"Aha! so there is something the matter! Out with it now!" he exclaimed, in his earnest voice.

"Oh, sir—please, it is nothing—only—only—I don't want to offend, sir—but—I'm troubled over—Violet."

His grim countenance reddened with anger.

"Troubled over Violet, eh? And why, may I ask?"

"Oh, I don't know, but I'm afraid she isn't happy!" and the poor old woman trembled all over.

"Not happy! I don't see why," he muttered, grimly. "Wouldn't you be happy, Mrs. Shirley, if you were young and beautiful and off on your bridal tour with a rich and handsome husband?"

"Not if I didn't love him, judge," she quavered, faintly.

"What the deuce do you mean? Didn't Violet love Mr. Castello?"

"Oh, sir, you know she didn't. She told me every day how much she hated him, and how much she adored Cecil Grant."

Mrs. Shirley had gone too far to retreat now, although her teeth were chattering with terror of his anger. But her whole sympathies were with Violet, and she could not keep back the words.

Judge Camden's eyes snapped viciously, and he cried: "If she didn't love Mr. Castello, why did she marry him, eh?"

"That's what is troubling me," returned Mrs. Shirley, frankly. "I know she hated him; and when Amber told me she had run off to marry him, it gave me a dreadful turn, for I thought what if he stole her off against her will?"

"Tut, tut, tut! what a silly old woman! Violet married him for spite, if you must know the truth! It was Grant she was going to elope with, but he failed to meet her at the church, and Castello followed her there, and pleaded his cause so well that she forsook her legged lover and married him instead. That is the story, as Amber told it, and I think myself that Violet did a wise thing in giving young Grant the slip; although I ought to cane him for not keeping his appointment with my granddaughter."

Mrs. Shirley was dazed at this plausible explanation, but, true to her colors, she cried, sadly:

"Oh, I am very, very sure that something dreadful must have happened to keep Cecil away, for he is a very noble young man, and—she was going on tremulously, but he interrupted, with a frowning brow:

"That will do, madame; no more praise of that young scamp, if you please! I know," sarcastically, "that the young ladies of my family were both in love with the beggar; but an old woman like you ought to be thinking of something else besides a handsome young man!"

"Judge Camden, I—"

But the tormenting old wretch added, teasingly:

"You need not encourage his attentions, madame, for I should refuse my consent, just as I did in Violet's case."

The insulted old lady hurried from the room, weeping, indignant tears, and Judge Camden laughed maliciously at the way in which he had routed Cecil's friend.

But it made him unreasonably angry to know how every one admired the manly young fellow, who was so noble and true, and who was struggling against such overwhelming odds in the battle of life. The judge was not really a wicked man, and he would have pitied and admired any other such hero, and have offered him a helping hand; but he hated Cecil for his mother's sake, and was bitter. Only that day the young man had argued and gained a case in court before him, and the judge would have admitted his mastery speech had it been any one else; but for Cecil he had only anger, and perhaps a spice of envy; for the old man well knew that any girl, rich or poor, in the whole county, would have been glad to marry the handsome and noble though impoverished heir of Bonnycastle.

While he sat fuming over his unpleasant thoughts the clang of the doorbell penetrated to the library where he sat, and presently a servant entered with a card.

"Mr. Grant begs the favor of a short interview," he said.

The judge viewed the card with round-eyed wonder and astonishment.

"Well, well, well! What business can the young jackanapes have with me? But show him in," he ejaculated, and the next moment Cecil Grant bowed himself over the threshold, and in the presence of his surprised and wondering enemy.

From her window above Amber had watched Cecil approach, and her heart beat tumultuously as she drew back into the shadows, picturing to herself the surprise and chagrin of the old judge at learning the object of the young man's call.

"How he will fume and wonder!" she thought, maliciously, for Amber had triumphed again.

Mrs. Grant's entreaties had overcome Cecil's sturdy pride, and, to save her heart from breaking at leaving the dear old home, he had reluctantly accepted the loan of the twenty thousand dollars to pay off the debt on Bonnycastle.

"And I wish," cried Amber, fervently, "that I had twenty thousand more to give you to restore the dear old place to its pristine splendor; for I do love Bonnycastle, with all my heart!"

Mrs. Grant beamed with pleasure and gratitude on the fair schemer, and Cecil murmured his thanks in a husky voice, and with a heavy heart, for although he said no word to his mother, he had an innate conviction of what Amber would expect in return for her generosity. He knew that the old love, so cleverly masked for a while under the guise of friendship, still lived in her heart, and how could he pay the loan he had accepted from her but by the sacrifice of his life, by offering his hand and name, without the heart that still belonged to Violet?

So it was a heavy heart that he carried with him into the old judge's presence; and when the wicked girl saw him come forth again fifteen minutes later, his head drooped dejectedly on his breast, and there was no triumph in his walk, although he had paid off his debt to Judge Camden and saved Bonnycastle for his dearest mother. He was indeed overwhelmed with shame and pain at having accepted such a favor from a woman—and especially a woman he did not love.

Amber guessed something of the humiliation that bowed that dark head toward the earth, and her lips contracted with pain.

"He is wretched because his mother forced him to accept a favor from me; but if it had been Violet instead, how differently he would have felt!" she thought, bitterly; then broke into a choking sob. "Oh Heaven, why is it that I cannot win his love when I worship him so dearly?"

"At that moment her maid appeared at the door.

"Judge Camden wishes to see you in the library."

Assuming an indifferent look, although her heart beat wildly, she sought her grandfather's presence.

He was pacing the library in high excitement. Turning, at her entrance, he exclaimed:

"I have startling news for you! Cecil Grant has just left here!"

"Yes, grandpapa, I saw him from my window leaving the house, and I was wild with curiosity to know what had brought him to Golden Willows."

"You could not guess in a year," he replied, with an air of conviction.

"I am sure I could not, dear grandpapa, for of course he did not come to accuse you of treachery in Violet's marriage to Mr. Castello."

"Violet's name was not mentioned between us. He did not stay above fifteen minutes, and the interview was purely a business one."

Amber, with knitted brows and a puzzled air, exclaimed:

"Surely he was too proud to plead with you to let him stay longer at Bonnycastle! I have heard that his mother's heart is breaking because she has to leave it; but I did not think that Cecil would humble himself even for her dear sake."

How superbly she acted her surprise and wonder. If the old man had had the least lurking suspicion that she had lent Cecil money, her innocence completely deceived him, and he replied, angrily:

"No, indeed; my Lord Grant of Bonnycastle, Virginia, would not humble his proud crest to living man, you may be sure. It was a mission of triumph, not humiliation, that brought him this afternoon to Golden Willows. In short, the young beggar had got hold of twenty thousand dollars—the Lord only knows where!—and he paid off the debt on Bonnycastle, and took my receipt!"

"Grandpapa, you amaze me, you astonish me! Where in the world did Cecil Grant get the money?"

Amber's surprise was grandly acted. She was a consummate actress, and met his gaze with innocent eyes of wonder.

"I have no idea where he got it," the judge rejoined, testily. "But he borrowed it, I suppose. He gave me a cheque on a Washington bank where he said the money was on deposit."

"I have never had such a surprise in my life!" declared Amber; but her further protestations were interrupted by a knock at the door.

A servant appeared, saying that there was a strange man at the door, who would not come in, but wished to see the judge on business.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

Amber could not understand the uneasy thrill that went through her at the mention of this stranger wanting to see the judge. She sank almost terrified into a chair, while the old man went to the hall door to receive the visitor.

Yet there was nothing unusual about the matter, nothing that could possibly affect her, she thought over and over, to allay her strange excitement; but when her grandfather returned, the spring up, pale and trembling, dreading she knew not what.

But he spoke very quietly:

"Amber, I am summoned to the bedside of a sick friend in Washington, and shall start at once. If I do not return until to-morrow, you need not be alarmed, as I may be obliged to remain even longer. Goodbye," and he bustled away, leaving her to the company of her own thoughts.

On the whole, she was relieved. A sick friend did not matter. She was rather glad to have him out of the way so that she might visit often at Bonnycastle without fear of detection.

She was eager to force Cecil into a declaration, she could not see how she was going to bring the old judge to consent to the marriage. She did not wish to run the risk of offending him and losing her chance of inheriting his money, but she was determined to have Cecil, and trusted in her usual good luck to bring matters about as she desired.

Her thoughts followed Cecil longingly on his way back to Bonnycastle, and she smiled as she thought how Mr. Grant would rejoice at the news that the debt on Bonnycastle was paid, and she would not be ousted from the home she loved so dearly.

"Ah," thought Amber, in triumph, "she will be very grateful to me, and of course she will be forever sounding my praises in Cecil's ears. Surely then his heart will turn to me!"

She forgot the perversity of love that has puzzled all the wise ones of the earth—forgot that love exists like jealousy—

"We are not jealous for a cause. But jealous for we are jealous!"

Cecil Grant might marry Amber through gratitude for her seeming kindness, but the feeling would be far different from the passion he felt for his only love, sweet Violet—the passion that lived in his heart despite her desertion.

Amber could not believe in the constancy of Cecil's love for Violet now that he believed her false and fickle. She was wildly determined to push this love from his breast by the force of her own will.

She hurried over to Bonnycastle the next morning and succeeded in her design of intercepting Cecil on his way to town as he walked along the bank by the murmuring river that always seemed to whisper to him of Violet's fair, lost love.

It was a chilly morning in November. The frost-blighted willows drooped forlornly over the stream, and the lonely path was strewn with dead leaves that rustled to the tread.

When Cecil saw Amber coming toward him, he reproached himself for the feeling of regret that arose in his heart at the meeting with the brilliant beauty whose eyes beamed so jealously at his approach. He knew, although he despised himself for the instinctive thought, that she had come out purposely to intercept him on the way to the office.

The Climate of Canada.

The climate of Canada as set forth by statistics in the Canadian Year book is a subject of considerable interest.

It seems that the rain fall of the country is increasing with the decrease of the fall of snow, though the decrease in inches of the latter is much greater than the increase of the former.

Both the rain and snowfall of the Northwest Territories is on the increase, the latter growing steadily from 35 to 63 inches per year.

The Montreal Star sagaciously observes: "How would this time of the year do for Thanksgiving day?"

The late government were nearly as bad. They celebrated Thanksgiving day in the middle of November; this government has moved it along to the end of the month.

We should be given an opportunity to be thankful for the harvest as soon after the harvest as is convenient; and after the thanks have been given, it is infinitely better that the day should be one to invite us out into the autumn woods.

A letter has been received in Halifax regarding the Canadian Produce Corporation, which has just been started in England.

An Autumn Wedding. A quiet wedding took place at St. John's church, this town, on Wednesday morning.

An experimental shipment of Canadian butter is to be sent to South Africa. The Lennoxville, Que., creamery has been selected by the Hon. B. R. Doherty, president of Quebec Cold Storage Company.

The official returns of the prohibition plebiscite vote in Nova Scotia are now available. Every county but one—Richmond—went in favor of prohibition.

An Afflicted Mother.

NURSING HER DYING CHILD HER HEALTH GAVE WAY.

ANAHEI. Followed by Neuralgia Pain...

Mr and Mrs James A. Diehl, who live about one and a half miles from Bridgewater, are highly esteemed by a large circle of friends.

But the old colored woman did not even look at her tormentor. She bent and quietly picked up her apples.

"God forgive you, my son, as I do." The rudeness that had counted on a bitter berating was softened in an instant.

"Take it," he said, and then added, as she looked at him in astonishment, "God bless you, mother! I'll never do it again!"

That which is probably one of the hardest sayings of Christ to accept, one that has received the ridicule of centuries, is illustrated in this incident.

"I had great pleasure in dyeing with the wonderful Diamond Dyes. They make old clothes, dresses, silks, feathers, and wool goods as good as new."

"I have used the Diamond Dyes for many years and they have proved true and sure to color every time. They are without doubt the best of all dyes."

"I am a farmer's wife and have used Diamond Dyes for years, and am well satisfied with them. I highly recommend Diamond Dyes; they are the most valuable and surest of all dyes."

"I have used a great many of the Diamond Dyes and find them the best of all kinds for dyeing; will have no other kind for my work."

"I have used the Diamond Dyes with great success. I recommend them to all ladies who wish to do their own dyeing. For coloring dress goods they are just perfect."

"The Diamond Dyes are a great success. I have used them several times and they always turn out lovely colors. I am delighted with them."

"We use the Diamond Dyes and find them fast and beautiful colors; they are the best."

"I dunno! I kin git my money back," said Mr. Corntassel, as he roughly rubbed his brow. "But I must say as how I ain't goin' to recommend any customer to that concern."

"I sent a dollar to a man who advertised that he would tell a sure way to make money fast."

"I've never moving, so it's tatts (potato) boggs (sarcosis)." "It's no tatts boggs," replied the other. "It's a hiss mocking by the day."

Trucible lieutenant (down engine room tube)—Is there a blithering idiot at the end of this tube?

A Soft Answer.

An English tramp steamer had just been tied to a wharf in Boston. From her dingy hold there leaped upon the deck a man who was evidently a stoker.

As he emerged upon the main street, looking probably for the nearest saloon, he saw a colored woman walking calmly toward him, carrying a basket of apples.

But the old colored woman did not even look at her tormentor. She bent and quietly picked up her apples.

"God forgive you, my son, as I do." The rudeness that had counted on a bitter berating was softened in an instant.

"Take it," he said, and then added, as she looked at him in astonishment, "God bless you, mother! I'll never do it again!"

Womanliness First. Miss Erance E. Willard says, concerning the higher education of woman:

"If, to take up the classics, she must lay down the dust-brush and broom; if while her mind brightens her manners rust; if a taste for Homer is incompatible with a taste for home; if, in fine, she must put off the crown of womanliness as she can wrangle her laurels with laurels of scholarship—then, for the sake of dear humanity, let her fling away the laurels that she may keep the crown."

A Terrible Conflict. A minister of the gospel said to me, "I was once a sad drunkard, and I signed the pledge. Many times I had been in the ditch. When I became converted, I made up my mind I would study for the ministry. I was a student. I had no desire for the drink. I had an idea that my religion had driven all that out of me. The grace of God had taken away the appetite for, and the love of Jesus had taken away the love of, drink. I thought about my perfect safety."

"I was invited out to dinner. If the gentleman had asked me to take a glass of wine, it would have been 'No,' or a glass of ale 'No'; but he gave me some rich English plum wine, getting well saturated with brandy, and with brandy sauce over it. I liked it. I ate it freely. I sent up my plate for a second helping. On returning to my room I began to feel drunk. I wanted it. My mouth got dry. I wanted it. 'Well, surely, if I go now and have some—I have not had any for six years—certainly if I take just one glass now, it will allay this sort of craving.' In my case, I had no studies. 'No! I thought of what I had been; I thought of what I expected to be; and now, I said, 'I will fight it out.'"

"I locked the door and threw away the key. Then commenced the fight. What I did that night I do not know. I know I was on my knees a good deal of the time, but what I did I do not know. I had taken on me a heavy load, about eight o'clock, and knocked at the door. 'Come in.' 'The door is locked.' 'I knocked, but I found the key, and opened the door. One of my fellow-students entered. 'Why,' said he, 'what is the matter with you?' 'What do you mean?' 'Why, look at your face.' 'He took me to the glass, and my face, I saw, was covered with blood. In my agony, I had with my nails torn the skin from my forehead—look at the scars now—in my agony of wrestling against the desire for strong drink that cried through every nerve and fibre of my system. Thank God, I fought it; but it was forty-eight hours before I dared go into the street.'—J. B. Gough.

Profanity. Profanity is one of the evils of the day. You can scarcely walk out upon the public streets without being shocked by horrible oaths that seem to darken every atmosphere. From the small street gangs to those of larger numbers that congregates on our street corners, there is heard the sound of oaths and lewd language, that evidence the depravity and show only too plainly the lack of training and home influence in this particular. They sometimes hear it from the boy of seventeen or twenty years who seems to imagine that it is mainly to be rough, loud and profane. They forget that a gentleman is a gentleman. Profanity too plainly shows not only the character of the speaker, but an ignorant, narrow life.

On a steamer once were some officers engaged in social chat, when during a full in the conversation an officer observed "As there are no ladies present, I want to tell you a yarn." "But there are gentlemen present," said General Grant, straightening himself to his full height. The officer looked confused and humiliated and soon left the company. General Grant was never so much a hero, even when he was the victor of battles, and leader of great armies, as when he stood for manly dignity and purity of language. Debasing, indeed, is anything that tends to vulgarity. "Let your conversation be such as becometh the Gospel of Christ."—Selected.

The most beautiful and efficient feature of the order of the King's Daughters is "the Prayer of Consecration," which each King's Daughter offers every morning upon rising. It is this: "Each morning I seek to give myself to my Heavenly Father for the day, saying, 'Take me, Lord, and use me as thou wilt. Whatever work thou hast for me to do give it unto my hands. If there are those thou wouldst have me help in any way, send them to me. Take my time and use it as thou wilt. Let me be a vessel unto Thy hand and meet for Thy service, to be employed only for Thee and for ministry to others. 'In His Name.'" You may respect a man's reasoning, and his theology may go to the dogs; but a brave Christian life you can't respect. It will tell.—Mrs. Stone.

You cannot dream yourself into a character, you must hammer and forge yourself one.—Fosdyk.

Forsake it and Live.

Three meals a day, clothes, and "lots of fun" make up the desideratum of life with a great many. They call "seeing life" the putting on of the smoked glasses of depraved taste and desecrated conscience and peering into the garish light of moral obliquity. Fortunately the rot that used to be talked about a young man "sowing his wild oats" has been so dispelled by the attitude of medical men and the teaching of our schools that the doctrine that was once the means of sending more young men to hell than the sultan is seldom now broached. The wise man says, "Forsake foolishness and live." It is only when a man shakes off this idea that self-gratification is the beginning and end of being, that he becomes a true man. The greatest enemy a man has is himself, and if he is to attain true manhood all his energies must be bent to subjugate the demands, desires, and appetites of the flesh to the will. The perfectly poised man is the one who can say to all these, "stay thou there until I have need of thee"; and every man by disciplining his body can learn to command its motions. Johnson used to lift off his hat in respect to every clergyman, no matter of what denomination, he met. But a man in any station or garb a true man, is so grand a product of creation that whether young or old, he ought to command our veneration.

A POPULAR TEACHER SPEAKS ABOUT PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND.

The Great Life Saver Cures Even the Most Stubborn Headache.

Mr. Belyea's Letter Should be Read by All Sufferers.

Gentlemen:—In the winter of 1884 I was taken with a severe attack of neuralgia in the head and shoulders. Since then it became seated, and I gave up the idea of ever being cured. Have taken medicine prescribed by different physicians, but all to no avail.

Some three months ago I was induced to try a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound. Before I had taken half of it I began to feel better. Sleep, which in my early days appeared so refreshing, has in these years of affliction been made up of fitful dreams; but not so now, as the medicine began to have a telling effect on my nerves.

I have taken three bottles of this glorious medicine, and to-day I can say that it is the first time in eleven years that I have felt none of those piercing pains to which I had once been a victim. Let me say to any person who may read this testimonial, in this province or elsewhere, that if you discredit this statement, just write me and I will only be too glad to inform you of what has cured me of neuralgia and a shattered nervous system.
