FUBLIC MEETING.

The meeting to discuss village incorporation, called for Saturday afternoon by the reeve, was attended by about fifty ratepayers. The smallness of the number present may be accounted for by the fact that the meeting had not been properly advertised.

Reeve Saunders was called to the chair and B. Loverin acted as secretary. After the object of the meeting had been explained by the chairman,

A. E. Donovan was called upon, and on rising said that he was personally indifferent in the matter, but thought incorporation would be for the best interests of Farmersville, and had circulated a petition to the County Council, which now had over 90 signatures, which petition could be used or destroyed, as might be thought best. He explained the manner in which incorporation could be brought about, according to the, act. One important fact was that the boundaries of the High School District would not be affected by village incorporation. Some thought incorporation. Some thought incorporation. The speaker then gave some figures on the assessment, taxation, etc., of the municipality, and the proportion of the several items which belonged to Farmersville. He pointed out that the expenses of running the proposed Farmersville Council would be less than the amount the village now paid on that account. Alice was at the other end of the room, playing bezique with one of Oswald's friends, who had already fallen desperately in love with her and who, although not such a desirable parti as Sir Hugh Glynn, was by no means a "detrimental."
Sir Gilbert, from his arm-chair, was glancing occasionally at his niece, and seemed in doubt or hesitation as he did so, for his face wore a slightly troubled look, and there was a very munual expression of indecision in his blue eyes. He did not like the idea of clouding the happiness on Shirley's face, but in his breast-pocket lay the letter which his sister had been anxious about during her last hours—the letter she had intrusted to Shirley for her uncle, and which contained, written by herself for her daughter's perusal, the story of her life. Suddenly the loud trumphant notes of Oswald's music ceased, and his fingers wandered into a sort quaint melody, and, after a minute's prelude, his rich tenor voice rase softly and clearly, singing these words—

And let the Church decline to be led by those ardent brethren who are so often ready with new schemes, but do not trouble their minds much, if at all, with the question of the providing of means. Another London correspondent writes The Scotch colony here, and especiall at by no means unimportant section of Another London Orrespondent wheels.

"The Scotch colony here, and especially that by no means unimportant section of it which is fond of music, has been rejoicing greatly over the election of Mr. A. C. Mackenzie, the Edinburgh musician and composer, to the Presidency of the Royal Academy of Music. Mr. Mackenzie's abilities have been very fully recognized here for some time back; but he had a most formidable rival in Mr. Joseph Barnby, who is admitted to be one of the best conductors now in London. Mr. Mackenzie received a great ovation when, for the first time since he went to Florence, he appeared to conduct an orchestral concert on the evening after his election. While Mr. Mackenzie is the first composer—in the serious sense—in London, the best writer of comic opera music is Mr. Henry Brougham Farnie. Mr. Farnie is a Scotchman and a newspaper man, I believe, having been engaged on either a Stirling or a Perthpaper."

Probable Origin of "Blizzard."

The origin of the word "blizzard" has been taxing the etymologists quite severely of late, and various are the hypotheses advanced. Yesterday afternoon a Dakota man, who is naturally familiar with the article, if not with its derivation, blew into the Globe-office and settled it. He produced a copy of the Lyon County News, at Moorhead, which scredits Deacon Seth Knowles, of that town, with the coinage of the word. He used the sentence, "It is blowing like a blizzardt," which would convey the idea that the wind travelled like lightning (blitzen). A German would say: "Der sturm kommit blitzardig." From "blitzardt" to "blizzard" is a very slight transition. This language was used to describe the great storm of January, 1873.' And this settles it.—St. Paul Globe.

We haven't had a mail since Monday afternoon. Of course in the matter of newspapers we are well supplied, as editors can always imagine what's going on so long as they have a pair of scissors and any old newspapers handy. This paper has got to come out anyway, even if we have to fall back on the almanace and railroad timetables for copy. But we are not stuck yet. part of their policy and had last session moved an amendment to the Government Bill on the franchise, declaring in favor of it. This step was, however, a mere bit of party strategy, as the Conservatives had never adopted the principle of the Bill. The Government had determined to brigge and the Government had determined to bring in measure as soon as the country demanded it; and this Bill was but the finale of a series of measure as soon as the country demanded it, and this Bill was but the finale of a series of successive steps in enlarging the franchise, all of which had been made by the Reformers. Universal suffrage in the United States had worked grave evils, no doubt, but it had probably evoked great good. Even some of the nations of Europe had adopted it, namely, Germany, France, Switzerland, Denmark and Italy. In the 'Province of Ontario at present the suffrage was very near manhood, and practically few were deprived of the franchise. He explained details of the Bill which enfranchises every male of 21 years, subject of Her Majesty, duly entered on the voters' lists and not disqualified by law.

Mr. Meredith repudiated the assertion made by the Attorney-General that motions to the effect of providing for manhood suffrage placed on the records of the House on previous occasions had been dictated by partisan motives. The Opposition had been consistent throughout in seeking manhood suffrage.

Mr. Waters contended that the Attorney-General should have gone one step forward and extended the franchise to women. He had deferred moving the second reading of his own Bill until after this one had been road, and he would now give timely warning that he would bring up the Bill granting that the ranchise to unmarried women and widows on Taesday.

Mr. Garson hoped the Government would soon be in a position to grant universal uffrage.

The Ideal Newspaper.

Making of newspapers is a business, and why should not newspaper men be allowed to manage their occupation in a business way? They eater to public tastes; they bid for public patronage, and to do this shey must furnish what the public wants. If the public does not want un ideal newspaper, so much the worse for the public. The same public that rejects the ideal boet and the ideal bonet has time and again spurned the ideal paper from it and would have none of it. Stock in an ideal newspaper usually is worth all the way from 15 cents to a dollar downward.

Prince Oscar of Sweden and Miss Munck at Bournemouth yesterday. The Queen of Sweden, Prince Carl and Prince Eugene of Sweden, the Crown Princes of Denmark and the Duchess of Albany were present. The weather was brilliant.

The marriage of Prince Oscar of Sweden with Miss Ebba Munck, one of the maids of honor to his Royal mother Queen Sophia, and the young man's renunciation of all his rights, prerogatives and titles in order to wee' the woman he loves, have been a severe shock to the royalties of Europe and all those who believe with the late Prince Windisschnatz of Austria, that "man only begins with a baron." With the people of Sweden and Norway, however, by whom the Prince has always been greatly admired and beloved on account of his manly qualities, this last step has but added to his popularity.

Prince Oscar, Duke of Gotland, is the second son of King Oscar II., and was born November 15th, 1859. He is a young man of sterling character and an efficient officer in the Swedish service. He is of a religious disposition, a quality not often met with in princes, and devotes much of his time and money to the cause of charity. He has traveled extensively and has written a history of his travels in conjunction with his brother. His love affair with Miss Munck dates back for ten years, but not till recently did he divulge his feelings, even to Miss Munck herself. According to the Swedish Constitution any Prince of the Royal Family contracting a morganatic marriage must renounce his right to the succession to the Throne, together with all the titles, prerogatives and emoluments incident to his position. This Prince Oscar has done. It was only after much earnest and persevering effort that he obtained the Royal assent to only after much earnest and persevering effort that he obtained the Royal assent to his marriage with Miss Munck, and then it was owing mainly to the pleading of his

One night he was found senseless on the road, and when he revived in a farmer's house, to which he had been carried, he raved about gome sight which his diseased imagination appeared to have conjured up, shrieking and putting his hands up to his face as if to shut it out. He said subsequently that he had simply fainted on the road. After this shock he seemed considerably broken down and began to lose health as well as spirits. It is also stated that he was Irequently subject to hallucinations, in which he was undoubtedly out of his mind. On Friday he had a very violent attack, accompanied with hysteries. Physicians were summoned, but an attack of hemorrhage followed, and he rapicily became worse and passed away on Sunday. It is stated he made a special confession to the parish priest before his death. The doctors say Flynn had no particular disease, but died from rupture of a blood vessel in the region of the heart, brought on in their opinion by excitement caused by a diseased state of mind.

Sure to Be Hit Somewhere.

At a recent gathering of Unitarians, one speaker recited an aneodote which admits of large and varied application. It was the story of a minister who, preaching on exchange, said some strong things about fast horses. He was told after the sermon that he had touched one of their best members, on a tender point. "Well," said the preacher, "I cahnot change my sermon for him." IN ALGOMA.

Your Wife's Letters.

Charles Dudley Warner, in replying to the question: "Can a man open a wife's letters?" said that it would depend upon what kind of a husband he is. I think it would be nearer right to say it would depend upon what kind of a wife she is. "Discretion is the better part of valor," as many a husband would learn if he made so bold as to open his wife's letters. There is scarcely a wife who does not take her husband sufficiently into her confidence to tell him who her letters are from and to read them to him, or, perhaps, let him read them to him, or, perhaps, let him read them himself; but this is a very different matter from having them first opened, read and passed upon by one for whom they were not intended. Of course many women receive letters that never each the eyes of their life partners, not because they contain aught that would not bear the light of day, not because the wife is afraid or ashamed to show them, but simply because they contain things that are none of his affair. How often the home letters are written only for daughters' or sisters' eyes! How much of the family cares can be told her that would be proudly withheld from son-in-law or brother-in-law! Then there are the letters from dear, intimate girl friends, who pour out the secrets of their, heart upon paper from dear, intimate girl friends, who pour on dear, intimate girl friends, who pour out the secrets of their, heart upon paper for the sympathy and entertainment of sweet Mrs. Jones, but not for the eyes of ascastic Mr. Jones. A very laughable but sensible reason for a wife withholding her letters from her husband was given by a contemporary not long since. She said the sensible reason for a wife withholding her letters from her husband contemporary not long since. She said the sensible reason for a wife withholding her init, that would be rudely treated if given any sort of publicity. The party stopped for dinner one day at the house of a settler near Michael's Bay, Manitoulin. The old couple were badly crippled with rheumatism and the hardships they had endured. Two years ago the fire swept like a race horse down the settlement in which they were located, and in a few hours their's was the only house left standing in that section. For four or five hours the flames raged around them to a height of forty feet, and their little clearing was a veritable flame of the flames, but not until they had rhe will be fourly of the flames, but not until they had rhe will be fourly of the flames, but not until they had reach housed all the water available and even the milk and cream from their dairy to quench the fire were they out of danger. Before this terrible catastrophe occurred, one of the farmers had 300 bushels of grain in, his granary, plenty of flour and other provisions to make home coinfortable, but for a day and night after the fire pineteen of them had no pillow but a log, no clothing but what they wore, and, worst of all, no food to est. Cows were not milked for four days, nearly every fence and growing crop destroyed and the hardy settler suddenly reduced Trom comparative comfort to abject poverty. What monuments of toil, patience and hardship those log huts seem to be when you hear the simple, annals of these poor people! It is pleasant-to see these blackened stumps in many directions near framie buildings replacing the original log shanty, and spacious barns and huge hay stacks, with well-fed stock, betokening better days already dawning.

Not far from Manitowaning is the Indian reserve and village of Wikwimoking, which for half a century has been the site of a Jesuit missien. The village is tolerably well built on the bluff overlooking Smith's Bay, and contains about 1,000 souls. The large convent for girls, a new stone college for boys and the spacio in the eyes of other people, and it may well happen that a friend will desire to impart something to a discrete woman which she would not intrust to the babbling husband of that woman." That's the whole thing in a nutshell.—Philadelphia North American. "Shoot Him" Senvences. LordCharles Beresford's marvelleus abily to dismiss thought from his mind was ery aptly illustrated the other day by a navy man who had been with Lord Charles b Egypt. He was in a rail way carriage with me and was giving another man op-posite the benefit of his Beresfordian posite the benefit of his Beresfordian impressions.

"I tell you Charlie Beresford's a tough' un. It don't take him long to settle a point. When he was in command of the police at Alexandria every morning a lot of poor devils whom the police had arrested used to be brought before him. He'd come out smoking a oigarette, with a bright, cheery face and a devil-may-carelook. A wretched, half-starved, half-naked native would be dragged up.

" What has he been doing?' asks Lord

Charlie.
"' Looting the shops.'
"' Shoot him.' "The poor chap begins whining, and cry-ing, and pleading.
"Next!" Lord Charles calls, and away

"Another native is hauled up by the col-lar, struggling and howling.
"What?"
"Rasisti-" 'Resisting police.' "' Shoot him."
"And so on unil a dozen or twenty fates are sealed by this young judge, from whose decision lies no appeal. His cigarette finished, he goes into breakfast, his appetite quite undisturbed by the volleys which presently greet his ears. I tell you, he's the chap for business. There's no humming and hawing about him."—The Argonaut.

An Unselfish Man. An Unselfish Man.

Somebody wants our definition of "a truly unselfish man." Well, to boil it down, we should say that a man who would rather chop wood after business hours for the behefit of the hired girl than see a tax collector struck by lightning is a truly inselfish man.—Burlington Free Press.

Percy Snelling's Sentence.

The sentence of seven months of hard labor upon the Englishman, Percy Snelling, in county Clare, Ireland, yesterday, is the severest yet passed under the Crimes Act, and is likely, unless overruled, seriously to damage the Government. The official reporter could bring no worse charge than that of recommending people to join the National League Association, which, as Mr. O'Brien showed, meets openly every day in hundreds of districts. Mr. Snelling is the representative of the London Anti-Coercion Committée. The Secretary of this organization informs me that it intends immediately to dispatch another man to take his place.—London Special in the New York Evening Post.
