). No sooner was the budget brought down than the unemployment figures were released the following day by Statistics Canada showing a substantial increase in the rate of unemployment in this country. The rate of unemployment rose to 8.6 per cent, a rise of three points over the previous month, putting 1,045,000 Canadians in the ranks of the unemployed.

As if that was not bad enough, we had the consumer price index released on the following day showing another substantial increase in the rate of inflation, which is now running at 8.8 per cent, an increase in one month of 1.1 per cent.

In the midst of all this we had an unprecedented fall in the Canadian dollar. Our dollar is sinking daily in response to the minister's budget, demonstrating beyond any doubt that the international financial community have no confidence in this government's ability to manage the Canadian economy. Certainly they have demonstrated that they have no confidence in the budget brought down last Monday night by the Minister of Finance. Today, the Canadian dollar is trading at less than 87 cents.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: It is still sinking. By the weekend it will be down to 86 cents, and we are just a few days away from an 85 cent dollar and all it means to Canada, to the Canadian economy, to Canadian consumers, and to our rate of inflation, closely tied as we are to the U.S. economy, with our pricing system geared to the U.S. dollar.

And yet we have the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) standing in his place today trying to justify the unjustifiable. He threw out a few challenges. I pity the President of the Treasury Board. He has a very difficult role to play; he has an impossible task. He criticized my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and he criticized my leader. He criticized this party for daring to advocate $2 billion worth of tax cuts, and he challenged us to identify them. I thought that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Clark) did just that when he spoke in this debate in one of the great speeches of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: I am sorry the President of the Treasury Board could not wait for a reply to his question. We can identify where $2 billion could be saved in this country. We are spending almost that much on consultants' fees, which is a euphemistic term for patronage. We are spending almost $2 billion on consultants' fees, notwithstanding the fact that we have built up in this country a substantial body of experts within the Public Service of Canada capable of meeting just about any challenge presented to them by any department of government. We have a highly trained, highly competent Public Service in this country, yet we go outside of the Public Service every day, every week, and every month, and spend almost $2 billion annually on consultants' fees. That is where we can make the saving right there. That is some of the fat we would trim from the government.

My leader spoke about sunset laws, about bringing the curtain down on some of the redundant Crown corporations which are no longer relevant. We have a ridiculous situation today where the government hardly knows how many Crown corporations it has under its jurisdiction. Certainly the curtain should be brought down on some of these redundant Crown corporations, and the remainder should be made more accountable to parliament so that their budgets can be kept within control. As it stands now, they answer to no one. In fact they are accountable to no one, as has been demonstrated by the experiences of the past year with at least two Crown corporations dealing in the commercial world.

● (1242)

When the government took office ten years ago, the total budget was about the extent of what is the total anticipated deficit of the government this year. That is where we are. That is the consequence of the disarray arising from the financial mismanagement of the Canadian economy. The former minister of finance originally forecast a $7.2 billion budgetary deficit for 1978. Some seven months later, the present Minister of Finance said that the deficit would be $9.2 billion. The 1978 accounts will show a budgetary deficit of $10.3 billion, which is 43 per cent greater than the original forecast and comparable to the total amount of the government's budget when it took office ten years ago. That is the setting we find ourselves in for this debate today.

Our annual rate of inflation is the second worst of the major industrialized countries of the west, 8.8 per cent. That is the climate we are in, as we come into the post controls period which commences tomorrow. The government does not have a post control strategy to cope with this new round of inflation, which is being influenced directly by the dollar crisis.

What do we have in terms of a monitoring agency? The government could not reach agreement with the provinces on setting up such an agency, based on either the Food Prices Review Board or the old Prices and Incomes Commission, both of which had the legislative clout to move in and examine the books of companies and organizations that were suspected of going beyond the guidelines. Instead, the government is falling back on the Economic Council of Canada, which was not set up to do this type of work and which does not have the legislative clout to it.

In fact the legislation setting up the Economic Council of Canada included a provision to ensure that it would not duplicate the work of Statistics Canada. The Council can only react to the Statistics Canada figures in the consumer price index. In other words, it can react only after the fact, after the inflationary trend in a particular sector has been identified by Statistics Canada. In terms of an inherent weakness in monitoring during the post controls period, that was not bad enough. This agency does not have labour representation. The Canadian Labour Congress withdrew from it a couple of years ago. That brings up the whole business of co-operation, in order to bring in a post control strategy of voluntary restraints.

Obviously there cannot be cooperation without consultation with labour. Now we know that following the first ministers' conference, and the face-saving move by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in establishing the Economic Council of Canada as a monitoring agency, there was in fact no consultation with CLC on a post controls strategy. There was no consultation with the group in this country which is the aggrieved group representing labour. As a result of the work of the Anti-Inflation Board and the legislation setting it up, there is not a working person in Canada who does not feel he has been badly used by the Board, because his wages have been controlled while prices have been escalating and allowed to continue to rise. Yet there was no cooperation whatsoever, no move to obtain the cooperation of organized labour.

The other day in Quebec one of the commissioners of the Anti-Inflation Board predicted that controls would have to be reimposed. If the truth were known, I suspect that is a very important part of the government's strategy, the reimposition of controls. He identified the reasons for that. He indicated that most of the wage settlements over the past few years have openers in them for January of next year, in anticipation of controls coming off. With inflation running at 8.8 per cent annually, and showing no signs of improving, we expect labour to operate within voluntary constraint guidelines of 6 per cent! That is a ridiculous expectation.

The budget referred to a reduction in provincial sales taxes. It is the major stimulator for the economy in the budget. I will not deal with the controversy surrounding the measure of consultation with the provinces, or more precisely, the lack of it. One major item which is not covered by retail sales taxes in any of the provinces is food. If one looks at the consumer price index, which was released this week for last month, he will find the food component went up by 1.4 per cent. It has to get worse. As the dollar goes down, the price of imported vegetables and produce goes up.

Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) announced a new dairy policy, which means an increase in the price of most Canadian dairy products. A week or so prior to the latest round of ad hoc reactions to the dairy situation and this annual policy statement, the government decided to remove the consumer subsidy on the price of powdered skim milk. This will result in the government saving $13 million in its budget. Is that a good way to save it? It will be at whose expense? It will be at the expense of the low income earners, fixed income earners, the unemployed, the poor, the native people, and the people of the north who use this product. This will mean the retail price of powdered skim milk will rise by anywhere from 40 per cent to 50 per cent, as a direct result of what the government is doing.

The paradox of all of this is that farm incomes continue to go down. The government will have to react to that situation, given the influence of the Canadian farming community upon the Government of Canada. We can anticipate with certainty that food prices will go even higher, driving up our rate of inflation once again.

Before the summer is out and before the new harvest is in, I predict our rate of inflation will be well in excess of 9 per cent as a result of this push in the price of food. I predict there will be more unrest in the farming community, as farmers demand more and more a greater share, and rightly so, because they have arrived at a point in time today where they are losing money.

• (1252)

Of course, the other part of the double whammy is the unemployment situation. We have the second worst performance of western industrialized countries insofar as inflation is concerned, but when you compare our situation with that of the United States, Japan, Germany, France and the United Kingdom in terms of unemployment, our performance is by far the worst. Our unemployment rate of 8.6 per cent is the worst of any of the major industrialized western countries of the world.

If you examine the unemployment figures you find there are some very disturbing features about the statistics. For example, youth unemployment is over 16 per cent, and over 10 per cent of women in the work force are unemployed. That is discounted, of course, by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) because he refers to these people as second income earners. In so doing he denies women who work and the young their opportunity in this supposed land of opportunities.

As the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, women work in this consumer oriented and inflated society of ours because they have to work, quite apart altogether from their right to do so. Female spouses are working today because it is absolutely essential to family income, and they represent about one third of the female work force.

An hon. Member: No one questions that.

Mr. McGrath: Except the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

An hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. McGrath: And the Prime Minister. They both keep trying to discount unemployment figures by talking about these second income earners. We have a number of women in the work force today who are the heads of single parent families who obviously have to work to support their families. Obviously the balance is made up of single women who have to work to support themselves, and the young.

What are we doing to our young people, Mr. Speaker? What kind of a country is this when we have a rate of unemployment among people between the ages of 15 and 24 in excess of 16 per cent? Unfortunately that situation will get worse as the current university college year comes to an end and thousands of young Canadians come into the work force looking for the jobs that are so necessary to finance their education, pay off their student loans, and keep themselves during the period of summer holidays. Many of them are graduating from universities and technical schools, highly skilled and trained for jobs that do not exist. The only response we get from the Prime Minister is let them go elsewhere and look for work.

In my own province the unemployment rate is approaching 17 per cent, seasonally adjusted. I am very cynical of that seasonally adjusted figure because it suggests that seasonal workers do not have to work throughout the year in order to supplement their income. Fishermen, for example, have to find work during the winter to supplement their incomes, as do the tourist workers. If you look at the situation in my province in real terms, the unemployment rate is more like 30 per cent.

I heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) talk in this House the other day about sales tax and what the 3 percentage point decrease in that tax meant in a province where the sales tax was increased to 11 per cent from 10 per cent. Of course we have the highest sales tax in the country, and naturally this was a reasonable proposition, and any reasonable person would have to agree with him. This means a great deal to the people in a province where the per capita income is the lowest and unemployment is the highest, and where the per capita cost of living is the highest. In that case any substantial reduction in retail sales tax is of major importance.

Not once during the course of that minister's speech did he make any reference whatsoever to the unemployment situation in the province for which he has a great deal of responsibility as our representative in cabinet. Not once did he refer to the unemployment situation in the Atlantic region as a whole, and not once did he refer to the national unemployment situation. This is incredible when you consider he was brought here especially and hastily by government plane from New York to prop up this weak government on national television when it was discovered last Wednesday that the debates were to be carried live across the country. Somebody forgot to tell the minister during the briefing session on the short flight from New York City to Ottawa that we had an unemployment crisis in this country, or that he in fact has a critical unemployment situation in his own province and his own region.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has the floor, and he has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I will try and make those seven minutes go by as quickly as possible out of deference to my colleagues opposite. When the House adjourned for lunch I was referring to the intervention—albeit, the flying intervention—of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this debate last Wednesday. He was brought in especially from New York in order to bolster the sagging image of this government in a debate that was at that particular time being televised live nationally on the CBC. I said, and I repeat, that I found it very strange that my colleague from Newfoundland—for whom I have very great respect and with whom I have been associated in politics and in business for many years—could possibly make reference to the province for which he has a great deal of responsibility in terms of Cabinet representation, without making one, single, solitary reference to the number one problem in our province and, indeed, in our country: unemployment.

● (1412)

The minister in not one of his better speeches—on reading it one gets the impression it was a hastily prepared speech; he is a great orator and one of the best speakers of the country—in trying to defend the weak record of this government made reference to our position vis-à-vis the other industrialized countries. He said:

Canada has been recognized internationally by all countries, both developed and developing, as a country which has an excellent record in terms of economic management . . .

A country which had an excellent record, I might add, in terms of economic management. Then he went on to make a remark about a distinguished officer of this House. I regret that intervention very much. It was out of character for the hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

He referred to a nightmare that he had, in which he suddenly found the western industrialized countries, meeting as they are to meet next summer in Bonn to discuss the economies of the western world, and he referred to the President of France, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Prime Minister of Japan and the President of the United States, and in the midst of this company who should be in Canada's chair but Joe Who! Presumably he was referring to the Leader of the Opposition. Unfortunately, the minister did not stay in the House very long because, if he had, he would have known, having heard the excellent speech of the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, that here is a man who has the ability not only to give good management to this country, but also to restore Canada's badly tarnished international reputation abroad. When the Leader of the Opposition goes abroad, as he will as the prime minister of this country, he will do so with dignity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: And there will be no more sliding down the rails of banisters in London—

An hon. Member: He might fall.

Mr. McGrath: —as the Prime Minister did on his first trip abroad as Prime Minister of Canada ten years ago. There will be no more pirouettes like the Prime Minister performed last summer at Buckingham Palace. I was in London with my colleague, the parliamentary secretary to the government House leader at the time. I know he felt a twinge of shame, as I did, to see the leader of our country at Buckingham Palace, with the other distinguished leaders of the western world, acting like a buffoon in the presence of the Queen and of other distinguished statesmen.

[Mr. McGrath.]

There is no doubt in my mind, sir, why Canada's reputation has been tarnished, and why the world no longer has confidence in our ability to manage the economy of this country, with those kinds of shenanigans. It would be better for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to have a dream in which there will be something akin to full employment and equality of opportunity in all parts of this country, in which the war on economic regional disparity would be waged successfully, as it has not been for the past ten years.

The minister himself admitted that a short time ago in Nova Scotia, when he said that the DREE program had not been effective in producing jobs. Perhaps we could all dream. Indeed, we can hope with a reasonable degree of justification and realization that if the Prime Minister has the courage to go to the Governor General and dissolve parliament and take his record to the country, this country will be represented abroad with distinction, with great courage, and great skill by a prime minister heading up a Progressive Conservative government. This will be a government that will, as its number one priority, try to instil some investor confidence in this country.

A Progressive Conservative government will try to stop the flow of capital out of this country. The Secretary of State for External Affairs made no reference to that. He made no reference about efforts to do something for the sagging Canadian dollar which is now supposed to be a floating dollar, but which is in fact sinking out of sight. The sagging dollar is having a direct impact on prices in this country and pushing up the inflationary spiral again. Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the senior minister of this government, the senior representative for the Atlantic provinces having the responsibility in this government, certainly for his own province, would, instead of making these negative interventions, try to say something positive in this House for a change—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish at the outset to join the hon. members on this side who rose before me to express my sincere congratulations and my admiration to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) who was courageous enough to introduce a budget which was welcome in all spheres of Canadian society. It was welcome, Mr. Speaker, by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce as well as by nine provincial premiers. I would like to quote, as an example and as an introduction to my remarks, a communiqué released by the Canadian Chamber of Commerce the day following the budget speech. I quote:

The Minister of Finance introduced this evening what this chamber considers as a responsible budget.

A little further, in the same communiqué of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, it says:

We are very disappointed by the fact that it is going to be only a temporary cut.

But it is obvious that if we want this cut to have some effect on the economy, to prevent consumers from postponing their purchases, there must be a time limit and this limit was agreed to by nine provincial premiers and the Minister of Finance, who said that it could be six and nine months. The purpose was to encourage Canadian consumers to take advantage of the provisions of the budget and to purchase goods that they would normally have bought later.

To go back to the press release, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

This budget will bring down inflation at a time when wage and price control are coming off, and that is important.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is very important; the Chamber of Commerce understood all the nuances contained in the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance. And the Chamber of Commerce, this time, disagrees with my colleague and friend the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) when it says that in its opinion, contrary to the forecast of the Minister of Finance for an increase in the gross national product of 5 per cent, Canada will do as well as any other member of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, OECD, and that Canada will increase its GNP by 4.5 per cent. What is important as well, to continue quoting the press release of the Chamber of Commerce, is this:

It is worth mentioning that the budget takes into account regional economic disparities and the Chamber of Commerce fully agrees with the formula selected to finance the sales tax cuts. Let us hope all the provinces will co-operate so that the resulting benefits can reach their citizens.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, a bit further, the Chamber states:

We have also noted the new options being made available to individuals when selecting new investment vehicles for their retirement savings.

Here, Mr. Speaker, we are talking of investments in Canada. And back to the quotation once more:

The expansion of the rules allowing tax deferral on the transfer of farm property from parents to children will eliminate what has been a long standing concern to many of our members.

So that is what the Chamber of Commerce had to say in acceptance of the budget of the Minister of Finance.

[English]

But before I go on and deal with the budget, I would like to address myself to the remarks made by the speaker who preceded me, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) regarding the leader of my party. I think he was referring to a gathering of leaders of heads of governments last year where the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was among leaders of the Commonwealth. I am sure he would miss the great popularity of our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with the other prime ministers of the Commonwealth. I have often witnessed such admiration for my leader.

● (1422)

While attending a CPA conference within the last few weeks, I met with ministers and prime ministers who told me how fortunate Canada and Canadians are to have this Prime Minister as our leader. I am sure the hon. member for St. John's East does not want me to pursue this. However, if he wishes to have this parliament dissolve, I invite him to try to influence his neighbour, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), to permit unanimous consent so that this House can deal with an election as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the budget is the result of lengthy negotiations and discussions with the Canadian premiers. Earlier today in the House, the Leader of the Opposition and a few other members across the aisle were wondering whether indeed there had been consultations. The Minister of Finance then recalled that as early as October 1977, the premiers were told about those measures which might be considered if there was some degree of acceptance. As explained by the right hon. Prime Minister, most premiers agreed and found that it was a commendable step which would help control unemployment by providing immediate stimulus to the economy.

It has also been suggested that the consultation was not extensive enough, that the finance ministers would have needed a few weeks to take their decision. I do not think the outcome would have been different even if our Minister of Finance had allowed his Quebec counterpart two or three months more to make his decision. It has been shown on several occasions, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebec finance minister is the one who is unable to make a decision.

He does not seem to understand all the fine points of preparing a budget, especially on the national scene. This is why he decided, for instance, not to oppose the proposal of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien). He made no counter-proposal and no statement on the proposals submitted to him by the Minister of Finance, and it is only afterwards, the day after the budget speech, that the Quebec finance minister discovered it was something that could be implemented in Quebec, but in his own way and only with considerable changes to the budget proposals.

Mr. Speaker, it is important to understand all the problems that this can represent for us, who must think about the general interest of the whole country and not only of a single province. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has solid support from the Quebec caucus members, and if anyone still has any doubt about this, I can say that our position is based on many facts. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would first like to recall certain figures for my colleagues. As concerns the export to other provinces of products made in Quebec, according to available figures Quebec exports to other provinces accounted for 50.5 per cent in 1974 compared with 45.7 per cent in 1967. Let us now examine the importance that the interprovincial market could have for Quebec manufacturers since the budget proposals of Mr. Parizeau seem to neglect this. Quebec producers sell 19 per cent of their products to Ontario alone while only 11 per cent of the products made in Ontario are sold in Quebec, and the figures have gone up between 1967 and 1974. If we compare the industrial activities of Quebec as a whole with those of the rest of the country, we find that in 1974, once again, Quebec showed a $1.1 billion surplus in its markets in other provinces. Which industry accounted for this surplus? Mr. Speaker, it was in fact the industries that are called the soft sector, which can be confusing since they are not really soft if we consider the importance of those industries. For instance, our textile shipments to the rest of the country show a surplus of $192 million. The clothing manufacturing industry shows a surplus of $111 million, there is a surplus of $59 million for leather products, a surplus of $503 million for other garments, and a surplus of $134 million for the furniture industry.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to quote those figures to stress the difficulties that the Quebec industry could face if the budget submitted by the provincial minister were passed. To understand the importance of the Quebec market, let us examine, for instance, the Quebec products consigned to Ontario and the other provinces. If the sales tax on furniture is removed, we would perhaps expect this to affect all the production in Quebec. That is not so. It would affect only 56 per cent of the furniture industry because the rest of the production, or 44 per cent, is exported outside the province. As concerns the leather industry, 42 or 43 per cent of the production is exported. In the textile industry, 43 per cent is exported. In the clothing manufacturing industry, nearly 40 per cent of the production is exported, Mr. Speaker. Will the budget proposals of the Quebec finance minister enable furniture manufacturers to sell more furniture outside Quebec? Or will there be an increase in the 55 or 56 per cent of production now sold in Quebec to justify a budget separate from the national budget? Or are the provisions of the provincial budget going to encourage buyers from outside the province, those who buy our leather and textile products, to stimulate the industry in the province of Quebec?

● (1432)

This morning, during the question period, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) emphasized the outlandishness of such an attitude. It destroys the industry in the province of Quebec and stifles its growth by raising a tariff barrier and preventing a certain sector of retail distribution that needs encouragement in the province of Quebec from benefitting from the provisions of the budget proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien).

So, Mr. Speaker, those aspects have not been studied deeply enough and one of the spokesmen, or indeed the only spokesman for the opposition, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), fails to grasp the significance of the problems that might arise from the budget announced last Tuesday by Mr. Parizeau. For instance, he accused hon. members on this side of the House by saying, and I quote:

I heard over the radio this evening a report I hope is true. The report on TV was that a number of members from the Quebec Liberal caucus were meeting this evening to oppose the decision or position taken by the Minister of Finance.

[Mr. Dupras.]

It is absolutely false, Mr. Speaker. And once more he was probably misguided by the media which would be pleased to see a division within the Liberal caucus in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: That's La Salle!

An hon. Member: There is no division!

Mr. Dupras: That's La Salle, as my colleague said and as we say in English, it is wishful thinking.

An hon. Member: There is no division!

Mr. Dupras: There is no division! The caucus chairman already indicated, as I said, that the Minister of Finance has the solid backing of his colleagues as far as his budget is concerned.

An hon. Member: It is the hon. member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme)!

Mr. Dupras: The caucus chairman reminds me it is the hon. member for Saint-Denis, Mr. Speaker.

There was also that question put by the hon. member for Joliette, asking, and I quote:

I ask my friends from the province of Quebec to have the guts to urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) to respect the interests of his own province.

Mr. Speaker, this is something I cannot understand, because no later than this morning reference was made to the Canadian government's generosity to the province of Quebec. Someone said: "Oh, the DREE? Oh yes, in Montreal, the DREE is helping Montreal." They should make up their minds, Mr. Speaker. Is Quebec receiving too much from the federal government, or too little? If the hon. member for Joliette is expressing the views of the opposition, if he in fact is suggesting the Canadian government has not been generous enough to the province of Quebec, well, maybe we should settle this issue. Because I often hear discordant voices, references made to the French Power in Ottawa and all the handouts given the province of Quebec that are not available to other provinces.

He truly betrayed some of his colleagues. It is unfortunate he did not take a few minutes to answer the question put by my colleague from Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) who, having heard such a recital of falsehoods, asked him if he—. . . could tell the House the percentage increase in equalization since 1968?

This of course involves payments to the province of Quebec. I did not compute any figures, but if my memory does not fail me, this could involve more than $9 billion for 1977, while the figure was $300 million in 1968. Certainly this is a truly significant increase.

There may be different views on the hon. member's party on this side of the House, and among those from the province of Quebec opinions may vary from his, but I would not go so far as to suggest what the hon. member for Joliette indicated about his party when he crossed the House once or twice in 1972 and 1973. In any case, Mr. Speaker, I do not think these are words I would like to—

Some hon. Members: Well, go ahead.

Mr. Dupras: My colleagues are challenging me to repeat. I would rather not quote the words of the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle). His party favours decentralization, which means weakening the central power. Of course, once again, he cannot see through the scheme of his colleagues who are bent on curtailing the authority of the central government. Let me explain. Of course, if we could reduce the taxation power of the central government, this would benefit two provinces in particular: Alberta and Ontario. As a matter of fact, this would directly affect the equalization payments program. He does not realize that each time the leader and the hon. members of his party advocate decentralization and a reduction of federal powers, they are in fact talking about this program. The main reason why they want to take some of the taxation power away from the central government is to stop equalization payments not only for the province of Quebec, but also for the Atlantic provinces. He has not yet seen through his colleagues' guile and his leader's intention to cut down on the tax power of the central government.

An hon. Member: Which leader?

Mr. Dupras: Someone asks, "Which leader?"

An hon. Member: They do not have any.

Mr. Dupras: They may have two to date. There is one who refused to give unanimous consent yesterday so that we could all start campaigning and live up to the mandate Canadian voters gave us in 1974. His refusing unanimous consent is hard to understand. Does this mean the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is apprehensive about the next campaign? Or is it his contention that the present government is doing so well now that its mandate should be extended? Those questions are worth asking. Anyway, in the Province of Quebec as in most of the other provinces, Canadians support this government. We had evidence of that. People appreciated the government's action when, for example, we introduced compensation payments for oil products, which allowed the Eastern consumers in Quebec, the Maritimes, the Atlantic provinces, the province of my hon. friend from St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), to buy oil at Canadian prices. And that does credit to the generosity and understanding of the people in Alberta. I say the same thing in the province of Quebec, Mr. Speaker. This is further evidence of the great benefits of Canadian confederation: a part of the country, a part of the population is willing to provide temporary assistance to another which does not enjoy similar economic benefits.

All the same, this program was first endorsed by the people in Alberta, by their government, to the benefit not only of the Atlantic provinces but of Quebec as well. The figures which were released this morning suggest that by the end of 1978, the province of Quebec will have received $3 billion under the petroleum compensation program. That is quite an amount of money which not only helped people who drive their children to school or to deliver the goods they manufacture but which has contributed to keep our industry competitive, the agri-food industry which is so sick in the province of Quebec and elsewhere, and all eastern industries which have enjoyed a Canadian price as well as the rest of the country.

There are also all the Quebec-Canada programs under which agreements have been entered into with the province of Quebec. I refer more often to the province of Quebec that to other provinces, because I am trying to make my colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) aware of the advantages of the Canadian Confederation. First of all, he is not convinced of that and I would ask him to commend the generous policy of the Canadian government to his colleagues in his party. That is his weakest point. Indeed, he does not manage to uphold the generosity, the openness of mind shown by the Trudeau government for the economic development of the province of Quebec.

I said a few moments ago that agreements representing investments of $200 or $300 million for the province of Quebec have just been signed. These agreements provide for road construction, the creation of parks to stimulate the tourist industry and a set of other measures which I hope will help eradicate the unemployment that plagues mainly Quebec. One could have foreseen, Mr. Speaker, that following the election of a separatist party in 1976, unemployment would strike very hard in my province. No matter how much money the federal government may inject in industry and the public sector for job creation, if the provincial government does all it can, through ill-advised measures, to thwart economic development, there is not much we can do. It seems also that people are encouraged to refuse the kind of work only people from foreign countries, mainly the Caribbean islands, are prepared to do.

Also, Mr. Speaker, if the current slide of the Canadian dollar is deplored by several sectors of our economy, I know of some industries in my riding that are pleased with it. Of course, I would not say that the dollar must stay low or under the 90 cents level compared to the U.S. dollar. But I dare not think of the problems and the unemployment we would have if the Canadian dollar had not been devaluated. In fact, the dollar has not been devaluated, but was subject to the law of supply and demand, and the value of the dollar today, as the Prime Minister pointed out during the question period this morning, is based on the productivity and performance of the Canadian economy.

This allows Quebec industries, some in particular such as fine paper, to recover the markets lost during the strike in the fine paper industry in 1976. This also allows other industries to develop business in the U.S. and in Europe with the hope of retaining such business when the dollar regains its true value which, when compared to the U.S. dollar, is certainly not 100 cents to the dollar. But in the short term, Mr. Speaker, this had definite advantages for Canadian products in that it promotes our exports and job creation.

Naturally, there are other causes for the fluctuations of the dollar, if one considers, for example, the performance of the tourist industry in Canada, with a deficit of almost $2 billion in 1977, and this could double in a few years if drastic measures are not taken. Mr. Speaker, we should be very happy with the provisions contained in the budget which will indeed help promote the tourist industry.

This leads me to consider the provision contained in the Quebec provincial budget which removes the 8 per cent tax on hotel rooms. The budget brought down by the Minister of Finance aimed at stimulating the economy and creating jobs. The removal of the 8 per cent tax on hotel rooms will only attain those aims in a few years. Allow me to explain, Mr. Speaker. The tourist industry has suffered, especially in Montreal and in Quebec City, from the lack of major conventions. As we all know, conventions are prepared years in advance so that the people who will be holding conventions in 1980 and 1981 have already signed agreements and made reservations either in North America or in Europe. So this tax cut is only window-dressing, because if you look at the facts, it is very impressive, as it will not really prompt Canadians to visit the province of Quebec unless other corrective action is taken and other measures adopted.

There are two other things, Mr. Speaker, which I could say about the Quebec budget, since they are trying by that new scheme to undermine the strong conviction held by the Canadian people that the Canadian confederation is really working well for all Canadians throughout the country. More than ever in Quebec, the people have such a conviction, as I realized Wednesday last, Mr. Speaker, at my nomination meeting. My fellow citizens, my constituents, are looking to the Canadian government which they consider as their own, with which they can hold a dialogue, a government that listens to its electors and the people of the province.

One only has to consider, for example, the treatment given to the Quebec Council of municipalities at its last convention, where all kinds of tactics were used to keep the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) away, because he had indeed developed a credibility with the civic authorities who found out that this federal minister listened to their grievances and tried by every possible means to help them disprove the arguments put forward by the Quebec premier.

● (1442)

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the decision of a distinguished member of the opposition not to seek re-election. It is no wonder that the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) has decided not to run again.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Why don't you make your choice for Canada and quit too?

Mr. Dupras: I would make the same decision if I were a member of that party. The hon. member for Don Valley can count on my admiration.

Mr. McKinnon: Like John Turner and Donald Macdonald.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Macdonald and Basford are doing the same thing.

An hon. Member: And Mitchell Sharp.

Mr. Dupras: I know it has not been easy for the hon. member for Don Valley. I know he has had difficulty convincing his colleagues about a few economic matters.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Why don't you partake in public service and quit?

Mr. Dupras: That is wishful thinking. I know the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) would like me to quit, but I was re-nominated.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are good for comic relief.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary has the floor.

Mr. Dupras: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to end my remarks by saying that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) needs help. I know he is seeking help from his provincial colleagues. He has consulted them and tried to learn their views on the budget.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition really needs help, and it is not his lack of understanding of the special problems in Quebec nor his support of a separatist budget which will earn him votes in Quebec.

[English]

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate this afternoon. While training for my profession I was counselled not to depend upon the size of a listening audience but to make my presentation as though the whole world were listening. Today I have the opportunity to speak in this debate. I am not sure how many people will listen to me, but there are certain things I would like to say anyway.

Back in October, 1977, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) bootlegged a mini-budget into the throne speech debate, the response of this party was that the minister was only tinkering with the system to avoid a full-fledged budget debate. In fact the minister declined to call his mini-budget a budget. He called it an economic statement. Nevertheless, there were some similarities, and perhaps the mini-budget of last October was more like a real budget than the one we are discussing today.

We on this side felt that the minister's response last October to the economic realities of the country was completely inadequate. Since last October whenever we on this side of the House have called for firm and decisive action, the minister's response has been to say that we have to wait until we see the results of the measures introduced last October. We have been told we have to wait until the results of those measures trickle down and it becomes obvious as to the extent to which the proposals are effective. At one point the minister even tried to insult the intelligence of the Canadian people by suggesting that the measures announced by his predecessor, Mr. Macdonald, on March 31, 1977, had not yet taken effect. I suppose if those measures did not take effect, certainly the ones introduced last fall could hardly be expected to produce results today.

The minister has made his first legitimate budget statement in this House, and as my leader pointed out so aptly yesterday, it was the minister's first and last budget. We find ourselves in the same situation we were in previously. The minister has tinkered here and fiddled there, with the same lack of commitment and the same ignorance of economic reality. The same thing happened in March and in October of 1977. It has been said that Nero fiddled while Rome burned, and I think possibly it would be appropriate to say that in this instance Chrétien tinkered while Canada tumbled.

● (1452)

Nothing illustrates more the utter bankruptcy of this government's policies than the tumble of the Canadian dollar on the world money markets. This has been more pronounced even since the minister made his budget statement a few evenings ago. The morning after the budget announcement, the dollar sank to a low of 87.57 cents. Then it continued to tumble downward to its current level of 86.79 cents in terms of the U.S. dollar as of noon today. This indicates in a frighteningly dramatic way that the international community of economic experts have no confidence whatever in the government's ability to meet the serious problems facing our nation at present.

While I am on this point may I just say that Canadians should be outraged at the way this government has handled the decline of the dollar. It is bad enough that the dollar has fallen, but in the long slide from its former level to its current level Canadians have lost between $1 billion and $1.5 billion. This is money wasted, and I say Canadians should be outraged. On the one hand, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says we have a floating dollar, and this was stated again by the Minister of Finance, and on the other hand the Minister of Finance pours $1.5 billion down the drain to keep the dollar from floating. It is precisely this kind of indecision and dishonesty on the part of the government which causes lack of confidence in the Canadian dollar.

I believe it is time the Prime Minister and his government came clean with the Canadian people on this issue: do we have a floating dollar or do we not?

Mr. Sharp: Yes.

Mr. Patterson: If we have a floating dollar, then why go to the trouble of trying to prop it up and, by this means, keep it from floating? Someone said yesterday that the dollar has been floating. It has been sinking until today, and if you want to see it, you have to wear goggles and a snorkle. Perhaps we should consider that. Perhaps it is time to put away the wishy-washy economics of expediency and introduce some basic directional changes.

All of our reputable domestic economic analysts were in agreement prior to the budget's introduction that a complete structural turn-around was necessary in our economic and fiscal policies to restore confidence in our national economy, get the country working again, and stem the tide of spiralling inflation. In this task the minister has failed miserably. All he could do was just to tinker around with it. I think we could say that Macdonald the thumper has been replaced by Chrétien the tinker.

I say that structural changes are necessary in this country, but there appears to be no desire on the part of this tired, aging, weak government to put any direction into our national economy. The government has been preoccupied with many other matters, in fact so preoccupied that it has no time or desire to pay attention to the critical economic matters facing us.

I remember that for months the government trumpeted the idea that, after all, the major problem in Canada was national unity and that, if we were to achieve national unity, it was going to be by the implementation of linguistic policies, and everybody had to accept that. The responsibility and the blame were placed upon the English speaking people of this country, and the result was a great deal of resentment. But in later times, when things began to get pretty tough and the Prime Minister came alive, he and some of his ministers began to say that, after all, the most important problem facing Canada was the economy. I am not just sure what they think is the most important problem. The Prime Minister has been too concerned with the language policy and with other matters concerning the contractual link with the European Economic Community. He and his ministers have been determined to change the social structure of Canada and to change the moral values of this nation. They have been too busy with these things to take care of the fundamental problem that confronts us, namely, that if we cannot solve our economic problems we will not have the occasion to take care of our country in the long run.

We come to the conclusion then that after looking at the picture as it has developed, an exodus of supporters of the government has begun, and an exodus of cabinet ministers, which is very significant. My friend, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Dupras), was talking about the ones who have decided not to run for the Conservative party this time, but I ask him why has John Turner left, why has Paul Hellyer left, why have many others left, such as Don Macdonald, for instance? Were they unimportant individuals? Did they not count in the make-up of the cabinet or in the make-up of the party? Where did they go and why did they go? How can the government go to the people and tell them "return us", when many of their most important, influential and able ministers could not stand it and left?

An hon. Member: They are left with their disabled.

Mr. Patterson: It is quite evident where the lack of confidence is. They just could not see themselves supporting the lack of policies that had characterized this government, so they pulled out and said they were not going to waste their time.

I should like to call attention to some of the promises that were made by this government. I think of one in the 1974 election campaign, about transportation. I know that there is a reference to transportation in the budget speech, but if it does not mean any more than the promise that was made in the riding of Fraser Valley East some years ago, then nobody can look forward to getting any results from it. I just mention the fact that at that time the Prime Minister stated that there would be a rapid transit system put through the Fraser Valley to Vancouver. I know that this promise was made in order to try to prop up the Liberal candidate, but when I raised the issue in the House of Commons I was told that such a promise had not been made. Well, I will leave it to the people of Fraser Valley East to decide whether or not the Prime Minister made this promise. Certainly it was made in the Fraser Valley, it appeared in the papers, and yet we have not seen it fulfilled.

The agricultural community in Fraser Valley East and in other parts of B.C., as well as in some of the other western provinces, have given up hope that the government will fulfil its 1974 promise to adjust the freight rates so as to bring justice and fairness to the movement of goods between eastern and western Canada. I am glad the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is here because this matter has been brought to his attention on a great many occasions. Those engaged in secondary industries and in the processing industries are facing insuperable problems because of the fact that the freight rates are loaded against them. The result is that they are suffering economically because no attempt has yet been made to take any remedial action in this regard. Conferences have been held, promises have been given and glowing statements have been made regarding what was going to be done in order to assist in the development of western Canada and the development of secondary industry, but we have not seen them yet.

● (1502)

I intended to call attention to another matter yesterday, but because of lack of time I did not raise it. Again this morning I was unable to do so. I should like to make reference to the dairy situation in the province of British Columbia. Representations were made by the Fraser Valley Milk Producers Association a few days ago. They pointed out the need for some changes as far as dairy policy is concerned. They pointed out that the provincial market shares of the national quota of 100 million cwt are as follows: British Columbia, 3.1 per cent; Alberta, 6.7 per cent; Saskatchewan, 2.5 per cent; Manitoba, 3.9 per cent; Ontario, 31.4 per cent; Quebec, 48 per cent; the maritime provinces, 4.3 per cent.

As far as British Columbia was concerned, even though there might be some justification for it when the quotas were established in 1971, changes have taken place. The population of British Columbia has grown tremendously. The consumption of fluid milk has grown and is continuing to grow. British Columbia is self-sufficient, as far as fresh milk is concerned for the fluid trade, but it produces only 20 per cent of its industrial milk needs. The document went on to indicate that approximately nine million cwt of milk is produced in British Columbia. About six million cwt is sold on the fresh market, and the balance of three million cwt is the market share quota of British Columbia. This is the total allowable amount of industrial milk which can be produced in British Columbia, as established by the Canadian milk supply management committee several years ago.

Another statement referred to the fact that it is important that the market for semi-fluid products be allowed to grow and that milk production in the province of British Columbia be allowed to expand in a relative fashion. Also the document indicated that industrial milk plants at Abbotsford and Sardis should be increased to enable them to maintain viable plants with trained staff in order to meet the needs of the dairy industry in British Columbia.

I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) the following question: In view of the fact that fluid milk consumption in British Columbia is increasing, and in meeting this demand there will of necessity be an increase in the production of milk, will he consider the desirability of recommending the granting to that province of a higher percentage of the provincial market share quota, or through another mechanism, in order that the industry will be permitted to expand within its industrial production? I think this request is very valid. Because of the changing circumstances and situations, provision must be made for the expansion of that industry in British Columbia.

Another question I should like to ask is: As surplus milk must be of sufficient volume to allow for the maintenance of an adequate processing facility and trained staff, and as all such milk produced on the lower mainland of British Columbia and Vancouver Island is processed by the two Fraser Valley milk producing plants in Abbotsford and Sardis, will the minister call upon the Canadian Dairy Commission to call a meeting of the national supply management committee at the earliest possible moment to resolve this problem which is affecting seriously the British Columbia dairy industry?

The agricultural producers of British Columbia are working under enough handicaps, some of which I have pointed out. The time has come when greater attention must be given to some of these matters, rather than the matters which seemingly take up so much of the government's time.

As we are considering the other matters in this debate, and as we look at the various needs which have been brought to our attention, it is incumbent upon the government to make a serious attempt to remedy the situation which has developed and which is continuing in this nation. Some semblance of reality must be brought into the entire picture. The government has not acted in a manner which will produce the results we require or solve the problems facing us. Instead of spending so much time on other matters, the government should give attention to the basic problem of dealing with the fundamental issues before us. Budgets to help solve those problems should be brought in. They should meet the needs and answer the requirements of Canadians. In view of the promises made and not kept, how can the Prime Minister expect anyone to believe the promises he has made now and will make in the future?

May I now say something about the sales tax cut announced by the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Prime Minister told a press conference that negotiations had been ongoing with the provinces for weeks and weeks on the issue of sales tax cuts. He reprimanded the Quebec minister for coming up with a new suggestion on 24 hours' notice. The actual truth is the four western premiers felt so strongly about the lack of consultation by the federal government in this move that they issued a joint statement last night criticizing the Minister of Finance for his unilateral action. Where is the truth in what the Prime Minister told the press yesterday? There is a misunderstanding somewhere. Someone is not stating the clear facts. I prefer to believe what the western premiers have said. The consultation referred to was far from adequate. Their representations are worth careful consideration by the government in this respect.

The net effect of the budget of the former minister of finance, and the mini-budget of October presented by this Minister of Finance, has been rising unemployment and spiralling inflation. If the House is sitting in the coming weeks and months, we will continue to hear the old song by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance that the measures have not taken effect yet and that we should give them a chance to work through the system. How long do Canadians have to wait? How long does it take to bring about economic sanity? One gets the impression the government is just biding time, waiting for something to happen. They used to blame the weather for our economic ills. Then it was world conditions. For a while it was women and young people who were the cause of our problems. At his press conference yesterday, it is my understanding the Prime Minister announced it was the world again. The government can go on biding its time, but the situation will not improve, not under this administration.

The only solution is to proceed in the manner the country has been looking for, which is an election. An election will result in a change in administration and bring in a government headed by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), who will meet this challenge and bring sanity, guidance and leadership to the country. My leader spoke very eloquently yesterday in outlining some of our party's policies to meet the challenges of our country, including a five-year development strategy to achieve some of those structural changes to which reference has been made. He referred to our proposal to put more investment into food production and food processing, to accelerate the development of our nation's oil sands and heavy oil reserves, to construct a reversible pipeline from the west to Atlantic Canada, to rebuild the fishing and ship building industry in Atlantic Canada, and to upgrade the loading facilities in the port of Vancouver.

● (1512)

My leader also referred to permanent tax cuts of $300 per person to help stimulate demand and production. He referred to our policy to freeze public service hirings and thereby cut the public service. He expressed the importance of sunset laws which should be introduced. He referred to a freedom of information act that would be brought in by a Conservative government.

He also outlined our policy to assist small business, which is the backbone of our economic system, and to approve income tax to a limit of $5,000 per year to encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian small business. In view of the fact that small business activity is the backbone of the Canadian economy, providing at least 60 per cent of the job opportunities in the nation and contributing a huge slice of the tax revenue to the public coffers, and in view of the contribution that has been made by the small business sector of our country, I believe this government ought to take the challenge more realistically and come up with something that will be of advantage and benefit to those who are struggling to keep their operations going, sometimes having to work double shifts themselves in order to meet demands made upon them by governments in the way of statements, records, reports and so on. There ought to be some realistic programs outlined which will bring some assistance to these hard-pressed businessmen who are struggling to make a go of it in Canada.

These are good policies and a few of them have been outlined here this afternoon. They are economically sound and are needed to put this country back on the road to recovery. Again I suggest that the only solution is an election. This will decide how many of those wonderful people from the other side will be back here. I think a lot of them will run but will not be back. We will miss them, sure, but there will be others who will take their place, who will be able to contribute in a superior manner to the debates and discussions that go on in this place, and make their contributions to the preparation of policies that will be of tremendous value and importance to the economy of this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on this quiet Friday afternoon I would like to comment briefly on the speech made Monday night by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) when he introduced the new budget. While I was listening to him, I got the impression that he was a member of a new government because, at the beginning of his speech, he was more or less condemning his predecessor's policy. Is not that playing fair? He said that our gross national product has gone down from 5 per cent in 1976 to 2.6 per cent in 1977. It is a fact everybody is aware of, but to recognize it in his speech, particularly in his first real budget speech takes, I think, a lot of courage.

He also said that the number of unemployed young people has increased. We now have over one million unemployed in Canada. We should not be proud of that. It is a crying shame to have so many healthy people without work. There is a saying that applies here: idleness is the mother of all vices. No wonder delinquency is on the rise in Canada. An able-bodied man who is idle will sooner or later get into mischief. This is human. All the same, I should like to emphasize the good points of this budget, because it has its good points. It would be unusual if it were all bad. For example, pension plans have been improved. I think this is a beneficial measure which will benefit a number of people who have the means to invest in a pension plan. But obviously, for the great number of unemployed, it will not change much.

There is another point on which I agree, the changes proposed to the incorporated family farms which will allow farmers to enjoy a tax provision which did not apply to them before. Those are excellent measures.

As for the provisions related to industrial development, to energy and railways, they are necessary and will certainly benefit some people, but I am very skeptical as to their ability to deal with unemployment in the near future. What I find amazing with this government is their capacity to bring forward all kinds of minor measures which are good in themselves, along with their incapacity to bring forward any major responsible measures designed to deal with our most serious problems at present: unemployment and inflation. Of course when your hands are tied behind your back by financiers, as I said today to the Minister of Finance, it is difficult to get the job done. That is where the real problem is, in my view.

● (1522)

When it comes to social measures, the government has come up with challenging suggestions. I must say at the outset, as I pointed out a moment ago, that the tax free transfer of family farms has been extended to farms registered as corporations. We have been demanding this for a long time. The government has finally understood the validity of our case. I am sure this measure will encourage young people to go into farming.

We must encourage young people if we want them to maintain their interest in agriculture and save this basic industry that Canada needs. I am seriously concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the declining number of young people who should be interested in farming and in the agricultural industry. Of course, if all our policies result in a massive transfer of our youth from rural to urban areas, it is obvious that time will come when we will find ourselves in a very unfavourable situation in comparison with a number of countries. If we have to import too many food products to satisfy our needs, we will of course become dependent on others. The situation would then be much worse than it is today. On the other hand, I think this policy should help, at least I hope so, in limiting the rural exodus and should be an incentive for our young farmers to keep them interested in this vital activity, farming and farm production in Canada.

I would like to point out in passing—I did so briefly yesterday—that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has finally told farmers as well as industrial and fluid milk producers what the dairy policy of the government is going to be for the next few months. I was pleasantly surprised to see there were some aspects which I have been advocating all along and which are finally being implemented in our policy; the period change, the new dairy policy schedule. I received the official release only this morning, I had the opportunity to review it thoroughly and today I made a point of mailing many copies to producers who have been asking me questions on this matter for a long time. I think it is my duty to help inform people of legislation which might be beneficial to them. And it is also my duty to make suggestions to the government. I would like to take advantage of the budget debate to make one, I would like the government to study seriously the possibility of providing in its policy, in its financial policy, a rebate on some farm products or on some Canadian dairy products with a view to promoting the consumption of these products in the country and second, increasing the purchasing power of consumers and needy families. Mr. Speaker, this is nothing new. Through its legislation, through the propositions made to the provinces to pay compensation as an incentive for reducing or even abolishing retail sale taxes, the government is already doing that.

It would be much easier for the government to proceed directly under the federal jurisdiction; the same purpose would be achieved with less confrontation. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this discount will increase the consumer's purchasing power, but he is the one who decides on what goods he wants a discount, because, after all, the consumer is always right and he is the one who chooses the products he wants to buy.

We established that policy, as I already stated in this House, a few years ago, under a minority government that had the good idea to comply with the requests of the people, and it was of particular benefit to the families. During several months, more than $181 million were distributed without any confrontation, but today with the federal approach of urging the provinces to cut their sales tax, we saw what happened in the last 24 hours. The Quebec government has decided to apply that cut in the weakest sectors. In other words, when I buy $1 item in Quebec, I must now pay $1.08, and under the policy announced in the budget, the consumer will pay only $1. Then, this is a discount on the retail price but it has been transferred from the federal to the provincial jurisdiction, and this is the cause of the present confrontation. It worries me so much that I warned today that we should proceed carefully and sensibly, if we want to avoid constitutional crisis.

Now, I do not think that this government will solve the problem through the proposed measures. The federal government will compensate a part of this cut will a $11.5 billion deficit, which means that future generations will have to pay for our present spending because this budget increases our deficit, our national debt, by $11.5 billion. Sooner or later, we shall have to find a means of repaying that debt. This is what I call a debt system. If that system is good, it will give good results, as a good tree bears good fruits and a bad tree bad fruits. You judge a tree by its fruits, everyone knows that, it is in the Scriptures. So we can judge a system by its results.

Mr. Speaker, this system takes us on a very dangerous course. Although in the 1978-1979 budget, there seems to be an effort to protect the individuals and the taxpayers at the same time, the extraordinary thing is that in fact a heavier tax burden is being placed upon them. One just has to look at the budget to see it! In the budget, which has been in effect since April 1 the increase in the personal income tax is of about $1.34 billion; while the increase in the corporate tax is only of about $495 million. We have been asking for a review of the tax structure for a long time now in order to reduce the tax burden on the individual, we have been asking for a fairer distribution in view of the fact that 60 per cent of Canada's revenues are in the hands of multinational corporations while the remaining 40 per cent go to the individuals. It is imperative to strike a balance because it is the little man who is paying for the big shot. We make sure that the rich get richer and the poor get poorer.

• (1532)

That is why I would suggest, in order to bring about a fairer and healthier administration, a measure which comes under federal jurisdiction, namely a cut in the sales tax on building materials. The provinces could not say a darned word about it since it is a matter of federal jurisdiction. In this way, we would increase the income of families and individuals without the risk of a constitutional crisis as the one which is forthcoming. We would give the building industry a boost and that sector of the Canadian economy could start out with greater enthusiasm.

Builders and contractors could use their equipment, workers in every building trade could go to work, and automatically the government could derive revenues from their income tax, according to a well-known formula, and automatically the wheels would start to grind again without anybody being hurt.

Mr. Speaker, there is also another sector involved. I remember, and this was repeated once more yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) when I asked him whether he would not be ready to study another method of financing the public sector so that private savings, the savings of private citizens be left to the private sector so it could use them to cover its financing needs, and the federal government in turn could get its financing requirements by creating new money, because the government's purpose is to increase the money supply for those who need it. Since this is a worthwhile purpose, why not, as I said yesterday, at least give serious consideration to the possibility of replacing the debt-oriented system of the public sector by a more social kind of credit system, putting the Bank of Canada to work as it were, increasing the money supply to the extent that discounts would be used by consumers not haphazardly but to the extent those people would buy, to the extent consumption would go up, to the extent they would take advantage of the available discounts. There, Mr. Speaker, you have the regulating factor.

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance told me he had studied that in 1963 and he had found it absolutely impossible. Well, how often have I not been told that if this monetary theory were to be used, there would be inflation in Canada. There would be unemployment, there would be chaos. But what is the situation in 1978? Do we have inflation? Do we have unemployment? Do we have chaos?

An hon. Member: It would be worse.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): An hon. friend over there says it would be worse. Maybe it would be worse, but is it not "worse enough" already? It has also been said this would force the Canadian dollar down. This is said derisively, but there is nothing funny about that. It is awful to know the Canadian dollar now trades at 87.2 cents. It is terrible to see that our dollar is down to 87.2 cents today. Were that to happen under an administration headed by people like me, who believe in Major Douglas' political and economic theory known as Social Credit, we would be charged with all the sins of the world.

Miss Bégin: For sure!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, and it would make you happy. But this time, it is your own administration, your own system of credit, of debts, and it is terrible. Listen to this carefully: in 1975—you are laughing, you think it is funny, but the young people, tomorrow, will judge you harshly. It is not very funny. In 1975, Mr. Speaker, our debt as Canadians, at the federal level, amounted to $19 billion. We could live with the interest on that debt since that debt went as far back as July 1, 1867. But three years later, to the officials of the Department of Finance, at the meeting held to brief us before the budget speech on Monday night, I put the following question: What is at present, as of March 31, the net debt of Canada? It took them some time to check it up.

Finally they found that it amounts to $39.800 billion. It more than doubled over three years. What outstanding achievements have we to show for it? What great things, Mr. Speaker, what have we accomplished, Mr. Speaker, to justify more than doubling our debt? Have we had to spend enormous amounts of money on National Defence to ensure the safety of our borders? Of course not—yet our debt has doubled. We started on our new budget on April 1 and we are told that our deficit will be about $11.5 billion, which will increase the debt in Canada to $51.300 billion. Let us think about it seriously, the way things are going, we are accumulating $31 million debt each day, and we cannot afford to give the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) who is here now, more money to increase the number of very good programs such as Young Canada Works. We have—

Mr. Béchard: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) is raising a point of order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) allow me a question?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Certainly.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of his remarks the hon. member for Bellechasse referred to the total debt of Canada and said: Do we have a navy? Do we have this or that? The hon. member for Bellechasse knows the answer to those questions but is he aware that all Canadians, among other benefits, receive free medical care? Does he consider the health of the Canadian people as a national debt?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Bellechasse has the floor.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): That's a very good question, but that's not the area which gets us in the red.

Miss Bégin: We'll come to it.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) says that we'll come to it. I am looking forward to discussing it. After all, that is what parliament is all about. That's why we are here. We are here as members of parliament, as representatives of our constituents to deal with their problems. If, hon. members on the other side are able to justify such spendings, good for them, but it will take a lot of efforts on their part to convince me because if we really tried, if we were serious about our responsibilities, if we did our job, things would be different. We are under the control of monetary powers, and while we run into debt, while we make hundreds of thousands of unemployed, the financial institutions get richer. They have made record profits since 1967. Has this been considered?

● (1542)

The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) made a comment. He asked me a question to which I would like to reply very seriously. I know that the federal government shares the responsibility for public health with the provinces. It is not in this area that we have serious problems. I would like to have truly meaningful figures. Let us be serious. In 1977-78, servicing the debt, or the interest that we must pay, cost $5,425 million, and in the present budget it amounts to $6,650 million, or an increase of $1,225 million. The interests on this debt do not go mostly to Canadians. Foreign interests own $106 billion of our debt and they are the ones who get the interests, even though we could make other arrangements. There is no risk in trying. Some may say that if we change our public financing system, perhaps the Americans, the Italians or the Germans will not like it, since they are the major source of our borrowing. I cannot understand how a country like Germany, which suffered complete defeat in two world wars, can lend us money 30 years later. We are indebted towards Germany. The victor is indebted towards the vanquished. Such a situation is unthinkable.

What do we suggest? It is not enough to criticize, we must also suggest alternatives. Answers have been found elsewhere. The June 28, 1977 issue of Le Devoir, people also think about finance elsewhere, refers to interest-free bank loans with charges limited to administration costs. This has been done. This article says:

> The bank charges its borrowers only its own costs. It is a commercial business like any other which is trying to prove that it is possible to increase its capital without charging interests. Loans of more than $63 million have been granted to Turkey, Algeria, Jordania, Sudan, Bangladesh and Somalia.

Good heavens, if that is possible over there. I recently heard the Prime Minister say in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), that if you can find us a lender who will lend us money without interest, we are certainly prepared to administer the country that way. Mr. Speaker, our Prime Minister is much smarter than that. He knows the financial side of things from A to Z. He knows it very well, but he feels incapable of letting go.

That is why it is our duty, and your duty on the government side, on the side of the majority, to do your utmost to advise the Prime Minister, so that he finally decides to table the bank act, which we have been waiting for two years. You know it on the other side, you are well aware of it. Mr. Speaker, this act which should be before parliament and which we should consider and pass after amending it by removing section 72, which gives the banking system—I am not speaking of individuals, but of the system—which gives the banking system, the power to cash in on the credit of the people, a credit which is created by individuals, by Canadians and not by banks, to cash in on the credit of the people through private institutions to get the country into debt, to get the public sector into debt, that, in my view, is criminal. Our credit should be cashed in by—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I must inform him that his time has expired.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if I have correctly understood the speeches and remarks of the two parties of the opposition I have heard so far during the budget debate, Canadians did and won almost nothing in the last decade, or even over the last fifty years and the government did nothing for Canadians that is any good. As far as I can see, it seems all our social programs are worthless, and I have reached the stage when I should have liked to hear the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) talk about them, but he got lost in his monetary theory which unfortunately did not enlighten us—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Give me a chance, and I will tell you!

Miss Bégin: —he attacked the government about the alleged terrible loss of money which he called a debt oriented budget. He mentioned the cost of servicing the debt. He does not seem to understand, unfortunately, how the money machine works: it is a business, an industry, like any other private business in which Canadians are protected against abuses. To the same extent, other businesses are not allowed to make money on people's backs by engaging in criminal activities. Looking horrified he went on to talk about servicing the debt, and insisting he does not accept a deficit budget while Canadians know full well that in hard times such as these we are going through now, we need an expansionary budget; deficit budgeting does not shock them in any way. He did not press the point and would not admit that there is no such thing as a provincial deficit budget for the simple reason that the federal government redistributes the taxpayers' money through equalization payments leaving the provinces clear of external debts, and placing the burden of national debt on the federal government. Had he made this point clear, we would have been pleased to discuss the matter.

Unfortunately, he did not bring up the subject nor any other point worthy of consideration. Neither he nor any hon. member of his party attended any of the meetings which were held with my department officials over the last few weeks, nor did he take part in the debates on the estimates. He blames the government for going into debt, and keeps complaining outside the House and presenting motions under Standing Order 43, although he knows full well no minister is allowed to give him an answer pressing the government to lower to 60 the age to qualify for the old age pension; but neither he nor any hon. member of the Social Credit party of Canada offer a suggestion as to how to finance the lowering—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Not lowering—

Miss Bégin: —to 60 the age of retirement which would automatically cost $2 billion more a year. Everyone is in favour of it. That is not hard. But we are still waiting for the $2 billion. We want to know where they will come from. Yet, we have not heard anything about that.

[English]

As to the official opposition, from what they have been saying up until now, all their attention is fixed on the fact that 8 per cent of the labour force is unemployed rather than on the fact that we have by far the best record of job creation in the western world. Of course, I am not saying it is acceptable to have 8 per cent of one's population unemployed.

An hon. Member: It is for this government.

Miss Bégin: No. It is not. But this government takes care of its unemployed. No one has referred to the fact that Statistics Canada recently released figures showing that 82 per cent of Canadians find their work enjoyable. Only 4 per cent find it unpleasant. Society is not as sick as the opposition wants us to believe.

We keep hearing of alienation, fear, insecurity and bankruptcy. The Tory party even wanted us to opt out of Canada. It is absolutely incredible.

We hear from those who have never been unemployed that our unemployment insurance program is too costly and needlessly generous. We hear it said—falsely—that in order to restore the work ethic, which in truth Canadians have never lost, we should go back to exploiting our many marginal workers for the sake of the affluence of a few. In short, I get the impression, which is far from the truth, that the quality of life in Canada is unpleasant and has deteriorated sharply over the last decade.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, nothing could be further from the truth, and the general thrust of the opposition's criticisms so far in this budget debate shows a lack of direction in their thinking. Incidentally, the same is true regarding many other areas, but especially in the social policy domain, the intellectual irrelevance of the suggestions heard is particularly striking.

[English]

In the six months I have been in this portfolio, I have observed that the Tory opposition has no coherent social policy. It has no comprehensive social policy whatsoever. For example, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) proposes more welfare funding. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) advocates the availability of spouses' allowance to all women between the ages of 60 and 64. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) proposes more funding for medical research while at the same time he opposes any form of income support program. The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) said that by providing the Canada Pension Plan, old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and medicare we have gone too far. What a mélange! What a social policy! At the same time the hon. member urged the government to spend more. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), the official critic on these matters, demands that the federal government cut spending by $2 billion. One wonders.

● (1552)

[Translation]

The general thrust of the opposition's criticisms in the social security and social policy area is that Canadians generally do not like to pay taxes for social security programs since expenses in that area are wasted money and useless. They often suggest that social programs are partly responsible for the excessively high level of government expenses, which creates an unacceptable rate of inflation.

[English]

When the opposition speaks of slashing more and more deeply into government spending they are really talking about cuts in our social programs; and cuts in our social programs will very soon be reflected in a diminution of the quality of life which Canadians have the right to expect. I am delighted to note that the vast majority of Canadians do not agree with the Tory opposition on that proposition. A Gallup poll survey carried out for the Anti-Inflation Board and reported two weeks ago had determined that only 7 per cent of the people blamed the government's social programs for inflation whereas 63 per cent blamed business or labour. Canadians believe in their social programs for the simple reason that they work. They have worked well enough to improve very substantially the quality of life in Canada over the last decade and they can be made to improve it still more in the years ahead. But they will do so only if we retain the steadfastness and good sense to maintain our balance in face of the shrill cries of a tiny minority who would diminish the quality of life of the majority simply because we live in times of economic uncertainty.

Perhaps I could best illustrate what I mean by referring to levels of poverty in Canada. I will certainly not stand here today and claim we have solved the problem of poverty. We must do much more to improve the share of the national income going to our poorer people.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: I am pleased the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is here.

An hon. Member: He is always here.

Miss Bégin: I would also claim that the effect of our social programs on income distribution has been far better than has been generally acknowledged. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pointed out in this chamber, progress against poverty, with poverty defined in terms of having an income below some barely minimum acceptable floor, has actually been quite dramatic over the last decade. According to the measure used by the Economic Council of Canada, only about 10 per cent of Canadians are poor today compared to about 20 per cent in 1967. One could dispute the measure used by the Economic Council and turn to the Senate report on poverty or some other measure, but the fact remains that the percentage of people living in absolute poverty in Canada has diminished tremendously, almost by 50 per cent, in the last ten years.

What I was discussing when I spoke elsewhere of relative poverty was another concept. I spoke of the share of money income going to the poor compared to the share going to other groups in society. I said the proportion had not changed appreciably. If one uses that measure, it can be said we have simply kept pace. The poorest 20 per cent of Canadian families and individuals currently receive about 6 per cent of our money income, while the proportion of revenue to which they have access—this should be noted; it was not mentioned by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he questioned the Prime Minister—would, in the absence of government transfer, have been only about 1.6 per cent.

[Miss Bégin.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is still far too low.

Miss Bégin: It is always too low. We are pleased to see we can count on the support, as so often in the past, of the New Democratic Party as expressed by its official critic in this field.

Earlier today, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) said that when the government took office ten years ago the total budget amounted to the extent of the present total anticipated deficit. In passing, may I mention that he was supposed to have talked about social policy but we did not hear a word about social policy during his speech. Let me remind him and his hon. friends of the situation surrounding government spending ten years ago by comparison with what Canadians receive, what they have at night when they go to sleep. They often fear, eventually, insecurity as a result of being handicapped or suffering the effects of an accident, disease, sickness, a catastrophe in their family life, or any other uncertainty, including unemployment and even, in a sense, maternity—any risk to their jobs. Let us compare the situation ten years ago with the situation now and figure out why there is a deficit, one which, as I suggested in the other official language, is not frightening to Canadians because they realize that their government must bring in an expansionist budget to deal with a difficult economic situation.

In January, 1967, old age security benefit amounted to $75 a month, and that was all that was provided. Today the old age security payments are $153.44 a month and guaranteed income supplement of $107.62 is also available to those who need it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are a month behind. It is $156.66 now.

An hon. Member: But what are those dollars worth?

Miss Bégin: Of course, payments are indexed to the cost of living; an adjustment is made every three months and these amounts have been higher since April 1. There is also a spouse's allowance of up to $249 a month for couples where one partner is over 65 and the other between 60 and 65. In 1967, family allowances were $6 per month for children up to nine years of age. Now they are $25.68 on average, at $308 a year as against $72 ten years ago. Unemployment insurance payments were $25.96 per week in 1967. We have been fighting to improve payments in the face of criticism from many people who have never been unemployed, but they currently amount to $160 a week. I am talking, of course, of the ceilings.

● (1602)

I do not think that is too much when we consider the number of people who support dependants. All these programs have contributed at least to ensuring that the income of Canada's poor did not fall any further behind that of affluent Canadians in recent years.

[Translation]

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to remind my colleagues that a few years ago, none of us knew the word indexation. It was a technical word that was not part of the member's vocabulary, not to mention the public at large. Yet, only three, four or five years later at the most, everybody uses this word; everywhere, in the streets, between neighbours, in the daily newspapers, people discuss the concept of indexation which has been built into most of our social programs and must quite obviously be financed one way or another. I for one believe it is a progressive concept that should not be lost in times of economic uncertainty, when some people panic and question the universality of some of our programs or their indexation to the cost of living or to some other measure of monetary depreciation.

[English]

Furthermore, despite the stability of money income shares, the Prime Minister, when talking about the definition of poverty in Canada, pointed out that absolute poverty has decreased by about 50 per cent in the last ten years. There has been progress in closing the gap between rich and poor which can be identified. Income distribution statistics hide important changes in the distribution of non-money income and in the impact of taxes. Government actions in both these areas have tended to reduce the gap between rich and poor families.

Since World War II federal and provincial governments have co-operated to introduce improved programs. When I refer to federal and provincial governments, I mean the taxpayers of Canada. Programs which provide medical and hospital insurance, education, assisted housing, social services such as day care, counselling and rehabilitation—and I could give a long list—have been developed. Although some of them are universal, these programs have grown steadily in importance and provide benefits which are often directed specifically to low income families.

The benefits of these programs are not reflected in statistics regarding division of income. Similarly, our tax structure is based primarily upon income, and income taxes have become more progressive over the last decade. On this last point I underline the fact that there is still room for improvement. We could, for instance, discuss concepts such as the tax exemption concept, which tends to favour the higher income earners in Canada. By comparison, the refundable tax credit concept tends to favour those who are at the bottom of the income scale.

However, progress has been made, and I welcome the current budget because it ensures reductions in the relatively regressive sales tax. Sales taxes have an across-the-board effect, and because of that those who have little money are most adversely affected. As much as 75 per cent of the income of some people has to be used to purchase consumer goods. I am very pleased therefore, that this current budget acknowledges the regressive nature of sales taxes and that, together with the majority of provinces which have agreed to the program, the federal government will have caused a relaxation of the hardships which are inherent in the sales tax concept.

All things considered, then, real incomes of the poor have risen relative to those of the rich. It can thus hardly be denied that one effect of our social policies over the last decade has been to improve the quality of life of the poorest Canadians.

We cannot yet claim to have done a fully adequate job on their behalf—a theme to which I want to return later—but it should be very clear that deep cuts in government spending, especially combined with the assignment of high priorities to other than the social policy sectors, will inevitably mean a diminution of the quality of the lives of those Canadians least able to defend themselves. Believe me, it will be no compensation to a poor child living in the slums of Montreal or Vancouver or in rural poverty to hear that even his meagre standard of living will be diminished in order to satisfy the misapprehensions of politicians that comfortable upper class Canadians want to cut social program expenditures. I believe that any party or any government which adopts that approach will lead itself to ruin, and worse, will destroy what little hope there is for those who need our help most.

[Translation]

Of course, numerous social programs which have been set up during the last decade or in the last fifteen years do not only benefit Canadians who are poor. Indeed, those social programs improve the quality of life of the vast majority of Canadians, which explains their being so popular. Millions of people in this country of all incomes benefit from the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan, from family allowances, old age security pensions and the guaranteed income supplement. Needless to say that all those who have the misfortune of losing their jobs do not share the views of the members from the official opposition on our present unemployment insurance system which they constantly criticize for being so abusive. That is true for the programs that may exist under the transfer payments which we make to provinces and it is also true of programs which provide services instead of money.

[English]

We are all richer for the fact that our society is compassionate enough to care for those of our people who need services like day care, rehabilitation, counselling or nursing home care. Even more directly, we all benefit from universal access to complete medical care via programs instituted by federal governments over the last three decades.

Indeed, our universal medical insurance programs are rated by the Canadian public as the most popular and worthwhile of all public services. This is hardly surprising, for these programs have ensured that the availability of good health care is the right of all Canadians. In contrast to the situation in the United States, whose lower level of public spending is often cited so favourably by those who would cut into our social programs, no Canadians need lack medical care because they cannot afford it. No Canadian in the last decade has been forced into personal bankruptcy by medical bills, whereas over 10,000 Americans had that misfortune last year.

Look, Mr. Speaker, at the results. Health care costs are a full percentage point of the gross national product lower in Canada than in the United States. Our life expectancy is higher, our infant mortality lower and our morbidity figures consistently better. Our proportion of physicians and other health related professionals exceeds all recognized world standards. Over the last ten years—since the inception of medicare—our situation has improved from one physician in every 734 Canadians to better than one for every 673 Canadians.

● (1612)

What is even better is that regional discrepancies have been greatly diminished. For example, in 1960 the ratio of the greatest to the least amount expended on health care by the provinces was 2.17. By 1973 the ratio had declined to 1.58 and it has since continued to approach the desirable 1.0 level. Similar changes occurred in beds to population and physicians to population ratios. We receive universal access to an excellent standard of health care at a very reasonable cost. In part this is due to the dedication and hard work of those who provide our health care. In no small part it is also due to enlightened social policies.

The health of Canadians is protected in a variety of other ways as well and many of these derive from the health protection activities of my department. For example, there has been a great expansion in the control of potentially faulty medical devices that may endanger health. More and more, doctors rely on valves, tubes, and sophisticated engineering and electronic devices in the diagnosis and treatment of disease. These are vital to medical progress and at the same time the public must be guarded against faulty products such as defective infant incubators or anaesthetic machines. Canada was the first country to institute formal regulatory control of the more than a quarter of a million devices used for health care. Controls have led to removal from the market of 57, 93 and 115 unsafe devices in the last three years respectively.

Important initiatives have also taken place with respect to the quality of drugs. Federal programs strive to ensure that drugs on the Canadian market are safe, pure and effective. In addition to monitoring manufacture, distribution, advertising and sale of drug products, federal government programs include research on such matters as drug quality and toxicity. We have introduced stringent inspection activities, supported by international agreements, and, to take but one other example, we recently introduced the quality assessment of drugs program. This is intended to ensure that lower cost generic drugs, the ones that many Canadians receive through the free drug list in various provinces or simply over the counter in a drug store, are of a quality comparable to expensive brand names and that they can safely be prescribed in order to keep down health care costs to patients.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. minister, but I must inform her that her time has expired. However she may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss Bégin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank my colleagues. I could speak of many other programs. I have touched upon the health programs and the social programs. We could talk of what is being done in the fields of agriculture, the environment, industrial work safety. We could talk of post-secondary education. In short, we could speak of everything which makes up the quality of life of Canadian families, of the fact that parents now have assured protection, garanteed programs covering most of the risk situations in which their children may find themselves.

Let us take post-secondary education, what are we talking about? Well, we are talking about the fact that in 1966, for example, 13.4 per cent of all young people between the ages of 18 and 24 were attending post-secondary institutions, that is approximately 270,000 young Canadians. In 1976, after a decade of federal aid to post-secondary education, through redistribution programs by which richer provinces are helping the less fortunate ones, this proportion had reached 19.6 per cent, that is about 600,000 young Canadians who were enrolled in post-secondary institutions.

I could go on speaking about our programs, but in these difficult times I would like to remind the House of the importance of remaining cool, of being thankful for the well-being achieved by Canadians. There are people who have been here for some time and I have great respect for them. If they were in favour of social policies, we might accept a few from the other side of the House. They are not numerous and are mostly on my right. However, all those who passed medicare will remember that when the program was introduced barely ten years ago, a program which is now taken for granted by many among us who are younger or were not interested in the public life of that period, it was considered revolutionary in Canada. So were most of our social programs.

Why does the federal government have to get involved in health and welfare? It is another question which requires an answer. What do we do in that field? Canadians and our colleagues are familiar with the old type of shared cost programs under which social programs have been developed in Canada as well as in hospitals where different health care and ancillary medical services have evolved from the famous medicare on a fifty-fifty basis. A provincial minister of health or welfare would submit a plan to his cabinet. It was a program-financed on a 50-50 basis. He thus obtained from the federal government, through the Canada Assistance Plan and a number of laws covering medical and hospital cares, half of all costs thus creating our present day well developed system of services and agencies.

This is why it seemed to us reasonable to hand over to the provinces the direct supply of health care which they had begun to assume. Although the federal government had undoubtedly played a leading role over the previous decade, we decided to hand over to the provinces the power to allocate resources, to control fully the financial administration of these programs, and to select the priorities which are of interest to their respective customers. So in 1977, for health services, and in 1978, for social services, we devised a different type of financial arrangement known as block funding.

I have already told the House, when speaking about these arrangements, how pleased I was to negotiate with the provinces in early March on an agreement for block funding of social services. It seemed fundamental to me in times of economic uncertainty to be able to guarantee to the provinces a certain amount of money for ten years. Through what will soon become an act of parliament, during the first five years, this amount will be fully guaranteed, whatever the situation in the country, increasing investments in a vulnerable sector of the economy, namely social services, from $516 million in this the first year to about $2 billion within 10 years.

The reason for the presence of the federal government in health and welfare remains fundamentally not so much a matter of leadership—which we assumed over the last decade, and which is no longer necessary since Canada has an adequate system of services and hospitals—but rather of redistribution. The formula underlying block funding in health and social services is redistribution of the money from the well-to-do provinces to the needy provinces in order to reach within the next decade, the same average per capita investment for all the Canadian people.

● (1622)

[English]

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the kinds of improvements in the lives and health of Canadians which are possible using this approach. It is interesting to speak of the past, but it is important to finish by referring to a few goals for the future. Canada is now a model to other countries. Canadians always have the bad tendency of thinking that they should have an inferiority complex. That is not justified. Canada is a model in preventive medicine. As referred to in a book on new perspectives for the health of Canadians, the care of their health is in their own hands.

In the coming years, this is what we will be doing in the field of health. As to the field of social services and social policies in general, there is still work to do. It is dreaming for hon. members of the House to think a guaranteed annual income of a universal nature would be possible in the coming years. It is a dream because the provinces rejected it in 1975, after years of discussion and negotiation.

I cannot invite all hon. members to join the ranks of the government, but they should realize the government will continue to develop the work already started in income redistribution in this country. Perhaps this will be achieved through tax related programs and using the budgets and expenditures already in place. The government expenditures will not be increased, but as I once said in committee, there could be a shift of approximately half a billion dollars within the total of $12 billion already spent on social services. In summary, the list of opportunities and the accomplishments over the last decade could be multiplied almost endlessly.

I am sure other hon. members would like to contribute to this budget debate. I congratulate the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) for the budget he presented. He did not give in to the loud cry we heard from hon. members on the other side, particularly by those in the Tory party, and unfortunately by the hon. members of the Social Credit party. He did not give in to all hon. members who wanted to cut the social and health programs of this country to the detriment of all Canadians.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the budget debate. Perhaps the next time the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss Bégin) will be very careful and listen to the comments of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), who presented very constructive ideas concerning the social needs of our population.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) showed some recognition of the important shelter needs of Canadians when he presented his recent budget. Unfortunately, the board and lodging benefits for single persons employed at remote work sites fall far short of the mark. Canada has ready evidence of mankind's inability to solve basic food and shelter needs. It is sad to realize that the housing policies of the present government and the present budget provisions promise little hope for the solution of our housing problems. Government controls the access of Canadians to housing funds. Government influences the construction and distribution of housing. Government exercises considerable control over standards and research technology in housing. In short, while housing is an area of provincial jurisdiction, it is not without federal influence. Yet as this budget shows, the present technique for dealing with housing problems is through scattered, ill-planned, fire fighting measures.

The federal government's role in housing ought to focus on such areas as the development of national housing policies, monitoring housing-related conditions, evaluation and review of policies, co-ordination of housing-related efforts, sponsoring the development of new concepts and processes, and the provision of expertise to needed areas. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Statistics Canada offer the federal government instruments for national housing research.

Important levers affecting housing, such as tax and monetary policy, rest in federal hands. There appears to be confusion in federal housing policy in the fact that housing is a national goal with a regional nature. Both constitutionally and practically, housing might best be administered at the provincial level, leaving the federal government free to use its resources of time and finances to support research and co-ordination. Of course, this has been constantly spoken about by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and by the hon. member for St. John's East.

One example of the need for long range, thorough planning is in the area of accommodation for the aged. The pattern for so many of our older citizens is not uncommonly to move from a house to an apartment, to a lodge, to a nursing home. Many of these people have little or no choice of housing design. Too often the resulting housing is unsuitable. Many elderly Canadians feel that less emphasis should be placed on designing housing specifically for their age group. Instead of more attention being placed on designing housing specifically for their age group, more attention should be paid to a plan to integrate the needs of all age groups. This situation and many other housing-related issues point to the need for increased research into various options and improved co-ordination between federal and provincial authorities.

Miss Bégin: It is completely provincial now.

Mrs. Pigott: That is so, but research is not being conducted to ensure that it is properly done. It is not co-ordinated. The hon. Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) is not co-ordinating this type of thing. It is not being done at all.

It is discouraging to see that the budget, delivered at a time when housing difficulties are becoming increasingly critical, did not address itself more directly to the solution of those problems through increased research or aid to home ownership. Housing in Canada is regional in nature and results in the need for a flexible approach on the part of the federal government. In order to promote greater flexibility in the development and implementation of federal-provincial housing policies, avoiding duplication and reducing complexity, this budget could have introduced global funding to the provinces.

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs has promised, promised, promised; but all that came out of his department was the game of musical chairs which he plays with the management level of his department and the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The Canadian home insulation program and the neighbourhood improvement program are examples of the need to re-evaluate and restructure housing policy. In our present circumstances there is no question that energy saving measures are worth-while, necessary and critical. The Canadian home insulation program could be a valuable part of our energy conservation effort. However, the person who observed that a camel is a horse designed by a committee might well be prompted to make the same comment about the CHIP program.

● (1632)

At a time when the Minister of Finance prefaced his budget by those wonderful words suggesting Canadians need to apply themselves diligently to build a better future through hard work and discipline, the management of this program shows no evidence of diligence and discipline. The Minister of Finance in his budget suggested that growth of spending by governments at all levels had been brought down. In that case CHIP is the exception that proves the rule, as Bob and Ray would say.

Instead of reducing spending we have a program administered through a single, central office and through new regional offices, while existing Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation facilities could have been used to take advantage of offices already in place and expertise already in existence. Just eight seats away from the Minister of Finance we have a minister of a department that is doing nothing but duplicating existing building and programs.

Perhaps the one exception to the rule of this duplication was overlooked because there is no Central Mortgage and Housing office conveniently located to the Prime Minister's Montreal riding. That is where he put the new CHIP program. One questions further the duplication of an entirely separate federal administration of the insulation program in light of provincial comments urging the co-ordination integration of federal and provincial conservation programs. It would be a good idea to rename the position of Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Perhaps we could call it the ministry of state for empire building and interference in provincial affairs. Don't you think, Mr. Speaker, that would be a good new name for it?

Why was CHIP not more complete? Imagine not including labour costs and full installation. Who conceived a program for proper insulation in Canada that did not include windows, doors or basements? Of course, we know that CHIP was designed in a hurry in the Prime Minister's office because they thought there was an election coming last August. Everybody knows that the Prime Minister's office specializes in insulating the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the cabinet from the reality of the real needs of Canadians.

While the Canadian home insulation program offers unnecessary duplication, let us take a look at the neighbourhood improvement program which shows us how ineffective management in the ministry led to the elimination of an excellent program. At a time when the Minister of Finance is asking all Canadians to show discipline and diligence the management of one of his fellow ministers has led to the interruption of a rehabilitation program whose expiry date was written into the National Housing Act.

Provincial and municipal response has been strongly in favour of NIP as a vehicle for revitalizing local neighbourhoods. In an era when many areas of federal-provincial contacts are strained, this program was well received. In spite of this positive reaction, and knowing the expiry date well in advance, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs allowed this program to lapse in the absence of any substitute measures. I am afraid the Minister of State for Urban Affairs has been so preoccupied with his party activities that he has not been able to carry out his responsibilities.

Present housing policies show a fascination for numbers. This government seems clearly to believe that a large number of housing starts is the magic solution to the housing problems of Canada. Let us consider the AHOP program. That program is causing great grief to many persons; many people who have already bought this type of housing are unable to keep up the payments. We have heard reports that there are hundreds of thousands of unsold units. With our dreadful unemployment in this country, who can even think of planning to buy one of these houses? There was a hurried approach because the minister wanted numbers, and this has produced economic ghettos. The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) talks about the incredible situation in his riding in respect of these unsold AHOP units. Had there been incentives in this budget to the economy, bringing relief to people who want to buy these or other units, that would have brought a great deal of help to young people and to those of the middle class who need decent housing.

We have a government that has failed in its budget response to rehabilitate the economy, yet it lets a rehabilitation program lapse because the minister is so involved and away from his ministry. This government has failed to deal with inflation, but it certainly knows how to inflate statistics, especially those relating to housing, as though that were a solution to the housing needs in this country. Senior citizens, lower income families and our burdened middle class in the core areas of our smaller towns and cities are crying out for the kind of proper economic planning that should have been in this budget. The housing needs of this country have been ignored by this government. I am deeply sorry for what has happened, because the hundreds of letters that come to us show that this budget could have made the difference but has not.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should initially like to make a few remarks about some of the comments made by other participants in the debate. I was particularly interested in the intercession by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss. Bégin) who is not one of the least progressive ministers in that particular cabinet. Some of the things she has said are things with which we in this party can agree. It is always interesting to see how much credit the minister takes for those measures that her party fought against for some 40 years. Suddenly her colleagues are running around taking credit for almost everything important in the social field.

The facts are really quite different. There is not much point in taking credit for something that was never initiated by that particular party. Almost none of those measures were initiated by the Liberals. We are not averse to see progressive measures coming from NDP conventions being adopted as government policy. We have always accepted that as one of the prices of failure, but of help to the Canadian people. Of course, that may be the story of our life, but I am surprised that the minister would spend so much time this afternoon taking credit for NDP help over the years in providing decent social measures for the people of Canada.

The other aspect of this budget about which I want to comment briefly is that relating to the sales tax. We had a great discussion today during the question period about the apparent upset of the western premiers over this particular budget. We get back to the question of whether they were consulted, how much attention was paid to this matter, and why was it not something raised at the first ministers' conference? The real reason the four western premiers are upset is that the smartest finance minister in Canada is a man called Parizeau, who kept his cards in his pocket until the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien) stood up and committed himself. He then played every one of his cards beautifully. I think it is time somebody stood up in this House and gave Mr. Parizeau some credit. He is a bright minister and this government would be well served to have a minister of finance half as shrewd as that minister from Quebec. The reason the western premiers are upset is that they wish they had been smart enough to do exactly the same thing and not commit themselves in advance and then—

● (1642)

Mr. Lumley: Saskatchewan is going to love you.

Mr. Leggatt: I am pleased we are finally getting a little response. Now they are going to wind up being suckered into that sales tax solution which will see sales tax reduced on imported items—socially undesirable items like the eighteenth variety of under-arm deodorant—or some of the useless imported products that we have. At least we have one government in Canada who was smart enough to say: "Let us just go to the vital areas where additional sales are needed." The reason our western premiers are a little upset is because there is another finance minister in this country who is just a little smarter than all the rest.

An hon. Member: How much money is he getting?

Mr. Leggatt: If he does not get the full share the hon. member can guess who will suffer the penalty. The government cannot get away with treating Quebec one way and the rest of the country another way. It will be very interesting equating Quebec. It will be interesting to see this supposedly fair-minded government handle the distribution of those sales tax moneys. Quebec, Mr. Speaker, has out-thought this particular government, and I give them full credit for having played their cards extremely shrewdly.

Mr. Pinard: Do you wish they win the referendum?

Mr. Paproski: What referendum?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The Chair recognized the hon. member for New Westminster only.

Mr. Leggatt: I liked that interjection, Mr. Speaker, about do we wish they win the referendum. My answer is, "No". There is no doubt that none of the federal political parties are supportive of separation or that referendum. We have fought just as vigorously to make certain that that referendum is defeated. In fact, at the moment it does not look like it has got a very good chance. Having said that, let us not get confused between the question of separation and the question of good government. The present government in the province of Quebec is a far-sight better than the predecessor, and the people of Quebec understand that.

An hon. Member: Look at the polls.

Mr. Leggatt: I agree with my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) when he said that it is not very difficult to be better than the Bourassa government, because there is not much to compare with.

Let us get back to the question of the budget and why it is that we saw much a modest approach by the Minister of Finance. At the present time Canada has an $11 billion deficit. I remember the previous NDP government of British Columbia that was defeated because it went $100 million over and the people were so upset with that terribly inefficient administration. What a terrible thing, $100 million over. The minister of justice at that time said that we had a guy named C. D. Howe who said "What's a million", that we had a Dave Barrett who said "What's a hundred million?". That was a pretty nice political shot. Now we have a government that has been saying year after year "What's $11 billion, it does not really matter, it is just another deficit".

The one thing that I can agree with my Social Credit colleagues on is that $11 billion is just too big a deficit if you are going to try to do the things you have to do for this country. The reason the government put forth such a "slim-pickings" budget is that the Minister of Finance has nowhere to go. The money barons in this world are saying: "You guys are in the hole and you are overspent". What does the government do about that? All they do is play around with someone else's sales tax.

An hon. Member: What would you do?

Mr. Leggatt: I will come to that. I am going to provide the solutions if I have time, and I am sure we can expect to see them right there in black and white after the next Liberal policy convention.

With an $11 billion deficit this government has not room to manoeuvre. It cannot go into massive public spending unless it reorganizes the income tax system. What can you do when you have an $11 billion debt, one and a half million people unemployed, an inflation rate of 9 per cent and a Canadian dollar that is now below 87 cents? I do not know what it is trading at today, but it must be getting close to the 85 cent mark.

I see my colleague, and in fact the member for the area in which I live in Ottawa, shrug his shoulders and say, "What is 85 cents, it does not really matter." It means a great deal to the old people in my riding who have to buy the necessities of life. It has had a bigger impact on inflation than any other single factor. The way the dollar has dropped has meant that the cost of living has risen in such a dramatic way, not for people who are well off, but for low income people, the old people, people who have to spend their money on necessities, many of which are imported.

There is no point, Mr. Speaker, in shrugging our shoulders about a dollar that is now the lowest in value in the lifetime of any member here, with the possible exception of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I am not sure. Certainly it is the lowest in our lifetime. Why is it soft? It is soft because of the $11 billion deficit and also because of another major problem in our economy—and it is one that I do not think many of my colleagues in this House have addressed.

There was a time when people like Walter Gordon, who sat in the Liberal cabinet, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), who sits forlornly at the end of the front bench outside of that cabinet, Eric Kierans, who is now doing his duty to Canadians by providing some very skilled economic advice—which the government continues to reject—had a voice in this place. The common agreement amongst these people was that this country is owned and dominated abroad, and unless you begin to tackle that problem you cannot begin to tackle the major problems of the economy in Canada. Those chickens are now coming home to roost in a way that the hon. member for Windsor West, Mr. Kierans, Walter Gordon and the Committee for an Independent Canada have been predicting over the last 10 years. It has been predicted by these people for the last 10 years that this would happen unless something was done about foreign ownership and foreign domination of the Canadian economy.

Let me remind the House what the figures are regarding foreign domination. These figures were published in 1977 and they continue to get worse: 57 per cent of Canadian manufacturing is owned abroad, 99 per cent of the rubber industry, 96 per cent of our automobile and parts industry, 85 per cent of the chemical industry, 71 per cent of electrical goods, 63 per cent of agricultural equipment and 57 per cent of transportation.

Then the government comes forward with this marvellous research and development feature in the budget. If the government wanted to do something about research and development they would repatriate this economy. Then we would get some money spent on research and development, because multinational corporations do not spend money on research and development in Canada. There is no point in their doing it. They spend that money at their head office. They create those jobs at head office so that they can sell products to Canada without bringing Canada into the market to sell our own products abroad produced with our own technology.

The domination of the Canadian economy by foreign ownership has meant that Canadians continue to be the last hired and the first fired. With a head office in New York and with a board of directors who know and like New York, when making an economic decision in bad times, the first plant such a company are going to shut down will be the one in Canada. What has been the response of this government? They have turned the Foreign Investment Review Act into a welcome wagon. The previous portfolio of the Minister of Finance was to change the entire thrust of that mechanism and he changed the policy of this government totally so that there is no doubt left that Canada welcomes foreign capital from wherever or for whatever purpose. The record of the foreign investment review legislation is that 10 per cent of new acquisitions have been turned down and about 5 per cent of new business. Almost none of the people applying to invest in Canada have received unfavourable treatment. The comment everywhere in the international market is, "Don't worry about foreign investment review legislation in Canada, it doesn't mean anything." They are right, it does not mean anything.

• (1652)

If one examines the balance of trade figures, it shows a travel deficit of $1.6 billion. We will never correct that in the long run; there will always be a deficit because of the nature of the climate in Canada. When one looks at the merchandise trade account one finds we are running a $2.9 billion surplus. We are selling more abroad than we are buying. If we look at raw materials and processed goods as examples, we are still selling more than we are buying. We do not see that in the papers. What are we paying the landlord and the owner of our industry for the money they put out in interest and dividends? There is a deficit of $3.4 billion in that area.

To put some confidence in the Canadian dollar abroad there has to be a long-term strategy to repatriate the Canadian economy. As long as we continue to pay the kind of rent, profits and interest we have been paying, we will not provide any long-term stability to the Canadian dollar. The Canadian dollar will continue to be weak in international markets.

Look where the Canadian dollar is in terms of West German currency, in terms of Swedish currency and in terms of most of the currencies of west European countries which have domination and control of their own economy and which are not branch plant economies at all. These west European currencies continue to be very strong in comparison to the Canadian currency.

In this budget we have provision for a 50 per cent oil exploration depletion allowance. A large portion of that money will go to the multinational oil companies. They continue to be the spoiled brats of the corporate sector. When there are any handouts coming, the oil companies are there with both hands. What we should be doing is looking for research and technology in terms of renewable energy, looking for alternate energy and bringing forward a conservation program that is worth the name. This is something we do not have now. Forget about incentives to the oil companies. My God, if they have not had enough incentives and they have not had enough profits by now, then how much do they want?

We could have moved forward in a progressive way in this budget, accepting the limitations of an $11 billion deficit and accepting the worry of how much room there is to manoeuvre. One could have manoeuvred in terms of renewable energy and a decent conservation policy in Canada. Then we would see some improvement in the Canadian dollar and in the unemployment statistics. As a result of renewable energy projects, jobs are created. There are not many jobs attached to the digging of oil wells. But there are a lot of jobs in the coal industry. There are a lot of jobs in the recycling of garbage, in the windmill power field, in the production of solar energy and in other areas of that kind of research and technology. There will be some change, then, in terms of the economic climate. But these tired old solutions which we continue to get will not have a significant impact on our two major problems.

I would like to say a few words about the current speculation in the dollar. We have had some warning from the Minister of Finance that what the opposition does by standing up every day and forcing him to answer questions in the House is to play into the hands of the international money barons. He thinks hon. members are speculating. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner)—"Mr. Loose Lips"—has been quoted, a quote that he denies, concerning his comments on the Canadian dollar and the impact it might have.

I would now like to refer to an edition of the Kamloops News for April 5 quoting directly the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), who said this:

> The federal government will move to fix the value of the Canadian dollar on the international money market once the U.S. dollar stabilizes.

That is a pretty firm statement of government policy in terms of the Canadian dollar. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House are tired of being lectured to by the Minister of Finance when ministers of the government cannot keep their mouths shut anywhere. They are running around telling one story in one place and another story in another. I do not doubt the international money barons are a little confused, but they are not confused about what is happening here. They are confused because they do not know what kind of a policy the government is following in terms of the Canadian dollar. Therefore, in the absence of any policy the value of the Canadian dollar will go down and so they continue to sell the Canadian dollar short. This is the direct result of the lack of cohesion in the Liberal cabinet.

The solution which I hear from my colleagues in the Conservative party is that somehow we will solve this problem by cutting back in the public service. We will create employment, as Sterling Lyon is allegedly doing in Manitoba. They maintain we will create employment by knifing the public service and throwing people out on the streets. What an inconsistent position to take in a land of 1.5 million unemployed. We will throw the public service on the street with them. That makes no sense whatsoever. It is really Milton Freidman's ideological fanaticism.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Leggatt: It is time we recognized that Milton Freidman does not possess all the economic wisdom in the western world but is doing a lot of harm.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Leggatt: I hear my good friend say, "Right on". If he will examine the budgets of the Liberal government, this one and the last one, they could have been written by Milton Freidman because the government itself has not moved in a progressive way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is rising on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact we are still here, as some of us believed we would be, I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. Pinard) could give us a word about Monday. Will we be continuing with the budget debate in accordance with the indication which the Deputy Prime Minister gave, that once that debate started it would continue without interruption unless something constitutional got in the way?

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, after a great deal of the pessimistic and negative feelings expressed by opposition members for the last three days, I think they need a one day's break to get themselves acquainted with many positive aspects of the federal administration over the last few years. I believe that research will convince them they should not foster unduly a confidence crisis and a climate of political uncertainty which are responsible for bringing about some of our present difficulties. This is why on Monday we will proceed with the study of Bill C-45 and then, if time allows us to do so, we will continue discussion of Bill C-19.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being five o'clock now, this House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 17, 1978

The House met at 2 p.m.

● (1407)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT ON CANADA-U.S. AGREEMENT RESPECTING ARGENTIA NAVAL BASE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that after several years of delay the governments of Canada and the United States have finally settled the terms of a written agreement for the turning over by the U.S.A. of the north side of the Argentia leased base to Canada, so that the land and facilities thereon can be made available to Newfoundland for industrial and economic purposes and job creation for the people of the Placentia-Argentia area, and in view of the fact that the only cause of delay now is the failure of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to set a date for the official joint announcement and for the official turning over of the land and facilities on the north side of the base to Canada, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the Secretary of State for External Affairs announce today a date this week for the official joint announcement and for the turning over of the north side of the Argentia U.S. naval base to Canada and to Newfoundland so that immediate industrial and economic development of the area can commence and jobs be created in this area of high unemployment, and that there be no further procrastination and delay so damaging to the interest of the people of the Placentia-Argentia area.

Mr. Speaker: Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, the motion requires unanimous consent before it can be put to the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

* * *

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX PROPOSALS—CRITICISM BY LEADER OF QUEBEC LIBERAL PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On Friday, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) criticized the opposition for supporting the separatist government in the province of Quebec regarding the federal government's sales tax proposal and, furthermore, criticized the four western premiers for saying that the proposal "contradicted the spirit of federal-provincial co-operation and consultation . . . and could be prejudicial to ongoing discussions on national unity".

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House, noting the position of the new Quebec Liberal leader, Mr. Claude Ryan, who has also criticized the federal government's sales tax proposal, requests the Prime Minister to make a statement to the House explaining whether or not in his view Mr. Ryan, an avowed federalist, has also joined the nefarious forces of separatism.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX PROPOSALS—REQUEST GOVERNMENT RECONSIDER FORMULA

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, looking at the benches opposite, I am almost tempted to preface this question by saying, "In the absence of the government—"

An hon. Member: Look behind you.

Mr. Clark: In my party I don't have to look behind me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1412)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it relates to economic policy. Now that the government has had an opportunity to read the whole of the communiqué of the western premiers and to reconsider, in an atmosphere of greater calm, the concerns expressed by the government of the province of Quebec in relation to the sales tax—which comes under provincial jurisdiction—and the support for the position of that government by all the provincial political parties in Quebec, can the Deputy Prime Minister tell us whether the Government of Canada is now prepared to reconsider either the formula or the content of the arrangements in relation to provincial sales tax with the province of Quebec or other province which might want a change?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I could make one or two comments with respect to the question, but I would like to tell the Leader of the Opposition that I expect the Prime Minister to be in the House before 2.30 and it might be better to continue then the dialogue which began on Friday.

I explain the absence of the Minister of Finance by telling the House that he is attending a meeting of the board of governors of the InterAmerican Development Bank, in Vancouver, where he has been elected chairman of the board of governors.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, with the agreement of the House, I would like to defer the opportunity to put questions until the Prime Minister arrives.

* * *

POST OFFICE

PROPOSED PHASING OUT OF LETTER CARRIERS IN VANCOUVER

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General: it has to do with the study which was done in March of this year, called "Manpower Goals, 1981-1982; Vancouver Retail and Delivery Division". That study proposes the phasing out of 421 letter carriers in the Vancouver area. Was that study done in consultation, in any way, with the letter carriers or the letters carriers' union, and can the Postmaster General advise whether he has rejected the recommendations in that study?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I feel that this straightforward question deserves an equally straightforward reply. I must say there is nothing secret about this document. The postal carriers' union must have already been aware of this document, having discussed it with Post Office officials. I want to state emphatically once again that absolutely no major change and no lay-off will occur in the Post Office before management and labour have discussed and reached an agreement on this issue.

[English]

I would like to repeat what I said in this House, I think on April 4. If we are to contemplate any changes or expansion in delivery methods, we must re-evaluate the over-all situation and consult the unions to obtain their full collaboration. That still stands.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I expected that kind of answer just before an election. That still will not guarantee the 421 letter carriers that they will not be laid off. The question is not about consultation; it is whether the Postmaster General is willing to allow the workers in the Post Office—I am referring particularly to the letter carriers—to participate in these studies. It is not a question of consultation; it is a question of whether we are going to have peace in the postal service—and the way to have peace is to allow the letter carriers to participate.

Can the Postmaster General now give a commitment to this House that in future these studies—and this is not the first one that has talked about phasing out letter carriers—will be done not merely on a consultative basis but the letter carriers will be involved in them with regard to their own future and their own jobs?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I think the letter carriers themselves admitted that they knew about this study. I can confirm that the letter carriers are participating in all discussions which take place in the Post Office. We have what we call an intergroup which meets practically every month to discuss with the unions proposed changes in the way the Post Office is administered and to discuss ways to give better service to more Canadians.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, with regard to future service to more Canadians, there are a number of routes in new subdivisions all across Canada.

• (1417)

I do not think many of us in the House have found, especially in urban areas, that delivery has gone forward in new subdivision areas. Can the Postmaster General give some commitment to the House that, in fact, we will see the letter carrier service expanded into those areas—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Leggatt: —so that there will not be someone picking up a dollar and running that mail in. That is the real risk. I am asking the Postmaster General to provide us with a commitment, today, in the House—it is a good time now for a commitment, because we are about to have an election—that routes which are presently underserviced in the suburban areas of this country will be serviced within the next three months by the addition of regular mail carrier service.

Mr. Lamontagne: I would love to say to the hon. member that we will provide more service and expand our letter carrier service all across Canada. However, I have listened to the opposition since coming to the House and I have heard them complaining and accusing us of having too many civil servants. They even said they would be ready to cut 50,000 of them. I think it was the Leader of the Opposition who said that.

Furthermore, we have a budget and we have a deficit. We are trying to do the best we can with what we have. But I can tell the hon. member that all routes in all areas are under revision, and if with a reasonable budget we can expand this service, we will do so.

ALLEGED DETERIORATING MORALE OF TORONTO EMPLOYEES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): My question is also to the Postmaster General: it relates to the letter received by him from 28 Post Office line service supervisors in Toronto which warns of the collapse of the postal service because of deteriorating morale apparently brought on by the reinstatement of a number of suspended drivers.

What has the Postmaster General done to avert this potentially explosive situation which, to use the language of the supervisors who have corresponded with him, holds the Post Office on "the brink of collapse and it could go national"?

[Translation]

Hon. J.-Gilles Lamontagne (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that some people enjoy turning newspaper headlines into tragedies. I suggest that the letter had been sent to me by the 28 Post Office line service supervisors who have finally conveyed to me their grievance to the effect that their decision to suspend a number of Post Office truck drivers had been cancelled or overturned. During a snow storm on January 26 of this year, these truck drivers had refused to carry out their duties. The superintendent overturned their decision, claiming that their reasons for suspending these Post Office employees were insufficient and that he was looking into this matter. That is exactly what he is doing just now. One of the line service supervisors must have provided the newspaper with this letter. He probably had the right to do so, but he has certainly not contributed in any way to solving the problem. For the time being, we deem this incident to be a matter of internal administration and we are looking into it.

[English]

Mr. Jarvis: I might say to the Postmaster General that the tragedy is not the newspaper headline; the tragedy is the lack of service by the Post Office.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: With respect to the deterioration of service, morale within the Post Office has deteriorated from the abysmal to the cataclysmal. I ask the Postmaster General: Will the situation to which he has just referred be dealt with by way of public inquiry, which he has the power to order, and will he tell the House whether it is true that the supervisory staff in this area is now constantly subject to open ridicule by workers operating under him? If so, what action has the Postmaster General taken to restore proper labour relations in the Post Office?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, we are now in the conciliation stage with the postal union. I have visited most postal establishments throughout Canada. Last week in Toronto, I held a meeting with all supervisors for the Toronto area to identify the major problems, and I must say that far from being as bad as some suggest, the morale in the Post Office, at the administration level and among the employees with whom I spoke, is far from deteriorating. We are constantly trying to improve confidence in the Post Office and we will continue to proceed as we have been doing.

* * *

● (1422)

[English]

TRADE

REPORTED LACK OF DRIVE IN CANADIAN ENTREPRENEURS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister, and the President of Privy Council, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is having a tough battle getting the Liberal nomination out there in Alberta at the moment.

Mr. Speaker, according to the Minister of Public Works, "While ITC officials 'bust their behinds' to get export orders Canadian businessmen take it easy." The minister also said that when he reported this to the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister said, "Judd, Amen; that's the story I get on all the trips I have taken. We Canadians seem to lack the entrepreneurial spirit, lack that hustle". My question to the President of Privy Council, who is in charge of the cabinet committee on GATT negotiations, is whether he agrees with that savage attack on Canadian industry and businessmen that they lack hustle, and whether the President of Privy Council can hustle the House some information on the GATT negotiations that are going to determine the position of Canadian industry and business in the 1980s?

Could he tell us how the negotiations are going? What is Canada now doing as an alternative, now that our argument for sectoral negotiations has been pushed aside? When will a full report be made to Canadian industry and to the House on this question of such fantastic importance to the future of Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member probably knows, the GATT negotiations are reaching a more definite phase. Through the co-ordinator of the negotiations, the Government of Canada is keeping in close touch with representatives of Canadian industry and has conducted confidential discussions with those affected by the ongoing negotiations. At this point I believe it is difficult to be certain about the outcome of the negotiations. It is a negotiation. Representatives of various countries are examining the bargaining positions of their other partners in the negotiations. They are undertaking preliminary examinations, for example, of the offer lists which have been made in agriculture and fisheries. Also, they are examining the general bargaining stance under industrial products.

I expect we will be entering into a much more critical phase of the negotiations probably late next month or in the early part of June if the timetable which has been tentatively proposed for completion is to serve, and that hard decisions will have to be taken at that time. At the moment it is not possible really to be concrete, specific and definite about the shape of the negotiations.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. President of Privy Council will know that impartial observers such as the Science Council of Canada have determined that Canadian industry is in such weak shape now that we face the possibility of deindustrialization, and that even here in the industrial heartland of Canada we have employment in the St. Catharines region in excess of 13 per cent, in Kitchener 10 per cent, and the like.

My question to the Acting Prime Minister is: In view of the fact that our major negotiating suggestion, that we should proceed with sectoral negotiations—we agreed to the Swiss formula and we asked that there be sectoral negotiations, particularly to help our resource industries—in view of the fact that has been rejected by the United States and the nations of the European Economic Community, in view of the fact that our industry only operates at an 80 per cent capacity and its future is dubious-looking at the moment, and in view of the fact that our industry does not have any idea what adjustment assistance they might get—the weaker sectors of our industry such as textiles—if tariffs are lowered in Canada, what steps can the Acting Prime Minister and the government take to give some reassurance to Canadian industry and business that they are going to be supportive of them through this difficult period?

What are the plans for those industries that may have to go by the board if the government continues with these negotiations as they are now?

● (1427)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. gentleman is incorrect in saying that at this stage there is no prospect of successful sector negotiations by Canada. He may turn out to be right in the long run; but certainly in the proposals that have been put forward by the United States, in some cases offering broad tax cuts, they could accommodate Canadian sector negotiations. The United States will, of course, expect to be compensated for whatever concessions it makes. We have not abandoned that sector approach and I think it is much too early to do so. If we did fail and it were not possible to achieve some progress with the sector negotiations, then, of course, Canada would not be able to offer as much to its partners in the way of trade concessions as it would if the sector negotiations had been successful.

The hon. gentleman mentions textiles. I think it should be recognized, because there is concern in the country, that there is very great concern in the negotiations themselves as to the state of the textiles industry in many countries of the world; but it would be my prediction that it is unlikely the textiles industry will have to face deep cuts as a result of these negotiations, based upon the present atmosphere in respect of negotiations. The hon. member is right about adjustment assistance. It will be required in certain cases and will be provided by the provincial governments and in some cases by the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I know there may be some objection to the length of the answer, but there was a series of questions and in courtesy to the hon. member I am attempting to answer.

An hon. Member: You should make a statement on motions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

* * *

[Translation]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY WHETHER LAUZON, QUEBEC, SHIPYARDS WILL BE AWARDED CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. A few weeks ago, members of the federal government were in Lauzon, the site of a very large shipyard and a municipality where the rate of unemployment is very high. They tried to reassure the workers by announcing a project concerning the construction of ships for the Department of National Defence. Right now the workers are very much concerned because the unemployment rate is increasing and the yard lays workers off. In order to alleviate the unemployment plague in the area of Lévis and on the south shore, could the Minister of National Defence tell the House whether he seriously plans to award in the near future a construction contract to the yards in Lauzon?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are looking at this matter very closely, trying to accelerate specifications so the ship repair and refit programs we have in line can be started as soon as possible. My colleague, the Minister of Supply and Services, is also working with my department to accelerate this procedure to the extent we can; but I am afraid I cannot say there will be the immediate placement of orders, because this has to be done through the tender process.

We will do all we can, because we are aware of the situation, to make certain that the shipyards at Lauzon are given every opportunity at the earliest possible moment. I might say, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, that we are also looking at other avenues which might help that shipyard, in response particularly to the great representations that have been made on its behalf by my colleague, the hon. member for Levis.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, I am beginning to be a little concerned about the slowness of the studies on government programs. I cannot believe that, in the present circumstances, there is a lack of personnel to work actively on these studies. I admit the minister has his problems but I cannot accept that on behalf of unemployed workers, of those whose benefit period is finished and who are now on welfare, as well as those who get absolutely nothing and keep hoping that these shipyards will soon be re-opened with contracts from the Department of National Defence. Could the minister tell the House whether he will bring pressure on the public servants of his department to complete these studies and finally ask for bids to put into practice what is supposed to be done before those workers are in real poverty? We must recognize one thing, that workers on the south shore and in the Lévis area are not all millionnaires, they are people who want to work. Could the minister tell the House whether he is really going to do something about these studies with a view to carrying out this project?

● (1432)

[English]

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of this. My friend, the member for Levis, has stated this in equally emphatic terms, and very consistently, over the past several months. I am certain pressure has been brought to bear to the extent that is feasible. You cannot put ships in for refit without the specifications being very tight. As all hon. members know from past experience, we are trying to improve that process. They will have to go to tender. We are hopeful that that can be done in the shortest possible period of time. I forget the exact date that we are aiming for, but in the case of ships of the Department of National Defence, one of our replenishment ships and some of our refitted destroyers, it would be late summer, early fall, before work could begin.

The government is also trying to find other ships that need to go in for refitting and special upgrading. That matter is being looked after by one of my colleagues who is not present today. The interests of the workers at Lauzon are very much in the heart and mind of this government.

* * *

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

RIGHT TO VOTE OF BRITISH SUBJECTS—EFFECT OF AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council. It concerns the Canada Elections Act. As thousands of Canadians are now finding out for the first time—British subjects, English, Scottish, Irish—that because they have not taken out Canadian citizenship as provided for under amendments brought in by this government, they will be losing their right to vote. Many of them served in the armed forces.

Will the minister do something in order to bring about action in this regard, either to provide the widest possible circulation of the fact that the citizenship courts will be available immediately for those who wish to apply for Canadian citizenship so they may be registered as voters either during enumeration or on appeal? If there is insufficient time for this, would the minister give consideration to bringing in an amendment to the elections act to provide that the section in question, because information is not available to Canadians as a whole, is amended for the purpose of ensuring in this election that these people who voted in past elections, will have the right to cast their votes?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will obviously pay careful attention to the representations made by the right hon. gentleman. I am not sure whether I have all the details in mind, but I believe that at the time the changes were made to the electoral system, it was to put every citizen in the country who had the same historical attachment to Canada on precisely the same footing. Therefore, it would be, on first consideration, difficult at this stage to propose amendments that might have the appearance of conferring upon one particular class of citizens a possibility that was not available to others who were in Canada at the same time. That is my recollection. However, I will look into the matter and see whether there is any basis for the second proposal which the hon. gentleman put forward.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. I can understand the argument advanced by the minister, and I appreciate its nature, but surely that does not cover the situation. The citizenship courts should now be given the opportunity and, indeed, enjoined to enable these people who, not knowing the law, find themselves in the thousands today in the position where they will be denied their right to vote. If the citizenship courts were now advised to allow applications, many of these people could secure their right to vote which should not be denied them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I did not fully clarify my intention in my first reply. I intend to draw this proposal to the attention of the Secretary of State with a view to accelerating the process of citizenship attainment, if that is at all possible under the circumstances.

ALLEGED UNFAIRNESS OF AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is on the question asked by the right hon. gentleman. The minister said that the purpose of the legislation was to bring everybody into the same position. I point out to the minister, as a preface to my question, that we are now dealing with people who have voted consistently, many of whom fought for this country and are now old age pensioners.

My question is this: Where is the fairness in asking these people now to put out money to go through an application, then to be told that there are delays, and to be getting conflicting evidence as to what is required when the enumerator comes to them at their homes ahead of the next election and asks, "Are you a Canadian citizen?" These people are getting conflicting evidence to the effect, "Well, you dont't have to prove you are. You can just go ahead and not be completely honest with the enumerator." That is the kind of advice some of these people are getting. That has come back to us as members of parliament. It is a very bad situation and I would ask the minister to treat this matter with the utmost importance.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to the right hon. member for Prince Albert that I will treat it with seriousness. I have nothing further to add at the present time.

* * *

NATIONAL REVENUE

REGULATIONS RESPECTING CHARITABLE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Minister of National Revenue is no longer accountable to this House in that he has been called to glory at a higher plane, I would direct a question to the minister who answers questions in this House relating to the Department of National Revenue.

I ask the minister if it is the government's intention to change the ridiculous regulations that were circulated last week to charitable organizations in Canada, whereby they were enjoined not to conduct letter-writing campaigns to politicians, and/or organize demonstrations against the government or write editorials on political topics. This is obviously their democratic right and would appear to be an infringement of the Canadian Bill of Rights. I ask the minister if the government will change these ridiculous regulations, given the fact that most groups in this country have legitimate grounds for demonstrating against this government?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I did not hear the first part of the hon. member's question, but I will read it in Hansard and try to provide an answer for him.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria.

Mr. Corbin: My question was for the Minister of Labour who was in his seat a moment ago.

[Mr. Fraser.]

• (1442)

ESTIMATES

ITEMS RESPECTING INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. It relates to the very serious concerns raised by various native associations, particularly in Alberta and New Brunswick, with respect to the 1978-79 estimates, the increased allotments for internal administration and the very significant decrease in terms of program moneys for the various reserves which could affect such things as hot lunch programs, the education of Indian students by Indian teachers, and fire protection services. These are issues of which the minister is well aware.

I understand the minister had a meeting earlier today with officials of the National Indian Brotherhood. What kind of assurance was he able to give the National Indian Brotherhood that vital services to the Indian people of this country would not be very detrimentally reduced or cut off?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is correct in saying that along with my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I had a meeting with members of the National Indian Brotherhood and some provincial organizations this morning. Without evading the basic question, I would say it should more properly be addressed to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has responsibility within the over-all allocations to that department for the distinction between various programs.

We both agreed to address ourselves to this question. We are very concerned about some of the evidence or indications that we received this morning. We will be looking at this matter in all seriousness because it is one of considerable concern.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the President of the Treasury Board could indicate whether he, or the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, was unaware of the very great impact these budgetary announcements would have on native peoples. If they were unaware of it, are they going to take steps now to alleviate some of the very serious problems already being created for bands in Alberta and British Columbia with respect to services for native people?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can add to my response of a minute ago to the hon. member. The question of awareness of departmental programs within an over-all allocation for a particular department is the responsibility of that department. Treasury Board would know about it in a general way, of course. I have been receiving other indications of this problem. We are seriously concerned about it and will be looking at it.

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX REDUCTIONS—GOVERNMENT REACTION TO QUEBEC'S PROPOSAL

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Having had the opportunity to read the communiqué of the four western premiers and to reconsider the position put forward by the government of Quebec, supported, as the Prime Minister knows, by all the provincial political parties in Quebec, in relation to the operation of the provincial sales tax within the jurisdiction of that province, has the government reconsidered its rejection of the Quebec proposal as to the operation of the sales tax within the jurisdiction of that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the premise of the question about all parties agreeing with the position taken by the Parti Québécois. In so far as the western premiers are concerned, I have the communiqué and I understand that their problem is one of form rather than of substance. They feel that this was generally a good tax, but they did not like the way the consultation went forth.

I am honestly somewhat puzzled at that, Mr. Speaker. I have here a list of dates on which this subject was discussed with the provincial ministers of finance. It is incredible, the extent to which the federal Minister of Finance went to make sure that every province was involved.

An hon. Member: What dates?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member asks, "What days?" I can begin to read them, Mr. Speaker, or we might—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Trudeau: No, they would not like to have a recital of the consultations which took place, Mr. Speaker, but I can assure you that they were very very numerous and that—

An hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Trudeau: We are prepared to stand on the record and indicate that we went as far as we could in consulting with the provinces. There may have been some areas where they would have proceeded differently, but on the consultations in general we reassert that they were numerous and they were with every one. At no time did the premiers contact me and indicate that they were displeased with this procedure. On the contrary, two of them changed their budget dates and the form of their budgets in order to accommodate this federal-provincial co-operation.

It is still a puzzlement to me that after the fact, when they have all accepted it and all adjusted to it, when they have had consultations amongst themselves, suddenly, when it is all done, they should find there was not the right kind of consultation. I really do not understand the cause of this.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I think all of us find it unfortunate that this government cannot make the federal system work more effectively. This is the latest example. I am sure the Prime Minister would not want to leave the impression that the discussions the Minister of Finance had with his provincial counterparts, whenever those began, were specific discussions. The Prime Minister knows they were not. He also knows that the provinces received very late in the day the final, precise proposals that the Government of Canada was putting forward.

That was not my question, however. My question was whether the government has reconsidered its rejection of the concerns put forward by the government of Quebec, with the support of the other political parties in that province, relative to the application of the provincial sales tax within the jurisdiction of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition, it was only at the very end that the federal finance minister said that this was going to be the budget. Already we know that accusations were made against him by the Leader of the New Democratic Party for having broken budget confidentiality. So in that sense, of course, the provinces did not know with certainty until the very end what would be in it. The provinces do know, and did know for a period of a few weeks, however, what we were going to put into it in general terms and what adjustments we were making—

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: I am answering the remark made by your leader. You don't want me to remark on the falsehoods that were put on the record by the Leader of the Opposition.

An hon. Member: We can see through you.

Mr. Trudeau: On Thursday, March 23, the Minister of Finance discussed the sales tax proposals by telephone with Mr. McKeough of Ontario and Mr. Parizeau of Quebec. On March 24, the minister was in contact with Mr. Parizeau to discuss the sales tax proposals and other issues. On Monday, March 27, he was in touch with all deputies except Mr. Collins of Alberta. The proposal was elaborated and discussed by finance officials on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Fraser: Answer the question.

An hon. Member: Table it.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the issue is one of consultation.

Mr. Fraser: The issue is whether you will answer the question.

Mr. Trudeau: It is that to which the provinces object and that which has the support of the Leader of the Opposition. He said we are not making federalism work because we do not consult enough. I am informing the opposition of the consultations which took place. I should think they would be interested in having the facts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty is not in principle; it is with the length of the reply that may be required.

Mr. Clark: The very real difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is that I have asked a question on one topic, but the Prime Minister has twice deliberately avoided replying to that question, for reasons that I do not know.

I ask the Prime Minister if he can confirm whether officials of the department of finance in Quebec are in Ottawa at present, or whether officials of the federal Department of Finance are in Quebec City, and whether any discussions are under way that might lead to a change in the application of the budgetary proposals of the Minister of Finance to the province of Quebec.

While he is answering that, perhaps I could try for the third time, and he could also address himself to my original question of whether the government has reconsidered its rejection of the proposal put forward by the government of Quebec in relation to the application of the provincial sales tax within the jurisdiction of that province.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of the question—

Mr. Hees: And you will never get to the second part.

Mr. Trudeau: That is possible, if I have hyenas on the other side. The interjection was that I would never get to the second part of the question. If they keep on shouting, I may not even get to the first part of the question.

Mr. Fraser: An honest man on the other side would help.

Mr. Trudeau: What are you so grumpy about?

Mr. Fraser: Have I got a few minutes to respond to that?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, go ahead.

● (1452)

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, I, at least, consider the effective functioning of the federal system to be important in this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark: I always considered parliament to be a place where members of parliament need not keep their mouths shut. When the Prime Minister opens his mouth, I would very much appreciate it if he would answer the simple question I have now put to him three times. I need not repeat it; the Prime Minister knows the question. Will he give us the answer?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the reason I sat down was because the colleague of the Leader of the Opposition, the hon. member for Vancouver South, asked if he could stand up and elaborate, and I said yes.

Mr. Fraser: You are not the Speaker.

Mr. Trudeau: No, but you are asking if I will yield to you, and I am saying yes.

Mr. Fraser: I think Mr. Speaker has something to say about that.

Mr. Speaker: One way or another, I wonder if we could solve this impasse before the next seven minutes go by. We have to get through by three o'clock.

* * *

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT REFUSES TO NEGOTIATE WITH QUEBEC ON SALES TAX

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the right hon. Prime Minister. I mentioned last week that considering that in the province of Quebec we have definite problems in the textile and furniture industries, in the clothing and footwear sectors for example, and that before presenting his budget here in the House of Commons last Monday the Minister of Finance was flexible enough to accommodate the other provinces as far as the sales tax is concerned, why is he not prepared today to negotiate with the province of Quebec as he did, I admit this, by consulting the other provinces of the country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the case of the province of Quebec, our Minister of Finance spent three weeks discussing the matter with his Quebec counterpart, Mr. Parizeau. He made certain proposals, while making them as well to the other provinces. In the case of the other provinces, they said: We agree, or we do not agree unless you make certain changes. In their case, the Minister of Finance negotiated with them in good faith and made a number of accommodations. In the case of the province of Quebec, the minister refused to say whether he would agree or not. We then brought down a budget. That budget made a proposal to the province of Quebec, as all the others, whereby federal funds would be at their disposal to reduce indirect taxes. The other provinces reduced theirs as had been agreed. But Mr. Parizeau reached no agreement with the federal government. He informed us later on that he would have a different budget. We will see tomorrow night what that budget is. We will see whether, in fact, he is willing to use the $200 million or so the federal government is putting at the disposal of Quebecers and we say that, as far as we are concerned, we do not want to see Quebecers penalized. We hope Mr. Parizeau finds a formula that is not unfair to the other provinces, that will not be unfair to the taxpayers of the other provinces, and that will allow Quebecers to take advantage of the money the federal government is offering them.

COMPENSATION OFFERED TO QUEBEC FOR LOSS OF SALES TAX REVENUE

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that, as he stated a moment ago, the Prime Minister does not agree but that, according to the information I have, all parties and their leaders in the Quebec National Assembly support the main thrust of the policy announced by the Quebec finance minister regarding the sales tax, and also in view of the fact that, in my opinion, most of those people in Quebec City are as staunch federalists as we are here in Ottawa, could the Prime Minister tell the House what kind of compensation he has in mind for Quebec taxpayers if he intends to categorically refuse the present requests of the province of Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that we must wait and see what the Quebec finance minister has to propose.

For instance, the federal government agreed to some arrangements following the request submitted by British Columbia. There were also some arrangements that followed the request by the province of Saskatchewan. Had Mr. Parizeau submitted some requests of his own, we could have tried to find a solution agreeable to all concerned. However, what is unfair—and I think the hon. member will agree—is that once everybody has come to accept a formula, saying: "Well, all in all, this formula is fair to everyone", Quebec came afterwards to ask for an amendment that would be to its sole benefit; that is what is unfair in the Quebec legislation. Perhaps Mr. Parizeau will find a way to remedy that.

I am sure the hon. member will understand that, from the time each province agrees to co-operate with the federal government on a tax measure which is in the interest of all Canadians, it would be unfair—and I do not think that opposition parties would agree to it—it would be unfair that a province say: "We do not want federal funds to benefit all Canadians, we want them to help a limited number of Quebecers." I think the hon. member of the opposition will agree with that.

* * *

[English]

THE BUDGET

SALES TAX REDUCTIONS—SPECIAL CONSIDERATION FOR QUEBEC

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will he confirm that a study on the tax proposed by the province of Quebec had been prepared by the federal Department of Finance well in advance of the budget and it confirms that on an equity basis the proposal made by the government of Quebec is more equitable than that suggested by the federal government?

Having already made special arrangements with the Atlantic provinces by giving them all the sales tax, will the Prime Minister now acknowledge that that special consideration has already been given? What is so fundamentally different in doing that, acknowledging now that the federal government will give over to the province of Quebec the $184 million they have been shortchanged for job creation programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to answer the question again. The cutting of the sales tax across the board, as happened in every other province, has a tendency to increase consumer demand and to encourage small businesses and manufacturing in all parts of Canada regardless of the province from which they come. The federal government's purpose in the budget was to make sure that this stimulus was applied fairly across the provinces from one end of the country to the other. That is why we sat down and discussed many times with the provincial finance ministers modifications which might be brought in and which would be in line with provincial priorities, but at the same time would always aim toward the objective of having people in Canada treated indiscriminately: they would be treated equally by the federal tax measure in every province. This deal was put together without the federal government knowing whether the province of Quebec would come in or stay out.

After the deal had been put together, the province of Quebec came forth with a special request saying they wanted this federal money, not to benefit Canadians generally, not to benefit small businesses and consumers but to spend in Quebec to benefit only themselves. The leader of the New Democratic Party will understand that if each of the other provinces was apprised of that deal, they would obviously say, "If you are going to do this for Quebec, if you are to permit Quebec to spend federal tax abatements in a way that is advantageous particularly to the industries of that province, then surely you should give us the same deal".

That is the reason why, once a deal has been put together with every province and without Quebec saying no, it becomes difficult to sort of say now that everybody has been treated fairly and forget the maritimes, for example, which do not have many manufacturing industries. They accepted our proposals. They know that in many cases the consumer will be buying goods made in Quebec, Ontario and every other province. Everyone accepted it, not only with an eye to his own province but to the general Canadian economy. We now have one province saying that everyone has accepted a measure for the good of all, "we want that measure to be applied to us particularly for the good of Quebec and not for the good of all". We think that is not a very fair propositon. I am surprised that the opposition parties in this House are supporting it.

• (1502)

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister knows as well as anyone in this House that the answer he has given will not stand up to hard-headed analysis. Considering that, for the reason he indicated, the sales tax reduction would benefit industries which were producing a lot of goods and services, and the federal government gave special consideration to the Atlantic provinces because they do not produce as much as, for example, Ontario, and in that case the federal goverment agreed to pay the complete tax write-off for Atlantic Canada, and considering that the proposal the federal government made disproportionately—not proportionately—favours industry in Ontario over Quebec, why is it the Prime Minister is not willing to take compensatory action for Quebec, given the fact that more than 500,000 Quebecers are unemployed?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as far as compensatory action is concerned, the hon. member knows that this side of the House has indeed taken a great deal of action in the case of Quebec and the maritimes. I have even heard it said on the other side that we are favouring Quebec too much with our DREE program and our decentralization program.

An hon. Member: You have not heard it from over here.

Mr. Trudeau: No, I have heard it from a premier of that party, though, who said publicly we were favouring Quebec too much.

An hon. Member: Who was it?

Mr. Trudeau: I will tell you later. You don't have many premiers around.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: As far as helping Quebec is concerned, I am very glad that the parties opposite are telling us we should do more with federal tax money. I hope they will be saying that during the election campaign, because many of them say exactly the contrary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is not a question of not wanting to help the provincial economy in Quebec. But when we put a budget together and try to get ten provinces to agree, surely there must be a point at which the provinces say "Yes, we do", or "No, we don't".

In this case nine said they did agree. One said they didn't know, but would tell us later. Surely, this is not an unreasonable position. If they wanted particular treatment, as some are asserting now, that request could have been made before the budget was brought down. We might have said, "Well, this is not too good, but if you need it we shall offer it to the other provinces." The result, as hon. members will appreciate, is that each province would have accepted the application of the sales tax in a way which would benefit that particular province, and that is not our idea of the Canadian economy as one unified model.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that Mr. Claude Ryan, the new leader of the Liberal party in Quebec, is quoted in today's paper as saying, with reference to the unreasonable position of federal priorities on all the provinces, "It is surely not desirable that measures be taken which seem to want to impose in the area of financial development changes which come under the jurisdiction of the provinces", and since Mr. Ryan, in saying this, is joined by all the other provincial premiers, does the Prime Minister not think his little lecture about Quebec being unreasonable in not replying at the same time as the other provinces is a little unreasonable on his part?

Further, would the Prime Minister reply to my other question pertaining to the fact that the tax cut of the federal government provides benefits disproportionately—not proportionately—to industry in Ontario, which has led Quebec to look for equitable treatment just as the people of the Atlantic provinces got equitable treatment in the special approach taken to the tax in their case? Will the Prime Minister finally attempt to answer the questions which are being put to him today by members on this side of the House?

Mr. Trudeau: I shall attempt to answer the question. I note the words of the hon. member, that we were proposing unreasonable federal priorities. I think that is what he said.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Claude Ryan said that.

Some hon. Members: Call an election.

Mr. Trudeau: We shall let Mr. Ryan speak for himself. The hon. member is not quoting him accurately. We will take those words as his own. Anyway, it is not what Mr. Ryan has said that matters to the hon. member. He wants an answer to the question whether we were imposing unreasonable federal priorities: that is the substance of the question, I take it.

Mr. Broadbent: No, it is not.

Mr. Trudeau: Oh, it is not. Then the hon. member was just quoting words which were not substantive to the question. Let me point out that in terms of imposing priorities—

Mr. Broadbent: Call the election now.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am enjoying myself. Hon. members opposite want to have an election. Don't they want to finish the budget debate? Would they not be interested in passing that legislation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are insufferable.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked a question and I think I should be entitled to answer it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: When I am asked a question and I refuse to try to answer by shouting through their noise, they say I sit down and sulk. When I stand up and try to get silence, they shout, "Go and get a dissolution". I will tell them, I will go and get a dissolution—maybe right now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

* * *

PRIVILEGE

MR. BROADBENT—ALLEGED LEAK OF BUDGET DETAILS

Mr. Speaker: On April 10, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) raised, by way of a question of privilege, a story which appeared in the Toronto Star on April 8 indicating the sales tax proposal to be included in the budget. On April 11, after the budget had been presented, the matter was pursued further by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and at that time he made reference to stories in the Toronto Star of April 7 and 8 and on CTV National News on April 9 respecting sales tax changes and, in the CTV broadcast, changes in research and development benefits for corporations.

In the debate that followed the minister explained his position with respect to the negotiations with the provincial governments preceding the budget and denied the possibility of a leak of budget information respecting the sales tax through his office or his officials. The House, of course, accepts his word on that.

Moreover, the minister made it clear that there was ample room for speculation with respect to research and development benefits, for this subject had been discussed at the recent first ministers' conference. However, the actual budgetary proposals respecting research and development benefits were different than those which had been considered.

To deal first with the narrow point of the notice given by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on April 10, that is, on the sales tax issue hon. members may wish to refer in this connection to the words which appear at page 4382 of Hansard on April 11.

● (1512)

In addition to those, it seems to me that the matter has been disposed of in a complete way, as far as this House is concerned, by the minister's explanation that he was not able to discover and did not take any responsibility in any way for any leak of budgetary information.

On the broader issue which came out in subsequent argument, but prior to the offering of the motion by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby, that is to say, the general matter of budgetary secretary which would, of course, include the research and development benefits as well as the sales tax reductions, I must express some serious doubt whether the conventional budgetary secrecy falls within the area of privilege at all. Certainly the two British precedents upon which the hon. member relied heavily in putting forward his argument, and which were cited by him, were not dealt with through that means but by ordinary notices of motions, one of which was in fact put down by the government after the minister responsible had admitted his complicity in a budgetary leak.

The second, which was not accompanied by a similar admission by a minister, was a motion which, although put down by a private member, enjoyed a certain priority of debate because the government indicated in the circumstances that it would not oppose the motion. In other words, in both circumstances the House brought itself to examine this matter of its own volition in a way entirely independent of the procedures related to privilege in the ordinary way, and therefore I cannot accept that there is a precedent which argues that the general matter of budgetary leaks falls within a question of privilege. I do not, of course, say that they cannot do so. I simply say that in the circumstances here it would seem to fall somewhat in line with these precedents which did not treat them as privilege in those circumstances.

Finally, even if these precedents had persuaded me that this was a matter which ought to be dealt with in a preliminary way under privilege, which they do not, I would have some difficulty with the rather general nature of the motion because I think hon. members will realize that in similar circumstances in the past general motions under privilege have proposed that "this matter" or the general question of a certain circumstance be referred to a committee somewhat under the assumption that the committee would perfect the investigation and come to some conclusions as to whether or not in fact a matter of privilege existed. General motions of that sort, without specific accusations, have been rejected by the Chair. Therefore, even if I were to accept the fact that these precedents place this matter within the area of privilege, which I do not, I would have some difficulty on a procedural ground in that regard. Therefore, for those reasons I am not able to find in the matter put forward by the hon. member a subject of privilege which I think should take priority over other business of the House.

* * *

POINTS OF ORDER

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE)—REPLIES BY PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order arising out of the last words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) before he left the House. The Prime Minister contended that when he was asked a question, he had the right to answer. No one quarrels with that, but I suggest that he does not have the right to make a series of long speeches in the question period, with the result that many questioners are denied the right to ask other questions of the Prime Minister or other ministers. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will know that you have our support and our sympathy in what you have been through today and that you will be able to contain the Prime Minister for the days left while this session lasts.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can allow that sanctimonious utterance to be left uncontested.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Even if we are, as the hon. gentleman believes, close to the end of this parliament, I experienced the same difficulty today with a very long series of questions from the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), and when I attempted to answer them in detail and in accordance with his request, there were objections made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker).

I believe it is unfair for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) to complain about the conduct of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) when we all witnessed the difficulties under which he was working today. I believe, if the television cameras were able to focus on the whole House as it operated during the time the Prime Minister was being interrogated, the public would understand how hypocritical are the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough to have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) lose his temper and leave. It is almost as bad for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) to lose his temper synthetically, and stay. I think all of us know—and most of all you, Mr. Speaker—that there were answers which were rather long, and all of us have to presume that they were rather long because certain members were preaching for a call and, when people are preaching for a call, sermons tend to be rather long, as we found out.

MR. BAKER (GRENVILLE-CARLETON)—THE STOPFORTH CASE—SUGGESTION MINISTER WITHDRAW ALLEGATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, while we are dealing with House business, I think there is another very important matter with which we should deal. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) left the House, he indicated, or at least implied, that he was going to the Governor General. While parliament is here it is important that this matter be brought forward, and I am bringing it forward. I refer to an action brought in the Supreme Court of Ontario by a public servant, Mr. Stopforth, against the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). This action led to a judgment. The monetary amount is unimportant to what I have to say. However, the judgment of Mr. Justice Lieff is quite important with respect to the business of this House.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

In rejecting the claim of the Minister of Supply and Services that Mr. Stopforth, a public servant, had misinformed the minister and was grossly negligent, Mr. Justice Lieff said this:

The evidence discloses no act or omission on the part of the plaintiff—

That is, Mr. Stopforth.

—which could reasonably be characterized as gross negligence.

That is a judgment outside this House by a Justice of the Supreme Court of Ontario which exonerates Mr. Stopforth from the negligence which was alleged against him by the Minister of Supply and Services, outside the House of Commons for the purpose of the action, but the statements outside the House of Commons were a repetition of a statement made inside the House of Commons on June 1, 1976, as reported at page 14031 of Hansard.

I raise this matter here today because for his own reasons, which I do not question, the Minister of Supply and Services has decided to leave public life. That may be soon because of what the Prime Minister has indicated, and if that is the case, unless those words with respect to a public servant which were said on June 1, 1976, are repudiated, they will stand forever on the record of the House of Commons.

I raise this matter as a point of order at the end of this session to suggest that it would be appropriate in the circumstances that the words now found to be untrue with respect to Mr. Stopforth outside the House be cleared from the record inside the House of Commons before the Minister of Supply and Services leaves public life. It is quite safe for the minister to do this.

Some may argue that the matter could be under appeal and so forth. It is quite safe from the point of view of the case which the minister may have on appeal—I do not know anything about that, nor do you, sir—for the minister to make that statement in the House of Commons because that statement made here would be privileged. However, aside from all those things, I respectfully suggest to the minister that it would be decent and appropriate of him to withdraw that allegation made in the House of Commons against Mr. Stopforth, privileged as it is, that same allegation having been found to be false outside the House of Commons in a court of law.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some grave reservations—no matter how meritorious or important the matter by be—as to whether the matter in any way effecs the order of the House. The matter is a matter before the courts. Disorder in the House might be a matter which we could take into consideration. However, I have great difficulty finding this matter as it now stands to be a procedural matter which in any way would involve a decision of the Chair.

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REPLIES BY PRIME MINISTER DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I was deeply distressed today to see the conduct of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in treating the House of Commons with such arrogant indifference.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am one who admires those who sit opposite who are parliamentarians, such as the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen), but today the Prime Minister of Canada treated this House with an arrogance that is indescribable and unbelievable. He ought to come back and apologize to parliament.

● (1522)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will realize at once that the whole issue of the length of questions and answers and of the decorum of members during the question period is my primary concern. I think we all feel the strain of the uncertainty under which we are operating at present. Whether or not the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is on his way to the Governor General, I hope that whatever happens in the next day or so will inject some certainty into the proceedings which will force my hand a little bit. All hon. members know that Friday's question period was a similar experience—very few, very long questions responded to by very long answers.

The difficulty is neither on one side nor the other, nor is the lack of decorum. On both days we had the spectacle of members shouting at each other from one side to the other, equally on one side and the other, and the curious spectacle of members shouting during a question or during an answer, telling the others not to be so impolite during the other's intervention, and so on. All this was contributed to considerably by the tension which invariably arises in the uncertain circumstances in which we find ourselves. I hope that some certainty will be injected in the next day or so, so that we do not go on in this way for too long.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

JUSTICE AND LEGAL AFFAIRS

On the Order: Motions:

April 3, 1978—Mr. McGrath—That the Third Report of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, presented to the House on Wednesday, March 22, 1978, be concurred in.

Mr. James. A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, before you call that motion I would like to suggest to the House, given the importance of that report, that the House might be agreeable to setting aside time today during the hour normally set aside for private members' business between 5 p.m. and 6 p.m., as this report deals with the subject matter of ten private members' bills. If the House were so disposed to setting aside the hour, I am sure there would be an equal disposition on the part of those who are interested to put the report through in an hour. I wonder if the House leader could react to that suggestion.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, normally I would agree to the suggestion made by the hon. member. However, I understand that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), who wished to make some observations in the course of the debate, is not present, and therefore I would consider deferring the request until later in the week when the Minister of Justice could be present, if that were agreeable.

Mr. McGrath: It is agreeable, Mr. Speaker, if the House leader could give the House the assurance that there will be time to deal with this. He told the House that he was relaxed, and I believe him. Now perhaps he could relax the rest of us and tell us that we will be able to deal with this report later on this week.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) is at a loss for words on a bill that is not very important—

Mr. MacEachen: It is a committee report.

Mr. Alexander: —I should like to refer to Bill C-46 relating to the discounting of overpayments of tax.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) was dealing with the motion which stands in his name. Before going on to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), perhaps we could first consider questions on the order paper.

* * *

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 787, 1,296, 1,303 and 1,403.

[Text]

WEST COAST OIL PORTS ENQUIRY

Question No. 787—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

1. Was the West Coast Oil Ports Enquiry funded through the Estimates and, if so (a) under what vote (b) in what amount (c) how many persons received payments and what are their names?

2. What salaries, allowances and/or other emoluments were paid to members of the Enquiry?

3. What funds were made available to interested intervenors to prepare their interventions and, in each case, what was his/her name and the amount received?

4. What expertise was hired or contracted for, by the Enquiry, in the specialist area of (a) tankers (b) oceanography (c) superports and, what amount was paid to each individual or firm hired?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Environment)): 1. The West Coast Oil Ports Inquiry was authorized by Privy Council No. 1977-597 on March 10, 1977 and Treasury Board circular No. 749596. The necessary funds are being provided from within approved expenditure ceilings for 1977/78. (a) and (b) Operating votes and approved amounts: Operating expenditures, Vote 20, $1,157,000; Capital expenditures, Vote 25, $20,000; Grants and contributions, Vote 30, $260,000. (c) Persons receiving payments to November 30, 1977: Dr. Andrew Thompson, L. Lewis, J. Steeves, P. Fraser, J. Service, N. Napier, J. Wigmore, A. Ho, R. Snow, G. Harland, C. Zick, M. Gates, D. Baba, R. Epstein, R. Anthony (Edwards, Kenney & Bray), Peter Bernard (McCrae, Montgomery et als), A. Pape, M. Shaffer, B. Williams (Williams, Swinton & Co.), N. Hannum, C. Aspinall, D. Elliott.

2. Members and staff of the inquiry: Dr. Andrew Thompson, $51,450; L. Lewis, $15,450; J. Steeves, $10,133; P. Fraser, $4,197; J. Service, $3,342; N. Napier, $7,670; J. Wigmore, $8,125; A. Ho, $8,182; R. Snow, $7,424; N. Hannum, $8,654; G. Harland, $7,254; C. Zick, $4,750; M. Gates, $3,641; D. Baba, $1,800; R. Epstein, $1,272. Consultants paid other than members and staff of the inquiry: Edwards, Kenney & Bray, $84,781; McCrae, Montgomery et als, $29,178; A. Pape, $19,050; M. Shaffer, $22,300; Williams, Swinton & Co., $7,321; C. Aspinall, $17,042; D. Elliott, $6,355.

NOTE: These individuals were paid by contract through the operating expenditures vote 20.

3. 1. Kitimat Oil Coalition, $100,000; 2. United Fishermen & Allied Workers Union, $60,000; 3. Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs, $35,000; 4. Nishga Tribal Council, $25,000; 5. Labour Advisory Committee—Victims of Industry Changing Environment (VOICE), $15,000; 6. B.C. Wildlife Federation, $10,000; 7. District of Kitimat, $5,000; 8. Coalition against Supertankers, $5,000; 9. Regional District of Kitimat—Stikine $5,000; Total intervenor funding, $260,000.

4. (a) Columbia Survey, Navigation of large oil tankers, $543.00; (b) W. McKay, Impact on native commercial and food fishing, $2,811.43; (c) Blue Peace C.A.S.E., Evaluation of oil terminal and spill clean-up capability, $5,000.00; K. Busswood, Social impact of oil port development at Kitimat, $2,812.68; Eaton, Barley, Consulting on economic impacts associate with construction of oil port project, $12,552.00; Western Montana, Studies on environment and human health associate with oil port, $1,611.91; Can-Guard, Consulting on spill control, $3,533.21; Captain McNail, Feasibility study on oil ports, $1,000.00; B. L. Smith, Consulting engineering services, $4,992,61; Tussing, Economic and Policy consideration in the choice of west coast oil port, $7,791.09.

RCM—PURCHASE OF NICKEL STRIP

Question No. 1,296—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. For the years 1973-77, from which companies did the Royal Canadian Mint purchase nickel strip for its coin production?

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

2. For each company, by year, what was the value by country of origin of such shipments?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. During the years 1973 through and including 1977, the Royal Canadian Mint purchased nickel strip for domestic coinage production from the following two companies: Sherritt Gordon Mines Limited, Toronto; the International Nickel Company Limited, Toronto.

2.	Sherritt-Gordon	International Nickel
1973	$4,385,931	$ 2,792,884
1974	7,174,367	9,991,426
1975	6,001,504	14,650,035
1976	1,860,270	6,238,699
1977	4,933,640	8,545,867

The Royal Canadian Mint is not in a position to know the nickel ore sources of these companies.

G.T.E. LENKURT ELECTRIC (CANADA) LTD.

Question No. 1,303—Mr. Leggatt:

Did G.T.E. Lenkurt Electric (Canada) Ltd. receive grants from any department or agency and, if so, what was the total amount?

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned, G.T.E. Lenkurt Electric (Canada) Ltd. received contributions as follows: (excluding assistance given under the Industrial Research Development Incentives Act)

Fiscal Year	Amount
1977/78*	1,535
1976/77	24,819
1975/76	177,037
1974/75	200,349
1973/74	244,556
1972/73	153,784
1971/72	438,083
1970/71	203,663

* Period April 1, 77 to February 22, 78.

In accordance with section 13, information cannot be divulged with respect to assistance given under the Industrial Research Development Assistance Act.

In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned, G.T.E. Lenkurt Electric (Canada) Ltd. accepted, under the terms of the Regional Development Incentives Act, an incentive offer in each of the fiscal years 1973-74 and 1975-76. The amounts of development incentive were estimated at $549,000 and $530,425 respectively, at time of offer.

In so far as the Departments of Finance, Employment and Immigration and the National Research Council are concerned: None.

OLD AGE SECURITY PENSION

Question No. 1,403—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many persons in Canada, and in each province, are in receipt of the Old Age Security pension?

2. Of the recipients of the Old Age Security pension, how many persons in Canada, and in each province, are in receipt of the Guaranteed Income Supplement?

3. Of those receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement, how many persons in Canada, and in each province, are receiving the full amount?

4. What is the average amount, in Canada and in each province, being received as a Guaranteed Income Supplement by recipients of the Old Age Security pension?

5. Do the answers to the above questions take into consideration persons living outside of Canada who are in receipt of the Old Age Security pension and, if so, how many of such persons are there, and if they are considered as belonging to the various provinces, what is the number for each province?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

Number of Persons in Receipt of

	1. Old Age Security	2. Guaranteed Income Supplement	3. Full Guaranteed Income Supplement
Newfoundland	38,969	31,788	19,016
Prince Edward Island	13,750	10,065	4,262
Nova Scotia	83,479	55,398	22,914
New Brunswick	63,536	42,355	18,424
Quebec	505,547	320,344	142,674
Ontario	763,373	349,855	100,956
Manitoba	110,312	62,945	20,153
Saskatchewan	105,882	58,178	19,321
Alberta	141,323	79,730	27,531
British Columbia	246,620	126,310	42,575
Northwest Territories	1,142	926	732
Yukon	616	366	228
Total	2,074,549	1,138,260	418,786

Average Amount of Guaranteed Income Supplement Being Received Each Month by Recipients of the Old Age Security

Newfoundland	$91.49
Prince Edward Island	86.90
Nova Scotia	85.27
New Brunswick	85.85
Quebec	85.17
Ontario	79.01
Manitoba	81.25
Saskatchewan	82.31
Alberta	81.42
British Columbia	80.68
Northwest Territories	98.69
Yukon	89.79
Average in Canada	$82.39

Order Paper Questions

The Figures in List I and II Include Persons Living Outside Canada who are in Receipt of the Old Age Security

The Number of Persons Outside Canada Receiving Benefits

Newfoundland	101
Prince Edward Island	54
Nova Scotia	410
New Brunswick	366
Quebec	3,269
Ontario	9,290
Manitoba	668
Saskatchewan	403
Alberta	961
British Columbia	2,103
Northwest Territories	—
Yukon	—
Total	17,625

* * *

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 831 and 1,107 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

[Text]

POST OFFICES IN DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS BUILDINGS

Question No. 831—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. In the fiscal year 1976-77, what amount did the Post Office Department pay to the Department of Public Works for the use of buildings as post offices?

2. How many categories of Department of Public Works buildings are used as post offices?

3. At what price per square foot is the building rented in each category and are cleaning services included in the price?

Return tabled.

GROS MORNE NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,107—Mr. Marshall:

1. (a) What are the details of all work taking place at present, and future works contemplated, by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the Gros Morne National Park in the Constituency of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe under FLIP, as it concerns trail maintenance and construction, roadside cleanup, work on Berry Hill Campsite (b) how many jobs will be available in addition to those presently employed throughout the winter and additional numbers to be hired during the summer?

2. What are the details of the amounts of monies being expended for road work in the Gros Morne National Park area and what is the expected date of completion for such work?

3. What are the details in regard to the upgrading and paving of highway 430 where it falls within the responsibility of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

4. What are the details of road work to be completed and future road work contemplated under the federal-provincial DREE agreement, particularly where it concerns the (a) upgrading and paving of the road from Woody Point to the Park boundary (b) upgrading and paving of the road from the Park boundary to Trout River (c) completion of the Rocky Harbour subdivision (d) construction of the Norris Point subdivision?

5. What are the details of the works contemplated under the same DREE agreement in regard to the (a) servicing of the West Link Access road with boundaries (b) study for the Woody Point sewer system (c) completion of the St. Paul's water and sewer system?

6. What action has the government taken to provide information to tourists at Wiltondale and to provide additional facilities at (a) Berry Hill (b) Western Brook (c) Lamond (d) Shallow Bay?

7. What are the details of the government's intention to charge camping fees in the Gros Morne National Park?

8. Are changes contemplated on the boundaries of the Gros Morne National Park as related to the consideration of the development of a master plan?

9. Is consideration being given to changes in boundaries and the direction of the highway as it affects the community of Sally's Cove insofar as it concerns the contemplated master plan?

10. What are the details as to the status of the establishment of a marina under the DREE agreement between the government and the Province of Newfoundland?

11. Has further consideration been given to the serious loss of income by way of cutting rights and timber availability to the residents of Glenburnie, Shoal Brook and surrounding communities who have been denied this opportunity as a result of the restrictions caused under the Park development and, if not, for what reason?

12. What consideration is being given to remove the restrictions affecting residents of the Gros Morne National Park area under the non-hunting area factor?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Young: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House, and in particular to that of the President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), the importance of Bill C-46 relating to the discounting of overpayments of tax under the Income Tax Act and related payments. I understand that under the provisions of the bill any discounting amounting to more than 15 per cent of the tax rebate coming to taxpayers will not be allowed. Obviously it is an extremely important bill at this time, in view of the testiness of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and given the fact that April 30 is just around the corner and that many people are involved with discounting and rebating. In view of all that, I have been authorized to say by the spokesman for our party, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), that we in this party would be prepared to give speedy passage to this bill. I ask the President of Privy Council whether he could acquiesce in this request, which seems to me a reasonable one, given the fact that we are in a very strange position as a result of the attitude of the Prime Minister this afternoon.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my I say in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) that certainly I am agreeable to having this bill given speedy passage at the earliest possible moment. I would conclude that by speedy passage we mean we could put the bill through all its stages in the House speedily and we would not find it necessary to send it to the standing committee. On that understanding, I will try to fit it in at an early point in our deliberations, assuming that the comments by other hon. members will be brief.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I think I can help in this regard. I have been authorized to indicate to the President of Privy Council that we will give this bill speedy passage, that means second reading, report stage, and third reading. I do not know what my friends to my left have to say to this, but this is an extremely important bill which would prevent rip-offs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised my friend does not know where we stand because we said a few days ago that we are prepared to give this bill second reading, consideration in committee of the whole, and third reading, during the course of one session, and we would be prepared to do it quickly.

* * *

POINT OF ORDER

MR. DICK—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Paul Dick (Lanark-Renfrew-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, a matter arose during the question period today when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in allegedly responding to questions, read from a memorandum which he had in his hands. I believe that under the rules of the House, when a person reads from such a document, it is permissible to request that the document be tabled, and I am so requesting.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will certainly examine precedents to see whether or not that document, to which reference was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), I believe, was in the nature of a memorandum prepared for his instruction, which would be a document not falling under that general classification. In any case, the Prime Minister wanted to read the whole document and obviously, because of its length, could not. I do not know whether or not he would have any objection to tabling it, but I will give the matter some consideration.

* * *

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Do I understand that we will be proceeding with the postal bill today, the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), followed by the Petroleum Administration Act, and is there anything else that the government House leader has on the plate in the way of legislation for today?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I confirm that it is my intention to call the postal operations bill, to be followed by the report stage of the Petroleum Administration Act. I understand that there have been some discussions with the opposition parties on the suggestion that we should give speedy passage to the bill standing in the name of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) having to do with the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. I should like to explore further the suggestion made that we deal with the tax discounting bill. If that can be done, I will call that bill, followed by the export development bill, and then resume the budget debate tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us about Wednesday.

Mr. MacEachen: And Wednesday.

• (1532)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

POSTAL SERVICE OPERATIONS ACT, 1978

MEASURE TO ENSURE CONTINUATION OF REGULAR POSTAL OPERATIONS

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-45, to provide for the continuation of regular postal service operations, as reported (with amendments), from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AUTHORIZE IMPOSITION OF LEVY ON DOMESTIC PETROLEUM AND IMPORTS

The House resumed, from Monday, April 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-19, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I will be fairly brief at this stage of the debate on the Petroleum Administration Act. The purpose of the bill before us is to Subsidize Syncrude, in order that it may receive the world price for its product from the Athabasca tar sands. We in the New Democratic Party objected to the Syncrude project when it came before the House of Commons for ratification, because we considered it to be a sell-out of the interests of Canadian consumers. Also, we feel this bill is a consequence of the Syncrude deal. It is detrimental to Canadian consumers in that it means, because the domestic price of oil is not at the world price yet, whereby Canadians have had some relief from inflation, that Syncrude, unlike any other oil company or energy undertaking, will be given the world price for its product.

The only way it can be guaranteed the world price, which is higher by approximately $2 or $3 per barrel than the Canadian price, is to institute a levy on all other energy oil products and thereby compensate Syncrude. We know what the escalation of the price of oil and its products has meant to the Canadian economy. We have seen the price of oil, which was about $3 a barrel in 1972, continue to escalate upwards to around $13 a barrel today. It will continue to increase to the world price of $15 or $16 a barrel.

The escalation in price has had a tremendous impact on Canadian consumers. It has meant our food has become more costly, because farmers are some of the greatest users of energy. It has meant our manufacturing has lost some of its competitiveness in world markets because fuel costs increase the price of goods. It has meant the consumer has had to pay more in practically every area of purchase because energy costs are involved in some way or another. Now the government has come before the House of Commons to increase that consumer burden even more, by giving a special favour to Syncrude which no other company in this country has. It will not stop there, because the projections concerning the price of oil at the world level rising to $35 or $45 a barrel over the lifetime of the Syncrude project indicate how Canadians, using oil from that plant, will continue to pay the cost year after year. This bill is really after the fact. It is a legislative implementation of a contract signed between the Government of Canada, the governments of Ontario and Alberta, and the Syncrude consortium.

We must look at the impact of inflation on this country, despite the anti-inflation program instituted by the government. In October 1975, when the anti-inflation program was brought in, inflation was approximately 9.5 per cent. Last week, when the program officially came to an end, inflation was approximately 8.8 per cent or 9 per cent. Thus, we see that the program has failed to control price increases in any significant way. One of the reasons it has failed to do so is the year by year increase in energy prices to which the government has committed itself. On top of that year by year increase in prices, now we will levy on the consumers of Canada an additional charge, so that one particular company can receive a special favour which was negotiated a few years ago.

The government's record in terms of energy policy is a dismal one. The government was convinced by the oil companies in 1973 that we did not have to worry about curtailing exports to the United States. I think of the annual report of Imperial Oil which indicated that we had hundreds of years of domestic supply of oil ahead of us. When the price of oil went up world-wide, because of the OPEC consortium, suddenly the oil companies of Canada changed their tune, and no longer was there a great surplus. We were facing an imminent shortage, and the only way to overcome it was to give oil companies some kind of economic stimulus so that they would go out and explore for more Canadian oil. This came about despite the fact oil prices have risen gradually between 1971 and 1973 when the international crisis was upon us, and that oil companies in Canada were showing record profits.

As weak-kneed as the government is, and without any comprehensive policy, it gave in to the Canadian oil industry, which is 90 per cent foreign-owned. It allowed them gradually to increase the price year by year in an attempt to bring the price of Canadian oil up to the world price. This is despite the fact that there were no cost increases for the domestic wells which were already pumping oil. The oil companies received their price increases and the resulting tremendous increases in cash flow and profits. It is interesting and discouraging to note, although they received those benefits, the amount of exploration, at least in the early years, did not significantly increase in Canada. Much of the cash generated from the increased domestic price was spent on exploration outside Canada.

In 1974, amidst the crisis of shortages and rationing, the federal government, led by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the President of the Treasury Board, went and negotiated under the gun with the Syncrude consortium, which indicated that, unless a deal was signed by the end of January, the company would close down its Syncrude project, and Canadians would be freezing in the dark. It did not happen. The Syncrude consortium got what it wanted, namely, federal subsidies to the tune of about 70 per cent of the $2 billion cost of this project to the Canadian people through their provincial and federal goverments, and in return for these hundreds of millions of dollars investment they only end up with 30 per cent ownership.

● (1542)

We in the NDP opposed that deal as a sell-out then, and likewise we oppose this kind of deal now before us, although we know it is after the fact. This is merely confirming a price advantage given to Syncrude which the government negotiated some four years ago. All I can say is that it will continue to exacerbate the state of Canadian industry, especially manufacturing.

We have lost 80,000 jobs in the manufacturing industry over the past three years because of a number of factors, one being the lack of an industrial policy on the part of this government. Surely another factor is the increase in the cost of fuel, which is in turn an increase in cost to our manufacturing industry.

We have lost jobs because of the lack of a comprehensive and sensible energy policy on the part of this government. Consumers have seen their home heating costs increase dramatically, as well as the cost of gasoline, so they too are paying the price not only in terms of lost jobs for some but in terms of higher energy costs for all, mainly as a result of the incompetence of this government and, in particular, of this most recent minister.

We in this party are opposed to this bill for the reasons I have outlined. It is a discriminatory piece of legislation in that it favours one company, and it probably will set a precedent allowing other tar sand development to receive the world price for oil, with all the inflationary implications of that. The projected continuing increases in the world price, unrelated to production costs here in Canada, will automatically be given the Syncrude oil sands development. This is a projection that the Canadian consumer will have to face for decades ahead. We are all paying for this bad deal and the lack of any comprehensive policy on the part of this liberal government. I regret this, and we oppose the bill.

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is, unfortunately, not untypical of the kind of legislation frequently brought before this House for examination by members of the House of Commons. We support the intent of the bill, which is simply to provide mechanisms through which the federal government can fulfil the commitments it negotiated in respect of the Syncrude arrangement.

During those negotiations Syncrude and its partners, including the provinces of Ontario and Alberta, were promised by the federal government that Syncrude production would receive the world price. This production is due to go onstream within a very few days. For that reason it was necessary to have in place the authority for the federal government to fulfil this commitment. We understand that and support the bill, as we did at second reading. This does not justify the atrocious draftsmanship of Bill C-19, or the means to accomplish this goal of fulfilling contractual commitments to Syncrude in respect of production.

Let me refer to the manner in which this bill was drafted in the first place. It provided for a levy or a charge against all domestic consumption of oil and gas in Canada, the proceeds of which presumably are to be used to subsidize Syncrude. We have to question the validity of that measure providing this extra tax or charge because of the export tax now being charged by the federal government.

Notwithstanding that, sir, the legislation should state, as it stated in the first instance, that the government could impose a levy. That is what it originally said; it simply authorized the government to collect another tax up to $1 a barrel. There was no indication in the bill that the tax should be used or could be used for any purpose whatsoever. This was just an additional tax.

I suggest there is a procedural question involved. The government did not call this a tax, it called it a levy, and through that little game of semantics it avoided the necessity of having the bill discussed in the committee of the whole. We did not raise the point at the time. Perhaps we should have raised the point because this step represents another way in which the House of Commons has been demeaned by the approach of this government.

The original bill provided for a ministerial discretion to exempt certain domestic production from the levy. This again is an atrocious provision. The House of Commons is being asked to authorize the minister, without any recourse to legislative authority, to exempt certain production from this extra levy. If the minister wants to make Petro-Canada look good, or some other company, he could easily exempt such company from this extra charge. That kind of discretionary authority should never be given by parliament to any minister.

In addition, this measure gives the minister the discretion, without recourse to parliament, to deem any production in Canada as imports for the purpose of compensation. The intent clearly is to allow Syncrude products to be deemed to be imports for the purpose of compensation, but there is nothing in the measure that restricts the minister's intention to Syncrude production.

The minister's intent is, as he indicated to the committee, to allow for subsidization to world prices of future heavy oil production, including the expansion to the Great Canadian Oil Sands plant, the proposed new Shell plant, the Petrofina plant, and possibly some heavy oil production from the Lloydminster and Cold Lake fields. We can understand that and we may agree with it, depending on the circumstances that prevail on those particular occasions. However, it is absolutely atrocious for the minister or this government to ask the House of Commons to give the minister the authority to deem certain productions as imports for the purpose of compensation, at his discretion and at any time he wants.

There is nothing to prevent the minister from declaring all Petro-Canada's production as imports for the purpose of compensation, or doing other things like that to ensure Petro-Canada a decent balance sheet, or one a lot more decent than the one produced last year.

There is another clause, the impact of which is not so important, which contains a ministerial discretion. This is a discretion that anyone who believes in the parliamentary democracy system, which is supposed to exist in this country, must find offensive. During committee meetings we had discussions about these various ministerial discretions, I may say to the government's credit. It did redefine the clause providing for the levy on certain domestic products. It was provided that the funds from that levy would be used for satisfying the conditions of this bill—meaning that it would not be another tax that could be used for anything. It would be a tax specific to this particular bill. That was an improvement, and I congratulate the government on at least going that far.

● (1552)

There was considerable discussion, Mr. Speaker, on the question of ministerial discretion in regard to deeming any domestic products as imports for the purposes of compensation. In our suggested amendment, we moved at committee that such action taken by the governor in council or by the minister should be subject to an affirmative resolution of the House of Commons. That is, in reference to the fact that we are supposed to be a democracy, there would be the provision for the House of Commons to validate a recommendation by the minister to deem certain products imports for the purposes of compensation. At least this would say that the people's representatives were deciding where these tax funds were to be sent. It is a very modest and reasonable request.

It seems that the minister, the minister's advisers, the Privy Council bureaucrats, or whoever controls these matters, would not consider or tolerate such a move, and we were faced in committee with either being rather tenacious, and thereby causing some delay in the progress of this bill through committee, or backing off and conceding to the government this very undemocratic clause in the bill.

I must say it is times like these that one's conscience and principles as a member of parliament are sorely tested. However, after much discussion, there was one little motion in regard to that clause, namely, that orders in council granted pursuant to that particular clause—which is clause 2 of the bill—shall stand permanently referred to the standing committee which normally considers oil and gas matters. That is not as satisfactory as having parliamentary control over the spending of public funds, but at least it potentially allows some public airing of these matters through a committee which is knowledgeable in the area. It does allow us some discussion and, therefore, any step that a minister may take that is out of line would have the potential of being exposed to the light of day. It is at least a minor political check. I say political, Mr. Speaker, because there is no guarantee that reference to a committee allows for such discussion. In this particular committee during the discussion of this bill and during all of the meetings, not once was I, as the spokesman for my party, asked whether I would be available at the time the meetings were scheduled. Not once during all of that time was I asked, Mr. Speaker. It is common decency in the operation of this House and of the committee system to check with the members opposite who have special interests or responsibilities in an area, to find out whether they are going to be present or do not have conflicts regarding the scheduling of meetings. As I indicated, not once, not a solitary time did the minister, the chairman of the committee, the parliamentary secretary to the minister, or anybody on that side, ask whether I would attend the committee meetings on the dates scheduled. As it so happened, there were a couple of committee meetings I was not able to attend.

As a consequence of my non-attendance, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie), on that campaign junket of the cabinet to western Canada, made a speech in Lloydminster accusing us of filibustering the bill and of not being there to participate in meaningful committee sessions. Well, Mr. Speaker, the minister's words do not cast a very long shadow, if you like, and no one pays much attention to them in western Canada, so I am not really concerned about the impact of that speech.

What I am concerned about is the morality of that kind of behaviour and then pointing an accusing finger when, in fact, it was the performance of that side of the House that precluded me from being at those particular committee meetings.

That lack of courtesy makes it very difficult to accomplish the business of the House with some dispatch. I hope the people of Canada will recognize that as we go into this campaign and when the government makes its usual claims about the business of the House being too slow because of the irresponsible opposition. The people will realize that the business of the House is controlled by the government, and normal courtesy from their side would have a lot to do with the speedy passage of legislation.

More important than the question of courtesy is the fact that I was deceived, deliberately deceived—deliberate is difficult to establish—but certainly deceived in regard to certain aspects of the bill. I am referring, Mr. Speaker, to proposed section 65.13 in clause 1 of the bill which, as the bill was originally reported from second reading, would have allowed the governor in council to exempt domestic production from this special levy. My original objection to this on behalf of my party was with regard to this ministerial discretion again. We felt it was important that there should be parliamentary involvement at least in one step or another.

I was then approached by the minister and asked if I would mind if that whole clause was dropped and whether or not that would satisfy my concerns. I indicated that if that was what the government wanted it would be fine, that it satisfied my concern. Subsequently, I became aware of some companies in the petrochemical business which had a desire for the retention of this clause because they felt they had a case for special exemption. I asked in committee whether the government, the minister, deputies or officials were in receipt of any applications for special exemption under that clause. I was told they had not been in receipt of any applications.

Since I had in my hand a copy of two such applications, I was able to challenge the reply immediately, which I did. As a result of that challenge, I found out there were five petrochemical companies which had applied for exemption under that particular clause of the bill. Now, Mr. Speaker, lack of courtesy is going to bring the business of this House to a grinding halt, but deceit will guarantee that nothing happens. I resent bitterly being lied to in that fashion by whomever is responsible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) on a point of order.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the hon. member intended to use the language that I thought I heard him use. I would suggest that he be given a chance to withdraw that word. It is a well recognized practice in this House that that word shall not be used.

I would also suggest that if he were to re-read the record, the hon. member would find no reason to suggest there has been deception. I do not think that he has chosen to report very accurately on the record.

Mr. Andre: I have in fact, Mr. Speaker, reported very accurately on the record. The choice of language I will withdraw, but the fact that I was deceived as to what had happened—and it was only as a result of having independent evidence come to me from a separate source—is not something that I will withdraw because that is in fact what happened. If two of these companies had not given me copies of the submissions they made to the government, I would never have been aware of them, and, therefore, would never have been able to determine what in fact had happened.

● (1602)

My good friend and colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), has led a long crusade for freedom of information. I was convinced long before that incident of the need for a freedom of information act but, if I had any doubts, they ended there. If a member of parliament requires separate collaborating evidence from an external source to get an accurate answer to a question, then our democracy is in deep difficulty.

Related to that question on that clause is a very important question, and that is the nature of the request—

Mr. Gillespie: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is a suggestion by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) that steps were taken to conceal information from him regarding submissions made to the government. He specifically referred to petrochemical companies. I should like to ask him if at any time he asked whether that information had been provided and had received contrary information. My recollection of the events is that he asked whether that information had come forward. Some information had come forward, not to me or the department, but to the committee, and that was dealt with that day. It had come in that day. He also asked whether my department had received information and was told that it had.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with all respect, the minister did not rise on a point of order. He rose to make a point in debate and abused the rules of the House by virtue of his position.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would suggest to all hon. members that the offensive language has already been withdrawn and now there is a dispute as to facts. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I stand behind the facts as I presented them because they are accurate. My exact words were: "Is the minister in receipt of submissions from any companies in respect of this clause?" I was told no; then I—

Mr. Gillespie: That was accurate.

Mr. Andre: What is strange about that is that the minister's chief official, when I challenged him and said I had a couple of copies of the documents—I was then informed—and then the deputy minister informed the minister that there were five companies which had petitioned the minister in that regard. Had I not been in receipt of two of these I would not have known about the other three. I guess that is a warning to anybody dealing with this particular government, albeit a temporary government, that if they are to make a reasonable and proper request they had better send a copy to the opposition or the request will never see the light of day.

I want to deal for a minute with the specificity of those requests. They were reasonable requests from petrochemical companies which used crude oil as their feedstock, and in particular, petrochemical companies which produce fibres for textiles which end up in clothing. Anyone who has been in this House in the last few months or years recognizes that this portion of Canadian industry is in dire straits. The fibre and textile industry in Canada is sick. There are hundreds of lay-offs, companies are closing down, and it is a sector of our economy which is in a very precarious position at the moment.

I am led to believe by some of the companies involved that the effect of this levy will be to make their feedstocks more expensive than the feedstocks of competing companies, primarily those operating on the gulf coast of the United States. It seems to me reasonable and proper for the government to examine closely the submissions of these companies in order to ensure that, through this act, they are not driving them over the ledge to where they can no longer compete and so must those close down.

In view of the fact that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) has imposed a quota on imports, that the sickness of the industry caused the government of Quebec to remove the sales tax on textiles entirely, and that there is such great unemployment in the textile areas of the country, surely it behooves a responsible government to examine these submissions. It chose not to do so, however. It chose first, not to inform the committee of them. Only through prying was I able to determine that the government was aware of them and had received them. Instead, it choose to remove this clause entirely, thereby precluding the possibility of those industries gaining exemption from this extra tax at this time. The government has a majority. It has every right to do that, but let it be responsible for that action. Let the public be aware that we on this side of the House are endeavouring to ensure that our textile industry is not hurt further through any action on our part. The government precluded that possibility and chose to pursue that line. Presumably it will have to live with the results.

As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, we are in favour of the principle of this bill. We recognize that the government signed an agreement with Syncrude which guaranteed it world prices for its production, which will start within days. We therefore wish the bill to go through with dispatch. However, we are most upset and annoyed at the details of the legislation and the ministerial discretion that is granted. This is a continuation of a trend which must lead to parliament passing one bill which says, in effect, that the government shall do whatever it wants—full stop. If we do that we need no longer worry about legislation. That would give ministers all the discretion they need. That seems to be their goal, when one examines the way in which legislation is drafted and the types of clauses in the legislation presented to us.

We hope and trust there will be a change when this party assumes power. We will have an opportunity to put in place wiser and more intelligent legislation to deal with the ongoing questions of handling Canada's heavy oil and tar sands production.

Any careful examination of Canada's energy situation indicates that we will need enhanced production from tar sands and of heavy oil. These represent enormous potential reserves to which we must have access if we are to achieve our goal of energy self-sufficiency and self-reliance, thereby reducing reliance on energy imported from the politically unstable Middle East and reducing our horrendous trade imbalance. We can only bring on stream the production of crude oil from the tar sands and from the heavy oils if there are clear rules which indicate to potential investors what prices, royalties, taxation, rules and regulations they can expect. Without those rules there would be a ridiculous situation.

We know that Shell Oil Company is interested in establishing a tar sands plant, with several partners. Two or three other companies are involved, and so are the government of Alberta and the federal government. We have a situation where we are trying to put together a business deal involving the investment of $3 billion or $4 billion, three or four companies, and two levels of government. Contemplate for a moment the difficulty of trying to arrive at a decision in a circumstance like that. The only one to benefit from that kind of arrangement is Air Canada, with officials and high priced lawyers flying from Edmonton to Ottawa, back to Edmonton, to Calgary, to Toronto, to Ottawa, and round and round, trying to find out the rules so they can make a decision.

• (1612)

Talk to those in Ottawa and they say, "Talk to those in Edmonton." Talk to those in Edmonton, and they say to go and see those in Ottawa. You talk to your partners, and they say, "Don't talk to us about investment until you know what are the rules." Round and round it goes. It is a totally non productive activity, an activity which gains for the Canadian economy absolutely nothing. It certainly does not hasten the day when this new tar sands plant comes on line, Canadians get access to the production, and we reduce our reliance on imported crude oil. It makes me laugh, Mr. Speaker.

The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Abbott) says that he is appalled at the cost of the paperwork burden and bureaucracy. He says it costs the economy $1 billion a year. He said the government is going to do something about it by appointing a "comptroller of paperwork burden", or whatever he calls it. On the other hand we have a minister, through indifference or incompetence, imposing a bureaucratic structure the cost of which will certainly be in the tens of millions of dollars. The ultimate cost of putting together the paperwork for this next Syncrude plant will at least be of that order of magnitude by the time all the details are arranged. That is an appalling way to run a country. It is an appalling way to run a business or anything else.

The role of government is to define rules, and let people, either individually, or collectively through company structures, act within those rules and pursue their own goals. The rules should provide incentives and encouragement consistent with public policy goals. The minute you put the government in there as an active participant involved in the nitty-gritty of the details, you impose a bureaucratic burden, the cost of which will be at least the $10 billion talked about by the Minister of State (Small Business). With a million unemployed, we could use that $10 billion for productive activity within the Canadian economy, not simply shuffling paper around and around with nothing worth while gurgling out.

It is with some reluctance we concur with the passage of this bill. It is necessary to get Syncrude going. Were there any worth to it, I would plead for some intelligence over there, some definition of rules for the establishment of a Syncrude policy and a set of regulations that are firm and reasonable rather than this continued ad hocery. Were it worth while, I would similarly pray for a little more respect for democracy, a little more concern for the role of the peoples' representatives. A continuation of this trend does not bode well for the future democracy of this country, for the future of a parliamentary democracy. I would not feel comfortable sitting idly by watching this happen without raising a voice of concern at this time.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take a few minutes to make some comments on this bill. I do so because at second reading I made it quite plain that unless there was some improvement at the committee and report stage, I was going to vote against it.

There has been a very limited measure of improvement, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). It is rather nice to see that, small as the progress has been, particularly after the pitiful parody of parliamentary performance this afternoon on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during the course of the question period. It adds to my perception. I hate to say it, but watching from outside rather than inside in recent weeks, one sometimes gets the impression that this place is assuming some of the characteristics of a sick joke.

The right hon. gentleman is playing games. It was a juvenile performance, saying he was going to go and talk to the Governor General. I admit there was some fault on this side of the House. I do not deny that. However, the right hon. gentleman fought for the right to act as first minister of the Crown, and that is the way he should be acting. I was ashamed of the performance we witnessed this afternoon. It was absolutely shocking. I do not say the fault was all on one side, but the responsibility lies over there. In the exercise of that responsibility, there should be greater effort made on the part of this government, by the right hon. member and his colleagues.

I am going to vote for this bill because there has been some improvement and because, after the next election, there will be another minister and another government looking after it. If it were to be left to this government, I would have very little confidence. If the right hon. gentleman, the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), and his colleagues should, contrary to the wishes of the people of Canada and through some misfortune, come back as the Government of Canada, they will need people like myself and my colleagues to keep them in order. I have not seen for a very long time a group of assorted dinosaurs so completely incapable of exercising their responsibilities and duties. If God so wills that we do not form the government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest the hon. member get back to the terms of Bill C-19, which is under discussion.

Mr. Baldwin: I was provoked by the raucous shouts of the members opposite. There has been one improvement in this bill, as pointed out by my friend from Calgary Centre, in clause 2(3), that every designation by the board under subsection (4) shall stand permanently referred to the committee of the House of Commons that normally considers oil and gas matters. That is a very minor degree of progress.

I say to my friends opposite that we are in a mess with regard to legislation. This and other bills are out of date. They are delayed. They are going to go to the country with a lot of legislation left on the order paper.

There should be a willingness to have clauses of this kind inserted in legislation, as well as additional clauses, such as those suggested by the hon. member of Calgary Centre, through affirmative and negative resolution to retain in parliament the right to ride herd on what government does when we have granted to government the vast power and tremendous responsibility envisaged in Bill C-19, with particular reference to Syncrude.

● (1622)

I agree with the minister and with my hon. friend from Calgary Centre that some aid of the kind proposed here is essential. But we all know it will be extended to other ventures—we may be looking at assistance involving between $20 and $30 million. Parliament is granting to the minister and to a small group of men and women this fantastic amount of authority, and I would always feel more happy if there were contained in the legislation the right to examine the way in which this authority has been used. This is why I was objecting earlier to the attitude taken by the government.

I realize that in the complicated world in which we live, legislation cannot always be self-contained—it may be skeletal in nature, with provision for the right to delegate authority. But it would be far easier to get such legislation through the House if parliament were given the power in the legislation to call back certain aspects for study by resolution. My hon. friend from Calgary Centre said this had been suggested but that the civil servants, the bureaucrats, the mandarins, said no. Who runs this country, Mr. Speaker? We all know it is not the minister but his advisers. But his advisers do not speak for the people. This House speaks for the people, and it must insist on its right, through an affirmative or a negative resolution, to limited debate on these issues.

We are not suggesting lengthy debates. We are suggesting that action taken by order in council, by regulation, should be susceptible of being brought back to the House on the resolution of a limited number of members for discussion. The government, after all, has the weight in numbers and, if it has a case, its view will always prevail. But at least we and the people will know that questions of considerable consequence can be brought back here and discussed. The government has walked half a mile and declined to go the whole distance. It was the same with the northern pipeline bill. I was happy to see in that legislation provision for a permanent reference of the same nature as I have in mind. That is one of the reasons the bill was so quickly passed, in my view. I should like to ask the minister to give us, when he replies, some real reasons for not including a provision by which ten, 20 or 30 members of the House could proceed by way of an affirmative or negative resolution which would bring back to this Chamber for limited debate significant actions taken by order in council, regulation or decree. After all, a great deal of money might easily be involved.

Hon. members may recall that the Committee on Statutory Instruments has suggested that negative and affirmative resolutions should play a far larger part in the proceedings of the House. I put it to ministers who are here, and to ministers who are not here but who may yet find the time to read what is being said in the House of Commons today, that legislation would be much more acceptable to the House if it contained safeguards and precautions of the kind I have mentioned. This parliament is dying. It should have been dead a long time ago. The stench is beyond bearing at the present time.

Mr. MacFarlane: The prevailing wind comes from over on that side.

Mr. Baldwin: Let us hope that the new parliament will be more lively, that a great deal more independence and objectivity will be shown by its members. I think the public takes a very dim view of this parliament, and it is much to be hoped that the parliament which replaces it will act in a more reasonable and independent way and insist upon making the government more accountable. That, after all, is the duty of parliament. We do not govern. We do not want to govern.

An hon. Member: Let's hear about the bill!

Mr. Baldwin: I am talking about the bill. Some of the hon. members over on that side should take these words to heart. Making government accountable is what parliament is all about. If it fails in this task, I think parliament will have a very short life because the public has had just about enough. If they see, contained in legislation, measures of the kind I have described, the people will know they have some protection. They have no such knowledge today. Although it falls far short of what is desirable, I will go along with the bill. There has been an opportunity to rectify some of the omissions. Besides, I have the very firm knowledge that there will be a better government and a better man to look after the bill when the election is over.

Energy

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we are continually providing assistance to Syncrude to produce synthetic oil. There is probably no objection to doing so because some people in this country believe there is an oil shortage. However, a lot of people do not think there is an oil shortage at all.

A year or so ago there was supposed to be a shortage of gas as well. While travelling on the highway yesterday I was surprised to hear an advertisement by companies asking people in Ontario to instal gas furnaces. Incidentally, I heard that 70 per cent of the new houses in Ontario are being so equipped. If you put gas from a private monopoly gas company in your home, the companies assure you that fuel bills will be 10 per cent less than if any other kind of heating system had been installed. The company also guarantees a three-year supply. A number of other concessions are available. First, no payment on the furnace is required for the first year. Thereafter, payments are spread over a ten-year period, I think it is, and the interest rate is lower than the normal rate. They also said they would instal a burner in an existing furnance free of charge. Thereafter there would be a small monthly rental fee. In addition, they would put the gas line into the House from the street free of charge. All the customer had to do was agree to take gas for a one-year period.

If there is, indeed, a gas shortage, all this sounds very strange to me. I draw attention to it because I do not believe the gas companies. I do not believe the oil companies. I do not believe we know what the situation is. The price of gasoline has gone up considerably and we do not know what the government is doing to ensure we are getting a fair deal.

● (1632)

A few years ago premium gasoline with lead was introduced for high compression engines. It cost five cents more for gasoline with lead. Now we have new cars which use catalytic converters and which require unleaded gasoline. It now costs five cents more for unleaded gasoline than it does for gasoline with lead in it. At one time the oil companies charged for putting lead in gasoline, and then they charged to take it out. That is not honest or fair. The oil companies are cheating and stealing from us. We are charged extra for gasoline with lead and then charged extra for gasoline without lead. These changes have cost us ten cents a gallon, because it costs five cents to put it in and five cents to take it out.

I am not at all sure that the minister knows the potential of the oil companies of this country. The minister never talks about the oil which was pumped ten years ago at 15 cents a barrel. At that time the oil companies were having trouble getting rid of it. No new machinery has been put into the oil wells, and I doubt if it costs 30 cents a barrel to pump oil out of wells now.

When we talk about setting the price of oil for the Canadian public, we talk about the highest possible price, the world price. The minister is getting information that there will be a shortage, but the general public doubts that. The public does not believe that the information being given is correct, because people remember that a few years ago oil was coming out of our ears. We were paying a subsidy to export it. We were begging to export it ten years ago because we did not know what to do with it. Then all of a sudden we were told there was no oil. Four or five years ago there were heating oil shortages in Canada and the United States. We were told that we would be out of oil in two years. Well, we are not out of oil. I think the minister will agree that the eight to 12 year projections being made today vary, depending upon who is making the projections.

We have decided to take oil out of the tar sands, and we have put up 70 per cent of the capital in Syncrude, but for our 70 per cent we do not get 70 per cent equity. We get only 30 per cent equity.

Much of the capital we have put up is in the form of tax rebates, tax reductions, grants and other kinds of assistance, but we have only 30 per cent equity. That capital was put up not only by the federal government but also by the provinces of Alberta and Ontario. Because we have a 70 per cent investment in Syncrude, we should be interested in knowing what Syncrude is being developed for. Imperial Oil and its friends, the seven sisters, have 70 per cent equity but made only a 30 per cent capital expenditure, and I think we should ask what we are going to get out of this and what changes there will be for drivers, people who heat their homes with oil, or people who use oil to produce electricity, as is the case in most provinces.

Mr. Symes: There will be higher prices for them.

Mr. Peters: My colleague says there will be higher prices, and there will be higher prices. This bill says that we have to be prepared to provide a subsidy to bring Syncrude prices up to the world price. No matter how fast we move the price up to the world price, there will be a never ending escalation because world prices go up rapidly at almost every meeting of the OPEC nations.

The OPEC nations know that oil is their basic resource, that it is not renewable, and that they are using it up at a fast rate. They are going to ask more and more for their product, and therefore the world price will escalate. I point this out because I think the Canadian public agrees that we must have an oil base in Canada for security of supply, for industry and for the development of our country. We must produce as much of the resource as we can for the future, but surely the public is entitled to something in return.

I suggest that this bill should not be passed until we equalize the cost of gasoline and home heating oil. Years ago a man with a big idea escaped the potato famine in Ireland to come to Canada. That man established the T. Eaton Company. He knew that Canada was a big country and that he should be able to sell his products everywhere in the country. Originally he wanted to sell food and a number of other commodities. He put out catalogues which said that a dresser purchased in Nova Scotia would cost exactly the same as it would in downtown Toronto. The same price would be paid in northern Ontario or in Yellowknife.

Not long ago I was at an auction sale where a dresser originally sold by the T. Eaton Company was up for sale. It was shipped to northern Ontario in about 1900. It was shipped by rail to Mattawa, transferred to another small branch line at Mattawa, shipped to Temiscaming, put on the old Meteor steamboat and taken to New Liskeard by boat. The tag on the back of the dresser indicated how it was transported. With all the difficulty getting that dresser into a newly developed frontier area by boat, the cost was the same as it would have been in downtown Toronto.

What I am saying is that if we want to be fair to the public and if we do not want just to take money from the public and give it to the oil companies so that they can make huge profits and do many things which are, in our opinion, not in the interest of the consuming public, should we not stabilize the price of gasoline for all Canadians? Why should the price not be the same in downtown Ottawa as it is in Renfrew? Why should it not be the same in downtown Toronto as it is on Vancouver Island? Why should we not make that decision? If we added a cent to the price of a gallon of gasoline at a service station in downtown Toronto, where as much as 500,000 gallons a month are sold, that would equalize the price of gasoline for northern Ontario without any great difficulty.

Mr. Symes: They have equalized beer prices.

Mr. Peters: My colleague says they have equalized beer prices. We equalize many things.

Mr. Symes: Not milk.

Mr. Peters: Because someone lives in an isolated area like Comox-Alberni we do not take anything off his taxes. We do not take anything off taxes for people living in Kirkland Lake. We equalize only when it is good for corporations or for the government, but we never emphasize the need for equalization for the consumer. Before this bill passes we should give serious consideration to this. We should consider it in the light of what the public deserves and what companies deserve.

Gasoline prices should be equalized across the country just as the Eaton company equalized prices for all commodities in its sale catalogues. Perhaps I should use Simpsons as an example because its catalogue sales are continuing. I am not prepared to argue the financial structure of Eaton's or what happened to that company. During the whole time that Simpson's has been in business, their prices on heavy commodities, have been the same throughout the country, but the price of gasoline in northern Ontario has been higher for years, and the reason we have been given for that is the cost of transportation.

• (1642)

Gasoline has always been 5 cents cheaper in Timmins than in Kirkland Lake. Why is that? The gas company has set out a number of zones and they placed Timmins in a zone which is farther south than Sault Ste. Marie, yet from Kirkland Lake it must be hauled another 80 or 90 miles, so it should cost more. The oil companies have administered prices for gasoline and for fuel oil for years. Now is the time for us to decide if we are going to equalize the prices and if we are going to charge every consumer in Canada a levy to allow the equalization of the price which Syncrude will get to the world price. I think it is about time we did something very small and insignificant, but very important for the consumers of this country, namely, we equalize the price of gasoline and fuel oil across the nation. I do not see any argument against that.

Not long ago a young chap came down here from northern Saskatchewan where they have some oil. He was very surprised to find that in Ottawa gasoline was being sold at a cut rate, that it was cheaper here than in northern Saskatchewan. I imagine that is also true of Alberta and that there are places outside the major markets where the price of gasoline is considerably higher than in Calgary, Edmonton, and some of the larger centres. I think the time has come when we should protest being discriminated against by the oil companies.

If the oil companies were operating on the free enterprise basis, I would have no argument, and they would be able to set their prices. But they are not free enterprise operations at all. From the point of view of a free enterprise operator, if you can get 70 per cent of the capital and only have to give 30 per cent of equity, it is probably a pretty good deal, but nobody in their right mind would call that a free enterprise operation. We are subsidizing Syncrude, and we are subsidizing the whole oil industry.

Who will benefit from Syncrude? Benefits will flow to Imperial Oil and the other oil companies rather than to the governments involved. There will be no benefits flowing to average Joe Citizen. It is the average citizen who should be benefiting. We should develop some equality in this country, and one place where that equality is needed is in the price of gas.

Because of subsidization, you and I contribute to the public transportation system in Montreal, Winnipeg, Toronto and Vancouver. We have assisted them in moving around in their areas, but in 90 per cent of the land mass in this country, where probably 30 per cent of the population is affected, a car is not a luxury, a furnace is not a luxury. These are absolute necessities in our nation, and I see no legitimate reason for people in some areas of our nation having to pay more for gas or fuel oil than in others. I should like some hon. members to rise and tell me why I am wrong. I see no legitimate reason for that, if we are willing to subsidize oil companies—that is exactly what we are doing in this operation—we are not subsidizing the users of oil.

If we wanted to subsidize the users of oil we would have put 100 per cent into Syncrude and we would have distributed 100 per cent of the oil extracted by Syncrude at whatever price we wanted. Another way of doing it is to equalize the price of oil to all Canadians regardless of where they live. But we have the Liberal government trying to accommodate both the free enterprise system and the government corporation. I see nothing wrong with that kind of cooperation, but surely what we are doing is giving the corporations a handout.

It would be reasonable, and no businessman would object to it, if I put up 70 per cent of the capital to develop the operation and got 70 per cent of the equity. The difference, or 30 per cent, on which we do not get equity, would give us the few cents necessary on the total volume of gasoline used in Canada to make gasoline prices equal all across the nation. You can only drive a car so far and burn that much gasoline, but the same is not quite true of tractors and farm equipment.

In the last year, farmers have had an increase of approximately 75 per cent in their fuel oil for farm equipment. This has become a huge operation. We have not subsidized our farmers and we did not tell them they could raise their prices to recoup their losses. Farmers are not able to reclaim that increase in fuel oil which has become part of their cost of production. Each and every Canadian wants farm prices to remain low so that we can distribute food to all Canadians at a reasonable price. But we have not subsidized farmers and their fuel costs although we are subsidizing the oil companies.

Let us look at it realistically. We are not talking about a large amount of money. We are certainly not talking about anything like the 40 per cent we have put in, and much of this money continues to be paid out. Our payments will not remain at 40 per cent. As the minister says, we will have to increase it every time there is an increase in the world price. A levy will be paid by all Canadians to ensure that this operation is maintained at the world price.

I would like to hear members argue why they do not believe in the Eaton's catalogue principle. I think they would all agree that if you lived in Carp, you would be paying six, seven, or eight cents more for gasoline than in Ottawa. They would agree that half a cent more on the gasoline price in Ottawa would cover Carp and all the other little communities around Ottawa. It does not take much more because some people living in Carp find that they can drive into Ottawa, buy gas here, go back to Carp, and still make a saving. It does not take much to equalize the price of gas. If we are really interested in providing equality, let us provide it for everyone, not only for the oil companies so that they can develop a synthetic product from a new source, which we all agree they should do. At least some of the subsidy should go toward equalizing gasoline prices and, if I had the opportunity, I would dearly like to move such an amendment and divide the House on it.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a very brief contribution to the debate on Bill C-19, which is of interest to every Canadian, whatever his province of residence. The general public is not adequately informed about the real volume of oil reserves contained in our land. I am at a loss when I see reports from highly intelligent and educated persons who seem to be able to tell us with confidence that there is enough oil to satisfy Canada's needs for so many years, while other scientists as knowledgeable as anybody else tell us those reserves are inexhaustible, non renewable yet immeasurable.

The public has many unanswered questions. How come in one part of Canada the gas we use for our cars costs $1 a gallon, elsewhere 90 cents and elsewhere again $1.04, as in some areas of the province of Quebec? Even within that same province, along Highway 20, gas sells for so much but if you leave that road and drive to a nearby village, the price is different. I admit these prices are under provincial jurisdiction. I realize that but how come, Mr. Speaker—because it still is within Canada—we are unable to establish a uniform price? It is a shock when you get near a gas station to fill up your car and you look at the price. In some places, where the price posted is 52 cents a half gallon, that means $1.04 a gallon. If you leave Highway 20 ten miles farther it goes for 89 cents. The company is not important, whatever the company that provides the gas to fill the retailer's tanks, at one place gas costs 89 cents and at another $1.04. This is for the same grade. I should add that the price at both stations is for unleaded gas. Why can there not be a uniform price?

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is not the responsibility of the federal government. I am well aware of this. However it should be possible for the federal and the provincial governments to come to an agreement so that the consumer might pay a uniform price for the same product. The same thing applies to heating oil. In one municipality it costs 54 cents and in another one 48 cents. I imagine that the distributors are honest men and that they offer products of the same quality, that they do not sell us heating oil of a given quality in one region and heating oil of another quality elsewhere. I am not qualified to do quality analyses. Not at all. But I regularly receive representations. Again yesterday I was asked for explanations. I cannot reply because I do not have the necessary information. I believe that during such a debate perhaps the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) could give us information on this subject when he speaks at the report stage.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe in the predictions of the great geniuses who tell us that our resources are limited to so many barrels. I had the opportunity to visit the Yukon Territory and the Northwest Territories with the committee of the House. We even visited an artificial island in the Beaufort Sea in the Arctic, and I was able to speak to those responsible for exploration in that area. There was one well more than 3,000 feet deep. I asked: Are you finding oil? Of course, they are finding oil. The operator who replied to me said: "I have been doing research for the same company for 18 years and this is the first time that I find such a productive well." What do you do with that? "Well", he said, "when we have finished exploring, we will install a valve and close it; that will be part of our reserves for the future." I am very happy about that, Mr. Speaker, but what struck me was the wealth Providence has provided us with in that whole territory. I had slightly different ideas from what I say in the Arctic. I thought that land was so cold that God had forgotten to put anything there. Then I discovered that the Creator had thought of everything. I marvelled at the sight of banks of gravel in those frozen territories. With loaders they could get better gravel there than in Quebec, in the form of crushed ballast.

I was absolutely amazed, and then we drove over miles and miles of roads built of gravel spread over ice. I also found it absolutely extraordinary that companies had managed to build villages with the possibilities for all the services we find back home.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

● (1652)

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Status of Women—Equal opportunity programs for women in Public Service; the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes)—Transport—Future of ship canal at Sault Ste. Marie; the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott)—Trade—Discrepancies in retail price of gasoline—Request for investigation.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Roger Young (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is agreement to proceed at this time with notice of motion No. 27 standing in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). If that is agreeable to the House, I would ask that all notices of motions preceding motion No. 27 be allowed to stand by unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is there unanimous consent to stand notices of motions Nos. 4, 11, 21, 24 and 26?

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, at this late date in the session the action I am intending to take is only as a result of some rulings which were made earlier in the session. Since the motions that precede the motion which is going to be considered this afternoon were placed on the order paper almost six months ago, this should be recorded as the first time of calling. Under our House rules, these motions will drop the next time they are called.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Item No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis); shall the item stand?

Mr. Herbert: No, sir.

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

Item No. 11 in the name of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies); shall the item stand?

Mr. Herbert: No.

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

● (1702)

Item 21; shall the item stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

Item No. 24; shall the item stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

Item No. 26 in the name of the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall); shall the item stand?

An hon. Member: Stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Stand at the request of the government.

I call item No. 27.

* * *

HUMAN RIGHTS

FREE ACCESS FOR BIBLES SENT TO U.S.S.R.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Canadian delegation at the Belgrade Conference on the Helsinki Accords should gain guarantees from the Government of the U.S.S.R. that individuals be permitted to send or personally bring with them bibles and other religious publications when visiting friends or relatives in the U.S.S.R.

He said: During the past four years I have often expressed my constituents' concerns on material matters such as inflation, unemployment, and the economy. I have supported, opposed, and proposed programs that sought to provide the basic life support structures of food, clothing and shelter; programs and structures that have in fact met all of our basic needs and, in fact, most of our materialistic greeds, but all for what vain purpose? Surely this House, this parliament, is preoccupied with materialism, and too seldom do we turn our attention to man's inner spiritual being.

Today the subject I should like to deal with is that of religious liberty. Christian religious liberty is biblically rooted firstly in God's nature and secondly in His dealings with persons. Freedom is represented as a gift of God through grace extended to man throughout the New Testament. Freedom is in fact rooted in God. God gives man the capacity to receive and experience the inner peace of freedom. For a man to be truly free is for a man to be at one with God, for freedom is where God is present.

Paul wrote:

Where the spirit of the Lord is present there is freedom . . . Freedom is what we have—Christ has set us free.

By Christian definition persons reconciled to God are therefore free persons. Christians have therefore demonstrated throughout history that even in the face of persecution, prison, and martyrdom, a Christian can be free and at peace through God's love and the commitment of Jesus Christ for eternal life.

God's revelation of Himself to man is made on the basis of freedom. Jesus Christ came not with wordly majesty and power to force and subjugate man to His will. He came and chose to make Himself known instead freely through love. God's approach is, "Listen, I stand at the door and knock; if anyone hears my voice and opens the door I will come into his house and eat with him and he will eat with me." The freedom which God has given in Christ implies a free response to God's love.

For faith to be faith it must be a voluntary personal and free act born out of freedom. God does not compel faith, for faith itself is a gift of God and is by its very nature a free and voluntary act.

Though this inner Christian freedom does not require an external civil or political freedom, civil and political freedom is desirable primarily for creating the kind of environment that will allow an unhindered expression of religious faith and commitment without civil political advantages or disadvantages. It is this environment that allows the free flow of religious information and free flow of bibles throughout the entire world that is of concern, because it is this inner Christian life that is the basis of external or social religious liberty. This external freedom is thereby the outward expression of that inner freedom with which God set us free. By its very nature external force or interference in religious matters is a denial of religious liberty and thus God's purpose for man. The human right to religious liberty, is therefore, first of all the right to give outward expression to or manifestation of the inner freedom one has found in God.

While the exercise of one's conscience must be limited by the protection of another's rights and the maintenance of a just social order, even these limits must not be imposed arbitrarily or partially, but in the spirit of equality and non-discrimination. One essential duty of every state is in fact not only not to prevent or not interfere with, but rather to protect the inviolable rights of man, principles endorsed by all nations in the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights.

While religious freedom has, in principle, become almost universal, multitudes of people are in practice denied the right of religious freedom.

Under Part 2, Section (A), No. (II), printed information of the Helsinki Final Act on Cooperation in Humanitarian Fields, the U.S.S.R. undertook:

To facilitate the improvement of the dissemination on their territory of newspapers and printed publications, periodicals and non-periodicals, from other participating states.

Further according to Article 124 of the constitution of the U.S.S.R. "Freedom of conscience and separation of church and state" is assured, and it is presumed that non-interference of the state in the affairs of religious denominations is thereby equally assured.

Because of the U.S.S.R.'s adherence to these principles it should be easy enough for the U.S.S.R. to accede to Canada's request to send, or allow Canadians to bring with them, bibles and other religious publications when visiting their co-religionists in the U.S.S.R.

Talk of religious liberty is just so much wind, of course, unless guarantees of religious liberty are institutionalized, and unless social machinery is set up to protect religious liberty against violation. I would suggest that is one of the courses of action that would seem to be needed in the U.S.S.R. It is reported that in fact a person may take, by Russian law, one bible and one individual copy of a religious publication with him. If you press the matter I have heard of people who have managed to take ten bibles with them into Russia. While the Russian constitution proclaims one thing, the practice at the border crossing in the experience of those I have talked to seems to be considerably different. While the U.S.S.R. state apparently talks constitutionally and rhetorically about making such provisions, actual practice is somewhat contradictory. Confiscation of Bibles and religious publications is a widespread practice at U.S.S.R. border crossings.

Members of the Alexander Koshetz Choir of Winnipeg tell of being prevented by Soviet customs officers from bringing records of their choir into the Soviet Union, and then once in the Soviet Union of having to restrict and delete religious numbers from their program for presentation to Soviet audiences. Can you possibly imagine the indignation of the Soviet Union were the Red Army chorus in Canada restricted in the singing of its nationalistic songs in Canada? Equity is certainly required in this case.

Personal friends who have visited have come back to tell of tremendous shortages not only of religious publications but also of bibles. They tell of bibles being produced in Russia which are denied to the people to read because most of the production is exported. They tell of such statistics as one bible for every 250 believers, and of grown men crying with the pleasure of being able to receive a Bible from abroad.

[Mr. Wenman.]

I will be anxious to hear a response by Soviet authorities, and I hope that an occasion will arise when I can visit the Soviet Union to verify what I know to be truth, because the people who have verified this to me walk in truth and light and in the way of the Lord, loving freely and with willing hearts serving Him with joy and righteousness.

● (1712)

While the Belgrade conference has concluded, the principle of the motion is still intact. In fact, I heard within just a matter of weeks of people returning and the confiscatory problems still continuing of Bibles and religious publications being confiscated at the border. There are very few getting through. I would like to see the Soviet Union demonstrate to the world—in the spirit that they came to the Belgrade conference with and that they participated in Helsinki with—that not only was their talk sound but it was carried through into action.

This is a very important motion, Mr. Speaker, and I make it with all seriousness and in a totally non-partisan manner. I appeal to Christians throughout this House and to people who believe in religious liberty in all fields throughout the world. I urge the members of this House to speak briefly as I have done so that this motion might pass, although the Conference is completed, so that the government can carry the spirit of this motion through the ambassador directly to the Soviet Union, so that once again believers throughout the world will have an enlightened view and religious liberty that their birthright under the United Nations Human Rights Charter.

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, on this side of the House we would certainly like to express our admiration for the deep commitment on the part of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) that he brings to politics and for his particular commitment to the gifts of the spirit as they ought to guide our decisions and approaches not only at home but also in international relations. We would also like to commend him for the initiative he has taken in bringing this matter before the House, thus permitting hon. members to devote time and attention to this issue.

In conducting a brief research this afternoon on the subject in order to deal with the recommendation of the hon. member, and in search for a source that would be the most complete possible, I came across two statements which I would like to put on the record and bring to the attention of the members of the House, because they seem to have been conceived and expressed with exactly the same concern in mind and with the same objective as that of the hon. member. The first statement I came across was expressed in Belgrade and put forward by Monsignor Achile Silvestrini on behalf of the Holy See on October 7, 1977. I will quote a few passages from Monsignor Silvestrini's speech in the hope that its content will be informative and give an idea of the assessment of the situation on the part of the Holy See.

As I understand it, the Holy See was entrusted by churches throughout the world to represent them at Belgrade and in subsequent follow-up conferences in the field of religious freedom and implementation of the spirit of the seventh article, as I recall it, in the Final Act of Helsinki. This is what Monsignor Silvestrini had to say, and I am quoting from page 5 of this statement:

Mr. Chairman, to be sure anyone, I personally did too, whoever took part in the laborious formulation of the Final Act could never think that the signing of this document although a gesture so solemn, of such commitment, could lead to immediate over-all modifications, almost spectacular ones. However, it was clear immediately that the spirit of Helsinki could not fail to demand in the first place that every area of liberty, recognized, even to a limited extent, in the laws of various countries, the rights of individuals and social groups, that this area of freedom should be preserved and protected and no longer reduced or compressed by rules and regulations.

Indeed the truly important aspect of the Final Act beyond the actual immediate application registered so far in every country lays in the very impulse given to a progressive motion, although laborious and too slow in some places for the people's expectation, towards an irreversible development of an ever broader liberty.

As regards religious freedoms it is an undeniable fact that the Final Act said "go" to this positive process although it is still at the start. This is, in particular, sufficiently clear as regards circulation and meetings of person and communications from country to country.

Indeed, there have been confirmed encouraging developments in this field as far as we are concerned, by the various churches and various denominational grounds. But in particular, as regards the Catholic church, of which I am particularly competent to speak, it is satisfying to note that a certain number of positive facts without doubt have been proved. Above all, there has been recorded a broader flow, a fairly steady one, of travel facilities for religious motives. Travel for bishops to come to Rome for their visit "ad limina" (as we know this is a visit which should be made every five years to the Pope by the bishops, and this year indeed it includes the turn of the European countries), or also for travel for bishops and other ecclesiastics to attend important meetings of the Holy See, or participation by monks and nuns in the general chapter of their order, or other conventions in Rome, or other places in Europe and America; or again, participation of bishops, priests, groups of the laiety in major international manifestations of a religious nature; like the Holy Year which took place at Rome in 1975, and the International Eucharistic Congress of Philadelphia in 1976—or for pilgrimages to European sanctuaries, both east and west. Furthermore we can note more frequent meetings and exchanges of visits among representatives of the Episcopy of various countries, more numerous concessions for priests who have emigrated to visit their own families at home, and a certain number of young ecclesiastics who have been sent to take study courses in cultural theological university institutes in Rome and elsewhere.

In the same way in the field of means of communication and information, we can record the concessions given to religious communities to print locally a certain number of prayer books and catechisms, the authorization given to send some thousand religious publications (gospels, bibles, catechisms) or liturgical publications (missals, ritual for the administration of the sacraments, brevaries for priests and religious) or works of piety, to catholic communities who previously could neither print nor import; furthermore, the now unhindered reception without interference for some radio religious programs, like the Radio Vatican broadcasts.

These measures, which we stress with satisfaction, correspond to commitments in the Final Act and have begun to modify—even though it is but partially so far, and not to the same extent everywhere, a previous situation which in the field of communications and relations from one country to another, was previously one of rigid and discouraging frustration.

Monsignor Silvestrini goes on to say:

—it is more arduous, more delicate, and more complex, to speak of religious freedoms within the States. Here appeals, testimonies, requests, continue to multiply, sometimes with anxiety and urgency, because the situation in several regions is still far from a normal life of sufficient freedom.

● (1722)

There are particular complaints of difficulties concerning religious practice of certain categories of persons, difficulties for religious education of young people, restrictions concerning the training of candidates for the priesthood, restrictions of freedom in pastoral action for certain bishops and priests.

This completes my quotation from the statement of Monsignor Silvestrini. I would be more than happy to make the full text of the statement available to the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

The Canadian delegation in Belgrade played a very active role between October and March when the conference took place. The delegation was outspoken both in public, in committees and in plenary session, as well as in private conversations with delegates from other countries, particularly those from the Soviet Union and eastern European countries. I had the opportunity for such conversations on a number of occasions. On one occasion I showed a Soviet delegate a brief prepared by a group of citizens on the question of religious freedom and pointed out to him the shortcomings identified by that group.

I note that the motion before us was put forward on November 3, 1977. Just a few days before that, on October 31, the head of the Canadian delegation at Belgrade made a major intervention on the subject of human rights. I should like to quote part of what he said on the subject. He dealt with problems being encountered in the area of religious freedom and said:

Why is it that in 1977 we are hearing complaints that members of religious groups in a few participating states are constrained from practising, alone or in community with others, a religion or belief in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience' as specifically provided for in the third paragraph of the seventh principle, and in paragraph 18 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights? Why are there charges that in some participating states the practitioners of certain religions—in particular Jews and Baptists—are subjected to especially severe restraints in the exercise of their communal religious life notwithstanding official constitutional guarantees that all citizens shall enjoy freedom of religion? Examples of this penalization are the prohibition of organized religious instruction, restrictions on private worship, communal, social and fund-raising activities, harassment at church festivals, restrictions on the importation of religious literature and even the prosecution and imprisonment of believers, especially those advocating more religious freedom. Why are contacts between practitioners of the same religion living in different participating states sometimes discouraged or prevented, despite the fact that in the third chapter of the Final Act it is explicitly stated that 'religious faiths, institutions and organizations, practising within the constitutional framework of the participating states' can have such contacts? These matters are of real and continuing concern to many Canadians . . .

One of the objectives Canada had at the Belgrade meeting—and it made this clear early in the meeting—was to get participating states to agree to facilitate normal communication of ideas and information between individuals, particularly through the freer flow of printed material. This objective included religious information. This objective was put into concrete form as a western proposal that Canada co-sponsored, by which governments would take the following action:

express their intention not to impede the satisfaction of the demand existing on their territory for the newspapers and printed publications, periodical and non-periodical, from the other participating States and will to this end avail themselves of the ways and means set out under the heading 'printed information' including, inter alia, the development of the possibilities for taking out subscriptions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the motion before us speaks of individuals being permitted to transmit religious materials. At Belgrade the Canadian delegation put particular stress on the role of the individual in the implementation of the Final Act. That was not a new concept we tried to inject into the CSCE discussions. Quite the contrary, it is a concept already in the Final Act and, in a proposal we eventually co-sponsored on this point, we simply wished to reaffirm as follows:

The relevant and positive role which institutions, organizations and persons as well as governments have to play in the process of developing co-operation between governments and peoples and in the process of securing the implementation of the provisions of the Final Act.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West has asked us to make short interventions and I will, of course, respect his wish. I conclude by saying that the closing statement Canada made on March 9 makes it quite clear that Canadian interest in humanitarian questions will not cease just because the Belgrade meeting has ended. On the contrary, our commitment to those goals will be vigorously maintained in the months and years ahead as we prepare for the meeting in Madrid in 1980. At that time there will be another opportunity to scrutinize the performance of this Final Act by all participating nations in this very important area of human rights which includes the area of concern of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West which he so eloquently put to us this afternoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) on his initiative in presenting this motion to the House, which reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Canadian delegation at the Belgrade Conference on the Helsinki Accords should gain guarantees from the government of the U.S.S.R. that individuals be permitted to send or personally bring with them bibles and other religious publications when visiting friends or relatives in the U.S.S.R.

I agree that we should not debate this motion very long. I want to urge members to give the motion unanimous consent so that it can become a landmark of our posture on the Helsinki agreement and the relationship we want to establish with those people in the U.S.S.R. who are labelled there as dissidents and, in one sense, are unwanted people.

My grandparents came to this country from the Ukraine over 100 years ago. They had lived there for a generation or two, having come from Germany. It has been the history of the Mennonite people to move from one country to another in search of freedom of conscience. They had been promised that kind of freedom in Russia by Catherine the Great and had enjoyed it for many years. In the latter part of the 1800's, however, they became nervous because czarist Russia was experiencing revolution and feeling more and more the need to arm. As a result, my ancestors looked for another place and so came to Canada over 100 years ago. I still have many distant relatives there.

In the 1920's, 25,000 more Mennonites came from Russia to settle in Canada in search of religious freedom and to escape the persecution they were experiencing from the statist Communist regime of the Soviet Union. They were not allowed that freedom of conscience that had been promised to them by the previous government. Even to this day, although the Russian constitution guarantees to them freedom of conscience and freedom of worship, they really do not enjoy that. Members of the Mennonite faith, the Pentecostal faith, the Baptist faith and many other religious denominations have to meet in secret. They have to meet in the woods or in basements. They meet at a moment's notice so that the KGB does not know when that meeting is going to take place and cannot find them. This in spite of the fact that the constitution guarantees them freedom of worship.

• (1732)

It is because of knowledge that I have that many of my far distant relatives are still suffering prosecution that I really was not very happy with the fact that Canada was signing the Helsinki agreement. As far as I was concerned, it was a charade and a farce. Having signed that agreement, I find there are opportunities to point out to that government it is not living up to the agreements on human rights and the human rights accord which they promised in that document. They are not living up to that. Just last night in one of the local churches in my community we were given a report of the very latest incidents taking place. When the so-called tourists come to the Russian border, their cars are literally torn apart in search of Bibles and New Testaments that are being smuggled into the country in some kind of clandestine fashion. It has come to the point where each tourist is allowed one copy of each kind of book. Therefore, they can bring into the country one Holy Bible and one New Testament. These are printed in Germany for the Russian people.

Many people are not allowed to have bibles in their homes. According to the law, children up to the age of 18 are not allowed to participate in religious worship. It is the attitude of the Russians that up to that time they are being brainwashed by their parents. Up to age 18 they are under the protection of the state. They are not allowed to worship freely. There are no Sunday schools; that is considered brainwashing. People there cannot understand that in our country children can freely go to church and Sunday school. They cannot believe there are stores in Canada which specialize in selling Bibles and religious books.

The Russians make a big deal of the fact that in the city of Moscow there is a very large Baptist church in which leading religious leaders are invited to speak and do speak there. The common experience when people from the United States and Canada speak there is that the Christians there are inexpressibly hungry for the kind of preaching that is presented to them on those days.

While the large cities have large churches, when you leave the metropolitan areas and go to the villages and hamlets you find there are no churches, or at least very few. The people are being hunted out and punished for having religious convictions. I think of the case of Mr. Georg Vins, a Baptist preacher in that country. There are many well documented rumours that he is being poisoned while in prison.

His son is following in his footsteps and is now a Baptist preacher. He was recently fired from his job; he cannot maintain employment because he is a Baptist preacher. Because he is now unemployed, he is considered a vagabond and therefore punished and fined for not having a job. It is the catch 22 situation in Russia. You cannot propagate or express your faith. If you do, you lose your job. If you lose your job, you are punished even more for being a burden to the state.

In addition to the children, those who suffer most are the people on pension. These people earned a pension during their hard-working years. If they are found and convicted of participating in religious worship, they are fined 50 per cent of their pension. This is in a country that has signed the Helsinki agreement and supposedly is allowing for free access to scriptures. I think of the experience of a man called Brother Andrew. He has been dubbed "God's smuggler". He has made it his mission in life to smuggle bibles into that country. If the Russians allow freedom of worship, how can one man make it his mission in life to smuggle Bibles into that country? How can that be if there is free access to the scriptures?

The Mennonite Central Committee formed a delegation two years ago to meet with Russian officials. They asked to be allowed to import 10,000 Bibles into Russia. Some time later they were given permission to import 10,000 hymn books. That is something, I am glad for that, but it is strange that the request was sidetracked in that way.

The Russian government has adopted a means of isolating believing Christians by using the term unorganized or unrecognized churches. That is their euphemism for labelling or dealing with people whom they consider to be dissidents because they want to worship God in the way they have chosen as a result of the commitment they have made to the person of Jesus Christ.

Two years from now we will have the Olympics in the city of Moscow. I am sure it will be an extravaganza par excellence. The government of the U.S.S.R. will want to have thousands of tourists present on those days to see the Olympics and the accomplishments they have made in a material sense. Tourists will come from around the world to see the Olympics and other parts of their country. I wonder what it will be like for tourists who want to bring more than one Bible into the country. How much will they be frisked? How much freedom will they be given to travel around that country and visit their fellow Christians, their brothers and sisters? Will they be allowed free access to little groups who worship around the country or will they be hassled and harassed as they come to the border? If they have ten, 20 or 30 bibles, will they be confiscated?

I speak on this motion because I am concerned for those of my brothers and sisters in Russia who do not have the freedoms that we enjoy here. They hunger for the kind of fellowship that ought to be theirs and was promised to them under the constitution that was passed by their government.

I commend the hon. member for Fraser Valley West for bringing this issue before us and the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for updating it and pointing out that we will have another day of scrutiny in 1980. After the 1980 Olympics, we will have an opportunity to examine the record established by the government of the U.S.S.R. in relation to all of the countries that are signatories to the Helsinki agreement. I urge hon. members to make it a personal responsibility to examine what is going on in that country in relation to Christian and Jewish believers in particular, who are suffering for their faith. I urge them to do their own research and at the 1980 conference in Madrid bring the question before the Russian delegation to make sure they give a proper accounting of their mandate to live up to the Helsinki agreement.

● (1742)

I should like to close by referring to one of the resolutions presented at the Twelfth Ukrainian Congress held in Winnipeg in October, 1977. It points out that the U.S.S.R. forbids the Ukrainian clergy and lay people from sending bibles and other religious publications to their co-religionists in the Ukraine either by mail or by personal delivery, and concludes by expressing the desire that there should be freedom of worship and freedom of access to the scriptures.

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to compliment the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). The issue he raises is one of great concern to us in Canada; it comes sharply into focus when we hear from other parts of the world about limitations upon human freedom which, fortunately, are outside our own experience.

The motion before us, in effect, seeks guarantees from the government of the U.S.S.R. through the forum of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe that bibles and religious publications will be able to enter the Soviet Union without hindrance. In view of reports received about difficulties experienced by some who have tried to take or send such material into the Soviet Union, the objective of the motion is certainly understandable and deserves our sympathy. Indeed, it is completely consistent with the basic aims of the Helsinki Final Act.

That document, among other things, tries to promote freedom of religion and the freer flow of information and ideas. The Final Act, however, is not an agreement in the sense of an international treaty with legally binding obligations which, if not adhered to, may be considered as violated. It is simply a declaration of intentions or guidelines for future action by governments. There are no deadlines by which it must be implemented nor any hard and fast rules on how it is to be implemented. It is by its very nature a long-term process and one should be under no illusions about the obstacles that lie in the way of its full implementation. We cannot, in other words, insist that the U.S.S.R. give the kind of guarantees the motion before us suggests.

Having said that, I have to add that human rights are a matter of concern to Canadians, particularly freedom of conscience and belief which are fundamental rights. Where these are not permitted to exist or are hindered, it is difficult to see how the process of increasing confidence and overcoming mistrust which are at the heart of détente can be promoted. Whether certain governments like it or not, therefore, human rights and humanitarian issues will continue to feature prominently in East-West relations and will be the means by which the vast majority of the public will gauge the sincerity of undertakings within the CSCE context. This makes it all the more important for governments to move in the direction of better respect for human rights and humanitarian co-operation and to be seen to be doing so. This is most important, in my opinion. It is not just a case of being seen to be doing so, because as was once said you can con the people some of the time but not all the time, and the rest of the world is watching.

Unfortunately, there is a tendency on the part of some governments of Eastern Europe to dismiss the importance of what the public in the west thinks. That is a serious mistake on their part and we have to find ways of impressing that point on them. Those members of the House who were able to participate in the Belgrade meeting of the CSCE had perhaps one of the best opportunities of doing so. Certainly the Canadian delegation made the point repeatedly about the importance of living up to the undertakings in the Final Act: otherwise, there was a real danger of public skepticism about the value of the CSCE process and even about détente itself.

We did not get agreement on the various human rights and humanitarian proposals Canada and other western countries put forward at Belgrade and the concluding document that emerged fell far short of what we hoped at the beginning it might be possible to achieve. In fact, the document was no more than it was primarily because the reality of the situation at Belgrade was that the Soviet Union and its friends were not ready to see any forward movement on the vital questions of human rights and humanitarian co-operation and the western delegations refused to agree to an unbalanced document that did not take into account their concerns on these issues.

As the Belgrade meeting is over, the question we have to address ourselves to is what we can do to encourage the kind of progress sought in the motion before us between now and Madrid when the 35 CSCE participants will meet again.

Mr. Paproski: Let the motion pass.

Mr. Condon: We cannot simply carry on as though all our problems were resolved at Belgrade and the slate had been wiped clean. The Eastern European governments have to understand that the questions we regard as urgent have to be taken seriously and that their unwillingness to do so cannot fail to have an effect on our dealings with them. We as members of parliament have just as much a role to play in bringing about an understanding of this point during our encounters with Eastern European officials and parliamentarians at international meetings and during visits.

This is an issue about which all of us are most concerned. Again I congratulate the hon. member for Fraser Valley West whose comments I appreciate.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to contribute to this debate because I believe firmly in the thrust of the position advocated by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). However, I am bound to take exception to one aspect of the presentation of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). It is important that we use terms accurately in this debate. He used the word "Russia" throughout and I think it is very important that we should understand that this is not a problem with Russia as such but with the Soviet Union.

Mr. Friesen: I used that expression, true.

Mr. MacGuigan: I have no doubt. But this is a point well worth making. There are many important nations within the Soviet Union from the point of view of national origin. Our issue is not with those nations but with the Soviet Union and its policy position.

The question of the importation of bibles and other religious materials into the Soviet Union is directly linked to that of religious freedom. As such, it falls squarely into the Agreement on Security and Co-operation in Europe, the Helsinki accord, as it is called. Basket one contains provision for this very type of thing. In accordance with the seventh principle, the participating states undertake to respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief. It may also be said to fall into basket three, which pertains more directly to human rights and relates to such things as humanitarian principles involving the freer movement of people, ideas and information.

● (1752)

However, even beyond that, the Soviet Union's own constitution guarantees for its citizens the right to observe any religion they choose. The problem is that the actual practice of religion in the Soviet Union is much more difficult. Opposed to the theoretical freedom of religion are the practices and ideals of communism. The Soviet Union officially espouses atheism and, as a result, ensures that atheism is taught to all children in the Soviet Union.

To counter the effect of religion, obstacles are placed in the way of its practice. The most important are the banning of public proselytizing and strict limitations on the teaching of religion to children under the age of 18. Religion is also interfered with by the strict controls that are kept on the churches and their priests and by the limitations which are placed on the availability of religious materials.

While bibles are printed in the Soviet Union, they are printed in numbers that are woefully inadequate for the need. In order to prevent proliferation of such material from other sources, a ban is placed on the importation of such materials as well. This ban takes the form of customs regulations. Tourists and visitors to the Soviet Union are allowed to bring with them religious material for their personal use only.

Freedom of religion is one of the issues which clearly separates east and west. Canada, as part of its contribution to the east-west dialogue, has always insisted that basic freedoms such as that of religion must be fully respected if relations not only between Canada and the U.S.S.R. but also between east and west generally are to progress. Canada has pointed out that people here care about issues such as this. They care that people of whatever faith in the Soviet Union are not able to obtain the materials which are necessary for the free practice of their religion.

Mr. Wenman: Sit down.

Mr. MacGuigan: I do not understand clearly the words the hon. member opposite is saying, but I believe he is probably not aware of the fact that this resolution could not be passed by the House in its present form. I recognize that when the hon. member introduced this resolution this matter was before the conference, but there is no way now that we can pass a resolution in this House which says that we should do something at a conference which is already over.

Mr. Wenman: Amend the resolution.

Mr. MacGuigan: Great as are the powers of this government and its good intentions, even it cannot undo what has already been done.

The Soviet Union has replied and will undoubtedly continue to reply—unfortunately—that freedom of religion exists in the Soviet Union, that what limitations there are and what apparent hindrances exist are not real impediments and are in any case matters of purely internal Soviet concern. The Soviet Union has been very firm in stating that it will not tolerate interference in its affairs and has indicated clearly that it will resist outside pressures which it feels are intended not to meet human rights purposes but to undermine the strength of Soviet Union control. In practice, however, the Soviet Union normally sees all pressure of this kind as directed toward weakening its control and seems unable to distinguish a category of outside pressure which would be seen by others as directed only at human rights.

Détente in terms of east-west relations is an important process for both sides. As such, we must all work to further it, but this can be done only if there is an increased understanding between the people of the east and the west. Such improved understanding is possible only if both sides can accept fully that basic human rights must be respected. In the present circumstances respect for human rights is the main yardstick people in the west use for measuring progress in détente.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would entertain a question.

Mr. MacGuigan: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Friesen: It is the intention of the hon. member to talk this resolution out anyway. The hon. member says he believes in détente and that getting to understanding each other better is an important experience which we must go through. I wonder if the hon. member feels the same way with regard to South Africa.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the problem we have with South Africa is different from the problem we have with the Soviet Union. However, with respect to questions of human rights there is no difference between the standard I expect from the government of South Africa and that which I expect from the Soviet Union. From my point of view, I am not very satisfied with the practice of human rights in either of those states.

Mr. Wenman: Would you accept an amendment then?

Mr. MacGuigan: It is not for me to accept or reject amendments. My purpose is to express my views on this important issue of the day.

The Belgrade meeting of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe is over. It ended without a substantive concluding document which spelled out any progress in the human rights field. However, the meeting did take place and during it a thorough review was made of the provisions of the Helsinki Final Act which covers explicitly the issues we are discussing here. Canada made it very clear that its people expect progress in areas such as human rights, including particularly freedom of religion and the free flow of information and printed material.

I want here to express the gratitude which many people in Canada feel to the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Cafik) for the strong position he took on behalf of our government at the Belgrade conference. We were able to send many observers from this House who contributed to the discussions and to our understanding of the problem, but it was especially fortunate that we were able to send the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) to make the final statement for our government at the conclusion of that conference.

It is impossible for us to force the Soviet Union to make specific concessions in this area. International relations do not work that way, so it would not be possible to obtain a guarantee as such, to use the word which the motion uses. However, the Soviet Union must be made aware, and has been made aware by our minister and by our government, of the concern of the Canadian people in this matter, and it should have no doubts in the future about the intention of the Canadian people as a whole to pursue this matter further.

Freedom to import bibles and other religious materials is one specific example of an area in which progress must be made in human rights if the CSCE and détente are to be seen by the people of Canada and by the people of the world as valid processes.

Some people will raise the question of whether the whole process of Helsinki and the follow-up conference in Belgrade were worth while. I want to quote briefly from the words of the Minister of State (Multiculturalism), who said the following at Belgrade on behalf of our government and our country:

> We had hoped that Belgrade would be the occasion for all signatory governments not only to reaffirm their pledges to respect human rights, but also to act on them. We have never claimed that human rights are all there is to détente. What we have claimed and what we do claim is that, to the extent that détente rests on confidence, we cannot muster that confidence among our citizens unless it is seen to have a human dimension. Respect for human rights is part of the structure and balance of the Final Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

● (2002)

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

PETROLEUM ADMINISTRATION ACT

MEASURE TO AUTHORIZE IMPOSITION OF LEVY ON DOMESTIC PETROLEUM AND IMPORTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gillespie that Bill C-19, to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): At five o'clock the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) had the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, when the debate was suspended at five o'clock this afternoon, I was summarizing the remarks I had occasion to make when a committee of the House visited the Northwest Territories, the Yukon and also Alaska, on the American side, up to Prudhoe Bay. I was filled with wonder at the sight of those vast territories being explored by the oil companies, national or multinational; they act like little sisters, over there, exactly as if they were the Dionne quintuplets. We all remember the Dionne quintuplets, all in the same cradle. Over there, the companies act the same way. I have nothing against that! As long as we do research that is beneficial to all Canadians. But having done the research, they should not agree to put off the development of the large oil resources existing in those regions and worry Canadians by saying: "Well, we may run out of this source of energy in five, or maybe ten years." I am against creating all this concern among Canadians and the fact that they accept to pay higher prices because in my opinion there is something desperately wrong if there is enough oil at $1 a gallon but no longer enough at 70 cents. I quite agree that companies involved in research should reap benefits so they can pay dividends to their shareholders, because I do prefer financially sound companies to those which are on the verge of bankruptcy. But there should be a happy medium between these two extremes.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Then again I had the opportunity to visit the preliminary operations related to the Alberta tar sands. I understand this type of operation is more costly than well drilling, but when you sink a well you expect to get some oil out of it. I understand all this. Last week, during the debate on the budget, some hon. members are reported to have mentioned the government proposals on tax reductions, especially as regards the sale tax, and it has been said Alberta does not have much to say in that regard because it does not have any tax on retail sales. It makes me very happy. If in the last 35 or 40 years the government of Alberta has been wise enough to use its natural resources to finance its operations and contribute to the expenses of the province, whether under Social Credit government headed by Aberhart, or Manning or under the present premier, I am pleased that they use their natural resources for the benefit of taxpayers to finance the public sector of the province.

I wish all provinces endowed with plenty of natural resources would do the same, be it forestry or hydroelectric wealth like in my province, for instance. Those resources ought to be used for the benefit of the people to relieve them from their tax burden. I entirely agree with that. But, Mr. Speaker, this is not the issue. The object of Bill C-19 is to maintain our national price at the world price level. And we must take the necessary means for that. We should not fall into the trap. We see some far east countries relying entirely on this and succeeding in blackmailing many nations throughout the world just because they have tremendous reserves. Good for them, but if you want to maintain peace and avoid what I can foresee, an armed conflict, we must negotiate with them. We must conclude agreements with those countries but we should not produce every day millions of barrels of oil and send them to the other side of the border with the idea that we must share our resources with our neighbours. I have nothing against it but we should not share with our neighbours at the expense of our own children, at the expense of Canadians. In that respect I invite our government to be extremely careful as Canadians are more aware of the situation than they think. They are watching the production of Canadian oil more closely than we think and it is a matter that concers them a lot.

Although I am not an expert, I do not accept the fact that we frighten Canadians by telling them in four, five or six years we shall have an oil shortage. If those predictions are right they have been made by people who are much smarter than us we are and who have been able to explore the subsoil, and if they are so smart we should hire them immediately to try to implement a more intensive research program on solar energy. This is something I trust because nobody can harness solar energy at the expense of others. It is a matter of finding ways to use this energy, of being able to store it for the months when the intensity of the sun is not so high. We are not in Africa but in Canada. If those scholars were able to discover the possibility of exploring underground for oil resources, it would be all to the good if we could use the same persons to channel solar energy.

Mr. Speaker, I would not like my words to be interpreted as those of a waster, far from it. I have been using oil, gas and kerosene for a long time. We used to buy it 30 or 40 years ago at 25 cents a gallon. I bought some about two weeks ago at $4.50 a gallon. It is far from being the same price. The container has changed, it has been coloured, some odour has been added to it so that it does not smell oil so much, and they find a way to sell it to us at $4.50 a gallon.

Furthermore, I would add that I favour the energy conservation program. Last weekend, Mr. Speaker, I made a personal experience when I left the House at five o'clock like many of my colleagues. I got my bags ready and then left by car for my riding which is some 300 miles away. While driving I paid attention to the traffic regulations and to my great surprise, when I reached the station where I usually fill up my tank, I noticed that my car had consumed two gallons of gasoline less than usual. That was a personal experience.

I favour such action and measures should be taken to try saving these resources while carrying out all our daily business and doing our work in a normal fashion. Yet between that and pushing the panic button, thereby allowing prices to be considerably increased by those who have the monopoly on the exploitation of these natural resources, there is a world of difference. I would like the government, through its ministers, to keep its eyes open on that situation so that the public can take us seriously. Canadians are urged to insulate their homes properly. I support this program because it is quite sensible. I have never believed that a father, even if he is a millionaire, should encourage his children to waste. I have never believed that myself. I think that a millionaire is most able to give wise advice to his children so that they can better manage their own affairs. Someone who does not own anything cannot ask his children to save anything, because they have nothing to save, nothing to safeguard. The affluent people are those who are in the best position to try to invite others to do something so that altogether in Canada we may make better use of our natural riches, even electricity. When we are 20 miles from Montreal, I look at the street lights on each side of the Trans-Canada highway and by God, they are all turned on even in bright daylight. We are told to save electricity, to be careful, to turn lights off when there is no need for them, yet the government does not even set the good example.

Mr. Speaker, how many buildings, even those occupied by the federal and provincial governments are lighted all day long, all night long, thereby wasting energy. Yet that good example should be given, Mr. Speaker, and it is—

Mr. Marceau: Sometimes it costs less that way.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): My colleague, the member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau), says that sometimes it costs less to leave the lights on! Perhaps it is cheaper, so let us leave our engines running.

An hon. Member: It depends.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Yes, it depends. So I think that consuming uselessly is spending. I am convinced that the hon. member for Lapointe made a very serious reflection. Quite possibly what he said could be true in certain cases but in any event one has to be able to distinguish. One must also distinguish in the use of our natural resources.

In any case I do not want to delay unduly the passage of Bill C-19. I merely wanted to make a few remarks at this stage to further urge the government to be careful vis-à-vis those who have the possibility of doing research work. They are given tax benefits. They are given benefits to allow them to be able to do more. But they should not laugh at people either. At the end of the year we should not hear about shocking profits and hidden profits on which no taxes are paid. It is important to keep our eyes open and really see how the wealth of the people is being administered because natural resources are a common good. We agree that this common good should be exploited, that it should be put at the service of the people as a whole and that funds should be voted to go further ahead, but only after it is found that they are not hiding the truth away from us so the people will be filled with hope and will co-operate in an intelligent and well-informed manner instead of being distrustful. That is the whole difference. And when you have people who co-operate with government because they are well enlighted I think that makes running things a lot easier and all people can finally benefit from it.

• (2012)

[English]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-19 is a bill we have to put through for a very simple and obvious reason: we need access to the oil sands of Alberta to guarantee that we will have sufficient of the so-called traditional types of oil to keep our industrial machine operating. I do not like this Petroleum Administration Act, as the debates of several years ago will testify, because it is a major infringement of the rights of the provinces to control their own resources. I will not speak on that subject tonight; we had a go at that several years ago.

Tonight I should like to refer to the practical problem which this particular bill brings to mind, and I want to put forward a positive suggestion on how to cope with that problem. Bill C-19 is using the powers of the Petroleum Administration Act to control prices. That is a movement toward restriction, under the powers of trade of the government, in the economic affairs of this nation. Not only is it an infringement of the principal rights of ownership over the resources as laid down in 1867 in the original British North America Act, but it was also made abundantly clear in the amendments to the British North America Act in 1930 and 1931.

● (2022)

One thing I should like to make very clear as a starting point is that the cost of producing oil in Canada has set the world price. We have the mistaken notion, as has been evidenced this afternoon, that the price is set in the world by OPEC nations. The OPEC nations base their economic philosophy and the price level at which they set their oil on two factors. The first factor is that they calculate the cost of producing oil from the oil sands in Canada as the major guide. They know the tremendous resources of this country's oil sands are greater than all their resources, and they know that if we cannot find a cheaper way of producing oil than the way we now use that should be assumed as the foundation of the oil price for the next fifty to one hundred years. The second factor they use, or are trying to use because they have not been successful as yet, is an indexing of oil prices based on the average cost on world markets of the goods they have to consume.

Let me emphasize the fact that when we debate this bill we should remember it is concerned primarily with getting Canadian oil costs up to world levels and the subsidization of the efforts of oil companies to produce oil from the oil sands. It is with that background that I make these remarks. I am very pleased to note that the minister is here tonight. Some two weeks ago I asked him whether he was aware of the proposal I made to Mr. Turner when he was in the House and was minister of finance in an effort to get across to the government the idea that the financing of these oil sands developments was of paramount importance. Tonight I am going to take advantage of the offer of the minister to accept a description of this proposal in some detail.

I have discussed this matter with the premiers of the provinces and with the heads of several of the large oil companies in the world, and I will send the proposal to him so that he may once again put it before his officials for their assessment. When he does I am certain he will find out, as did Mr. Turner, that it is a good idea; it is a good idea; it is sound, and one cannot shoot it down on the basis of economic impracticality.

The only answer the minister was able to give me several years ago when I put this proposal to him, at a time when we were first discussing oil sands financing, was that private companies did not use this method of financing. That remark by the minister was very true then, but that does not mean that we as a parliament should stand by and watch such poor financing being used in respect of a product so vital to the economic health of this and every other nation of the world.

I will start out on this explanation by using a simple analogy. It is based on the true fact that the biggest cost in any capital intensive entreprise is the interest cost. The cost of interest is hard to visualize when you look at cash flow based on discounted cash such as businesses use. However, put in terms of purchasing a home I think it is understandable to us all. These are round roughly worked out on a calculator, but they are accurate to within a decimal point. If a young person takes out a $50,000 mortgage on a home today for 30 years at a rate of interest of 12 per cent per annum, before the mortgage is paid off that home costs that young person, over the 30 year period, $202,000. This means that the total cost of the home, which takes the greater part of that young person's life to pay for, is over 75 per cent interest. We can all understand and visualize that, and the same situation applies to any capital intensive enterprise.

In the case of the oil sands the percentage is the same. Using the figures I used some years ago, which turned out to be very accurate, I calculate that under the present method of financing the Syncrude plant being built now in Alberta it will cost the company about $11 to produce one barrel of oil, and of that $11 over $8 is interest.

When you realize the immensity of the interest charged you can visualize the tremendous load on a company trying to finance such a development and refinery and get into production. When you realize the next step, Mr. Speaker, you will know it is also a load on the consumer in Canada. This represents a load on all people whether or not they use oil, because we are being asked to subsidize through the treasury in terms of this bill this very type of construction in the oil sands.

When I put this proposal forward now I want the House to understand it has been shown to every premier in this country and to the heads of nearly all the big oil companies interested in this type of development. It has also been mentioned and described before in this House. If it is as sound as I claim it to be, I hope it will be tried on for size by the various consortiums being developed or pulled together to develop our oil sands.

Fundamentally, this proposal is based on the principle of economics that when you are faced with high capital costs, in addition to which interest rates are high, the trick is to find some way to obtain a fast payout. This principle was accepted many years ago in Canada by this parliament in relation to the three year tax hold off in mining. If you go back over mining history in Canada, Mr. Speaker, you will note that as long as we had that three year tax free period for the company that invested its money in this very great risk enterprise—that is, a three year period in which they could pay off their capital before being subject to federal tax—the mining industry was healthy and growing. We took that three year period off some seven years ago and our mining industry in Canada is now just as unhealthy as it is in the United States, because the tax laws are competitive. Our tax laws now in respect of mines—and this could just as well be applied to oil and gas and other things—are ruinously heavy, with the result that we are not getting the mining development we should have at this time.

I know the fault lies with both provincial and federal governments. For years the federal government tried to get the provinces to tax their mining industries a little harder. All of a sudden, with rising mineral and metal prices in 1973, almost all the western provinces jumped in and increased their taxes three or four times. That is when the mining industry went into the slump in which it is still today.

The crime of the provinces being too greedy was compounded by the federal budget of 1974 under Mr. Turner. The government refused to accept provincial royalties and taxes, now much greater, as deductible under federal legislation. So, in effect, we had double taxation of a mining industry and the tax liability jumped up to 60, 70, 80 and in some cases over 100 per cent. That is why many mines with ore left to be mined had to go out of business over the last number of years. In the House I have been trying by questions and by speeches to get the provinces and the federal government to sit down and get rid of this problem. I know the minister is aware of it, and I think he is trying to get a consensus among the provinces; but the fact is that we have had this double taxation on the mines for over four years now.

● (2032)

Now, what is the proposal? The answer, if you are up against this high interest charge, is to have some form of fast payout, and the trick is very simple and old fashioned. You simply agree under contractual arrangement that there will be no dividends to the shareholders, no royalties to the provincial government, and no taxes either to provincial or federal governments, as long as all the revenue from that particular project—in this case the oil sands plant—is devoted to paying off that debt.

In the calculations that I did some three or four years ago the cost of the oil sands plant was $2 billion. It is now 2½ billion. But using the figure of $2 billion, hypothetically how long would it take to pay off a debt of $2 billion? In an enterprise of this sort, backed up by the size of companies that will be in this type of operation, and backed up by governments who are interested in getting this development, one can safely assume an interest rate of 10 per cent. It can also be assumed that operating costs to produce a barrel of oil will not be much different from what they were three years ago. At that time the operating cost per barrel was about $1.50. Even if you assume it is $2 a barrel, if the oil brings in $12 a barrel—and that is a very conservative figure—your net per barrel after operating costs is $10. That is a net operating profit. Under the present system of financing it has to go through a long spread-out payout period, and that is how you get the cost up to $11 or $12 a barrel.

However, if that particular operation was broken down into a leverage factor of about one to three—say, $500 million in equity and $1,500 million in senior bonds—you would have a situation if you applied the old rule of a fast payout where you could pay off that debt in four years and four months. The timetable that I have here is reasonably close to the fact, assuming that the first three years the money is required for construction. That gives you a certain amount of debt that has been capitalized at the end of that three years. In the first year of the second stage of operation you have a big interest payment to make, and if you took the net at $10 a barrel, which is very close at the present time, and multiplied by the number of barrels per day for the number of days in the year, your net income on this assumed plan of 125,000 barrels a day would give you a net income per year of $456 million. If you applied the whole of that net $456 million to a debt which has been rising, it could be paid off completely in four years and four months.

This means that at the end of that time, instead of having a cost of $11 or $12 a barrel, you would only have an operating cost of, say, $2 a barrel. Replacement costs to build the new plants would be approximately 50 cents to a dollar, giving you $8 left over per barrel to distribute among those who had done without the taxes and the dividends.

When this matter was discussed in the standing committee on energy, mines and resources I asked the then minister, Mr. Macdonald, what he thought if we assumed a system like this one—a fair division based on the constitutional ownership of these resources belonging to the provinces, the traditional share that would go to the federal government out of profits and the amount that should go to equity to pay for the risk. I do not hold Mr. Macdonald to his statement, but it was his estimate of a fair equitable portion that I have used in these next figures. He assumed that it was fair to give 50 per cent of the net to the owner of the resources—I am speaking of profits—20 per cent of the net to the federal government, and 30 per cent to those who had taken the risk in the form of equity. In the group who took the risks would be included the private investor, the institutional investor and the governments that wanted to invest.

Working that out you find that if this proportion were followed for the 22 to 25 years that are left in the life of the field after you have paid off all the debt in the eight years—three years of construction and four and one third years of operation—you would have a very nice profit for each of the partners. The provinces with their 50 per cent would get $228 million out of each plant, the federal government's share would be $91 million per year, and the equity holder's share would be $137 million. As I said, the equity holders could be the federal government, the provincial governments, individuals and institutional investors.

If you put this down and relate it back to interest rates, and if you base it on the equity at the very beginning and compound it, it will give them roughly a 13 per cent return on their money. If you based it on the original amount they invested, it would come up to the normal amount needed in a risk enterprise of roughly 25 per cent. If the federal government was in the equity as well, they would get their share of 27 per cent return on equity investment plus their share of 20 per cent of the total. If you work this out based on a period of 30 years of life in one of these plants, you will recognize that everyone benefits.

Using this hypothetical example, the federal government would receive approximately $90 million a year. The provincial government would be the lucky one with $228 million, but they own the resources and they are being sold off. And, of course, the equity people would have enough return to balance the return that this type of money gets in other operations.

If one compares this proposal to the solution of the British government in handling the risk enterprise in the North Sea, one will see that it comes very close. In the North Sea, with little or no taxes in the first payout period and a high proportion to the government after the payout period, the government of the United Kingdom gets approximately 60 per cent of the net value of every barrel ol oil. The private investor, government investor or equity share earns roughly 25 per cent of the total capital invested. That satisfies the risk takers that they are going to get a good return if they have a successful operation, and it also leaves a great share to the people who own it, the people of the United Kingdom. If a socialist government in Great Britain can adopt such terms and regulations, so can we in Canada.

Our own government used this philosophy last year when they announced the oil and gas regulations. If you look at the new oil and gas regulations announced in parliament, you will find that in all new discoveries of oil and/or gas in the far north under federal jurisdiction the costs are all accumulated under the parameters or boundaries, and when they are paid off a certain proportion goes to the risk taker and the balance, on a sliding scale, goes to the federal government on behalf of all of the people of Canada, who are the owners at the present time. This particular philosophy—paying off your capital debt quickly so there will be more money left over to divide among the people who have a right to it—is accepted in so far as our oil and gas regulations are concerned in the territories.

● (2042)

We put that through last year. I am suggesting here and now that it would be more statesmanlike and economically sound if the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, (Mr. Gillespie), with the support of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Chrétien), were to call in the companies interested in these consortiums and ask them how the proposals affect their interests and whether they would be willing to go along with them. When you are dealing with an oil sands plant you are not dealing with the risk of finding oil—you know it is there. The risk is in the tremendous cost and the difficulty of getting the oil into a form which can be used for refining. There is also the difficulty of having to go deeper and deeper for it over the years ahead.

I think the companies would respond positively. Two or three years ago I wrote letters to all of them. One replied that if the government would agree to that kind of contractual proposal they would not have any trouble getting the money. They also claimed they could bring it in at 7 per cent instead of 10 per cent because of the fast payout. These are mostly international oil companies and their primary interest is to gain access to oil for distribution purposes. They are content to give all the equity to Canadians. What is the matter with equity for Canadians, Mr. Speaker, if under contractual arrangements they are pretty well guaranteed a 25 per cent return? Certainly there will be a period of eight or nine years when there is no return, but as compensation for that delay the going rate is about 25 per cent.

I said the world price of oil was not set by OPEC but by the cost of producing oil from the oil sands of Canada. These are not my words, Mr. Speaker. These are the words of the men who drafted the OPEC agreement. Dr. Zuhayr Mikdie has been in Canada many times and knows more about the cost of developing these things in Canada than many Canadians do.

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain).]

He is one of the men who brought the oil companies together first in APEC and then in OPEC and he has written two definitive books on OPEC. According to him, they are going to continue to watch the costs we incur in the development of oil from the oil sands. We must not let these costs get out of hand because of lack of research and new technology, or lack of nerve to use new technologies—because some do require some nerve—or through the old fashioned technique of financing that we have followed for the last 50 years on the North American continent. Naturally they know what that price will be. If we can get our costs down we will still sell oil to consumers at world price, but we will know the profit is going to the people of Canada. That is the point I am trying to finish off with.

This is not a kooky proposal, it is sound in every way. I have tried it out on the best minds I can find in the business world as well as in the more theoretical areas of finance, and there is agreement. The federal government is going to get nothing at all out of Syncrude because, as this bill indicates, there will be no profit. Through this proposal, however, the federal government has the possibility of about $90 million each year for the next 25 years. The province of Alberta will be the big winner because they own the resource. It is their capital that is being sold off, so why should they not be the winners? Those people who take the risk, whether private companies, provincial governments or big institutional investors, want access to the resource and they will get a return as good as they could get any place else in the world.

I remind hon. members again and again that, for the safety of this country and in order to secure our supply of oil, we must build one of these capital intensive enterprises every three years to keep up with the growing demand for oil. If we can shift home heating and much of the industrial heating into renewable resources, economically it will be of great benefit. This must be done by individuals, however, which makes things difficult because individuals must be persuaded to spend capital on the equipment necessary to get access to cheaper renewable resources. In effect, what they are doing is replacing with one capital payment now a lifetime supply of free solar energy through the technology we already have. I am not referring to direct heating from the sun but to the stuff that is in the economic ballpark now. We have the economic capacity, the research facilities and the technology to heat all our homes, businesses, and high rise buildings a lot cheaper than at present. This would relieve the pressure on oil. In spite of this, however, a new oil sands plant will be needed every three years to keep up with the market demand.

It is therefore a matter of national security, when this bill goes through, that we make sure the government know that if they want to be competitive and keep the world price from rising they must assume the responsibility. It will not be difficult to persuade business that this type of structure is a good idea. The difficulty would be to persuade someone to take the lead, and the obvious person to do that would be the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

This whole petroleum administration bill is an evil bill, I think, in our type of federal structure. It gives all this power to the federal government. I simply suggest that the minister take the opportunity to use it for the good of Canada in keeping prices down.

I feel that what I have just said has made sense to most people in the House. I should like to see the same theory applied to every type of capital intensive enterprise that we undertake in Canada over the next few decades. The Minister of Finance and the government are held condemned and found guilty of letting our costs rise. We use the phrase "inflation" to describe it. One of the biggest factors in the cost rise of the last ten years has been the consistent rise in interest rates. If they follow a policy like the one I have proposed here—not just with one capital enterprise but with several and all new ones—it will mean that instead of paying out this money over a 20-year period, it will be paid out over a four or five-year period. In effect, the same amount of capital would be used four or five times over a 20-year period, which is the same as increasing the amount of capital stock four or five times.

Whether we deal with building an oil sands plant or building a home in Canada, the responsibility falls on the Minister of Finance. He can check inflation by calling for restraint. Price and wage controls are inflationary, but if he can make capital flow and use the velocity of repayment of capital, that would reduce interest rates which are one of the basic causes of inflation. Costs of government, land costs around cities, costs of labour-management computation techniques and the use of money supply are all cost factors and can be controlled. This government, however, has made no move to get at those five basic causes of inflation.

For ten years costs have been rising and for ten years the government has refused to take a single positive step—except for this silly business of rhyming off the Philips curve, which has been proved false by quantitative analysis. This proposal, Mr. Speaker, would not only get capital flowing faster but would bring more revenue to governments, which would reduce taxes and costs. It puts more people to work. You can have both unemployment and inflation at the same time, and a pox on all this drivel about the Philips curve.

● (2052)

The legislation and actions we need today are to fight inflation and unemployment at the same time, and they go the opposite way to this nonsense we have had to endure for the last 30 years from financial advisers, that if you help or fight inflation you are hurting employment, or vice versa. That nonsense is proved false by every test of quantitative analysis. Let's throw it out.

Here we have a glorious opportunity for the minister to take the lead. When he gets this bill through, he does not have to change the terms. He can still sit down with his particular consortium under Syncrude and put it before them. Make them explain to him why it is not a good idea. It is not too late because they are not yet into production.

When the new consortium comes forward with their proposal, it should be put before them as well. Put the arm on to Alberta and they will see that they will be the big gainers. With the province and the federal government talking to business face to face about how all of them are going to make more money, we cannot help but get a better deal, not only for the companies, the province and the federal government, but for every person in Canada. It will be the best brake the whole world has on keeping oil prices down over the next few decades.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this bill because the energy policy of this government is certainly a tremendous monument to its incompetence. One would think one could look at some aspect of this government's record and feel that one might be able to give it a bit of praise. However, I have been in this House week after week and I have not come across one aspect of this government's record yet, except spending money, which I could give any praise. Their energy policy has been bankrupt both in thought and in action or rather inaction.

This Bill C-19 should be A-19, abysmal 19. Apparently it is a bill to permit the government to carry out their commitment to Syncrude so that Syncrude will receive the world price for its oil products, synthetic oil, when it comes on stream. Syncrude, as hon. members know, is a company owned by the government of Canada, the government of Ontario and the government of Alberta, now engaged in building our second tar sands oil plant in Alberta. This bill is to carry out a commitment that was made to Syncrude some years ago to assure them that they will get at least the world price for oil.

I probably would not have spoken on this bill except that the minister, as he is wont to do, made a number of fatuous and inaccurate statements in the House several days ago. I was going to bring this up in another speech in the House, but now I have the opportunity to bring it up while this bill is before the House. We look at the minister's statements, a repetition in the House of his disgraceful performance at the first ministers' conference, the first ministers' "con game" in so far as the contribution of the federal government is concerned. The minister stated in this House, as reported on page 4486 of Hansard of April 13, and I quote:

> I believe we have made a lot of progress on the second thrust of our energy strategy, which would use every indigenous source of energy to replace foreign oil imports.

Where is the progress? What progress has been made? This bill only makes it possible for the government to carry out its commitment to Syncrude, to start construction of their plant three years ago, in 1974 or 1975. He said:

> —we have made a lot of progress on the second thrust of our energy strategy, which would use every indigenous source of energy to replace foreign oil imports.

Where is this happening? Just this year, Mr. Speaker, net imports into Canada will be in excess of 400,000 barrels of oil a day. How do you like that for its effect on our balance of payments? Twenty-three per cent of our total oil consumption in Canada this year is going to be imported. Where is this fantastic progress under the second thrust of our energy strategy? Where are all these indigenous sources of energy that are replacing the foreign oil imports? Where is the third tar sands plant we have been waiting for now for two years? Shell has been actively interested in it and trying to put it forward for at least a year or two years.

Mr. Paproski: Five years.

Mr. Crosbie: Some more knowledgeable member says five years. Where is that project? What has happened to that? This great policy of the government is a policy that now has us importing net 23 per cent of all the oil consumed in Canada this year. This is going to rise to about one third of all our oil consumption in Canada by 1985, and even higher beyond that, because it is now too late. It does not matter what actions are taken now. The lead time is so long for these projects that we will be in worse shape after 1985 than those figures indicate.

Major energy projects such as trunk pipelines, development of oil sands plants or heavy oil plants and the like require about ten years' lead time for their completion. Where is the minister's sense of urgency? All we hear from him in this House is a lot of gas about what the government has done and is going to do, but nothing of substance has been produced to show that anything has been accomplished.

The minister appeared before the committee last year. I asked him about the third tar sands proposal. He gave me his usual flip reply, that this matter was moving on, that it was all Alberta's fault that it was not going forward. In Hansard several days ago he got out the same nonsense again. Just to finish the quotation on page 4486 the minister said:

I believe we have been able to do it because we have been able to work out with the provinces a co-operative approach to the development of our massive energy resources.

What a sick joke. Where is the co-operative approach he has worked out with the provinces? All he has attempted to do is bully the provinces into falling into line with what he wants. There has been co-operative approach. All the minister has done is to go before the Canadian people in February at the first ministers' con game conference with his pointer and a blackboard with an alleged 40 great projects that he said would create one million jobs. The minister knew there were one million unemployed, so he got up with his pointer to pretend that he had 40 huge energy projects which would provide one million jobs to give the people of Canada watching the inference that the government was going to produce in the next few months a million jobs and 40 huge energy projects. He did not want to explain it would cost $80 million and it all had to be done over 25 years, if it was going to be done.

The patent dishonesty of this approach, the skullduggery of it, would make one throw up if one had not developed a hard constitution as a result of listening to this crew for the last 18 months. I sympathize with members who have had to listen to them for the last four years, put with any luck we won't have to listen to them after the next election. Anybody who wants to speak can get up and speak, including the "honourable Simma"—she should be honourable—from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt).

[Mr. Crosbie.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the hon. member please address the hon. member by her constituency and not by her name.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I refer to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I have in my hand the evidence of the minister's patent malarkey. He tabled it at the federal-provincial ministers' conference, February 13 to 15. I have a list of the projects the minister tried to pretend to the Canadian people were just about to go ahead. This marvelous minister, this super minister, would create one million jobs.

I look at No. 15, Kitimat oil port and pipeline. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that the next week the minister announced that that was kiboshed, that it was cancelled? One week he is up telling the Canadian people over television that this is going to create a number of jobs. I can give the figures later about the number of jobs. A week later the Canadian government announced they had cancelled it. We do not need an oil port for importing oil on the west coast of Canada, yet here it is listed so that the Canadian people will think it is going ahead.

Project No. 19(a) was Oil Sands III. It just staggers the imagination. The minister had the audacity to get up in February and say to the Canadian people that Oil Sands III was going ahead and that it would create jobs. Let us look it up and see just how many jobs the minister created at Oil Sands III. By golly, he created 20,000 jobs. Well, I want to know where the 20,000 jobs are. And the Canadian people will want to know that if this bill passes through the House. The minister estimated it to be a $3 billion project—the annual number of jobs for operating the plant would be 3,200, the construction total of man-years would be 20,000. But what we want to know, Mr. Speaker, is when will Shell confirm it is going ahead? It was announced by the minister in February. Will the minister admit to the House that he tried to fool the Canadian people in this disgraceful manner? The one million people are still unemployed. They were unemployed in February and they are unemployed now, because not one of these 40 projects has gone ahead.

• (2102)

The minister then had the gall to announce the expansion of the Great Canadian Oil Sands Company. Following that he announced the expansion of Syncrude. He said it was another project. The voters of Canada are not going to permit the minister to get away with this; they are not going to reward him. He also had the gall to announce the James Bay hydro development. It was started by Quebec Hydro in 1974 with not one nickel of federal government money in it. Not a nickel; not a muckle. It was pushed ahead despite the federal government, not because of it. The minister even included in his figures jobs which had been created on that project for the last three years. He included them in the total of jobs he said would be created. And in those million jobs he promised would be created he included jobs which had been filled for the last three years at James Bay. I say the minister should resign here tonight. I have never seen, in ten years in politics in Newfoundland, anything to match this. I thought our politics were a bit raw.

Our politics were a model; it was a political heaven after the chicanery I have seen up here in Ottawa.

An hon. Member: How about Come-By-Chance?

Mr. Crosbie: The minister announced the Fundy tidal power project in February and just two or three weeks ago we heard another announcement by the minister. He said he was going ahead in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick with another study on the Fundy tidal power project. The government would spend $15 million on a study which would take two or three years to complete. How can they now claim to study something which they previously announced as part of a one million job project back in February at the great first ministers' conference?

I call the minister the "bionic windbreaker" after his attempt to put this kind of thing over on the Canadian people. Something which strikes closer to home and which cut me to the quick when I discovered what lay behind it was the minister's announcement about the Gull Island transmission program to develop Gull Island power at Gull Island, Labrador and the Lower Churchill; to develop 1800 megawatts of power and transmit it to Newfoundland by a transmission line and through a tunnel into Newfoundland. That was one of the 40 projects announced by the minister. All that he announced then was that they were going to form another corporation which was to do another series of studies on the Gull Island project.

How long are the people of Canada going to tolerate this pile of hypocrisy? I have to keep my language parliamentary, but it is a fantastic struggle. How in the name of heaven can I keep my language parliamentary when I consider things like this? I am almost tempted to let go and become unparliamentary for the first time in all my experience—

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —I am so upset. Let us add up the jobs on just these five or six projects. The minister promised 5,000 direct jobs and 15,000 indirect jobs on the Kitimat oil pipeline project. He cancelled the project the next week. That is 5,000 unemployed. Mark that figure down—5,000 Canadian unemployed who were deceived. The people who thought they were going to get jobs out of the Kitimat oil project are not going to get them.

Tar sands III is another project the minister said would give 20,000 direct jobs and 60,000 indirect. This man is a veritable superman in job creation. We'd have to hand it to him if there were any truth to it at all. So that was another 80,000 jobs.

Then there is the Great Canadian Oil Sands expansion with 250 direct jobs and 750 indirect; Syncrude expansion, 8,000 direct jobs and 24,000 indirect. Ye gods! We have a veritable hurricane of a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when it comes to creating jobs on paper! But he has not created one job yet, not one which was not paper.

With respect to James Bay the minister said there were 65,000 direct jobs and 195,000 indirect. This government had nothing to do with it—not financially, and with no assistance. In fact, they tried to block, attack and crack the Quebec government at every opportunity, trying to crush it and knock it in a great example of co-operative federalism. But they don't mind stealing jobs from the Quebec government. They don't mind trying to take credit for the 65,000 direct and the 195,000 indirect jobs. They don't mind stealing from the separatists. Imagine a minister of that great government over there having something to do with the separatists, stealing credit for jobs away from the separatists, that government led by the right hon. gentleman opposite who on Friday put on a disgraceful exhibition of the cheapest kind of guttersnipe politics. It is no good shaking one's head, Mr. Speaker. I witnessed the event myself. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested that because someone did not agree with him and his policies toward the province of Quebec they were separatists. He will not do that again very soon, I trust.

The hon. minister went on to list the Gull Island project, Mr. Speaker, and said that project would create 11,000 direct jobs and 33,000 indirect jobs in Newfoundland. Now, we have 35,000 unemployed in Newfoundland. It would have meant that one third of our unemployed would be going to work if there had been one iota, one scintilla of truth in it. One third of our unemployed would have been working. But there was not one scintilla, jot or tittle of truth in the minister's tergiversation—I think that's the word.

Mrs. Holt: Oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) will not be with us next year. She has added to this House, but I won't say what.

I could go over all 40 of these projects to show just what the minister attempted to do to what he thought was a gullible Canadian public back in February. He has here the Polar Gas project, the East-Can exploration program—and Eastcan is not even exploring off the Labrador coast this year. He has included the gas swaps—

Mr. Alexander: Has he got the wheel in there?

Mr. Crosbie: He hasn't got the wheel or the horse in here, Mr. Speaker, but he has everything else. There is the Delta Beaufort gas. That one's set to go. There is the Dempster pipeline, Westcoast Transmission and then there are the gas swaps. I wonder who could swap gas with the minister? That would be some swap! He has the Quebec and Maritimes Gas pipeline, the Panarctic exploration program, Petro-Canada, conventional areas—whatever that means—heavy oil development, oil storage. What a con game! What a shell game! And the minister was playing a shell game with Shell.

We should have had that third project under way long ago. Why is it not under way? Because we have a minister who is not going to get off his duff to do anything. He is not going to move off centre plate, and centre plate for the minister is where he sits. Why do I say that? Have I any proof for that statement? Members of the House might say this is a hard thing to say about the minister. It cannot be that we have a minister in a Canadian government who has gone to sleep right in the centre place of his importance. That is the place where he sits. All right then. I will refer to Hansard as my authority. As reported at page 4488 of Hansard for April 13 the minister said:

As hon. members will agree, the government has taken several important and very necessary steps to encourage expansion of non-conventional oil production.

We do not agree, Mr. Speaker. The government has not. But the minister went on to say:

However, the government cannot do everything.

That is right. They cannot do anything. The minister should have gone a little further. He should have said "However, the federal government cannot do anything". And in that we would have agreed with him. It certainly cannot do everything. Then the minister went on to say:

Alberta has already acted to provide heavy oil producers with alternative royalty incentives.

He said "Alberta has acted". Then we see what the minister's policy is. The minister says:

It is my hope that Alberta and Saskatchewan will announce in the very near future measures they are prepared to take so that the total fiscal regime, including income tax and royalties, will lead without doubt to commercial development of these massive oil reserves in western Canada.

The minister is waiting for somebody else to act. No wonder we are in such slack shape in Canada in energy. No wonder we are importing 400,000 barrels a day. No wonder our prospects are dim and dubious for 1985, because the minister is waiting for Alberta to act. Who is the national government? Is it Alberta or is it this government here in Ottawa? I have the impression that it is the government here in Ottawa, the national government. Alberta has to look after Albertans. The Alberta government looks after Alberta. The national government looks after the nation. Who should make the move? Who should be getting this thing going? Who should be seeing that the tar sands are developed? Alberta does not need any oil from the tar sands. They do not need any "gas" from the minister. Alberta has got enough conventional oil and conventional gas. They do not need the tar sands. They do not need the expensive stuff. It is Canada that needs it. It is Canada that needs the tar sands oil. It is Canada that needs the gas.

● (2112)

It is Canada that should be giving the incentive. Why should Alberta and Saskatchewan have to give the incentive? It is us Canadians, all of us, who need it. It is the nation. It is the national government that is responsible for not getting that project under way. It is a national disgrace. The minister's salary should be dropped to $1. The minister's salary should be withdrawn for the last five years because of the ineffectiveness of what he has done.

The minister went on further at page 4488. The member for Edmonton, our whip, asked a question, and the minister said this. I am just quoting from Hansard; I do not want to offend the rules.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, but we are now waiting to hear from the provincial governments as to what royalty changes they are prepared to make.

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is Canada, you know, with the old seat out of the pants as far as oil is concerned, no longer self-sufficient, no longer self-reliant, having to import 400,000 barrels a day, a huge deficit on current account and the balance of payments. Everywhere you look, grim disaster stares us in the face. As long as we have got this government, the only ray of hope is that the election is about to come if the Prime Minister can screw up his courage and call it this week. He was afraid last week. He would not call it for the 12th. Will he screw up his courage and call it for the 19th or the 26th or the 12th? We do not care when he calls it, but call it. Or is he going to leave it until next year, or is he not going to have an election because of the big national emergency, the emergency being the disastrous state he has got the country in so that we should not have an election at all?

Now, Mr. Speaker, the minister is waiting for Alberta and Saskatchewan. The tar sands are in Alberta. The nation needs the oil, and the minister should be sitting down with Shell Canada Limited and the Alberta government and solving this tomorrow. He should have solved it a year ago, and if Alberta will go no further and the private entrepreneurs need more incentive, the minister should give it to them. That he has not should be the topic. I wish I could introduce a motion of non-confidence here tonight. I did not think of it until I got to my feet here, but the more I am talking, the more convinced I am that we must get this minister gone, gone, gone before too long.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, for a third oil sands mining plant at Athabasca, for that to go ahead, they have got to have room. They know they have got to pay taxes and royalties, but what they want is an appropriate fiscal and royalty environment that will support the risk taker, as they say, in the early years. Now, the risk taker, for those opposite who do not understand that, is the one that puts the money in and takes the risk of losing it. The government is not going to be involved in this. There is no direct involvement of government. So what they want is a kind of fiscal regime which supports them in the early years when they are taking all the risks and generates revenue for the government later when the venture generates profits. That sounds reasonable.

Here we have the Great Canadian Oil Sands, who were unlucky. They started early. They were the pioneers, and the reward they got for that was to be ignored by the government. Now we have got Syncrude that had to stop and could not go any further unless governments lashed in the money. Now we have got Shell who are going to put the money up themselves with their partners, but they want some assurance that while they are taking all the risks on this huge investment, $3 billion, in the early years, they are not going to be taxed then but will be taxed later when they are generating profits.

It is not the government of Alberta that we are waiting for to do anything, Mr. Speaker. The government of Alberta has its own problems, it has its own priorities, it has its own oil and gas. It is lucky. Theirs is under the land. Newfoundland has been ground into the ground by the minister and his compatriots because our oil and gas is under the water first and then it is under the land. There is no difference except the H_2O is in the way, and the government has seized on to the excuse of the H_2O to screw Newfoundland into the dust. But we are not taking it because the P.C. party, when it is elected this year, Mr. Chairman, is going to reverse the government's centralizing policy, the government's "greedy guts" federalism. We are going to change that, and we are going to confirm the provinces as being the owners of the oil and gas and minerals under the continental shelf off their shores—Nova Scotia, P.E.I., New Brunswick, Newfoundland, British Columbia and some of those other provinces that have got coasts too, such as Manitoba and a few of the other provinces in western Canada. We are going to confirm that they own and control the oil and gas. We are going to stop this heavy-handed, ham-fisted brutalization of the provinces by this government.

We are going to instil co-operative federalism. We are going to do what the Prime Minister said ten years ago he was going to do before he put the jackboots of federalism on and stamped all over the provinces for ten years. Brutality gone berserk. Mr. Speaker, all that is needed is for the federal government to stop playing this con game, pretending it is up to Alberta, and put forward to Shell a fiscal regime for the federal government that will induce Shell to go and start this tar sands plant immediately.

With the figures staring us in the face, with the effect on our balance of payments, this crowd has got us now quasi bankrupt. Dare I say it? That is where they have got us. I am only saying "quasi" to cover myself and be polite. What state are we going to be in in 1985 when a third of our oil imports will come from outside Canada? And what is the price going to be? The estimates are something like $20, $25, $30 a barrel that we will have to pay, and we have not even got the time now to get a tar sands plant on by 1985 because of the hesitation of this government, because of the kinds of games it tries to play in federal-provincial relations.

Now, there is a heavy oil situation. That we are hoping is going to get under way too, but the tar sands is a better prospect or a surer prospect than just the heavy oil. Frontier oil is the same kind of game being played by the hon. minister.

The legislation, Mr. Speaker, that is before this House now is not going to do great things for Canada. It only carries out promises that were made to Syncrude several years ago. It does nothing to get the third tar sands plant under way. It does nothing to get a heavy oil plant under way. It does nothing to get the frontier gas and oil developed. It is hogwash. It is not even oil, not even seal oil. And for the minister to try the other day to blame Alberta, well, it shows a bankrupt government, Mr. Speaker, when they are always looking for some other government to blame.

What else did the minister say the other day? He said:

> I am confident that in the spirit we have been able to work out these other arrangements we will also be able to work out the new fiscal regime . . .

What spirit? We saw the kind of spirit the government has, Mr. Speaker, last week when the government kicked the province of Quebec in the teeth when the province of Quebec wanted to deal in its own way with its own sales tax. The federal government kicked them in the teeth and said "No, although it is one-third of your own money you have got to put up and two thirds of ours, we are not going to listen to what you want to do with your own sales tax". That is the kind of spirit. That is the way they are offering matters to Quebec and Alberta and the rest of the provinces. The minister said:

> I hope we will be successful in being able to produce close to one million barrels a day from the tar sand and heavy oils of western Canada by 1990.

Now, how are we, Mr. Speaker, going to meet that objective with this kind of temporizing and indecision, with this kind of inaction, with the minister sitting back waiting for Alberta? It is like that play "Waiting for Godot", or whoever he was. He never did come. Godot never did come, Mr. Speaker, and Alberta may never come; but the tar sands are still going to be there, and the Canadian people are going to need them. We cannot afford to wait for Godot, or for Gillespie either. We have got to have a government that is going to act now.

Our assistant whip said the other night, and he is quite right, that it is useless to try to persuade hon. gentlemen opposite. Mr. Speaker, why should I waste my time trying to persuade the hon. members opposite? He said we are whistling in the dark. Well, this is a government that governs in the dark. The left hand does not know what the right hand is doing. The digit finger does not know what the other finger is doing, the "indiginet" finger. Whistling in the dark is quite right.

● (2122)

Did the minister say anything else? Yes, he did. Imagine, after making those silly statements, he went on to make more. He was asked a question by one of the hon. members from Calgary, I do not remember his riding, about when Canadians can expect the next agreement on the Alberta oil sands to be reached. The minister's answer, as reported at page 4489 of Hansard, was as follows:

> The first question had to do with when the next agreement with respect to the tar sands will be reached. I would be much better able to answer the hon. member if he could tell me when the Alberta government will decide upon the royalty system it is going to introduce with respect to the tar sands.

Well, Mr. Speaker, this kind of guff impresses no one. It did not impress the Canadian people when they saw it. They could not believe their eyes until they saw the Liberal policy-swiping convention a week or two later and realized it was true that these people were actually governing the country.

The minister says he can give the answer if the hon. member over here could tell him when Alberta could decide on something. Do we have a national government concerned about our energy situation or do we not? Have we a government that is doing nothing but playing politics with the hopes and aspirations of the people, as they did with the people in Newfoundland, the 11,000 unemployed who thought they would get work on Gull Island only to find out two weeks later that Gull Island will be studied again? Or the people in Kitimat, British Columbia, or the people in James Bay, the thousands who had already done the work and were included in the one million man-years of work? What a policy!

There are all kinds of policies on strategy. Mr. Speaker, have you ever collected together all the strategies and booklets and pamphlets of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources? They have a huge volume of paper that has been used in outlining their strategies. What is the good of a strategy if there is no action? They have a policy called "self-reliance for Canada". What is the good of the policy if nothing has been done to develop the tar sands? There is nothing but talk, bluff, deception, that is all it is, but no action. There is a policy, but nothing is done to carry it out.

What happened at the first minister's meeting, that dim farce of a meeting which we saw on the television screen which was to come up with some resolutions? This was all done by the federal government. I have been at these things. They arrange the whole thing; they are the master of ceremonies, they decide everything, they plan it. They have 500 public relations staff to smother every newsman. The four provinces cannot afford one apiece, but the federal government has them outweighed 50 to 1 in PR flack.

Here is what they said about energy: that the first ministers' strongly affirm the importance of reducing dependence on foreign sources of energy. Gee whiz, that is progress for you! Imagine, the first ministers agreed we should reduce our dependence on foreign sources of energy! Who was arguing that we should increase our dependence? Was there a mighty debate in Canada about what should be done, and these ministers got together and said: "By golly, despite all the arguments we think it is important to reduce our dependence on foreign sources of energy"? In all my time in politics I have never heard anyone say that Canada should become more dependent on foreign sources of energy. That conclusion was a fantastic, gigantic leap forward!

Then they went on to say that they thought that intensive programs of conservation were necessary. Yes, they sure are—conservation in the statements the minister is making. They also said that, in addition, they agreed to collaborate in accelerating major energy developments wherever appropriate. I should like to know what major energy developments have been accelerated and agreed upon since February 15, 1978. All that has happened since then is that the Prime Minister has engaged in this fantastic fracas with the four western premiers, who have pointed out that the recent goings on in the budget with respect to the sales tax have been an infringement of provincial rights and have badly affected the federal-provincial relationship. How will the minister now get Alberta to soften up? The premier of Alberta was driven to say that it was a lousy deal and a lousy way of doing things. Does that sound like the words of a premier who is in love with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister? Not on your life. These are the words of a premier who is disgusted by the brutal way the federal system is being treated by the jack-booted government.

So what major energy developments have been accelerated? Not one that I know of, and I hope the minister can think of at least one. If he had thought of one, presumably he would have said so the other day.

They say they will expand grain storage facilities at Prince Rupert—that is good. They will open mines in Cape Breton—they have announced that. They will encourage the application for a natural gas pipeline to eastern Canada, the Fundy Tidal power, the Dempster pipeline—we will see about that—the Polar gas project, the Tenneco-Lorneterm project, the Arctic pilot project. If we had as many pilots as they have projects, we would be filled with aviators in Canada. They said that the Ontario government will continue to support Ontario Hydro, Bruce, Pickering, Darlington, Wesleyville, Atikokan. These are all Ontario Hydro projects. What do they have to do with the federal government?

I cannot say that we should pity the government more than be angry with them. I cannot pity them. I am so angry at them that I cannot wait for the election to come.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I want to see the minister travel across this country, go to the Canadian people and put forward his program of one million jobs, this flimflam man. Mr. Shaheen is an expert flimflammer. The minister should take lessons from Mr. Shaheen if he wants to get into the real flim-flam. He would not sell much snake oil in that way. He is not a natural snake oil salesman, trickster, charlatan.

Time is passing and we want to pass the bill so I will wind up, Mr. Speaker. I would not have spoken except that sitting here this afternoon I thought to myself: why should I suffer in silence?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Actually, I was called over because we thought another bill was going to come forward. The bill not having come forward, I decided to speak tonight about petroleum administration. But if the government wants to call the bill on the Export Development Corporation, I am ready to speak on that piece of legislation this evening.

In concluding—I will not use up all my time because I do not want to waste the time of the House—I will say that here we have a bill to assist the tar sands project which was started three years ago. There is not another project under way in sight, and when the minister is asked a question about the next tar sands project, he tells us that we must ask Alberta about it. Did we elect a national government to sit on its backside and when we ask questions about national policy to tell us that we should ask Alberta? We did not. We elected a government to govern Canada, and let Alberta look after itself.

If we had been asked to vote tonight on the government's performance in the field of energy, I would vote against the bill. But since we are only asked to make it possible to get Syncrude under way, and perhaps, if the government ever acts, another tar sands plant, I will vote for the bill. But it is with a great deal of reluctance that I vote for any bill brought forward by this government. It turns my stomach to vote with the government on anything.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it always grieves me to sit in the House and see a minister treat the truth with the frivolity with which it has been treated tonight. The minister cannot be accused of anything more serious than frivolity as he sat and listened to the remarks of the two previous speakers. I wish to join them in one regard, and that is in believing that this is evil legislation. It is typical of a government which cannot make up its mind about what it wants, which wants to be given free rein to regulate and to do as its sees fit at any given moment, without respect for legislation which might control its action in a resource as important to Canada as energy.

● (2132)

This is a measure of incompetence in draftsmanship, ideology, planning and capability. It is a mockery of government, and the minister is the instrument of the mockery. His lighthearted treatment, and that of other members of the government, does not indicate any sense of responsibility in a subject matter which has the seriousness of this bill. If the government had not imposed and superimposed frivolous taxes, which were demeaning to the resource industries of this country including the oil industry, we would not have to reach into the public coffers of provincial or federal treasuries to finance private enterprise in a field which could be an opportunity for them and Canada. Because of delay in decisions, regulations and procrastination, now we have to give the government the capability of dealing as it sees fit according to its ideologies.

Regardless of the needs of Canada, the government will unquestionably take the years in time, as they have done in the past. In the six years it has been my privilege to be here, we have not had progressive and developmental legislation. Also we have not had progressive research in energy, nor a national conscience. We have had an element of subsidy collected from Canadians to equalize energy costs. Beyond that, the government has nothing constructive to go into the hustings with at this moment in time. Whether it be the Newfoundland picture, the British Columbia picture or the New Brunswick picture, they are equally deplorable in results and inflationary in their tendencies. Delay has meant inflation and extra costs to Canadians.

One must remember that representatives went to New Brunswick in an attempt to deal in Washington on behalf of the LNG project which was approved by the National Energy Board. They went to Washington to negotiate and were advised by people in high places, I have been informed by reliable sources, that they could not look with much favour on an LNG project in New Brunswick because Canada is now classified as one of those unreliable foreign sources of energy. The minister must take that upon his shoulders as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has all the gas which has been piped in by the Liberal government and all the shenanigans surrounding TransCanada. That is already in Toronto. Now, we have to speak from eastern Canada, because no one on the government side will speak for them. The government has proven itself to be a bunch of political Liberal hyenas. Those were the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). Government members are well trained and obedient.

The eastern coast of Canada has refining capabilities which were built in the days when international relations between Canada and the United States were amicable and reliable. Not one of those is presently operating at capacity, because of the term which was used in high places in Washington—that Canada is one of those foreign and unreliable sources of energy, and on the long-term basis Canada cannot be dealt with confidently.

Not so long ago, in a blind move of stupidity, the former minister of energy, mines and resources shut off the shipments of oil and refined products from east coast refineries to the state of Maine and to points south. Those contracts have not been renewed. The refinery which was supplying Maine was built in good faith that there would be a long-term, reliable, friendly structure between Canada and the United States. That has not developed. We are subject to duty. We do not get the same privileges, as other countries, to move refined products from Canada to the United States. We are one of the few who cannot do that because we are an unfriendly and unreliable source of energy.

I attempted to resolve this by commencing negotiations in a quiet, non-political manner. I approached the ministers of the cabinet in the maritime provinces. I asked for some immediate and meaningful negotiation along these lines. I have received no reply from them. I have seen no sign of interest, except that they would be happy to meet, when I suggested that they should initiate a meeting and get in touch with me.

The government of Canada should take a look at the eastern coast. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) should express some concern for the energy sources presently existing there, which could put products in Canadian hands on a cheaper basis if plants were operating at capacity to supply the east coast of North America. Whether it be Newfoundland, whether it be in the Canso Strait, or whether it be on the Bay of Fundy, these plants deserve strong, hard selling by the government of Canada, and a strong conviction that it will be a long term, friendly and reliable contract.

I appeal to the minister: in the name of all that is good for Canada, we must get these shipments moving again. We must get these refineries working at capacity again. We must make a deal for LNG which Americans can trust. Proper consideration must be given to fisheries and the environment, as was suggested by the National Energy Board. We must provide some of the people in eastern Canada, who are presently unemployed, with a chance at just a few jobs in the field of energy. It will be contributory to a better long-term supply for us and a lower cost when these plants are operating at capacity. There is an increment of income available to the government of Canada if these plants continue to operate. It would be beneficial to all of Canada. I appeal to the government on behalf of Atlantic Canada. It is strange that $1 billion or so can be spent to build Mirabel, and that $1 billion can be written off the deficit of the CNR.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCain: Newfoundland should be given the change. That province requires assistance. Hon. members opposite should speak for their provinces rather than for their leader. They would receive more votes if they stood up in the House and spoke on behalf of their provinces, instead of ridiculing hon. members who go out of their way to speak on behalf of their provinces. What I have said applies to Newfoundland, just as much as it applies to New Brunswick. Hon. members opposite should return to their constituencies with that message.

In all fairness, Atlantic Canada deserves the negotiations which could be brought about by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), the Deputy Prime Minister and President of Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, if they were seriously interested in Canada and could look beyond the two central provinces which hold the vast majority of their seats, with a scattering of loyal support in Newfoundland and New Brunswick. The Atlantic provinces require that help, as well as development. I plead with the minister not to down-play any other region, but to up-play the Atlantic requirements along with all other requirements in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) is seeking the floor. The Standing Orders do not allow the right of reply at third reading. The only way the minister could speak at this time would be with unanimous consent. Second reading is considered as a substantive motion, as indicated in citation 166 of Beauchesne. The mere fact of moving the motion, or having the motion moved in the name of the hon. minister, is interpreted as his having contributed to the debate. Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to close the debate at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their indulgence in according me this privilege. I intend to speak for only a very few minutes, five minutes more or less. It is my understanding that all parties have agreed with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) to proceed very quickly, after my closing remarks, with one particular bill before the House.

● (2142)

There have been all kinds of allegations during the course of this third reading debate. Quite clearly I am not in a position, in view of the time available and the subject of the debate, to answer all of them. Many, of course, were irresponsible, and one got the impression at times that the weaker the argument the louder the noise. Hon. members will be able to identify the particular hon. member from Newfoundland who best qualifies for that particular cachet.

[Mr. McCain.]

Members on this side recognize that the official opposition was agonizing over this bill. They demonstrated to all of us and to those watching this debate on television that they are prepared to debase their own credibility when they have to vote for a government bill. They seem to find every opportunity to discuss everything but the bill, and that was very clear in their remarks this evening.

One hon. member, the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), for example, said that they will vote for it; that it is a very important bill; it is a bill which is very important to national security. Then obviously he recognized he had gone too far and said: "But it is an evil bill."

The noisy failure from St. John's East went on and on and, as I have indicated, the weaker his argument the louder he shouted. I think the Conservatives in particular showed a great deal of ingenuity in avoiding the main issues of this bill and in trying to divert attention from its provisions.

I think the NDP did a pretty good job too. I was impressed by the ability of two NDP spokesmen who addressed themselves to the question of gasoline prices, the difference in the retail price of gasoline as between one community and another, or in some cases, differences within one city. Indeed, one of the members asked why it could not be like beer. It was pretty obvious where the mind of that particular party was in this debate. It required a member of the Creditiste party to bring them back to order by pointing out, quite rightly of course, that the whole area of retail pricing for gasoline is not a federal responsibility at all but rather a provincial responsibility. It is surprising to those of us on this side that members of the NDP have taken so long to recognize what is fundamental to the Canadian constitution.

We on this side have always listened to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) whenever he has talked about freedom of information. He has developed quite a reputation over the years as a man who has espoused the case of freedom of information. He used this debate to raise the issue of freedom of information, suggesting that this bill in some way concealed information. What he did not do was to make the point, and what he did not do, of course, was face up to the issue which has been raised by his own colleague, the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre), that there is another bill, Bill C-12, the Petroleum Corporation Monitoring Act, which attempts to provide greater disclosure of how the funds from an oil price increase are used. Those members who have followed that particular debate in committee will realize that the Tories are not the slightest bit interested in the freedom of information. Indeed, they have done everything they can to prevent that bill from coming before this House so the Canadian people could receive that information on how those funds are being spent.

This bill is an important bill. It should be seen as a part, but only a part, of an integrated series of measures by the government to increase the development of Canadian oil resources. I refer particularly to the fact that this bill has been brought in to provide the international price for Syncrude, a very high priced resource, and a price which was promised at the time the federal government joined with the provinces to salvage this massive project. This bill provides the government with authority to provide international prices in respect to other major projects such as the expansion of GCOS, tar sands number three, such as the Cold Lake heavy oil project, a Saskatchewan heavy oil project and another Alberta heavy oil project. That is an important part of a series of measures. The other two measures are well known to those who have followed government policy in the area. I refer to the package of incentives which was tabled before the House on budget night, barely a week ago, and the other intention of the government to increase the throughput of the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline by 100,000 barrels a day.

That surely is a clear signal to producers out west and governments there that this government wants to move western oil into eastern markets, along with other measures we have taken, to reduce our dependence on foreign oil.

I said I would take five minutes, Mr. Speaker, and I thank you for the time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillespie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Actually, when I did intervene to request unanimous consent I mentioned that the minister on third reading did not have the right of reply, which would automatically close the debate, but in requesting unanimous consent I used the words "allow the minister to close the debate". I do not think I was right. I was more or less allowing the minister to intervene a second time. I know the hon. member for Medicine Hat has just come in by plane and wants to say a few words. I think he should be allowed to do so. The rule does not provide for any minister to close the debate on third reading.

Mr. Gillespie: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to make life difficult for anybody and I would, of course, be interested in the remarks of the hon. member, but I did enter the debate on the understanding I would be closing the debate, and on the further understanding that agreement had been reached by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) and his colleagues opposite in respect of another bill that is to be concluded this evening. If it is possible to hear the hon. member and still make good on those understandings, I think it would be in order and I would be prepared to withdraw any concern I have already expressed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my feeling that the minister is just using up time that could be very useful in achieving that purpose.

Mr. Hargrave: Mr. Speaker, I can assure you and the minister that I will require only a very few minutes. As Mr. Speaker indicated, I have only just returned to the House. I have specific comments to make regarding recent production of some heavy crude in the Suffield area, which is totally within my federal constituency of Medicine Hat.

The minister may recall that when he opened the third reading debate he commented on the application of this bill to the products of Syncrude, as they come on stream, as well as to other heavy crude products. The specific remark I was interested in had reference to other sources of heavy crude, mainly in Alberta, such as additional production by Great Canadian Oil Sands, the Shell consortium, the Cold Lake project, Pacific Petroleum and other heavy oil projects. I want to draw the minister's attention to the fact that quite recently there have been a number of wells brought into production in the northwest corner of the Suffield military reserve. They are producing a heavy crude somewhat similar to the Lloydminster crude.

● (2152)

After the minister was through speaking at the beginning of this third reading debate, I asked him whether or not these heavy crudes that are being produced in the southwest corner of Suffield might come under the terms of this bill. The minister indicated that they were not included but that perhaps they could be by negotiation, if I recall the minister's remarks correctly. This is the whole point and purpose of my remarks now, that provision for that new producing heavy crude field—it may be rather small right now but indications are that it will grow—be included in this bill.

I would also point out that in the recent energy update manual that his department put out it was indicated that the costs of drilling and producing wells in that part of Alberta are only a fraction of what the costs are in some of the other areas. Surely this should be an added incentive for bringing this kind of oil producing well into production.

That is all that I wish to say at this time. My hope is that that heavy crude that is now being produced in the Suffield area northwest of Medicine Hat comes under the terms of this bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

* * *

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH MEDICAL INSTITUTE

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-35, to establish the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I understand that—

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this bill is to be referred to the committee of the whole House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I did not hear what the hon. member was saying.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I did, Mr. Speaker. I think what the hon. member is referring to is the fact that, as a result of consultations with the House leader, the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser), the New Democratic Party and the Social Credit party, this bill will pass all stages today. Because of the time-frame and the fact that some members had not anticipated speaking on the previous bill, I take it that there is unanimous consent to extend the sitting for an extra half hour. That is what I understood.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As I understand the situation, the minister is anxious to get this bill through, and we are not anxious to cause the ministry any difficulty with respect to the matter. Therefore, I think it would be appropriate to extend the time in order that the minister may get that bill through.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members have two alternatives, either to operate by unanimous consent or by Standing Orders. The minister may wish to request unanimous consent to extend the hour of sitting, but I think the most appropriate procedure would be to use Standing Order 6(5)(a) in moving a motion to extend the hours of sitting for the purpose of completing the bill or reaching a point in the consideration of the legislation, and at the same time seeking consent to allow a change to the motion so we may go into committee of the whole if the minister wishes to achieve his purpose.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer):

That this sitting be continued until all stages of Bill C-35, an act to establish the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, are completed, with the debate on third reading to be concluded no later than 10.30 p.m. this evening.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 6(5) (a) it is my duty to inform members that on putting this motion, if ten hon. members stand up to indicate that they do not agree with the motion, the motion is deemed to be withdrawn. Otherwise it is deemed to have been adopted. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I consider the motion carried. At the same time, as I indicated, the passing of this bill on second reading shall be modified to the extent that the bill be referred to committee of the whole instead of to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of brevity, and I do appreciate the co-operation of all hon. members, I will just highlight the essential items of the bill. In essence, it is a bill to establish the centre which is seen as an organization that would promote the concept of a safe and healthy work environment and the attainment of physical and mental health by all working people. It would encourage federal, provincial and territorial jurisdictions to use appropriate suasions and sanctions for the establishment and maintenance of high standards of occupational safety and hygiene appropriate to the Canadian situation and compatible with recognized international standards. Although primarily concerned with in-plant working conditions, the centre would act in collaboration with environmental authorities.

Secondly, to effectively serve the interests of Canadians at work—and that includes all of us who have jobs or professions of any kind—I believe the proposed centre should have certain basic characteristics. There should be an automony permitting it to report directly to parliament through a minister of the Crown. It should include a governing body representative of federal and provincial government agencies, labour, management, scientific and professional organizations, universities and the public.

The structure should consist of a board, an executive, scientific and technical advisory committees and staff. The autonomy, multilateral and multidisciplinary participation should be such that it assures a high profile and ease of access for interested parties, and the capability to take a firm stand of its own on any specific issue. Although, Mr. Speaker, the centre will be financed by the federal government, there should be a provision for provincial, institutional or industrial underwriting in whole or in part of particular research projects, surveys or services of special interest to them.

Those are the main characteristics of the bill, and I would appreciate hearing what hon. members have to say with respect to this particular bill, which will be of great assistance to the promotion of safety and occupational health for all working people in Canada.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to discuss this bill extensively not only with the hon. minister but with some of the officials who have been doing the preparatory work necessary before the centre can be established. This party endorses the principle of this centre, and we wish also to say that it is because we endorse the principle that we are prepared at this late stage tonight to give the necessary consent that it become law. I know that the minister would not expect me to sit down, however, without reminding all hon. members that perhaps the government could have managed things so that this bill might have been brought in earlier.

● (2202)

I am not going to take up the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, by saying anything further at this point. I want to say through you to the minister, however, that I expect that when we go to committee I will have the privilege of asking specific questions, notice of which I have already given to the minister.

This party supports the bill because we believe that health and safety in the work place are of vital importance. We believe there is need for better co-ordination. This is the kind of thing that can only assist working people and in the long run assist labour-management relations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Definitions.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this would be the appropriate time for some questions to the minister. I understand he is prepared to accept them. Could he elaborate a little on the expected cost of this organization during the first year? From the press release I understand it will be about $1 million and that he is expecting it to rise eventually to $8 million. Could the minister tell the House what development he expects over the first year, at what stage will the additional money have to be raised, and what will the source be?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): In the first year or so the cost will run about $1 million. This will permit the centre to get its organization under way and will enable some funding to be given to high priority research work. It may also be expected that there will be a substantial one-time outlay for equipment and facilities to establish a first-rate, modern information system for the technical and scientific data that the centre will assemble, evaluate and distribute to interested parties. Such a system will not duplicate what other existing data sources do, but will be supplementary to them and perform a co-ordinating service.

Regarding the capital expenditure that the hon. member inquires about, for the purpose of the information distribution system it will be $2 million to $3 million. Cost will gradually increase as the centre's functions are established and more research is assisted or initiated. Ongoing expenditures will be $8 to $10 million yearly when the centre is fully operational. This, it may be noted, amounts to about $1 per worker per year.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister tell us what provincial contributions are expected toward the cost of this centre, and can he tell us whether there is any commitment by any province to make financial contributions? At the moment, as I understand it, and I would like the minister to confirm this, the only funds going into the centre come from the federal government and that will only change if there is agreement from the provinces. At the moment I understand there is no such agreement.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): That is correct, Mr. Chairman. Nine of the ten provinces have agreed to participate on the executive board and have done so in writing. Some have already named people to the board but have not agreed at this stage to financial resources. There is provision in the bill to permit that. We hope that in future the worth of the centre will be well recognized, and the fact that the provinces actually have more votes than the federal government on the executive board, will show them that it is in their interests to make it financially possible for it to carry out its aims and objectives.

Mr. Fraser: May I ask the minister what reporting mechanism will be established. How will members of parliament know what is being spent on an annual basis and what the public, especially the working people, are getting for their expenditures?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It is entirely autonomous. It is not responsible to the government in any way but reports directly to parliament. It is analogous to a Crown corporation in that sense.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister tell us whether in general there is agreement from labour for this centre and what expressions of support he has received from management with regard to the centre?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member might be pleased to know that I cannot think of a bill that in the last year and one-half has had so much discussion. Various officials of my department, in particular, Mr. Howard Curry, head of the planning secretariat, and I have gone to 250 or 300 associations of all kinds in the management field, as well as to the unions and the provinces, to talk about the bill. I have gone to British Columbia twice and have endeavoured to answer questions about it. That type of activity has been going on for a year and a half. I believe that labour is quite enthusiastic and will participate as envisaged in the bill, and I also believe that management will participate.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Centre established.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment of which I have given notice to the hon. member for Vancouver South and the New Democratic Party. It does not involve a substantial change from the real intent of clause 4, but it makes the equal role of management and labour more specific and provides some assurance that they will have a significant input on the board. The suggestion emanated from the hon. member for Nickel Belt. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Cardigan:

That Bill C-35, to establish the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, be amended in clause 4 by striking out lines 30 to 40 on page 2 and substituting the following:

'health and safety:

(d) eleven other governors, to be appointed after consultation with such organizations representative of works as the Governor in Council deems appropriate;

(e) eleven other governors, to be appointed after consultation with such organizations representative of employers as the Governor in Council deems appropriate; and

(f) not more than four other governors, to be appointed after consultation with such professional, scientific or other organizations or interests as the Governor in Council deems appropriate.'

● (2212)

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. member for Welland to wait for a minute; I want to consider the amendment for a moment. Might I ask the minister the implication of the amendment. My interpretation is that he is suggesting a specific selection or division of two groups of 11 governors selected by different associations. He also seems to add four governors. I am asking whether this represents a spending of public funds. That is my preoccupation. If it does, it might be difficult to move at this time an amendment that would increase the spending.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): It does not necessarily imply that, Mr. Chairman. As you will see from the bill, it will be up to the executive to determine whether these governors are voluntary, these other organizations putting them up. Whether the other organizations pay their expenses to attend meetings or whether the corporation, being autonomous, may decide to do so, there is no commitment in the bill to pay the governors at this stage. That is not clearly provided for. Therefore, I do not think that causes a problem.

I might also indicate that even if it were the case, further on down the road there is provision for private support from organizations which would more than cover any governors' expenses. Therefore, the implication that this necessarily involves public outlays is not justified.

The Chairman: I accept the comment of the minister. I am sure the minister will understand the preoccupation of the Chair at having such an amendment at the last moment without knowing all the implications of the bill. I accept the word of the minister to the effect there is nothing in the bill to provide for a specific allocation of money for the contributions or work of these members. Therefore, I am ready to accept the amendment.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, there is nothing specific about payment. I just want to make it clear that the minister is saying with respect to that group of people we are talking about that there will be no payment. Otherwise, if at a later time payment was arranged through the public purse, this matter would contravene the powers that concern you, Mr. Chairman, and caused you to raise the first item.

I just raise this question because I presumed the minister is saying there will be no burden upon the public purse as a result of this amendment. He is not saying that the bill does not provide for it and therefore it is quite proper that the government can come along and do it later. What he is undertaking to the House of Commons, and I am sure you understand it, sir, is that there is no provision at all for payment as a result of this amendment. I think we have to make that clear. Although the minister says this, we have to be satisfied it does not go beyond the matters that have been raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West and others with regard to the royal recommendation. That does concern me.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

I really rise because in accepting the minister's word I want to reserve the position that this does not establish some kind of new precedent merely because the intention may not be so clear in the bill, although it is apparently clear in the minister's mind. I just want to make sure we understand one another, because it does have some ramification for other matters.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): To make clear why I do not think it is offended, the ruling with respect to the commitment of the official public expenditures at this stage of the proceedings was that it does not by itself imply that it would be the case with this amendment. Nor does the bill call for that. The corporation being autonomous, reporting annually to parliament, it has that innate power to do so. All its funds of necessity do not necessarily come from this government. They come from the private sector. It might be very easy to establish that, if at any time it did pay governors, it could allocate the private resources they would have. In that sense, I do not see how it can be considered a charge against the public purse. Is that a satisfactory explanation?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yes.

Mr. Railton: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I thought you were going to get back to me. I understand that this is an organization which would be doing research on health and safety. We have had no explanation as to what it would be researching. Those are very general terms. Maybe there should be a statement from the minister as to whether he has discussed this with the National Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Welland is asking a question about the responsibility of these people. Is the minister anxious to reply to that question?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, it is quite a different thing from many council's jobs the hon. member is referring to. The Medical Research Council, as the hon. member knows, funds medical colleges and various researches that are done from time to time in that area. The National Research Council is into the scientific community and the universities. This is primarily related to health and safety in the workplace, bringing that fund of knowledge together, disseminating it to the health and safety committees at the plant level that are to be established as a result of the passage of Bill C-8 last week, servicing the health and safety committees with up to date information of this kind. These committees are set up under provincial statutes. That type of activity is not undertaken in any of the other agencies the hon. member is talking about.

The Chairman: While hon. members were having a very constructive discussion, I referred to clause 14 which states that the chairman and other governors shall serve without remuneration. It also adds that they may be paid such allowance for each day spent in connection with the work of the centre and such allowance for their performance of their duties. The question which arises in my mind concerns the money implications, the burden of such an amendment upon the Crown.

• (2222)

I have no difficulty about paragraphs (d) and (e). No question arises with regard to the provision that these people will serve on the board without remuneration. But where will the money come from to pay their expenditures? This is not clear and I hesitate to accept the part of the amendment to be found in paragraph (f). If there is a disposition to make progress rapidly, and if there is unanimous consent to allow this amendment, taking into account the fact that the service will be performed without remuneration, I might stretch the rule and accept the amendment.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I think there is such a disposition.

The Chairman: Is there a disposition to agree unanimously to accept the amendment with those reservations I have mentioned? If there is, I will put it to the committee.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I do not want to hinder the minister, Mr. Chairman, but if we are to authorize the expenditure of public monies even for a generous purpose we ought to do it properly. I do not think it would make the bill invalid if we were to observe the proprieties.

I share the reservations expressed by the Chair. I have no difficulty in accepting the principle of the establishment of the board of directors and everything else, but I believe it is important we should observe the proper procedures and I say this solely because we are spending the taxpayer's money. The bill is open for amendment later. The board will be able to function and its worth-while objectives can be carried out.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Fine.

The Chairman: Not having studied the bill, I do not know whether I am in a good position to make any suggestion, but perhaps the minister might feel there is a possibility of adjusting the numbers of governors in such a way as to achieve the purposes intended while at the same time keeping the total number of governors the same. However, after hearing the objection raised by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton I would be disposed to accepting only the first part of the amendment, leaving out paragraph (f).

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): If it would overcome the difficulty I would be agreeable, by unanimous consent, to dropping paragraph (f). The main objective of the hon. member for Nickel Belt was to secure equal representation, and we have been able to do that.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment with the exclusion of paragraph (f)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Munro, Hamilton-East) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 10—Executive board.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, since we have dropped paragraph (d) in clause 4 it may not be necessary to proceed with clause 10. The amendment, which ensures equal participation by labour and management, would, I think, automatically ensure that a similar result is obtained on the executive board. If labour and management have an equal number of votes on the council, surely they can themselves ensure they will have the same equal representation on the executive committee without our making an amendment. I am looking toward the New Democratic Party. If it is agreeable, we could pass clause 10 as it is now worded, bearing in mind that the balance the hon. member for Nickel Belt wanted has already been achieved by the amendment to clause 4.

Mr. Peters: But they are two different things. I do not see how the amendment to clause 4 relates to this situation. Indeed, I cannot understand why there was any objection to the amendment to clause 4 in its entirety. The recommendation imposes no limit as to money or numbers or anything else. I think the Chair was picayune in deciding that the amendment was not drafted in accordance with the recommendation. I do not understand why there should be any objection to amending clause 10 so as to specify the number of members on the executive committee from both management and labour.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I just wanted to see whether the NDP really felt it was still necessary to make this amendment. I tried to save time but I see that my remarks have caused us to take more time than ever. I move:

That Bill C-35, to establish the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, be amended in Clause 10 by striking out line 14 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"the Council by the governors so that, at any time,

(a) the number of members of the executive board who were appointed to the Council under paragraph 4(d) is equal to the number of members of the executive board who were appointed to the Council under paragraph 4(e); and

(b) the aggregate of

(i) the number of members of the executive board who were appointed to the Council under paragraph 4(d), and

(ii) the number of members of the executive board who were appointed to the Council under paragraph 4(e) is not less than fifty per cent of the total number of members of the executive board."

• (2232)

The Chairman: After consideration, I find the amendment acceptable. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) agreed to.

Clause 10, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 11 to 16 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 17—By-laws.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I have a very short motion just to correct a drafting error. I move:

That Bill C-35, to establish the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, be amended in clause 17 by striking out lines 5 and 6 on page 8 and substituting the following:

"board;"

The Chairman: For the purpose of doing things right, the amendment should be moved by someone other than the minister, so shall we assume that all amendments have been moved by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the bill being in the name of the Minister of Labour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Munro, Hamilton East) agreed to.

Clause 17, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 18 to 24 inclusive agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that after consultation there is unanimous consent to dispose very quickly of all stages of Bill C-46, and that instead of being referred to a standing committee of the House it be considered in committee of the whole and passed very quickly on third reading.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we not see the clock, that we proceed to the consideration of Bill C-46 through all stages and that the motion be changed so that the bill can be referred to committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

* * *

TAX REBATE DISCOUNTING ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL TAX DISCOUNTERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill C-46, relating to the discounting of overpayments of tax under the Income Tax Act and related payments, be read the second time and referred to the committee of the whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since all parties have agreed to pass this bill quickly this evening, I will not give the usual speech to introduce the bill. I will merely say that the purpose of the bill is to correct the flagrant abuses carried on by certain tax refund discounters, some of whom have taken over 50 per cent of taxpayers' refunds in return for quick cash payments. This distasteful practice has been directed particularly against the poor, the uninformed and the unemployed. The bill required that the discounter pay the taxpayer at least 85 per cent of his refund and that the 15 per cent that would go to the discounter should include all charges and interest.

The bill also obliges the discounter to give the taxpayer a full statement of his tax refund and the amount charged. It also provides for a fine of up to $25,000 for any discounter who breaks this law. We decided to allow discounting with this limit rather than banning it all together because we feel there is a legitimate place for certain discounting under the limits described and, furthermore, that to ban it all together would only lead to a black market operation.

The purpose of this bill was strongly supported by all provinces at a recent federal-provincial conference, and I understand that it has the support of all parties in the House.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the undertaking we made today—and we are anxious to get on with all stages of this bill—we are prepared to proceed. We agree with the minister. We agree with the provinces. We agree with the National Anti-Poverty Organization, the Consumers Association of Canada and all those who have expressed concern about the way these social vultures prey on the poor, the unemployed and those who can least look after themselves in the circumstances in which they find themselves. This practice has no place in contemporary Canadian society, and I believe it is a measure of the concern of this House that we should be dealing with this bill in all its stages at this hour.

I commend this bill to the House. The minister has stated that there is a place for legitimate tax discounting within the regulations prescribed by the bill. What the bill will do, of course, is eliminate the loan sharking and the usury which has been perpetrated against people who have been taken advantage of, especially at this time of year when income tax refunds are pending.

● (2242)

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question. I assume that some sort of registry of these discounters will be kept because, as my colleague points out, the guy who gives discounts at 50 per cent will not be the same guy who gives discounts at 15 per cent. It will be the person who is in regular business rather than the one who is loan sharking. Obviously some sort of record will have to be kept, and will a licence be given to them? The people who get taken are the guys at the very bottom whose educational abilities and money are limited. They would need some kind of a slip saying the discounter was qualified to do it, or else one con will be conning another con.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to make a very short intervention, but there are a few things that have to be said. This is not a new subject that members of the House are considering. It has been discussed in committee, not in the form of Bill C-46 but in another bill piloted by another minister. The minister does not say who will give the money to those taxpayers who are in need. The minister admits that the poor taxpayers, the unemployed taxpayers, are the ones who will be going to these businesses to get their loans, but the government has in its power to give those taxpayers their money.

When this bill passes, as I hear it will tonight, nobody will tell those poor people who need this money how to get hold of it. We know who seeks the services of the tax discounter. It is the person who is unemployed and who cannot get any kind of credit any place else. He cannot get it from the bank. The government has his money but will not give it to him, so he has to go somewhere else. What this bill will do is cut off that source of funds for those poor taxpayers who are most in need.

There should be some method for these poor taxpayers, who probably have only one asset, their tax refund, to get some kind of credit on their single asset. I say that we will cut off these people and thus encourage a black market to develop in some form if we pass this bill.

I do not quarrel with the control on rates from the point of view of inequitable interest, but there are certain factors that are unknown when a transaction is made, and allowances have to be built into the gross revenues in order to cover the unfortunate experiences. Taxpayers can make mistakes. When they come to the tax discounter to make the loan, they might not have received their T-4 slips and, because of the kind of taxpayers they are, they might not know exactly what their refund is. They might find they owe more tax than they knew. So when the tax discounter gets the refund, he may not even recover his advance.

Under the former minister, consideration was given to Bill C-16 in the other session. The minister indicated at that time that a legal rate of interest would probably be recommended by the government in the range of 70 per cent to 80 per cent per annum. I am not sure just how much the tax discounters are getting. I have heard of figures of 1000 per cent. Of course, that would be excessive. But the point is that we are cutting off these people.

Let us look at the government's part in this bill. Every month the government causes the employer to deduct the income tax which the government collects and then sits on it. I recommended in committee that if the government would free this money there would be no need for this kind of business to go on. The government could give back in advance the taxpayers' money that is owed to them. Government officials said that could not be done because by November when the taxpayer might need his loan they did not know how much was attributable to the taxpayer, they only knew how much was attributable to the employer. I agree with the complaint. By February 28 the taxpayer will have his T-4 slip and the government will know how much has been contributed by the employer on the taxpayer's account. There is no reason why the government itself could not set up an office to expedite either loans or quick refunds to that kind of taxpayer.

I say this is just another example of the poor legislative timetable of the government and of the poor thinking that goes on over there. I will not prolong the debate any longer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that if the minister takes the floor at this time he will be closing the debate.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer quickly the questions raised by the two hon. members. The bill provides that a discounter must fill out a form for every refund, advising the taxpayer of his refund and the amount deducted as a discount, and that one form must go to the taxpayer and another be filed with the government. So there is a registry kept of these people.

So far as licensing is concerned, that would have to be done by the provinces. By the way, four provinces have laws on this question already, but their laws do not cover the complete field so they have asked us to act just the same.

With respect to the questions put by the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke), let me say that in addition to putting forward this bill I also make strong recommendations to the former minister of national revenue, Mr. Gray, to speed up refunds to taxpayers. He agreed to try to do this so there will be less need for tax discounting.

Second, we did not ban tax discounting because we did not want to create a black market in discounting. We merely limited the discounting to 15 per cent. We do not think this will drive discounters out of business. It will restrict them to what is probably a reasonable profit rather than an unconscionable profit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 2—Interpretation.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a very simple question with regard to discounters. Who will be the discounters that the minister anticipates? Are they banks, trust companies, finance companies, co-ops, credit unions or caisses populaires? Surely they are the group who should be doing the discounting, not these operators who open shop a month or two before tax time.

I do not anticipate that the present operators will continue when they can only get 15 per cent. At the moment they are up to 50 per cent. It seems to me that the minister should tell us who the discounters will be in the future and what publicity he intends so that people who do get tax refunds will be able to go to these people.

Mr. Allmand: Under the law any company or individual could go into the discounting business. Of course, it is likely that the fast operators will drop out of the business and the field will be left to banks, credit unions, caisses populaires, trust companies, and so on. It is also likely that some of the people who are in the discount business now will continue their operation, because 15 per cent on many refunds still provides a pretty good rate of interest and a pretty good income. There is nothing in the bill to restrict legitimate operators from going into this field. While I expect the more fly by night types to drop off, perhaps some discounters will be in the business with the other lending institutions.

● (2252)

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 7—Punishment.

Mr. McGrath: Will the minister briefly explain to the House what the mechanism is for enforcing the provisions of this bill in order to get into the marketplace and into the dealings of the shady, pseudo-storefront operators who prey on the victims of this kind of operation? How does the government intend to make this bill operative and to get into the marketplace with it?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Chairman, as I explained very briefly at the beginning, this bill has strong support from the provincial governments. As a matter of fact, it was the item which they were most concerned about at the recent federal-provincial conference and on which they were unanimous that we must act. These were governments of many political stripes. Of course in the different provinces we will publicize the act through debt counselling services and through all means possible, to show that this is a legitimate rate of interest from now on for this type of tax discounting. It will be made known, if a person breaks any provision of the act, that they are liable to a fine, as set out in clause 7 of up to $25,000. In enforcing the law, we expect to have the full co-operation of the provinces. That has been promised. Also we will publicize the provisions of the bill so that the people are aware of them. We will do it through available means.

Mr. McGrath: Will the minister give consideration to taking up with the Acting Minister of National Revenue the possibility of notice being printed on the tax returns concerning the provisions of this bill and the penalties involved? That might be one way of getting the message across.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Chairman, that sounds like a very good suggestion. I will take it up with the minister.

Clause agreed to.

Schedule I agreed to.

Schedule II agreed to.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for their great co-operation.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

STATUS OF WOMEN—EQUAL OPPORTUNITY PROGRAMS FOR WOMEN IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that over the last two months hon. members on this side of the House have raised questions about the situation with respect to equal opportunities for women in the public service. Much of this was precipitated by the release of a report on behalf of a concerned group of women in the public service almost two months ago. It would be useful to remind hon. members of the context in which these women in the public service released this report on an anonymous basis. In part, the report reads as follows:

> The attached is from a group of concerned women who are witnessing every day signs of increasing discrimination against women workers. Press reports have indicated that there is growing opposition to women workers. Few have reported on the fallacy of the argument that women are a cause of the high unemployment rate. Worse, senior federal public service employees lacking the creativity and initiative to develop policies to help Canada, are content to jump on the bandwagon and proclaim that there is no unemployment problem in Canada, it is just a case of too many women competing for jobs.
>
> Women in the federal public service are particularly vulnerable. As public service employees, their right to speak out and to be involved in political activities is practically non-existent. In most departments where female SX's are found they are isolated and afraid to jeopardize their careers in speaking out.

The report goes on to detail chapter and verse some of the more blatant examples of discrimination and the deteriorating situation with respect to the employment of women in the public service.

Since that time there has been opportunity in the House, and to some degree outside the House, to deal with this issue. To date there has been no adequate explanation or justification for the type of press release which was issued by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) on March 2. In response to this report, he said that in fact substantial progress had been made by the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission in improving representations of women at all levels within the commission.

Subsequently on March 8, when I questioned the minister on this release, he indicated that in particular this press release was put forward to justify the situation with respect to the employment of women at the SX level. I cannot understand why the Minister of Employment and Immigration would want to take credit for the present situation concerning the employment of women, either at the SX level or at other levels, with respect to that particular commission. It is useful to remind ourselves that in terms of the over-all ratio of employees in the Department of Employment and Immigration at the present time, it is something like 54.7 women to 45.3 men. In other words, the breakdown would be 12,735 women and 10,531 men. On a total basis, that means that more than half of the employees which make up this particular department are women.

When one looks at the SX level, we find the figures from the latest report of the Public Service Commission. In table 19 at page 75, it is indicated that there are 89 employees at the SX level. Of that number, realizing that more than one half of the department is staffed by women, how many women are occupying positions at the SX level? I suggest there are three. I understand, and I have not had a chance to check this, that perhaps a few years ago there were only one or two, so there has been an increase over the past few years of perhaps one or two women at the SX level. Somehow or other the minister interprets this, by way of a press release, to indicate that substantial progress has taken place. The minister must be living in some kind of dream world to believe that represents in anybody's books substantial progress.

● (2302)

In the press release, which I do not have time to review in detail here, he makes other interesting statements or affirmations which I hope will be cleared up this evening, a couple of which I put on the record at the time I questioned the minister on March 8.

For instance, he said in terms of acting appointments that 44 of these acting appointments were female administrative support employees acting in officer positions. On March 8 I asked the minister just how many of those were subsequently confirmed, and he indicated, I think, in his answer that he would give me greater detail. I also asked him, in view of the fact that he put on the record the improvement that had taken place in the CR-5 group, what had been the experience with CR-6 and CR-7. When it came to the categories of administrative and foreign service, the PM and AS levels, here we see a situation in respect of the PM classification in the department where, although progress has taken place over the last three to five years, the progress has been so slow it would take well over one quarter, if not a half a century to achieve some kind of acceptable level of equilibrium within that particular classification. In the case of administrative support we see a situation where there has actually been a decline in three separate categories.

I think it is high time that the minister of this particular department, as well as ministers of every other department in the public service who claim to have some plan of action, some program of equal opportunity or affirmative action, give a clear accounting to this House and the people of Canada of what has been happening to women in the public service.

If we look at the most recent report of the Public Service Commission, we see there are a number of areas in the report that really are quite disturbing. I just want to point to one which is perhaps as disturbing as any in this report, to be found at page 135, which indicates that in the scientific and professional group, in terms of the separation that has taken place by category and sex, that of the numbers that have been laid off some 81 per cent have been women. There has been, of course, a noticeable decline in the employment of women in that particular classification.

There is little to cheer about in the latest report of the Public Service Commission in terms of improvement or hope for improvement in the employment of women. I hope the parliamentary secretary tonight will shed a bit of light on what effective action has been taken by the Department of Employment and Immigration to give a little leadership to a government that really seems to have lost any sense of responsibility in respect of redressing the imbalance injustice that exists for women in the public service.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member opposite for raising this question, but I think that perhaps he is being a little harsh. I say this as someone who has been associated with the status of women for a long time. Progress is slow, sometimes irritatingly slow, but I think the government of Canada has given quite reasonable leadership in the field.

If I understood the hon. member correctly, some of his criticism was directed to the presence or absence of full time equal opportunity for women co-ordinators in the public service. I can understand his laying emphasis on this because, as one looks at the progress in different departments, there does seem to be a correlation of departments that had an EOW co-ordinator with more solid progress than those that have not. I am not sure that anyone could have anticipated this, but now that it is happening I think it is an important finding.

The figures are somewhat better for the EOW co-ordinators in place than it appears, if one only looks at the full time positions. The 1972 cabinet directive which established equal opportunity policies in departments of the government did not establish an EOW directorate as such. What the directive stated was that department heads were to take steps to encourage more women to move into middle and upper echelon positions within the federal government, and the methods were left to the discretion of the departments. Departments with full time EOW co-ordinators now number 16—40 per cent—but there are other departments that have EOW co-ordinators who spend the greater amount of their time on EOW related duties while also having other duties, such as the Department of the Environment, for instance.

● (2307)

The employment and immigration department has a co-ordinator who spends 80 per cent of her time on those duties. There is a similar situation in the Department of Public Works and the Public Archives. There are two other departments which do not have a designated person, but more than half of the departmental co-ordinators have relatively senior staff who supplement the EOW activities.

The Public Service Commission has decided to assign five permanent staff positions to its regional operations, and these five will supplement the existing Public Service Commission resources, be more closely in touch with regional considerations and give each of the six regions in Canada a full-time co-ordinator. In terms of the most recent public service promotions of women into the senior levels, the progress continues to be slow, but the scientific and professional groups which the hon. member has singled out are the worst of the lot.

There is a change in the proportion of women in the administrative support category. This has dropped from 67.1 per cent in 1974 to 63 per cent in 1976, which does demonstrate a slow but steady reduction in the proportion of women in the more traditional female occupations. At the other end, while the total appointments to the public service have also been dropping steadily since 1974, women's share of these appointments has remained virtually constant. There is an interesting and positive shift, particularly in the foreign service category. Some women are now reaching intermediate and more senior levels, although women are still not fully participating at the higher levels.

I notice that Mr. Speaker is at the edge of his chair, so the other figures will have to rest.

TRADE—DISCREPANCIES IN RETAIL PRICE OF GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my remarks tonight result from what I considered to be an unsatisfactory answer to a question that I asked of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Horner) in this House on February 14 of this year. It does not, however, mark the beginning of my interest in this matter. A quick check of my records indicates that I have been asking questions of various ministers concerning gas and oil pricing policies since about the middle of 1973.

[Miss Nicholson.]

On February 14 I asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce if his department would look into the possibility of collusion between the major oil companies to squeeze out independent gasoline dealers and establish monopolies throughout the country in retail sales outlets. The minister replied that my representation would be noted. Surely, Mr. Speaker, something more than that is needed now that we have firm evidence that all is not well in the area of gasoline retail sales in most parts of the country. Surely a minister who has any real interest in his area of responsibility would make some kind of an investigation into charges that are as serious as those that I have made.

● (2312)

My concerns lie in three distinct areas, all of which are related and are designed to work a hardship on the Canadian motorist. Although the minister replied that gas marketing falls within provincial jurisdiction, it will be seen that there is an element of federal responsibility and federal jurisdiction involved in my charges.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, there is clear evidence, supported by sworn statements by oil company executives to the Isbister royal commission hearings, that some if not all major oil companies transfer refined products to their own outlets at prices lower than their net prices to independent dealers. It was shown that the purpose behind this practice is to allow their outlets to undersell the independents and force them out of business. Wherever independents are forced out of a neighbourhood, the price of gasoline is pushed back up by the surviving gas stations, owned of course by major oil companies.

This practice is called loss-leadering, which in the business community is considered a legitimate business tool but which, when used as a continuing practice to discourage competition, can only be considered an unfair trade practice. It is, in fact, a violation of anti-combines laws.

My second concern is that this practice has already forced many independent gasoline dealers out of business, and more will follow if nothing is done to correct the situation. This results in loss of jobs in an industry where thousands of people are employed directly and many more indirectly. Independent dealers have enormous sums of money invested in equipment and facilities, and employ thousands of people all across the country. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the competitiveness in the field of independent oil and gas retailing holds down the cost of gasoline to motorists and transportation firms, tourist operators and others. It has already been established, for instance, that part of the reason for the decline in tourism in Ontario, and I would suspect in other provinces, is the cost of operating a motor vehicle in our country. This is not only the fault of the oil companies but the federal government. I will get to that in a moment as my third area of concern.

The oil companies complain that they must engage in price-cutting from time to time to compensate for excess refining capacity. This, of course, is the major cause of the frequent price wars that work an even greater hardship on independent dealers, and ultimately on gasoline customers.

The plain fact is that the oil companies are using upstream profits to offset downstream losses. This in turn puts the squeeze on the independent dealers. Something must be done to average out refining to avoid periods of excess refining capacity, and something must be done to prevent the major oil companies from waging aggressive war against independent gasoline retailers.

My third bone of contention is the ten cents per gallon federal tax on gasoline, imposed in July of 1974, and the uneven pricing policies that see motorists paying as much as 20 cents differential for a gallon of gasoline between filling stations 50 miles apart. When there is that much difference in the price of a gallon of the same gasoline, I cannot help thinking that there is a violation of anti-combines laws.

The additional ten cents per gallon federal tax on gasoline is unjust. It is inflationary, it works a hardship on all those people who use motor vehicles in their businesses, and on the tourist industry. I ask the minister if he will consider that I have a legitimate complaint and if he will now undertake an investigation that will lead to corrective action.

● (2317)

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, differences of up to 16 cents a gallon in the retail price of gasoline within the same area occur as a result of market forces and the profit margin that the local retailer and the oil company are prepared to accept to keep their share of the market.

The competition in the retail gas business is quite brisk in any large urban area. It can cause prices at the pump to be lower than posted wholesale gas prices, that is the amount the wholesaler gets from the local service station operator. The difference in those prices is absorbed by the oil companies on behalf of their retail branches. Independent branches may not be able to enjoy that advantage. In addition, up to 10 per cent of the difference in the wholesale gas price between two cities can be due to transportation costs.

Refining operations must also be taken into consideration. During the winter the demand for gasoline decreases whereas the demand for home heating oil increases. However, the nature of the refining process is such that a certain amount of gasoline is derived from a barrel of crude oil whether there is a demand for gas or not. In other words, the refiner who produces enough home heating oil to meet the demand in winter must necessarily also derive gas therefrom in such quantity as to exceed demand. In the final analysis, this factor has a repressive effect on gas prices for both wholesale and retail outlets. If a major refinery ends up with an amount of gas in excess of what it can store it will get rid of it on the market through its network of retailers in those places where they are most likely to sell this product. The other retailers must then lower their prices and engage in gas price war. Obviously, if it is a very local and busy area of a city, prices there can get very low, whereas prices can be relatively high in other areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 11.13 p.m.

END OF VOLUME IV