MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

A letter of the Secretary of State, with the correspondence relative to the proposed fisheries treaty.

IN EXECUTIVE SESSION,
SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
March 5, 1888.

Resolved, That the message of the President of the date of March 5, 1888, transmitting certain documents and correspondence in relation to the recent negotiations with Great Britain concerning American fishery interests in British North American waters, be printed, and that, under the direction of the Committee on Printing, all communications hitherto made by the President or the Secretary of State to either house upon the fisheries question, and in relation to the seizure of fishing vessels of the United States in the ports or waters of Great Britain or her dependencies, of date subsequent to the 4th day of March, 1877, be reprinted in connection with the documents transmitted by said message, including all the evidence taken before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the report thereon, and that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the documents proposed to be printed in this resolution.

Attest:

ANSON G. MCCOOK,
Secretary.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, March 5, 1888.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a letter from the Secretary of State, accompanied by documents and correspondence in relation to the recent negotiations with Great Britain concerning American fishing interests in British North American waters.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

To the PRESIDENT:

I have now the honor to submit to you, with a view of its being communicated to the Congress, the correspondence that has taken place between this Department and the Government of Great Britain since November, 1886, and up to the present time, in relation to the treatment of American fishing vessels in the territorial waters of British North America.

This correspondence is accompanied by the protocols of the conferences which preceded the conclusion of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, in relation to the subject referred to, and which has been made public by order of the Senate, in accordance with your recommendation.

The documents now transmitted complete the history of the transactions which had as a result the conclusion of the treaty referred to and already published.

The last publication on the subject was contained in the volume of correspondence on foreign relations of 1886, and it is highly important that the entire history of the transactions to which it relates should be brought to the knowledge of the people of the United States, and as soon as possible. An inspection of this documentary history will serve to demonstrate the practical and important results accomplished by the treaty now pending before the Senate, by which the question of the interpretation and administration of the treaty of 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, is transferred and elevated from the obscurity with which it had been suffered to lapse since the date of that convention, and restored from the practical control of minor and local officials of the Canadian maritime provinces.

Until the treaty now pending was concluded no available remedy seems to have been supplied for the inconsistencies, incongruities, and unjustifiable construction of the treaty of 1818 to which our fishermen had for year after year been subjected, and which, by the progress of gradual encroachments of Canadian legislation and local port regulations, had almost converted their privileges, expressly reserved by treaty, into sources of inconvenience and expense.

An examination of the published lists contained in this correspondence and laid before Congress will disclose that the pretexts or causes alleged for the arrests, fines, detentions, and other harassment of American fishing vessels during the years 1886 and 1887, were based upon alleged infractions of the treaty of 1818, or of Canadian laws passed in professed execution of that treaty.

All such vexatious action as is recorded in the list of seizures, etc., is met and rendered impossible of occurrence in the future by the provisions of the treaty now before the Senate; and the amplest enjoyment by United States fishermen of treaty rights, and the customary hospitality due under international law and comity, is secured in the ports and harbors of Eastern Canada and Newfoundland.

The correspondence will serve also to establish the fact that prior to the treaty of reciprocity of 1854, and subsequent to its abrogation, and in the years 1870 and 1871, the vexatious and harassing administration by the Canadian authorities was practiced and unchecked.

As neither the treaty of 1854 nor that of 1871 contained any allusion to the wrongs thus inflicted upon United States fishermen, and as neither convention contained any remedy or provision against their renewal and repetition, it became necessary that such a remedy should no longer be unprovided.

It is believed that such a remedy is practically and fully supplied by the treaty now pending, and that by its terms, now and for the first time since 1818, a just and joint interpretation is agreed to by both governments and placed upon the treaty of 1818, which will secure just and hospitable treatment to the United States fishermen and secure to them unmolested the full measure of their rights under that instrument, and that under the proposed arrangement every American fisherman pursuing his vocation in the waters adjacent to British North America can acquire a clear understanding of his rights and duties while within the jurisdictional waters of Canada or Newfoundland; and that he may resort to such ports and harbors as casualty, necessity, or convenience may suggest without fear of encountering such harsh and unfriendly treatment as he was heretofore subjected to under uncertain, unwarranted, and variant interpretations of his treaty rights.

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

EXTRACT FROM FOREIGN RELATIONS, 1887.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 12, 1886.

SIR: * * * I have already written you asking whether from the British foreign office you could obtain a copy of the report first made by the officer in command of the Canadian vessel by whom the schooner David J. Adams was seized, and you will perceive from the reply of Mr. Graham, who represents the Canadian Government in the suit in the vice-admiralty court at Halifax, that he declines to promise to produce the reports made by these officers, at the time of the seizure, in which the causes for such action would naturally be set forth.

In the course of your correspondence or conversation with Lord Idlesleigh it might be well to draw his attention to the difficulties thrown in the way of the American fisherman in not being permitted to learn the nature and extent of the offense with which they were charged, and so be compelled to go to trial without those certainties of allegation which are held in courts of justice to be incumbent upon the claimant before he is entitled to recover in any suit.

It really appears that this method of Canadian procedure is belittling the important principles involved in the international question now under consideration between the United States and Great Britain.

I am, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 298.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Phelps.

No. 459.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 15, 1886.

SIR: The season for taking mackerel has now closed, and I understand the marine police force of the territorial waters in British North America has been withdrawn, so that no further occasion for the administration of a strained and vexatious construction of the convention of 1818, between the United States and Great Britain, is likely for several months at least.

During this period of comparative serenity, I earnestly hope that such measures will be adopted by those charged with the administration of the respective Governments as will prevent the renewal of the proceedings witnessed during the past fishing season in the ports and harbors of Nova Scotia, and at other points in the maritime provinces of the Dominion, by which citizens of the United States engaged in open-sea fishing were subjected to much unjust and unfriendly treatment by the local authorities in those regions, and thereby not only suffered serious loss in their legitimate pursuit, but, by the fear of annoyance, which was conveyed to others likewise employed, the general business of open-sea fishing by citizens of the United States was importantly injured.

My instructions to you during the period of these occurrences have from time to time set forth their regrettable character, and they have also been brought promptly to the notice of the representative of Her Majesty's Government at this capital.

These representations, candidly and fully made, have not produced those results of checking the unwarranted interference (frequently accompanied by rudeness and an unnecessary demonstration of force) with the rights of our fishermen guaranteed by express treaty stipulations, and secured to them—as I confidently believe—by the public commercial laws and regulations of the two countries, and which are demanded by the laws of hospitality to which all friendly civilized nations owe allegiance. Again I beg that you will invite Her Majesty's counselors gravely to consider the necessity of preventing the repetition of conduct on the part of the Canadian officials which may endanger the peace of two kindred and friendly nations.

To this end, and to insure to the inhabitants of the Dominion the efficient protection of the exclusive rights to their inshore fisheries, as provided by the convention of 1818, as well as to prevent any abuse of the privileges reserved and guaranteed by that instrument forever to the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing, and responding to the suggestion made to you by the Earl of Iddesleigh, in the month of September last, that a modus vivendi should be agreed upon between the two countries to prevent encroachment by American fishermen upon the Canadian inshore fisheries, and equally to secure them from all molestation when exercising only their just and ancient rights, I now inclose the draft of a memorandum which you may propose to Lord Iddesleigh, and which, I trust, will be found to contain a satisfactory basis for the solution of existing difficulties, and assist in securing an assured, just, honorable, and, therefore, mutually satisfactory settlement of the long-vexed question of the North Atlantic fisheries.

I am encouraged in the expectation that the propositions embodied in the memorandum referred to will be acceptable to Her Majesty's Government, because, in the month of April, 1866, Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, sent forward to Mr. Adams, at that time United States minister in London, the draft of a protocol which in substance coincides with the first article of the proposal now sent to you, as you will see by reference to Vol. 1 of the U. S. Diplomatic Correspondence for 1866, p. 98 et seq.

I find that, in a published instruction to Sir F. Bruce, then Her Majesty's minister in the United States, under date of May 11, 1866, the Earl of Clarendon, at that time Her Majesty's secretary of state for foreign affairs, approved them, but declined to accept the final proposition of Mr. Seward's protocol, which is not contained in the memorandum now forwarded.

Your attention is drawn to the great value of these three propositions, as containing a well-defined and practical interpretation of Article 1 of the convention of 1818, the enforcement of which co-operatively by the two Governments, it may reasonably be hoped, will efficiently remove those causes of irritation of which variant constructions hitherto have been so unhappily fruitful.

In proposing the adoption of a width of ten miles at the month as a proper definition of the bays in which, except on certain specified coasts, the fishermen of the United States are not to take fish, I have followed the example furnished by France and Great Britain in their convention signed at Paris, on the 2d of August, 1839. This definition was referred to and approved by Mr. Bates, the umpire of the commission under the treaty of 1853, in the case of the United States fishing schooner Washington, and has since been notably approved and adopted in the convention signed at The Hague, in 1882, and subsequently ratified, in relation to fishing in the North Sea, between Germany, Belgium, Denmark, France, Great Britain, and the Netherlands.

The present memorandum also contains provisions for the usual commercial facilities allowed everywhere for the promotion of legitimate trade, and nowhere more fully than in British ports and under the commercial policies of that nation. Such facilities can not with any show of reason be denied to American fishing-vessels when plying their vocations in deep-sea fishing grounds in the localities open to them equally with other nationalities. The convention of 1818 inhibits the "taking, drying, or curing fish" by American fishermen in certain waters and on certain coasts, and when these objects are effected, the inhibitory features are exhausted. Everything that may presumably guard against an infraction of these provisions will be recognized and obeyed by the Government of the United States, but should not be pressed beyond its natural force.

By its very terms and necessary intentment, the same treaty recognizes the continuance permanently of the accustomed rights of American fishermen, in those places not embraced in the renunciation of the treaty, to prosecute the business as freely as did their forefathers.

No construction of the convention of 1818 that strikes at or impedes the open-sea fishing by citizens of the United States can be accepted, nor should a treaty of friendship be tortured into a means of such offense, nor should such an end be accomplished by indirection. Therefore, by causing the same port regulations and commercial rights to be applied to vessels engaged therein as are enforced relative to other trading craft, we propose to prevent a ban from being put upon the lawful and regular business of open-sea fishing.

Arrangements now exist between the Governments of Great Britain and France, and Great Britain and Germany, for the submission in the first instance of all cases of seizure to the joint examination and decision of two discreet and able commanding officers of the navy of the respective countries, whose vessels are to be sent on duty to cruise in the waters to be guarded against encroachment. Copies of these agreements are herewith inclosed for reference. The additional feature of an umpire in case of a difference of opinion is borrowed from the terms of Article 1 of the treaty of June 5, 1854, between the United States and Great Britain.

This same treaty of 1854 contains in its first article provision for a joint commission for marking the fishing limits, and is therefore a precedent for the present proposition.

The season of 1886 for inshore fishing on the Canadian coasts has come to an end, and assuredly no lack of vigilance or promptitude in making seizures can be ascribed to the vessels or the marine police of the Dominion. The record of their operations discloses but a single American vessel found violating the inhibitions of the convention of 1818, by fishing within three marine miles of the coast. The numerous seizures made have been of vessels quietly at anchor in established ports of entry, under charges which, up to this day, have not been particularized sufficiently to allow of an intelligent defense. Not one has been condemned after trial and hearing, but many have been fined without hearing or judgment, for technical violations of alleged commercial regulations, although all commercial privileges have been simultaneously denied to them. In no instance has any resistance been offered to Canadian authority, even when exercised with useless and irritating provocation.

It is trusted that the agreement now proposed may be readily accepted by Her Majesty's ministry.

Should the Earl of Iddesleigh express a desire to possess the text of this dispatch, in view of its intimate relation to the subject-matter of the memorandum and as evidencing the sincere and cordial disposition which prompts this proposal, you will give his lordship a copy.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 459.]

Proposals for settlement of all questions in dispute in relation to the fisheries on the north-eastern coasts of British North America.

Whereas in the first article of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, concluded and signed in London on the 20th of October, 1818, it was agreed between the high contracting parties "that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks, from Mount Joly on the southern coast of Labrador to and through the Straits of Belleisle; and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company; and that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland, here above described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same, or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground;" and was declared that "the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits: Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter, and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restriction as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them;" and whereas differences have arisen in regard to the extent of the above-mentioned renunciation, the Government of the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, being equally desirous of avoiding further misunderstanding, agree to appoint a mixed commission for the following purposes, namely:

(1) To agree upon and establish by a series of lines the limits which shall separate the exclusive from the common right of fishing on the coasts and in the adjacent waters of the British North American colonies, in conformity with the first article of the convention of 1818, except that the bays and harbors from which American fishermen are in the future to be excluded, save for the purposes for which entrance into bays and harbors is permitted by said article, are hereby agreed to be taken to be such bays and harbors as are 10 or less than 10 miles in width, and the distance of 3 marine miles from such bays and harbors shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay or harbor, in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles; the said lines to be regularly numbered, duly described, and also clearly marked on charts prepared in duplicate for the purpose.

(2) To agree upon and establish such regulations as may be necessary and proper to secure to the fishermen of the United States the privilege of entering bays and harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and to agree upon and establish such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent the abuse of the privilege reserved by said convention to the fishermen of the United States.

(3) To agree upon and recommend the penalties to be adjudged, and such proceedings and jurisdiction as may be necessary to secure a speedy trial and judgment with as little expense as possible, for the violators of rights and the transgressors of the limits and restrictions which may be hereby adopted:

Provided, however, that the limits, restrictions, and regulations which may be agreed upon by the said commission shall not be final, nor have any effect until so jointly confirmed and declared by the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, either by treaty or by laws mutually acknowledged.

ARTICLE II.

Pending a definitive arrangement on the subject, Her Britannic Majesty's Government agree to instruct the proper colonial and other British officers to abstain from seizing or molesting fishing vessels of the United States unless they are found within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, and harbors of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, there fishing, or to have been fishing, or preparing to fish within those limits, not included within the limits within which, under the treaty of 1818, the fishermen of the United States continue to retain a common right of fishery with Her Britannic Majesty's subjects.

ARTICLE III.

For the purpose of executing Article I of the convention of 1818, the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty hereby agree to send each to the Gulf of St. Lawrence a national vessel, and also one each to cruise during the fishing season on the southern coasts of Nova Scotia. Whenever a fishing vessel of the United States shall be seized for violating the provisions of the aforesaid convention by fishing or preparing to fish within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, and harbors of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions included within the limits within which fishing is by the terms of the said convention renounced, such vessel shall forthwith be reported to the officer in command of one of the said national vessels, who, in conjunction with the officer in command of another of said vessels of the different nationality, shall hear and examine into the facts of the case. Should the said commanding officers be of opinion that the charge is not sustained, the vessel shall be released. But if they should be of opinion that the vessel should be subjected to a judicial examination, she shall forthwith be sent for trial before the vice-admiralty court at Halifax. If, however, the said commanding officers should differ in opinion, they shall name some third person to act as umpire between them, and should they be unable to agree upon the name of such third person, they shall each name a person, and it shall be determined by lot which of the two persons so named shall be the umpire.

ARTICLE IV.

The fishing vessels of the United States shall have in the established ports of entry of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America the same commercial privileges as other vessels of the United States, including the purchase of bait and other supplies; and such privileges shall be exercised subject to the same rules and regulations and payment of the same port charges as are prescribed for other vessels of the United States.

ARTICLE V.

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty agree to release all United States fishing vessels now under seizure for failing to report at custom-houses when seeking shelter, repairs, or supplies, and to refund all fines exacted for such failure to report. And the high contracting parties agree to appoint a joint commission to ascertain the amount of damage caused to American fishermen during the year 1886 by seizure and detention in violation of the treaty of 1818, said commission to make awards therefor to the parties injured.

ARTICLE VI.

The Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty agree to give concurrent notification and warning of Canadian customs regulations, and the United States agrees to admonish its fishermen to comply with them, and co-operate in securing their enforcement.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 459.—Translation.]

Arrangement between France and Great Britain concerning the Newfoundland fisheries, November 14, 1855.

ARRANGEMENT.

The undersigned commissioners delegated by the Governments of France and Great Britain, to the end of seeking—apart from the treaties now in force which they are not authorized either to modify or to interpret—the means of preventing and settling differences relative to the use of the fisheries on the coasts of Newfoundland, have drawn up by common accord, under reserve of the approbation of their respective Governments, the following engagements [dispositions]

ARTICLE I.

The Government of Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland engage to conform to the hereinafter expressed provisions for assuring to French fishermen, in the execution of existing treaties and particularly the declaration of 1783, the free exercise of their industry upon the coasts of Newfoundland without hindrance or obstacle of any kind on the part of British subjects

ARTICLE II.

The Government of the French Republic engages for its part, in exchange for the assurance granted to the French fishermen by the application of the provisions set forth in the present arrangement, not to make any remonstrance against the creation of the establishments necessary to the development of any industry other than that of the fisheries, upon the parts of the coast of Newfoundland comprised between Cape St. John and Cape Ray, marked in red upon the map hereto annexed and which also are not mentioned in the schedule, hereto annexed, comprising the portions of territory to which the present paragraph does not apply.

It likewise engages not to disturb the resident British subjects in respect of establishments actually set up on the coast comprised between Cape St. John and Cape Ray to the northward of each cape. But new establishments shall not be set up on the parts of the coast comprised in the schedule mentioned in the foregoing paragraph.

ARTICLE III.

Notwithstanding the interdiction stipulated in the closing part of the second paragraph of the foregoing article, in case a mine be found in the neighborhood of any part of the coast comprised in the schedule annexed to the present arrangement, the Government of the French Republic engages not to oppose the enjoyment by the interested parties, in order to work the said mine, of all facilities compatible with the free exercise of the French fisheries.

To this end a wharf may be established on a point of the coast designated by common accord by the commanders of the cruisers of the two countries.

The buildings necessary to the working of the mine, such as dwelling-houses, workshops, storehouses, etc., shall be erected on the part of the territory situated outside the limits fixed in the annexed schedule for the exercise of the French fishery. They shall be connected with the wharf by a single line of railway, of one or two tracks.

To the end of facilitating the operations of lading and unloading, sheds and storehouses may, nevertheless, be constructed on both sides of the railway for the temporary storage of ore and materials necessary for the mine, within a space not to exceed 15 meters on each side of the track, such space to be surrounded by a fence or inclosure of some kind.

No establishment other than the wharf, the railway, and the sheds and storehouses above mentioned, can, under the final provision of the second paragraph of the foregoing article, be set up on the part of the coast reserved for fishing, within the limits fixed in the schedule hereto annexed.

The provisions of the present article shall be likewise applied to the working of a mine outside of these limits, on condition that it shall have been previously ascertained, by common accord, by the commanders of the cruisers of the two countries, that the working of such mine shall not be of a nature to hinder the free exercise of the French fishery.

ARTICLE IV.

It is agreed that the French shall retain, to the fullest extent, upon all that part of the coast comprised between Cape St. John and Cape Ray, and as it is defined by the treaties, the right to take, dry, and cure fish [le droit de pêcher, sécher, préparer le poisson] as well as the right to cut, anywhere save in inclosed properties, the wood necessary for their drying-stages, cabins, and fishing-vessels.

ARTICLE V.

The surveillance and police of the fisheries shall be exercised by vessels of the military marine of the two countries, under the conditions hereinafter laid down—the commanders of the cruisers having, under these conditions, sole authority and competence in all matters concerning the fisheries and the operations pertaining thereto.

ARTICLE VI.

The French and English fishing vessels or boats shall be registered according to the administrative regulations of the country to which they belong, and shall plainly carry distinctive marks permitting their identity to be ascertained from a distance.

The captains, masters, or skippers [patrons] shall carry papers to prove the nationality of their vessels or boats.

ARTICLE VII.

The commanders of the cruisers of each nation shall mutually give information of infractions of the rules established by the foregoing article, which may be committed by the vessels or boats of the other nation.

ARTICLE VIII.

The cruising vessels of the two countries shall be competent to ascertain an infraction of existing treaties, particularly of the declaration of 1783, by the terms whereof the British subjects shall not "interrupt in any manner, by their competition, the fishery of the French during the temporary exercise of it which is granted to them, upon the coasts of the island of Newfoundland."

ARTICLE IX.

Upon the complaint of the French fishermen, or upon their application for the enjoyment of their fishing right, the commanders of the English cruising vessels will oppose—and if there be no English cruiser in sight the commanders of the French cruisers may oppose—all operations of fishing by British subjects which may interfere with the industry of said French fishermen; they will remove the boats or vessels which may be an obstacle to such industry.

To this end the commanders of the French cruising vessels may serve the necessary injunctions upon the parties in interest, and, in case of resistance, seize their fishing-tackle implements (engins de pêche) and set the same on shore or deliver them up to the commanders of the cruisers of Her Britannic Majesty.

In case no inconvenience shall be found to result for the French fishermen and when no complaint or demand shall have been made on their part looking to the unimpeded use of their right of fishing, the commanders of the French cruisers will not oppose the exercise of the fisheries by British subjects.

ARTICLE X.

In the event of the natives hindering or molesting on land, by their acts, the drying and curing of fish and in general the diverse operations which depend upon the exercise of the French fisheries on the coast of Newfoundland, a statement of proof of the damage caused shall be drawn up by the commanders of Her Britannic Majesty's cruising vessels, and in their absence by the commanders of the French cruisers.

In this latter case, the statement shall be admissible as evidence before the commanders of Her Britannic Majesty's cruisers, in their capacity as magistrates in administering justice.

ARTICLE XI.

If an offense is committed, or an injury caused, the commanders of the cruising vessels of the delinquent's nationality, and in their absence the commanders of the cruising vessels of the plaintiff's nationality, shall estimate the gravity of the facts brought to their cognizance and assess the damage suffered by the party aggrieved.

They shall draw up, in the due case, and according to the forms usual in their country, statements in evidence of the facts such as they shall appear, whether from the declarations of the interested parties or from the testimony collected.

The statement shall be admissible as evidence before the commanders of the cruisers of the delinquent's nationality, within the limits of their competence.

If the case seem to him sufficiently grave to justify such a step, the commander of the cruising vessel of the plaintiff's nationality shall have the right—if there be not in sight any cruiser of the delinquent's nationality—to take into custody (s'assurer de) either the delinquent in person or his boat, in order to deliver them up to the commanders of the cruising vessels of their nationality.

ARTICLE XII.

The commanders of the English and French cruising vessels shall, within the limit of their competence, administer justice summarily [faire droit d'urgence] upon the complaints brought before them, whether preferred directly by the interested party or through the medium of the commanders of the cruisers of the other nation.

ARTICLE XIII.

Resistance to the orders or injunctions of the commanders of the cruising vessels charged with the police of the fisheries, or of persons acting under their orders, shall, without reference to the nationality of the cruiser, be deemed resistance to the competent authority to the end of repressing the act charged.

ARTICLE XIV.

When the act charged is not grave, but, nevertheless, shall have occasioned damage, the commanders of the cruising vessels may adjust the dispute [concilier] between the interested parties, and fix the indemnity to be paid, with the consent of the parties.

ARTICLE XV.

The French Government renounces, for its citizens, the salmon fishery in running waters, and does not reserve the fishery for this fish, save at sea and in the mouths of rivers as far as salt-water extends; but it is forbidden to set fixed barriers which may impede internal navigation or the free passage of fish.

ARTICLE XVI.

French fishermen shall be exempt from any tax upon the introduction into that part of the island of Newfoundland comprised between Cape St. John and Cape Ray and to the northward of those capes, of all objects, materials, provisions, etc., necessary to their industry, their subsistence, and their temporary establishment upon the coast of that Britannic possession.

They shall, likewise, be exempt in that same part of the island, from all light-house, port, or other navigation dues.

ARTICLE XVII.

The French fishermen shall have the right to buy bait, herring and caplin, on land or at sea, in the harbors of Newfoundland, without tax or impediment of any kind, after the 5th day of April of each year, and until the end of the fishing season.

ARTICLE XVIII.

The employment of French subjects, at the rate of one guardian, with his family, for each harbor, is authorized in order to guard the French establishments during the cessation of the fishing season.

In the harbors of large extent where the temporary establishments of French citizens are too far apart to permit of one guardian watching over the establishments, the presence of a second guardian with his family will be authorized.

ARTICLE XIX.

Every fishing vessel, every article of equipment or rigging of a fishing vessel, and every net, line, buoy, or implement, whatever, which may have been found or picked up, shall be as soon as possible delivered to the competent authorities of the nation of the salvor.

The articles found shall be restored to the owners or their representatives through the care of the said competent authorities and under reserve of the prior guarantee of the salvors' rights.

The indemnity to be paid to the salvors shall be fixed in conformity with the legislation of their country.

ARTICLE XX.

The provisions of the present arrangement, with the exception of those of Articles 1, 2, and 18, shall only be applicable within the season during which the treaties grant to Frenchmen the right of taking and curing fish.

In witness whereof the undersigned commissioners have drawn up the present arrangement, subject to the approval of their respective Governments, and hereunto set their names.

TREATIES BETWEEN GREAT BRITAIN AND FRANCE RELATIVE TO THE NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERY; RENEWED BY ARTICLE 13 OF THE TREATY OF PEACE OF 30TH MAY, 1841. (PAGE 162.)

[Extract.—Translation.]

13. The island called Newfoundland, with the adjacent islands, shall from this time forward belong of right wholly to Britain; and to that end the town and fortress of Placentia, and whatever other places in the said island are in the possession of the French, shall be yielded and given up within seven months from the exchange of the ratifications of this treaty, or sooner if possible, by the Most Christian King, to those who have a commission from the Queen of Great Britain for that purpose. Nor shall the most Christian King, his heirs and successors, or any of their subjects, at any time hereafter lay claim to any right to the said island or islands, or to any part of it or them. Moreover it shall not be lawful for the subjects of France to fortify any place in the said island of Newfoundland, or to erect any buildings there, besides stages made of boards and huts necessary and usual for drying of fish, or to resort to the said island beyond the time necessary for fishing and drying of fish.

But it shall be allowed to the subjects of France to catch fish and to dry them on land, in that part only, and in no other besides that, of the said island of Newfoundland, which stretches from the place called Cape Bonavista to the northern point of the said island, and from thence running down by the western side, reaches as far as the place called Point Riche. But the island called Cape Breton as also all others, both in the mouth of the river of St. Lawrence and in the Gulf of the same name, shall hereafter belong of right to the French; and the most Christian King shall have all manner of liberty to fortify any place or places there.

V. The subjects of France shall have the liberty of fishing and drying, on a part of the coasts of the island of Newfoundland, such as it is specified in Article 13 of the treaty of Utrecht; which article is renewed and confirmed by the present treaty (except what relates to the island of Cape Breton, as well as the other islands and coasts in the month and in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). And his Britannic Majesty consents to leave to the subjects of the Most Christian King the liberty of fishing in the Gulf St. Lawrence on condition that the subjects of France do not exercise the said fishery, but at the distance of 3 leagues from all the coasts belonging to Great Britain, as well those of the Continent as those of the islands situated in the said Gulf St. Lawrence. And as to what relates to the fishery on the coasts of the island of Cape Breton out of the said Gulph, the subjects of the most Christian King shall not be permitted to exercise the said fishery but at the distance of 15 leagues from the coasts of the island of Cape Breton; and the fishery on the coasts of Nova Scotia or Acadia, and everywhere else out of the said Gulph, shall remain on the foot of former treaties.*

VI. The King of Great Britain cedes the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon, in full right, to his Most Christian Majesty, to serve as a shelter to the French fishermen; and His said Most Christian Majesty engages not to fortify the said buildings upon them but merely for the convenience of the fishery, and to keep upon them a guard of fifty men only for the police.

His Majesty the King of Great Britain is maintained in his right to the island of Newfoundland and to the adjacent islands, as the whole were assured to him by the 13th article of the treaty of Utrecht, excepting the island of St. Pierre and Miquelon, which were ceded in full right by the present treaty to His Most Christian Majesty.

V. His Majesty the Most Christian King, in order to prevent the quarrels which have hitherto arisen between the two nations of England and France, consents to renounce the right of fishing, which belongs to him in virtue of the aforesaid article of the treaty of Utrecht, from Cape Bonavista to Cape St. John, situated on the eastern coast of Newfoundland, in 50° north latitude; and His Majesty the King of Great Britain consents on his part that the fishery assigned to the subjects of His Most Christian Majesty, beginning at the said Cape St. John, passing to the north and descending by the western coast of the island of Newfoundland, shall extend to the place called Cape Raye, situated in 47° 50' latitude. The French fishermen shall enjoy the fishery which is assigned to them by the present article as they had the right to enjoy that which was assigned to them by the treaty of Utrecht.

VI. With regard to the fishery in the Gulph of St. Lawrence, the French shall continue to exercise it conformably to the Vth article of the treaty of Versailles.

* Extract from the treaty of peace between Great Britain and France. Signed at Whitehall, 16th November, 1686:

V. The subjects, inhabitants, merchants, commanders of ships, masters and mariners of the kingdoms, provinces, and dominions of each King, respectively, shall abstain and forbear to trade and fish in all the places possessed or which shall be possessed by one or the other party in America, viz, the King of Great Britain's subjects shall not drive their commerce and trade, nor fish in the havens, bays, creeks, roads, shoals, or places which the Most Christian King holds or shall hereafter hold in America; and in like manner the Most Christian King's subjects shall not drive their commerce and trade, nor fish in the havens, bays, creeks, roads, shoals, or places which the King of Great Britain possesses or shall hereafter possess in America. And if any ship or vessel shall be found trading or fishing contrary to the tenor of this treaty, the said ship or vessel, with its lading proof being made thereof, shall be confiscated; nevertheless, the party who shall find himself aggrieved by such sentence or confiscation shall have liberty to apply himself to the privy council of that king by whose governors or judges the sentence has been given against him; but it is always to be understood that the liberty of navigation ought in no manner to be disturbed where nothing is committed against the genuine sense of this treaty.

execution thereof with his accustomed good faith and punctuality, but will besides give on his part all possible efficacy to the principles which shall prevent even the least foundation of dispute for the future.

To this end, and in order that the fisherman of the two nations may not give cause for daily quarrels, His Britannic Majesty will take the most positive measures for preventing his subjects from interrupting in any manner, by their competition, the fishery of the French during the temporary exercise of it which is granted to them upon the coasts of the island of Newfoundland; and he will, for this purpose, cause the fixed settlements which shall be found there to be removed. His Britannic Majesty will give orders that the French fishermen be not incommoded in cutting the wood necessary for the repair of their scaffolds, huts, and fishing vessels.

The thirteenth article of the treaty of Utrecht, and the method of carrying on the fishery, which has at all times been acknowledged, shall be the plan upon which the fishery shall be carried on there; it shall not be deviated from by either party; the French fishermen building only their scaffolds, confining themselves to the repair of their fishing vessels, and not wintering there; the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, on their part, not molesting, in any manner, the French fishermen during their fishing, nor injuring their scaffolds during their absence.

The King of Great Britain, in ceding the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon to France, regards them as ceded for the purpose of serving as a real shelter to the French fishermen, and in full confidence that these possessions will not become an object of jealousy between the two nations; and that the fishery between the said islands and that of Newfoundland shall be limited to the middle of the channel.

[Extract.]

The principles which have guided the King, in the whole course of the negotiations which preceded the re-establishment of peace, must have convinced the King of Great Britain that His Majesty has had no other design than to render it solid and lasting, by preventing as much as possible, in the four quarters of the world, every subject of discussion and quarrel. The King of Great Britain undoubtedly places too much confidence in the uprightness of His Majesty's intentions not to rely upon his constant attention to prevent the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon from becoming an object of jealousy between the two nations.

As to the fishery on the coasts of Newfoundland, which has been the object of the new arrangements settled by the two sovereigns upon this matter, it is sufficiently ascertained by the fifth article of the treaty of peace signed this day and by the declaration likewise delivered to-day by His Britannic Majesty's ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary; and His Majesty declares that he is fully satisfied on this head.

In regard to the fishery between the island of Newfoundland and those of St. Pierre and Miquelon, it is not to be carried on by either party but to the middle of the channel. His Majesty will give the most positive orders that the French fishermen shall not go beyond this line. His Majesty is firmly persuaded that the King of Great Britain will give like orders to the English fishermen.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 10, 1866.

SIR: I send you a copy of a very suggestive letter from Mr. Richard D. Cutts, who, perhaps, you are aware, was employed as surveyor for marking, on the part of the United States, the fishery limits under the reciprocity treaty. Mr. Cutts's long familiarity with that subject practically and theoretically entitles his suggestions to respect.

It is desirable to avoid any collision or misunderstanding with Great Britain on the subject growing out of the termination of the reciprocity treaty. With this view I inclose a draught of a protocol, which you may propose to Lord Clarendon for a temporary regulation of the matter. If he should agree to it, it may be signed. When signed it is desirable that the instructions referred to in the concluding paragraph should at once be dispatched by the British Government.

As the fishing season is at hand, the collisions which might be apprehended may occur when that season advances.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

Mr. Cutts to Mr. Seward.

WASHINGTON, April 7, 1865.

SIR: For a full understanding of the differences which now exist in regard to the rights which belong to American fishermen in the seas bordering the British North American colonies it is necessary to refer to the treaties and negotiations which preceded the convention of 1818, so far as they relate to the fisheries.

DEFINITIVE TREATY OF PEACE, 1783.

ARTICLE 3. "It is agreed that the people of the United States shall continue to enjoy, unmolested, the right to take fish of any kind on the Grand Bank, and on all the other banks of Newfoundland; also in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and at all other places in the sea where the inhabitants of both countries used at any time heretofore to fish; and, also, that they shall have liberty to take fish of every kind on such part of the coast of Newfoundland as British fishermen shall use, but not to dry or cure the same on that island; and also on the coasts, bays, and creeks of all other of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America."

In the treaty of Ghent, terminating the last war with Great Britain, no allusion was made to the subject of the fisheries.

In July, 1815, complaint was made that American fishing vessels, engaged in the cod-fishery off the coast of Nova Scotia, had been ordered away by a British sloop-of-war, and this act, while it was declared to be totally unauthorized by His Majesty's Government, led to a correspondence between our minister at London (John Quincy Adams) and Lord Bathurst, in which the United States adhered to the right and liberty of fishing as secured by the treaty of 1783, on the ground that those rights and liberties were not grants from the King, but the permanent results of a partition of rights at the time of the separation of the two countries, and contended, therefore, that they could not be impaired by a state of war. On the other side it was asserted that while the right described in the treaty may not have been impaired, the "liberties" were a concession dependent on the treaty, and as the treaty was abrogated by the war, so also were the "liberties."

CONVENTION OF 1818.

At the third conference held between the American and British plenipotentiaries—Messrs. Gallatin and Rush on the part of the United States, and Messrs. Robinson and Goldburn on the part of Great Britain—the former presented a proposition in regard to the fisheries in almost the identical language of the first article of the convention afterwards adopted, with the understanding that the liberty of fishing therein described should be considered as a permanent right, and not to be abrogated by the mere fact of a war between the two parties.

At the fifth conference a counter project was submitted by the British plenipotentiaries not materially differing from the above, except that the renunciatory clause was omitted, and the following paragraph added:

"And in order the more effectually to guard against smuggling, it shall not be lawful for vessels of the United States engaged in the said fishery to have on board any goods, wares, or merchandise whatever, except such as may be necessary for the prosecution of the fishery, a support of the fisherman while engaged therein or in the prosecution of their voyages to and from the said fishing grounds. And any vessel of the United States which shall contravene this regulation may be seized, condemned, and confiscated, together with her cargo."

In regard to this paragraph, and to another referring to fishing at the mouths of rivers, Messrs. Gallatin and Rush presented the following remarks:

"Whatever extent of fishing ground may be secured to American fishermen, the American plenipotentiaries are not prepared to accept it on a tenure, or on conditions different from those on which the whole has been heretofore held. Their instructions did not anticipate that any new terms or restrictions should be annexed, as none were suggested in the proposals made by Mr. Bagot to the American Government. The clauses forbidding the spreading of nets, and making vessels liable to confiscation, in case any articles not wanted for carrying on the fishery should be found on board, are of that description, and would expose the fishermen to endless vexations."

At the seventh conference, held on the 13th October, 1818, the British plenipotentiaries submitted a second counter project, conforming with the views and free from the obligations presented by Messrs. Gallatin and Rush, and this project, being agreed to, constituted the first article of the convention, as follows:

"Whereas differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States for the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, and cure fish on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Ramea Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the northern coast of Newfoundland from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks, from Mount Goly, on the southern coast of Labrador, and through the Straits of Bello Isle, and thence northwardly, indefinitely, along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company; and that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland, heretofore described, and of the coast of Labrador. But, so soon as the same or any portion thereof shall be settled it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at any such portion so settled without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground; and the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish, or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits: Provided, however, That the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them."

The differences which have heretofore arisen between the United States and Great Britain, touching the exercise of the rights and liberties secured to American fishermen, may be classed under two principal heads:

1. As to the construction of the renunciatory clause of the convention.

Under this clause Great Britain has contended that no American fisherman has the right to fish within 3 marine miles of the entrance to any "bay," which "from its geographical position may be properly considered as included within the British possessions," and that the entrance to such bay must be designated by a line drawn from headland to headland. In support of this construction it has been urged that "if the convention was intended to stipulate simply that American fishermen should not take fish within 3 miles of the coast, there was no occasion for using the word bay at all, but the proviso at the end of the article shows that the word 'bay' was used designedly, for it is expressly stated in that proviso that, under certain circumstances, the American fishermen can enter bays, by which is evidently meant that they may, under these circumstances, pass the sea line which forms the entrance to the bay."

According to this construction, so undefined and indefinite, the bays of Fundy and Chaleur, or any extent of the sea lying between distant headlands, may be reserved under the name of bay, for the exclusive use of British fishermen.

The United States are firmly opposed to such a construction, believing it to be totally unauthorized by the language or intention of the convention, or by the right acquired by usage. In the opinion of this Government, repeatedly announced at different periods, the American fishermen have a clear right to the use of the fishing grounds lying off the provincial coasts, whether in the main ocean or in the inland seas, provided they do not approach within 3 marine miles of such coasts or of the entrance to any bay, creek, or harbor not more than 6 miles in width; and to such bays only does the renunciatory clause in the first article apply. They object to the British construction on the ground that, if such arms of the sea as the bays of Fundy and Chaleur, or such curves in the coast as the bay of Miramichi, or such part of the sea included between headlands as the wide indentation of the coast of Cape Breton, lying between Cape North and Cape Percy, were the "bays" renounced, there would be an inconsistency, if not a clear contradiction, in the very next sentence of the article, which authorizes American fishermen "to enter such bays for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages." It can hardly be contended that "shelter" can be obtained in the bay of Fundy, an arm of the sea 40 miles wide and 100 in length, or that either shelter, wood, or water can be obtained, or damages repaired, in the curve of the coast between the headlands of St. Esenmenac and Blackland Point, designated on the chart as the bay of Miramichi. It is objected to, also, for the reason that it would permit the drawing of lines anywhere in the gulf or on the coast from headland to headland, any one of which could be made to embrace, at one sweep, many bays, creeks, and harbors, besides a portion of the high seas, and from which the American fishermen could be kept an indefinite distance, and be thereby driven from the fishing grounds.

Moreover, it is believed that while the British construction is not necessary to secure to the people of the provinces the inshore fisheries, or to protect their rights of property, or their territorial jurisdiction, all of which are amply secured by the 3 marine miles restriction, it would materially restrict the full enjoyment of the right which we possessed before the Revolution, which was acknowledged in the definitive treaty of peace, which was not affected by the treaty of Ghent, and which, according to the decision of Great Britain, expressed in the correspondence which preceded the convention, was not abrogated by the war of 1812. That right is "to take fish" of any kind "in the gulf of St. Lawrence, and at all other places in the sea where the inhabitants of both countries used at any time heretofore to fish." No construction liable to such indefinite extension or application can be correct or be allowed.

In 1845 Her Majesty's Government receded from the above position, so far as the bay of Fundy is concerned, and from that date our right of fishery in that bay has not been a matter of dispute. It is now open to American fishermen, to be used in the same manner as the more open sea; provided, however, that they do not take fish within 3 marine miles of the coasts or of the entrance to any bay, creek, or harbor of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, between which two provinces that arm of the sea extends.

2. As to the restrictions imposed by the colonies to prevent the privileges of shelter, etc., from being abused by American fishermen.

The fishermen of the United States are frequently compelled by rough weather, or by injuries to their vessels received in a gale, or in consequence of collision or other accident, to seek the nearest port for shelter and repairs. And it is also necessary at stated intervals, while they are engaged during the summer and fall in following their avocation, that they should take on board a resupply of wood and water; and for either of these purposes they have the right, so long as the convention continues in force, to resort to the bays and harbors of the different provinces.

Some of the colonial laws, especially those of Nova Scotia, enacted to prevent the abuse of these privileges, are of such a stringent character as to almost annul the right, or make it at least hazardous for American fishermen to attempt to enjoy it. Seizures are made on the slightest suspicion, or on false pretences or charges; heavy bonds are required before suit can be instituted to recover; the owner of the vessel must bring the charges, and if unsuccessful, he is mulcted in treble costs, besides the loss of vessel and cargo.

In this connection it must be borne in mind that a proposition was made to introduce into the convention a stipulation that "it shall not be lawful for the vessels of the United States, engaged in the said fishery, to have on board any goods, wares, or merchandise whatever, except such as may be necessary for the prosecution of the fishery or support of the fishermen," etc., and that this proposed stipulation having been objected to by Messrs. Gallatin and Rush, on the ground that it "would expose our fishermen to endless vexations," it was withdrawn by the British plenipotentiaries.

Such was the condition of the controversy between the United States and Great Britain as to the limits of our right of fishery on the provincial coasts, and such the severe restrictions, amounting almost to prohibition, on the privilege of entering bays and harbors for shelter, wood, or water, previous to 1854, the date of the late reciprocity treaty with Great Britain. That treaty having expired on the 17th of March last, the American fishermen must fall back on their rights, as thus explained and as heretofore enjoyed.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

RICHARD D. CUTTS.

[PROTOCOL.]

Whereas in the first article of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, concluded and signed in London on the 20th of October, 1818, it was declared that "the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within certain limits heretofore mentioned;" and whereas differences have arisen in regard to the extent of the above-mentioned renunciation, the Government of the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, being equally desirous of avoiding further misunderstanding, have agreed to appoint, and do hereby authorize the appointment of a mixed commission for the following purposes, namely:

1. To agree upon and define by a series of lines the limits which shall separate the exclusive from the common right of fishing on the coasts and in the seas adjacent of the British North American colonies, in conformity with the first article of the convention of 1818; the said lines to be regularly numbered, duly described, and also clearly marked on charts prepared in duplicate for the purpose.

2. To agree upon and establish such regulations as may be necessary and proper to secure to the fishermen of the United States the privilege of entering bays and harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and to agree upon and establish such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent the abuse of the privilege reserved by said convention to the fishermen of the United States.

3. To agree upon and recommend the penalties to be adjudged, and such proceedings and jurisdiction as may be necessary to secure a speedy trial and judgment with as little expense as possible, for the violators of rights and the transgressors of the limits and restrictions which may be hereby adopted.

Provided, however, That the limits, restrictions, and regulations which may be agreed upon by the said commission shall not be final, nor have any effect, until so jointly confirmed and declared by the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, either by treaty or by laws, mutually acknowledged and accepted by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, and by Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain.

Pending a definitive arrangement on the subject, the United States Government engages to give all proper orders to officers in its employment, and Her Britannic Majesty's Government engages to instruct the proper colonial or other British officers to abstain from hostile acts against British and United States fishermen respectively.

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; His Majesty the German Emperor, King of Prussia; His Majesty the King of the Belgians; His Majesty the King of Denmark; the President of the French Republic; and His Majesty the King of the Netherlands, having recognized the necessity of regulating the police of the fisheries in the North Sea, outside territorial waters, have resolved to conclude for this purpose a convention, and have named their plenipotentiaries as follows:

Who, after having communicated the one to the other their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

The provisions of the present convention, the object of which is to regulate the police of the fisheries in the North Sea, outside territorial waters, shall apply to the subjects of the high contracting parties.

ARTICLE II.

The fishermen of each country shall enjoy the exclusive right of fishery within the distance of 3 miles from low-water mark along the whole extent of the coasts of their respective countries, as well as of the dependent islands and banks.

As regards bays, the distance of 3 miles shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles.

The present article shall not in any way prejudice the freedom of navigation and anchorage in territorial waters accorded to fishing boats, provided they conform to the special police regulations enacted by the powers to whom the shore belongs.

ARTICLE III.

The miles mentioned in the preceding article are geographical miles, whereof 60 make a degree of latitude.

ARTICLE IV.

For the purpose of applying the provisions of the present convention, the limits of the North Sea shall be fixed as follows:

1. On the north by the parallel of the 61st degree of latitude.

2. On the east and south:

(1) By the coasts of Norway, between the parallel of the 61st degree of latitude and Lindesnaes light-house (Norway);

(2) By a straight line drawn from Lindesnaes light-house (Norway) to Hanstholm light-house (Denmark);

(3) By the coasts of Denmark, Germany, the Netherlands, Belgium, and France, as far as Griz Nez light-house.

3. On the west:

(1) By a straight line drawn from Griz Nez light-house (France) to the easternmost light-house at South Foreland (England);

(2) By the eastern coasts of England and Scotland;

(3) By a straight line joining Duncansby Head (Scotland) and the southern point of South Ronaldshay (Orkney Islands);

(4) By the eastern coasts of the Orkney Islands;

(5) By a straight line joining North Ronaldshay light-house (Orkney Islands) and Sumburgh Head light-house (Shetland Islands);

(6) By the eastern coasts of the Shetland Islands;

(7) By the meridian of North Unst light-house (Shetland Islands) as far as the parallel of the 61st degree of latitude.

ARTICLE V.

The fishing boats of the high contracting parties shall be registered in accordance with the administrative regulations of each country. For each port there shall be a consecutive series of numbers, preceded by one or more initial letters, which shall be specified by the superior competent authority.

Each Government shall draw up a list showing these initial letters.

This list, together with all modifications which may subsequently be made in it, shall be notified to the other contracting powers.

ARTICLE VI.

Fishing boats shall bear the initial letter or letters of the port to which they belong, and the registry number in the series of numbers for that port.

ARTICLE VII.

The name of each fishing boat, and that of the port to which she belongs, shall be painted in white oil color on a black ground on the stern of the boat, in letters which shall be at least 8 centimeters in height and 12 millimeters in breadth.

ARTICLE VIII.

The letter or letters and numbers shall be placed on each bow of the boat, 8 or 10 centimeters below the gunwale, and so as to be clearly visible. They shall be painted in white oil color on a black ground.

The distance above mentioned shall not, however, be obligatory for boats of small burden, which may not have sufficient space below the gunwale.

For boats of 15 tons burden and upwards the dimensions of the letters and numbers shall be 45 centimeters in height and 6 centimeters in breadth.

For boats of less than 15 tons burden the dimensions shall be 25 centimeters in height and 4 centimeters in breadth.

The same letter or letters and numbers shall also be painted on each side of the mainsail of the boat, immediately above the close reef, in black color on white or tanned sails, and in white oil color on black sails.

The letter or letters and numbers on the sails shall be one-third larger in every way than those placed on the bows of the boat.

ARTICLE IX.

Fishing boats may not have, either on their outside or on their sails, any names, letters, or numbers other than those prescribed by Articles VI, VII, and VIII of the present convention.

ARTICLE X.

The names, letters, and numbers placed on the boats and on their sails shall not be effaced, altered, made illegible, covered, or concealed in any manner whatsoever.

ARTICLE XI.

All the small boats, buoys, principal floats, trawls, grapnels, anchors, and generally all fishing implements, shall be marked with the letter or letters and numbers of the boats to which they belong.

These letters and numbers shall be large enough to be easily distinguished. The owner of the nets or other fishing implements may further distinguish them by any private marks they think proper.

ARTICLE XII.

The master of each boat must have with him an official document, issued by the proper authority in his own country, for the purpose of enabling him to establish the nationality of the boat.

This document must always give the letter or letters and number of the boat, as well as her description and the name or names of the owner or the name of the firm or association to which she belongs.

ARTICLE XIII.

The nationality of a boat must not be concealed in any manner whatsoever.

ARTICLE XIV.

No fishing boat shall anchor, between sunset and sunrise, on grounds where drift-net fishing is actually going on.

This prohibition shall not, however, apply to anchorings which may take place in consequence of accidents or any other compulsory circumstances.

ARTICLE XV.

Boats arrived on the fishing grounds shall not either place themselves or shoot their nets in such a way as to injure each other, or as to interfere with fishermen who have already commenced their operations.

ARTICLE XVI.

Whenever, with a view of drift-net fishing, decked boats and undecked boats commence shooting their nets at the same time, the undecked boats shall shoot their nets to windward of the decked boats.

The decked boats, on their part, shall shoot their nets to leeward of the undecked boats.

As a rule, if decked boats shoot their nets to windward of undecked boats which have begun fishing, or if undecked boats shoot their nets to leeward of decked boats which have begun fishing, the responsibility as regards any damages to nets which may result shall rest with the boats which last began fishing, unless they can prove that they were under stress of compulsory circumstances, or that the damage was not caused by their fault.

ARTICLE XVII.

No net or any other fishing engine shall be set or anchored on grounds where drift-net fishing is actually going on.

ARTICLE XVIII.

No fisherman shall make fast or hold on his boat to the nets, buoys, floats, or any other part of the fishing tackle of another fisherman.

ARTICLE XIX.

When trawl fishermen are in sight of drift-net or of long-line fishermen, they shall take all necessary steps in order to avoid doing injury to the latter. Where damage is caused, the responsibility shall lie on the trawlers, unless they can prove that they were under stress of compulsory circumstances, or that the loss sustained did not result from their fault.

ARTICLE XX.

When nets, belonging to different fishermen get foul of each other, they shall not be cut without the consent of both parties.

All responsibility shall cease, if the impossibility of disengaging the nets by any other means is proved.

ARTICLE XXI.

When a boat fishing with long lines entangles her lines in those of another boat the person who hauls up the lines shall not cut them, except under stress of compulsory circumstances, in which case any line which may be cut shall be immediately joined together again.

ARTICLE XXII.

Except in cases of salvage, and the cases to which the two preceding articles relate, no fisherman shall, under any pretext whatever, cut, hook, or lift up nets, lines, or other gear not belonging to him.

ARTICLE XXIII.

The use of any instrument or engine which serves only to cut or destroy nets is forbidden.

The presence of any such engine on board a boat is also forbidden.

The high contracting parties engage to take the necessary measures for preventing the embarkation of such engines on board fishing boats.

ARTICLE XXIV.

Fishing boats shall conform to the general rules respecting lights which have been, or may be, adopted by mutual arrangement between the high contracting parties with the view of preventing collisions at sea.

ARTICLE XXV.

All fishing boats, all their small boats, all rigging gear or other appurtenances of fishing boats, all nets, lines, buoys, floats, or other fishing implements whatsoever found or picked up at sea, whether marked or unmarked, shall, as soon as possible, be delivered to the competent authority of the first port to which the salvaging boat returns or puts in.

Such authority shall inform the consul or consular agent of the country to which the boat of the salvor belongs, and of the nation of the owners of the articles found. They [the same authority] shall restore the articles to the owners thereof or to their representatives, as soon as such articles are claimed and the interests of the salvors have been properly guaranteed.

The administrative or judicial authorities, according as the laws of the different countries may provide, shall fix the amount which the owners shall pay to the salvors.

It is, however, agreed that this provision shall not in any way prejudice such conventions respecting this matter as are already in force, and that the high contracting parties reserve the right of regulating, by special arrangements between themselves, the amount of salvage at a fixed rate per net salvaged.

Fishing implements of any kind found unmarked shall be treated as wreck.

ARTICLE XXVI.

The superintendence of the fisheries shall be exercised by vessels belonging to the national navies of the high contracting parties. In the case of Belgium, such vessels may be vessels belonging to the State, commanded by captains who hold commissions.

ARTICLE XXVII.

The execution of the regulations respecting the document establishing nationality, the marking and numbering of boats, etc., and of fishing implements, as well as the presence on board of instruments which are forbidden (Articles VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, and XXIII, section 2), is placed under the exclusive superintendence of cruisers of the nation of each fishing boat.

Nevertheless the commanders of cruisers shall acquaint each other with any infractions of the above-mentioned regulations committed by the fishermen of another nation.

ARTICLE XXVIII.

The cruisers of all the high contracting parties shall be competent to authenticate all infractions of the regulations prescribed by the present convention, other than those referred to in Article XXVII, and all offenses relating to fishing operations, whichever may be the nation to which the fishermen guilty of such infractions may belong.

ARTICLE XXIX.

When the commanders of cruisers have reason to believe that an infraction of the provisions of the present convention has been committed, they may require the master of the boat inculpated to exhibit the official document establishing her nationality. The fact of such document having been exhibited shall then be indorsed upon it immediately.

The commanders of cruisers shall not pursue further their visit or search on board a fishing boat which is not of their own nationality, unless it should be necessary for the purpose of obtaining proof of an offense or of a contravention of regulations respecting the police of the fisheries.

ARTICLE XXX.

The commanders of the cruisers of the signatory powers shall exercise their judgment as to the gravity of facts brought to their knowledge, and of which they are empowered to take cognizance, and shall verify the damage, from whatever cause arising, which may be sustained by fishing boats of the nationalities of the high contracting parties.

They shall draw up, if there is occasion for it, a formal statement of the verification of the facts as elicited both from the declarations of the parties interested and from the testimony of those present.

The commander of the cruiser may, if the case appears to him sufficiently serious to justify the step, take the offending boat into a port of the nation to which the fisherman belongs. He may even take on board the cruiser a part of the crew of the fishing boat in order to hand them over to the authorities of her nation.

ARTICLE XXXI.

The formal statement referred to in the preceding article shall be drawn up in the language of the commander of the cruiser, and according to the forms in use in his country.

The accused and the witnesses shall be entitled to add, or to have added, to such statement, in their own language, any observations or evidence which they may think suitable. Such declarations must be duly signed.

ARTICLE XXXII.

Resistance to the directions of commanders of cruisers charged with the police of the fisheries, or of those who act under their orders, shall, without taking into account the nationality of the cruiser, be considered as resistance to the authority of the nation of the fishing boat.

ARTICLE XXXIII.

When the act alleged is not of a serious character, but has nevertheless caused damage to any fisherman, the commanders of cruisers shall be at liberty, should the parties concerned agree to it, to arbitrate at sea between them, and to fix the compensation to be paid.

Where one of the parties is not in a position to settle the matter at once, the commanders shall cause the parties concerned to sign in duplicate a formal document specifying the compensation to be paid.

One copy of this document shall remain on board the cruiser, and the other shall be handed to the master of the boat to which the compensation is due, in order that he may, if necessary, be able to make use of it before the courts of the country to which the debtor belongs.

Where, on the contrary, the parties do not consent to arbitration, the commanders shall act in accordance with the provisions of Article XXX.

ARTICLE XXXIV.

The prosecutions for offenses against, or contraventions of, the present convention shall be instituted by, or in the name of, the state.

ARTICLE XXXV.

The high contracting parties engage to propose to their respective legislatures the necessary measures for insuring the execution of the present convention, and particularly for the punishment, by either fine or imprisonment, or by both, of persons who may contravene the provisions of Articles VI to XXIII inclusive.

ARTICLE XXXVI.

In all cases of assault committed, or of willful damage or loss inflicted, by fishermen of one of the contracting countries upon fishermen of another nationality, the courts of the country to which the boats of the offenders belong shall be empowered to try them.

The same rule shall apply with regard to offenses against, and contraventions of, the present convention.

ARTICLE XXXVII.

The proceedings and trial in cases of infraction of the provisions of the present convention shall take place as summarily as the laws and regulations in force will permit.

ARTICLE XXXVIII.

The present convention shall be ratified. The ratifications shall be exchanged at the Hague as soon as possible.

ARTICLE XXXIX.

The present convention shall be brought into force from and after a day to be agreed upon by the high contracting parties.

The convention shall continue in operation for five years from the above day; and, unless one of the high contracting parties shall, twelve months before the expiration of the said period of five years, give notice of intention to terminate its operation, shall continue in force one year longer, and so on from year to year. If, however, one of the signatory powers should give notice to terminate the convention, the same shall be maintained between the other contracting parties, unless they give a similar notice.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.

The Government of His Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway may adhere to the present convention, for Sweden and for Norway, either jointly or separately.

This adhesion shall be notified to the Netherlands Government, and by it to the other signatory powers.

In witness whereof the plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention, and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at the Hague, in six copies, the 6th May, 1882.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, December 3, 1886. (Received December 14.)

SIR: Referring to your several instructions on the subject of the Canadian fisheries, numbered, respectively, 452, 458, and 459, I have the honor to inform you that on the 27th November I addressed a note to Lord Iddesleigh, Her Majesty's secretary of state for foreign affairs, inclosing a copy of your instructions, No. 452, relative to the case of the Marion Grimes.

On the 30th November I had an interview with his lordship, in which the subject of the instruction above mentioned was discussed.

On the 2d December I addressed to him another note in pursuance of instruction No. 458, asking that the solicitors for the owners of the fishing vessel David J. Adams may be furnished, for use in the suit concerning that vessel now pending at Halifax, with copies of the original reports mentioned in that instruction, showing the charges upon which the seizure was originally made.

I have this day received from Lord Iddesleigh a note, dated November 30, in reply to mine addressed to him on the 11th of September last, on the subject of the same fisheries, a copy of which has heretofore been transmitted to you.

And I have now sent a note to Lord Iddesleigh acknowledging the receipt of his communication, and saying that I should at an early date submit to him some considerations in reply, and meanwhile inclosing to him, in pursuance of his request made at the interview of November 30, a copy of the "Proposal for settlement" transmitted to me in your No. 459, together with a copy of that instruction.

I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of my three notes above referred to, dated November 27, December 2, and December 3, and of Lord Iddesleigh's note of November 30.

I have, etc.,

E. J. PHELPS.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

London, November 27, 1886.

MY LORD: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of an instruction, under date of November 6, 1886, received by me from the Secretary of State of the United States, relative to the case of the United States fishing vessel the Marion Grimes.

The subject is so fully presented in this document, a copy of which I am authorized by the Secretary to place in the hands of your lordship, that I can add nothing to what is therein set forth, except to request your lordship's early attention to the case, which appears to be a very flagrant violation of the rights secured to American fishermen under the treaty of 1818.

I have, etc.,

E. J. PHELPS.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 393.]

Mr. Phelps to Lord Iddesleigh.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

London, December 2, 1886.

MY LORD: Referring to the conversation I had the honor to hold with your lordship on the 30th November, relative to the request of my Government that the owners of the David J. Adams may be furnished with a copy of the original reports, stating the charges on which that vessel was seized by the Canadian authorities, I desire now to place before you in writing the grounds upon which this request is preferred.

It will be in the recollection of your lordship, from the previous correspondence relative to the case of the Adams, that the vessel was first taken possession of for the alleged offense of having purchased a small quantity of bait within the port of Digby, in Nova Scotia, to be used in lawful fishing. That later on a further charge was made against the vessel of a violation of some custom-house regulation, which it is not claimed, so far as I can learn, was ever before insisted on in a similar case. I think I have made it clear in my note of the 2d of June last, addressed to Lord Rosebery, then foreign secretary, that no act of the English or of the Canadian Parliament existed at the time of this seizure which legally justified it on the ground of the purchase of bait, even if such an act would have been authorized by the treaty of 1818. And it is a natural and strong inference, as I have in that communication pointed out, that the charge of violation of custom-house regulations was an afterthought, brought forward in order to sustain proceedings commenced on a different charge and found untenable.

In the suit that is now going on in the admiralty court at Halifax, for the purpose of condemning the vessel, still further charges have been added. And the Government of Canada seek to avail themselves of a clause in the act of the Canadian Parliament of May 22, 1868, which is in these words: "In case a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made or as to whether the person seizing was or was not authorized to seize under this act * * * the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall be on the owner or claimant."

I can not quote this provision without saying that it is, in my judgment, in violation of the principles of natural justice, as well as of those of the common law. That a man should be charged by police or executive officers with the commission of an offense and then be condemned upon trial unless he can prove himself to be innocent is a proposition that is incompatible with the fundamental ideas upon which the administration of justice proceeds. But it is sought in the present case to carry the proposition much further, and to hold that the party inculpated must not only prove himself innocent of the offense on which his vessel was seized, but also of all other charges upon which it might have been seized that may be afterward brought forward and set up at the trial.

Conceiving that if the clause I have quoted from the act of 1868 can have effect (if allowed any effect at all) only upon the charge on which the vessel was originally seized, and that seizure for one offense can not be regarded as prima facie evidence of guilt of another, the counsel for the owners of the vessel have applied to the prosecuting officers to be furnished with a copy of the reports made to the Government of Canada in connection with the seizure of the vessel, either by Captain Scott, the seizing officer, or by the collector of customs at Digby, in order that it might be known to the defendant and be shown on trial what the charges are on which the seizure was grounded, and which the defendant is required to disprove. This most reasonable request has been refused by the prosecuting officers.

Under those circumstances I am instructed by my Government to request of Her Majesty's Government that the solicitors for the owners of the David J. Adams in the suit pending in Halifax may be furnished, for the purposes of the trial thereof, with copies of the reports above mentioned. And I beg to remind your lordship that there is no time to be lost in giving the proper direction if it is to be in season for the trial, which, as I am informed, is being pressed.

I have, etc.,

E. J. PHELPS.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 393.]

The Earl of Idlesleigh to Mr. Phelps.

FOREIGN OFFICE, November 30, 1886.

SIR: I have given my careful consideration to the contents of the note of the 11th September last, which you were good enough to address to me in reply to mine of the 1st of the same month, on the subject of the North American fisheries.

The question, as you are aware, has for some time past engaged the serious attention of Her Majesty's Government and the notes which have been addressed to you in relation to it, both by my predecessor and by myself, have amply evinced the earnest desire of Her Majesty's Government to arrive at some equitable settlement of the controversy. It is, therefore, with feelings of disappointment that they do not find in your note under reply any indication of a wish on the part of your Government to enter upon negotiations based on the principle of mutual concessions, but rather a suggestion that some ad interim construction of the terms of the existing treaty should, if possible, be reached, which might for the present remove the chance of disputes; in fact, that Her Majesty's Government, in order to allay the differences which have arisen, should temporarily abandon the exercise of the treaty rights which they claim and which they conceive to be indisputable. For Her Majesty's Government are unable to perceive any ambiguity in the terms of Article 1 of the convention of 1818, nor have they as yet been informed in what respects the construction placed upon that instrument by the Government of the United States differs from their own. They would, therefore, be glad to learn in the first place whether the Government of the United States contest that by Article 1 of the convention United States fishermen are prohibited from entering British North American bays or harbors on those parts of the coast referred to in the second part of the article in question for any purposes save those of shelter, repairing damages, purchasing wood, and obtaining water.

Before proceeding to make some observations upon the other points dealt with in your note, I have the honor to state that I do not propose in the present communication to refer to the cases of the schooners Thomas F. Bayard and Mascoo, to which you allude.

The privileges manifestly secured to United States fishermen by the convention of 1818 in Newfoundland, Labrador, and the Magdalen Islands are not contested by Her Majesty's Government, who, whilst determined to uphold the rights of Her Majesty's North American subjects, as defined in the convention, are no less anxious and resolved to maintain in their full integrity the facilities for prosecuting the fishing industry on certain limited portions of the coast which are expressly granted to citizens of the United States. The communications on the subject of these two schooners, which I have requested Her Majesty's minister at Washington to address to Mr. Bayard, can not, I think, have failed to afford to your Government satisfactory assurances in this respect.

Reverting now to your note under reply, I beg to offer the following observations on its contents:

In the first place, you take exception to my predecessor having declined to discuss the case of the David J. Adams, on the ground that it was still sub judice, and you state that your Government are unable to accede to the proposition contained in my note of the 1st of September last, to the effect that "it is clearly right, according to practice and precedent, that such diplomatic action should be suspended pending the completion of the judicial inquiry."

In regard to this point, it is to be remembered that there are three questions calling for investigation in the case of the David J. Adams:

- (1) What were the acts committed which led to the seizure of the vessel?
- (2) Was her seizure for such acts warranted by any existing laws?
- (3) If so, are those laws in derogation of the treaty rights of the United States?

It is evident that the first two questions must be the subject of inquiry before the third can be profitably discussed, and that those two questions can only be satisfactorily disposed of by a judicial inquiry. Far from claiming that the United States Government would be bound by the construction which British tribunals might place on the treaty, I stated in my note of the 1st September that if that decision should be adverse to the views of your Government it would not preclude further discussion between the two Governments and the adjustment of the question by diplomatic action.

I may further remark that the very proposition advanced in my note of the 1st of September last, and to which exception is taken in your reply, has on a previous occasion been distinctly asserted by the Government of the United States under precisely similar circumstances, that is to say, in 1870, in relation to the seizure of American fishing vessels in Canadian waters for alleged violation of the convention of 1818.

In a dispatch of the 29th of October, 1870, to Mr. W. A. Dart, United States consul-general at Montreal (which is printed at page 431 of the volume for that year of the Foreign Relations of the United States, and which formed part of the correspondence referred to by Mr. Bayard in his note to Sir L. West of the 20th of May last), Mr. Fish expressed himself as follows:

"It is the duty of the owners of the vessels to defend their interests before the courts at their own expense, and without special assistance from the Government at this stage of affairs. It is for those tribunals to construe the statutes under which they act. If the construction they adopt shall appear to be in contravention of our treaties with Great Britain, or to be (which can not be anticipated) plainly erroneous in a case admitting of no reasonable doubt, it will then become the duty of the Government—a duty which it will not be slow to discharge—to avail itself of all necessary means for obtaining redress."

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, still adhere to their view that any diplomatic discussion as to the legality of the seizure of the David J. Adams would be premature until the case has been judicially decided.

It is further stated in your note that "the absence of any statute authorizing proceedings or providing a penalty against American fishing vessels for purchasing bait or supplies in a Canadian port to be used in lawful fishing" affords "the most satisfactory evidence that up to the time of the present controversy no such construction has been given to the treaty by the British or by the colonial parliament as is now sought to be maintained."

Her Majesty's Government are quite unable to accede to this view, and I must express my regret that no reply has yet been received from your Government to the arguments on this and all the other points in controversy, which are contained in the able and elaborate report (as you courteously describe it) of the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, of which my predecessor communicated to you a copy.

In that report reference is made to the argument of Mr. Bayard, drawn from the fact that the proposal of the British negotiators of the convention of 1818, to the effect that American fishing vessels should carry no merchandise, was rejected by the American negotiators; and it is shown that the above proposal had no application to American vessels resorting to the Canadian coasts, but only to those exercising the right of inshore fishing and of landing for the drying and curing of fish on parts of the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador.

The report, on the other hand, shows that the United States negotiators proposed that the right of "procuring bait" should be added to the enumeration of the four objects for which the United States fishing vessels might be allowed to enter Canadian waters; and that such proposal was rejected by the British negotiators, thus showing that there could be no doubt in the minds of either party at the time that the "procuring of bait" was prohibited by the terms of the article. The report, moreover, recalls the important fact that the United States Government admitted, in the case submitted by them before the Halifax Commission in 1877, that neither the convention of 1818 nor the treaty of Washington conferred any right or privilege of trading on American fishermen; that the "various incidental and reciprocal advantages of the treaty, such as the privileges of traffic, purchasing bait and other supplies, are not the subject of compensation, because the treaty of Washington confers no such rights on the inhabitants of the United States, who now enjoy them merely by sufferance, and who can at any time be deprived of them."

This view was confirmed by the ruling of the commissioners. Whilst I have felt myself bound to place the preceding observations before you in reply to the arguments contained in your note, I beg leave to say that Her Majesty's Government would willingly have left such points of technical detail and construction for the consideration of a commission properly constituted to examine them, as well as to suggest a means for either modifying their application or substituting for them some new arrangement of a mutually satisfactory nature.

I gather, however, from your note that, in the opinion of your Government, although a revision of treaty stipulations on the basis of mutual concessions was desired by the United States before the present disputes arose, yet the present time is inopportune for various reasons, among which you mention the irritation created in the United States by the belief that the action of the Canadian Government has had for its object to force a new treaty on your Government.

Her Majesty's Government learn with much regret that such an impression should prevail, for every effort has been made by the Canadian Government to promote a friendly negotiation and to obviate the differences which have now arisen. Indeed, it is hardly necessary to remind you that, for six months following the denunciation by your Government of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, the North American fisheries were thrown open to citizens of the United States without any equivalent, in the expectation that the American Government would show their willingness to treat the question in a similar spirit of amity and good will.

Her Majesty's Government can not but express a hope that the whole correspondence may be laid immediately before Congress, as they believe that its perusal would influence public opinion in the United States in favor of negotiating, before the commencement of the next fishing season, an arrangement based on mutual concessions, and which would therefore (to use the language of your note) "coincide with the dignity, the interests, and the friendly relations of the two countries."

Her Majesty's Government can not conceive that negotiations commenced with such an object and in such a spirit could fail to be successful; and they trust, therefore, that your Government will endeavor to obtain from Congress, which is about to assemble, the necessary powers to enable them to make to Her Majesty's Government some definite proposals for the negotiation of a mutually advantageous arrangement.

Further notice to British fishermen with respect to the exclusive fishery limits of France.

The French Government have intimated to Her Majesty's Government that the recent detention of English oyster smacks which entered Havre to pass Sunday there in fine weather, was effected by the maritime authority at that port for an infraction of Articles LXXXV and LXXXVI of the International Fishery Regulations of May 24, 1843, and that the minister of marine in Paris, on learning the circumstances, directed that the smacks should be immediately released, in consequence of the toleration which has for a long time existed in the United Kingdom and France as regards not enforcing the strict observance of these articles.

The French Government have given special instructions for preventing a recurrence of like circumstances, without a preliminary reference on the part of the authority at the port to the ministry of marine.

The French Government have further intimated that, in the event of their finding that the maintenance of the existing toleration gives rise to inconvenience, notice will be given to Her Majesty's Government, so as to allow of the latter issuing timely warning to British fishermen. As this occurrence had been made the subject of an instruction to you by me, on the 6th ultimo, whereby you were requested to bring the incident to the attention of Her Majesty's Government, I hasten to inform you of the voluntary action of the Canadian Government and of their expression of regret for the action of the officer referred to.

SIR: Referring to your instructions numbered 458 of November 12, and also to my dispatch numbered 393 of December 3, I have the honor to inclose herewith the copy of a note which I have just received from the Earl of Iddesleigh in reply to mine of December 2 to his lordship, asking that the owners of the David J. Adams be furnished with copies of the original reports stating the charges on which that vessel was seized by the Canadian authorities. Lord Iddesleigh to Mr. Phelps.

FOREIGN OFFICE, January 11, 1887.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have considered the request contained in your note of the 2d ultimo, to the effect that the owners of the David J. Adams may be furnished with copies of the original reports stating the charges on which that vessel was seized by the Canadian authorities; and I have now the honor to state to you that if the owners of this vessel are legally entitled to be furnished with those reports they can obtain them by the process of the courts; and there seems no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government with the ordinary course of justice.

As regards the means of obtaining information for the purposes of the defense, I would point out that in the report of the Canadian minister of marine and fishery, of which a copy was communicated to you on the 23d July last, it is stated that from a date immediately after the seizure "there was not the slightest difficulty in the United States consul-general, and those interested in the vessel, obtaining the fullest information," and that "apart from the general knowledge of the offenses which it was claimed the master had committed, and which was furnished at the time of the seizure, the most technical and precise details were readily obtainable at the registry of the court, and from the solicitors of the Crown."

With respect to the statement in your note that a clause in the Canadian act of May 22, 1868, to the effect that, "In case a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, or as to whether the person seizing was or was not authorized to seize under this act, the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall be on the owner or claimant," is in violation of the principles of national justice, as well as of those of the common law, I have to observe that the statute referred to is cap. 61 of 1868, which provides for the issue of licenses to foreign fishing vessels, and for the forfeiture of such vessels fishing without a license; and that the provisions of Article 10, to which you take exception, are commonly found in laws against smuggling, and are based on the rule of law that a man who pleads that he holds a license or other similar document shall be put to the proof of his plea and required to produce the document.

I beg leave to add that the provisions of that statute, so far as they relate to the issue of licenses, has been in operation since the year 1870.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, January 27, 1887.

SIR: Your dispatch No. 416, of the 12th instant, transmitting a copy of the note, dated the 11th, received by you from the late Lord Iddesleigh, in response to your note of December 2, 1886, requesting copies of the papers in the case of the David J. Adams, has been received.

The concluding part of Lord Iddesleigh's note seems to demand attention, inasmuch as the argument employed to justify the provisions of Article 10 of the Canadian Statutes, cap. 61 of 1868, which throw on the claimant the burden of proving the illegality of a seizure, appears to rest upon the continued operation of Article 1 of that statute, relative to the issue of licenses to foreign fishing vessels. The note in question states "that the provisions of that statute, so far as they relate to the issue of licenses, has [have?] been in operation since the year 1870."

It appears from the correspondence exchanged in 1870 between this Department and Her Majesty's minister in Washington (see the volume of Foreign Relations, 1870, pp. 407-411) that on the 8th of January, 1870, an order in council of the Canadian Government decreed "that the system of granting fishing license to foreign vessels under the act 31 Vic., cap. 61, be discontinued, and that henceforth all foreign fishermen be prevented from fishing in the waters of Canada."

During the continuance of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington Canadian fishing licenses were not required for fishermen of the United States, and since the termination of those articles, July 1, 1855, this Department has not been advised of the resumption of the licensing system under the statute aforesaid.

The faulty construction of the last paragraph of Lord Iddesleigh's note, as transmitted with your No. 416, suggests the possibility of a clerical error in the preparation or transcription of that note, and that it may have been intended to state that the licensing provisions of the statute, cap. 61, 1868, "have not been in operation since 1870," but in that case it is not easy to apply the argument advanced.

FOREIGN OFFICE, December 16, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 27th ultimo relative to the case of the Marion Grimes, stated to have been fined and detained at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in October last.

As other cases besides that of the Marion Grimes are alluded to in the documents forwarded in your note, it will be desirable to take each case separately, and inform you shortly of the steps which Her Majesty's Government have taken in regard to them.

In respect to the case of the Marion Grimes, I have already received, through Her Majesty's secretary of state for the colonies, a copy of a dispatch from the Dominion Government, in which they express their regret at the action taken by Captain Quigley in hauling down the United States flag. I have transmitted a copy of this dispatch to Her Majesty's minister at Washington, with instructions to communicate it to Mr. Bayard, and I beg leave to now inclose a copy of it for your information.

Her Majesty's Government cannot doubt that, as respects the incident of the flag, the apology thus spontaneously tendered by the Canadian Government will be accepted by the United States Government in the friendly and conciliatory disposition in which it is offered, whilst as regards the other statements concerning Captain Quigley's conduct, Her Majesty's Government do not at present feel themselves in a position to express any opinion.

The Dominion Government have been requested to furnish a full report on the various circumstances alleged, and when this is received I shall have the honor to address a further communication to you upon the subject.

S. Ex. 113—3

As concerns the case of the Julia Ellen and Shiloh, it will probably suffice to communicate to you the inclosed copies of reports from the Canadian Government relative to these two vessels. These reports have already been sent to Her Majesty's minister at Washington for communication to Mr. Bayard.

The protest made by the United States Government in the case of the Everett Steele was not received in this country until the 1st ultimo; and although the Canadian Government have been requested by telegraph to furnish a report upon the circumstances alleged, sufficient time has not yet elapsed to enable Her Majesty's Government to be in possession of the facts as reported by the Dominion Government.

Her Majesty's Government greatly regret that incidents of the description alluded to should occur, and they can only renew the assurance conveyed to you in my note of the 30th ultimo, that whilst firmly resolved to uphold the undoubted treaty rights of Her Majesty's North American subjects in regard to the fisheries, they will also equally maintain the undoubted rights of United States fishermen to obtain shelter in Canadian ports, under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their abusing the privileges reserved to them by treaty.

I notice that in Mr. Bayard's note to you of the 6th ultimo, concerning the case of the Marion Grimes, and also in his note to Sir L. West of the 19th October last, relative to the case of the Everett Steele, an old discussion is revived which Her Majesty's Government had hoped was finally disposed of by the correspondence which took place on the subject in 1815 and 1816.

I allude to the argument that a right to the common enjoyment of the fisheries by Great Britain and the United States, after the separation of the latter from the mother country, was recognized by the treaty of 1783, although the exercise of that right was made subject to certain restrictions. I refer to this point merely to observe that the views of Her Majesty's Government in relation to it have not been modified in any way since the date of Lord Bathurst's note of the 30th of October, 1815, to Mr. John Quincy Adams.

I have, etc.

SIR: With reference to my predecessor's note of the 30th of November last, I have the honor to transmit to you a copy of a report from the Canadian minister of justice upon the seizure of the American fishing vessel David J. Adams.

[Inclosure 3 in No. 423.]

Mr. Phelps to the Marquis of Salisbury.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, January 26, 1887.

MY LORD: Various circumstances have rendered inconvenient an earlier reply to Lord Idlesleigh's note of November 12, on the subject of the North American fisheries, and the termination of the fishing season has postponed the more immediate necessity of the discussion; but it seems now very important that before the commencement of another season a distinct understanding should be reached between the United States Government and that of Her Majesty relative to the course to be pursued by the Canadian authorities towards American vessels.

It is not without surprise that I have read Lord Idlesleigh's remark, in the note above mentioned, referring to the treaty of 1818, that Her Majesty's Government "have not as yet been informed in what respect the construction placed upon that instrument by the Government of the United States differs from their own."

Had his lordship perused more attentively my note to his predecessor in office, Lord Rosebery, under date of June 2, 1886, to which reference was made in my note to Lord Idlesleigh of September 11, 1886, I think he could not have failed to apprehend distinctly the construction of that treaty for which the United States Government contends and the reasons and arguments upon which it is founded.

I have again respectfully to refer your lordship to my note to Lord Rosebery of June 2, 1886, for a very full and, I hope, clear exposition of the ground taken by the United States Government on that point. It is unnecessary to repeat it, and I am unable to add to it.

In reply to the observations in my note to Lord Idlesleigh of September 11, 1886, on the point whether such discussion should be suspended in these cases until the result of the judicial proceedings in respect to them should be made known, a proposition to which, as I stated in that note, the United States Government is unable to accede, his lordship cites in support of it some language of Mr. Fish, when Secretary of State of the United States, addressed to the United States consul-general at Montreal in May, 1870. From the view then expressed by Mr. Fish the United States Government has neither disposition nor occasion to dissent. But it can not regard it as in any way applicable to the present case.

It is true beyond question that when a private vessel is seized for an alleged infraction of the laws of the country in which the seizure takes place, and the fact of the infraction, or the exact legal construction of the local statute claimed to be transgressed, is in dispute, and is in process of determination by the proper tribunal, the Government to which the vessel belongs will not usually interfere in advance of such determination and before acquiring the information on which it depends. And especially when it is not yet informed whether the conduct of the officer making the seizure will not be repudiated by the Government under which he acts, so that interference will be unnecessary. This is all, in effect, that was said by Mr. Fish on that occasion. In language immediately following that quoted by Lord Idlesleigh his remarks are as follows (italics being mine):

"The present embarrassment is that while we have reports of several seizures upon grounds as stated by the interested parties, which seem to be in contravention of international law and special treaties relating to the fisheries, these alleged causes of seizure are regarded as pretensions of over zealous officers of the British navy and the colonial vessels which will, as we hope and are bound in courtesy to expect, be repudiated by the courts, before which our vessels are to be brought for adjudication.

But in the present case the facts constituting the alleged infraction by the vessel seized are not in dispute, except some circumstances of alleged aggravation not material to the validity of the seizure. The original ground of the seizure was the purchase by the master of the vessel of a small quantity of bait from an inhabitant of Nova Scotia, to be used in lawful fishing. This purchase is not denied by the owners of the vessel, and the United States Government insists, first, that such an act is not in violation of the treaty of 1818, and second, that no then existing statute in great Britain or Canada authorized any proceedings against the vessel for such an act, even if it could be regarded as in violation of the terms of the treaty, and no such statute has been as yet produced.

In respect to the charge subsequently brought against the Adams, and upon which many other vessels have been seized, that of a technical violation of the customs act, in omitting to report at the custom-house, though having no business at the port (and in some instances where the vessel seized was not within several miles of the landing), the United States Government claim, while not admitting that the omission to report was even a technical transgression of the act, that even if it were, no harm having been done or intended, the proceedings against the vessels for an inadvertence of that sort were in a high degree harsh, unreasonable, and unfriendly, especially as for many years no such effect has been given to the act in respect to the fishing vessels, and no previous notice of a change in its construction has been promulgated.

It seems apparent, therefore, that the cases in question, as they are to be considered between the two Governments, present no points upon which the decision of the courts of Nova Scotia need be awaited or would be material.

Nor is it any longer open to the United States Government to anticipate that the acts complained of will (as said by Mr. Fish in the dispatch above quoted) be repudiated as the "pretensions of over-zealous officers of the * * * colonial vessels," because they have been so many times repeated as to constitute a regular system of procedure, have been directed and approved by the Canadian Government, and have been in no wise disapproved or restrained by Her Majesty's Government, though repeatedly and earnestly protested against on the part of the United States.

It is therefore to Her Majesty's Government alone that the United States Government can look for consideration and redress. It can not consent to become, directly or indirectly, a party to the proceedings complained of, nor to await their termination before the questions involved between the two Governments shall be dealt with. Those questions appear to the United States Government to stand upon higher grounds, and to be determined, in large part, at least, upon very different considerations from those upon which the courts of Nova Scotia must proceed in the pending litigation.

Lord Idlesleigh, in the note above referred to, proceeds to express regret that no reply has yet been received from the United States Government to the arguments on all the points in controversy contained in the report of the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, of which Lord Rosebery had sent me a copy.

Inasmuch as Lord Idlesleigh and his predecessor, Lord Rosebery, have declined altogether, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, to discuss these questions until the cases in which they arise shall have been judicially decided, and as the very elaborate arguments on the subject previously submitted by the United States Government, remain, therefore without reply, it is not easy to perceive why further discussion of it on the part of the United States should be expected. So soon as Her Majesty's Government consent to enter upon the consideration of the points involved, any suggestions it may advance will receive immediate and respectful attention on the part of the United States. Till then further argument on that side would seem to be neither consistent nor proper.

Still less can the United States Government consent to be drawn, at any time, into a discussion of the subject with the colonial Government of Canada. The treaty in question, and all the international relations arising out of it, exist only between the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain, and between those Governments only can they be dealt with. If, in entering upon that consideration of the subject which the United States have insisted upon, the arguments contained in the report of the Canadian minister should be advanced by Her Majesty's Government, I do not conceive that they will be found difficult to answer.

Two suggestions contained in that report are, however, specially noticed by Lord Idlesleigh, as being "in reply" to the arguments contained in my note. In quoting the substance of the contentions of the Canadian minister on the particular points referred to, I do not understand his lordship to depart from the conclusion of Her Majesty's Government he had previously announced, declining to enter upon the discussion of the cases in which the questions arise. He presents the observations of the report only as those of the Canadian minister made in the argument of points upon which Her Majesty's Government decline at present to enter.

I do not, therefore, feel called upon to make any answer to these suggestions; and more especially as it seems obvious that the subject can not usefully be discussed upon one or two suggestions appertaining to it, and considered by themselves alone. While those mentioned by Lord Idlesleigh have undoubtedly their place in the general argument, it will be seen that they leave quite untouched most of the propositions and reasoning set forth in my note to Lord Rosebery above mentioned. It appears to me that the question can not be satisfactorily treated aside from the cases in which they arise, and that when discussed the whole subject must be gone into in its entirety.

The United States Government is not able to concur in the favorable view taken by Lord Idlesleigh of the efforts of the Canadian Government "to promote a friendly negotiation." That the conduct of that Government has been directed to obtaining a revision of the existing treaty is not to be doubted; but its efforts have been of such a character as to preclude the prospect of a successful negotiation so long as they continue, and seriously to endanger the friendly relations between the United States and Great Britain.

Aside from the question as to the right of American vessels to purchase bait in Canadian ports, such a construction has been given to the treaty between the United States and Great Britain as amounts virtually to a declaration of almost complete non-intercourse with American vessels. The usual comity between friendly nations has been refused in their case, and in one instance, at least, the ordinary offices of humanity. The treaty of friendship and amity which, in return for very important concessions by the United States to Great Britain, reserved to the American vessels certain specified privileges has been construed to exclude them from all other intercourse even to civilized life and to universal maritime usage among nations not at war, as well as from the right to touch and trade accorded to all other vessels.

And quite aside from any question arising upon construction of the treaty, the provisions of the custom-house acts and regulations have been systematically enforced against American ships for alleged petty and technical violations of legal requirements in a manner so unreasonable, unfriendly, and unjust as to render the privileges accorded by the treaty practically nugatory.

It is not for a moment contended by the United States Government that American vessels should be exempt from those reasonable port and custom-house regulations which are in force in countries which such vessels have occasion to visit. If they choose to violate such requirements, their Government will not attempt to screen them from the just legal consequences.

But what the United States Government complain of in these cases is that existing regulations have been construed with a technical strictness, and enforced with a severity, in cases of inadvertent and accidental violation where no harm was done, which is both unusual and unnecessary, whereby the voyages of vessels have been broken up and heavy penalties incurred. That the liberal and reasonable construction of these laws that had prevailed for many years, and to which the fishermen had become accustomed, was changed without any notice given. And that every opportunity of unnecessary interference with the American fishing vessels, to the prejudice and destruction of their business, has been availed of. Whether in any of these cases, a technical violation of some requirement of law had, upon close and severe construction, taken place, it is not easy to determine. But if such rules were generally enforced in such a manner in the ports of the world, no vessel could sail in safety without carrying a solicitor versed in the intricacies of revenue and port regulations.

It is unnecessary to specify the various cases referred to, as the facts in many of them have been already laid before Her Majesty's Government.

Since the receipt of Lord Idlesleigh's note the United States Government has learned with grave regret that Her Majesty's assent has been given to the act of the Parliament of Canada, passed at its late session, entitled "An act further to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," which has been the subject of observation in the previous correspondence on the subject between the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain.

By the provisions of this act any foreign ship, vessel, or boat (whether engaged in fishing or not) found within any harbor in Canada, or within 3 marine miles of "any of the coasts, bays, or creeks of Canada," may be brought into port by any of the officers or persons mentioned in the act, her cargo searched, and her master examined upon oath touching the cargo and voyage under a heavy penalty if the questions asked are not truly answered; and if such ship has entered such waters "for any purpose not permitted by treaty or convention or by law of the United Kingdom or of Canada, for the time being in force, such ship, vessel, or boat and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited."

It has been pointed out in my note to Lord Idlesleigh, above mentioned, that the 3-mile limit referred to in this act is claimed by the Canadian Government to include considerable portions of the high seas, such as the Bay of Fundy, the Bay of Chaleur, and similar waters, by drawing the line from headland to headland, and that American fishermen had been excluded from those waters accordingly.

It has been seen also that the term "any purpose not permitted by treaty" is held by that Government to comprehend every possible act of human intercourse, except only the four purposes named in the treaty—shelter, repairs, wood, and water.

Under the provisions of the recent act, therefore, and the Canadian interpretation of the treaty, any American fishing vessel that may venture into a Canadian harbor, or may have occasion to pass through the very extensive waters thus comprehended, may be seized at the discretion of any one of numerous subordinate officers, carried into port, subjected to search and the examination of her master upon oath, her voyage broken up, and the vessel and cargo confiscated, if it shall be determined by the local authorities that she has ever even posted or received a letter or landed a passenger in any part of Her Majesty's dominions in America.

And it is publicly announced in Canada that a larger fleet of cruisers is being prepared by the authorities, and that greater vigilance will be exerted on their part in the next fishing season than in the last.

It is in the act to which the one above referred to is an amendment that is found the provision to which I drew attention in a note to Lord Idlesleigh of December 2, 1886, by which it is enacted that in case a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall be upon the owner or claimant.

In his reply to that note of January 11, 1887, his lordship intimates that this provision is intended only to impose upon a person claiming a license the burden of proving it. But a reference to the act shows that such is by no means the restriction of the enactment. It refers in the broadest and clearest terms to any seizure that is made under the provisions of the act, which covers the whole subject of protection against illegal fishing; and it applies not only to the proof of a license to fish, but to all questions of fact whatever, necessary to a determination as to the legality of a seizure or the authority of the person making it.

It is quite unnecessary to point out what grave embarrassments may arise in the relations between the United States and Great Britain under such administration as is reasonably to be expected of the extraordinary provisions of this act and its amendment, upon which it is not important at this time further to comment.

It will be for Her Majesty's Government to determine how far its sanction and support will be given to further proceedings, such as the United States Government have now repeatedly complained of and have just ground to apprehend may be continued by the Canadian authorities.

It was with the earnest desire of obviating the impending difficulty, and of preventing collisions and dispute until such time as a permanent understanding between the two Governments could be reached, that I suggested, on the part of the United States, in my note to Lord Idlesleigh of September 11, 1886, that an ad interim construction of the terms of the treaty might be agreed on, to be carried out by instructions to be given on both sides without prejudice to the ultimate claims of either, and terminable at the pleasure of either. In an interview I had the honor to have with his lordship, in which this suggestion was discussed, I derived the impression that he regarded it with favor. An outline of such an arrangement was therefore subsequently prepared by the United States Government, which, at the request of Lord Iddesleigh, was submitted to him.

But I observe, with some surprise, that in his note of November 30, last, his lordship refers to that proposal made in my note of 11th September, as a proposition that Her Majesty's Government "should temporarily abandon the exercise of the treaty rights which they claim and which they conceive to be indisputable."

In view of the very grave questions that exist as to the extent of those rights, in respect to which the views of the United States Government differ so widely from those insisted upon by Her Majesty's Government, it does not seem to me an unreasonable proposal that the two Governments, by a temporary and mutual concession, without prejudice, should endeavor to reach some middle ground of ad interim construction, by which existing friendly relations might be preserved, until some permanent treaty arrangements could be made.

The reasons why a revision of the treaty of 1818 can not now, in the opinion of the United States Government, be hopefully undertaken, and which are set forth in my note to Lord Iddesleigh of September 11, have increased in force since that note was written.

I again respectfully commend the proposal above mentioned to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, etc.,

E. J. PHELPS.

SIR: I received on the 29th ultimo a reply* from the British minister at this capital to my notes to him on the 19th and 20th of October last, relative to the cases of the American fishing vessels Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele.

The note of Sir Lionel West serves only to inclose the communication of the Marquis of Lansdowne to Mr. Stanhope. Whilst the letter of Lord Lansdowne proceeds upon the assumption of grounds never accepted by this Government as the basis of discussion of the rights of our fishermen, and fails to admit the obvious and essential right of American fishermen to resort for purposes not abusive of the ancient privileges guaranteed by the treaty of 1818, in the Canadian bays and harbors, yet I am glad to see that the tone of his discussion indicates the growth of a disposition to consider the case of the American fishermen in a more friendly light than heretofore in the discussions of the past season.

The letters will be communicated to Congress as supplementary to the information heretofore laid before them by the President.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, February 8, 1837.

SIR: I have to acknowledge your dispatch of the 27th ultimo, No. 423, which was accompanied by a copy of the note to you of the late Lord Idesleigh, under date of December 16, 1836, and also one from Sir Julian Pauncefote, dated January 14, 1837, and also a copy of your note to the Marquis of Salisbury under date of January 26 ultimo.

I desire to express my entire satisfaction with the position correctly assumed and admirably and logically sustained by you in this relation.

Your telegrams of the 5th instant and of yesterday, with reference to the same question, have been received.

As part of the general case, and as bearing with unusual clearness upon the Canadian claims of construction of the convention of 1818, I transmit herewith copies of a note† from Sir Lionel West, dated the 28th ultimo, inclosing a dispatch from Lord Lansdowne, governor-general of Canada, to Mr. Stanhope, dated November 9, 1836, which is accompanied by reports of the committee of the privy council for Canada, and of Mr. Thompson, the minister of justice at Ottawa.

It may be noted that this reply of the British minister at this capital to my note to him of May 20, 1836, is dated on the 28th ultimo, giving some eight months for the completion of the circuit of correspondence.

At page 15 of the printed inclosure and in the last paragraph will be found the explicit avowal of claim by the Canadian Government to employ the convention of 1818 as an instrument of interference with the exercise of open-sea fishing by citizens of the United States, and to give it such a construction as will enable the fishermen of the provinces better to compete at less "disadvantage in the markets of the United States" in the pursuit of the deep-sea fisheries.

At the outset of this discussion, in my note to Sir Lionel West, of May 10, 1886, I said :

The question, therefore, arises whether such a construction is admissible as would convert the treaty of 1818 from being an instrumentality for the protection of the in-shore fisheries along the described parts of the British American coasts into a pretext or means of obstructing the business of deep-sea fishing by citizens of the United States, and of interrupting and destroying the commercial intercourse that since the treaty of 1818, and independent of any treaty whatever, has grown up and now exists under the concurrent and friendly laws and mercantile regulations of the respective countries.

When I wrote this I hardly expected that the motives I suggested, rather than imputed, would be admitted by the authorities of the provinces, and was entirely unprepared for a distinct avowal thereof, not only as regards the obstruction of deep-sea fishing operations by our fishermen, but also in respect of their independent commercial intercourse, yet it will be seen that the Canadian minister of justice avers that it is "not prejudicial" to the interests of the provinces "that United States fishermen should be permitted to come into their harbors on any pretext."

The correspondence now sent to you, together with others relating to the same subject that has taken place since the President's message of December 8, communicating the same to Congress, will be laid before Congress without delay, and will assist the two houses materially in the legislation proposed for the security of the rights of American fishing vessels under treaty and international law and comity.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, for your information, an extract from the report contained in yesterday's Times of the proceedings in Parliament on the 28th February, embodying the answer made by Sir James Ferguson, under secretary of state for foreign affairs, to a question put to him by Dr. Tanner in reference to the proposed retaliatory measures against Canada.

I deem it proper to add that Mr. George W. Smalley, the well-known correspondent of the New York Tribune, has informed me of a conversation which he had recently with the same functionary, and in the course of which Sir James Ferguson assured him that the Government's late dispatches from Canada on the subject of the fisheries had been of a very conciliatory nature, and that a modus vivendi would very shortly be proposed to you by the British minister at Washington, which Her Majesty's Government had reason to hope would be satisfactory to the United States.

I have, etc.,

HENRY WHITE.

NORTH AMERICAN FISHERIES.

Dr. TANNER asked the under secretary for foreign affairs whether his attention had been drawn to the following cablegram—"New York February 24. A convention of smack-owners and others connected with the fishing interests has met at Gloucester, Mass., and adopted resolutions in favor of retaliatory measures against Canada." (REUTER)—and whether any measures were being taken by the Government to reconcile the differences existing between the United States of America and Great Britain on this fishery question.

Sir J. FERGUSON. I am aware of the paragraph quoted by the honorable member, and of other news showing the strong feeling entertained in the United States in regard to the Canadian fishery question. Her Majesty's Government are giving the subject the earnest attention which the importance of the matter requires. (From The Times, March 1, 1887.)

[Public—No. 125.]

AN ACT to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels, in certain cases, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that American fishing vessels or American fishermen, visiting or being in the waters or at any ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied or abridged in the enjoyment of any rights secured to them by treaty or law, or are or then lately have [been] unjustly vexed or harassed in the enjoyment of such rights, or subjected to unreasonable restrictions, regulations, or requirements in respect of such rights; or otherwise unjustly vexed or harassed in said waters, ports, or places; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any such fishing vessels or fishermen, having a permit under the laws of the United States to touch and trade at any port or ports, place or places, in the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied the privilege of entering such port or ports, place or places in the same manner and under the same regulations as may exist therein applicable to trading vessels of the most favored nation, or shall be unjustly vexed or harassed in respect thereof, or otherwise be unjustly vexed or harassed therein, or shall be prevented from purchasing such supplies as may there be lawfully sold to trading vessels of the most favored nation; or whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that any other vessels of the United States, their masters or crews, so arriving at or being in such British waters or ports or places of the British dominions of North America, are or then lately have been denied any of the privileges therein accorded to the vessels, their masters or crews, of the most favored nation, or unjustly vexed or harassed in respect of the same, or unjustly vexed or harassed therein, by the authorities thereof, then, and in either or all of such cases, it shall be lawful, and it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, in his discretion, by proclamation to that effect, to deny vessels, their masters and crews, of the British dominions of North America, any entrance into the waters, ports, or places of, or within the United States (with such exceptions in regard to vessels in distress, stress of weather, or needing supplies as to the President shall seem proper), whether such vessels shall have come directly from said dominions on such destined voyage or by way of some port or place in such destined voyage elsewhere; and also, to deny entry into any port or place of the United States of fresh fish or salt fish or any other product of said dominions, or other goods coming from said dominions to the United States. The President may, in his discretion, apply such proclamation to any part or to all of the foregoing-named subjects, and may revoke, qualify, limit, and renew such proclamation from time to time as he may deem necessary to the full and just execution of the purposes of this act. Every violation of any such proclamation, or any part thereof, is hereby declared illegal, and all vessels and goods so coming or being within the waters, ports, or places of the United States contrary to such proclamation shall be forfeited to the United States; and such forfeiture shall be enforced and proceeded upon in the same manner and with the same effect as in the case of vessels or goods whose importation or coming to or being in the waters or ports of the United States contrary to law may now be enforced and proceeded upon. Every person who shall violate any of the provisions of this act, or such proclamation of the President made in pursuance hereof, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, or by both said punishments, in the discretion of the court.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith for your information copies of questions asked in the House of Commons yesterday and the day before with regard to our difficulty with Canada respecting the fisheries, together with the answers made to the same by the under secretary of state for foreign affairs.

NORTH AMERICAN FISHERIES.

Mr. GOURLEY asked the under secretary for foreign affairs whether he could inform the House of the nature of the dispatch received from the Dominion Government suggesting a modus vivendi for a settlement of the Anglo-American fisheries dispute, and when he anticipated that further promised correspondence would be in the hands of members; and whether the prohibition of the sale of bait to United States fishermen in Newfoundland (while permitted to French fishermen) was in harmony with "the most favored nation" clause of foreign treaties.

Sir J. FERGUSON. Her Majesty's Government will be desirous of informing the House of the course of negotiations with the Government of the United States upon the fisheries dispute as soon as possible. I hope to lay on the table the dispatch now being addressed to the United States Government before the Easter recess. I hope

House will excuse me from entering upon the questions affecting the Newfoundland fisheries in a fragmentary manner. Her Majesty's Government will be careful to observe their international obligations, while having due regard to the interests of Her Majesty's subjects. (From the Times, March 22, 1887.)

THE CANADIAN FISHERIES DISPUTE.

Mr. GOURLEY asked the under secretary of state of foreign affairs whether there was any truth in the statement that the Canadian Government is negotiating for the purchase of armed cruisers for the purpose of enforcing the Anglo-American Fisheries Convention of 1818, as interpreted by the Dominion Government; and, if so, whether the proposed proceedings have the sanction of Her Majesty's Government.

Sir J. FERGUSSON. I only saw the question on entering the House, and I beg to submit to the House that a somewhat longer notice of such questions should be given than even one night. [Hear!] No information on the subject has reached the foreign office, and the secretary of state for the colonies informs me that he has not heard of it. I may add that the purchase of cruisers is a matter within the discretion of the Canadian Government. (From the Times, March 23, 1887.)

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. White.

FOREIGN OFFICE, March 24, 1887.

SIR: In a note of the 3d December last, addressed to my predecessor, Mr. Phelps was good enough to transmit a copy of a dispatch from Mr. Bayard, dated the 15th of the preceding month, together with an outline of a proposed ad interim arrangement "for the settlement of all questions in dispute in relation to the fisheries on the northeastern coasts of British North America."

Her Majesty's Government have given their most careful consideration to that communication, and it has also received the fullest examination at the hands of the Canadian Government, who entirely share the satisfaction felt by Her Majesty's Government at any indication on the part of that of the United States of a disposition to make arrangements which might tend to put the affairs of the two countries on a basis more free from controversy and misunderstanding than unfortunately exists at present. The Canadian Government, however, deprecate several passages in Mr. Bayard's dispatch which attribute unfriendly motives to their proceedings, and in which the character and scope of the measures they have taken to enforce the terms of the convention of 1818 are, as they believe, entirely misapprehended.

They insist that nothing has been done on the part of the Canadian authorities since the termination of the Treaty of Washington in any such spirit as that which Mr. Bayard condemns, and that all that has been done with a view to the protection of the Canadian fisheries has been simply for the purpose of guarding the rights guaranteed to the people of Canada by the convention of 1818, and of enforcing the statutes of Great Britain and of Canada in relation to the fisheries. They maintain that such statutes are clearly within the powers of the respective Parliaments by which they were passed, and are in conformity with the convention of 1818, especially in view of the passage of the convention which provides that the American fishermen shall be under such restrictions as shall be necessary to prevent them from abusing the privileges thereby reserved to them.

There is a passage in Mr. Bayard's dispatch to which they have particularly called the attention of Her Majesty's Government. It is the following:

"The numerous seizures made have been of vessels quietly at anchor in established ports of entry, under charges which up to this day have not been particularized sufficiently to allow of intelligent defense; not one has been condemned after trial and hearing, but many have been fined, without hearing or judgment, for technical violation of alleged commercial regulations, although all commercial privileges have been simultaneously denied to them."

In relation to this paragraph the Canadian Government observe that the seizures of which Mr. Bayard complains have been made upon grounds which have been distinctly and unequivocally stated in every case; that, although the nature of the charges has been invariably specified and duly announced, those charges have not in any case been answered; that ample opportunity has in every case been afforded for a defense to be submitted to the executive authorities, but that no defense has been offered beyond the mere denial of the right of the Canadian Government; that the courts of the various provinces have been open to the parties said to have been aggrieved, but that not one of them has resorted to those courts for redress. To this it is added that the illegal acts which are characterized by Mr. Bayard as "technical violations of alleged commercial regulations," involved breaches, in most of the cases not denied by the persons who had committed them, of established commercial regulations which, far from being specially directed or enforced against citizens of the United States, are obligatory upon all vessels (including those of Canada herself) which resort to the harbors of the British North American coast.

I have thought it right, in justice to the Canadian Government, to embody in this note almost in their own terms their refutation of the charges brought against them by Mr. Bayard; but I would prefer not to dwell on this part of the controversy, but to proceed at once to the consideration of the six articles of Mr. Bayard's memorandum in which the proposals of your Government are embodied.

Mr. Bayard states that he is "encouraged in the expectation that the propositions embodied in the memorandum will be acceptable to Her Majesty's Government, because, in the month of April, 1866, Mr. Seward, then Secretary of State, sent forward to Mr. Adams, at that time United States minister in London, the draft of a protocol which, in substance, coincides with the first article of the proposal now submitted."

Article 1 of the memorandum no doubt to some extent resembles the draft protocol submitted in 1866 by Mr. Adams to Lord Clarendon, of which I inclose a copy for convenience of reference), but it contains some important departures from its terms.

Nevertheless, the article comprises the elements of a possible accord, and if it stood alone I have little doubt that it might be so modeled, with the concurrence of your Government, as to present an acceptable basis of negotiation to both parties. But, unfortunately, it is followed by other articles which, in the view of Her Majesty's Government and that of Canada, would give rise to endless and unprofitable discussion, and which, if retained, would be fatal to the prospect of any satisfactory arrangement, inasmuch as they appear as a whole to be based on the assumption that upon the most important points in the controversy the views entertained by Her Majesty's Government and that of Canada are wrong, and those of the United States Government are right, and to imply an admission by Her Majesty's Government and that of Canada that such assumption is well founded.

I should extend the present note to an undue length were I to attempt to discuss in it each of the articles of Mr. Bayard's memorandum, and to explain the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government feel compelled to take exception to them. I have therefore thought it more convenient to do so in the form of a counter-memorandum, which I have the honor to inclose, and in which will be found, in parallel columns, the articles of Mr. Bayard's memorandum, and the observations of Her Majesty's Government thereon.

Although, as you will perceive on a perusal of those observations, the proposal of your Government as it now stands is not one which could be accepted by Her Majesty's Government, still Her Majesty's Government are glad to think that the fact of such a proposal having been made affords an opportunity which, up to the present time, had not been offered for an amicable comparison of the views entertained by the respective Governments.

The main principle of that proposal is that a mixed commission should be appointed for the purpose of determining the limits of those territorial waters within which, subject to the stipulations of the convention of 1818, the exclusive right of fishing belongs to Great Britain.

Her Majesty's Government cordially agree with your Government in believing that a determination of these limits would, whatever may be the future commercial relations between Canada and the United States, either in respect of the fishing industry or in regard to the interchange of other commodities, be extremely desirable, and they will be found ready to co-operate with your Government in effecting such a settlement.

They are of opinion that Mr. Bayard was justified in reverting to the precedent afforded by the negotiations which took place upon this subject between Great Britain and the United States after the expiration of the reciprocity treaty of 1854, and they concur with him in believing that the draft protocol communicated by Mr. Adams in 1866 to the Earl of Clarendon affords a valuable indication of the lines upon which a negotiation directed to the same points might now be allowed to proceed.

Mr. Bayard has himself pointed out that its concluding paragraph, to which Lord Clarendon emphatically objected, is not contained in the first article of the memorandum now forwarded by him; but he appears to have lost sight of the fact that the remaining articles of that memorandum contain stipulations not less open to objection, and calculated to affect even more disadvantageously the permanent interests of the Dominion in the fisheries adjacent to its coasts.

There can be no objection on the part of Her Majesty's Government to the appointment of a mixed commission, whose duty it would be to consider and report upon the matters referred to in the three first articles of the draft protocol communicated to the Earl of Clarendon by Mr. Adams in 1866.

Should a commission instructed to deal with these subjects be appointed at an early date, the result of its investigations might be reported to the Governments affected without much loss of time. Pending the termination of the questions which it would discuss, it would be indispensable that United States fishing vessels entering Canadian bays and harbors should govern themselves not only according to the terms of the convention of 1818, but by the regulations to which they, in common with other vessels, are subject while within such waters.

Her Majesty's Government, however, have no doubt that every effort will be made to enforce those regulations in such a manner as to cause the smallest amount of inconvenience to fishing vessels entering Canadian ports under stress of weather, or for any other legitimate purpose.

But there is another course which Her Majesty's Government are inclined to propose, and which, in their opinion, would afford a temporary solution of the controversy equally creditable to both parties.

Her Majesty's Government have never been informed of the reasons which induced the Government of the United States to denounce the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, but they have understood that the adoption of that course was in a great degree the result of a feeling of disappointment at the Halifax award, under which the United States were called upon to pay the sum of 1,100,000*l.*, being the estimated value of the benefits which would accrue to them, in excess of those which would be derived by Canada and Newfoundland from the operation of the fishery articles of the treaty.

Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Canada, in proof of their earnest desire to treat the question in a spirit of liberality and friendship, are now willing to revert for the coming fishing season, and, if necessary, for a further term, to the condition of things existing under the treaty of Washington, without any suggestion of pecuniary indemnity.

This is a proposal which, I trust, will commend itself to your Government as being based on that spirit of generosity and good will which should animate two great and kindred nations, whose common origin, language, and institutions constitute as many bonds of amity and concord.

I have, etc.,

Draft protocol communicated by Mr. Adams to the Earl of Clarendon in 1866.

Whereas in the first article of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, concluded and signed in London on the 26th October, 1818, it was declared that—

“The United States hereby renounce, for ever, any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty’s dominions in America, not included within certain limits heretofore mentioned;”

And whereas differences have arisen in regard to the extent of the above-mentioned renunciation, the Government of the United States and Her Majesty the Queen or Great Britain, being equally desirous of avoiding further misunderstanding, have agreed to appoint, and do hereby authorize the appointment, of a mixed commission for the following purposes, namely:

(1) To agree upon and define, by a series of lines, the limits which shall separate the exclusive from the common right of fishery, on the coasts and in the seas adjacent, of the British North American colonies, in conformity with the first article of the convention of 1818. The said lines to be regularly numbered, duly described, and also clearly marked on charts prepared in duplicate for the purpose.

(2) To agree upon and establish such regulations as may be necessary and proper to secure to the fishermen of the United States the privilege of entering bays and harbors for the purpose of shelter; and of repairing damages therein; of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water; and to agree upon and establish such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent the abuse of the privilege reserved by said convention to fishermen of the United States.

(3) To agree upon and recommend the penalties to be adjudged, and such proceedings and jurisdiction as may be necessary to secure a speedy trial and judgment with as little expense as possible, for the violation of rights and the transgression of the limits and restrictions which may be hereby adopted.

Provided, however, that the limits, restrictions, and regulations which may be agreed upon by the said commission shall not be final, nor have any effect, until so jointly confirmed and declared by the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, either by treaty or by laws mutually acknowledged and accepted by the President of the United States, by and with the consent of the Senate, and by Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain.

Pending a different arrangement on the subject, the United States Government engages to give all proper orders to officers in its employment; and Her Britannic Majesty’s Government engages to instruct the proper colonial or other British officers to abstain from hostile acts against British and United States fishermen respectively.

But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them;" and whereas differences have arisen in regard to the extent of the above-mentioned renunciation, the Government of the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, being equally desirous of avoiding further misunderstanding, agree to appoint a mixed commission for the following purposes, namely:

article, are hereby agreed to be taken to be such harbors as are 10, or less than 10, miles in width, and the distance of 3 marine miles from such bays and harbors shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay or harbor in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles."

This provision would involve a surrender of fishing rights which have always been regarded as the exclusive property of Canada, and would make common fishing-grounds of territorial waters which, by the law of nations, have been invariably regarded both in Great Britain and the United States as belonging to the adjacent country. In the case, for instance, of the Bale des Chaleurs, a peculiarly well-marked and almost land-locked indentation of the Canadian coast, the 10-mile line would be drawn from points in the heart of Canadian territory, and almost 70 miles distance from the natural entrance or mouth of the bay. This would be done in spite of the fact that, both by Imperial legislation and by judicial interpretation, this bay has been declared to form a part of the territory of Canada. (See Imperial Statute 14 and 15 Vict., cap. 63; and Mout v. McPhee, 5 Sup. Court of Canada Reports, p. 66.)

The convention with France in 1839, and similar conventions with other European Powers, form no precedents for the adoption of a 10-mile limit. Those conventions were doubtless passed with a view to the geographical peculiarities of the coast to which they related. They had for their object the definition of boundary-lines which, owing to the configuration of the coast, perhaps could not readily be settled by reference to the law of nations, and involve other conditions which are inapplicable to the territorial waters of Canada.

This is shown by the fact that in the French convention the whole of the oyster-beds in Granville Bay, otherwise called the Bay of Cancale, the entrance of which exceeds 10 miles in width, were regarded as French, and the enjoyment of them is reserved to the local fishermen.

A reference to the action of the United States Government, and to the admission made by their statesmen in regard to bays on the American coasts, strengthens this view; and the case of the English ship Grange shows that the Government of the United States in 1793 claimed Delaware Bay as being within territorial waters.

Mr. Bayard contends that the rule which he asks to have set up was adopted by the Empire of the commission appointed under the convention of 1853 in the case of the United States fishing-schooner Washington that it was by him applied to the Bay of Fundy, and that it is for this reason applicable to other Canadian bays.

such bays and harbors shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay or harbor, in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles, the said lines to be regularly numbered, duly described, and also clearly marked on charts prepared in duplicate for the purpose.

(2) To agree upon and establish such regulations as may be necessary and proper to secure to the fishermen of the United States the privilege of entering bays and harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and to agree upon and establish such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent the abuse of the privilege reserved by said convention to the fishermen of the United States.

(3) To agree upon and recommend the penalties to be adjudged, and such proceedings and jurisdiction as may be necessary to secure a speedy trial and judgment, with as little expense as possible, for the violators of rights and the transgressors of the limits and restrictions which may be hereby adopted:

Provided, however, That the limits, restrictions, and regulations which may be agreed upon by the said commission shall not be final, nor have any effect, until so jointly confirmed and declared by the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, either by treaty or by laws mutually acknowledged.

ARTICLE II.

Pending a definitive arrangement on the subject, Her Britannic Majesty's Government agree to instruct the proper colonial and other British officers to abstain from seizing or molesting fishing vessels of the United States unless they are found within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, and harbors of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, there fishing, or to have been fishing or preparing to fish within those limits, not included within the limits within which, under the treaty of 1818, the fishermen of the United States continue to retain a common right of fishery with Her Britannic Majesty's subjects.

ARTICLE III.

For the purpose of executing Article I of the convention of 1818, the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty hereby agree to send each to the Gulf of St. Lawrence a national vessel, and also one each to cruise during the fishing season on the

It is submitted, however, that as one of the headlands of the Bay of Fundy is in the territory of the United States any rules of international law applicable to that bay are not therefore equally applicable to other bays the headlands of which are both within the territory of the same power.

The second paragraph of the first article does not incorporate the exact language of the convention of 1818. For instance, the words, "and for no other purpose whatever," should be inserted after the mention of the purposes for which vessels may enter Canadian waters, and after the words, "as may be necessary to prevent," should be inserted, "their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner abusing the privileges reserved," etc.

To make the language conform correctly to the convention of 1818, several other verbal alterations, which need not be enumerated here, would be necessary.

This article would suspend the operation of the statutes of Great Britain and of Canada, and of the provinces now constituting Canada, not only as to the various offenses connected with fishing, but as to customs, harbors, and shipping, and would give to the fishing vessels of the United States privileges in Canadian ports which are not enjoyed by vessels of any other class or of any other nation. Such vessels would, for example, be free from the duty of reporting at the customs on entering a Canadian harbor, and no safeguard could be adopted to prevent infraction of the customs laws by any vessel asserting the character of a fishing vessel of the United States.

Instead of allowing to such vessels merely the restricted privileges reserved by the convention of 1818, it would give them greater privileges than are enjoyed at the present time by any vessels in any part of the world.

This article would deprive the courts in Canada of their jurisdiction, and would vest that jurisdiction in a tribunal not bound by legal principles, but clothed with supreme authority to decide on most important rights of the Canadian people.

It would submit such rights to the ad-southern coasts of Nova Scotia. Whenever a fishing vessel of the United States shall be seized for violating the provisions of the aforesaid convention by fishing or preparing to fish within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, and harbors of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions included within the limits within which fishing is by the terms of the said convention renounced, such vessel shall forthwith be reported to the officer in command of one of the said national vessels, who, in conjunction with the officer in command of another of said vessels of different nationality, shall hear and examine into the facts of the case. Should the said commanding officers be of opinion that the charge is not sustained, the vessel shall be released. But if they should be of opinion that the vessel should be subjected to a judicial examination, she shall forthwith be sent for trial before the vice-admiralty court at Halifax. If, however, the said commanding officers should differ in opinion, they shall name some third person: to act as umpire between them, and should they be unable to agree upon the name of such third person, they shall each name a person, and it shall be determined by lot which of the two persons so named shall be the umpire.

ARTICLE IV.

The fishing vessels of the United States shall have in the established ports of entry of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America the same commercial privileges as other vessels of the United States, including the purchase of bait and other supplies; and such privileges shall be exercised subject to the same rules and regulations and payment of the same port charges as are prescribed for other vessels of the United States.

ARTICLE V.

The Government of Her Britannic Majesty agree to release all United States fishing vessels now under seizure for failing to report at custom-houses when seeking shelter, repairs, or supplies, and to refund all fines exacted for such failure to report. And the high contracting parties agree to appoint a joint commission to asjudication of two naval officers, one of them belonging to a foreign country, who, if they should disagree and be unable to choose an umpire, must refer the final decision of the great interests which might be at stake to some person chosen by lot.

If a vessel charged with infraction of Canadian fishing rights should be thought worthy of being subjected to a "judicial examination," she would be sent to the vice-admiralty court at Halifax, but there would be no redress, no appeal, and no reference to any tribunal if the naval officers should think proper to release her.

It should, however, be observed that the limitation in the second sentence of this article of the violations of the convention which are to render a vessel liable to seizure could not be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

For these reasons, the article in the form proposed is inadmissible, but Her Majesty's Government are not indisposed to agree to the principle of a joint inquiry by the naval officers of the two countries in the first instance, the vessel to be sent for trial at Halifax if the naval officers do not agree that she should be released. They fear, however, that there would be serious practical difficulties in giving effect to this arrangement, owing to the great length of coast and the delays which must in consequence be frequent in securing the presence at the same time and place of the naval officers of both Powers.

This article is also open to grave objection. It proposes to give the United States fishing vessels the same commercial privileges as those to which other vessels of the United States are entitled, although such privileges are expressly renounced by the convention of 1818 on behalf of fishing vessels, which were thereafter to be denied the right of access to Canadian waters for any purpose whatever, except those of shelter, repairs, and the purchase of wood and water. It has frequently been pointed out that an attempt was made, during the negotiations which preceded the convention of 1818, to obtain for the fishermen of the United States the right of obtaining bait in Canadian waters, and that this attempt was successfully resisted. In spite of this fact, it is proposed, under this article, to declare that the convention of 1818 gave that privilege, as well as the privilege of purchasing other supplies in the harbors of the Dominion.

By this article it is proposed to give retrospective effect to the unjustified interpretation sought to be placed on the convention by the last preceding article.

It is assumed, without discussion, that all United States fishing vessels which have been seized since the expiration of the treaty of Washington have been illegally seized leaving as the only question still open for consideration the amount of the damages for which the Canadian authorities are liable.

Such a proposal appears to Her Majesty's Government quite inadmissible.

ARTICLE VI.

The Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty agree to give concurrent notification and warning of Canadian customs regulations, and the United States agree to admonish its fishermen to comply with them and co-operate in securing their enforcement.

This article calls for no remark.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith two copies of a parliamentary paper* (United States, No. 2, 1887) just issued by the British Government and containing further correspondence on the subject of the fisheries, together with a leading article from the Times of 21st instant in reference thereto, and the correction I caused to be inserted in today's issue of that newspaper of one of its statements.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 501. — From the Times, Thursday, April 21, 1887.]

The Canadian fisheries question is not finally settled; in fact, that much to be desired end seems far off. The further official correspondence published yesterday shows that diplomacy has moved without advancing much. Who is responsible? Not, in the main, either the Home Government or the Dominion Government. We must do them the justice to own that they have not been exacting or punctilious. The former have made overtures of a fair and even generous nature. Their fault, if any, has been one not unknown in negotiating with astute diplomatists; they have, perhaps, undervalued the advantage of standing still and waiting to see whether the other side moves. Last December the American minister communicated to Lord Iddesleigh a proposal for an ad interim arrangement, the chief feature of which was the establishment of a mixed commission in order to "separate the exclusive from the common right of fishing on the coasts and in the adjacent waters of the British North American colonies;" the vexed question of the headlands to be settled by laying it down that the bays and harbors into which entrance is not generally permitted are "to be taken to be such bays and harbors as are 10 or less than 10 miles in width, and the distance of 3 marine miles from such bays and harbors, to be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay or harbor in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles." The commissioners would also be empowered to make regulations to secure the right of entry of fishermen of the United States into bays and harbors for the purpose of safety and the like, and also to make arrangements for the speedy trial of offenders. In the mean time no seizures would take place; vessels of war of this country and the United States would act as police, and American fishing vessels would have the same commercial privileges, including the purchase of bait and other supplies, as other vessels of the United States. This proposal found no favor in Canada or here. Lord Landsdowne's advisers pointed out that it was open to serious objections. The proposed mode of measuring bays and harbors and the suggested 3-mile line would involve an abandonment by Canada of exclusive rights which are indisputably hers; for example, the land-locked Baie des Chaleurs, which by Imperial statute and judicial construction has been declared to be part of the territory of Canada, would be dealt with as if it were part of the open sea. The proposal as to the provisional position of fishing vessels is equivalent to a request that Canada should give up one of the express benefits of the treaty of 1818. Lord Salisbury was equally unsparing in his criticism of the ad interim proposal. As he pointed out, one of the suggestions was to "give to fishing vessels of the United States privileges in Canadian ports which are not enjoyed by vessels of any other class or any other nation."

But very wisely too much has not been made of these objections. The matter has not ended there. The sooner this question is settled the better for all concerned, and the Government acted properly in allowing the door to remain open. "Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Canada," said Lord Salisbury in his dispatch of March 24, "in proof of the earnest desire to treat the question in a spirit of liberality and friendship, are now willing to revert for the coming fishing season, and, if necessary, for a further term, to the condition of things existing under the treaty of Washington, without any suggestion of indemnity"—that is, give for nothing for a season rights for which, under the Halifax award, made in accordance with the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, the American Government were called upon to pay £1,100,000. This may be scarcely business; it is generous almost to the extent of being quixotic, and to do more would be weakness. We are slow to believe that the American Government will refuse to take advantage of what can cost them nothing to accept. Besides, too, the English Government are ready to fall in with Mr. Bayard's capital proposal for the appointment of a mixed commission. As to that suggestion, which was urged in one of a series of valuable letters on this subject in our columns on February 19 last, Lord Salisbury says: "There can be no objection on the part of Her Majesty's Government to the appointment of a mixed commission, whose business it would be to consider and report upon the matters referred to in the three first articles of the draft protocol communicated to the Earl of Clarendon by Mr. Adams in 1866." Some sort of modus vivendi could surely be devised by a well-chosen, authoritative commission. Unfortunately, the longer such a question remains open, the more it loses its original simplicity and becomes perplexed by side issues. The more it is discussed the more diplomatists are embarrassed by propositions to which they or their predecessors stand committed. Insensibly the controversy becomes embittered, and retaliation is talked of. We find but too many illustrations of this deterioration in these dispatches. Perhaps the absence of an equitable temper may be detected in communications from this side of the Atlantic and from the Dominion. We, perhaps naturally, are more struck by the acrimony of the attacks by American diplomatists on the Canadian Government. In the very first communication from Mr. Phelps to the late Lord Idlesleigh he denounces, as "a violation of the principles of natural justice as well as those of the common law," the seizure of a fishing vessel for infringing the treaty of 1818 and certain custom-house regulations. He is particularly angry with the requirement by Canadian law that "the burden of proving the illegality shall be on the owner or claimant." That such provisions exist in almost all laws against smuggling is wholly overlooked. It is impossible not to mark the tendency to look at the question as if it were not one of construction of the treaty of 1818. We find reiterated complaints that "a treaty of friendship" is "tortured into a means of offense," that "existing regulations have been constricted with a technical strictness and enforced with a severity, in cases of inadvertent and accidental violation where no harm was done, which is both unusual and unnecessary." The House of Representatives took even higher ground, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs reported that the conduct of the local authorities in Canada "has been not only in violation of treaty stipulations and international comity, but, during the fishing season just passed, has been inhuman." The Committee of the Senate on Foreign Relations reported to much the same effect. "It is recommended," they said in their report, "that the President of the United States be invested with the power, and that it be made his duty, whenever he shall be satisfied that unjust, unfair, or unfriendly conduct is practiced by the British Government in respect of our citizens and their property within the ports or waters of British dominions in North America to deny to the subjects of that Government in British North America and their property, or to any class of them, such privileges in the waters and ports of the United States as he may think proper to name, and to suspend in respect of such vessels or classes of vessels, or such property or classes of property of the subjects of such Government the right of entering or being brought within the waters or ports of the United States." The result has been the passing of the retaliatory bill introduced in the Senate, which requires the President, when satisfied that American fishermen have been deprived of any right, or unjustly or vexatiously treated, to retaliate with like restrictions. This development of the controversy does not bode well for settlement. Politicians, if not diplomats, have lost sight of the originally simple issue, the meaning of a few words. But we do not despair of the matter being, even at this stage, amicably arranged, if only no further time is lost.

THE CANADIAN FISHERIES QUESTION.

We regret that by inadvertence it was stated in the Times of yesterday in a quotation from an official note of the American minister to Lord Addesleigh, dated December 2, 1886, that Mr. Phelps denounced "the seizure of a fishing vessel for infringing the treaty of 1818 and certain custom-house regulations" as "a violation of the principles of abstract justice, as well as those of the common law." It appears from the note in question that this language referred, not to a seizure of a fishing vessel, but to a provision in the act of the Canadian Parliament of May 22, 1868, which in legal effect casts upon the person accused of an offense the burden of proving his innocence.

DEAR SIR: I received the inclosed letter to-day and thought best to forward it to you for your perusal and advice. It is in regard to the seine belonging to the schooner Sarah H. Prior. The seine was lost off Malpeque and picked up by a British schooner and brought into Malpeque, where the Prior was lying. They refused to deliver it up after the captain of the Prior had offered to pay salvage on it. I sent you a sworn affidavit last November of the facts in the case. Please let me know when you think it best to enter a claim for damage. Hoping to hear from you at your earliest convenience,

I remain, etc.,

SOURIS, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND,

Messrs. P. H. PRIOR & SON,
Boston, Mass.:

SIRS: In October last Captain Wolf of the British schooner John M. Inglis delivered to me a wrecked seine which he had picked up at sea. It had the name "Sarah H. Prior" printed somewhere about it. As receiver of wrecks for this district I made the necessary advertisement here and at Ottawa, where the local department is, but before I could ascertain who the owner was winter had set in and nothing could be done.

I had the seine nicely salted and secured for the winter. It is now in as good condition as when it was brought here. I have now to ask if you are the real owners of this property, and if so, what disposition you wish me to make of it, whether you wish to pay the salvage, $25, and some other charges, and have the property shipped to you by steamer or have it kept here until your vessel calls. Something must be done with it soon. I have had it overhauled this spring, and it appears in good condition, except of course the tearing. The purseline, etc., are with it, and it should be worth more than the charges against it.

Will you kindly advise me by return mail what your wishes are in the matter, and oblige,

Yours, etc.

M. J. FOLEY,
Receiver of Wrecks.

Mr. Bayard to Mr. Prior.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 21, 1887:

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant in relation to the claim preferred by you because of the alleged refusal of the commander of the Canadian cruiser Critto to permit the restoration to your fishing vessel, the Sarah H. Prior, of a valuable seine lost at sea and carried into Malpeque by a Canadian vessel, has been received.

As you were informed, by my letter of January 28 last, your original complaint of December 28, 1886, with the accompanying affidavit of the captain and crew of the Sarah H. Prior purporting to set forth the facts of the case, was laid before Her Britannic Majesty's minister at this capital. My note and Sir Lionel West's acknowledgment thereof are printed on pages 7 and 8 of the inclosed executive document.

I am now in receipt of Sir Lionel's reply, covering an approved report of a committee of the Dominion privy council, of which a copy is inclosed for your information.

The question appears to have been one of compliance with the usual wreckage and salvage laws, and wholly disconnected from international right and duty.

The sworn statements of the master of the Sarah H. Prior as to the refusal of the commander of the Critto to permit the restoration of the seine are controverted.

It is alleged that, on the regular course of proceedings for the recovery of his property through the receiver of wrecks being pointed out to Captain McLaughlin, the latter "then said that as the seine was all torn to pieces, he would not bother himself about it."

It appears, from the letter addressed to you, May 2, by Mr. M. J. Foley, receiver of wrecks at Souris, Prince Edward Island, and which you send to me for my information, that the seine in question, after proper care during the winter, is still at your disposal on payment of the adjudged salvage, $25. This sum, it may be noted, is that which Captain McLaughlin offered in the first instance to pay to the master of the John Ingalls.

Inasmuch as the rights of salvage are private rights, to be settled in judicial forums, and as no obstacle now exists, or appears to have at any time existed, to the recovery of your lost property by institution of a suit in the usual form, I am unable to discover any connection between the subject-matter of your complaint and any treaty of the United States with Great Britain, or ground for Government interposition.

Wreck-master Foley's letter is herewith returned to you, a copy being retained on file with your letter.

I am, etc.,

No. 659 bis.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 12, 1887.

SIR: On March 24 last the Marquis of Salisbury made reply to your note to him of December 3, 1886, and communicated the views of the Canadian government upon the ad interim arrangement proposed by the Government of the United States, under date of the 15th of November preceding, for the settlement of the fishery disputes.

This reply of his lordship and the "observations" of the Canadian authorities upon the proposal for an arrangement were conveyed in Mr. White's dispatch of March 30, and received at this Department April 11 last, when it had my immediate consideration.

An answer was prepared forthwith to the note of his lordship, as well as to the "observations," and I now inclose two copies of the latter, which, for convenience and intelligibility, has been printed as a third parallel column to the original proposal and the Canadian "observations."

I am, etc.,

FISHERIES ARRANGEMENT PROPOSED BY UNITED STATES, WITH "OBSERVATIONS" OF BRITISH GOVERNMENT AND REPLY OF GOVERNMENT OF UNITED STATES.

Ad interim Arrangement proposed by the United States, Government.

Observations on Mr. Bayard's Memorandum.

Reply to "Observations" on Proposal.

ARTICLE I.

WHEREAS, in the 1st Article of the Convention between the United States and Great Britain, concluded and signed in London on the 20th October, 1818, it was agreed between the High Contracting Parties "that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of His Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbours, and creeks, from Mount Joly on the Southern coast of Labrador, to and through the Straits on Belle Isle, and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast,

THE most important departure in this Article from the Protocol of 1866 is the interpolation of the stipulation, "that the bays and harbours from which American vessels are in future to be excluded, save for the purposes for which entrance into bays and harbours is permitted by said Article, are hereby agreed to be taken to be such harbours as are 10, or less than 10, miles in width, and the distance of 3 marine miles from such bays and harbours shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay or harbour in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles."

This provision would involve a surrender of fishing rights which have always been regarded as the exclusive property of Canada, and would make common fishing grounds of the territorial waters which, by the law of nations, have been invariably

A prior agreement between the two Governments as to the proper definition of the "bays and harbours" from which American fishermen are hereafter to be excluded, would not only facilitate the labors of the proposed Commission, by materially assisting it in defining such bays and harbours, but would give to its action a finality that could not otherwise be expected. The width of ten miles was proposed, not only because it had been followed in Conventions between many other powers, but also because it was deemed reasonable and just in the present case; this Government recognizing the fact that, while it might have claimed a width of six miles as a basis of settlement, fishing within bays and harbours only slightly wider would be confined to areas so narrow as to render it practically valueless and almost necessarily expose the fishermen to constant danger of carrying their opera-without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company; and that the American fishermen shall also have liberty for ever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbours, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland, here above described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same, or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portions so settled without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground;" and was declared that "the United States hereby renounce for ever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbours of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits; provided, however, that the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbours for the purpose of shelter, and of repairing damages there-in, of purchasing wood, and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them;" and whereas differences have arisen in regard to the extent of the above-mentioned renunciation, the Government of the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, being equally desirous of avoiding further misunderstanding, agree to appoint a Mixed Commission for the following purposes, namely:

1. To agree upon and establish by a series of lines the limits which shall separate the exclusive from the common right of fishing on the coast and in the adjacent waters of the British North American Colonies, in conformity with the 1st Article of the Convention of 1818, except that the bays and harbours from which American fishermen are in the future to be excluded, save for the purposes for which regarded both in Great Britain and the United States as belonging to the adjacent country. In the case, for instance, of the Baie des Chaleurs, a peculiarly well-marked and almost land-locked indentation of the Canadian coast, the 10-mile line would be drawn from points in the heart of Canadian territory, and almost 70 miles distance from the natural entrance or mouth of the bay. This would be done in spite of the fact that, both by Imperial legislation and by judicial interpretation, this bay has been declared to form a part of the territory of Canada. (See Imperial Statute 14 & 15 Vict., cap. 63; and Mount v. McPhée, 5 Sup. Court of Canada Reports, p. 66.)

The Convention with France in 1839, and similar Conventions with other European Powers, form no precedents for the adoption of a 10-mile limit. Those Conventions were doubtless passed with a view to the geographical peculiarities of the coast to which they related. They had for their object the definition of the boundary-lines which, owing to the configuration of the coast, perhaps could not readily be settled by reference to the law of nations, and involve other conditions which are inapplicable to the territorial waters of Canada.

This is shown by the fact that in the French Convention the whole of the oyster-beds in Granville Bay, otherwise called the Bay of Cancale, the entrance of which exceeds 10 miles in width, were regarded as French, and the enjoyment of them is reserved to the local fishermen.

A reference to the action of the United States' Government, and to the admission made by their statesmen in regard [to] bays on the American coast, strengthens this view; and the case of the English ship "Grange" shows that the Government of the United States in 1793 claimed Delaware Bay as being within territorial waters.

Mr. Bayard contends that the rule which he asks to have set up was adopted by the Empire of the Commission appointed under the Convention of 1853 in the case of the United States'

tions into forbidden waters. A width of more than ten miles would give room for safe fishing more than three miles from either shore, and thus prevent the constant disputes which this Government's proposal, following the Conventions above noticed, was designed to avert.

It was not known to involve the surrender of rights "which had always been regarded as the exclusive property of Canada," or to "make common fishing ground of territorial waters, which, by the law of nations, have been invariably regarded, both in Great Britain and the United States, as belonging to the adjacent country."

The case of the Baie des Chaleurs, the only case cited in this relation, does not appear to sustain the "observations" above quoted. From 1854 until 1866 American fishermen were permitted free access to all territorial waters of the provinces under treaty stipulations. From 1866 until 1870 they enjoyed similar access under special licenses issued by the Canadian Government. In 1870 the license system was discontinued, and under date of May 14 of that year a draft of special instructions to officers in command of the marine police, to protect the in-shore fisheries, was submitted by Mr. P. Mitchell, Minister of Marine and Fisheries of the Dominion, to the Privy Council, and on the same day was approved. In that draft the width of ten miles, as now proposed by this Government, was laid down as the definition of the bays and harbours from which American fishermen were to be excluded; and in respect to the Bay des Chaleurs, it was directed that the officers mentioned should not admit American fishermen "inside of a line drawn across at that part of such bay where its width does not exceed ten miles." (See Seas. Pap., 1870; see also Appendix "A" to this Memorandum.) It is true that it was stated that these limits were "for the present to be exceptional." But they are irreconcilable with the supposition that the present proposal of this Government "would involve a surrender of fishing entrance into the bays and harbours is permitted by said Article, are hereby agreed to be taken to be such bays and harbours as are 10 or less than 10 miles in width, and the distance of 3 marine miles from such bays and harbours shall be measured from a straight line drawn across the bay or harbour, in the part nearest the entrance, at the first point where the width does not exceed 10 miles, the said lines to be regularly numbered, duly described, and also clearly marked on Charts prepared in duplicate for the purpose.

2. To agree upon and establish such Regulations as may be necessary and proper to accede to the fishermen of the United States the privilege of entering bays and harbours for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and to agree upon and establish such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent the abuse of the privilege reserved by said Convention to the fishermen of the United States.

3. To agree upon and recommend the penalties to be adjudged, and such proceedings and jurisdiction as may be necessary to secure a speedy trial and Judgment, with as little expense as possible, for the violators of rights and the transgressors of the limits and restrictions which may be hereby adopted.

Provided, however, that the limits, restrictions, and Regulations which may be agreed upon by the said Commission shall not be final, nor have any effect, until so jointly confirmed and declared by the United States and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, either by Treaty or by laws mutually acknowledged.

fishing-schooner "Washington," that it was by him applied to the Bay of Fundy, and that it is for this reason applicable to other Canadian bays.

It is submitted, however, that as one of the headlands of the Bay of Fundy is in the territory of the United States any rules of international law applicable to that bay are not therefore equally applicable to other bays the headlands of which are both within the territory of the same Power.

The second paragraph of the 1st Article does not incorporate the exact language of the Convention of 1818. For instance, the words, "and for no other purpose whatever," should be inserted after the mention of the purposes for which vessels may enter Canadian waters, and after the words, "as may be necessary to prevent," should be inserted, "their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any other manner abusing the privileges reserved," &c.

To make the language conform correctly to the Convention of 1818, several other verbal alterations, which need not be enumerated here, would be necessary.

"rights which have always been regarded as the exclusive property of Canada."

It is, however, to be observed that the instructions above referred to were not enforced, but were, at the request of Her Majesty's Government, amended, by confining the exercise of police jurisdiction to a distance of three miles from the coasts or from bays less than six miles in width. And in respect to the Bay des Chaleurs, it was ordered that American fishermen should not be interfered with unless they were found "within three miles of the shore. (Sess. Pap., Vol. IV, No. 4, 1871; see also Appendix "B.")

The final instructions of 1870, being thus approved and adopted, were reiterated by their re-issue in 1871. Such was the condition of things from the discontinuance of the Canadian license system, in 1870, until, by the Treaty of Washington, American fishermen again had access to the inshore fisheries.

As to the statute cited (14 and 15 Vict., cap. 63, August 7, 1851), it is only necessary to say that it can have no relevance to the present discussion, because it related exclusively to the settlement of disputed boundaries between the two British provinces of Canada and New Brunswick, and had no international aspect whatever; and the same may be said of the case cited, which was wholly domestic in its nature.

Excepting the Bay des Chaleurs, no case is adduced to show why the limit adopted in the Conventions regulating the fisheries in the British Channel and in the North Sea would not be equally applicable to the provinces. The coasts bordering on those waters contain numerous "bays" more than ten miles wide; and no other condition has been suggested to make the limit established by Great Britain and other powers as to those coasts "inapplicable" to the coasts of Canada.

The exception referred to (of the oyster beds in Granville Bay) from the ten-mile rule in the Conventions of 1839 and 1843, between Great Britain and France, is found, upon examination of the latter Convention, to be "estab-

and it is believed that the area of waters so excepted is scarcely 12 miles by 19. In this relation it may be instructive to note the terms of the Memorandum proposed for the Foreign Office in 1870, with reference to a Commission to settle the fishing limits on the coast of British North America. (Sess. Pap., 1871; see also Appendix 'C.')

The Bay des Chaleurs is 16½ miles wide at the mouth, measured from Birch Point to Point Macquereau; contains within its limits several other well-defined bays, distinguished by their respective names, and, according to the "observations," a distance of almost seventy miles inward may be traversed before reaching the ten mile line.

The Delaware Bay is 11½ miles wide at the mouth, 32 miles from which it narrows into the river of that name, and has always been held to be territorial waters, before and since the case of the "Grange"—an international case,—in 1793, down to the present time.

In delivering judgment in the case of the "Washington," the Umpire considered the headland theory and pronounced it "new doctrine." He noted among other facts that one of the headlands of the Bay of Fundy was in the United States, but did not place his decision on that ground. And immediately in the next case, that of the "Argus," heard by him and decided on the same day, he wholly discarded the headland theory and made an award in favor of the owners. The "Argus" was seized, not in the Bay of Fundy, but because (although more than three miles from land) she was found fishing within a line drawn from headland to head-land, from Cow Bay to Cape
North, on the northeast side of Cape Breton Island.

The language of the Convention of 1818 was not fully incorporated in the second paragraph of the 1st Article of the proposal, because that paragraph relates to regulations for the so-cure enjoyment of certain privileges expressly reserved. The words "and for no other purpose whatever" would in this relation be surplusage. There are no restrictions to prevent the abuse of the privileges referred to would necessarily be such as to prevent the "taking, drying, and curing" of fish. For these reasons the words referred to were not inserted, nor is the usefulness of their insertion apparent.

Ad interim Arrangement proposed by the United States' Government.

Observations on Mr. Bayard's Memorandum.

Reply to "Observations" on Proposal.

ARTICLE II.

Pending a definitive arrangement on the subject, Her Britannic Majesty's Government agree to instruct the proper Colonial and other British officers to abstain from seizing or molesting fishing vessels of the United States unless they are found within 3 marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, and harbours of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, there fishing, or to have been fishing or preparing to fish within those limits, not included within the limits within which, under the Treaty of 1818, the fishermen of the United States continue to retain a common right of fishery with Her Britannic Majesty's subjects.

This Article would suspend the operation of the Statutes of Great Britain and of Canada, and of the provinces now constituting Canada, not only as to the various offenses connected with fishing, but as to customs, harbours, and shipping, and would give to the fishing vessels of the United States privileges in Canadian ports which are not enjoyed by vessels of any other class, or of any other nation. Such vessels would, for example, be free from the duty of reporting at the Customs on entering a Canadian harbour, and no safeguard could be adopted to prevent infraction of the Customs Laws by any vessel asserting the character of a fishing vessel of the United States.

Instead of allowing to such vessels merely the restricted privileges reserved by the Convention of 1818, it would give them greater privileges than are enjoyed at the present time by any vessels in any part of the world.

ARTICLE III.

For the purpose of executing Article I of the Convention of 1818, the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty hereby agree to send each to the Gulf of St. Lawrence a national vessel, and also one each to cruise during the fishing season on the southern coasts of Nova Scotia. Whenever a fishing vessel of the United States shall be seized for

This Article would deprive the Courts in Canada of their jurisdiction, and would vest that jurisdiction in a Tribunal not bound by legal principles, but clothed with supreme authority to decide on most important rights of the Canadian people.

It would submit such rights to the adjudication of two naval officers, one of them belonging to a foreign country, who, if they

ARTICLE II.

The objections to this Article will, it is believed, be removed by a reference to Article VI, in which "the United States agrees to admonish its fishermen to comply" with Canadian customs regulations and to coöperate in securing their enforcement. Obedience by American fishing vessels to Canadian laws was believed and certainly was intended to be secured by this article. By the consolidation, however, of Articles II and VI the criticism would be fully met.

ARTICLE III.

As the chief object of this Article is not unacceptable to Her Majesty's Government—i. e., the establishment of a joint system of inquiry by naval officers of the two countries in the first instance—it is believed that the objections suggested may be removed by an enlargement of the list of enumerated offenses so as to include infractions of the regulations which may be estab-

Should the said commanding officers be of opinion that the charge is not sustained, the vessel shall be released. But if they should be of opinion that the vessel should be subjected to a judicial examination, she shall forthwith be sent for trial before the Vice-Admiralty Court at Halifax. If, however, the said commanding officers should differ in opinion, they shall name some third person to act as Umpire between them, and should they be unable to agree upon the name of such third person, they shall each name a person, and it shall be determined by lot which of the two persons so named shall be the Umpire.

ARTICLE IV.

The fishing vessels of the United States shall have in the established ports of entry of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions in America the same commercial privileges as other vessels of the United States, including the purchase of bait and other supplies; and such privileges shall be exercised subject to the same Rules and Regulations and payment of the same port charges as are pre-should disagree and be unable to choose an Umpire must refer the final decision of the great interests which might be at stake to some person chosen by lot.

If a vessel charged with infringement of Canadian fishing rights should be thought worthy of being subjected to a "judicial examination," she would be sent to the Vice-Admiralty Court at Halifax, but there would be no redress, no appeal, and no reference to any Tribunal if the naval officers should think proper to release her.

It should, however, be observed that the limitation in the second sentence of this Article of the violations of the Convention which are to render a vessel liable to seizure could not be accepted by Her Majesty's Government.

For these reasons, the Article in the form proposed is inadmissible, but Her Majesty's Government are not indisposed to agree to the principle of a joint inquiry by the naval officers of the two countries in the first instance, the vessel to be sent for trial at Halifax if the naval officers do not agree that she should be released.

They fear, however, that there would be serious practical difficulties in giving effect to this arrangement, owing to the great length of coast, and the delays, which must in consequence be frequent, in securing the presence at the same time and place of the naval officers of both Powers.

Reply to "Observations" on Propositional.

ARTICLE IV.

This Article is also open to grave objection. It proposes to give the United States fishing vessels the same commercial privileges as those to which other vessels of the United States are entitled, although such privileges are expressly renounced by the Convention of 1818 on behalf of fishing vessels, which were thereafter to be denied the right of access to Cana-

The Treaty of 1818 related solely to Fisheries. It was not a commercial Convention, and no commercial privileges were renounced by it. It contains no reference to "ports," of which, it is believed, the only ones then existing were Halifax, in Nova Scotia, and possibly one or two more in the other provinces; and these ports were not until long afterwards opened, by reciproscribed for other vessels of the United States.

dian waters for any purpose whatever, except those of shelter, repairs, and the purchase of wood and water. It has frequently been pointed out that an attempt was made, during the negotiations which preceded the Convention of 1818, to obtain for the fishermen of the United States the right of obtaining bait in Canadian waters, and that this attempt was successfully resisted. In spite of this fact, it is proposed, under this Article, to declare that the Convention of 1818 gave that privilege, as well as the privilege of purchasing other supplies in the harbours of the Dominion.

cal commercial regulations, to vessels of the United States engaged in trading.

The right to "obtain" (i. e., take, or fish for) bait, was not insisted upon by the American negotiators, and was doubtless omitted from the Treaty, because, as it would have permitted fishing for that purpose, it was a partial reassertion of the right to fish within the limits as to which the right to take fish had already been expressly renounced.

The purchase of bait and other supplies by the American fishermen in the established ports of entry of Canada, as proposed in Article IV, is not regarded as inconsistent with any of the provisions of the Treaty of 1818; and in this relation it is pertinent to note the declaration of the Earl of Kimberley, in his letter of February 16, 1871, to Lord Lisgar, that "the exclusion of American fishermen from resorting to Canadian ports, except for the purpose of shelter, and of repairing damages therein, purchasing wood, and obtaining water, might be warranted by the letter of the Treaty of 1818, and by the terms of the Imperial Act 53, Geo. III, Chap. 38, but Her Majesty's Government feel bound to state that it seems to them an extreme measure inconsistent with the general policy of the Empire, and they were disposed to concede this point to the United States Government under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent smuggling, and to guard against any substantial invasion of the exclusive rights of fishing which may be reserved to British subjects."

It is not contended that the right to purchase bait and supplies, or any other privilege of trade, was given by the Treaty of 1818. Neither was any such right or privilege stipulated for or given by the Treaty of 1854, nor by the Treaty of Washington; and the Halifax Commission decided in 1877, that it was not "competent" for that tribunal "to award compensation for commercial intercourse between the two countries, nor for purchasing bait, ice, sup-rel regulations, to the United States as trading.

And the High Contracting Par- ties agree to appoint a Joint Commission to ascertain the amount of damage caused to American fishermen during the year 1886 by seizure and deten- tion in violation of the Treaty of 1818, said Commission to make awards therefor to the parties injured.

ARTICLE VI.

The Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty agree to give concurrent notification and warning of Canadian Customs Regulations, and the United States agrees to admonish its fishermen to comply with them and co-operate in securing their enforcement.

Observations on Mr. Bayard's Memorandum.

By this Article it is proposed to give retrospective effect to the unjustified interpretation sought to be placed on the Convention by the last preceding Article.

It is assumed, without discus- sion, that all United States' fish- ing vessels which have been seized since the expiration of the Treaty of Washington have been illegally seized, leaving, as the only question still open for con- sideration, the amount of dam- ages for which the Canadian authorities are liable.

Such a proposal appears to Her Majesty's Government quite in- admissible.

Observations on Mr. Bayard's Memorandum.

APPENDIX A.

"In such capacity, your jurisdiction must be strictly confined within the limit of 'three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors,' of Canada, with respect to any act on you may take against American fishing vessels and United States citizens engaged in fishing. Where any of the bays, creeks or harbors shall not exceed ten geographical miles in width, you will consider that the line of demarcation extends from headland to headland, either at the entrance to such bay, creek or harbor, or from and between given points on both sides thereof, at any place nearest the mouth where the shores are less than ten miles apart; and may exclude foreign fishermen and fishing vessels therefrom, or seize if found within three marine miles of the coast.

"Jurisdiction.—The limits within which you will, if necessary, exercise the power to exclude United States fishermen, or to detain American fishing vessels or boats, are for the present to be exceptional. Difficulties have arisen in former times with respect to the question, whether the exclusive limits should be measured on lines drawn parallel everywhere to the coast and describing its sinuosities, or on lines produced from headland to headland across the entrances of bays, creeks or harbors. Her Majesty's Government are clearly of opinion, that by the Convention of 1818, the United States have renounced the right of fishing not only within three miles of the Colonial shores, but within three miles of a line drawn across the mouth of any British bay or creek. It is, however, the wish of Her Majesty's Government neither to concede, nor for the present to enforce any rights in this respect, which are in their nature open to any serious question. Until further instructed, therefore, you will not interfere with any American fishermen unless found within three miles of the shore, or within three miles of a line drawn across the mouth of a bay or creek which is less than ten geographical miles in width. In the case of any other bay, as the Bay de Chaleurs, for example, you will not admit any United States fishing vessel or boat, or any American fishermen, inside of a line drawn across at that part of such bay where its width does not exceed ten miles." (Session Papers, Vol. III, No. 6, 1870.)

APPENDIX B.

"In such capacity, your jurisdiction must be strictly confined within the limit of 'three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks or harbors' of Canada, with respect to any action you may take against American fishing vessels and United States citizens engaged in fishing. Where any of the bays, creeks, or harbors shall not exceed six geographical miles in width, you will consider that the line of demarcation extends from headland to headland, either at the entrance to such bay, creek, or harbor, or from and between given points on both sides thereof, at any place nearest the mouth where the shores are less than six miles apart; and may exclude foreign fishermen and fishing vessels therefrom, or seize if found within three marine miles of the coast.

"Jurisdiction.—The limits within which you will, if necessary, exercise the power to exclude United States fishermen, or to detain American fishing vessels or boats, are for the present to be exceptional. Difficulties have arisen in former times with respect to the question, whether the exclusive limits should be measured on lines drawn parallel everywhere to the coast and describing its sinuosities, or on lines produced from headland to headland across the entrances of bays, creeks or harbors. Her Majesty's Government are clearly of opinion that, by the Convention of 1818, the United States have renounced the right of fishing not only within three miles of the Colonial shores, but within three miles of a line drawn across the mouth of any British bay or creek. It is, however, the wish of Her Majesty's Government neither to concede, nor for the present to enforce any rights in this respect which are in their nature open to any serious question. Until further instructed, therefore, you will not interfere with any American fishermen unless found within three miles of the shore, or within three miles of a line drawn across the mouth of a bay or a creek which, though in parts more than six miles wide, is less than six geographical miles in width at its mouth. In the case of any other bay, as the Bay des Chaleurs for example, you will not interfere with any United States fishing vessel or boat, or any American fisherman, unless they are found within three miles of the shore.

"Action.—You will accost every United States vessel or boat actually within three marine miles of the shore along any other part of the coast except Labrador and around the Magdalen Islands, or within three marine miles of the entrance of any bay, harbor, or creek which is less than six geographical miles in width, or inside of a line drawn across any part of such bay, harbor, or creek at points nearest to the mouth thereof not wider apart than six geographical miles, and if either fishing, preparing to fish, or having obviously fished within the exclusive limits, you will, in accordance with the above-recited acts, seize at once any vessel detected in violating the law, and send or take her into port for condemnation; but you are not to do so unless it is evident, and can be clearly proved, that the offence of fishing has been committed, and that the vessel is captured within the prohibited limits." (Session Papers, Vol. IV, No. 4, 1871.)

DOWNING STREET, October 10, 1870.

SIR: I inclose a copy of a memorandum, which I have requested Lord Granville to transmit to Sir E. Thornton, with instructions to communicate with you before addressing himself to the Government of United States on the subject to which the memorandum relates.

The object of Her Majesty's Government is, as you will observe, to give effect to the wishes of your Government, by appointing a joint commission, on which Great Britain, the United States, and Canada are to be represented, with the object of inquiring what ought to be the geographical limits of the exclusive fisheries of the British North American colonies. In accordance with the understood desire of your advisers it is proposed that the inquiry should be held in America.

The proposal contained in the last paragraph is made with a view to avoid diplomatic difficulties, which might otherwise attend the negotiation.

I have, etc.,

KIMBERLEY.

Memorandum for foreign office respecting a commission to settle limits of the right of exclusive fishery on the coast of British North America.

"A convention made between Great Britain and the United States, on the 20th October, 1818, after securing to American fishermen certain rights to be exercised on part of the coasts of Newfoundland and Labrador, proceeded as follows:

"And the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within three miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above limits."

"The right of Great Britain to exclude American fishermen from waters within three miles of the coast is unambiguous and, it is believed, uncontested. But there appears to be some doubt what are the waters described as within three miles of bays, creeks, and harbors. When a bay is less than six miles broad, its waters are within three miles limit, and therefore clearly within the meaning of the treaty; but when it is more than that breadth, the question arises whether it is a bay of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions.

"This is a question which has to be considered in each particular case with regard to international law and usage. When such a bay, etc., is not a bay of Her Majesty's dominions, the American fishermen will be entitled to fish in it, except within three miles of the 'coast'; 'when it is a bay of Her Majesty's dominions,' they will not be permitted to fish within three miles of it; that is to say (it is presumed), within three miles of a line drawn from headland to headland.

"It is desirable that the British and American Governments should come to a clear understanding in the case of each bay, creek, or harbor what are the precise limits of the exclusive rights of Great Britain, and should define those limits in such a way as to be incapable of dispute, either by reference to the bearings of certain headland, or other objects on shore, or by laying the lines down in a map or chart.

"With this object it is proposed that a commission should be appointed, to be composed of representatives of Great Britain, the United States, and Canada, to hold its sittings in America, and to report to the British and American Governments their opinion either as to the exact geographical limits to which the renunciation above quoted applies, or, if this found impracticable, to suggest some line of delineation along the whole coast which, though not in exact conformity with the words of the convention, may appear to them consistent in substance with the just rights of the two nations, and calculated to remove occasion for further controversy.

"It is not intended that the result of the commission should necessarily be embodied in a new convention between the two countries but if an agreement can be arrived at, it may be efficient that it should be in the form of an understanding between the two Governments as to the practical interpretation which shall be given to the convention of 1818." Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council, on the 18th November, 1886.

The committee of the privy council are in receipt of a telegram from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, in the words:

"United States Government protest against proceedings of Canadian authorities in the case of Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele, said to have put into Arichat and Shelburne, respectively, for purpose sanctioned by convention. Particulars by post. Send report soon as possible."

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the telegram was referred, submits that the schooner Everett Steele appears from the report of the collector of customs at Shelburne to have been at that port on the 25th March last, and sailed without reporting. On her return to Shelburne in September she was detained by the collector of customs for an infraction of the customs law.

The captain having assured the collector that he had been misled by the deputy harbor-master, who informed him his vessel could remain in port for twenty-four hours without entering, and that he had no intention of violating the customs regulations, this statement was reported to the minister of customs at Ottawa, when the vessel was at once allowed to proceed to sea, and that no evidence is given of any desire or intention of denying to the captain of the Everett Steele any treaty privileges he was entitled to enjoy.

The committee, concurring in the above, respectfully recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, if approved, to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA, November 29, 1886.

SIR: With reference to your telegraphic message of the 6th instant, asking to be furnished with a report in the case of the Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, embodying a report of my minister of marine and fisheries, to which is appended a copy of the correspondence which has passed between the commissioner of customs for Canada and the United States consul-general at Halifax relating to the case of the American schooner Pearl Nelson.

I have, etc.,

Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council, on the 18th November, 1886.

The committee of the privy council are in receipt of a telegram from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, in the words:

"United States Government protest against proceedings of Canadian authorities in case of Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele, said to have put into Arichat and Shelburne, respectively, for purposes sanctioned by convention. Particulars by post. Send report soon as possible."

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the telegram was referred, submits a copy of a letter addressed by the commissioner of customs for Canada to the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, and also a copy of Mr. Phelan's reply thereto.

The minister submits that it is clear, from Captain Kempt's affidavit, that he was guilty of an infraction of the customs regulations in allowing men to land from his vessel before she had been reported, and the minister of customs having favorably considered Captain Kempt's representations as to his ignorance of the customs regulations requiring that vessels should be reported before landing either men or cargo therefrom, has remitted the fine of $200 which had been imposed in the case of the American schooner Pearl Nelson.

The minister further submits that it would appear from the collector of customs' report that his remark that "he would seize the vessel" had reference solely to her violation of the customs law, and that no evidence is given of any desire or intention of denying to the captain of the Pearl Nelson any treaty privileges he was entitled to enjoy.

The committee, concurring in the above, respectfully recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, if approved, to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk Privy Council, Canada.

OTTAWA, October 22, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, re seizure of the American schooner Pearl Nelson for an infraction of the customs laws, etc.

The commissioner of customs' report in connection with this matter, which has been approved by the minister of customs, reads as follows:

"The undersigned, having examined this case, has come to the conclusion that the captain of the vessel did violate the provisions of sections 25 and 180 of 'the customs act, 1883,' by landing a number of his crew before going to the custom-house to report; that his plea of having come into port solely from stress of weather is inconsistent with the circumstances, and is denied by the collector of customs, who reports that 'the night was one of the finest and most moderate experienced there this summer,' and that 'his crew were landed only in the morning.' That even if the 'stress of weather' plea was sustained by facts it would not exempt him from the legal requirement of reporting his vessel before 'breaking bulk' or landing his crew, and it is evident that there was nothing to hinder his reporting, as the crew appear to have had no difficulty in handling the vessel's boats; that it was very easy for the crew or any of them to have taken valuable contraband goods ashore on their persons in the absence of any customs officer at the landing-place. Inasmuch, however, as there is no charge of actual smuggling preferred against the vessel, the undersigned respectfully recommends that the deposit of $200 be refunded, deducting therefrom any expenses incurred.

"J. JOHNSON."

I trust the above may be considered a satisfactory answer to your letter referred to. I have, etc.,

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 22d ultimo, concerning the action of the customs department of Canada in the case of the American schooner Pearl Nelson, and to say I was much pleased at the decision arrived at in that case. I have informed the Government of the United States that the fine in the case referred to was ordered to be refunded.

I have also to say that the Department of State, in acknowledging the receipt of a dispatch from me setting forth that you had placed all the papers in the cases of the American schooners Crittenden and Holbrook in my hands for perusal, said: "The attention of Mr. Parmelee in referring the matter to you is appreciated. It shows proper spirit."

SIR: In reply to your dispatch of the 12th of October last, transmitting a copy of a letter with its inclosure from the foreign office, requesting to be furnished with a report in the case of the United States fishing vessel Crittenden, I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada embodying a report of my minister of marine and fisheries, to which is appended a statement of the customs officer at Steep Creek on the subject.

I have, etc.,

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council, on the 16th November, 1886.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch, dated 12th October, 1886, from the secretary of state for the colonies, transmitting a copy of a letter from Mr. Bayard, United States Secretary of State, to the British minister at Washington, calling attention to an alleged denial of the rights guaranteed by the convention of 1818 in the case of the American fishing schooner Crittenden by the customs officer at Steep Creek, in the Straits of Canso, Nova Scotia.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosure were referred, submits a statement of the customs officer at Steep Creek, and observes that the captain of the Crittenden violated the customs laws by neglecting to enter his vessel, as requested by the customs officer, and landing and shipping a man clearly exceeded any treaty provision he was entitled to avail himself of.

It would appear that the remark made by the customs officer "that he would seize the vessel" had reference solely to the captain's violation of the customs regulations, and, the minister submits, cannot be construed into a denial of any treaty privileges the master was entitled to enjoy.

The committee, concurring in the above, respectfully recommended that your excellency be moved to inform the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies in the sense of the report of the ministry of marine and fisheries.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

were filling the barrels, and told them to come and enter before taking wood and water. They said they would not enter or make any report. I told them that I would seize the schooner Crittenden for violating the customs laws. They said they would risk that, as the schooner was now out of the way about 3 miles from my station down the straits, and it was impossible for me to board the vessel. They also landed a man the same day with his effects, and on their return from Gloucester to the Bay St. Lawrence they shipped a man. Was looking out for the vessel, but could not catch her. I reported the case to the collector of customs at Port Hawkesbury, and on the schooner Crittenden's return from the Bay St. Lawrence she was seized, and Collector Bourinot got the affidavits of the captain of the said schooner and also of some of the crew, which he stated to the department. I was in the office at the time when Collector Bourinot received a telegram from the department to release the schooner Crittenden on the deposit of $400.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 27, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of an affidavit of the captain and two members of the crew of the schooner Sarah H. Prior, of Boston, stating the refusal of the captain of the Canadian revenue cutter Critic to permit the restoration to the former vessel, in the port of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, of her large seine, which she had lost at sea, and which had been found by the captain of a Canadian vessel, who offered to return the seine to the Prior, but was prevented from doing so by the captain of the Critic.

This act of prevention, the reason for which is not disclosed, practically disabled the Prior, and she was compelled to return home without having completed her voyage, and in debt.

I have the honor to ask that Her Majesty's Government cause investigation of this case to be made.

DEAR SIR: I wrote to Senator W. P. Frye, setting forth in my letter the facts contained in the affidavit inclosed. He wrote me to have it sworn to and to send it to you, which I have done. Will you please let me know what course is best to pursue in regard to it, whether to enter a claim or not? I think it is a clear, strong case, and the claim would be a just one, and will be pleased to receive your advice in the matter.

Yours, very truly,

On this 28th day of December, A. D. 1886, personally appeared before me Captain Thomas McLaughlin, master, and George F. Little and Charles Finnegan, two of the crew of the schooner Sarah H. Prior, of Boston, and being duly sworn, signed and made oath to the following statement of facts:

Four days afterwards the schooner John Ingalls, of Halifax, N. S., Captain Wolfe, came into Malpeque and had the seine on board, which she had picked up at sea. Captain Wolfe offered to deliver the seine to Captain McLaughlin in consideration of twenty-five dollars, which offer the latter accepted and paid him the money. The Canadian revenue cutter Critic, Captain McLearn, was lying at Malpeque at the time, and Captain McLaughlin went to see him, to ascertain if there would be any trouble in delivering the seine. Captain McLearn would not allow the captain of the John Ingalls to give up the seine, so the latter returned the twenty-five dollars to Captain McLaughlin.

The schooner Sarah H. Prior had two seines, one large and one small size. It was the large one which she lost and the schooner John Ingalls picked up. She had to leave Malpeque without it, and consequently came home with a broken voyage and in debt.

Report of the Minister of Justice.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, OTTAWA;
July 22, 1886.

To his Excellency the Administrator of the Government in council:

With reference to the dispatch of the 24th June last from the secretary of state for the colonies to your excellency, respecting the fisheries question, and inclosing copies of letters on the subject from the foreign office to the colonial office and of one from Mr. Phelps to the secretary of state for foreign affairs, the undersigned has the honor to report as follows:

The letter of Mr. Phelps seems designed to present to Earl Rosebery the case of the David J. Adams, the fishing vessel seized a short time ago near Digby, in the province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Phelps intimates that he has received from his Government a copy of the report of the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, giving full details and depositions relating to the seizure, and that that report and the evidence annexed to it, appear fully to sustain the points which he had submitted to Earl Rosebery at an interview which he had had a short time before the date of his letter.

The report of the consul-general and the depositions referred to seem not to have been presented to Earl Rosebery, and their contents can only be inferred from the statements made in Mr. Phelps's letter.

These statements appear to be based on the assertions made by the persons interested in the vessel by way of defense against the complaint under which she was seized, but can not be regarded as presenting a full or accurate representation of the case. The undersigned submits the facts in regard to this vessel as they are alleged by those on whose testimony the Government of Canada can rely to sustain the seizure and detention.

THE OFFENSE AS TO THE TREATY AND FISHERY LAWS.

The David J. Adams was a United States fishing vessel. Whether, as alleged in her behalf, her occupation was deep-sea fishing or not, and whether, as suggested, she had not been engaged, nor was intended to be engaged, in fishing in any limit prescribed by the treaty of 1818 or not, are questions which do not, in the opinion of the undersigned, affect the validity of the seizure, and of the proceedings subsequent thereto, for reasons which will be hereafter stated, but in so far as they may be deemed material to the defense they are questions of fact, which remain to be proved in the vice-admiralty court at Halifax, in which the proceedings for the vessel's condemnation are pending, and in respect of which proof is now being taken, and inasmuch as the trial has not been concluded (much less a decision reached), it is perhaps premature for Mr. Phelps to claim the restoration of the vessel, and to assert a right to damages for her detention, on the assumption of the supposed facts before referred to.

It is alleged in the evidence on behalf of the prosecution that the David J. Adams, being a United States fishing vessel, on the morning of the 5th of May, 1886, was in what is called the Annapolis Basin, which is a harbor on the northwest coast of Nova Scotia. She was several miles within the basin, and the excuse suggested (that the captain and crew may have been there through a misapprehension as to the locality) by the words of Mr. Phelps's letter, "Digby is a small fishing settlement, and its harbor not defined," is unworthy of much consideration.

Digby is not a fishing settlement, although some of the people on the neighboring shores engage in fishing. It is a town with a population of about 2,000 persons. Its harbor is formed by the Annapolis Basin, which is a large inlet of the Bay of Fundy, and the entrance to it consists of a narrow strait marked by conspicuous headlands, which are little more than a mile apart. The entrance is called "Digby Gut," and for all purposes connected with this inquiry the harbor is one of the best defined in America.

The David J. Adams was, on the morning of the 5th day of May, 1886, as has already been stated, several miles within the Gut. She was not there for the purpose of "shelter," or "repairs," nor to "purchase wood," nor to obtain water. She remained there during the 5th and the 6th of May, 1886; she was lying at anchor about half a mile from the shore, at a locality called "Clements West."

On the morning of the 6th of May, 1886, the captain made application to the owners of a fishing weir near where he was laying for bait, and purchased 4½ barrels of that article. He also purchased and took on board about two tons of ice. While waiting at anchor for these purposes the name of the vessel's "bailing place" was kept covered by canvas, and this concealment continued while she afterwards sailed down past Digby.

One of the crew represented to the persons attending the weir that the vessel belonged to the neighboring province of New Brunswick. The captain told the owner of the weir, when the treaty was spoken of by the latter, that the vessel was under British register. The captain said he would wait until the next morning to get more bait from the catch in the weir which was expected that day. At daybreak, however, on the morning of the 7th of May, 1886, the Government steamer Lansdowne arrived off Digby, and the David J. Adams got under way without waiting to take in the additional supply of bait, and sailed down the basin towards the Gut.

Before she had passed Digby she was boarded by the first officer of the Lansdowne, and to him the captain made the following statement: That he had come to that place to see his people, as he had formerly belonged there; that he had no fresh bait on board, and that he was from the "Banks," and bound for Eastport, Me. The officer of the Lansdowne told him he had no business there, and asked him if he knew the law. His reply was, "Yes."

A few hours afterwards, and while the David J. Adams was still inside the Gut, the officer of the Lansdowne, ascertaining that the statements of the captain were untrue, and that bait had been purchased by him within the harbor on the previous day, returned to the David J. Adams, charged the captain with the offense, and received for his reply the assertion that the charge was false, and that the person who gave the information was a "liar."

The officer looked into the hold of the vessel and found the herring which had been purchased the day before, and which, of course, was perfectly fresh; but the captain declared that this "bait" was ten days old.

The officer of the Lansdowne returned to his ship, reported the facts, and went again to the Adams, accompanied by another officer, who also looked at the bait. Both returned to the Lansdowne, and then conveyed the Adams the direction that she should come to Digby and anchor near the Lansdowne. This was, in fact, the seizure.

These are the circumstances by which the seizure was, in the opinion of Mr. Phelps, "much aggravated," and which make it seem very apparent to him that the seizure "was not made for the purpose of enforcing any right or redressing any wrong."

The fact that the seizure was preceded by visitations and searches was due to the statements of the master and the reluctance of the officers of the Lansdowne to enforce the law until they had ascertained to a demonstration that the offense had been committed and that the captain's statements were untrue.

THE OFFENSE AS TO CUSTOMS LAWS.

The David J. Adams, as already stated, was in harbor upwards of forty-eight hours, and when seized was proceeding to sea without having been reported at any customs-house. Her business was not such as to make it her interest to attract the attention of the Canadian authorities, and it is not difficult, therefore, to conjecture the reason why she was not so reported, or to see that the reason put forward, that Digby is but "a small fishing settlement and its harbor not defined," is a disingenuous one. In going to the weir to purchase bait the vessel passed the custom-house at Digby almost within hailing distance. When at the weir she was within 1 or 2 miles of another custom-house (at Clementsport), and within about 15 miles of another (at Annapolis). The master has not asserted that he did not know the law on this subject, as it is established that he knew the law in relation to the restriction on foreign fishing vessels.

The provisions of the customs act of Canada on this subject are not essentially different from those of his own country. The captain and crew were ashore during the 5th and 6th of May, 1886. The following provisions of the customs act of Canada apply:

"The master of every vessel coming from any port or place out of Canada, or coast-wise, and entering any port in Canada, whether laden or in ballast, shall go without delay, when such vessel is anchored or moored, to the custom-house for the port or place of entry where he arrives, and there make a report in writing to the collector or other proper officer of the arrival and voyage of such vessel, stating her name, country, and tonnage, the port of registry, the name of the master, the country of the owners, the number and names of the passengers, if any, the number of the crew, and whether the vessel is laden or in ballast, and, if laden, the marks and numbers of every package and parcel of goods on board, and where the same was laden, and the particulars of any goods stored loose, and where and to whom consigned, and where any and what goods, if any, have been laden or unladen, or bulk has been broken during the voyage, what part of the cargo, and the number and names of the passengers which are intended to be landed at that port, and what and whom at any other port in Canada, and what part of the cargo, if any, is intended to be exported in the same vessel, and what surplus stores remain on board as far as any of such particulars are or can be known to him." (46 Vic., cap. 12, sec. 25.)

"The master shall at the time of making his report, if required by the officer of customs, produce to him the bills of lading of the cargo, or true copies thereof, and shall make and subscribe an affidavit referring to his report, and declaring that all the statements made in the report are true, and shall further answer all such questions concerning the vessel and cargo, and the crew, and the voyage, as are demanded of him by such officer, and shall, if required, make the substance of any such answer part of his report." (46 Vic., cap. 12, sec. 28.)

"If any goods are unladen from any vessel before such report is made, or if the master fails to make such report, or makes an untrue report, or does not truly answer the questions demanded of him, as provided in the next preceding section, he shall incur a penalty of $400, and the vessel may be detained until such penalty is paid." (46 Vic., cap. 12, sec. 28.)

PROCEEDINGS FOLLOWING THE SEIZURE.

These have been made the subject of complaint by Mr. Phelps, although the explanations which were given in the previous memorandum of the undersigned (in reference to the letters of Mr. Bayard to Her Majesty's minister at Washington), and in the report on the same subject of the minister of marine and fisheries, laid before his excellency the governor-general on the 14th of June ultimo, coupled with a disavowal, by the Canadian Government, of any intention that the proceedings in such cases should be unnecessarily harsh or pursued in a punitive spirit, might have been expected to be sufficient. After the seizure was made, the commander of the Lansdowne took the David J. Adams across the Bay of Fundy to St. John, a distance of about 40 miles. He appears to have had the impression that, as his duties would not permit him to remain at Digby, the vessel would not be secure from rescue, which has in several cases occurred after the seizure of fishing vessels. He believed she would be more secure in the harbor of St. John, and that the legal proceedings, which in due course would follow, could be taken there. He was immediately directed, however, to return with the vessel to Digby, as it seemed more in order, and more in compliance with the statutes relating to the subject, that she should be detained in the place of seizure, and that the legal proceeding should be taken in the vice-admiralty court of the province where the offense was committed. It does not seem to be claimed by the United States authorities that any damage to the vessel, or that any injury or inconvenience to any one concerned, was occasioned by this removal to St. John and by her return to Digby, occupying as they did but a few hours, and yet this circumstance seems to be relied on as "aggravating the seizure," and as depriving it of the character of a seizure made "to enforce a right or to redress a wrong."

Another ground of complaint is that in Digby, "the paper alleged to be the legal precept for the capture and detention of the vessel was nailed to her mast in such a manner as to prevent its contents being read," and that "the request of the captain, and of the United States consul-general, to be allowed to detach the writ from the mast, for the purpose of learning its contents, was positively refused by the provincial official in charge; that the United States consul-general was not able to learn from the commander of the Lansdowne the nature of the complaint against the vessel, and that his respectful application to that effect was fruitless."

(1) As to the position of the paper on the mast. It is not a fact that it was nailed to the vessel's mast "in such a manner as to prevent its contents being read." It was nailed there for the purpose of being read, and could have been read.

(2) As to the refusal to allow it to be detached, such refusal was not intended as a discourtesy, but was legitimate and proper. The paper purported to be, and was, a copy of the writ of summons and warrant, which were then in the registry of the vice-admiralty court at Halifax. It was attached to the mast by the officer of the court, in accordance with the rules and procedure of that court. The purposes for which it was so attached did not admit of any consent for its removal.

(3) As to the desire of the captain and of the United States consul-general to ascertain the contents of the paper, the original was in the registry of the court, accessible to every person, and the registry is within 80 yards of the consul-general's office. All the reasons for the seizure and detention were made, however, to the captain, days before the paper arrived to be placed on the mast, and, before the consul-general arrived at Digby; these reasons were not only matters of public notoriety, but had been published in the newspapers of the province and in hundreds of other newspapers circulating throughout Canada and the United States. The captain and the consul-general did not need, therefore, to take the paper from the mast in order to learn the causes of the seizure and detention.

(4) As to the application of the consul-general having been fruitless, the fact has transpired that he had reported the seizure and its causes to his Government before the application was made. It has been already explained in the previous memorandum of the undersigned, and in the report of the minister of marine and fisheries, that the application was for a specific statement of the charges, and that it was made to an officer who had neither the legal acquirements nor the authority to state them in a more specific form than that in which he had already stated them. The commander of the Lansdowne requested the consul-general to make his request to the minister of the marine and fisheries, and, if he had done so, the specific statement which he had desired could have been furnished in an hour. It is hoped that the explanation already made, and the precautions which have been taken against even the appearance of discourtesy in the future, will, on consideration, be found to be satisfactory.

INCIDENTS OF THE CUSTOMS SEIZURE.

Mr. Phelps presents the following views with respect to the claim that the David J. Adams, besides violating the treaty and the statutes relating to "fishing by foreign vessels," is liable to be detained for the penalty under the customs law.

(1) That this claim indicates the consciousness that the vessel could not be forfeited for the offense against the treaty and fishing laws. This supposition is groundless. It is by no means uncommon in legal proceedings, both in Canada and the United States, for such proceedings to be based on more than one charge, although any one of the charges would in itself, if sustained, be sufficient for the purpose of the complainant. The success of this litigation, like that of all litigation, must depend not merely on the rights of the parties but on the proof which may be adduced as to a right having been infringed. In this instance it appears from Mr. Phelps's letter that the facts which are to be made the subject of proof are evidently in dispute, and the Government of Canada could, with propriety, assert both its claims, so that both of them should not be lost by any miscarriage of justice in regard to one of them. This was likewise the proper cause" to be taken in view of the fact that an appeal might at any time be made to the Government by the owners of the David J. Adams for the remission of the forfeiture incurred in respect of the fishery laws. The following is a section of the Canadian statute relating to fishing by foreign vessels:

"In cases of seizure under this act, the governor in council may direct a stay of proceedings, and in cases of condemnation may relieve from the penalty in whole or in part, and on such terms as are deemed right." (31 Vic. cap. 61, sec. 19.)

It seems necessary and proper to make at once any claim founded on infraction of the customs laws, in view of the possible termination of the proceedings by executive interference under this enactment. It would surely not be expected that the Government of Canada should wait until the termination of the proceedings under the fishery acts before asserting its claim to the penalty under the customs act. The owners of the offending vessel and all concerned were entitled to know as soon as they could be made aware what the claims of the Government were in relation to the vessel, and they might fairly urge that any which were not disclosed were waived.

(2) Mr. Phelps remarks that this charge is "not the one on which the vessel was seized" and "was an after-thought." The vessel was seized by the commander of the Landsdowne for a violation of the fishery laws before the customs authorities had any knowledge that such a vessel had entered into the port, or had attempted to leave it, and the commander was not aware at that time whether the David J. Adams had made proper entry or not. A few hours afterwards, however, the collector of customs at Digby ascertained the facts, and on the facts being made known to the head of his department at Ottawa, was immediately instructed to take such steps as might be necessary to assert the claim for the penalty which had been incurred. The collector did so.

(3) Mr. Phelps asserts that the charge of breach of the customs law is not the one which must now be principally relied on for condemnation. It is true that condemnation does not necessarily follow. The penalty prescribed is a forfeiture of $400, on payment of which the owners are entitled to the release of the vessel. If Mr. Phelps means by the expression just quoted that the customs offense cannot be relied on in respect to the penalty claimed, and that the vessel cannot be detained until that penalty is paid, it can only be said that in this contention the Canadian Government does not concur. Section 39 of the customs act, before quoted, is explicit on that point.

(4) It is also urged that the offense was, at most, "only an accidental and clearly technical breach of a custom-house regulation, by which no harm was intended, and from which no harm came, and would in ordinary cases be easily condoned by an apology, and perhaps payment of costs." What has already been said under the heading "the offense as to the customs laws" presents the contention opposed to the offense being considered as accidental." The master of the David J. Adams showed by his language and conduct that what he did he did with design, and with the knowledge that he was violating the laws of the country. He could not have complied with the customs law without frustrating the purposes for which he had gone into port.

As to the breach being a "technical" one, it must "be remembered that with thousands of miles of coast indented as the coasts of Canada are, by hundreds of harbors and inlets, it is impossible to enforce the fishery law without a strict enforcement of the customs laws. This difficulty was not unforeseen by the framers of the treaty of 1818, who provided that the fishermen should be "under such restrictions as might be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish * * * or in any other manner whatever abusing the privilege reserved to them." No naval force which could be equipped by the Dominion would of itself be sufficient for the enforcement of the fishery laws.

Foreign fishing vessels are allowed by the treaty to enter the harbors and inlets of Canada, but they are allowed to do so only for specified purposes. In order to confine them to those purposes it is necessary to insist on the observance of the customs laws, which are enforced by officers all along the coast. A strict enforcement of the customs laws, and one consistent with the treaty, would require that, even when coming into port for the purposes for which such vessels are allowed to enter our waters, a report should be made at the custom-house, but this has not been insisted on in all cases; when the customs laws are enforced against those who enter for other than legitimate purposes, and who choose to violate both the fishery laws and customs laws, the Government is far within its right, and should not be asked to accept an apology and payment of costs. It may be observed here, as affecting Mr. Phelps's demands for restoration and damages, that the apology and costs have never been tendered, and that Mr. Phelps seems to be of opinion that they are not called for.

(5) Mr. Phelps is informed by the consul-general at Halifax that it is "conceded by the customs authorities there that foreign fishing vessels have for forty years been accustomed to go in and out of the bay at pleasure, and have never been required to send ashore and report when they had no business with the port and made no landing, and that no seizure had ever before been made or claim against them for so doing." Nothing of this kind is or could be conceded by the customs authorities there or elsewhere in Canada.

The bay referred to, the Annapolis Basin, is like all the other harbors of Canada, except that it is unusually well defined and land-locked and furnished with custom-houses. Neither there nor anywhere else have foreign fishing vessels been accustomed to go in and out at pleasure without reporting. If they had been so permitted the fishery laws could not have been enforced, and there would have been no protection against illicit trading. While the reciprocity treaty of 1854 and the fishery clauses of the Washington treaty were in force, the convention of 1818 being, of course, suspended, considerable laxity was allowed to the United States fishing vessels, much greater than the terms of those treaties entitled them to, but the consul-general is greatly mistaken when he supposes that at other times the customs laws were not enforced, and that seizures of foreign fishing vessels were not made for omitting to report. Abundant evidence on this point can be had.

In 1839 Mr. Vail, the Acting Secretary of State (United States) reported that most of the seizures, which then were considered numerous, were for alleged violation of the customs laws (Papers relating to the Treaty of Washington, vol. vi, p. 283, Washington edition). From a letter of the United States consul at Charlottetown, dated August 19, 1870, to the United States consul-general at Montreal, it appears that it was the practice of the United States fishermen at that time to make regular entry at the port to which they resorted. The consul said, "Here the fishermen enter and clear, and take out permits to land their mackerel from the collector, and as their mackerel is a free article in this island, there can be no illicit trade."

In the year 1870, two United States fishing vessels, the H. W. Lewis and the Granada, were seized on like charges in Canadian waters.

What Mr. Phelps styles "a custom-house regulation" is an act of the Parliament of Canada, and has for many years been in force in all the provinces of the Dominion. It is one which the Government can not at all alter or repeal, and which its officers are not at liberty to disregard.

(6) It is suggested, though not asserted, in the letter of Mr. Phelps, that the penalty can not reasonably be insisted on, because a new rule has been suddenly adopted without notice. The rule, as before observed, is not a new one, nor is its enforcement a novelty. As the Government of the United States choose to put an end to the arrangement under which the fishermen of that country were accustomed to frequent Canadian waters with so much freedom, the obligation of giving notice to those fishermen that their rights were thereafter, by the action of their own Government, to be greatly restricted, and that they must not infringe the laws of Canada, was surely a duty incumbent on the Government of the United States rather than on that of Canada. This point can not be better expressed than in the language reported to have been recently used by Mr. Bayard, the United States Secretary of State, in his reply to the owners of the George Cushing, a vessel recently seized on a similar charge: "You are well aware that questions are now pending between this Government and that of Great Britain in relation to the justification of the rights of American fishing vessels in the territorial waters of British North America, and we shall relax no effort to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the difficulty. In the mean time it is the duty and manifest interest of all American citizens entering Canadian jurisdiction to ascertain and obey the laws and regulations there in force. For all unlawful depredations of property or commercial rights this Government will expect to procure redress and compensation for the innocent sufferers."

INTERPRETATION OF THE TREATY.

Mr. Phelps, after commenting in the language already quoted from his letter on the claim for the customs penalty, treats, as the only question, whether the vessel is to be forfeited for purchasing bait to be used in lawful fishing. In following his argument on this point, it should be borne in mind, as already stated, that in so far as the fact of the bait having been intended to be used in lawful fishing is material to the case, that is a fact which is not admitted. It is one in respect of which the burden of proof is on the owners of the vessel, and it is one on which the owners of the vessel have not yet obtained an adjudication by the tribunal before which the case has gone.

Mr. Phelps admits "that if the language of the treaty of 1818 is to be interpreted literally, rather than according to its spirit and plain intent, a vessel engaged in fishing would be prohibited from entering a Canadian port for any purpose whatever, except to obtain wood or water, or to repair damages, or to seek shelter."

It is claimed on the part of the Government of Canada that this is not only the language of the treaty of 1818, but "its spirit and plain intent." To establish this contention it should be sufficient to point to the clear, unambiguous words of the treaty. To those clear and unambiguous words Mr. Phelps seeks to attach a hidden meaning by suggesting that certain "preposterous consequences" might ensue from giving them their ordinary construction. He says that with such a construction a vessel might be forfeited for entering a port "to post a letter, to send a telegram, to buy a newspaper, to obtain a physician in case of illness, or a surgeon in case of accident, to land or bring off a passenger, or even to lend assistance to the inhabitants, etc."

There are probably few treaties or statutes, the literal enforcement of which might not in certain circumstances produce consequences worthy of being described as preposterous.

At most, this argument can only suggest that, in regard to this treaty, as in regard to every enactment, its enforcement should not be insisted on where accidental hardships or "preposterous consequences" are likely to ensue. Equity and a natural sense of justice would doubtless lead the Government with which the treaty was made to abstain from its rigid enforcement for inadvertent offenses, although the right as to enforce it might be beyond question. It is for this reason that, inasmuch as the enforcement of this treaty to some extent devolves on the Government of Canada, the Parliament of the Dominion has in one of the sections already quoted of the statute relating to fishing by foreign vessels (31 Vic., cap. 61, sec. 19) intrusted the executive with power to mitigate the severity of those provisions when an appeal to executive interference can be justified. In relation to every law of a penal character the same power for the same purpose is vested in the executive. Mr. Phelps will find it difficult, however, to discover any authority among the jurists of his own country or of Great Britain, or among the writers on international law, for the position that, against the plain words of a treaty or statute, an interpretation is to be sought which will obviate all chances of hardship and render unnecessary the exercise of the executive power before mentioned.

It might fairly be urged against his argument that the convention of 1818 is less open to an attempt to change its plain meaning than even a statute would be. The latter is a declaration of its will by the supreme authority of the state, the former was a compact deliberately and solemnly made by two parties, each of whom expressed what he was willing to concede, and by what terms it was willing to be bound. If the purposes for which the United States desired that their fishing vessels should have the right to enter British American waters included other than those expressed, their desire can not avail them now, nor be a pretext for a special interpretation after they assented to the words "and for no other purpose whatever." If it was "preposterous" that their fishermen should be precluded from entering provincial waters "to post a letter" or for any other of the purposes which Mr. Phelps mentions, they would probably never have assented to a treaty framed as this was. Having done so they can not now urge that their language was "preposterous," and that its effect must be destroyed by resort to "interpretation."

But that which Mr. Phelps calls "literal interpretation" is by no means so preposterous as he suggests, when the purpose and object of the treaty come to be considered. While it was not desired to interfere with ordinary commercial intercourse between the people of the two countries, the deliberate and declared purpose existed on the part of Great Britain, and the willingness existed on the part of the United States, to secure absolutely and free from the possibility of encroachment the fisheries of the British possessions in America to the people of those possessions, excepting as to certain localities, in respect of which special provisions were made. To effect this it was merely necessary that there should be a joint declaration of the right which was to be established, but that means should be taken to preserve that right. For this purpose a distinction was necessarily drawn between the United States vessels engaged in commerce and those engaged in fishing. While the former had free access to our coasts, the latter were placed under a strict prohibition.

The purpose was to prevent the fisheries from being poached on, and to preserve them to "the subjects of his Britannic Majesty in North America, not only for the pursuit of fishing within the waters adjacent to the coast (which can under the law of nations be done by any country), but as a basis of supplies for the pursuit of fishing in the deep sea." For this purpose it was necessary to keep out foreign fishing vessels, excepting in case of dire necessity, no matter under what pretext they might desire to come in. The fisheries could not be preserved to our people if every one of the United States fishing vessels that were accustomed to swarm along our coasts could claim the right to enter our harbors "to post a letter, or send a telegram, or buy a newspaper, to obtain a physician in case of illness or a surgeon in case of accident, to land or bring off a passenger, or even to lend assistance to the inhabitants in fire, flood, or pestilence," or to "buy medicine," or to "purchase a new rope."

The slightest acquaintance with the negotiations which led to the treaty of 1818, and with the state of the fishery question preceding it, induces the belief that if the United States negotiators had suggested these as purposes for which their vessels should be allowed to enter our waters, the proposal would have been rejected as "preposterous," to quote Mr. Phelps's own words. But Mr. Phelps appears to have overlooked an important part of the case when he suggested that it is a "preposterous" construction of the treaty, which would lead to the purchase of bait being prohibited. So far from such a construction being against "its spirit and plain intent," no other meaning would accord with that spirit and intent. If we adopt one of the methods contended for by Mr. Phelps of arriving at the true meaning of the treaty, namely, having reference to the "attending circumstances," etc., we find that so far from its being considered by the framers of the treaty that a prohibition of the right to obtain bait would be a "preposterous" and an extreme instance, a proposition was made by the United States negotiators that the proviso should read thus: "Provided, however, That American fishermen shall be permitted to enter such bays and harbors for the purpose only of obtaining shelter, wood, water, and bait," and the insertion of the word "bait" was resisted by the British negotiators and struck out. this, how can it be contended that any rule of interpretation would be sound which would give to United States fishermen the very permission which was sought for on their behalf during the negotiations successfully resisted by the British representatives and deliberately rejected by the framers of the convention?

It is a well-known fact that the negotiations preceding the treaty had reference very largely to the deep-sea fisheries, and that the right to purchase bait in the harbors of the British possessions for the deep-sea fishing was one which the United States fishermen were intentionally excluded from. Referring to the difficulties which subsequently arose from an enforcement of the treaty, an American author says:

"It will be seen that most of those difficulties arose from a change in the character of the fisheries; cod being caught on the banks, were seldom pursued within the 3-mile limit, and yet it was to cod, and perhaps halibut, that all the early negotiations had referred.

"The mackerel fishing had now sprung up in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and had proved extremely profitable. This was at that time an inshore fishery." (Schuyler's American Diplomacy, page 411.)

In further amplification of this argument, the undersigned would refer to the views set forth in the memorandum before mentioned in the letters of Mr. Bayard in May last, and to those presented in the report of the minister of marine and fisheries, approved on the 14th June ultimo.

While believing, however, that Mr. Phelps can not, by resort to any such matters, successfully establish a different construction for the treaty from that which its words present, the undersigned submits that Mr. Phelps is mistaken as to the right to resort to any matters outside the treaty itself to modify its plain words. Mr. Phelps expresses his contention thus: "It seems to me clear that the treaty may be considered in accordance with those ordinary and well settled rules, applicable to all written instruments, which without such salutary assistance must constantly fail of their purpose. If these rules the letter often gives way to the intent, or rather is only used to ascertain the intent, and the whole document will be taken together and will be considered in connection with the attending circumstances, the situation of the parties, and the object in view, and thus the literal meaning of an isolated clause is often shown not to be the meaning really understood or intended." It may be readily admitted that such rules of interpretation exist, but when are they to be applied? Only when interpretation is necessary—when the words are plain in their ordinary meaning, the task of interpretation does not begin. Vattel says in reference to the "interpretation of treaties:"

"The first general maxim of Interpretation is, that it is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation. When the deed is worded in clear and precise terms, when its meaning is evident and leads to no absurd conclusion, there can be no reason for refusing to admit the meaning which such deed naturally presents. To go elsewhere in search of conjectures in order to restrict or extend it is but an attempt to elude it.

"Those cavilers who dispute the sense of a clear and determined article are accused to seek their frivolous subterfuges in the pretended intentions and views which they attribute to its author. It would be very often dangerous to enter with them into the discussion of these supposed views that are pointed out in the piece itself. The following rule is better calculated to foil such cavilers, and will at once cut short all chicanery: If he who could and ought to have explained himself clearly and fully has not done it, it is the worse for him; he cannot be allowed to introduce subsequent restrictions which he has not expressed. This is a maxim of the Roman law, 'Pactionem obscuram us usure [?] iis nocere in quorum fuit potestate legem apertius conscribere.' The equity of this rule is glaringly obvious, and its necessity is not less evident." (Vattel's Interpretation of Treaties, lib. ii, chap. 17.)

Sedgwick, the American writer on the "Construction of Statutes" (and treaties are construed by much the same rules as statutes), says, at page 194: "The rule is, as we shall constantly see, cardinal and universal; but if the statute is plain and unambiguous, there is no room for construction or interpretation. The legislature has spoken; their interpretation is free from doubt, and their will must be obeyed. 'It may be proper,' it has been said in Kentucky, 'in giving a construction to a statute, to look to the effects and consequences when its provisions are ambiguous or the legislative intention is doubtful. But when the law is clear and explicit and its provisions are susceptible of but one interpretation, if evil, can only be avoided by a change of the law itself, to be effected by legislative and not judicial action. 'So, too,' it is said by the Supreme Court of the United States, 'where a law is plain and unambiguous, whether it be expressed in general or limited terms, the legislature should be intended to mean what they have plainly expressed, and consequently no room is left for construction.'" a similar question arose. Counsel for Her Majesty's Government presented a supplemental argument, in which the ordinary rules for the interpretation of treaties were invoked. Mr. Evans, one of the counsel for the United States and afterwards Secretary of State, made a supplemental reply, in which the following passage occurs: "At the close of the special argument we find a general presentation of canons for the construction of treaties and some general observations as to the light or the controlling reason under which these rules of the treaty should be construed. These suggestions may be briefly dismissed. It certainly would be a very great reproach to those nations which had deliberately fixed upon three propositions as expressive of the law of nations, in their judgment, for the purposes of this trial, that a resort to general instructions for the purpose of interpretation was necessary. Eleven canons of interpretation drawn from Vattel are presented in order, and then several of them, as the case suits, are applied as valuable in elucidating this or that point of the rules. But the learned counsel has omitted to bring to your notice the first and most general rule of Vattel, which being once understood would, as we think, dispense with any consideration of these subordinate canons which Vattel has introduced to be used only in case his first general rule does not apply. This first proposition is that 'it is not allowable to interpret what has no need of interpretation.'" (Washington Treaty Papers, vol. iii, pp. 446-7.)

At the tribunal of arbitration at Genoa,* held under the Washington treaty in 1872,

In a letter of Mr. Hamilton Fish to the United States minister in England on the same subject, dated April 16, 1872, the following view was set forth: "Further than this, it appears to me that the principles of English and American law (and they are substantially the same) regarding the construction of statutes and treaties, and of written instruments generally, would preclude the seeking of evidence of intent outside the instrument itself. It might be a painful trial on which to enter, in seeking the opinions and recollections of parties, to bring into conflict the different expectations of those who were engaged in the negotiation of an instrument." (Washington Treaty Papers, vol. ii, p. 473.)

But even at this barrier the difficulty in following Mr. Phelps's argument, by which he seeks to reach the interpretation he desires, does not end. After taking a view of the treaty which all authorities thus forbid, he says: "Thus regarded, it appears to me clear that the words 'for no other purpose whatever,' as employed in the treaty, mean for no other purpose inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty." Taken in that sense the words would have no meaning, for no other purpose would be consistent with the treaty, excepting those mentioned. He proceeds, "or prejudicial to the interests of the provinces or their inhabitants." If the United States authorities are the judges as to what is prejudicial to those interests, the treaty will have very little value; if the provinces are to be the judges, it is most prejudicial to their interests that United States fishermen should be permitted to come into their harbors on any pretext, and it is fatal to their fishery interests that these fishermen, with whom they have to compete at such a disadvantage in the markets of the United States, should be allowed to enter for supplies and bait, even for the pursuit of the deep-sea fisheries. Before concluding his remarks on this subject, the undersigned would refer to a passage in the answer on behalf of the United States to the case of Her Majesty's Government as presented to the Halifax Fisheries Commission in 1877: "The various incidental and reciprocal advantages of the treaty, such as the privileges of traffic, purchasing bait and other supplies, are not the subject of compensation, because the treaty of Washington confers no such rights on the inhabitants of the United States, who now enjoy them merely by sufferance, and who can at any time be deprived of them by the enforcement of existing laws or the re-enforcement of former oppressive statutes."

Mr. Phelps has made a lengthy citation from the imperial act, 53 George III, cap. 33, for the purpose of establishing—

1st. That the penalty of forfeiture was not incurred by any entry into British ports, unless accompanied by fishing, or preparing to fish, within the prohibited limits.

2d. That it was not the intention of Parliament, or its understanding of the treaty, that any other entry should be regarded as an infraction of the provisions of that act.

As regards the latter point, it seems to be effectually disposed of by the quotation which Mr. Phelps has made. The act permits fishermen of the United States to enter into the bays or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America for the purposes named in the treaty, "and for no other purpose whatever," and after enacting the penalty of forfeiture in regard to certain offenses, provides a penalty of £200 sterling against any person otherwise offending against the act. It can not, therefore, be successfully contended that Parliament intended to permit entry into the British American waters for the purchase of bait, or for any other than the purposes specified in the treaty.

As to the first point, it is to be observed that the penalty of forfeiture was expressly pronounced as applicable to the offenses of fishing or preparing to fish. It may be that forfeiture is incurred by other illegal entry, contrary to the treaty and contrary to the statute. It may also be contended that preparing, within the prohibited limits, to fish in any place is the offense at which the penalty is aimed, or it may be that the preparing within these waters to fish is evidence of preparing to fish within the prohibited waters under the imperial statute, and especially under the Canadian statute, which places the burden of proof on the defendant.

The undersigned does not propose at this time to enter into any elaborate argument to show the grounds on which the penalty of forfeiture is available, because that question is one which is more suitable for determination by the courts, to whose decision it has been referred in the very case under consideration.

The decision in the case of the David J. Adams will be soon pronounced, and as the Government of Canada will be bound by the ultimate judgment of competent authority on this question, and can not be expected to acquiesce in the view of the United States Government without such a judgment, any argument of the case in diplomatic form would be premature and futile.

In order, however, to show that Mr. Phelps is in error when he assumes that the practical construction hitherto given to the treaty is in accordance with his views, it is as well to state that in the year 1815 the commander of one of Her Majesty's ships of war seized four United States fishing vessels (see Sabine on Fisheries), and again in 1817 the Imperial Government acted on the view that they had the right to seize foreign vessels encroaching on the fishing grounds. Instructions were issued by Great Britain to seize foreign vessels fishing or at anchor in any of the harbors or creeks in the British North American possessions, or within their maritime jurisdiction, and send them to Halifax for adjudication. Several vessels were seized and information was fully communicated to the Government of the United States. This, it will be remembered, was not only before the treaty, but before the imperial act above referred to.

The following were the words of the Admiralty instructions then issued:

"On your meeting with any foreign vessels, fishing or at anchor in any of the harbors or creeks in His Majesty's North American provinces, or within our maritime jurisdiction, you will seize and send such vessels so trespassing to Halifax for adjudication, unless it should clearly appear that they have been obliged to put in there in consequence of distress, acquainting me with the cause of such seizure and every other particular, to enable me to give all information to the lords commissioners of the Admiralty."

Under these instructions eleven or twelve American fishing vessels were seized in Nova Scotia on June 8, 1817, in consequence of their frequenting some of the harbors of that province.

In 1818 the fishing vessels Mabby and Washington were seized and condemned for entering and harboring in British American waters.

In 1835 the Java, Independence, Magnolia, and Hart were seized and confiscated, the principal charge being that they were within British American waters without legal cause.

In 1840 the Papineau and Mary were seized and sold for purchasing bait.

In the spring of 1819 a United States fishing vessel named the Charles was seized and condemned in the vice-admiralty court in New Brunswick for having resorted to a harbor of that province after warning and without necessity.

In the year 1871 the United States fishing vessel J. H. Nickerson was seized for having purchased bait within 3 marine miles of Nova Scotian shore, and condemned by the judgment of Sir William Young, chief justice of Nova Scotia and judge of the court of vice-admiralty. The following is a passage from his judgment:

"The vessel went in, not to obtain water or men, as the allegation says, but to purchase or procure bait (which, as I take it, is a preparing to fish), and it was contended that they had a right to do so, and that no forfeiture accrued on such entering. The answer is, that if a privilege to enter our harbors for bait was to be conceded to American fishermen it ought to have been in the treaty, and it is too important a matter to have been accidentally overlooked. We know, indeed, from the state papers that it was not overlooked; that it was suggested and declined. But the court, as I have already intimated, does not insist upon that as a reason for its judgment. What may be fairly and justly insisted on is, that beyond the four purposes specified in the treaty—shelter, repairs, water, and wood—here is another purpose or claim not specified, while the treaty itself declares that no such other purpose shall be received to justify an entry. It appears to me an inevitable conclusion that the J. H. Nickerson, in entering the Bay of Ingonish for the purpose of procuring bait while there, became liable to forfeiture, and upon the true construction of the treaty and acts of Parliament was legally seized." (Vide Halifax Com., vol. iii, p. 3393, Washington edition.)

In view of these seizures and of this decision it is difficult to understand the following passages in the letter of Mr. Phelps:

"The practical construction given to the treaty, down to the present time, has been in entire accord with the conclusions thus deduced from the act of Parliament. The British Government has repeatedly refused to allow interference with American fishing vessels, unless for illegal fishing, and has given explicit orders to the contrary."

"Judicial authority upon the question is to the same effect. That the purchase of bait by American fishermen in the provincial ports has been a common practice is well known, but in no case, so far as I can ascertain, has a seizure of an American vessel ever been enforced on the ground of the purchase of bait or of any other supplies. On the hearing before the Halifax Fishery Commission in 1877-78, this question was discussed and no case could be produced of any such condemnation. Vessels shown to have been condemned were in all cases adjudged guilty, either of fishing or preparing to fish within the prohibited limits."

Although Mr. Phelps is under the impression that "in the hearing before the Halifax Fishery Commission in 1877 this question was discussed and no case could be produced of any such condemnation," the fact appears in the records of that Commission, as published by the Government of the United States, that on a discussion which there arose, the instances above mentioned were nearly all cited, and the judgment of Sir William Young in the case of the J. H. Nickerson was presented in full, and it now appears among the papers of that Commission. (See vol. iii, Documents and Proceedings of Halifax Commission, page 3398, Washington edition.) The decision in the case of the J. H. Nickerson was subsequent to that in the case of the White Farm mentioned, to the exclusion of all the other cases referred to by Mr. Phelps. Whether that decision should be reaffirmed or not is a question more suitable for judicial determination than for discussion here.

RIGHT OF THE DOMINION PARLIAMENT TO MAKE FISHERY ENACTMENTS.

Mr. Phelps deems it unnecessary to point out that it is not in the power of the Canadian Parliament to alter or enlarge the provisions of the act of the Imperial Parliament, or to give to the treaty either a construction or a legal effect not warranted by that act.

No attempt has ever been made by the Parliament of Canada, or by that of any of the provinces to give a "construction" to the treaty, but the undersigned admits that the right of the Parliament of Canada, with the royal assent given in the manner provided in the constitution, to pass an act on this subject to give that treaty effect, or to protect the people of Canada from the infringement of the treaty provisions, is clear beyond question. An act of that parliament, duly passed according to constitutional forms, has as much the force of law in Canada, and binds as fully offenders who may come within its jurisdiction, as any act of the Imperial Parliament.

The efforts made on the part of the Government of the United States to deny and refute the validity of colonial statutes on this subject have been continued for many years, and in every instance have been set at naught by the Imperial authorities and by the judicial tribunals.

In May, 1870, this vain contention was completely abandoned, a circular was issued by the Treasury Department at Washington, in which circular the persons to whom it was sent were authorized and directed to inform all masters of fishing vessels that the authorities of the Dominion of Canada had resolved to terminate the system of granting fishing licenses to foreign vessels.

The circular proceeds to state the terms of the treaty of 1818 in order that United States fishermen might be informed of the limitation thereby placed on their privileges. It proceeds further to set out at large the Canadian act of 1868, relating to fishing by foreign vessels, which has been hereinbefore referred to.

The fishermen of the United States were by that circular expressly warned of the nature of the Canadian statute, which it is now once more pretended is without force, but no intimation was given to those fishermen that these provisions were nugatory and would be resisted by the United States Government. Lest there should be any misapprehension on that subject, however, on June 9 of the same year, less than a month after that circular, another circular was issued from the same Department stating again the terms of the treaty of 1818, and then containing the following paragraph: "Fishermen of the United States are bound to respect the British laws for the regulation and preservation of the fisheries to the same extent to which they are applicable to British and Canadian fishermen." The same circular, noticing the change made in the Canadian fishery act of 1868 by the amendment of 1870, makes this observation: "It will be observed that the warning formerly given is not required under the amended act, but that vessels trespassing are liable to seizure without such warning."

THE CANADIAN STATUTE OF 1866.

Mr. Phelps is again under an erroneous impression with regard to the statute introduced at the last session of the Dominion Parliament.

He is informed that "since the seizure" the Canadian authorities have pressed, or are pressing, through the Canadian Parliament in much haste, an act which is designed, for the first time in the history of the legislature under this treaty, to make the facts

The following observations are appropriate in relation to this passage of Mr. Phelps's letter:

(1) The act which he refers to was not passed in haste. It was passed through the two houses in the usual manner, and with the observance of all the usual forms.
Its passage occupied probably more time than was occupied in the passage through the Congress of the United States of a measure which possesses much the same character, and which will be referred to hereafter.

(2) The act has no bearing on the seizures referred to.

(3) It does not make any act illegal which was legal before, but declares what penalty attaches to the offenses which were already prohibited. It may be observed in reference to the charges of "undue haste," and of "legislating for the first time in the history of the legislation under the treaty," that before the statute referred to had become law the United States Congress passed a statute containing the following section:

"That whenever any foreign country whose vessels have been placed on the same footing in the ports of United States as American vessels (the coastwise trade excepted) shall deny to any vessel of the United States any of the commercial privileges according to national vessels in the harbors, ports, or waters of such foreign country, the President, on receiving satisfactory information of the continuance of such discrim-inations against any vessel of the United States, is hereby authorized to issue his proclamation, excluding, on and after such time as he may indicate, from the exercise of such commercial privileges in the ports of the United States are denied to American vessels in the ports of each foreign country, all vessels of such foreign country of a similar character to the vessels of the United States thus discriminated against, and suspending such concessions previously granted to the vessels of such country; and on and after the date named in such proclamation for it to take effect, if the master, officer, or agent of any vessel of such foreign country excluded by said proclamation from the exercise of any commercial privileges shall do any act prohibited by said proclamation in the ports, harbors, or waters of the United States for or on account of such vessel, such vessel and its rigging, tackle, furniture, and boats, and all the goods on board, shall be liable to seizure and to forfeiture to the United States; and any person opposing any officer of the United States in the enforcement of this act, or aiding and abetting any other person in such opposition, shall forfeit $500 and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years." (Sec. 17 of act No. 63 of Congress, 1886.)

This enactment has all the features of hostility which Mr. Phelps has stigmatized as "unprecedented in the history of legislation under the treaty."

ENFORCEMENT OF THE ACTS WITHOUT NOTICE.

Mr. Phelps insists upon what he regards as "obvious grounds of reason and justice" and "upon common principles of equity, that previous notice should have been given of the new stringent restrictions" it was intended to enforce.

It has already been shown that no new restrictions have been attempted. The case of the David J. Adams is proceeding under the statutes which have been enforced during the whole time when the treaty had operation.

It is true that for a short time prior to the treaty of Washington, and when expectations existed of such a treaty being arrived at, the instructions of 1870, which are cited by Mr. Phelps, were issued by the Imperial authorities. It is likewise true that under these instructions the rights of Her Majesty's subjects in Canada were not insisted on in their entirety. These instructions were obviously applicable to the particular time at which and the particular circumstances under which they were issued by Her Majesty's Government.

But it is obviously unfair to invoke them now under wholly different circumstances as establishing a "practical construction" of the treaty, or as affording any ground for claiming that the indulgence which they extended should be perpetual.

The fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington were annulled by a notice from the Government of the United States, and, as has already been urged, it would seem to have been the duty of that Government, rather than of the Government of Canada, to have warned its own people of the consequences which must ensue. This was done in 1870 by the circulars from the Treasury Department at Washington, and might well have been done at this time.

Mr. Phelps has been pleased to stigmatize "the action of the Canadian authority in seizing and still detaining the David J. Adams" as not only unfriendly and discourteous, but altogether unwarrantable.

He proceeds to state that that vessel "had violated no existing law," although his letter cites the statute which she had directly and plainly violated; and he states that she "had incurred no penalty that any known statute imposed"; while he has directed at large the words which inflict a penalty for the violation of that statute. He declares it seems impossible for him to escape the conclusion that "this and similar seizures were made by the Canadian authorities for the deliberate purpose of harassing and embarrassing the American fishing vessels in the pursuit of their lawful employment," and that the injury is very much aggravated by the motives which appear to have prompted it.

He professes to have found the real source of the difficulty in the "irritation that has taken place among a portion of the Canadian people, on account of the termination by the United States Government of the Washington treaty," and in a desire to drive the United States "by harassing and annoying their fishermen into the adoption of a new treaty, by which Canadian fish shall be admitted free," and he declares that "this scheme is likely to prove as mistaken in policy as it is unjustifiable in principle."

He might, perhaps, have more accurately stated the real source of the difficulty, had he suggested that the United States authorities have long endeavored, and are still endeavoring, to obtain that which by their solemn treaty they deliberately renounced, and to deprive the Canadian people of that which by treaty the Canadian people lawfully acquired.

The people of the British North American Provinces ever since the year 1818 (with the exception of those periods in which the reciprocity treaty and the fishery clauses of the Washington treaty prevailed), have, at enormous expense, and with great difficulty, been protecting their fisheries against encroachments by fishermen of the United States, carried on under every form and pretext, and aided by such denunciations as Mr. Phelps has thought proper to reproduce on this occasion. They value no less now than they formerly did the rights which were secured to them by the treaty, and they are still indisposed to yield those rights, either to individual aggression or official demands.

The course of the Canadian Government, since the rescision of the fishery clauses of the Washington treaty, has been such as hardly to merit the aspersions which Mr. Phelps has used. In order to avoid irritation and to meet a desire which the Government represented by Mr. Phelps professed to entertain for the settlement of all questions which could reawaken controversy, they canceled for six months after the expiration of those clauses all the benefits which the United States fishermen had enjoyed under them, although, during that interval, the Government of the United States enforced against Canadian fishermen the laws which those fishery clauses had suspended.

Mr. Bayard, the United States Secretary of State, has made some recognition of these facts in a letter which he is reported to have written recently to the owners of the David J. Adams. He says:

"More than one year ago I sought to protect our citizens engaged in fishing from results which might attend any possible misunderstanding between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States as to the measure of their mutual rights and privileges in the territorial waters of British North America. After the termination of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, in June last, it seemed to me then, and seems to me now, very hard that differences of opinion between the two Governments should cause loss to honest citizens, whose line of obedience might be thus rendered vague and uncertain, and their property be brought into jeopardy. Influenced by this feeling, I procured a temporary arrangement which secured our fishermen full enjoyment of all Canadian fisheries, free from molestation, during a period which would permit discussion of a just international settlement of the whole fishery question; but other counsels prevailed, and my efforts further to protect fishermen from such trouble as you now suffer were unavailing."

At the end of the interval of six months the United States authorities concluded to refrain from any attempt to negotiate for larger fishery rights for their people, and they have continued to enforce their customs laws against the fishermen and people of Canada.

The least they could have been expected to do under these circumstances was to leave to the people of Canada the full and unquestioned enjoyment of the rights secured to them by treaty. The Government of Canada has simply insisted upon those rights and has presented to the legal tribunals its claim to have them enforced.

The insinuations of ulterior motives, the imputations of unfriendly dispositions, and the singularly inaccurate representation of all the leading features of the questions under discussion, may, it has been assumed, be passed by with little more comment. They are hardly likely to induce Her Majesty's Government to sacrifice the rights which they have heretofore helped our people to protect, and they are too familiar to awaken indignation or surprise.

The undersigned respectfully recommends that the substance of this memorandum, if approved, be forwarded to the secretary of state for the colonies, for the information of Her Majesty's Government.

SIR: With reference to your notes* of the 19th and 20th of October last, I have the honor to transmit to you herewith copy of a dispatch from the governor-general of Canada to Her Majesty's secretary of state for the colonies relative to the cases of the American fishing vessels Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele, which I am instructed by Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs to communicate to the United States Government.

The Marquis of Lansdowne to Mr. Stanhope.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, December 20, 1886.

SIR: I had the honor of receiving your dispatch of the 22d of November in regard to the case of the Everett Steele and Pearl Nelson, recently detained at Shelburne and Arichat, Nova Scotia, for non-compliance with the customs regulations of the Dominion.

The circumstances under which the conduct of these vessels attracted the attention of the customs authorities were set out in the privy council orders of the 18th of November, certified copies of which were forwarded to you under cover of my dispatches of the 29th November.

The information contained in these documents was obtained in order to comply with the request for a report on these two cases which you had addressed to me by telegram on a previous date. I have now carefully examined the fuller statements made by Mr. Bayard, both as to the facts and as to the considerations by which the conduct of the local officials should in his opinion have been governed. You will I think find, on reference to the privy council orders already before you, that the arguments advanced by Mr. Bayard have been sufficiently met by the observations of my minister of marine and fisheries, whose reports are embodied in those orders.

It is not disputed that the Everett Steele was in Shelburne Harbor on the 25th March and sailed thence without reporting. In consequence of this omission on the master's part his vessel was, on her return to Shelburne, in September, detained by the collector. The master having explained that his presence in the harbor had been occasioned by stress of weather, and that his failure to report was inadvertent, and this explanation having been telegraphed to the minister of marine at Ottawa, the vessel was at once allowed to proceed to sea; her release took place at noon on the day following that of her detention.

In the case of the Pearl Nelson it is not denied that nine of her crew were landed in Arichat Harbor at a late hour in the evening of her arrival and before the master had reported to the custom-house. It is obvious that if men were to be allowed to go on shore, under such circumstances, without notification to the authorities, great facilities would be offered for landing contraband goods, and there can be no question that the master, by permitting his men to land, was guilty of a violation of sections 25 and 180 of the customs act. There seems to be reason to doubt his statement that he was driven into Arichat by stress of weather; but, be this as it may, the fact of his having entered the harbor for a lawful purpose would not carry with it a right to evade the law to which all vessels frequenting Canadian ports are amenable. In this case, as in that of the Everett Steele, already referred to, the statement of the master that his offense was due to inadvertence was accepted, and the fine imposed at once remitted.

I observe that in his dispatch relating to the first of these cases Mr. Bayard insists with much earnestness upon the fact that certain "prerogatives" of access to the territorial waters of the Dominion were specially reserved under the convention of 1818 to the fishermen of the United States, and that a vessel entering a Canadian harbor for any purpose coming within the terms of Article 1 of that convention has as much right to be in that harbor as she would have to be upon the high seas, and he proceeds to institute a comparison between the detention of the Everett Steele and the wrongful seizure of a vessel on the high seas upon the suspicion of being engaged in the slave trade. Mr. Bayard further calls attention to the special consideration to which, from the circumstances of their profession, the fishermen of the United States are, in his opinion, entitled, and he dwells upon the extent of injury which would result to them if they were debarred from the exercise of any of the rights assured to them by treaty or convention.

I observe that in Sir Julian Pauncefote's letter inclosed in your dispatch it is stated that the secretary of state for foreign affairs wishes to urge upon the Dominion Government the great importance of issuing stringent instructions to its officials not to interfere with any of the privileges expressly reserved to United States fishermen under Article I of the convention of 1818.

I trust that the explanations which I have already been able to give in regard to the cases of these vessels will have satisfied you that the facts disclosed do not show any necessity for the issuing of instructions other than those already circulated to the local officials intrusted with the execution of the customs and fishery law.

There is certainly no desire on the part of my Government (nor, I believe, does the conduct of the local officials justify the assumption that such a desire exists) to curtail in any respect the privileges enjoyed by United States fishermen in Canadian waters. It can not on the other hand be contended that because these privileges exist, and are admitted by the Government of the Dominion, those who enjoy them are to be allowed immunity from the regulations to which all vessels resorting to Canadian waters are without exception subjected under the customs act of 1853 and the different statutes relating to the fisheries of the Dominion.

In both of the cases under consideration their was a clear and undoubted violation of the law, and the local officials would have been culpable if they had omitted to notice it. That there was no animus on their part or on that of the Canadian Government is, I think, clearly proved by the promptitude with which the circumstances were investigated and the readiness shown to overlook the offense, and to remit the penalty incurred, as soon as proof was forthcoming that the offense had been unintentionally committed. In support of this view I would draw your attention to the letter (see inclosure to my dispatch of 29th November) of Mr. Phelan, the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, who has expressed his own satisfaction at the action of the authorities in the case of the Pearl Nelson and who also refers to the communication received by him from the Department of State, in which it is stated that the conduct of the assistant commissioner of customs in dealing with two other cases of a somewhat similar complexion "shows a proper spirit."

Sir L. S. Sackville West to Mr. Bayard.

WASHINGTON, April 4, 1887. (Received April 6.)

SIR: With reference to my note of the 28th of January last, I have the honor to inclose to you herewith copy of an approved report of a committee of the privy council of Canada, embodying a report of the minister of marine and fisheries on the cases of the United States fishing vessels Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele.

I have, etc.,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

[Inclosure.]

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council, on the 15th January, 1887.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch dated November 22, 1886, from the secretary of state for the colonies, inclosing letters from Mr. Secretary Bayard, bearing date 19th October, and referring to the cases of the schooners Pearl Nelson and Everett Steele.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosures were referred, reports that in reply to a telegram from the secretary of state for the colonies, an order in council, passed on the 15th November last, containing a full statement of facts regarding the detention of the above-named vessels, was transmitted to Mr. Stanhope; it will not therefore be necessary to repeat this statement in the present report.

The minister observes in the first place that the two fishing schooners Everett Steele and Pearl Nelson were not detained for any alleged contravention of the treaty of 1818 or the fishery laws of Canada, but solely for the violation of the customs law. By this law all vessels of whatever character are required to report to the collector of customs immediately upon entering port, and are not to break bulk or land crew or cargo before this is done.

The minister states that the captain of the Everett Steele had on a previous voyage entered the port of Shelburne on the 25th March, 1886, and after remaining for eight hours had put to sea again without reporting to the customs. For this previous offense he was, upon entering Shelburne Harbor on the 10th September last, detained and the facts were reported to the minister of customs at Ottawa. With these facts was coupled the captain's statement that on the occasion of the previous offense he had been misled by the deputy harbor-master, from whom he understood that he would not be obliged to report unless he remained in harbor for twenty-four hours. The minister accepted the statement in excuse and the Everett Steele was allowed to proceed on her voyage.

The customs laws had been violated; the captain of the Everett Steele admitted the violation, and for this the usual penalty could have been legally enforced. It was, however, not enforced, and no detention of the vessel occurred beyond the time necessary to report the facts to headquarters and obtained the decision of the minister.

The minister submits that he can not discern in this transaction any attempt to interfere with the privileges of United States fishing vessels in Canadian waters or any sufficient cause for the protest of Mr. Bayard.

The minister states that in the case of the Pearl Nelson no question was raised as to her being a fishing vessel or her enjoyment of any privileges guaranteed by the treaty of 1818. Her captain was charged with a violation of the customs law, and of that alone, by having, on the day before reporting to the collector of customs at Arichat, landed ten of his crew.

This he admitted upon oath. When the facts were reported to the minister of customs he ordered that the vessel might proceed upon depositing $200, pending a fuller examination. This was done, and the fuller examination resulted in establishing the violation of the law and in finding that the penalty was legally enforceable. The minister, however, in consideration of the alleged ignorance of the captain as to what constituted an infraction of the law, ordered the deposit to be refunded.

In this case there was a clear violation of Canadian law; there was no lengthened detention of the vessel; the deposit was ultimately refunded, and the United States consul general at Halifax expressed himself by letter to the minister as highly pleased at the result.

The minister observes that in this case he is at a loss to discover any well-founded grievance or any attempted denial of or interference with any privileges guaranteed to United States fishermen by the treaty of 1818.

The minister further observes that the whole argument and protest of Mr. Bayard appears to proceed upon the assumption that these two vessels were subjected to unreasonable interference in that they were called upon to submit to the requirements of Canadian customs law, and that this interference was prompted by a desire to curtail or deny the privileges of resort to Canadian harbors for the purposes allowed by the treaty of 1818.

It is needless to say that this assumption is entirely incorrect.

Canada has a very large extent of sea-coast with lumberless ports, into which foreign vessels are constantly entering for purposes of trade. It becomes necessary in the interests of legitimate commerce that stringent regulations should be made by compulsory conformity to which illicit traffic should be prevented. These customs regulations all vessels of all countries are obliged to obey, and these they do obey, without in any way considering it a hardship. United States fishing vessels come directly from a foreign and not distant country, and it is not in the interests of legitimate Canadian commerce that they should be allowed access to our ports without the same strict supervision as is exercised over all other foreign vessels, otherwise there would be no guaranty against illicit traffic of large dimensions to the injury of honest trade and the serious diminution of the Canadian revenue. United States fishing vessels are cheerfully accorded the right to enter Canadian ports for the purpose of obtaining shelter, repairs, and procuring wood and water; but in exercising this right they are not, and can not be, independent of the customs laws. They have the right to enter for the purposes set forth, but there is only one legal way in which to enter, and that is by conformity to the customs regulations.

When Mr. Bayard asserts that Captain Forbes had as much right to be in Shelburne Harbor seeking shelter and water "as he would have had on the high seas carrying on under shelter of the flag of the United States legitimate commerce," he is undoubtedly right, but when he declares, as he does in reality, that to compel Captain Forbes, in Shelburne Harbor, to conform to Canadian customs regulations, or to punish him for their violation, is a more unwarrantable stretch of power than "that of seizure on the high seas of a ship unjustly suspected of being a slaver," he makes a statement which carries with it its own refutation.

Customs regulations are made by each country for the protection of its own trade and commerce, and are enforced entirely within its own territorial jurisdiction, while the seizure of a vessel upon the high seas, except under extraordinary and abnormal circumstances, is an unjustifiable interference with the free right of navigation common to all nations.

As to Mr. Bayard's observation that by treatment such as that experienced by the Everett Steele, "the door of shelter is shut to American fishermen as a class," the minister expresses his belief that Mr. Bayard can not have considered the scope of such an assertion or the inferences which might reasonably be drawn from it.

If a United States fishing vessel enters a Canadian port for shelter, repairs, or for wood and water, her captain need have no difficulty in reporting her as having entered for one of those purposes, and the Everett Steele would have suffered no detention had her captain, on the 25th March, simply reported his vessel to the collector. As it was, the vessel was detained for no longer time than was necessary to obtain the decision of the minister of customs, and the penalty for which it was liable was not enforced. Surely Mr. Bayard does not wish to be understood as claiming for United States fishing vessels total immunity from all customs regulations, or as intimating that if they can not exercise their privileges unlawfully they will not exercise them at all.

Mr. Bayard complains that the Pearl Nelson, although seeking to exercise no commercial privileges, was compelled to pay commercial fees, such as are applicable to trading vessels. In reply the minister observes that the fees spoken of are not "commercial fees;" they are harbor-master's dues, which all vessels making use of legally constituted harbors are, by law, compelled to pay, and entirely irrespective of any trading that may be done by the vessel.

The minister observes that no single case has yet been brought to his notice in which any United States fishing vessel has in any way been interfered with for exercising any rights guaranteed under the treaty of 1818 to enter Canadian ports for shelter, repairs, wood, or water; that the Canadian Government would not countenance or permit any such interference, and that in all cases of this class when trouble has arisen it has been due to a violation of Canadian customs law, which demands the simple legal entry of the vessel as soon as it comes into port.

The committee concurring in the above report recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy thereof to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

SIR: I caused to be referred for the consideration of my Government a copy of your dispatch of the 23d February last transmitting copy of a letter from the foreign office, with its inclosures, respecting the case of the Sarah H. Prior and requesting to be furnished with a report upon the alleged conduct of the captain of the Canadian revenue cutter Critio on the occasion referred to, and I have now the honor to forward herewith a certified copy of an approved report of a committee of my privy council embodying a statement of Captain McLaren, of the Critio, with reference to the circumstances complained of.

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general in council on the 7th April, 1887.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch dated 23d February, 1887, from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies asking that an investigation may be made into the conduct of the captain of the Canadian cruiser Critio as regards the treatment extended to Capt. Thomas McLaughlin, of the U. S. fishing schooner Sarah H. Prior, in the harbor of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, in September last.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch was referred, submitted the following statement of Captain McLaren, of the Critio, with reference to the circumstances complained of.

On or about the 14th September, 1886, Captain McLaughlin, of the Sarah H. Prior, came on board the government cruiser Critio at Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, wanting to know if he would be infringing on the laws by paying the captain of the schooner John Ingalls a small sum of money for the recovery of a seine which he said he had lost a few days before, and which had been picked up by the said captain.

I told him that I would not interfere with him if the captain of the Ingalls chose to run the risk of taking the matter in his own hands, but that the proper course would be for the captain of the John Ingalls to report the matter to the collector of customs, who was also receiver of wrecks, and then if he (Captain McLaughlin) could prove that the seine was his, he could recover it by paying the costs. Captain McLaughlin then said that as the seine was all torn to pieces, he would not bother himself about it.

The captain of the John Ingalls did not come to see me about the matter, and I heard nothing of it afterwards.

W. McLAREN.

The committee respectfully advise that your excellency be moved to forward the foregoing statement of Captain McLaren to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies in answer to his dispatch of the 23d February last.

Clerk Privy Council.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE.

Ottawa, April 2, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith a certified copy of a privy council order respecting the case of the United States schooner Mollie Adams, which formed the subject of your predecessor's dispatches of the 6th October and 16th December.

I have to express my regret that it should have proved impossible to supply you with the necessary information bearing upon this case at an earlier date. Some time was, however, taken in collecting the evidence embodied in the reports, copies of which accompany the minute, and the occurrence of the general elections for the federal parliament to some extent interrupted the course of business in the public departments and increased the delay.

You will find in the report of my minister of marine and fisheries, and in the inclosures appended to it, a full and, I think, satisfactory reply to the whole of the charges made by the Government of the United States against the conduct of the Canadian officials concerned in the matter of the Mollie Adams.

I would venture to draw your especial attention to the concluding passages of the minister's report, in which he earnestly deprecates the manner in which in this, as well as in other cases in which disputes have arisen under conditions of a similar character, the Government of the United States has not hesitated to adopt without any inquiry, and to support with the whole weight of its authority, ex parte charges entirely unconfirmed by collateral evidence, and unaccompanied by any official attestation.

In view of the fact that owing to the action of the Government of the United States in terminating the fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington, a large body of American fishermen have suddenly found themselves excluded from waters to which they had for many years past resorted without molestation, and that the duty of thus excluding them has been thrown upon a newly constituted force of fishery police, necessarily without experience of the difficult and delicate duties which it is called upon to perform, there would be no cause for surprise if occasional cases of hardship or of overzealous action upon the part of the local authorities engaged in protecting the interests of the Dominion were to be brought to light. It is the earnest desire of my government to guard against the occurrence of any such cases, to deal in a spirit of generosity and forbearance with United States fishermen resorting to Canadian waters in the exercise of their lawful rights, and to take effectual measures for preventing arbitrary or uncalled-for interference on the part of its officials with the privileges allowed to foreign fishermen under the terms of the convention of 1818.

Mr. Bayard's note of the 10th September calls attention to the alleged refusal of the collector of customs at Port Malgrave, Nova Scotia, to allow the master of the Mollie Adams to purchase barrels to hold a supply of water for which the vessel had put into port. The report of the subcollector of customs at Port Malgrave, which is hereto annexed, and which he expresses his readiness to verify upon oath, shows that the collector offered to borrow barrels for carrying the water on board if the tank were made tight, and even offered to send a man on board to perform this work; but while the captain of the schooner and he were in conversation one of the crew brought the information that the cook had succeeded in calking the tank.

That thereupon the subcollector borrowed the seven barrels, with which the crew supplied water for their vessel; that the barrels were returned to the collector, and the captain appeared well pleased with what had been done. The good will of the collector is also shown in his giving the men a letter to his superior officer, in explanation of the circumstances, and recommended that the purchase of barrels be allowed, a step which was rendered unnecessary by the arrangements later made.

The subcollector in answer to his inquiry as to what had become of the water barrels in use on board the vessel was informed that they had been filled with mackerel. This answer goes to prove that Mr. Murray was acting strictly within the scope of his duty in ascertaining that the barrels sought to be purchased were not to be used for an illicit purpose.

The colonial secretary's dispatch of the 16th December, 1886, refers to the same schooner, the Mollie Adams, and her alleged treatment at Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, and Port Medway, Nova Scotia.

In this case Mr. Bayard's representations are based solely upon a letter written to him by the captain of the vessel under date the 12th November, which is unsupported by any other evidence, and upon the strength of which Mr. Bayard proceeds to charge the Canadian authorities with "churlish and inhospitable treatment," and with exhibiting a coldness and rudeness of conduct at variance with the hospitable feelings of common humanity.

The minister of marine and fisheries submits, as a complete reply to the allegations contained in Captain Jacob's letter—(1) The statement of the collector of customs at Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, (2) the statement of Captain McLaren, of the Canadian cruiser Critic, and (3) the report of the collector of customs at Port Medway.

The two former officers, although giving their reports without concert, agree upon the main points at issue, and the statements of all three are clear, straightforward and reasonable, and in marked contrast to the sensational and improbable story related by Captain Jacobs.

Captain Jacobs declares that on or about the 26th September last, during very heavy weather, he fell in with the bark Neskilita, which had run on a bar at Malpeque Harbor and become a total wreck. That he took off the crew, seventeen in number, at 12 o'clock at night, carried them to his own vessel, fed them for three days, and then gave them $50 with which to pay their fare home, and provisions to last them on their way. He states that the captain of the Canadian cruiser Critic came on board, was told the circumstances, but offered no assistance, and that no one on shore would take the wrecked men unless he became responsible for the payment of their board.

The collector at Malpeque in his report says that early on the morning after the wreck, so soon as the news reached him he repaired to the harbor to see what assistance could be given; that he then met the captain of the Neskilita in company with Captain Jacobs, and was told by the latter that the crew of the wrecked vessel were comfortably cared for on his vessel, and that nothing more could be done.

Captain McLaren, of the Critic, says that he at once visited the Mollie Adams and was told by Captain Jacobs that "he had made all arrangements for the crew."

The collector and Captain McLaren agree in stating from information gathered by them that the crew of the wrecked vessel came to shore in their own boat unassisted, and after boarding a Nova Scotia vessel were invited by Captain Jacobs, with whom the captain of the Neskilita had beforetime sailed out of Gloucester, to go on board the Mollie Adams.

The collector was asked by the captain of the Neskilita if he would assist himself and crew to their homes, and answered that he could not unless assured that the themselves were without means for that purpose, in which case he would have to telegraph to Ottawa for instructions. The captain of the Neskilita made no further application.

The minister observes that it is the practice of the Dominion Government to assist shipwrecked and destitute sailors, in certain cases of great hardship, to their destination or homes, but in all cases it must be clear that they are destitute, and the application for assistance must be made to Ottawa through the collector of customs. Had such an application been made by the captain of the Neskilita it would have received due consideration.

In answer to the charge that board could not be obtained for the wrecked crew, it is stated by Captain McLaren that the crew of a United States vessel wrecked about the same time found no difficulty in getting board, and that the captain of the Neskilita had himself arranged to board with the collector, who expressed surprise at his failing to come.

Captain Jacobs complains that he was not allowed to land from his vessel the material saved from the wreck. To this charge the collector replies that he received no intimation of any wrecked material except the crew's luggage being on board the Mollie Adams, and Captain Jacobs made no request to him regarding the landing of wrecked material, and that he (the collector) gave all assistance in his power to the captain of the Neskilita in saving material from the wreck.

It was subsequently discovered that Captain Jacobs had on board the Mollie Adams a seine from the wrecked vessel belonging to the underwriters, for taking care of which, when obliged to give it up, Captain Jacobs claimed and was paid the sum of $50.

Captain Jacobs states that he was put to a loss of ten days' fishing by his detention with the Neskilita. The reports of both the collector and Captain McLaren agree giving a very different and sufficient reason, viz. very bad weather and consequent inability to fish, a disability experienced by the whole fishing fleet at that time anchored in Malpeque.

The second complaint of Mr. Bayard is that when Captain Jacobs, experiencing a dearth of provisions as a consequence of his charitable action, shortly after put into Port Medway and asked to purchase half a barrel of flour and enough provisions to make him home, the collector, "with full knowledge of all the circumstances," refused the request and threatened him with seizure if he bought anything whatever.

The collector's report, hereto annexed, shows that Captain Jacobs entered his port on the 25th October, fully one month after the occurrence at Malpeque; that in entering he made affirmation that he called for shelter and repairs, and for no "other purpose whatever;" that just before leaving he asked permission to purchase half a barrel of flour, and when asked by the collector if he was without provisions, he replied that he was not, adding that he had "a good supply of all kinds of provisions except flour, and enough of that to last him home unless he met some unusual delay."

Under these circumstances the collector did not give the permission asked, but he made no threat of seizure of vessel or imposition of penalty.

Mr. Bayard supports the complaint of Captain Jacobs that he was charged fees for entering his vessel at Canadian customs, and that these fees varied at different ports, being, for instance, 15 cents at Souris, Prince Edward Island, 50 cents at Port Mulgrave, and 50 cents at Port Hood, at which latter port Captain Jacobs sent his brother to enter for him, but was informed that his entry was illegal and that he, as master, must himself enter his vessel. He complains of being obliged to pay twice, once for his brother's entry and once for his own.

The minister states with regard to this that no collector of customs in Canada is authorized to charge a fee for entering or clearing a vessel, nor for any papers necessary to do this. Sailing masters, however, who are unused to the law, or not competent to make out their papers, are in the habit of employing persons as customs brokers to make out their papers for them, and for this service these brokers charge a small fee. These are not Government officers nor under Government control, and their services are voluntarily paid for by those who employ them. The small fees of which Captain Jacobs complains need not have been paid by him if he had been willing or qualified to make out his own papers. That he was not so willing or qualified and that he employed a broker to make out his papers is conclusively shown by the following telegram received from the collector at Port Hood, the charges at which port Mr. Secretary Bayard so vigorously denounces.

"Deputy minister of fisheries to collector, Port Hood, Nova Scotia.

"OTTAWA, March 16, 1887.

"Did you during last season exact from Captain Solomon Jacobs, of schooner Mollie Adams, any charge for reporting, or other service at Port Hood? If so, please state amount received and for what."

"Collector, Port Hood, to deputy minister of fisheries.

"PORT HOOD, NOVA SCOTIA, March 16, 1887.

"Solomon Jacobs, of schooner Mollie Adams, sent one of his crew to report 13th September last; he made a report. I told him, however, that the report should be made by the master. A few hours afterwards Jacobs himself came and reported. They got Dan. McLennan, who is now in Halifax, to write out the reports. I believe I charged them 25 cents each for brokerage. No other charges whatever were made."

The minister states that he has no doubt that the other payments at customs ports made to Mr. Bayard were made for services rendered Captain Jacobs by persons making out his entry papers, and which he does not appear to have been qualified to himself.

With reference to Mr. Bayard's reiteration of Captain Jacobs's complaint that in certain harbors he was obliged to pay a different scale of dues, the minister of marine submits that in Canada there are distinct classes of harbors. Some are under the control of a commission appointed wholly or in part by the Government, under whose management improvements are made and which regulates, subject to the approval of Government, the harbor dues which are to be paid by all vessels entering such ports and enjoying the advantages therein provided.

Others are natural harbors in great part unimproved, whose limits are generally fixed by order in council and for which a harbor-master is appointed by Government, to whom all vessels entering pay certain nominal harbor-master's fees, which are regulated by a general act of parliament, and which constitute a fund out of which the harbor-master is paid a small salary for his services in maintaining order within the harbor. The port of St. John, New Brunswick, is entirely under municipal control and has its own stated and uniform scale of charges.

Harbor dues are paid whenever a vessel enters a port which is under a commission and harbor-master's fees are paid only twice per calendar year by vessels entering ports not under a commission. Sydney belongs to the first class, and at that port Captain Jacobs paid the legal harbor dues. Malpeque and Port Mulgrave belong to the second class, and in those Captain Jacobs paid the legal harbor-master's fees which, for a vessel like his, of from 100 to 200 tons, is $1.50. That he paid only $1.00 at Malpeque is due to an error of the harbor-master, who should have charged him $1.50 and by this error Captain Jacobs saved 50 cents, of which he should not complain. For full information as to the legal status of Canadian harbors Mr. Bayard is respectfully referred to the Canadian Statutes, 36 Vict., cap. 63; 42 Vict., cap. 30; and 43 Vict., cap. 30.

The minister of marine and fisheries believes that after a thorough perusal of the Mr. Bayard will not cite the payments made by Captain Jacobs as evidences of the "irresponsible and different treatment to which he was subjected in the several ports he visited, the only common feature of which seems to have been a surly hostility."

The minister submits that, from a careful consideration of all the circumstances, he can not resist the conviction that, in this whole transaction, Captain Jacobs was more concerned in making up a case against the Canadian authorities than in unobtrusively performing any necessary acts of hospitality, and that his version of the matter, as sent to Mr. Bayard, is utterly unreliable.

The Neshkilita was wrecked off a Canadian harbor; the crew, it is stated, came ashore in their own boat and unassisted; a Canadian collector was at hand offering his services, and within easy appeal to the Government, and the captain of a Canadian cruiser was in port; yet, Captain Jacobs would appear, by his own story, to have taken complete charge of the captain, to have ignored all proffers of assistance, and to have constituted himself the sole guardian and spokesman of the wrecked crew, to have been in short the one sole man actuated by kindly, humane feelings among a horde of cruel and unsympathetic Canadians.

For any exercise of good-will and assistance to Canadian seamen in distress by either foreign or native vessels, the Canadian Government can not but feel deeply grateful, and stands ready, as has been its invariable custom, to recognize suitably and reward such services, and when Captain Jacobs performs any necessary act of charitable help towards Canadian seamen in distress without the obvious aim of manufacturing an international grievance therefrom, he will not prove an exception to Canada's generous treatment.

The minister observes that in a dispatch to the governor-general, dated the 27th December, 1886, and in reference to this same case, Mr. Stanhope writes: "With reference to my dispatch of the 16th instant relating to the case of the United States fishing vessel Mollie Adams, and referring to the general complaints made on the part of the United States Government of the treatment of American fishing vessels in Canadian ports, I think it right to observe that whilst Her Majesty's Government do not assume the correctness of any allegations without first having obtained the explanations of the Dominion Government, they rely confidently upon your minister taking every care that Her Majesty's Government are not placed in a position of being obliged to defend any acts of questionable justice or propriety."

The minister, while thanking Her Majesty's Government for the assurance conveyed that it will not "assume the correctness of any allegations without having obtained the explanations of the Dominion Government," and whilst assuring Her Majesty's Government that every possible care has been and will be taken that no "acts of questionable justice or propriety" are committed by the officers of the Dominion Government, can not refrain from calling attention to the loose, unreliable, and unsatisfactory nature of much of the information supplied to the United States Government, and upon which very grave charges are made, and very strong language officially used against the Canadian authorities. For instance, as stated in a previous part of this report, the strong representations made by Mr. Bayard in the case of the Mollie Adams are based solely upon a letter written by Captain Jacobs, not even accompanied by an official attestation, and not supported by a tittle of corroborative evidence.

It does not appear that any attempt was made to investigate the truth of the story, unreasonable and improbable as it must have appeared, as the letter written by Captain Jacobs bears date the 12th November, while Mr. Bayard's note bearing thereupon is dated the 1st December. It would seem only fitting that in so grave a matter, involving alike the good name of a friendly country and the continued subsistence of previous amicable relations, great care should have been taken to avoid the use of such strong and even hostile language, based upon the unsupported statements of an interested skipper, and one whose reputation for straightforward conduct does not appear to be above reproach, if credence is to be given to the attack description, taken from the Boston Advertiser, of a transaction said to have occurred in his native city, and in which Captain Jacobs appears to have played no enviable part.

Numerous other instances of like flimsy and unreliable foundations for charges made against the Canadian authorities in regard to their treatment of United States fishing vessels can not have failed to attract the attention of Her Majesty's Government in the dispatches which from time to time have reached it from the United States.

The master of a United States fishing vessel, imperfectly understanding the provisions of the convention of 1818, the requirements of the Canadian customs law, or the regulations of Canadian ports, having, perhaps, an exaggerated idea of his supposed rights, or, it may be, desirous of evading all restrictions, is brought to book by officers of the law. He feels aggrieved and angry, and straightway conveys his supposed grievance to the authorities at Washington. Thereupon, without any seeming allowance for the possibility of the statement being inaccurate or the narrator unfriendly, and with apparently no attempt to investigate the truth of the statement, it is made the basis of strong and unfriendly charges against the Canadian Government. Canada has suffered from such unfounded representations, and against the course adopted by the United States in this respect the minister enters his most earnest protest.

As an additional instance of the manner in which evidence is gathered and used to the prejudice of the Canadian case the minister calls attention to a communication submitted to the Senate of the United States by Mr. Edmunds, and which forms printed Document No. 54 of the Forty-ninth Congress, second session. This is the report of Mr. Spencer F. Baird, United States Fish Commissioner, containing a list, with particulars, of sixty-eight New England fishing vessels which had, as he alleged, "been subjected to treatment which neither the treaty of 1818 nor the principles of international law would seem to warrant."

The minister observes that it will appear from a perusal of this report that these sixty-eight cases were made up by Mr. Baird's officer from answers of owners, agents, or masters of fishing vessels in response to a circular letter sent to all New England fishing vessels, inviting them to forward statements of any interference with their operations by the Canadian Government.

Not a single statement was investigated by the Commissioner or any one acting for him, and not a single statement is accompanied by the affidavit of the person making it, or by corroborative evidence of any kind. In most instances, neither date, locality, nor name of Canadian officer is given, and an analysis of many of the cases affords prima facie evidence that they embody no real cause for complaint; yet Mr. Baird and his officer, Mr. Earle, vouched for the correctness and entire reliability of these sixty-eight statements. They were gravely submitted to the Senate as trustworthy evidence of Canadian aggression, and became, no doubt, powerful factors in influencing Congressional legislation hostile to Canadian and British interests.

The minister, while inviting attention to and strongly deprecating such action as above recited on the part of the United States, takes occasion, at the same time, to express his entire confidence that the rights of Canada will not thereby be in any degree prejudiced in the eyes of Her Majesty's Government.

The committee concur in the foregoing report of the minister of marine and fisheries, and they recommend that your Excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, if approved, to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk Privy Council Canada.

PORT MULGRAVE, NOVA SCOTIA,
November 1, 1886.

SIR: Referring to your letter of 28th October, I beg to say that on Monday, the 30th August, the schooner Mollie Adams, of Gloucester, Mass., Solomon Jacobs, master, passed two customs ports in the Straits of Canso before coming to my port. In fact, he sent his boat (dory) with his brother and a Captain Campbell to me to see if I would allow him to get seven empty barrels to put water in. I asked the men what they did with their water barrels. They told me they had filled them with mackerel, and that their tank leaked. I told the men that I had no power to allow them to purchase barrels, but I would borrow barrels to fill with water if they would caulk the tank. I also gave them a letter to take up to my superior, asking him to allow Captain Jacobs to purchase the barrels. They went on board, told their story, and the captain anchored his vessel and came ashore to see me. I offered to send a man on board to caulk the tank. In the mean time one of the crew came on shore and said that the cook had succeeded in tightening the tank; that it held salt water. I then borrowed the seven barrels to fill the water, which they did, and I returned the barrels again, and the captain was well pleased, as he appeared so.

If this is not satisfactory I can make oath to the foregoing.

I am, etc.,

Mr. McNutt to Mr. Tilton.

MALPEQUE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, January 7, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th December, covering statements made by Captain Jacobs, and now adjoin statement of facts as personally known by and communicated to me of wreck of the Neskilita on Malpeque Bar, on Sunday night, the 26th September last. Information reached me early on the following morning, and I at once proceeded to the harbor to see what assistance could be given in the case, when I met Captain Thornborne, of the Neskilita, and Captain Jacobs in company, and was informed by the latter that the crew were on board his vessel, and assured that everything that could be done for their comfort had been done. I was also given to understand that during the night the crew had abandoned their schooner and come in the harbor unassisted in their seine-boat, and boarded a Nova Scotia schooner lying in the harbor, and were the next morning invited by Captain Jacobs to make his vessel their home. I was also informed by Captain McLaren, commander of the Canadian cruiser Critic, that he also tendered his assistance, and was rather haughtily received by Captain Jacobs with the information that the crew were aboard his vessel and that he (Captain McLaren) did not think the case demanded him to force his assistance.

With regard to the wrecked material aboard of Captain Jacobs's vessel, I have only to say that this is the first intimation I have ever had of such material being aboard his vessel, except the crew's luggage, and that assuredly Captain Jacobs did not, so far as I can recollect, make any request of me whatever with regard to the landing of wrecked material.

With reference to the saving of material from the wrecked vessel, I would wish to say that I rendered the captain of the Neskilita all necessary assistance in procuring suitable men to do that work (and who were thus employed by him), and although I am aware that Captain Jacobs did accompany the captain of the Neskilita to the wreck, I can not say in what capacity or under what authority he did so.

So far as the assertion that the crew received the means to take them home from Captain Jacobs is concerned, I know nothing positive, except that he (Captain Jacobs) asked me if the Canadian Government would remunerate him for his attention to the crew, and feeling that I had nothing to do with him, I merely replied that I did not know. But I may say that shortly after the wreck occurred the captain of the Neskilita asked me if I could render them (the crew) any assistance in getting home, and I answered that I could not unless I was assured that they themselves were without the means of doing so, and that in any case I would have to telegraph to the department at Ottawa for instructions. Here the matter stopped, the captain making no further application.

With regard to the delay of ten days, said to be occasioned (Captain Jacobs) by reason of the shipwrecked crew, I may say that during the ten or fourteen days following on the said shipwreck we had an almost continuous period of stormy weather, with the exception of a couple or so of fine days, which were taken advantage of by the fishing fleet, and one at least by Captain Jacobs himself, but by all reports received by me resulting in little or no catches of mackerel.

These, so far as I can now recall them to memory, are the true facts in the case.

I am, etc.,

F; as, so far as

I could learn at the time, they came ashore in one of their own seine-boats and went first to a Nova Scotia vessel and afterwards on board the Mollie Adams.

On the morning after the wreck occurred I went on board the Mollie Adams, and was immediately told by Captain Jacobs that he had made all arrangements for the crew, and having secured a team, was going with the captain of the Neskilita to the custom-house to note a protest. As I could see by the conduct of both captains that I was not wanted, I returned to my own vessel. Afterwards, in the course of a conversation with the captain of the Neskilita, he informed me that he had sailed out of Gloucester for some time, and in the course of that time with Captain Jacobs.

As to the statement that he could not get a boarding-horse for his crew, I think it is false, as the crew of one of the American vessels wrecked about the same time had no difficulty in getting the people to board them. Once while talking with Mr. McNutt, the collector of customs at Malpeque, he mentioned that the captain of the Neskilita had engaged to board at his place, and he expressed his surprise that he was not coming. Both Captain Jacobs and the captain of the Neskilita were committing a fraud in trying to get off with the seine of the wrecked vessel, as it belonged to the underwriters; and I think that it was the prospect of getting Captain Jacobs to get away with the seine that prevented the captain of the Neskilita from asking me for assistance. However, Captain Jacobs, on finding he could not carry out his fraud, presented a claim of $10 for the salvage of the seine and gear, which sum was paid him by Mr. Lemuel Poole, Charlottetown, who was acting on behalf of the underwriters. It may be possible that Captain Jacobs staid at Malpeque after I sailed, but, if so, it was his own fault, as the crew of the Neskilita had gone home before then.

It is my opinion that Captain Jacobs need not have lost one hour of time, for during the time the Neskilita's crew were on board his vessel the fleet, with the exception of one or two small vessels, was anchored in Malpeque, and unable to put to sea owing to the heavy sea on the bar.

After the occurrence of the wreck, about the 20th September, Captain Jacobs cruised in the North Bay and on the Cape Breton coast, and not until the 24th October was he reported as passing through Canso bound home.

As to the paying of the crew's passage home, I can say nothing, except that if he did he did it voluntarily, as the captain of the Neskilita could have sent his crew home without his assistance.

Yours, etc.,

WM. McLAREN.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, Port Medway, January 6, 1887.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 30th ultimo, inclosing extract of statement made by Captain S. Jacobs, of the schooner Mollie Adams, I have to say that on the 25th October last, Captain Solomon Jacobs, of schooner Mollie Adams, reported at this office. His report is now before me, in which he swears that he called here for shelter and repairs and for no other purpose. After making his report and when about leaving the office, Captain Jacobs asked if I would allow him to purchase a half barrel of flour. I asked him if he was without provisions, and he replied that he was not, adding that he had a good supply of all kinds of provisions except flour, and enough of that to last him home unless he met with some unusual delay. I then told him that under the circumstances I could not give him permission to purchase the flour; but no threat was made about seizing his vessel or imposing any penalty whatever.

The above I am quite willing to substantiate under oath, and can produce a witness to the truth of the statement.

I am, etc.,

Extract from the Boston, United States, Advertiser of November 19, 1886.—Gloucester politics.—An appearance of ballot-stuffing.—George Morse nominated for mayor.

GLoucester, November 13.

At a citizens' mass meeting held here this evening, Lawyer Tuft, chairman, to nominate a mayor, a committee, consisting of J. J. Whalen, Albert P. Babson, Capt. Solomon Jacobs, J. N. Dennison, and Edwin L. Lane, was appointed to count ballots.

S. Ex. 113—7

After much wrangling, one informal and then formal ballots were taken, when Mr. Dennison made a minority report, accusing Capt. Solomon Jacobs of stuffing the ballot-box. William T. Merchant counted the ballots while being cast, making 264, but the committee reported 312 cast, which tended to show that Jacobs had put in 48 illegally.

Much excitement prevailed, and a motion was made that he be dismissed from the committee. The chairman called for Jacobs to come forward and explain his action, but it was found that he had disappeared. He was in favor of David J. Robinson as candidate for mayor, but went over to William A. Pew, jr.

Another ballot was taken and Dr. George Morse received the nomination.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D.C., February 5, 1887.

SIR: I forward herewith for your information a copy of a communication from Mr. R. Edward Earle, in charge of the Division of Fisheries of this Commission, accompanied by a list of New England fishing vessels which have been inconvenienced in their fishing operations by the Canadian authorities during the past season; these being in addition to the vessels mentioned in the revised list of vessels involved in the controversy with the Canadian authorities furnished to your committee on the 26th of January by the Secretary of State.

The papers containing the statements were received from the owners, masters, or agents of the vessels concerned, and though not accompanied by affidavits are believed to be correct.

SPENCER F. BAIRD,
Commissioner.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

[Inclosure 1 to inclosure 10.]

Mr. Earle to Mr. Baird.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES,
Washington, D.C., February 5, 1887.

SIR: Some time since, at your request, I mailed circulars to owners or agents of all New England vessels employed in the food-fish fisheries. These called for full statistics of the vessels' operations during the year 1886, and in addition for statements of any inconvenience to which the vessels had been subjected by the recent action of the Canadian Government in denying to American fishing vessels the right to buy bait, ice, or other supplies in its ports, or in placing unusual restrictions on the use of its harbors for shelter.

A very large percentage of the replies to these circulars have already been received, and our examination shows that in addition to the vessels mentioned in the revised list transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate on the 26th January, 1887, sixty-eight other New England fishing vessels have been subjected to treatment which neither the treaty of 1818 nor the principles of international law would seem to warrant.

I inclose for your consideration list of these vessels, together with a brief abstract of the statements of the owners or masters regarding the treatment received. The statements were not accompanied by affidavits, but are believed to be entirely reliable. The name and address of the informant are given in each instance.

Very, etc.,

R. EDWARD EARLE,
In charge Division of Fisheries.

[Inclosure 2 to inclosure 10.]

thing until permission was received from captain of cutter. Canadian officials placed guard over fish saved, and everything saved from wreck narrowly escaped confiscation. (From statements of C. D. Thomas, owner, Portland, Me.)

Christina Ellsworth (schooner), Eastport, Me.; James Ellsworth, master. Entered Port Hastings, Cape Breton, for wood; anchored 10 o'clock and reported at custom-house. At 2 o'clock was boarded by captain of cutter Hector and ordered to sea, being forced to leave without wood. In every harbor entered was refused privilege of buying anything. Anchored under the lee of land in no harbor, but was compelled to enter at custom-house. In no two harbors were the fees alike. (From statements of James Ellsworth, owner and master, Eastport, Me.)

Mary E. Whorf (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; Simon Berrio, master. In July, 1886; lost seine off North Cape, Prince Edward Island, and not allowed to make any repairs on shore, causing a broken voyage and a long delay. Ran short of provisions, and being denied privilege of buying any on land had to obtain from another American vessel. (From statements of Freeman A. Snow, owner, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Stowell Sherman (schooner), Provincetown, Mass.; S. F. Hatch, master. Not allowed to purchase necessary supplies and obliged to report at custom-houses situated at distant and inconvenient places. Ordered out of harbors in stress of weather, namely, out of Cascoville Harbor, Prince Edward Island, nineteen hours after entry, and out of Malpeque Harbor, Prince Edward Island, fifteen hours after entry, wind then blowing too hard to admit of fishing. Returned home with broken trip. (From statements of Samuel T. Hatch, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

Walter L. Rich (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; Obadiah Rich, master. Ordered out of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, in unsuitable weather for fishing, having been in harbor only twelve hours; denied right to purchase provisions; forced to enter at custom-house at Port Hawkesbury, Cape Breton, on Sunday, collector fearing that vessel would leave before Monday and he would thereby lose his fee. (From statements of Obadiah Rich, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Bertha D. Nickerson (schooner), Booth Bay, Me.; N. E. Nickerson, master. Occasioned considerable expense by being denied Canadian harbors to procure crew, and detained in spring while waiting for men to come from Nova Scotia. (From statements of Nickerson and sons, owners, Booth Bay, Me.)

Newell B. Hawes (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; Thomas C. Kennedy, master. Refused privilege of buying provisions in ports in Bay St. Lawrence, and in consequence obliged to leave for home with half a cargo. Made harbor at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in face of storm at 5 p. m., and master immediately started for custom-house, 5 miles distant, meeting captain of cutter Terror on way, to whom he explained errand. On returning found two armed men from cutter on his vessel. At 7 o'clock next morning was ordered to sea, but refused to go in the heavy fog. At 9 o'clock the fog lifted slightly, and, though the barometer was very low and a storm imminent, vessel was forced to leave. Soon met the heavy gale, which split sails, causing considerable damage. Captain of Terror denied claim to right of remaining in harbor twenty-four hours. (From statements of T. C. Kennedy, part owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Helen F. Fredick (schooner), Cape Porpoise, Maine; R. J. Nunan, master. July 20, 1886, entered Port Latour, Nova Scotia, for shelter and water. Was ordered immediately to sea. (From statements of R. J. Nunan, owner and master, Cape Porpoise, Maine.)

Nellie M. Snow (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; A. E. Snow, master. Was not allowed to purchase provisions in any Canadian ports or to refit or land and ship fish, consequently obliged to leave for home with broken trip; not permitted to remain in ports longer than local Canadian officials saw fit. (From statements of J. C. Young, owner, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Gertrude Summers (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; N. S. Snow, master. Refused privilege of purchasing provisions, which resulted in injury to voyage. Found harbor regulations uncertain; sometimes could remain in port twenty-four hours; again was ordered out in three hours. (From statement of N. S. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Charles R. Washington (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; Jesse S. Snow, master. Master informed by collector at Ship Harbor, Cape Breton, that if he bought provisions, even if actually necessary, he would be subject to a fine of $400 for each offense. Refused permission by the collector at Souris, Prince Edward Island, to buy provisions, and was compelled to return home 10th September, before close of fishing season. Was obliged to report at custom-house every time he entered the harbor, even if only for shelter. Found no regularity in the amount of fees demanded, this being apparently at the option of the collector. (From statements of Jesse S. Snow, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

John M. Ball (schooner), Provincetown, Mass.; N. W. Freeman, master. Driven out of Gulf of St. Lawrence to avoid fine of $400 for landing two men in the port of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island. Was denied all supplies except wood and water in same port. (From statements of N. W. Freeman, owner and master, Provincetown, Mass.)

Zephyr (schooner), Eastport, Me., Warren Pilk, master. Cleared from Eastport 31st May, 1886, under register for West Isles, New Brunswick, to buy herring. Collector refused to enter vessel, telling the captain that if he bought fish, which were plenty at the time, the vessel would be seized. Returned to Eastport, losing about a week, which resulted in considerable loss to owner and crew. (From statements of Guildford Mitchell, owner, Eastport, Me.)

Abdon Keene (schooner), Bremen, Me.; William C. Keene, master. Was not allowed to ship or land crew at Nova Scotia ports, and owner had to pay for their transportation to Maine. (From statements of William C. Keene, owner and master, Bremen, Me.)

William Keene (schooner), Portland, Me.; Daniel Kimball, master. Not allowed to ship a man, or to send a man ashore except for water at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, and ordered to sea as soon as water was obtained. (From statements of Henry Trefethen, owner, Peak's Island, Me.)

John Nye (schooner), Swan's Island, Me.; W. L. Joyce, master. After paying entry fees and harbor dues was not allowed to buy provisions at Molpeque, Prince Edward Island, and had to return home for same, making a broken trip. (From statements of W. L. Joyce, owner and master, Atlantic, Me.)

Asa H. Perere (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; A. B. Gore, master. Entered harbor for shelter; ordered out after twenty-four hours. Denied right to purchase food. (From statements of S. W. Kemp, agent, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Nathan Cleares (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; P. E. Hickman, master. Ran short of provisions, and not being permitted to buy, left for home with a broken voyage. Customs officers at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, would allow purchase of provisions for homeward passage, but not to continue fishing. (From statements of Parker E. Hickman, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Frank G. Rich (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; Charles A. Gorham, master. Not permitted to buy provisions or to lie in Canadian ports over twenty-four hours. (From statements of Charles A. Gorham, owner and master, Wellfleet, Mass.)

Charles F. Atwood (schooner), Wellfleet, Mass.; Michael Burrows, master. Captain was not permitted to refit vessel or to buy supplies, and when out of food had to return home. Found Canadians disposed to harass him and put him to many inconveniences; not allowed to land seine on Canadian shore for purpose of repairing same. (From statements of Michael Burrows, owner and master Wellfleet, Mass.)

Gertie May (schooner), Portland, Me.; J. Doughty, master. Not allowed, though provided with permit, to touch and trade, to purchase fish-bait in Nova Scotia, and driven from harbor. (From statements of Charles F. Guptill, owner, Portland, Me.)

Margaret S. Smith (schooner), Portland, Me.; Lincoln W. Jewett, master. Twice compelled to return home from Bay St. Lawrence with broken trip, not being able to secure provisions to continue fishing. Incurred many petty inconveniences in regard to customs regulations. (From statements of A. M. Smith, owner, Portland, Me.)

Elsie M. Smith (schooner), Portland, Me.; Enoch Bulger, master. Came home with a half fare, not being able to get provisions to continue fishing. Lost seine in a heavy gale rather than be annoyed by customs regulations when seeking shelter. (From statements of A. M. Smith, Portland, Me.)

Engaged fishermen for vessel at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, but action of Canadian Government necessitated their transportation to the United States, and loss of time to vessel while awaiting their arrival; otherwise would have called for them on way to fishing grounds. Returning touched at Liverpool, but immediately on anchoring Canadian officials came aboard and refused permission for men to go ashore. Captain at once signified his intention of immediately proceeding on passage, but officer prevented his departure until he had reported at custom-house, vessel being thereby detained two days. [Inclosure 11.]

The Marquis of Lansdowne to Sir H. Holland.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA, April 2, 1887.

SIR: With reference to Mr. Stanhope's dispatch of the 16th December last, transmitting a copy of a letter from the foreign office, with its inclosures, respecting the alleged improper conduct of authorities in the Dominion in dealing with the United States fishing vessels Laura Sayward and Jennie Seaverns, and requesting to be furnished with a report on these cases for communication to the United States Government, I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, embodying a report of my minister of marine and fisheries on the subject.

I have much pleasure in calling your attention to the penultimate paragraph of that report, from which you will observe that it will, in the opinion of my Government, be possible, in cases like that of the Jennie Seaverns, where a foreign fishing vessel has entered a Canadian harbor for a lawful purpose and in the pursuance of her treaty rights, to exercise, the necessary supervision over the conduct of her master and crew, and to guard against infractions of the customs law and other statutes binding upon foreign vessels while in Canadian waters, without placing an armed guard on board or preventing reasonable communication with the shore.

My advisers are, in regard to such matters, fully prepared to recognize that a difference should be made between the treatment of vessels bona fide entering a Canadian harbor for shelter or repair, or to obtain wood and water, and that of other vessels of the same class entering such harbors ostensibly for a lawful purpose, but really with the intention of breaking the law.

I have, etc.,

LANSDOWNE.

[Inclosure 12.]

Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada approved by his excellency the governor-general in council on the 23d March, 1857.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch dated the 16th December, 1856, from the right honorable the secretary of state for the Colonies, transmitting a copy of a letter from the foreign office covering a copy of a dispatch from Her Majesty's minister at Washington inclosing notes which he has received from Mr. Bayard, United States Secretary of State, protesting against the conduct of the Dominion authorities in their dealings with the United States fishing vessels Laura Sayward and Jennie Seaverns, and requesting to be furnished with a report on the subject for communication to the Government of the United States.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosures were referred for immediate report, observes that Mr. Bayard takes exception to the "inhospitable and inhuman conduct" of the collector of customs at the port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in refusing to allow Captain Rose, of the Laura Sayward, to buy sufficient food to last himself and crew on their homeward voyage, and complains of the action of the collector in "unnecessarily retaining" the papers of the vessel. Mr. Bayard bases his representation upon the annexed declaration made by Captain Rose, but supported by no other testimony.

The minister states that immediately on the receipt of the dispatch above mentioned a copy of the charges was forwarded to the collector at the port of Shelburne, and his statement in reply thereto is annexed.

The minister believes that Collector Atwood's statement is a reasonable and sufficient answer to the allegations made by the captain of the Sayward, and leaves no ground of justification for the strong language used by Mr. Bayard in his note to Sir L. Sackville West.

The minister further observes that, with reference to the Jennie Seaverns, Mr. Bayard complains of the conduct of Captain Quigley, of the Terror, in preventing the captain of the Jennie Seaverns from landing to visit his relations in Liverpool, Nova Scotia, and in forbidding his relatives to visit him on board his vessel, and in placing a guard upon the Seaverns while she was in port. These complaints are based upon the affidavit of Captain Tipper, of the Seaverns, a copy of which is attached. The statements of Captain Quigley, and his first officer, Bennett, are submitted in reply, and seem to afford ample proof that no violence or injustice was done to the fishing schooner.

The minister is of the opinion that the captain of the Jennie Seaverns has nothing to complain of. He came in solely for shelter, and this was not denied him. He was requested to report at the customs, with which request he, upon his own evidence, willingly complied.

The other precautions taken by Captain Quigley were simply to insure that, while shelter was being had, the provisions of the convention and of the customs law were not violated.

The minister, however, while assured that the vessel in question suffered no deprivation of or interference with its rights as defined by the convention of 1818, is of opinion that, in pursuance of the spirit of uniform kindly interpretation of the law, which it has been the constant aim of the government of Canada to exemplify in its dealings with United States fishermen, it is possible for the officers in charge of the cruisers to efficiently guard the rights of Canadian citizens and enforce the provisions of the law without in such cases as the above finding it necessary to place an armed guard on board the fishing vessel, or preventing what may be deemed reasonable communication with the shore.

The committee, concurring, in the report of the minister of marine and fisheries, recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies for the purpose of communication to the Government of the United States.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk Privy Council Canada.

Deposition of Medeo Rose.

I, Medeo Rose, master of schooner Laura Sayward, of Gloucester, being duly sworn, do depose and say: That on Saturday, the 2d October, being then on Western Bank, on a fishing trip, and being short of provisions, we hove up anchor and started for home. The wind was blowing almost a gale from the northwest, and, being almost dead ahead, we made slow progress on our voyage home. On Tuesday, the 5th October, we made Shelburne, Nova Scotia, and arrived in that harbor about 8 p. m. on that day, short of provisions, water, and oil to burn. On Wednesday I sailed for the inner harbor of Shelburne, arriving at the town about 4 p. m. On going ashore I found the custom-house closed, and hunted up the collector and entered my vessel, and asked permission from him to buy 7 pounds of sugar, 3 pounds of coffee, and 1 bushel of potatoes, and 2 pounds butter or lard or pork, and oil enough to last us home, and was refused.

I stated to him my situation, short of provisions, and a voyage of 250 miles before, and pleaded with him for this slight privilege, but it was of no avail. I then visited the American consul and asked his assistance, and found him powerless to aid me in this matter. The collector of customs held my papers until the next morning, although I asked for them as soon as I found I could not buy any provisions, say about one and a half hours after I entered, but he refused to give them to me until the next morning. Immediately on receiving my papers on Thursday morning I started for home, arriving on Sunday. I think the treatment I received harsh and cruel, driving myself and crew to sea with a scant supply of provisions, we having but a little flour and water, and liable to be buffeted for days before reaching home.

Mr. Atwood to Mr. Johnson.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, SHELburne, January 5, 1887.

SIR: With reference to the statement by Medeo Rose, master of the schooner Laura Sayward, I beg to say that in many particulars it is not true and is very unjust. The custom-house was not closed, as stated. Office hours are supposed to be from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m., but masters of vessels, American fishermen particularly, are allowed to report their vessels inward and outward, and obtain clearances at any hour between 6 a. m. and 11 p. m. (Sundays excepted), and the office is always open. On the 6th October last I left at 4 p. m., and went to an agricultural exhibition, not an eighth of a mile distant—say a three minutes' walk—and left word at the office to tell any one who called where I could be found. I had been on the grounds about fifteen minutes when Captain Rose put in an appearance, and I at once came to the office, and he reported his vessel, stated that he was from the bank bound home, and came in to fill water, and wanted provisions, as follows, viz: 7 pounds of sugar, 3 pounds of coffee, 1 bushel of potatoes, and 2 pounds of butter; this was all. I took a memorandum and attached to his inward report, and oil is not mentioned; stated that he had plenty of flour, fish, and other provisions sufficient for voyage home.

I gave him permission to fill water at once; but as the treaty made no provision for purchase of supplies, I would telegraph the department at Ottawa, and no doubt it would be allowed. Captain Rose expressed his willingness to remain until a reply was received. He called at the office next morning (Thursday) at 6.30 a. m., and finding I had not received a reply, said as the wind was fair and a good breeze, he would not wait longer and would take a clearance, which I gave him. I told him an answer to telegram would probably be received by 10 a. m. I did not consider it a case of actual distress by any means, as by the master's own statement he had plenty of other provisions, and all that he really and actually needed was to fill water.

The statement that I held his papers, although he asked for them, etc., and that I refused to give them to him until next morning, is all false. He did not ask further until next morning, when he got his clearance. The statement that the treatment he received was harsh and driving him to sea having little water and flour, etc., is all untrue, as what I have already stated will prove. Captain Medeo Rose was here with his vessel on the 23d November last, and entered his vessel and obtained clearance at 8 in the evening; was here again on the 27th November and remained five days for repairs, and nothing was said by him of the "inhuman conduct" or "harsh treatment" on the part of the collector towards him.

The above is a plain statement of the facts, and many of the statements can be corroborated by the American consul of this port if referred to him.

I am, etc.,

W. W. ATWOOD,
Collector.

Deposition of Joseph Tupper.

I, Joseph Tupper, master of the schooner Jennie Seaverns, of Gloucester, being duly sworn, do depose and say: That on Thursday, the 28th October, while on my passage home from a fishing trip, the wind blowing a gale from southeast and a heavy sea running, I was obliged to enter the harbor of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, for shelter. Immediately on coming to anchor was boarded by Captain Quigley, of Canadian cruiser Terror, who ordered me to go inshore at once and report at the custom-house, to which I replied that such was my intention. He gave me permission to take two men in the boat with me, but they must remain in the boat and must not step on shore. I asked Captain Quigley if I could, after entering, visit some of my relations who resided in Liverpool and whom I had not seen for many years. This privilege was denied me. After entering, having returned to my vessel, some of my relatives came to see me off. When Captain Quigley saw their boat alongside of my vessel he sent an officer and boat's crew, who ordered them away, and at sundown he placed an armed guard on board our vessel, who remained on board all night, and was taken off just before we sailed in the morning.

I complied with the Canadian laws, and had no intention or desire to violate them in any way; but to be made a prisoner on board my own vessel, and treated like a suspicious character, grates harshly upon the feelings of an American seaman, and I protest against such treatment, and respectfully ask from my own Government protection from such unjust, unfriendly, and arbitrary treatment.

Mr. Quigley to Major Tillon.

NEWCASTLE, January 12, 1887.

SIR: In reference to the American schooner Jennie Seaverns of Gloucester, I find she arrived on Thursday, the 28th October, as stated in his complaint, at Liverpool, Nova Scotia, and after she anchored I sent Chief Officer Bennett on board with instructions, telling him what the law was, so that he would not do anything through ignorance of it, and get his vessel in trouble. These instructions were to report his vessel at the customs before sailing, and to take two of his crew and boat with him when he did go for that purpose, but the rest of his crew were not to go on shore, and that after he reported no person from his vessel was to go on shore, as he got all he put in for, viz., shelter; and he reported his vessel putting in for that purpose and for no other; not for the purpose of letting his crew on shore.

The boat that was ordered from his vessel was from shore, and was not allowed alongside of these vessels, as it gave the crews a chance to get ashore with them, and to smuggle provisions alongside, so they were ordered off in all cases. (See chief officer's statement regarding the men who rowed the captain on shore.)

I never prevented the men who went ashore with the masters of vessels from landing and going with the masters to the custom-house if they wished, nor gave instructions to prevent them.

I placed two watchmen on board this vessel, as I did in all other cases, to prevent them from breaking the law in any respect through the night, and they were taken off in the morning before he sailed.

It is not true that I boarded this vessel as stated. I never spoke to him. There were two other American seiners in at the same time and were treated in the same way, less the watchmen, which were not required in their case, as they were close to me and I could see what was done on board them at all times from my vessel. These are the facts.

I have, etc.,

THOMAS QUIGLEY.

Deposition of Albert Bennett.

I, Albert Bennett, late first officer of the Dominion cutter Terror, Captain Quigley remonstrating with the American seiner Jennie Seaverns, of Gloucester, United States, at the port of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, on the 28th October last past; boarded her ordered Captain Tupper to report to the customs at Liverpool aforesaid, which he did, taking with him two men in his boat. Never told Captain Tupper not to allow his men to leave his boat while on shore; further, Captain Tupper, to the best of my knowledge and belief, never intimated to me that he had friends or relatives that he wished to visit in Liverpool, Nova Scotia.

Seeing a boat alongside, I went on board and ordered them away. Captain Tupper told me he did not know the visitors, and further, did not wish them on board his vessel.

Further, during the time the Jennie Seaverns was in the harbor of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, Captain Quigley never was on board her, I boarding her and carrying out his instructions to me.

SIR: In your note of the 11th of November last, inclosing copies of the statements with affidavits from Captain Medeo Rose, master of the schooner Laura Sayward, of Gloucester, Mass., you state that these papers impressively describe the "inhospitable" and "inhuman" conduct "of the collector of the port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in refusing to allow Captain Rose to buy sufficient food for himself and crew to take them home, besides unnecessarily retaining his papers, and thus preventing him, with a wholly inadequate supply of provisions, from proceeding on his voyage." This note, I observe, appears in the papers relating to the foreign relations of the United States transmitted to Congress with the President's message, 1886 (No. 231, page 425.)

I have now the honor to inform you that I am instructed by the Marquis of Salisbury to communicate to you the inclosed copy of a dispatch from the governor-general of Canada, together with copy of an approved minute of the privy council, to which is appended a letter from the collector of customs at Shelburne, inclosing a declaration made by Captain Rose, in which he states that the statements made by him in the affidavit alluded to in your above-mentioned note are all untrue.

In communicating these papers to you I am further instructed to ask whether the United States Government have any observations to make thereupon.

Medeo Rose, of the first-named vessel, the copy of a letter from the collector of customs at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, dated the 20th ultimo, together with an affidavit from Captain Rose, herewith, in which it will be observed that he not only bears testimony to the generous treatment that had been extended to him when at the port of Shelburne on previous occasions, but also declares that the statements made in the affidavit of the 15th October last, purporting to be sworn to by him, and which affidavit formed the basis of a dispatch from Mr. Bayard, the United States Secretary of State, protesting against the inhuman and inhospitable conduct of the collector of customs at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, to use Captain Rose's own words, "are all untrue."

SIR: With reference to my letter of the 5th January last and a statement made by Medeo Rose, of schooner Laura Sayward, a copy of which was sent me from your department for my report thereon, I beg to state that Captain Rose, with his vessel, is now lying off Sandy Point. He reported and obtained clearance yesterday on board Dominion cutter Triumph. On being questioned by Captain Lorway relative to the statement made in October last, he said much of it was untrue, and denied having made it. Inclosed please find a statement signed by Captain Rose in my presence at Sandy Point, sworn to and witnessed by Capt. John Purnoy, justice of the peace. He made no objection at all to signing it, and admits that this statement is true in every particular. Will you kindly have it forwarded to John Tilton, esq., deputy minister of fisheries?

Declaration of the captain of the Laura Sayward.

I, Medeo Rose, master of the schooner Laura Sayward, of Gloucester, do solemnly declare and say that on the 6th October last I arrived at the port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, and reported my vessel at the custom-house some time after 4 p. m.

Stated to the collector that I was from Western Banks, bound home, and required provisions, as follows, viz: 7 pounds of sugar, 3 pounds of coffee, 1 bushel of potatoes, 2 pounds of butter, and to fill water. This was all. The collector told me to fill the water, but as there was no provision made in the treaty for the purchase of supplies or stores, he would telegraph the department at Ottawa at once; that no doubt they would be allowed; and I consented to wait until the next morning for a reply.

I called at the custom-house early the next morning, before 7 o'clock; stated that, as the wind was fair and blowing a strong breeze, I would not wait for a reply to telegram, but take a clearance, which the collector gave me. I was treated kindly, allowed to enter my vessel after custom hours, and a clearance granted me next morning before the office was supposed to be opened. I was at the port again in November, on my way to the banks, and the collector allowed me to report my vessel inwards and outwards and gave me a clearance at 8 in the evening.

The statements purporting to have been made by me to the effect that the collector refused to give me my papers when I asked for them, also that this treatment towards me was harsh and cruel, driving myself and crew to sea, having but little flour and water, etc., are all untrue.

And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of an act of Parliament entitled "An act for the suppression of voluntary and extrajudicial oaths."

MEDEO ROSE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your note, dated yesterday and received to-day, inclosing a copy of the declaration of Captain Medeo Rose, master of the schooner Laura Sayward, of Gloucester, Mass., made on April 12 last, at Sandy Point, before a justice of peace, apparently in contradiction of the statement made by the same party under oath on October 13 last.

This document will be instantly made the subject of investigation, and the observations of this Government thereon, as suggested by your note, will be communicated to you as soon as information on the matter shall have been received from the collector of customs at Gloucester, through whom the original affidavits of Captain Rose were forwarded to this Department.

Accept, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 352.

Mr. Bayard to Sir L. S. Sackville West.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, October 31, 1887.

SIR: On the 19th of July last I had the honor to receive from you a letter, dated the day previous, inclosing a printed copy of a declaration made by Medeo Rose, formerly master of the schooner Laura Say- ward, of Gloucester, Mass., in which he controverts certain statements theretofore made by him under oath, in relation to his treatment by Mr. Atwood, collector of customs at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, on the 13th of October.

Upon receiving your letter I at once communicated its contents to the collector of the port of Gloucester, Mass., through whom the original complaint had been forwarded to this Department.

To-day, for the first time, I was informed that on the 5th of August last a reply and sworn statement, by way of explanation of this variance between his affidavit of October 13, 1886, and his subsequent declaration at Sandy Point, Nova Scotia, dated April 20, 1887, had been in my absence received at this Department, and by inadvertence not laid before me until to-day.

I therefore now inclose a copy of the affidavits of Captain Rose and Augustus Rogers, made at Gloucester, Mass., on August 3 last, before a notary public, by which it appears that his declaration of April 20, 1887, was not voluntary, but was obtained from him by the collector, Atwood through fear and intimidation, under circumstances fully stated.

I should transmit the documents without further comment, but that, in closing your note to me of July 18 last, you stated that you were further "instructed to ask whether the United States Government have any observations to make thereupon."

In my reply to you on the 19th of July, I promised to comply with your request, and for that reason I now remark that the incident which has been the subject of this correspondence affords but another illustration and additional evidence, if any were needed, of the unwisdom of imperiling the friendly relations of two kindred and neighboring countries by intrusting the interpretation and execution of a treaty between them to the discretion of local and petty officials, and vesting in them powers of administration wholly unwarranted and naturally prolific of the irritations which wise and responsible rulers will always seek to avoid.

On the eve of a negotiation touching closely the honor and interests of two great nations, I venture to express the hope that the anticipated result of our joint endeavors to harmonize all differences may render it hereafter impossible to create a necessity for those representing our respective Governments to be called upon to consider such questions as are presented in the case of the Laura Sayward.

I have, etc.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure.]

Affidavits of Capt. Medeo Rose and Augustus Rogers.

I, Medeo Rose, of Gloucester, being under oath, do depose and say, that I was master of the schooner Laura Sayward during the year 1886, and that I am now master of the schooner Gleaner of Gloucester.

On April 18, 1887, I went into the lower harbor of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in said schooner Gleaner for shelter and water.

On the morning of April 19, Mr. Atwood, the collector of customs, with two men wearing badges, which I supposed were Government badges, came on board. Their appearance filled me with fear, for I felt some trouble must be in store for me when Collector Atwood would leave his office and come so far (about 4 miles) to board my vessel. I invited him into the cabin, where he showed me a copy of my statement of October 13, 1886, in regard to the treatment I received from him when in schooner Laura Sayward (October 5, 1886), and asked me if I made that statement. I told him I did. Well, said he, everything in that statement is false. I told him my statement was true. He then produced a prepared written statement, which he read to me, which stated that my statement of October 13 was untrue, and told me I must go on shore and sign it. Being nervous and frightened, and fearing trouble if I refused, I went on shore with him, to the store of Mr. Purney, and before Mr. Purney signed and swore to the statement.

On the afternoon of the same day, realizing the wrong I had done, I hired a team and, with one of my crew (Augustus Rogers), went to the custom-house and asked Collector Atwood to read to me the statement I had signed. He did so, and I again told him it was wrong and that my first statement was true.

He said I did not ask for all the articles mentioned in my first statement; that he did not refuse me my paper, and also that that statement might be the cause of his removal from his office. I told him I did not want to injure him, and I did not want to make myself out a liar at Washington.

About the 3d day of June last I went into Shelburne again solely to get a copy of the last statement. I went to the custom-house, taking the same man (Augustus Rogers) with me, and asked Collector Atwood for a copy of the statement.

He refused to give it to me, and said my lawyers had been advising me what to do, and that I need never expect a favor from him.

The above is a true statement of the case. The statement obtained from me by Collector Atwood was obtained through my fear of seizure if I refused.

MEDEO ROSE.

I, Augustus Rogers, one of the crew of schooner Gleaner, being duly sworn, do depose and say, that I went with Capt. Medeo Rose to the custom-house at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, on the 19th day of April last, and also on the 3d day of June. I heard his conversation with Collector Atwood on both occasions, and hereby certify that the statements of those interviews, as made above, are correct and true.

AUGUSTUS ROGERS.

[Inclosure No. 1 to No. 659 bis.]

Mr. Bayard to Sir Charles Tupper.

[Personal and unofficial.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 31, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR CHARLES:

The delay in writing you has been unavoidable.

In the very short interview afforded by your visit I referred to the embarrassment arising out of the gradual emancipation of Canada from the control of the mother country, and the consequent assumption by that community of attributes of antonemous and separate sovereignty, not, however, distinct from the Empire of Great Britain.

The awkwardness of this imperfectly-developed sovereignty is felt most strongly by the United States, which can not have formal treaty relations with Canada, except indirectly and as a colonial dependency of the British Crown, and nothing could better illustrate the embarrassment arising from this amorphous condition of things than the volumes of correspondence published severally this year, relating to the fisheries, by the United States, Great Britain, and the Government of the Dominion.

The time lost in this circumlocution, although often most regrettable, was the least part of the difficulty, and the indirectness of appeal and reply was the most serious feature, ending, as it did, very unsatisfactorily.

It is evident that the commercial intercourse between the inhabitants of Canada and those of the United States has grown into too vast proportions to be exposed much longer to this wordy triangular duel, and more direct and responsible methods should be resorted to.

Your own able, earnest, and patriotic services in the Government and Parliament of the Dominion are well known, and afford ample proof of your comprehension of the resources, rapidly-increasing interests, and needs of British North America.

On the other hand, I believe I am animated by an equal desire to serve my own country, and trust to do it worthily.

The immediate difficulty to be settled is found in the treaty of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain, which has been questio vexata ever since it was concluded, and to-day is suffered to interfere with and seriously embarrass the good understanding of both countries in the important commercial relations and interests which have come into being since its ratification, and for the adjustment of which it is wholly inadequate, as has been unhappily proved by the events of the past two years.

I am confident we both seek to attain a just and permanent settlement, and there is but one way to procure it, and that is by a straightforward treatment on a liberal and statesman-like plan of the entire commercial relations of the two countries.

I say commercial, because I do not propose to include, however indirectly, or by any indentment, however partial or oblique, the political relations of Canada and the United States, nor to affect the legislative independence of either country.

When you were here I was prepared to send my reply to the "Observations" upon my proposal for a settlement (of November 15 last), which were communicated to Mr. Phelps by Lord Salisbury on March 24, and also to express my views of his lordship's alternative proposition.

Your visit and invitation to negotiate here was entirely welcome, and of this I endeavored to impress you.

Conversation with the President has confirmed these views, and now it remains to give them practical effect.

Great Britain being the only treaty-making party to deal with the United States, the envoys of that Government alone are authorized to speak in her behalf and create her obligations.

I presume you will be personally constituted a plenipotentiary of Great Britain to arrange here, with whomsoever may be selected to represent the United States, terms of arrangement for a modus vivendi to meet present emergencies and also a permanent plan to avoid all future disputes.

It appears to me that as matters now stand the colony of Newfoundland ought to be represented and included, for a single arrangement should suffice to regulate all the joint and several interests involved. I should, therefore, be informed speedily through the proper channel as to the authorization and appointment by the Imperial Government of such representatives.

The gravity of the present condition of affairs between our two countries demands entire frankness.

I feel we stand at "the parting of the ways." In one direction I can see a well-assured, steady, healthful relationship, devoid of petty jealousies, and filled with the fruits of a prosperity arising out of a friendship cemented by mutual interests and enduring because based upon justice; on the other, a career of embittered rivalries, staining our long frontier with the hues of hostility, in which victory means the destruction of an adjacent prosperity without gain to the prevalent party—a mutual physical and moral deterioration which ought to be abhorrent to patriots on both sides, and which I am sure no two men will exert themselves more to prevent than the parties to this unofficial correspondence.

As an intelligent observer of the current of popular sentiment in the United States, you can not have failed to note that the disputed interpretation of the treaty of 1818, and the action of the Canadian officials towards American fishing vessels during the past season, has awakened a great deal of feeling.

It behooves those who are charged with the safe conduct of the honor and interests of the respective countries by every means in their power sedulously to remove all causes of difference.

The roundabout manner in which the correspondence on the fisheries has been necessarily (perhaps) conducted has brought us into the new fishing season, and the period of possible friction is at hand, and this admonishes us that prompt action is needed.

I am prepared, therefore, to meet the authorized agents of Great Britain at this earliest at the earliest possible day, and enter upon negotiations for a settlement of all differences.

The magnitude of the interests involved, and the far-reaching and disastrous consequences of any irritating and unfriendly action, will, I trust, present themselves to those in whose jurisdiction the fisheries lie, and cause a wise abstention from vexatious enforcement of disputed powers.

Awaiting your reply, I am, very truly, yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure No. 2 to No. 659 bis.]

Sir Charles Tupper to Mr. Bayard.

[Personal and unofficial.]

OTTAWA, June , 1887. (Received June 10, 2 p. m.)

MY DEAR MR. BAYARD:

I had great pleasure in receiving your letter of May 31st, evincing as it does the importance which you attach to an amicable adjustment of the fisheries question, and the maintenance of the cordial commercial relations between the United States and Canada under which such vast and mutually beneficial have grown up.

I entirely concur in your statement that "We both seek to attain a just and permanent settlement, and that there is but one way to procure it, and that is by a straightforward treatment, on a liberal and statesman-like plan, of the entire commercial relations of the two countries."

I note particularly your suggestions that as the interests of Canada are so immediately concerned, Her Majesty's Government should be invited to depute a Canadian statesman to negotiate with you "a modus vivendi to meet present emergencies and also a permanent plan to avoid all disputes," and I feel no doubt that a negotiation thus undertaken would greatly increase the prospects of a satisfactory solution.

I say this, not because I believe that there has been any disposition on the part of the British Government to postpone Canadian interests to its own, or to retard by needless delay a settlement desired by and advantageous to the people of Canada and of the United States, but because I have no doubt that direct personal communications will save valuable time and render each side better able to comprehend the needs and the position of the other.

I am greatly flattered by your kind personal allusion to myself.

The selection of the persons who might be deputed to act as commissioners would however, as you are aware, rest with Her Majesty's Government.

Our experience has been to the effect that the selection has in such cases, as far as it concerned the choice of the representatives of the Dominion, been made with careful regard to public feeling in this country.

I have thought it my duty and also the most effectual manner of giving effect to your suggestion, to make known to Lord Lansdowne the purport of my correspondence with you. He is strongly desirous of facilitating a settlement and will at once bring the matter before the secretary of state with an expression of his hope that no time will be lost in taking steps for establishing, by means of personal communications with your Government, a modus vivendi such as you have described, and also for arriving at an understanding in regard to a lasting adjustment of our commercial relations.

In the earnest hope that your proposal for the settlement of this vexed question may result at an early day in a solution satisfactory and beneficial to both countries,

I remain, yours faithfully,

CHARLES TUPPER.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, July 12, 1887.

SIR: On March 24th last the Marquis of Salisbury made reply to your note to him of December 3, 1886, and communicated the views of the Canadian Government upon the ad interim arrangement proposed by the Government of the United States, under date of the 15th of November preceding, for the settlement of the fishery disputes.

This reply of his lordship and the "observations" of the Canadian authorities upon the proposal for an arrangement were conveyed in Mr. White's dispatch of March 30, and received at this Department April 11th last, when it had my immediate consideration.

An answer was prepared forthwith to the note of his lordship as well as to the "observations," and for your information I now inclose two copies thereof, which for convenience and intelligibility have been printed as a third parallel column to the original proposal and the Canadian "observations."

This document would have gone forward to you in continuance of the negotiation so commenced between yourself and the British foreign office, but I was indirectly made aware that the Canadian Government, to whom, as it appears, all communications from this Government to that of Great Britain, touching the matters under consideration between the two Governments in relation to the fishery question under the treaty of 1818 had been invariably submitted before reply, sought to make an informal communication to this Department on the subject.

Thus informed, and desiring to lend every aid in my power at this juncture toward a practical settlement of serious and long standing difficulties, I delayed my response to Mr. White's dispatch of March 30, and on May 21 Sir Charles Tupper, the Canadian minister of finance, called upon me at this department, introduced by the British minister at this capital.

The object of this visit was to discuss informally the present condition and prospects of commercial relations between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, especially in connection with the fisheries and the commercial questions involved.

The visit here of Sir Charles Tupper, on behalf of the Canadian Government, was received with cordiality, and expressions were exchanged of a mutual desire for the settlement of all existing difficulties, and for an increased freedom of commercial intercourse between the United States and Canada.

In consequence of the statements made by Sir Charles Tupper on the occasion referred to, I wrote him a personal and unofficial letter on the 31st of May, and received on June 10th his reply, and copies of this correspondence were duly sent to you.

Yesterday Sir Lionel West handed me, and without comment, the following copy of a telegram to him from Lord Salisbury:

If Secretary of State will formally propose the appointment of commission as suggested by him in his correspondence with Sir Charles Tupper, Her Majesty's Government will agree with great pleasure.

SALISBURY.

and I have just telegraphed you to the following effect:

PHELPS, Minister, London:

Sir Lionel West handed to me yesterday telegram from Lord Salisbury agreeing to the negotiation suggested by me informally in correspondence with Sir Charles Tupper, after his visit to this capital, and requesting me to make formal proposal, which will be forwarded to you at once.

BAYARD.

By reference to my personal letter to you of May 31, which inclosed a copy of my letter to Sir Charles Tupper of that date, you will perceive that I did not propose the appointment of a "commission," but used the following language in reference to the proposed negotiation:

Your visit and invitation to negotiate here was entirely welcome, and of this I endeavored to impress you.

Conversation with the President has confirmed these views, and now it remains to give them practical effect.

Great Britain being the only treaty-making party to deal with the United States, the envoys of that Government alone are authorized to speak in her behalf and create her obligations.

I presume you will be personally constituted a plenipotentiary of Great Britain to arrange here, with whomsoever may be selected to represent the United States, terms of arrangement for a modus vivendi to meet present emergencies, and also a permanent plan to avoid all future disputes.

It appears to me that as matters now stand the colony of Newfoundland ought to be represented and included, for a single arrangement should suffice to regulate all the joint and several interests involved.

I should, therefore, be informed speedily, through the proper channel, as to the authorization and appointment by the Imperial Government of such representatives.

I am prepared, therefore, to meet the authorized agents of Great Britain at this capital at the earliest possible day, and enter upon negotiations for a settlement of all differences.

By reason of the action of the Senate on April 15, 1886, in regard to the recommendation of the President for the appointment of a joint commission to take into consideration the entire question of fishing rights of the two Governments and their citizens on the coast of British North America, the formation of a joint commission was not again proposed by me, but in the discharge of his constitutional functions negotiations with a view to a settlement were not abandoned, but have been proceeded with by this Department under the direction of the President.

The number of plenipotentiaries to be employed on either side does not seem to be material to the object in view. The treaty of 1854 comprehended the same class of questions substantially, and as I have before remarked in my correspondence with you, was negotiated by the Earl of Elgin, at that time governor-general of Canada, and Mr. William L. Marcy, then the Secretary of State of the United States. By reference also to our prior treaties with Great Britain it will be found that the number of plenipotentiaries employed on either side varied and was frequently unequal.

The "mixed commission" referred to in the first article of the ad interim proposal submitted by you in December last to the British foreign office, was to be authorized by Congress before appointed, and only under legislative authority could they be so employed and provision made for their compensation.

It is not, therefore, considered essential or important for the accomplishment of the negotiation now contemplated to provide for the appointment of a commission, eo nomine.

The questions to be considered and settled are not so complicated in number or nature as to require a large numerical force of negotiators, such as was apparently deemed expedient in 1871.

It is regarded by the President as of the highest importance that a distinct and friendly understanding should without delay be arrived at between the United States and Great Britain, touching the extent of the rights which belong respectively to the citizens of the United States and the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty in relation to the fisheries on the coasts of the British Possessions in North America, and as to any other questions which affect the trade and commercial relations between the United States and those possessions.

You are, therefore, instructed to propose to Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs the appointment of an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, to meet in the city of Washington a minister plenipotentiary of the Government of the United States, duly authorized by the respective Governments to treat of and discuss the mode of settling all questions which have arisen out of the fisheries on the coasts of British North America, and all other questions affecting the relations between the United States and Her Britannic Majesty's possessions in North America.

Should it be found necessary or expedient to increase the number of the representatives of either party in the proposed negotiation, it can be done, and notice be given to that effect.

Believing this proposal to be in accord with late expressions of Her Majesty's Government, indicating a cordial and sincere desire to arrive at an amicable, permanent, and just settlement of the important question above referred to, I transmit it to you for presentation, in the full confidence of its prompt acceptance by Her Majesty's Government, and I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

PROTOCOLS OF THE CONFERENCES OF THE NEGOTIATIONS.

I.—PROTOCOL OF FISHERIES CONFERENCE.

WASHINGTON, November 22, 1887.

The Fisheries Conference having formally met, the full powers of the plenipotentiaries were exhibited and found to be in good and due form, as follows:

Grover Cleveland, President of the United States of America. To all whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Know ye that, reposing special trust and confidence in the integrity and ability of Thomas F. Bayard, Secretary of State, William L. Putnam of Maine, and James B. Angell, of Michigan, I hereby invest them with full power jointly and severally, for and in the name of the United States, to meet and confer with plenipotentiaries representing the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, for the purpose of considering and adjusting in a friendly spirit all or any questions relating to rights of fishery in the seas adjacent to British North America and Newfoundland, which are in dispute between the Government of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty, and any other questions which may arise and which they may be authorized by their respective governments to consider and adjust; and I also fully empower and authorize the said Thomas F. Bayard, William L. Putnam, and James B. Angell, jointly and severally, to conclude and sign any treaty or treaties touching the premises, for the final ratification of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, if such advice and consent be given.

In testimony whereof I have caused the seal of the United States to be hereunto affixed.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this eighteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twelfth.

[SEAL.]

GROVER CLEVELAND.

By the President:

T. F. BAYARD,
Secretary of State.

Victoria R. & I. Victoria by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Queen, Defender of the Faith, Empress of India, &c., &c., to all and singular to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas for the purpose of considering and adjusting in a friendly spirit with plenipotentiaries to be appointed on the part of our good friends the United States of America all or any questions relating to rights of fishery in the seas adjacent to British North America and Newfoundland, which are in dispute between our Government and that of our said good friends, and any other questions which may arise which the respective plenipotentiaries may be authorized by their governments to consider and adjust, we have judged it expedient to invest fit persons with full power to conduct on our part the discussions in this behalf. Know ye, therefore, that we, reposing especial trust and confidence in the wisdom, loyalty, diligence, and circumspection of our right trusty and well beloved councillor, Joseph Chamberlain, a member of our most honorable privy council, and a member of Parliament, &c., &c.; of our trusty and well beloved the honorable Sir Lionel Sackville Sackville West, knight commander of our most distinguished order of St. Michael and St. George, our envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to our said good friends the United States of America, &c., &c., and of our trusty and well beloved Sir Charles Tupper, knight Grand Cross of our most distinguished order of St. Michael and St. George, companion of our most honorable order of the Bath, minister of finance of the Dominion of Canada, &c., &c., have named, made, constituted, and appointed, as we do by these presents name, make, constitute, and appoint them our undoubted plenipotentiaries, giving to them, or to any two of them, all manner of power and authority to treat, adjust, and conclude, with such plenipotentiaries as may be vested with similar power and authority on the part of our good friends the United States of America, any treaties, conventions, or agreements that may tend to the attainment of the above-mentioned end, and to sign for us and in our name, everything so agreed upon and concluded, and to do and transact all such other matters as may appertain to the finishing of the aforesaid work in as ample manner and form, and with equal force and efficiency, as we ourselves could do if personally present, engaging and promising upon our royal word that whatever things shall be so transacted and concluded by our said plenipotentiaries shall be agreed to, acknowledged, and accepted by us in the fullest manner, and that we will never suffer, either in the whole or in part, any person whatsoever to infringe the same, or act contrary thereto, as far as it lies in our power. In witness whereof we have caused the great seal of our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to be affixed to these presents which we have signed with our royal hand. Given at our court at Balmoral the twenty-fourth day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, and in the fifty-first year of our reign.

The British plenipotentiaries proposed that Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, should preside.

Mr. Bayard, while expressing appreciation of the proposal, stated the opinion, in which the other United States plenipotentiaries concurred, that it was not necessary that any one should preside; and the proposal was permitted to rest.

Mr. John B. Moore, Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, acting as secretary to the United States plenipotentiaries, and Mr. J. H. G. Bergue, C. M. G., superintendent of the treaty department of the British foreign office, acting as secretary to the British plenipotentiaries, were requested to make the protocols of the Conference.

XXX.—PROTOCOL OF FISHERIES CONFERENCE.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1888.

The Conference met at 5 o'clock p. m., all the plenipotentiaries being present.

The protocol of the previous session was approved, and the Conference then proceeded to the comparison of two printed drafts of a treaty, which, being found to be correct, were duly signed by the plenipotentiaries.

The treaty having been signed, the British plenipotentiaries presented the following paper:

The treaty having been signed, the British plenipotentiaries desire to state that they have been considering the position which will be created by the immediate commencement of the fishing season before the treaty can possibly be ratified by the Senate of the United States, by the parliament of Canada, and the legislature of Newfoundland.

In the absence of such ratification the old conditions, which have given rise to so much friction and irritation, might be revived, and might interfere with the unprejudiced consideration of the treaty by the legislative bodies concerned.

Under these circumstances, and with the further object of affording evidence of their anxious desire to promote good feeling and to remove all possible subjects of controversy, the British plenipotentiaries are ready to make the following temporary arrangement for a period not exceeding two years, in order to afford a "modus vivendi" pending the ratification of the treaty:

1. For a period not exceeding two years from the present date, the privilege of entering the bays and harbors of the Atlantic coasts of Canada and Newfoundland shall be granted to United States fishing vessels by annual licenses at a fee of $14 per ton for the following purposes:

The purchase of bait, ice, seines, lines, and all other supplies and outfits.

Transshipment of catch and shipping of crews.

2. If during the continuance of this arrangement the United States should remove the duties on fish, fish-oil, whale and seal-oil (and their coverings, packages, etc.), the said licenses shall be issued free of charge.

3. United States fishing vessels entering the bays and harbors of the Atlantic coasts of Canada or of Newfoundland for any of the four purposes mentioned in Article I of the convention of October 20, 1818, and not remaining therein more than twenty-four hours, shall not be required to enter or clear at the custom-house, providing that they do not communicate with the shore.

4. Forfeiture to be exacted only for the offences of fishing or preparing to fish in territorial waters.

5. This arrangement to take effect as soon as the necessary measures can be completed by the colonial authorities.

J. CHAMBERLAIN.

CHARLES TUPPER.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1888.

To this communication the American plenipotentiaries made the following reply:

The American plenipotentiaries have received the communication of the British plenipotentiaries of this date conveying their plan for the administration to be observed by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland in respect to the fisheries during the period which may be requisite for the consideration by the Senate of the treaty this day signed, and the enactment of the legislation by the respective Governments therein proposed, desire to express their satisfaction with this manifestation of an intention on the part of the British plenipotentiaries, by the means referred to, to maintain the relations of good neighborhood between the British Possessions in North America and the United States; and they will convey the communication of the British plenipotentiaries to the President of the United States, with a recommendation that the same may be by him made known to the Senate for its information, together with the treaty, when the latter is submitted to that body for ratification.

T. F. BAYARD.

WILLIAM L. PUTNAM.

JAMES B. ANGELL.

WASHINGTON, February 15, 1888.

Mr. Bayard referred, on behalf of the American plenipotentiaries, to the services of the secretaries during the sessions of the Conference, and proposed that an expression of thanks be made to them for their assistance. In this the British plenipotentiaries concurred.

Mr. Bayard then said that he wished to express his gratification at what had been accomplished. He hoped and believed the Conference had laid the basis upon which Canada and the United States could look forward to a period of enlarged intercourse and increasingly friendly relations. As he had expressed himself before, he felt that as a result of the controversies of the two preceding years, the two countries stood at the parting of the ways, and it became necessary to determine whether their future should be in the direction of friendship and mutual convenience, or of unfriendliness and alienation. He hoped the work that had been done by the Conference would decide that question, and that the bonds of amity between the two countries would be strengthened by the ties of friendly and mutually beneficial intercourse.

Mr. Chamberlain said that on behalf of the British plenipotentiaries he desired, at the conclusion of the lengthened deliberations of the Conference, to acknowledge the uniform courtesy of their American colleagues. The same spirit had animated all who had been engaged in this work, and he hoped and believed had contributed to a joint and honorable settlement of a long pending controversy, which has more than once threatened the friendly relations of the United States and Great Britain.

The responsibility would now rest on other shoulders; but whatever the result might be, the plenipotentiaries would have the satisfaction of knowing that they had at least done their part in endeavoring not merely to remove existing causes of irritation, but also to promote in the future that cordial amity and sentiment of good neighborhood which were so desirable in the case of kindred and bordering nations.

Sir Charles Tupper said :

Mr. Bayard, I must add a few words to what has been so well said by Mr. Chamberlain. I desire on behalf of Canada to say that I think the conciliatory spirit in which we both met last Easter has found expression in the terms of this treaty. I hope it will remove all causes of irritation between Great Britain and the United States, and conduce to the continuance and extension of those intimate commercial relations which have so long existed between Canada and the United States, with marked advantage to both countries. I sincerely hope that the settlement at which we have arrived will be accepted by the people on both sides of the boundary line as an equitable and honorable arrangement.

At the suggestion of Mr. Putnam, the secretaries were requested by the plenipotentiaries to embody the remarks of Mr. Bayard, Mr. Chamberlain, and Sir Charles Tupper in the protocol of the session.

The Conference was then finally adjourned.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

A treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the interpretation of the convention of October 20, 1818, signed at Washington February 15, 1888.

FEBRUARY 20, 1888.—Read, treaty read the first time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and, together with the message and the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed in confidence for the use of the Senate.

To the Senate of the United States:

In my annual message transmitted to the Congress in December, 1886, it was stated that negotiations were then pending for the settlement of the questions growing out of the rights claimed by American fishermen in British North American waters.

As a result of such negotiations a treaty has been agreed upon between Her Britannic Majesty and the United States, concluded and signed in this capital, under my direction and authority, on the 15th of February instant, and which I now have the honor to submit to the Senate, with the recommendation that it shall receive the consent of that body, as provided in the Constitution, in order that the ratifications thereof may be duly exchanged and the treaty be carried into effect.

Shortly after Congress had adjourned in March last, and in continuation of my efforts to arrive at such an agreement between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States as would secure to the citizens of the respective countries the unmolested enjoyment of their just rights under existing treaties and international comity in the territorial waters of Canada and of Newfoundland, I availed myself of opportune occurrences indicative of a desire to make without delay an amicable and final settlement of a long-standing controversy—productive of much irritation and misunderstanding between the two nations—to send through our minister in London proposals that a conference should take place on the subject at this capital.

The experience of the past two years had demonstrated the dilatory and unsatisfactory consequences of our indirect transaction of business through the foreign office in London, in which the views and wishes of the Government of the Dominion of Canada were practically predominant; but were only to find expression at second hand.

To obviate this inconvenience and obstruction to prompt and well-de-lined settlement, it was considered advisable that the negotiations should be conducted in this city, and that the interests of Canada and Newfoundland should be directly represented therein.

The terms of reference having been duly agreed upon between the two Governments, and the conference arranged to be held here, by virtue of the power in me vested by the Constitution, I duly authorized Thomas F. Bayard, the Secretary of State of the United States, William L. Putnam, a citizen of the State of Maine, and James B. Angell, a citizen of the State of Michigan, for and in the name of the United States, to meet and confer with the plenipotentiaries representing the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, for the purpose of considering and adjusting in a friendly spirit all or any questions relating to rights of fishery in the seas adjacent to British North America and Newfoundland which were in dispute between the Governments of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty, and jointly and severally to conclude and sign any treaty or treaties touching the premises; and I herewith transmit for your information full copies of the power so given by me.

In execution of the powers so conveyed, the said Thomas F. Bayard, William L. Putnam, and James B. Angell, in the month of November last, met in this city the plenipotentiaries of Her Britannic Majesty, and proceeded in the negotiation of a treaty as above authorized. After many conferences and protracted efforts an agreement has at length been arrived at, which is embodied in the treaty which I now lay before you.

The treaty meets my approval, because I believe that it supplies a satisfactory, practical, and final adjustment, upon a basis honorable and just to both parties, of the difficult and vexed question to which it relates.

A review of the history of this question will show that all former attempts to arrive at a common interpretation, satisfactory to both parties, of the first article of the treaty of October 20, 1818, have been unsuccessful; and with the lapse of time the difficulty and obscurity have only increased.

The negotiations in 1854, and again in 1871, ended in both cases in temporary reciprocal arrangements of the tariffs of Canada and Newfoundland and of the United States, and the payment of a money award by the United States, under which the real questions in difference remained unsettled, in abeyance, and ready to present themselves anew just so soon as the conventional arrangements were abrogated.

The situation, therefore, remained unimproved by the results of the treaty of 1871, and a grave condition of affairs, presenting almost identically the same features and causes of complaint by the United States against Canadian action and British default in its correction, confronted us in May, 1886, and has continued until the present time.

The greater part of the correspondence which has taken place between the two Governments has heretofore been communicated to Congress, and at as early a day as possible I shall transmit the remaining portion to this date, accompanying it with the joint protocols of the conferences which resulted in the conclusion of the treaty now submitted to you.

You will thus be fully possessed of the record and history of the case since the termination, on June 30, 1885, of the fishery articles of the Treaty of Washington of 1871, whereby we were relegated to the provisions of the treaty of October 20, 1818.

As the documents and papers referred to will supply full information of the positions taken under my administration by the representatives of the United States, as well as those occupied by the representatives of the Government of Great Britain, it is not considered necessary or expedient to repeat them in this message. But I believe the treaty will be found to contain a just, honorable, and, therefore, satisfactory solution of the difficulties which have clouded our relations with our neighbors on our northern border.

Especially satisfactory do I believe the proposed arrangement will be found by those of our citizens who are engaged in the open sea fisheries, adjacent to the Canadian coast, and resorting to those ports and harbors under treaty provisions and rules of international law.

The proposed delimitation of the lines of the exclusive fisheries from the common fisheries will give certainty and security as to the area of their legitimate field; the headland theory of imaginary lines is abandoned by Great Britain, and the specification in the treaty of certain named bays especially provided for gives satisfaction to the inhabitants of the shores, without subtracting materially from the value or convenience of the fishery rights of Americans.

The uninterrupted navigation of the Strait of Canso is expressly and for the first time affirmed, and the four purposes for which our fishermen under the treaty of 1818 were allowed to enter the bays and harbors of Canada and Newfoundland within the belt of 3 marine miles are placed under a fair and liberal construction, and their enjoyment secured without such conditions and restrictions as in the past have embarrassed and obstructed them so seriously.

The enforcement of penalties for unlawfully fishing or preparing to fish within the inshore and exclusive waters of Canada and Newfoundland is to be accomplished under safe-guards against oppressive or arbitrary action, thus protecting the defendant fishermen from punishment in advance of trial, delays, and inconvenience and unnecessary expense.

The history of events in the last two years shows that no feature of Canadian administration was more harassing and injurious than the compulsion upon our fishing vessels to make formal entry and clearance on every occasion of temporarily seeking shelter in Canadian ports and harbors.

Such inconvenience is provided against in the proposed treaty, and this most frequent and just cause of complaint is removed.

The articles permitting our fishermen to obtain provisions and the ordinary supplies of trading vessels on their homeward voyages, and under which they are accorded the further and even more important privilege on all occasions of purchasing such casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to trading vessels, are of great importance and value.

The licenses which are to be granted without charge and on application, in order to enable our fishermen to enjoy these privileges, are reasonable and proper checks in the hands of the local authorities to identify the recipients and prevent abuse, and can form no impediment to those who intend to use them fairly.

The hospitality secured for our vessels in all cases of actual distress, with liberty to unload and sell and transship their cargoes, is full and liberal.

These provisions will secure the substantial enjoyment of the treaty rights for our fishermen under the treaty of 1818, for which contention has been steadily made in the correspondence of the Department of State, and our minister at London, and by the American negotiators of the present treaty.

The right of our fishermen under the treaty of 1818 did not extend to the procurement of distinctive fishery supplies in Canadian ports and harbors; and one item supposed to be essential, to wit, bait, was plainly denied them by the explicit and definite words of the treaty of 1818, emphasized by the course of the negotiation and express decisions which preceded the conclusion of that treaty.

The treaty now submitted contains no provision affecting tariff duties, and, independently of the position assumed upon the part of the United States that no alteration in our tariff or other domestic legislation could be made as the price or consideration of obtaining the rights of our citizens secured by treaty, it was considered more expedient to allow any change in the revenue laws of the United States to be made by the ordinary exercise of legislative will, and in promotion of the public interests. Therefore, the addition to the free list of fish, fish-oil, whale and seal oil, etc., recited in the last article of the treaty, is wholly left to the action of Congress: and in connection therewith the Canadian and Newfoundland right to regulate sales of bait and other fishing supplies within their own jurisdiction is recognized, and the right of our fishermen to freely purchase these things is made contingent, by this treaty, upon the action of Congress in the modification of our tariff laws.

Our social and commercial intercourse with those populations who have been placed upon our borders and made forever our neighbors is made apparent by a list of United States common carriers, marine and inland, connecting their lines with Canada, which was returned by the Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate on the 7th day of February, 1888, in answer to a resolution of that body; and this is instructive as to the great volume of mutually profitable interchanges which has come into existence during the last half century.

This intercourse is still but partially developed, and if the amicable enterprise and wholesome rivalry between the two populations be not obstructed, the promise of the future is full of the fruits of an unbounded prosperity on both sides of the border.

The treaty now submitted to you has been framed in a spirit of liberal equity and reciprocal benefits, in the conviction that mutual advantage and convenience are the only permanent foundation of peace and friendship between States, and that with the adoption of the agreement now placed before the Senate, a beneficial and satisfactory intercourse between the two countries will be established so as to secure perpetual peace and harmony.

In connection with the treaty herewith submitted I deem it also my duty to transmit to the Senate a written offer or arrangement, in the nature of a modus vivendi, tendered after the conclusion of the treaty on the part of the British plenipotentiaries, to secure kindly and peaceful relations during the period that may be required for the consideration of the treaty by the respective Governments and for the enactment of the necessary legislation to carry its provisions into effect if approved.

This paper, freely and on their own motion, signed by the British conferees, not only extends advantages to our fishermen, pending the ratification of the treaty, but appears to have been dictated by a friendly and amicable spirit.

I am given to understand that the other governments concerned in this treaty will, within a few days, in accordance with their methods of conducting public business, submit said treaty to their respective legislatures, when it will be at once published to the world. In view of such action it appears to be advisable that, by publication here, early and full knowledge of all that has been done in the premises should be afforded to our people.

It would also seem to be useful to inform the popular mind concerning the history of the long continued disputes growing out of the subject embraced in the treaty and to satisfy the public interests touching the same, as well as to acquaint our people with the present status of the questions involved, and to give them the exact terms of the proposed adjustment, in place of the exaggerated and imaginative statements which will otherwise reach them.

I therefore beg leave respectfully to suggest that said treaty and all such correspondence, messages, and documents relating to the same as may be deemed important to accomplish these purposes be at once made public by the order of your honorable body.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
February 20, 1888.

1 Whereas differences have arisen concerning the interpretation
2 of Article I. of the Convention of October 20, 1818; the United
3 States of America, and Her Majesty the Queen of the United King-
4 dom of Great Britain and Ireland, being mutually desirous of re-
5 moving all causes of misunderstanding in relation thereto, and of 6 promoting friendly intercourse and good neighborhood between 7 the United States and the Possessions of Her Majesty in North
8 America, have resolved to conclude a Treaty to that end, and have 9 named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

10 The President of the United States, Thomas F. Bayard, Secre-
11 tary of State; William L. Putnam, of Maine; and James B. Angell, 12 of Michigan:

13 And Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great 14 Britain and Ireland, The Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M. P.
15 The Honorable Sir Lionel Sackville Sackville West, K. C. M. G., 16 Her Britannic Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Pleni-
17 potentary to the United States of America; and Sir Charles Tup-18 per, G. C. M. G., C. B., Minister of Finance of the Dominion of 19 Canada;

20 Who, having communicated to each other their respective Full 21 Powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the follow-
22 ing articles:

23 ARTICLE I.

24 The High Contracting Parties agree to appoint a Mixed Commis-25 sion to delimit, in the manner provided in this Treaty, the British 26 waters, bays, creeks, and harbors, of the coasts of Canada and of 27 Newfoundland, as to which the United States, by Article I. of the 28 convention of October 20, 1818, between the United States and 29 Great Britain, renounced forever any liberty to take, dry, or cure 30 fish.

31 ARTICLE II.

32 The Commission shall consist of two Commissioners to be named
33 by her Britannic Majesty, and of two Commissioners to be named

34 by the President of the United States, without delay, after the 35 exchange of ratifications of this Treaty.

36 The Commission shall meet and complete the delimitation as 37 soon as possible thereafter.

38 In case of the death, absence, or incapacity of any Commissioner, 39 or in the event of any Commissioner omitting or ceasing to act
40 as such, the President of the United States or Her Britannic
41 Majesty, respectively, shall forthwith name another person to act
42 as Commissioner instead of the Commissioner originally named.

43 ARTICLE III.

44 The delimitation referred to in Article I. of this Treaty shall be 45 marked upon British Admiralty charts by a series of lines regu-46 larly numbered and duly described. The charts so marked shall, 47 on the termination of the work of the Commission, be signed by 48 the Commissioners in quadruplicate, one copy whereof shall be de-49 livered to the Secretary of State of the United States, and three 50 copies to Her Majesty's Government. The delimitation shall be 51 made in the following manner, and shall be accepted by both the 52 High Contracting Parties as applicable for all purposes under Ar-53 ticle I. of the Convention of October 20, 1818, between the United 54 States and Great Britain.

55 The three marine miles mentioned in Article I. of the Convention
56 of October 20, 1818, shall be measured seaward from low water
57 mark; but at every bay, creek, or harbor, not otherwise specially 58 provided for in this Treaty, such three marine miles shall be meas-59 ured seaward from a straight line drawn across the bay, creek, or 60 harbor, in the part nearest the entrance at the first point where 61 the width does not exceed ten marine miles.

62 ARTICLE IV.

63 At or near the following bays the limits of exclusion under Arti-
64 cle I. of the Convention of October 20, 1818, at points more than 65 three marine miles from low water mark, shall be established by 66 the following lines, namely:

67 At the Baie des Chaleurs the line from the Light at Birch Point
68 on Miscou Island to Macquereau Point Light; at the Bay of Mira-69 michi, the line from the Light at Point Escuminac to the Light on

70 the Eastern Point of Tabisintac Gully; at Egmont Bay, in Prince 71 Edward Island, the line from the Light at Cape Egmont to the 72 Light at West Point; and off St. Ann's Bay, in the Province of 73 Nova Scotia, the line from Cape Smoke to the Light at Point
 74 Aconi.

75 At Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, the line from Connaigre
 76 Head to the Light on the South-easterly end of Brunet Island, 77 thence to Fortune Head; at Sir Charles Hamilton Sound, the line
 78 from the South-east point of Cape Fogo to White Island, thence 79 to the North end of Peckford Island, and from the South end of 80 Peckford Island to the East Headland of Ragged Harbor.

81 At or near the following bays the limits of exclusion shall be 82 three marine miles seaward from the following lines, namely:

83 At or near Barrington Bay, in Nova Scotia, the line from the 84 Light on Stoddard Island to the Light on the south point of Cape 85 Sable, thence to the light at Baccaro Point; at Chedabucto and 86 St. Peter's Bays, the line from Cranberry Island Light to Green 87 Island Light, thence to Point Rouge; at Mira Bay, the line from 88 the Light on the East Point of Scatari Island to the North-easterly
 89 Point of Cape Morien; and at Placentia Bay, in Newfoundland, 90 the line from Latine Point, on the Eastern mainland shore, to the 91 most Southerly Point of Red Island, thence by the most Southerly
 92 Point of Merasheen Island to the mainland.

93 Long Island and Bryer Island, at St. Mary's Bay, in Nova Sco-
 94 tia, shall, for the purpose of delimitation, be taken as the coasts 95 of such bay.

ARTICLE V.

97 Nothing in this Treaty shall be construed to include within the 98 common waters any such interior portions of bays, creeks, or 99 harbors as can not be reached from the sea without passing within 100 the three marine miles mentioned in Article I of the Convention of 101 October 20, 1818.

ARTICLE VI.

103 The Commissioners shall from time to time report to each of the 104 High Contracting Parties, such lines as they may have agreed 105 upon, numbered, described, and marked as herein provided, with 106 quadruplicate charts thereof; which lines so reported shall forth-

107 with from time to time be simultaneously proclaimed by the High 108 Contracting Parties, and be binding after two months from such 109 proclamation.

110 ARTICLE VII.

111 Any disagreement of the Commissioners shall forthwith be re-112 ferred to an Umpire selected by the Secretary of State of the United 113 States and Her Britannic Majesty's Minister at Washington; and 114 his decision shall be final.

115 ARTICLE VIII.

116 Each of the High Contracting Parties shall pay its own Commis-
 117 sioners and officers. All other expenses jointly incurred, in con-
 118 nection with the performance of the work, including compensation 119 to the Umpire, shall be paid by the High Contracting Parties in 120 equal moieties.

121 ARTICLE IX.

122 Nothing in this Treaty shall interrupt or affect the free naviga-123 tion of the Strait of Canso by fishing vessels of the United States.

124 ARTICLE X.

125 United States fishing vessels entering the bays or harbors re-
 126 ferred to in Article I. of this Treaty shall conform to harbor regu-127 lations common to them and to fishing vessels of Canada or of 128 Newfoundland.

129 They need not report, enter, or clear, when putting into such 130 bays or harbors for shelter or repairing damages, nor when put-131 ting into the same, outside the limits of established ports of entry, 132 for the purpose of purchasing wood or of obtaining water; except 133 that any such vessel remaining more than twenty-four hours, ex-134 clusive of Sundays and legal holidays, within any such port, or 135 communicating with the shore therein, may be required to report, 136 enter, or clear; and no vessel shall be excused hereby from giving 137 due information to boarding officers.

138 They shall not be liable in any such bays or harbors for com-139 pulsory pilotage; nor, when therein for the purpose of shelter, of 140 repairing damages, of purchasing wood, or of obtaining water, 141 shall they be liable for harbor dues, tonnage dues, buoy dues, light dues, or other similar dues; but this enumeration shall not permit other charges inconsistent with the enjoyment of the liberties reserved or secured by the Convention of October 20, 1818.

ARTICLE XI.

United States fishing vessels entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the Eastern and Northeastern coasts of Canada or of the coasts of Newfoundland under stress of weather or other casualty may unload, reload, tranship, or sell, subject to customs laws and regulations, all fish on board, when such unloading, transshipment, or sale is made necessary as incidental to repairs, and may replenish outfits, provisions and supplies damaged or lost by disaster; and in case of death or sickness shall be allowed all needful facilities, including the shipping of crews.

Licenses to purchase in established ports of entry of the aforesaid coasts of Canada or of Newfoundland, for the homeward voyage, such provisions and supplies as are ordinarily sold to trading vessels, shall be granted to United States fishing vessels in such ports, promptly upon application and without charge; and such vessels, having obtained licenses in the manner aforesaid, shall also be accorded upon all occasions such facilities for the purchase of casual or needful provisions and supplies as are ordinarily granted to the trading vessels; but such provisions or supplies shall not be obtained by barter, nor purchased for re-sale or traffic.

ARTICLE XII.

Fishing vessels of Canada and Newfoundland shall have on the Atlantic coast of the United States all the privileges reserved and secured by this Treaty to United States fishing vessels in the aforesaid waters of Canada and Newfoundland.

ARTICLE XIII.

The Secretary of the Treasury of the United States shall make regulations providing for the conspicuous exhibition by every United States fishing vessel, of its official number on each bow; and any such vessel, required by law to have an official number, and failing to comply with such regulations, shall not be entitled to the licenses provided for in this Treaty.

- 177 Such regulations shall be communicated to Her Majesty's Gov-178 ernment previously to their taking effect.

ARTICLE XIV.

- 180 The penalties for unlawfully fishing in the waters, bays, creeks, 181 and harbors, referred to in Article I of this Treaty, may extend to 182 forfeiture of the boat or vessel, and appurtenances, and also of the 183 supplies and cargo aboard when the offense was committed;
 184 and for preparing in such waters to unlawfully fish therein, penal-185 ties shall be fixed by the court, not to exceed those for unlawfully 186 fishing; and for any other violation of the laws of Great Britain, 187 Canada, or Newfoundland relating to the right of fishery in such 188 waters, bays, creeks, or harbors, penalties shall be fixed by the 189 court, not exceeding in all three dollars for every ton of the boat 190 or vessel concerned. The boat or vessel may be holden for such 191 penalties and forfeitures.

- 192 The proceedings shall be summary and as inexpensive as prac-193 ticable. The trial (except on appeal) shall be at the place of de-194 tention, unless the judge shall, on request of the defense, order it 195 to be held at some other place adjudged by him more convenient.
 196 Security for costs shall not be required of the defense, except 197 when bail is offered. Reasonable bail shall be accepted. There 198 shall be proper appeals available to the defense only; and the 199 evidence at the trial may be used on appeal.

- 200 Judgments of forfeiture shall be reviewed by the Governor-201 General of Canada in Council, or the Governor in Council of 202 Newfoundland, before the same are executed.

ARTICLE XV.

- 204 Whenever the United States shall remove the duty from fish-205 oil, whale-oil, seal-oil, and fish of all kinds (except fish preserved 206 in oil), being the produce of fisheries carried on by the fishermen 207 of Canada and Newfoundland, including Labrador, as well as 208 from the usual and necessary casks, barrels, kegs, cans, and other 209 usual and necessary coverings containing the products above men-210 tioned, the like products, being the produce of fisheries carried on 211 by the fishermen of the United States, as well as the usual and 212 necessary coverings of the same, as above described, shall be ad-

213 mitted free of duty into the Dominion of Canada and Newfound-214 land.

215 And upon such removal of duties, and while the aforesaid ar-216 ticles are allowed to be brought into the United States by British 217 subjects, without duty being reimposed thereon, the privilege of 218 entering the ports, bays, and harbors of the aforesaid coasts of 219 Canada and Newfoundland shall be accorded to United States 220 fishing vessels by annual licenses, free of charge, for the follow-221 ing purposes, namely :

222 1. The purchase of provisions, bait, ice, seines, lines, and all 223 other supplies and outfits;

224 2. Transshipment of catch, for transport by any means of con-
225 veyance;

226 3. Shipping of crews.

227 Supplies shall not be obtained by barter, but bait may be so 228 obtained.

229 The like privileges shall be continued or given to fishing vessels 230 of Canada and of Newfoundland on the Atlantic coasts of the 231 United States.

232

ARTICLE XVI.

233 This Treaty shall be ratified by the President of the United 234 States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate ; and by 235 Her Britannic Majesty, having received the assent of the Parlia-236 ment of Canada and of the Legislature of Newfoundland ; and 237 the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as 238 possible.

239 In faith whereof, We, the respective Plenipotentiaries, have 240 signed this Treaty, and have hereunto affixed our seals.

PROTOCOL OF FISHERIES CONFERENCE.

Angell, of Michigan; I hereby invest them with full power jointly and severally, for and in the name of the United States, to meet and confer with Plenipotentiaries representing the Government of Her Britannic Majesty, for the purpose of considering and adjusting in a friendly spirit all or any questions relating to rights of fishery in the seas adjacent to British North America and Newfoundland which are in dispute between the Government of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty, and any other questions which may arise and which they may be authorized by their respective governments to consider and adjust; and I also fully empower and authorize the said Thomas F. Bayard, William L. Putnam, and James B. Angell, jointly and severally, to conclude and sign any treaty or treaties touching the premises, for the final ratification of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, if such advice and consent be given.

In witness whereof We have caused the Great Seal of Our United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland to be affixed to these Presents which We have signed with Our Royal Hand. Given at Our Court at Balmoral the twenty-fourth day of October in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven, and in the fifty-first year of Our Reign.

The British Plenipotentiaries proposed that Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, should preside.

Mr. Bayard, while expressing appreciation of the proposal, stated the opinion, in which the other United States Plenipotentiaries concurred, that it was not necessary that any one should preside; and the proposal was permitted to rest.

Mr. John B. Moore, Third Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, acting as Secretary to the United States Plenipotentiaries, and Mr. J. H. G. Bergne, C. M. G., Superintendent of the Treaty Department of the British Foreign Office, acting as secretary to the British Plenipotentiaries, were requested to make the Protocols of the Conference.

After some discussion of questions before the Conference, it was adjourned to 12 o'clock m. of the 28th of November.

PROTOCOL.

The treaty having been signed by the British Plenipotentiaries desire to state that they have been considering the position which will be created by the immediate commencement of the fishing season before the Treaty can possibly be ratified by the Senate of the United States, by the Parliament of Canada, and the Legislature of Newfoundland.

In the absence of such ratification the old conditions which have given rise to so much friction and irritation might be revived, and might interfere with the unprejudiced consideration of the Treaty by the legislative bodies concerned.

Under these circumstances, and with the further object of affording evidence of their anxious desire to promote good feeling and to remove all possible subjects of controversy, the British Plenipotentiaries are ready to make the following temporary arrangement for a period not exceeding two years, in order to afford a "modus vivendi" pending the ratification of the Treaty.

1. For a period not exceeding two years from the present date, the privilege of entering the bays and harbors of the Atlantic coasts of Canada and Newfoundland shall be granted to United States fishing vessels by annual Licenses at a fee of $1½ per ton—for the following purposes:

The purchase of bait, ice, seines, lines, and all other supplies and outfits.

Transshipment of catch and shipping of crews.

2. If during the continuance of this arrangement, the United States should remove the duties on fish, fish-oil, whale and seal oil (and their coverings, packages, &c.), the said Licenses shall be issued free of charge.

3. United States fishing vessels entering the bays and harbors of the Atlantic coasts of Canada or of Newfoundland for any of the four purposes mentioned in Article I. of the Convention of October 20, 1818, and not remaining therein more than twenty-four hours, shall not be required to enter or clear at the custom house, providing that they do not communicate with the shore.

4. Forfeiture to be exacted only for the offences of fishing or preparing to fish in territorial waters.

5. This arrangement to take effect as soon as the necessary measures can be completed by the Colonial Authorities.

The American Plenipotentiaries having received the communication of the British Plenipotentiaries of this date conveying their plan for the administration to be observed by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland in respect of the Fisheries during the period which may be requisite for the consideration by the Senate of the Treaty this day signed, and the enactment of the legislation by the respective Governments therein proposed, desire to express their satisfaction with this manifestation of an intention on the part of the British Plenipotentiaries, by the means referred to, to maintain the relations of good neighborhood between the British Possessions in North America and the United States; and they will convey the communication of the British Plenipotentiaries to the President of the United States, with a recommendation that the same may be by him made known to the Senate for its information, together with the Treaty, when the latter is submitted to that body for ratification.

House Ex. Doc. No. 84, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.

ALLEGED OUTRAGE AT FORTUNE BAY, NEWFOUNDLAND.

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING,

In compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives, the correspondence with the Government of Great Britain in regard to the alleged outrage upon American fishermen at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland.

MAY 17, 1880.—Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives :

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 27th ultimo, calling for copies of the correspondence with the Government of Great Britain in regard to the alleged outrage upon American fishermen at Fortune Bay, in the province of Newfoundland, I transmit herewith the correspondence called for, and a report from the Secretary of State on the subject.

In transmitting this correspondence and the report, I respectfully ask the immediate and careful attention of Congress to the failure of accord between the two Governments as to the interpretation and execution of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, as disclosed in this correspondence and elucidated by the exposition of the subject by the Secretary of State.

I concur in the opinions of this report as to the measures proper to be taken by this Government in maintenance of the rights accorded to our fishermen by the British concession of the treaty, and in providing for suitable action towards securing an indemnity for the injury these interests have already suffered.

Accordingly I recommend to Congress the adoption of these measures, with such attendant details of legislation as in the wisdom of Congress shall seem expedient.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, May 17, 1880.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 17, 1880.

To the PRESIDENT:

The Secretary of State, to whom were referred the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 27th of April, ultimo, requesting the President, "if not inconsistent with the public interest, to transmit to this House copies of all correspondence, not now communicated, with the English Government relating to the alleged interference with American fishermen in Fortune Bay, on the 6th of January, 1878," and a resolution of the Senate of the 28th of the same month on the same subject, has the honor to lay before the President the correspondence as called for.

In connection with these papers, and for the better understanding of the subject to which this correspondence relates, I submit for your consideration the valuable report of Collector F. J. Babson and Alfred D. Foster, esq., of their visit on board the naval steam-ship Kearsarge to the provincial inshore fisheries under the instructions of the Department during the summer of last year, as well as their instructions under which this cruise of the Kearsarge was planned. This correspondence with the British Government, and this intelligent exposition of the attempted exercise by our fishermen of the freedom of the inshore fisheries as secured to them by the treaty of Washington, whose violent interruption gave occasion to this discussion between the two governments of the true measure of this treaty right, will, it is believed, with the record of the proceedings of the Halifax commission, and the correspondence and protest which preceded and attended our payment of the award, furnish complete materials upon which the judgment of Congress can be formed and its action determined in the juncture of this fishery contention now demanding its serious consideration.

The very grave occurrence at Fortune Bay in January, 1878, was brought by me to the attention of the British Government in March of that year, with the view of obtaining redress for our fishermen for the gross violence and serious loss they suffered in their expulsion from this inshore fishery which they were prosecuting under the treaty of Washington. The reply of the British Government did not reach me until September 4 of that year. It disclosed possible grounds for the rejection of our claims which put upon our rights in the inshore fisheries such limitations of subserviency to British provincial or imperial legislation as seemed to me wholly inadmissible. These grounds were that our fishermen were pursuing their industry on Sunday, contrary to a law of Newfoundland, passed subsequent to the treaty of Washington; that they were using seines to take herring, contrary to a law of Newfoundland proscribing that method of fishing for the six months of the year between October and April; that they were using such seines in a manner prohibited at any season of the year by a statute which precluded catching herrings by means of seines "except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

In communicating the report of the evidence which was intended to show the time and manner at and in which our fishermen were pursuing their right, as a justification for their interruption in it, Lord Salisbury observed: "You will perceive that the report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law." To this intimation, even, that the freedom of the fishery accorded by an imperial treaty either had been subtracted by past or could be curtailed by future provincial legislation, I lost no time in opposing an explicit and unconditional rejection of such an interpretation of the treaty. In a dispatch to Mr. Welsh, on the 28th of September, I communicated to the British Government the views of this Government, as follows:

STATE,

In this observation of Lord Salisbury this Government cannot fail to see a necessary implication that Her Majesty's Government conceives that in the prosecution of the right of fishing accorded to the United States by Article XVIII of the treaty, our fishermen are subject to the local regulations which govern the coast population of Newfoundland in their prosecution of their fishing industry, whatever those regulations may be, and whether enacted before or since the treaty of Washington.

The three particulars in which our fishermen are supposed to be constrained by actual legislation of the province cover in principle every degree of regulation of our fishing industry within the three-mile line which can well be conceived. But they are in themselves so important and so serious a limitation of the rights secured by the treaty as practically to exclude our fishermen from any profitable pursuit of the right, which, I need not add, is equivalent to annulling or canceling, by the provincial government, the privilege accorded by the treaty with the British Government.

If our fishing-fleet is subject to the Sunday laws of Newfoundland, made for the coast population; if it is excluded from the fishing-grounds for half the year, from October to April; if our "seines and other contrivances" for catching fish are subject to the regulations of the legislature of Newfoundland, it is not easy to see what firm or valuable measure for the privilege of Article XVIII as conceded to the United States this Government can promise to its citizens under the guarantee of the treaty. It would not under any circumstances be admissible for one government to subject the persons, the property, and the interests of its fishermen to the unregulated regulation of another government upon the suggestion that such authority will not be oppressively or capriciously exercised, nor would any government accept, as an adequate guarantee of the proper exercise of such authority over its citizens by a foreign government, that, presumptively, regulations would be uniform in their operation upon the subjects of both governments in similar case. If there are to be regulations of a common enjoyment, they must be authenticated by a common or joint authority.

But most manifestly the subject of the regulation of the enjoyment of the shore fishery by the resident provincial population, and of the inshore fishery by our fleet of fishing cruisers, does not tolerate the control of so divergent and competing interests by the domestic legislation of the provinces. Protecting and nursing the domestic interest at the expense of the foreign interest, on the ordinary motives of human conduct, necessarily shape and animate the local legislation. The evidence before the Halifax commission makes it obvious that to exclude our fishermen from catching bait, and thus compel them to go without bait, or buy bait at the will and price of the provincial fishermen, is the interest of the local fishermen, and will be the guide and motive of such domestic legislation as is now brought to the notice of this government.

You will therefore say to Lord Salisbury that this government can not but express its entire dissent from the view of the subject that his lordship's note seems to indicate. This government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States, conceded by the treaty of Washington, are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the statutes of Newfoundland, now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force, or that may hereafter be enacted by that government.

It may be said that a just participation in this common fishery by the two parties entitled thereto may, in the common interest of preserving the fishery and preventing conflicts between the fishermen, require regulation by some competent authority. This may be conceded; but should such occasion present itself to the common appreciation of the two governments, it need not be said that such competent authority can only be found in a joint convention that shall receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government and our own. Until this arrangement shall be consummated, this government must regard the pretension that the legislation of Newfoundland can regulate our fishermen's enjoyment of the treaty right as striking at the treaty itself.

It asserts an authority on one side and a submission on the other, which has not been proposed to us by Her Majesty's Government, and has not been accepted by this government. I can not doubt that Lord Salisbury will agree that the insertion of any such element in the treaty of Washington would never have been accepted by this government if it could reasonably be thought possible that it could have been proposed by Her Majesty's Government. The insertion of any such proposition by construction now is equally at variance with the views of this government.

The representation made to this government by the interests of our citizens affected leave no room to doubt that this assertion of authority is as serious and extensive in practical relations as it is in principle. The rude application made to the twenty vessels in Fortune Bay, of this asserted authority, in January last, drove them from the profitable prosecution of their projected cruises. By the same reason the entire inshore fishery is held by us upon the same tenure of dependence upon the Parliament of the Dominion or the legislatures of the several provinces.

In the opinion of this Government, it is essential that we should at once invite the attention of Lord Salisbury to the question of provincial control over the fishermen of the United States in their prosecution of the privilege secured to them by the treaty. So grave a question, in its bearing upon the obligations of this Government under the treaty, makes it necessary that the President should ask from Her Majesty's Government a frank avowal or disavowal of the paramount authority of provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery, which seems to be intimated, if not asserted, in Lord Salisbury's note.

Before the receipt of a reply from Her Majesty's Government, it would be premature to consider what should be the course of this Government should this limitation upon the treaty privileges of the United States be insisted upon by the British Government as their construction of the treaty.

In answer to this unequivocal presentation, both of the freedom of the fishery as this Government interpreted the concession of the treaty, and of the absolute suppression of this treaty right, as a matter of practical value to our fishermen by this actual provincial legislation, Lord Salisbury replied with less distinctness, no doubt, but yet in a sense which I could not but regard as disclaiming any right to qualify the treaty by municipal legislation previous or subsequent to its date. After intimating a dissent from the doctrine, if I had intended to assert it, "that no British authority has any right to pass any kind of law binding Americans who are fishing in British waters," Lord Salisbury says:

On the other hand, Her Majesty's Government will readily admit what is, indeed, self-evident, that British sovereignty, as regards these matters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which can not be modified or affected by any municipal legislation. I can not anticipate that with regard to these principles, any difference will be found to exist between the views of the two Governments. If, however, it be admitted that the Newfoundland legislators have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters, by any laws which do not contravene existing treaties, it must further be considered that the duty of determining the existence of any such contravention must be undertaken by the Governments, and can not be remitted to the discretion of each individual fisherman, for such a discretion, if exercised on one side, can hardly be refused on the other. * * * Her Majesty's Government prefer the view that the law enacted by the legislature of the country, whatever it may be, ought to be obeyed by natives and foreigners alike who are sojourning within the territorial limits of its jurisdiction, but that if a law has been inadvertently passed which is in any degree or respect at variance with rights conferred on a foreign power by treaty, the correction of the mistake as committed, at the earliest period after its existence shall have been ascertained and recognized, is a matter of international obligation.

This dispatch was received by me in November, and on the 23d of the same month the payment of the award of the Halifax Commission was made at the date provided in the treaty. The further consideration of the Fortune Bay claims seemed to require only the verification of the facts on the part of our claimants, so far as they were drawn in question by, or were at variance with, the report made to the British Government by its officers, and the communication to that Government of the results as finally insisted upon by us as the basis and measure of our claims. The correspondence called for by Congress and now submitted, shows the entire rejection of the claims on the grounds set forth in Lord Salisbury's dispatch of the 3d of April last.

Before considering the main proposition of the British Government, by which a direct and flat denial of the freedom of the inshore fisheries as claimed by this Government is interposed, I need to bring to attention two subordinate pretensions of Lord Salisbury's dispatch intended to fortify his main proposition.

It appeared that in the management of one, at least, of the seines at Fortune Bay our fishermen had used the strand for a temporary service in the process of inclosing the school of herring within the seine. as in the trans-

plained of, is now made prominent in the dispatch of Lord Salisbury. There being no allegation that this use of the strand violates any provincial regulation of the fisheries, the point is made that the freedom of the fisheries accorded by the treaty itself, in terms, excludes our fishermen from this incidental use of the strand in the process of taking fish by seines. A true interpretation of the treaty concession gives no support to this pretension. The concession of fishing is "to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbors, and creeks of the provinces * * *, without being restricted to any distance from the shore." Besides this concession of fishing, which manifestly covers the use of the strand in the process of taking fish, a further permission to land upon the coasts and shores is conceded to our fishermen for the independent purpose of using the land for "drying their nets and curing their fish."

The contention seems to be that because specific permission to use the land for purposes not included in the process of "taking fish" is given in terms, therefore the use of the strand in the process of "taking fish" is excluded, though in the nature of the process of taking fish the temporary use of the strand in managing the seines is a part of inshore fishing. This faulty reasoning is not helped at all by the proviso of the treaty, that our fishermen, in using their right on shore, shall not "interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose." If this proviso does not include the use of the strand in taking fish, it does not qualify the fishing concession. If it does include that use of the strand, then it construes such use as within the fishing concession, and qualifies it by the observance of private property on shore and non-interference with British fishermen using the strand in their fishing.

Lord Salisbury's reference to the argument of Mr. Foster before the Halifax Commission, on the independent subject of the commercial privileges for which the British case demanded compensation in the awards (and which were rejected by the Commission as not within the purview of the treaty), for the doctrines of this Government in regard to the use of the strand as an incident of the inshore fishery concession needs no serious comment here. If the "case" of either Government could fairly be referred to as maintaining propositions to which it should be held in this contention, the special arguments pro and con of counsel can not usefully be resorted to for this purpose.

In this interlocutory argument on the commercial question, the British counsel, in answering Mr. Foster, maintained the opposite construction of the treaty. Neither view had any important relation to the subject then under discussion.

The second topic of Lord Salisbury's dispatch, from which aid is sought for his main proposition, is the presentation of Mr. Marcy's circular to the collectors of customs, while the reciprocity treaty was in force, for promulgation among our fishermen, the whole text of which Lord Salisbury incorporates in his note.

In the full copy of this circular, which is appended (No. 5) to the Babson and Foster report, the fishery regulations of the provinces to which it relates are recited, and a reference to these is sufficient to displace any inference that this Government has assented to any curtailment, past or previous, by provincial legislation, of the freedom of the inshore fishery, as conceded to our fishermen by the terms of the reciprocity treaty or the treaty of Washington. One of these regulations relates to the demarkation of "gurry grounds," and the other to the reservation of spawning grounds, during the spawning season, from invasion. "Gerry," or the offal of fish, was supposed to infect the waters, and the regulation was not of the right of taking fish, but of poisoning them. The care of the spawning beds in spawning season, in like manner, was a regulation of the breeding of fish, not a regulation of modes of American fishing. Both these regulations met the approval of this Government and were required by Mr. Marey to be respected by our fishermen, for this reason, and in the sense of being within the reasonable province of local civil jurisdiction, and not encroaching upon the province of freedom of the fishery as imparted by the reciprocity treaty. But the right of this Government to inspect all such laws and pass upon them as falling one side or the other of the line thus firmly drawn is explicitly stated by Mr. Marey. He says, "should they be so framed or executed as to make any discrimination in favor of British fishermen, or to impair the rights secured to American fishermen by that treaty, those injuriously affected by them will appeal to this Government for redress." Accordingly, the fishermen are directed to make complaint, upon the case arising, either in respect to any law or its execution, "in order that the matter may be arranged by the two Governments."

The position of this Government, as laid down in my dispatch of September 28, 1878, is, therefore, unembarrassed by any attitude in this contention, heretofore taken in any diplomatic discussion of parallel treaty engagements. Any particular interpretation of the treaty as to the right to use the strand in fishing with seines, ceases to be of significance, in the issue now joined with the British Government, because the provincial laws in question prohibit the use of the seines at all, and the main proposition of the British Government subjects our treaty rights to such legislation. So, too, the scope of this main proposition can be neither obscured nor confused by the irrelevant consideration of the local jurisdiction, within three miles of the shore, over persons or property, of the running of civil or criminal process, of health or police regulations, of territorial sovereignty in the abstract. The issue between the two Governments is as to what regulations of the freedom of the fishery, in the very matter of the time and manner of taking fish, remain a part of British sovereignty over the fishery, under the color of sovereignty over the place, when exclusive sovereignty over the fishery has been parted with by Great Britain, and a participation in such fishery has been acquired by the United States, in the terms and on the considerations of the Treaty of Washington.

Upon this issue the position of this Government was notified to the British Government in September, 1878, as follows:

This Government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States conceded by the Treaty of Washington are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the statutes of Newfoundland, now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force or that may hereafter be enacted by that Government.

Upon this issue the position of the British Government is now notified to us by the dispatch of Lord Salisbury, of April 3, ultimo, as follows: Referring to these statutes of Newfoundland, Lord Salisbury says:

These regulations, which were in force at the date of the Treaty of Washington, were not abolished, but confirmed by the subsequent statutes, and are binding under the treaty upon the citizens of the United States in common with British subjects. The United States fishermen, in landing for the purpose of fishing at Tickle Beach, in using seine at a prohibited time, and in barring herrings with seines from the shore, exceeded their treaty privileges and were engaged in unlawful acts.

Lord Salisbury further states that Her Majesty's Government "have always admitted the incompetence of the colonial or the imperial legis-

There are but two grounds upon which the subordination of the United States' freedom of the inshore fisheries to imperial or provincial legislation, curtailing or burdening that freedom, ever has been, or, in the nature of the case, can be placed.

The first is that of reserved general sovereignty within the three-mile limit, under cover of which it is pretended there lurked in the concession of the freedom of this fishery to the United States, in common with Great Britain, the power of one party in the privilege of this common fishery to regulate the enjoyment of it by the other. The statement of this proposition confutes it. The United States would have acquired nothing of right, if the concession was constantly subject to the will of Great Britain for its exercise and enjoyment. Accordingly, Lord Salisbury disclaims this pretension as ever having been held by the British Government as a reserved power capable of exercise by any regulations subsequent to the date of the treaty of Washington. But, manifestly, antecedent regulations, as having force subsequent to the treaty, can not be sustained upon the ground of sovereignty over the treaty concessions by any better reason than new legislation of that quality and effect. If the treaty predominates over subsequent provincial legislation, encroaching upon the treaty concessions, by stronger reason it supplants previous provincial legislation subversive or restrictive of the treaty concession. If such previous legislation persists after the treaty comes into operation, it must be because the treaty in terms or by just interpretation accepts this previous legislation as a part of itself. But this is the predominance of the treaty and not of the legislation, which thenceforth owes its vigor to the stipulations of the treaty by which the United States adopts and confirms the provincial legislation in force at its date. This is in substance the British contention, and, in the failure of the doctrine of reserved sovereignty, is the only alternative basis of the present proposition of the British Government.

The subject thus brought into dispute at this late date in the progress of the fishery negotiations between the two countries is simply what the fishery in provincial waters, which the British Government had at its disposal and which we acquired at its hand, as a matter of property and beneficial enjoyment, really was.

That the British proprietorship in and dominion over this inshore fishery was perfect, absolute, and without incumbrance or limitations, and that this was the subject concerning which the negotiations were occupied and by and to which the treaty equivalents were to be measured and applied was certainly never doubted by the negotiators of this treaty on the part of the United States or of Great Britain. Whatever this fishery was in its natural extent and value, in its geographical area, and its multitude and variety of fish products, that was the subject of which Great Britain possessed the jus disponendi, and that the subject of which the United States proposed to acquire an undivided share. The proportion of this fishery which Great Britain was to part with and the United States was to appropriate does not affect the question of what the entire property was and was understood to be. Whatever the United States would have acquired had Great Britain parted with the whole fishery, the subject partitioned between them was this entirety, no matter what the shares in which it was to be enjoyed might be.

It is equally clear that the negotiators on both sides assumed that Great Britain was dealing with this subject as sole owner, and that it had impaired neither its title nor its possession by any previous grant or incumbrance. Whatever right and enjoyment then, by proprietorship and dominion, Great Britain in its political sovereignty could impart to "the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty," that right and enjoyment Great Britain could impart "to the inhabitants of the United States."

This being the subject of the grant, and this the title and possession of the grantor, what is the treaty description of the estate, right, and privilege granted to the United States for the enjoyment of its citizens? The text of the fishery articles of the Treaty of Washington shows that there was no limitation whatever upon the grant, except that the estate, right, and privilege granted were to endure but for a term of years, and were to be enjoyed by the United States not exclusively, but in common with Great Britain. There was, to be sure, a restriction imposed upon both countries which excluded both equally from extending the enjoyment of either's share of the common fishery beyond the "inhabitants of the United States" on the one side and "Her Britannic Majesty's subjects" on the other, thus disabling either Government from impairing the share of the other by introducing foreign fishermen into the common fishery. But this feature in the grant has no significance in the measure of the concession as now disputed by Great Britain and contended for by the United States.

The British contention imputes to the phrase of the treaty, "in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty," not only its manifest effect of excluding any possible conclusion that the privilege conceded to the United States was exclusive, but the further effect of measuring the subject of the grant—that is, the fishery itself—as it was then, at the very date of the treaty, regulated by the various laws of the maritime provinces.

For this interpolation there seems no justification either in reason or in the history of the negotiation. There is not the least evidence that it was present to the mind of either of the high contracting parties to the treaty that the subject of the fishery to be partitioned between them was any less than such as it was in its natural dimensions and quality, and such as it was, as a subject of human control, at the unlimited disposal of British sovereignty. What these provincial laws were no one inquired and no one disclosed. That the fishery our sea-going fishermen were to share in, was a fishery regulated by and for the local population fishing from the shore, no one conceived. That the title of Great Britain should be examined, or warranty against adverse title and possession or against incumbrances exacted, would have seemed both foolish and offensive to the High Joint Commission which negotiated this treaty. To the apprehension of all, the map and the statistics of the catch showed what the fishery was in extent and value, and the dominion of Great Britain over the subject measured the security of the right which we were to acquire.

The proposition of Lord Salisbury reduces the grant of the fishery from the dimensions of the fishery as Great Britain had power to convey it, and by its mere natural description would convey it, to the fishery as it had been trimmed and curtailed by local legislation and was to be regulated by local administration. He reduces our enjoyment from a freedom of the fishery, such as the plenary political power of Great Britain could impart to its subjects and could share with the United States, to be enjoyed by their inhabitants, to the use of the fishing methods and seasons of the provincial coast population, as their fancies and occasions had arranged them; and this interpretation of the subject of the grant, by which one party parted with and the other acquired nothing of value, turns upon the phrase of the treaty which defines the estate conveyed as not exclusive, but to be held in common.

Fortunately, the closing transaction between the two Governments, by which the fishery concession to the United States was to be measured and valued, and compensation on our part therefor to be adjusted according to the measure and value of the provincial fishery, not in the abstract, but as opened to our fishermen, furnished an opportunity to take the estimate both of the British and provincial Governments of the extent and comprehension of the subject of the grant. This transaction antedates the present dispute and brings the two Governments together in a computation before the Halifax Commission of the nature, extent, and benefit of the inshore provincial fishery.

The considerations for the British concession were threefold. First, an equivalent fishery concession on our own coasts; second, exemption of provincial fish products from duties, or the concession of our free market; third, such supplemental money payment as the nature, extent, and value of the British fishery concession, in the judgment of the Halifax Commission, would warrant or require. It would be enough to say that the present pretensions of the British Government in reduction of the grant were not presented in depreciation of the price we were to pay, nor was any subjection of the natural fishery to political or municipal disparagement advanced by us in reduction of the money value with which we were to be charged. But the British and provincial Governments are precluded from the present pretensions not by silence alone as to these latent limitations and incumbrances upon the grant, when its price was being adjusted by the Halifax award. The "Case" of the British Government presents in the most open and unequivocal terms the measure of the grant, in the sense both of benefit to the United States and of injury to the provincial fishermen. The conduct of the contention throughout maintained the freedom of the fishery to the methods and occasions of our fishing enterprise and skill, and insisted upon the right accorded (which might exhaust and destroy the fisheries so as to depreciate their benefit to the coast population, even beyond the treaty period), and not its actual exercise by our fishermen, as the standard of estimate by which our money payment was to be fixed.

In "the Case of Her Majesty's Government," submitted to the Halifax Commission, the following language is used to illustrate and enforce the advantage in the extent and method of fishing secured by the treaty of 1871 over the restrictions of the convention of 1818:

The convention of 1818 entitled United States citizens to fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, but denied them the privilege of landing there. Without such permission the practical use of the inshore fisheries was impossible. Although such permission has tacitly existed, as a matter of su^{er}ance, it might at any moment have been withdrawn, and the operations of United States fishermen in that locality would thus have been rendered ineffectual. The value of these inshore fisheries is great; mackerel, herring, halibut, capelin, and lance abound, and are caught inside of the principal bays and harbors, where they resort to spawn. Between three hundred and four hundred United States fishing vessels yearly frequent the waters of this group, and take large quantities of fish, both for curing and bait. A single seine has been known to take at one haul enough of herrings to fill 3,000 barrels. Seining mackerel is similarly productive. During the spring and summer fishery of the year 1875, when the mackerel were closer inshore than usual, the comparative failure of the American fishermen was owing to their being unprepared with suitable hauling nets and small boats, their vessels being unable to approach close enough to the beaches.

In the case of the remaining portions of the seaboard of Canada, the terms of the convention of 1818 debarred United States citizens from landing at any part for the purpose of operations connected with fishing. This privilege is essential to the successful prosecution of both the inshore and deep-sea fisheries. By it they would be enabled to prepare their fish in a superior manner, in a salubrious climate, as well as more expeditiously, and they would be relieved of a serious embarrassment as regards the disposition of fish offals, by curing on shore the fish which otherwise would have been dressed on board their vessels, and the refuse thrown overboard.

All the advantages above detailed have been secured for a period of twelve years to United States fishermen. Without them, fishing operations on many parts of the coast would be not only unremunerative but impossible; and they may therefore be fairly claimed as an important item in the valuation of the liberties granted to the United States under Article XVIII of the Treaty of Washington. (Halifax Com., Vol. I, p. 93.)

And again:

4. Formation of fishing establishments.

The privilege of establishing permanent fishing-stations on the shores of Canadian bays, creeks, and harbors, akin to that of landing to dry and cure fish, is of material advantage to United States citizens.

There are further advantages derivable from permanent establishments ashore, such as the accumulation of stock and fresh fish preserved in snow or ice, and others kept in frozen and fresh state by artificial freezing. (Ib., pp. 94, 95.)

In that portion of the same "case" which specially regards the character of the Newfoundland fishery, and points out with elaborate precision the rights of the United States fishermen on the shores of that island and the compensation demanded therefor, the British Government says:

I. The entire freedom of the inshore fisheries.

Newfoundland, from that part of its coast now thrown open to United States fishermen, yearly extracts, at the lowest estimate, $5,000,000 worth of fish and fish-oil, and when the value of fish used for bait and local consumption for food and agricultural purposes, of which there are no returns, is taken into account, the total may be fairly stated at $6,000,000 annually.

It may possibly be contended on the part of the United States that their fishermen have not in the past availed themselves of the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, with but few exceptions, and that they would and do resort to the coasts of that island only for the purpose of procuring bait for the bank fishery. This may up to the present time, to some extent, be true, as regards codfish, but not as regards herring, turbot, and halibut. It is not at all probable that, possessing as they now do the right to take herring and capelin for themselves on all parts of the Newfoundland coasts, they will continue to purchase as heretofore, and they will thus prevent the local fishermen, especially those of Fortune Bay, from engaging in a very lucrative employment, which formerly occupied them during a portion of the winter season for the supply of the United States market.

The words of the treaty of Washington, in dealing with the question of compensation, make no allusion to what use the United States may or do make of the privileges granted them, but simply state that, inasmuch as it is asserted by Her Majesty's Government that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII are of greater value than those accorded by Articles XIX and XXI to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and this is not admitted by the United States, it is further agreed that a commission shall be appointed, having regard to the privileges accorded by the United States to Her Britannic Majesty's subjects in Articles Nos. XIX and XXI, the amount of any compensation to be paid by the Government of the United States to that of Her Majesty in return for the privileges accorded to the United States under Article XVIII.

It is asserted, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that the actual use which may be made of this privilege at the present moment is not so much in question as the actual value of it to those who may, if they will, use it. It is possible and even probable, that United States fishermen may at any moment avail themselves of the privilege of fishing in Newfoundland inshore waters to a much larger extent than they do at present; but even if they should not do so, it would not relieve them from the obligation of making the just payment for a right which they have acquired subject to the condition of making that payment. The case may be not inaptly illustrated by the somewhat analogous one of a tenancy of shooting or fishing privileges; it is not because the tenant fails to exercise the rights which he has acquired by virtue of his lease that the proprietor should be debarred from the recovery of his rent.

There is a marked contrast, to the advantage of the United States citizens, between the privilege of access to fisheries the most valuable and productive in the world, and the barren right accorded to the inhabitants of Newfoundland of fishing in the exhausted and preoccupied waters of the United States north of the thirty-ninth parallel of north latitude, in which there is no field for lucrative operations even if British subjects desired to resort to them; and there are strong grounds for believing that year by year, as United States fishermen resort in greater numbers to the coasts of Newfoundland for the purpose of procuring bait and supplies, they will become more intimately acquainted with the resources of the inshore fisheries and their unlimited capacity for extension and development. As a matter of fact, United States vessels have, since the Washington treaty came into operation, been successfully engaged in those fisheries; and it is but reasonable to anticipate that, as the advantages to be derived from them become more widely known, larger numbers of United States fishermen will engage in them.

A participation by fishermen of the United States in the freedom of these waters must, notwithstanding their wonderfully reproductive capacity, tell materially on the local catch, and, while affording to the United States fishermen a profitable employment, must seriously interfere with local success. The extra amount of bait also which is required for the supply of the United States demand for the bank fishery must have the effect of diminishing the supply of cod for the inshores, as it is well known that the presence of that fish is caused by the attraction offered by a large quantity of bait fishes, and as this quantity diminishes the cod will resort in fewer number to the coast. The effect of this diminution may not in all probability be apparent for some years to come, and whilst United States fishermen will have the liberty of enjoying the fisheries for several years in their present teeming and remunerative state, the effects of overfishing may, after their right to participate in them has lapsed, become seriously prejudicial to the interests of the local fishermen. (Ib., pp. 103, 104.)

It is impossible to offer more convincing testimony as to the value to United States fishermen of securing the right to use the coast of Newfoundland as a basis of operations for the bank fisheries than is contained in the declaration of one who has been for six years so occupied, sailing from the ports of Salem and Gloucester, in Massachusetts, and who declares that it is of the greatest importance to United States fishermen to procure from Newfoundland the bait necessary for those fisheries, and that such benefits can hardly be overestimated; that there will be during the season of 1876, upward of 200 United States vessels in Fortune Bay for bait, and that there will be upward of 300 vessels from the United States engaged in the Grand Bank fishery; that, owing to the great advantage of being able to run into Newfoundland for bait of different kinds, they are enabled to make four trips during the season; that the capelin, which may be considered as a bait peculiar to Newfoundland, is the best which can be used for this fishery, and that a vessel would probably be enabled to make two trips during the capelin season, which extends over a period of about six weeks. The same experienced deponent is of opinion that the bank fisheries are capable of immense expansion and development, and that the privilege of getting bait on the coast of Newfoundland is indispensable for the accomplishment of this object.

As an instance of the demand for bait supplies derived from the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, it may be useful to state that the average amount of this article consumed by the French fishermen, who only prosecute the bank fisheries during a period of about six months of the year, is from $120,000 to $160,000 annually. The herring, capelin, and squid amply meet these requirements, and are supplied by the people of Fortune and Placentia Bays, the produce of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon being insufficient to meet the demand.

It is evident from the above consideration that not only are the United States fishermen almost entirely dependent on the bait supply from Newfoundland, now open to them, for the successful prosecution of the bank fisheries, but also that they are enabled, through the privileges conceded to them by the treaty of Washington, to largely increase the number of their trips, and thus considerably augment the profits of the enterprise. This substantial advantage is secured at the risk, as before mentioned, of hereafter depleting the bait supplies of the Newfoundland inshores, and it is but just that a substantial equivalent should be paid by those who profit thereby.

We are therefore warranted in submitting to the commissioners that not only should the present actual advantages derived on this head by United States fishermen be taken into consideration, but also the probable effect of the concessions made in their favor. The inevitable consequence of these concessions will be to attract a larger amount of United States capital and enterprise following the profits already made in this direction, and the effect will be to inflict an injury on the local fishermen, both by the increased demand on their sources of supply and by competition with them in their trade with foreign markets. (Ib., pp. 105, 106.)

CONCLUSION.

It has thus been shown that under the treaty of Washington there has been conceded to the United States—

First. The privilege of an equal participation in a fishery vast in area, teeming with fish, continuously increasing in productiveness, and now yielding to operatives, very limited in number when considered with reference to the field of labor, the large annual return of upwards of $6,000,000, of which 20 per cent. may be estimated as net profit, or $1,200,000.

It is believed that the claim on the part of Newfoundland in respect of this portion of the privileges acquired by United States citizens under the Treaty of Washington will be confined to the most moderate dimensions when estimated at one-tenth of this amount, namely, $120,000 per annum, or, for the twelve years of the operation of the treaty, a total sum of $1,440,000. (Ib., pp. 107, 108.)

To this "case" the United States Government filed an answer, and the British Government filed a reply to the answer, in which it repeated its contention :

The words "for no other purpose whatever" are studiously omitted by the framers of the last-named treaty, and the privilege is common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, to take fish and to land for fishing purposes, clearly includes the liberty to purchase bait and supplies, transship cargoes, &c., for which Her Majesty's Government contend it has a right to claim compensation.

It is clear that these privileges were not enjoyed under the convention of 1818, and it is equally evident that they are enjoyed under the treaty of Washington. (Ib., p. 173.)

As regards the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, it is availed of to a considerable extent by the United States fishermen, and evidence will be adduced of large exportations by them in American vessels, particularly from Fortune Bay and the neighborhood, both to European and their own markets.

The presence of United States fishermen upon the coast of Newfoundland, so far from being an advantage, as is assumed in the Answer, operates most prejudicially to Newfoundland fishermen. Bait is not thrown overboard to attract the fish, as asserted, but the United States bank fishing vessels, visiting the coast in such large numbers as they do for the purpose of obtaining bait, sweep the coves, creeks, and inlets, thereby diminishing the supply of bait for local catch, and sealing it from the grounds where it would otherwise be an attraction to the cod. (Ib., p. 186.)

It forms no part of my purpose in this report to adduce, in argument or proof, the manifold supports to the view now presented which the record of the diplomatic history of the fishery negotiations between the two countries or the documents and proceedings of the Halifax Commission contain. It is very apparent throughout them both that the obliteration of the sea-line of demarkation between the rights of our fishermen and those of British fishermen we regarded of principal value, as removing the sources of irritation between them and possible occasions of controversy and estrangement between the two nations. In my dispatch to Mr. Welsh of September 27, 1878, I laid before the British Government this disposition on our part as furnishing the leading purpose in the framing of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington. I then said that—

Politically, and in the interest of good neighborhood, this government did regard and at all times would regard, the restoration of the relations between the two countries, in the common enjoyment of these fisheries, to the ancient footing of the treaty of 1783, as most grateful in sentiment and as a most valuable guarantee against any renewal of strife.

In the British "Case" before the Halifax Commission, Her Majesty's Government definitely insisted upon this assured position of our public relations in this regard as an element of consideration in the award they asked from the Commission. Her Majesty's Government drew the attention of the Commissioners—

To the great importance attaching to the beneficial consequences to the United States of honorably acquiring for their fishermen full freedom to pursue their adventurous calling without incurring constant risks and exposing themselves and their fellow countrymen to the inevitable reproach of willfully trespassing on the rights of friendly neighbors. Paramount, however, to this consideration is the avoidance of irritating disputes, calculated to disquiet the public mind of a spirited and enterprising people, and liable always to become a cause of mutual anxiety and embarrassment.

It was repeatedly stated by the American members of the Joint High Commission at Washington, in discussing proposals regarding the Canadian fisheries, "that the United States desired to secure their enjoyment, not for their commercial or intrinsic value, but for the purpose of removing a source of irritation."

The experience of our Fortune Bay fishermen in their first attempt, in the sixth year of the running of the treaty, to exercise on the coast of Newfoundland the "full freedom to pursue their adventurous calling," which Her Majesty's Government said had been honorably acquired for them by their own Government, is exhibited in the papers now submitted, as is also the treatment of their grievance, and this Government's presentation of it, accorded by Her Majesty's Government.

The British Government claimed before the Halifax Commission the sum of $120,000 per annum during the twelve years of the treaty period, or the gross sum of $1,440,000, for the advantage to the United States of the fishing privilege proper on the Newfoundland coast alone, conceded by the treaty, over and above the counter concessions of our inshore fishery, and the remission of duty on their fish products. The Halifax award of $5,500,000, for the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland together, has been divided between them by the British Government, and the sum of $1,000,000 has been received by Newfoundland as its share of the money payment made by the United States under the treaty.

It will be observed that under the British view of the exposure of our fishermen at Fortune Bay to the penalties of infractions of the provincial laws, while they were enjoying in their own opinion and that of this Government the full freedom of the fishery accorded by the treaty, there is no pretense that the violence offered them and the wanton destruction of their fishing property and spoliation of their draught of fishes find any warrant in the supremacy of violated laws under color of which the British Government has refused them any indemnity.

In this attitude of the British Government, as taken in the correspondence, the violent expulsion of our fishermen from their fishery on the 6th of January, 1878, by the coast fishermen of Newfoundland, seems to be justified if not espoused. This position, too, of that Government necessarily carries a warning that any future attempt by our fishermen to exercise their treaty privilege, except in conformity to the local fishing regulations, will be resisted by the authority of the British Government, as well as exposed to the violence of the coast fishermen.

Under this unhappy and unexpected failure of accord between the two governments as to the measure of the inshore fishing privilege secured to our fishermen by the treaty of Washington, as developed in this correspondence, it becomes the imperative duty of this Government to consider what measures should be taken to maintain the rights of our people under the treaty, as we understand them, and to obtain redress for their expulsion from the enjoyment of their rights.

So far as this diminution of these privileges calls for a reconsideration of the treaty equivalents already parted with by this Government and received by Great Britain, as suitable to the failure of the privileges thus purchased and paid for, by this denial of their exercise so as to be valuable or desirable to our people, that subject necessarily must be remitted to diplomatic correspondence. The only continuing consideration the United States is paying for the treaty period, for the expected enjoyment of the treaty concession, is the remission of our customs duties upon the fish products of the provincial share in these fisheries. I respectfully advise that it be recommended to Congress to re-impose the duties upon fish and fish-oil, the products of the provincial fisheries, as they existed before the treaty of Washington came into operation, to so continue until the two Governments shall be in accord as to the interpretation and execution of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, and in the adjustment of the grievance of our fishermen from the infractions of their rights under that treaty.

This measure will give to our fishermen, while excluded from the enjoyment of the inshore fisheries under the continued enforcement of the British interpretation of the treaty, a restoration of the domestic market for the products of their own fishing industry, as it stood before its freedom was thrown open to the provincial fishermen in exchange for the free fishery opened to our fishermen.

I respectfully advise, also, submitting to the consideration of Congress the propriety of authorizing the examination and auditing of the claims of our fishermen for injuries suffered by the infraction or denial of their treaty privileges, with the view of some ultimate provision by convention with Great Britain or by this Government for their indemnity.

Mr. Evarts to Mr. Welsh.

No. 33.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 2, 1878.

SIR: Complaints have reached the department of serious interference with American fishermen engaged during the present season in the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, especially in the neighborhood of Long Harbor. The complaints come through various sources; first, from the United States consuls in that province; the consuls confining themselves, however, to general statements, based on representations made to them by fishermen immediately affected at the time of the occurrences, which form the grounds of complaints. Still more recently, however, these complaints have been preferred in a more specific manner, supported by affidavits of the masters of several fishing vessels owned and fitted out at Gloucester, Mass. From these statements it appears that about the 6th of January last no less than eight schooners from the above-named port, while engaged in the herring fishery at and in the neighborhood of Long Harbor, were attacked by the inhabitants to the number in one instance of 60 men, and in another 200 or more, and their seines, which were set and in most cases full of fish, cut and destroyed, and the fish, in one case to the amount of 5,000 barrels, and in others only less in quantity and value, scattered and run out to sea, resulting, beside the great loss of property, in the vessels being obliged to return to their home port in ballast, and also to abandon their fishing enterprise for the season.

When it is remembered at what considerable expense the preparations are made for a season's fishing in these northern latitudes, and that very many of the men, both masters and mariners, embark their all in the enterprise, the serious character of these losses may be partially understood.

Instructions have been sent to the consuls to transmit fuller information on the subject, and this will be furnished you as soon as it shall have been received. In the mean time it is deemed advisable to instruct you to bring the matter to the attention of Her Majesty's Government, and to request that it will cause an investigation to be made into the alleged facts of the case, and to adopt such measures as may be found necessary, not only to put an end to the evil, but also to prevent a recurrence of acts which, in addition to the injuries and losses to individuals, may have a tendency to complicate the good relations which so happily subsist between this government and that of Her Britannic Majesty.

COMMERCIAL AGENCY, U. S. A.,
St. Pierre, Miquelon, April 2, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your dispatch (No. 49) under date 21st February, from which I learn that a report has been made to the Department of State to the effect that a number of American vessels had been obliged to leave Fortune Bay on account of the antagonism of the fishermen in that bay, who "cut their cables and set their vessels adrift;" and further, that "some fourteen or more vessels (American) had been compelled by the natives to retire from the bay" without their cargoes, and that "Captain Jacobs, of schooner Moses Adams, had been compelled to defend himself and vessel from the assaults which were made upon him."

I beg, very respectfully, to observe that Long Harbor in Fortune Bay, the locality in which the difficulties occurred, is distant from St. Pierre about 90 miles, and that during the winter months there is almost a complete cessation of communication between that harbor and St. Pierre, and that no intimation of the matters alluded to in your dispatch came to my knowledge until through the Newfoundland and Nova Scotian journals, long after the difficulties occurred, which will account for my not having made it my duty to report to the Department on the subject.

Since the reception of your dispatch, which came to hand on 21st March, I have been enabled to obtain information from several parties, and among others, from an eye-witness to the matter in which Captain Jacobs was an actor, and the following (or as nearly as I can obtain it) is, I believe, reliable information:

On Sunday, January 13, three crews of American schooners, assisted by some Newfoundlanders, put out their seines to haul herring; they all succeeded in getting large quantities in their seines, when the fishermen of the bay (Newfoundlanders) gathered together and went to each of the captains and demanded that they should let the herring go out of their seines, under the pretext that as they (the natives) did not seine on the Sabbath, and as it was contrary to law, they would not allow it to be done by foreigners. The first captain they addressed (Capt. James McDonald, of schooner F. A. Smith) acceded to their demands and took up his seine; the second, Captain Jacobs, of schooner Moses Adams, had in the mean time run his herring into another seine belonging to a seine-master (Mr. Farroll, of Fortune Bay, who was working with him, and which was moored inside of his own); he took up his own seine into his boat, but refused to let the herring out of the other one. On some threatening language being used by the fishermen, he drew a revolver and declared he would shoot the first man who would seek to injure him or his seine; he finally rowed aboard his schooner, which was moored at a short distance. The natives then went to Captain Dago, of the schooner New England, and demanded that he should trip his seine and let out the herring; this he firmly refused to do. The fishermen then let the herring out and hauled the seine ashore and run it up the beach, tearing and breaking it in pieces.

From what I can learn, the statement that the schooners were obliged to leave the bay on account of the antagonism of the natives, is inexact, as they still continued to try during the week-days with the same seines (except Captain Dago's, which was destroyed) for a fortnight or more after the before-related occurrences without any hindrance whatever on the part of the natives, and it is asserted that it was owing to the exceedingly mild season and consequent impossibility to freeze herring, for which purpose the schooners alluded to were fitted out, that they left without their cargoes, and that considerable herring had been taken from time to time, but after having tried to freeze them, they were repeatedly obliged to sell them to the vessels loading salt-herring. This reason appears to be very likely the correct one, as I can hear no account whatever of any vessels having had their cables cut, or of any other serious difficulty having occurred other than the one alluded to 13th January.

In the winter of 1876-77 a similar case occurred, one of the American seines being put out on Sunday by the crew, in charge of a Newfoundlander as seine-master, Jeremiah Petites. The people of the bay demanded that the seine should not be hauled, and it was accordingly tripped and taken up by the owners, no further difficulty occurring.

I make these observations in order to show as fully as possible the probably real state of the matter, and under the impression from all I can hear that the reports made to the department, and as related in your dispatch, are more or less incorrect. I think there exists a very decided feeling of hostility on the part of the Newfoundlanders to the use of the large seines by American fishermen in their waters, but have no reason to believe that any action has ever been taken to prevent their hauling or to injure them in any way, except when hauling on Sunday; at the same time it is quite probable that they have seized on the occasion thus offered to show their dislike to seines being used by Americans in competition with their own.

I have the honor to be, sir, very respectfully, etc.,

Vice Commercial Agent, United States of America.

SIR: Referring to instructions Nos. 33 and 55, from the Department of State, dated on the 2d of March and 6th of April respectively, in relation to the alleged interference by the inhabitants of Long Harbor, Newfoundland, with certain Americans engaged in the herring fishery there, I have the honor to inclose a copy of the correspondence on that subject which has passed between this legation and the British Foreign Office.

In the absence of directions to that effect it has been thought necessary to send to Lord Salisbury copies of the further evidence in relation to the matter inclosed in Mr. Seward's No. 55 of the 6th of April last.

*Mr. Welsh to Earl of Derby.*LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, London, March 19, 1878.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acquaint your lordship that complaints have reached the Department of State at Washington of serious interference with American fishermen engaged during the present season in the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, especially in the neighborhood of Long Harbor. The complaints come from various sources: first, from the United States consuls in that province; the consuls confining themselves, however, to general statements based on representations made to them by fishermen immediately affected at the time of the occurrences which form the grounds of the complaints. Still more recently, however, these complaints have been preferred in a more specific manner, supported by affidavits of the masters of several fishing vessels owned and fitted out at Gloucester, Mass.

From these statements it appears that, about the 6th of January last, no less than eight schooners from the above-named port, while engaged in the herring fishery at and in the neighborhood of Long Harbor, were attacked by the inhabitants to the number in one instance of 60 men, and in another 200 or more, and their seines, which were set, and in most cases full of fish, cut and destroyed, and the fish in one case to the amount of 5,000 barrels, and in others only less in quantity and value, scattered and run out to sea, resulting, besides the great loss of property, in the vessels being obliged to return to their home port in ballast, and also to abandon their fishing enterprise for the season.

When it is remembered at what considerable expense the preparations are made for a season's fishing in these northern latitudes, and that very many of the men, both masters and mariners, embark their all in the enterprise, the serious character of these losses may be partially understood.

Instructions have been sent to the consuls to transmit fuller information on the subject, and I am advised that this will be furnished to me so soon as it shall have been received by the Department of State.

In the mean time, I am instructed to bring the matter to the attention of Her Majesty's Government, and to request that it will cause an investigation to be made into the alleged facts of the case, and adopt such measures as may be found necessary not only to put an end to the evil, but also to prevent a recurrence of acts which, in addition to the injuries and losses by individuals, may have a tendency to complicate the good relations which so happily subsist between the Government of the United States and that of her Britannic Majesty.

FOREIGN OFFICE, August 23, 1878.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have had under their consideration your letter of the 19th of March, making representations relative to certain disturbances which occurred in January last, between British and United States fishermen at Fortune Bay, on the coast of Newfoundland, and requesting, in accordance with the instructions of your government, that an investigation might be made into the alleged facts of the case; and I have now the honor to transmit to you, for your information and for communication to your government, the accompanying copy of a report drawn up by Captain Sullivan, R. N., of Her Majesty's ship Sirius, the officer intrusted with the duty of instituting an inquiry into the matter on the spot.

You will perceive that the report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law, and that no violence was used by the Newfoundland fishermen except in the case of one vessel whose master refused to comply with the request which was made to him that he should desist from fishing on Sunday, in violation of the law of the colony, and of the local custom, and who threatened the Newfoundland fishermen with a revolver, as detailed in paragraphs five and six of Captain Sullivan's report.

[Appendix to inclosure in No. 132.]

Report on the differences that arose between British and United States fishermen in January, 1878, by Capt. George Lydiaard Sulivan, of her Majesty's ship Sirius.

Having carefully weighed the evidence given on oath before me by Newfoundland fishermen present at the time, together with that inclosed in the correspondence forwarded for my perusal, I am of opinion—

1. That the Americans were using seines for catching herring on the 6th of January, 1878, in direct violation of Title XXVII, chapter 102, section 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, viz: "No person shall haul or take herring by or in a seine or other such contrivance on or near any part of the coast of this colony or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbors, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April."

2. That the American captains were setting and putting out seines and hauling and taking herring on Sunday, the 6th January, in direct violation of section 4, chap. 7, of the act passed 26th April, 1876, entitled "An act to amend the law relating to the coast fisheries," viz: "No person shall, between the hours of twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night, haul or take any herring, caplin, or squid with net, seines, bunts, or any such contrivance for the purpose of such hauling or taking."

3. That they were barring fish in direct violation of the continuance of the same act, Title XXVII, chap. 102, section 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, "or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

4. That, contrary to the terms of the Treaty of Washington, in which it is expressly provided that they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose (see article 18 of the above-named treaty), they were fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them, and of which they were actually in possession, their seines and boats, their huts, gardens, and land granted by government being situated thereon.

5. It is distinctly shown in the evidence that the cause of the difference commenced with the Americans by their persisting in shooting their seines on the Sunday, as the Englishmen who worked for them would not do it on that day, not only on account of its being illegal, but of their religious regard for the Sabbath, which is always strictly kept by them, and, although it must be observed that the result of this illegal fishing would have been that the Americans would have secured the whole of the herring in the bay on that day, to the exclusion of the rights and fair chances of all the others during the week, yet there is no evidence to prove that this or anything else but the fact of its being Sunday and the law and custom among themselves regarding it prompted them to demand that the seines should be withdrawn.

6. It is shown by the evidence of all those witnesses present at the time when the Americans were remonstrated with, and told to take their seines up prior to any serious steps being taken, and it is also distinctly proved that no violence was resorted to until after the exasperating conduct of Captain Jacobs, the American master of a schooner concerned in this illegal fishing, who threatened them with a revolver if they prevented him or interfered with his seine.

7. It does not appear that the native fishermen were aware of the illegality of hauling a seine in the month of January. It is, therefore, to be presumed that the Americans were also ignorant of that law, although their ignorance can not exonerate them from the breach, nor does it exonerate John Hickey, an Englishman, who is charged with the same offense, and whom it is my intention to summon before me to answer to that charge.

8. The statement of the Americans that they were compelled to leave the harbor and leave off fishing is entirely without foundation, which is proved by the evidence of those examined before me, among whom was Mr. Snellgrove, collector of customs, who was there a week after the occurrence, and communicated with them, and by the evidence of others to the effect that they remained for about a fortnight or more "until the herring slackened," and, with respect to their loss of the haul of herring by the seine being emptied, the fish were not their lawful property, having been illegally caught.

In support of this view of the conduct of the Americans, I am not only borne out by the evidence of the Fortune Bay fishermen, who made their statements in a remarkably frank and straightforward manner, but by the self-conflicting evidence of those very Americans themselves, whose depositions given on oath show them to have been illegally fishing, and who were liable thereby to the forfeiture of the seines, nets, &c., by chap. 102, section 12, of the consolidated statutes.

GEORGE L. SULIVAN,
Captain and Senior Officer.

DOCUMENT NO. 7.

Mr. Evarts to Mr. Welsh.

No. 150.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 28, 1878.

SIR: I received in due course your dispatch of August 24 ultimo, inclosing Lord Salisbury's reply of the British Government to the representations that had been made to it as early as March last by you, under instructions from the Department.

I must understand Lord Salisbury's note, accompanying the copy of Captain Sullivan's report, which he communicates to this government, as adopting that naval officer's conclusions of fact respecting the violent injuries which our fishing-fleet suffered at the hands of the Newfoundland fishing population at Fortune Bay, in January of this year, as the answer which Her Majesty's Government makes to the representations laid before it on our part, verified by the sworn statements of numerous and respectable witnesses.

His lordship has not placed in our possession the proofs or depositions which form the basis of Captain Sullivan's conclusions of fact, and I am unable, therefore, to say whether, upon their consideration, the view which this government takes of these transactions, upon the sworn statements of our own respectable citizens, would be at all modified. In the absence of these means of correcting any mistakes or false impressions which our informants may have fallen into in their narrative of the facts, it is impossible to accept Captain Sullivan's judgment upon undisclosed evidence as possessing judicial weight.

You will, therefore, lay before Her Majesty's Government the desire which this government feels to be able to give due weight to this opposing evidence, before insisting upon the very grave view of these injuries which, at present, its unquestionable duty to the interests which have suffered them, and its confidence in the competency and sobriety of the proofs in our possession, compels this government to take. Should Her Majesty's Government place a copy of the evidence upon which Captain Sullivan bases his report in your hands, you will lose no time in transmitting it for consideration. I regret that any further delay should thus intervene to prevent an immediate consideration of the facts in the matter by the two governments in the presence of the same evidence of those facts for their scrutiny and judgment.

But a careful attention to Lord Salisbury's note discovers what must be regarded as an expression of his views, at least, of the authority of provincial legislation and administrative jurisdiction over our fishermen within the three-mile line, and of the restrictive limitations upon their rights on these fishing-grounds under the Treaty of Washington. Upon any aspect of the evidence, on one side and the other, as qualifying the violent acts from which our fishing-fleet has suffered at the hands of the Newfoundland coast-fishermen, the views thus intimated seem to this government wholly inadmissible, and do not permit the least delay on our part in frankly stating the grounds of our exception to them.

The report of Captain Sullivan presents, as a justificatory support of the action of the Newfoundland shore-fishermen, in breaking up the operations of our fishing-fleet inside the three-mile line, at the times covered by these transactions, the violation of certain municipal legislation of the Newfoundland Government which, it is alleged, our fishermen were in the act of committing when the violent interruption of their industry occurred. I do not stop to point out the serious distinction between the official and judicial execution of any such laws and the orderly enforcement of their penalties after solemn trial of the right, and the rage and predominant force of a volunteer multitude driving off our peaceful occupants of these fishing grounds pursuing their industry under a claim of right secured to them by treaty. I reserve this matter for a complete examination when the conflicting proofs are in my possession.

I shall assume, for my present purpose, that the manner of exerting this supposed provincial authority was official, judicial, and unexceptionable.

I will state these justifications for the disturbance of our fishing-fleet in Captain Sullivan's own language, that I may not even inadvertently impute to Lord Salisbury's apparent adoption of them any greater significance than their very language fairly imports.

Captain Sullivan assigns the following violations of law by our fishermen as the grounds of rightful interference with them on the occasion in question:

1st. That the Americans were using seines for catching herring on the 6th of January, 1878, in direct violation of Title XXVII, chapter 102, section 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, viz: "No person shall haul or take herring by or in a seine or other such contrivance on or near any part of the coast of this colony or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbors, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April."

2d. That the American captains were setting and putting out seines and hauling and taking herring on Sunday, the 6th January, in direct violation of section 4, chapter 7, of the act passed 26th April, 1876, entitled "An act to amend the law relating to the coast fisheries," viz: "No person shall, between the hours of twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night, haul or take any herring, caplin, or squid, with net, seines, bunts, or any such contrivance for the purpose of such hauling or taking."

3d. That they were barring fish in direct violation of the continuance of the same act, Title XXVII, chapter 102, section 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, "or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

4th. That contrary to the terms of the Treaty of Washington, in which it is expressly provided that they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose (see Article XVIII, of the above-named treaty), they were fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them, and of which they were actually in possession—their seines and boats, their huts, gardens, and land granted by government being situated thereon.

The facts which enter into the offenses imputed under the first, second, and third heads of Captain Sullivan's statement, and such offenses thus made out, would seem to be the only warrant for his conclusion under his fourth head, that the United States fishermen have exceeded their treaty right, and in their actual prosecution of their fishing were, when interrupted by the force complained of, interfering with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of that part of the coast then being in their occupancy for the same purpose, contrary to the proviso of Article XVIII of the Treaty of Washington.

It is no part of my present purpose to point out that this alleged interference with the reserved rights of the local fishermen does not justify the methods of correction or redress used to drive off our fishermen and break up their prosecution of the fishing. This may be reserved also for discussion when both governments have a fuller knowledge of the actual circumstances of the transaction.

In transmitting to you a copy of Captain Sullivan's report, Lord Salisbury says: "You will perceive that the report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law."

In this observation of Lord Salisbury, this government cannot fail to see a necessary implication that Her Majesty's Government conceives that in the prosecution of the right of fishing accorded to the United States by Article XVIII of the treaty our fishermen are subject to the local regulations which govern the coast population of Newfoundland in their prosecution of their fishing industry, whatever those regulations may be, and whether enacted before or since the Treaty of Washington.

The three particulars in which our fishermen are supposed to be constrained by actual legislation of the province cover in principle every degree of regulation of our fishing industry within the three-mile line which can well be conceived. But they are, in themselves, so important and so serious a limitation of the rights secured by the treaty as practically to exclude our fishermen from any profitable pursuit of the right, which, I need not add, is equivalent to annulling or cancelling by the Provincial Government of the privilege accorded by the treaty with the British Government.

If our fishing-fleet is subject to the Sunday laws of Newfoundland, made for the coast population; if it is excluded from the fishing grounds for half the year, from October to April; if our "seines and other contrivances" for catching fish are subject to the regulations of the legislature of Newfoundland, it is not easy to see what firm or valuable measure for the privilege of Article XVIII, as conceded to the United States, this government can promise to its citizens under the guaranty of the treaty.

It would not, under any circumstances, be admissible for one government to subject the persons, the property, and the interests of its fishermen to the unregulated regulation of another government upon the suggestion that such authority will not be oppressively or capriciously exercised, nor would any government accept as an adequate guaranty of the proper exercise of such authority over its citizens by a foreign government, that, presumptively, regulations would be uniform in their operation upon the subjects of both governments in similar case. If there are to be regulations of a common enjoyment, they must be authenticated by a common or joint authority.

But most manifestly the subject of the regulation of the enjoyment of the shore fishery by the resident provincial population, and of the in-shore fishery by our fleet of fishing-cruisers, does not tolerate the control of so divergent and competing interests by the domestic legislation of the provinces. Protecting and nursing the domestic interest at the expense of the foreign interest, on the ordinary motives of human conduct, necessarily shape and animate the local legislation. The evidence before the Halifax Commission makes it obvious that to exclude our fishermen from catching bait, and thus compel them to go without bait, or buy bait at the will and price of the provincial fishermen, is the interest of the local fishermen, and will be the guide and motive of such domestic legislation as is now brought to the notice of this Government. You will therefore say to Lord Salisbury that this Government cannot but express its entire dissent from the view of the subject that his Lordship's note seems to indicate. This Government conceives that the fishery rights of the United States, conceded by the Treaty of Washington, are to be exercised wholly free from the restraints and regulations of the statutes of Newfoundland, now set up as authority over our fishermen, and from any other regulations of fishing now in force or that may hereafter be enacted by that government.

It may be said that a just participation in this common fishery by the two parties entitled thereto may, in the common interest of preserving the fishery and preventing conflicts between the fishermen, require regulation by some competent authority. This may be conceded. But should such occasion present itself to the common appreciation of the two Governments, it need not be said that such competent authority can only be found in a joint convention that shall receive the approval of Her Majesty's Government and our own. Until this arrangement shall be consummated, this Government must regard the pretension that the legislation of Newfoundland can regulate our fishermen's enjoyment of the treaty right as striking at the treaty itself.

It asserts an authority on one side, and a submission on the other, which has not been proposed to us by Her Majesty's Government, and has not been accepted by this Government. I can not doubt that Lord Salisbury will agree that the insertion of any such element in the Treaty of Washington would never have been accepted by this Government, if it could reasonably be thought possible that it could have been proposed by Her Majesty's Government. The insertion of any such proposition by construction now is equally at variance with the views of this Government.

The representations made to this Government by the interests of our citizens affected leave no room to doubt that this assertion of authority is as serious and extensive in practical relations as it is in principle. The rude application made to the twenty vessels in Fortune Bay of this asserted authority, in January last, drove them from the profitable prosecution of their projected cruises. By the same reason, the entire inshore fishery is held by us upon the same tenure of dependence upon the parliament of the Dominion or the legislatures of the several Provinces.

I cannot but regret that this vital question has presented itself so unexpectedly to this Government, and at a date so near the period at which this Government, upon a comparison of views with Her Majesty's Government, is to pass upon the conformity of the proceedings of the Halifax Commission with the requirements of the Treaty of Washington. The present question is wholly aside from the considerations bearing upon that subject, and which furnishes the topic of my recent dispatch.

In the opinion of this Government, it is essential that we should at once invite the attention of Lord Salisbury to the question of provincial control over the fishermen of the United States in their prosecution of the privilege secured to them by the treaty. So grave a question, in its bearing upon the obligations of this Government under the treaty, makes it necessary that the President should ask from Her Majesty's Government a frank avowal or disavowal of the paramount authority of Provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery, which seems to be intimated, if not asserted, in Lord Salisbury's note.

Before the receipt of a reply from Her Majesty's Government, it would be premature to consider what should be the course of this Government should this limitation upon the treaty privileges of the United States be insisted upon by the British Government as their construction of the treaty.

You will communicate this dispatch to Lord Salisbury by reading the same to him and leaving with him a copy.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, November 9, 1878. (Received November 20.)

SIR: I received from Lord Salisbury, late in the evening of the 7th instant, his reply to your dispatch, No. 150, of the 28th of September last, in relation to the disturbance of American fishermen by certain inhabitants of Newfoundland. I sent you by cable yesterday, in cipher, such a summary of this reply as our limited time enabled us to prepare, and I now inclose two copies of the letter in print, with which we have been furnished through the courtesy of the foreign office.

I have, &c.,

JOHN WELSH.

[Inclosure in No. 159.]

The Marquis of Salisbury to Mr. Welsh.

FOREIGN OFFICE, November 7, 1878.

SIR: Her Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the dispatch from Mr. Evarts, dated the 28th September, and communicated to me on the 12th ultimo, respecting the complaints made by the Government of the United States of the injuries sustained by American fishermen in Fortune Bay in January last.

This dispatch is in reply to my letter of the 23d August, in which I forwarded a copy of the report furnished by Captain Sullivan, of Her Majesty's Ship Sirius, on the occurrences in question. Mr. Evarts now remarks that the United States Government have not been put in possession of the depositions which form the basis of that report, and are unable, therefore, to say whether, upon their consideration, the view which the Government of the United States takes of these transactions upon the sworn statements of their own citizens would be at all modified.

Her Majesty's Government have not had the opportunity of considering the statements in question; but the depositions which accompanied Captain Sullivan's report, and which I now have the honor to forward, appeared to them, in the absence of other testimony, to be conclusive as regards the facts of the case.

Apart, however, from the facts, in respect to which there appears to be a material divergence between the evidence collected by the United States Government and that collected by the colonial authorities, Mr. Evarts takes exception to my letter of the 23d, on the ground of my statement that the United States fishermen concerned have been guilty of breaches of the law. From this he infers an opinion on my part that it is competent for a British authority to pass laws, in supersession of the treaty, binding American fishermen within the three-mile limit. In pointing out that the American fishermen had broken the law within the territorial limits of Her Majesty's dominions, I had no intention of inferentially laying down any principles of international law; and no advantage would, I think, be gained by doing so to a greater extent than the facts in question absolutely require.

I hardly believe, however, that Mr. Evarts would in discussion adhere to the broad doctrine which some portion of his language would appear to convey, that no British authority has a right to pass any kind of laws binding Americans who are fishing in British waters; for if that contention be just, the same disability applies à fortiori to any other power, and the waters must be delivered over to anarchy. On the other hand, Her Majesty's Government will readily admit—what is, indeed, self-evident—that British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation. I cannot anticipate that with regard to these principles any difference will be found to exist between the views of the two governments.

If, however, it be admitted that the Newfoundland legislature have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters by any laws which do not contravene existing treaties, it must further be conceded that the duty of determining the existence of any such contravention must be undertaken by the governments, and cannot be remitted to the discretion of each individual fisherman. For such a discretion, if exercised on one side, can hardly be refused on the other. If any American fisherman may violently break a law which he believes to be contrary to a treaty, a Newfoundland fisherman may violently maintain it if he believes it to be in accordance with treaty. As the points in issue are frequently subtle, and require considerable legal knowledge, nothing but confusion and disorder could result from such a mode of deciding the interpretation of the treaty.

Her Majesty's Government prefer the view that the law enacted by the legislature of the country, whatever it may be, ought to be obeyed by natives and foreigners alike who are sojourning within the territorial limits of its jurisdiction; but that if a law has been inadvertently passed which is in any degree or respect at variance with rights conferred on a foreign power by treaty, the correction of a mistake so committed, at the earliest period after its existence shall have been ascertained and recognized, is a matter of international obligation.

It is not explicitly stated in Mr. Evarts's dispatch that he considers any recent acts of the colonial legislature to be inconsistent with the rights acquired by the United States under the treaty of Washington. But if that is the case, Her Majesty's Government will in a friendly spirit consider any representations he may think it right to make upon the subject, with the hope of coming to a satisfactory understanding.

"SIRIUS, ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND, June 19, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, in obedience to your orders, I left Halifax on Saturday, the 8th instant, and proceeded to Fortune Bay, for the purpose of inquiring into the circumstances connected with the quarrel between the English and American fishermen in Long Harbor in January last, arriving off Brunet Island on the evening of Monday, the 10th. I anchored there for the night, the weather being thick, with fogs gathering; and on the evening of the 11th weighed and proceeded to Long Harbor, at the entrance of which the same afternoon I learnt that the Pert was at the head of the harbor (about 9 miles off). I therefore proceeded through the narrows and anchored in 6 fathoms about 7 miles from the entrance, and observed the Pert anchored about 3 miles farther in, when I recalled her, and on the following day anchored in company with her 4 miles farther down off Tickle Beach, where we found the disturbance of January last had taken place.

2. On this beach are two huts, occupied by fishermen who witnessed the affair, and having taken their evidence, which, with other evidence subsequently taken, will be forwarded with my report hereafter, we proceeded to Metter's Cove, where a fisherman named Tharnell and another were examined on the same subject.

3. From information given by them I proceeded to St. Jacques the same afternoon, where, from Mr. Snellgrove, subcollector of customs, who was present at Tickle Beach shortly after the disturbance, and others who had witnessed the whole transaction, I obtained further important evidence, which, with my report, will be forwarded at the earliest opportunity when complete.

4. There have been at these places several complaints made to me on various subjects by some of the witnesses, disputes relative to land property, and reports of barring herring, one being that a seine had been laid for this illegal purpose, and had been so for some days; in consequence of which I directed Captain Aitchison to proceed to the spot said to be barred, and ascertain the truth of the information.

In other cases of complaint, I was only able to take the evidence of those witnesses present at the time, but in the absence of others away fishing, I had to postpone the cases until my return from St. John's.

6. On Monday, the 17th, I directed the Pert to proceed to St. John's to coal, prior to her leaving for the east coast, and the same afternoon I left St. Jacques in this ship for St. John's, where I arrived yesterday at 7 p. m., the mail from England for Halifax arriving a few hours afterward, and leaving early this morning.

7. I am unable to forward more than this letter, as the report on the subject of the American outrage is not complete; but the evidence is most complete, the witnesses corroborating each other, and goes completely to prove the Americans were entirely in the wrong, and brought the quarrel on themselves, first by illegally fishing, and then by threatening them with a revolver.

8. I found on arrival the Contest at anchor, and the Pert arrived this morning, to await further orders.

Captain Sullivan to Rear-Admiral Sir E. Inglefield.

SIRIUS, ST. JOHN'S, June 21, 1878.

SIR: In obedience to your orders dated the 8th instant, in which I am directed to inquire into the differences which arose between British and United States fishermen in Fortune Bay in January last, I have the honor herewith to inclose the evidence obtained from several witnesses, together with my report on the subject; and, in further remarking thereon, desire to call your attention to those points in the evidence which have led me to the conclusions contained in that report.

It will be seen therein that there are four statutes which bear on the subject, and which have been infringed by the American fishermen, viz: Act, cap. 6, 1876, in amendment of consolidated statutes (1872): cap. 102, the proviso of the same as regards barring.

By the same act, 1876, sec. 4, and art. 18 of the treaty of Washington—

1. With respect to the first of these, the witness Silas Fudge says: "I witnessed the disturbance at Long Harbor on Sunday, the 6th January last; I am certain it was the 6th; I saw the seines in the water, two of them Americans, again. He (i. e., Jacobs, an American) had his in the boat; he had shot once and discharged his seine into Farrel's, who was working for him."

John Cluett stated that he was in Long Harbor on Sunday in January last. "They (the Americans) commenced hauling herring on Sunday about midday; the first American seine shot was that of Jacobs; there were two more American seines shot. He (Jacobs) had just hauled herring and shot them into Farrel's seine, who was working for him; we remonstrated about breaking the law and fishing Sundays."

All the evidence of the other witnesses is corroborative of the above; and the fact is even acknowledged by the Americans in their own evidence, as appears by the statements inclosed in the correspondence on this subject. It is therefore evident that they were illegally fishing, using seines, and hauling herring in January last contrary to the above-quoted status, which prohibits the same between the 20th October and 25th April in any year.

2. That the American captains were setting and putting out seines and hauling and taking herring on Sunday, the 6th January, in direct violation of sec. 4, cap. 6. This is proved by the evidence of all the witnesses.

John Saunders says: "In January last—one Sunday, I don't know the date—the Americans laid out their seines, assisted by the English employed by them; the Newfoundlanders told them to take them up, as it was not legal their fishing on Sundays; there was no other reason for destroying nets but for fishing on Sundays. They went to McCauley, who had laid his seine out for barring herring; the Newfoundlanders said it should not be done on a Sabbath day."

3. That the Americans were barring herring, that is, confining them in the seines for a considerable time, instead of forthwith hauling them. By the evidence of Silas Fudge "He (Captain Jacobs) had shot once and discharged his seine into Tom Farrel's, who was working for him."

John Saunders says: "Jacobs upset his seine into Farrel's seine, who was employed by him. Farrel was barring for the Americans, and was not allowed Jacobs to haul his seine."

Mark Bolt says: "The Americans do not bar fish; this was the first time I ever knew them to do so."

Richard Hendricken says: "Samuel Jacobs would persist in hauling, and hauled once and barred them in Farrel's net. Farrel was working for them, and had been hurring herring for several days, perhaps about a fortnight, by the Americans' orders. I believe it is illegal hurring herring, but we have no power to stop it; it is no good telling a magistrate; they take no notice of him."

4. That they were interfering with the rights of British fishermen in their peaceable use of that part of the coast occupied by them, &c. By all the evidence given, it occurred on Tickle Beach, Long Harbor, on which, as was seen by us, was a Newfoundland fishing settlement, the land being granted by government, as stated by Mark Bolt, who says: "I have been in the neighborhood fourteen or fifteen years. The ground I occupy, 150 feet, was granted me for life by government, and for which I now pay a fee; there are two families on the beach; there were three in the winter; our living is dependent on our fishing off this settlement."

The above are the main points in the evidence on which my report is founded.

In conclusion, I beg to inform you that I have forwarded a copy of the report to his Excellency the governor of Newfoundland and the duplicate direct to their lordships, in order to insure their receiving it at the same time as the colonial office will.

I have, &c.,

GEO. L. SULLIVAN.

[Appendix 3 to inclosure 1 in No. 150.]

Report on differences that arose between British and United States fishermen in January, 1878, by Captain Sullivan, of Her Majesty's ship Sirius.

Having carefully weighed the evidence given on oath before me by Newfoundland fishermen present at the time, together with that inclosed in the correspondence forwarded for my perusal, I am of opinion—

1. That the Americans were using seines for catching herring on the 6th January, 1878, in direct violation of Title XXVII, chap. 102, sec. 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, viz: "No person shall haul or take herring by or in a seine, or other such contrivance, on or near any part of the coast of this colony or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbors, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April."

2. That the American captains were setting and putting out seines and hauling and taking herring on Sunday, the 6th January, in direct violation of sec. 4, chap. 7 of the act passed 26th April, 1876, entitled "An act to amend the law relating to the coast fisheries," viz: "No person shall, between the hours of twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night haul or take any herring, capelin, or squid, with net, seines, bunts, or any such contrivance, or set or put out any such net, seine, bunt, or contrivance, for the purpose of such hauling or taking."

3. That they were barring fish in direct violation of the continuance of the same act, Title XXVII, chap. 102, sec. 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, "or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

4. That contrary to the terms of the treaty of Washington, in which it is expressly provided that they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose (see Article XVIII of the above-named treaty), they were fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them, and of which they were actually in possession, their seines and boats, their huts, gardens, and land granted them by government being situated thereon (see Mark Bolt's evidence).

5. It is distinctly shown in the evidence that the cause of the difference commenced with the Americans by their persisting in shooting their seines on the Sunday, as the Englishmen who worked for them would not do it on that day, not only on account of its being illegal, but of their religious regard for the Sabbath, which is always strictly kept by them; and although it must be observed that the result of this illegal fishing would have been that the Americans would have secured the whole of the herring in the bay on that day to the exclusion of the rights and fair chances of all the others during the week, yet there is no evidence to prove that this, or anything else but the fact of its being Sunday, and the law and custom among themselves regarding it, prompted them to demand that the seines should be withdrawn.

6. It is shown by the evidence of all those witnesses present at the time that the Americans were remonstrated with, and told to take their seines up prior to any serious steps being taken, and it is also distinctly proved that no violence was resorted to until after the exasperating conduct of Captain Jacobs, the American master of a schooner concerned in this illegal fishing, who threatened them with a revolver if they prevented him or interfered with his seine.

7. It does not appear that the native fishermen were aware of the illegality of hauling a seine in the month of January; it is therefore to be presumed that the Americans were also ignorant of that law, although their ignorance cannot exonerate them from the breach, nor does it exonerate John Hickey, an Englishman, who is charged with the same offense, and who it is my intention to summon before me to answer to that charge.

8. The statement of the Americans, that they were compelled to leave the harbor and leave off fishing, is entirely without foundation, which is proved by the evidence of those examined before me, among whom was Mr. Snellgrove, collector of customs, who was there a week after the occurrence, and communicated with them, and by the evidence of others to the effect that they remained for about a fortnight or more, "until the herrings slackened;" and with respect to their loss of the haul of herring by the seine being emptied, the fish were not their lawful property, having been illegally caught.

In support of this view of the conduct of the Americans, I am not only borne out by the evidence of the Fortune Bay fishermen, who made their statements in a remarkably frank and straightforward manner, but by the self-convicting evidence of those very Americans themselves, whose depositions, given on oath, show them to have been illegally fishing, and who were liable thereby to the forfeiture of their seines, nets, &c., by chap. 102, sec. 12, of the consolidated statutes.

No. 347.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 1, 1879.

SIR: You will readily understand that the pressure of current business, especially during the regular and special sessions of Congress, has prevented so immediate attention to the claims of the Fortune Bay fishermen, as definitely laid before me in their proofs completed during the session, as would enable me to give, in reply, a full consideration to the dispatch of Lord Salisbury of the date of November 7, 1878, in reply to mine to you of 28th September, 1878.

But other and stronger reasons have also induced me to postpone until now any discussion of the questions arising out of the occurrences to which these dispatches referred.

It so happened that the transactions of which certain citizens of the United States complain were brought fully to the attention of the government about the same time at which it became my duty to lay before Her Britannic Majesty's Government the views of the United States Government as to the award then recently made by the Commission on the Fisheries, which had just closed its sittings at Halifax. While the character of the complaint and the interests of the citizens of the United States rendered it necessary that the subject should be submitted to the consideration of Her Britannic Majesty's Government at the earliest possible moment, in order to the prevention of any further and graver misunderstanding and the avoidance of any serious interruption to an important industry, I was exceedingly unwilling that the questions arising under the award and those provoked by the occurrences in Newfoundland should be confused with each other, and least of all would I have been willing that the simultaneous presentment of the views of this Government should be construed as indicating any desire on our part to connect the settlement of these complaints with the satisfaction or abrogation of the Halifax award.

I also deemed it not unadvisable in the interests of such a solution as I am sure is desired by the good sense and good temper of both governments that time should be allowed for the extinguishment of the local irritation both here and in Newfoundland which these transactions seem to have excited, and that another fishing season should more clearly indicate whether the rights to which the citizens of the United States were entitled under the treaty were denied or diminished by the preten-sions and acts of the colonial authorities or whether their infraction was accidental and temporary. As soon as the violence to which citizens of the United States had been subjected in Newfoundland was brought to the attention of this department, I instructed you, on 2d March, 1878, to represent the matter to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, and upon such representation you were informed that a prompt investigation would be ordered for the information of that government.

On August 23, 1878, Lord Salisbury conveyed to you, to be transmitted to your Government, the result of that investigation, in the shape of a report from Captain Sullivan, of Her Majesty's ship Sirius. In furnishing you with this report, Lord Salisbury, on behalf of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, said :

You will perceive that the report in question appears to demonstrate conclusively that the United States fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law, and that no violence was used by the Newfoundland fishermen, except in the case of one vessel, whose master refused to comply with the request which was made to him that he should desist from fishing on Sunday in violation of the law of the colony and of the local custom, and who threatened the Newfoundland fishermen with a revolver, as detailed in paragraphs 5 and 6 of Captain Sullivan's report.

The three breaches of the law thus reported by Captain Sullivan and assumed by Lord Salisbury as conclusively established, were : 1. The use of seines and the use of them also at a time prohibited by a colonial statute. 2. Fishing upon a day—Sunday—forbidden by the same local law; and 3. Barring fish in violation of the same local legislation. In addition Captain Sullivan reported that the United States fishermen were, contrary to the terms of the treaty of Washington—

Fishing illegally, interfering with the rights of British fishermen and their peaceable use of that part of the coast then occupied by them and of which they were actually in possession—their seines and boats, their huts and gardens and land granted by government being situated thereon.

Yours, containing this dispatch and the accompanying report, was received on 4th September, 1878, and on the 28th of the same month you were instructed that it was impossible for this government duly to appreciate the value of Captain Sullivan's report, until it was permitted to see the testimony upon which the conclusions of that report professed to rest. And you were further directed to say that, putting aside for after examination the variations of fact, it seemed to this government that the assumption of the report was, that the United States fishermen were fishing illegally, because their fishing was being conducted at a time and by methods forbidden by certain colonial statutes; that the language of Lord Salisbury, in communicating the report with his approval, indicated the intention of Her Britannic Majesty's Government to maintain the position, that the treaty privileges secured to United States fishermen by the treaty of 1871 were held subject to such limitations as might be imposed upon their exercise by colonial legislation; and "that so grave a question, in its bearing upon the obligations of this government under the treaty, makes it necessary that the President should ask from Her Majesty's Government a frank avowal or disavowal of the paramount authority of provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery, which seems to be intimated, if not asserted, in Lord Salisbury's note."

In reply to this communication, Lord Salisbury, 7th November, 1878, transmitted to you the depositions which accompanied Captain Sullivan's report, and said :

In pointing out that the American fishermen had broken the law within the territorial limits of Her Majesty's domains, I had no intention of inferentially laying down any principles of international law, and no advantage would, I think, be gained by doing so to a greater extent than the facts in question absolutely require. * * * Her Majesty's Government will readily admit—what is, indeed, self-evident—that British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which can not be modified or affected by any municipal legislation.

It is with the greatest pleasure that the United States Government receives this language as "the frank disavowal" which it asked "of the paramount authority of provincial legislation to regulate the enjoyment by our people of the inshore fishery."

Removing, as this explicit language does, the only serious difficulty which threatened to embarrass this discussion, I am now at liberty to resume the consideration of these differences in the same spirit and with the same hopes so fully and properly expressed in the concluding paragraph of Lord Salisbury's dispatch. He says :

It is not explicitly stated in Mr. Evarts' dispatch that he considers any recent acts of the colonial legislature to be inconsistent with the rights acquired by the United States under the Treaty of Washington. But if that is the case, Her Majesty's Government will, in a friendly spirit, consider any representations he may think it right to make upon the subject, with the hope of coming to a satisfactory understanding.

It is the purpose, therefore, of the present dispatch to convey to you, in order that they may be submitted to Her Britannic Majesty's Government, the conclusions which have been reached by the Government of the United States as to the rights secured to its citizens under the treaty of 1871 in the herring fishery upon the Newfoundland coast, and the extent to which those rights have been infringed by the transactions in Fortune Bay on January 6, 1878.

Before doing so, however, I deem it proper, in order to clear the argument of all unnecessary issues, to correct what I consider certain misapprehensions of the views of this Government contained in Lord Salisbury's dispatch of 7th of November, 1878. The secretary for foreign affairs of Her Britannic Majesty says :

If, however, it be admitted that the Newfoundland legislature have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters by any laws which do not contravene existing treaties, it must be further conceded that the duty of determining the existence of such contravention must be undertaken by the governments, and can not be remitted to the discretion of each individual fisherman. For such discretion, if exercised on one side, can hardly be refused on the other. If any American fisherman may violently break a law which he believes to be contrary to treaty, a Newfoundland fisherman may violently maintain it if he believes it to be in accordance with treaty.

His lordship can scarcely have intended this last proposition to be taken in its literal significance. An infraction of law may be accompanied by violence which affects the person or property of an individual, and that individual may be warranted in resisting such illegal violence, so far as it directly affects him, without reference to the relation of the act of violence to the law which it infringes, but simply as a forcible invasion of his rights of person or property. But that the infraction of a general municipal law, with or without violence, can be corrected and punished by a mob, without official character or direction, and who assume both to interpret and administer the law in controversy, is a proposition which does not require the reply of elaborate argument between two governments whose daily life depends upon the steady application of the sound and safe principles of English jurisprudence. However this may be, the Government of the United States can not for a moment admit that the conduct of the United States fishermen in Fortune Bay was in any—the remotest degree—a violent breach of law.

Granting any and all the force which may be claimed for the colonial legislation, the action of the United States fishermen was the peaceable prosecution of an innocent industry, to which they thought they were entitled. Its pursuit invaded no man's rights, committed violence upon no man's person, and if trespassing beyond its lawful limits could have been promptly and quietly stopped by the interference and representations of the lawfully constituted authorities. They were acting under the provisions of the very statute which they are alleged to have violated, for it seems to have escaped the attention of Lord Salisbury that section 25 of the title of the consolidated acts referred to contains the provision that "Nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights and privileges granted by treaty to the subjects of any state or power in amity with Her Majesty." They were engaged, as I shall hereafter demonstrate, in a lawful industry, guaranteed by the treaty of 1871, in a method which was recognized as legitimate by the award of the Halifax Commission, the privilege to exercise which their government had agreed to pay for. They were forcibly stopped, not by legal authority, but by mob violence. They made no resistance, withdrew from the fishing grounds, and represented the outrage to their Government, thus acting in entire conformity with the principle as justly stated by Lord Salisbury himself, that—

If it be admitted, however, that the Newfoundland legislature have the right of binding Americans who fish within their waters by any laws which do not contravene existing treaties, it must be further conceded that the duty of determining the existence of such contravention must be undertaken by the governments, and can not be remitted to the judgment of each individual fisherman.

There is another passage of Lord Salisbury's dispatch to which I should call your attention. Lord Salisbury says:

I hardly believe, however, that Mr. Evarts would in discussion adhere to the broad doctrine, which some portion of his language would appear to convey, that no British authority has a right to pass any kind of laws binding Americans who are fishing in British waters; for if that contention be just the same disability applies a fortiori to any other powers, and the waters must be delivered over to anarchy.

I certainly can not recall any language of mine in this correspondence which is capable of so extraordinary a construction. I have nowhere taken any position larger or broader than that which Lord Salisbury says:

Her Majesty's Government will readily admit, what is, indeed, self-evident, that British sovereignty, as regards these waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which can not be affected or modified by any municipal legislature.

I have never denied the full authority and jurisdiction, either of the imperial or colonial governments, over their territorial waters, except so far as by treaty that authority and jurisdiction have been deliberately limited by these governments themselves. Under no claim or authority suggested or advocated by me could any other government demand exemption from the provisions of British or colonial law, unless that exemption was secured by treaty; and if these waters must be delivered over to anarchy, it will not be in consequence of any pretensions of the United States Government, but because the British Government has, by its own treaties, to use Lord Salisbury's phrase, limited the scope of British sovereignty. I am not aware of any such treaty engagements with other powers, but if there are, it would be neither my privilege nor duty to consider or criticise their consequences where the interests of the United States are not concerned.

After a careful comparison of all the depositions furnished to both governments, the United States Government is of opinion that the following facts will not be disputed:

1. That twenty-two vessels belonging to citizens of the United States, viz, Fred. P. Frye, Mary and M., Lizzie and Namari, Edward B. Webster, W. E. McDonald, Crest of the Wave, F. A. Smith, Hereward, Moses Adams, Charles B. Warren, Moro Castle, Wildfire, Maud and Effie, Isaac Rich, Bunker Hill, Bonanza, H. M. Rogers, Moses Knowlton, John W. Bray, Maud B. Wetherell, New England, and Ontario, went from Gloucester, a town in Massachusetts, United States, to Fortune Bay, in Newfoundland, in the winter of 1877-1878, for the purpose of procuring herring.

2. That these vessels waited at Fortune Bay for several weeks (from about December 15, 1877, to January 6, 1878) for the expected arrival of schools of herring in that harbor.

3. That on Sunday, January 6, 1878, the herring entered the bay in great numbers, and that four of the vessels sent their boats with seines to commence fishing operations, and the others were proceeding to follow.

4. That the parties thus seining were compelled, by a large and violent mob of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, to take up their seines, discharge the fish already inclosed, and abandon their fishery, and that in one case, at least, the seine was absolutely destroyed.

5. That these seines were being used in the interest of all the United States vessels waiting for cargoes in the harbor, and that the catch undisturbed would have been sufficient to load all of them with profitable cargoes. The great quantity of fish in the harbor, and the fact that the United States vessels if permitted to fish would all have obtained full cargoes, is admitted in the British depositions.

If the Americans had been allowed to secure all the herrings in the bay for themselves, which they could have done that day, they would have filled all their vessels, and the neighboring fishermen would have lost all chance on the following week day. (Deposition of James Searwell.)

The Americans by hauling herring that day, when the Englishmen could not, were robbing them of their lawful and just chance of securing their share in them; and, further, had they secured all they had barred, they would, I believe, have filled every vessel of theirs in the bay. (Deposition of John Chitt.)

See also affidavits of the United States captains.

6. That in consequence of this violence all the vessels abandoned the fishing grounds, some without cargoes, some with very small cargoes, purchased from the natives, and their voyages were a loss to their owners.

7. That the seining was conducted at a distance from any land or fishing privilege or the occupation of any British subject. (See affidavits of Willard G. Rode, Charles Doyle, and Michael B. Murray.)

8. That none of the United States vessels made any further attempts to fish, but three or four which were delayed in the neighborhood purchased small supplies of herring. (See British depositions of John Saunders and Silas Fudge, wherein is stated that the United States vessels only remained a few days, and that after January 6 no fish came into the harbor.)

All the United States affidavits show that the United States vessels were afraid to use their seines after this, and that they left almost immediately, most of them coming home in ballast.

The provisions of the treaty of Washington (1871), by which the right to prosecute this fishery was secured to the citizens of the United States, are very simple and very explicit.

The language of the treaty is as follows:

XVIII. It is agreed by the high contracting parties that in addition to the liberties secured to the United States fishermen by the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at London on the 20th day of October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American colonies, therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea coast and shores and in the bays, harbors, and creeks of the provinces of Quebec, &c.

XXXII. It is further agreed that the provisions and stipulations of Articles XVIII to XXV of this treaty, inclusive, shall extend to the colony of Newfoundland, so far as they are applicable.

Title XXVII, chapter 102, of the consolidated acts of Newfoundland, provides:

SECTION 1. That no person shall take herring on the coast of Newfoundland by a seine or other such contrivance, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 15th day of April, in any year, or at any time use a seine except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same.

SEC. 2. That no person shall, at any time, between the 20th day of December and the 1st day of April, in any year, catch or take herring with seines of less than 2½ inches mesh, &c.

SEC. 4. No person shall, between the 20th day of April and the 20th day of October, in any year, haul, catch, or take herring or other bait for exportation within one mile, measured by the shore across the water, of any settlement situated between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Point Ennager, near Cape Ray.

The act of 1876 provides that—

No person shall, between the hours of twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night, haul or take any herring, caplin, or squid, with net, seine, bunt, or any such contrivance for the purpose of such hauling or taking.

It seemed scarcely necessary to do more than place the provisions of the treaty and the provisions of these laws in contrast, and apply the principle so precisely and justly announced by Lord Salisbury as self-evident, "that British sovereignty, as regards those waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which can not be modified or affected by any municipal legislation." For it will not be denied that the treaty privilege of "taking fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea coast and shores, and in the bays, harbors, and creeks" of Newfoundland, is both seriously "modified" and injuriously affected by municipal legislation, which closes such fishery absolutely for seven months of the year, prescribes a special method of exercise, forbids exportation for five months, and, in certain localities, absolutely limits the three-mile area, which it was the express purpose of the treaty to open.

But this is not all. When the treaty of 1871 was negotiated, the British Government contended that the privilege extended to United States fishermen of free fishing within the three-mile territorial limit was so much more valuable than the equivalent offered in the treaty that a money compensation should be added to equalize the exchange. The Halifax Commission was appointed for the special purpose of determining that compensation, and, in order to do so, instituted an exhaustive examination of the history and value of the colonial fisheries, including the herring fishery of Newfoundland.

Before that commission, the United States Government contended that the frozen-herring fishery in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, the very fishery now under discussion, was not a fishery, but a traffic; that the United States vessels which went there for herring always took out trading permits from the United States custom house, which no other fishermen did; that the herring were caught by the natives in their nets and sold to the vessels, the captains of which froze the herring after purchase, and transported them to market, and that consequently this was a trade, a commerce beneficial to the Newfoundlanders, and not to be debited to the United States account of advantages gained by the treaty. To this the British Government replied, that whatever the character of the business had been, the treaty now gave the United States fishermen the right to catch as well as purchase herring; that the superior character of the United States vessels, the larger capacity and more efficient instrumentality of the seines used by the United States fishermen, together with their enterprise and energy, would all induce the United States fishermen to catch herring for themselves, and thus the treaty gave certain privileges to the United States fishermen, which inflicted upon the original proprietor a certain amount of loss and damage, from this dangerous competition, which, in justice to their interests, required compensation. The exercise of these privileges, therefore, as stated in the British case, as evidenced in the British testimony, as maintained in the British argument, for which the British Government demanded and received compensation, is the British construction of the extent of the liberty to fish in common, guaranteed by the treaty.

Mr. Whiteway, then attorney-general of Newfoundland, and one of the British counsel before the commission, said in his argument:

And now one word with regard to the winter herring-fishery in Fortune Bay. It appears that from 40 to 50 United States vessels proceed there between the months of November and February, taking from thence cargoes of frozen herring of from 500 to 800 or 1,000 barrels. According to the evidence, these herrings have hitherto generally been obtained by purchase. It is hardly possible, then, to conceive that the Americans will continue to buy, possessing as they now do the right to catch.

The British case states the argument as to the Newfoundland fisheries in the following language:

It is asserted on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that the actual use which may be made of this privilege at the present moment is not so much in question as the actual value of it to those who may, if they will, use it. It is possible, and even probable, that the United States fishermen may at any moment avail themselves of the privilege of fishing in Newfoundland inshore waters to a much larger extent than they do at present; but even if they should not do so, it would not relieve them from the obligation of making the just payment for a right which they have acquired subject to the condition of making that payment. The case may be not inaptly illustrated by the somewhat analogous one of a tenancy of shooting or fishing privileges; it is not because the tenant fails to exercise the rights which he has acquired by virtue of his lease that the proprietor should be debarred from the recovery of his rent.

There is a marked contrast to the advantage of the United States citizens between the privilege of access to fisheries the most valuable and productive in the world and the barren right accorded to the inhabitants of Newfoundland, of fishing in the exhausted and preoccupied waters of the United States, north of the 39th parallel of north latitude, in which there is no field for lucrative operations, even if British subjects desired to resort to them; and there are strong grounds for believing that year by year, as United States fishermen resort in greater numbers to the coasts of Newfoundland, for the purpose of procuring bait and supplies, they will become more intimately acquainted with the resources of the inshore fisheries and their unlimited capacity for extension and development. As a matter of fact United States vessels have, since the Washington Treaty came into operation, been successfully engaged in these fisheries; and it is but reasonable to anticipate that as the advantages to be derived from them become more widely known larger numbers of United States fishermen will engage in them.

A participation by fishermen of the United States in the freedom of these waters must, notwithstanding their wonderfully reproductive capacity, tell materially on the local catch, and, while affording to the United States fishermen a profitable employment, must seriously interfere with local success. The extra amount of bait also which is required for the supply of the United States demand for the bank fishery must have the effect of diminishing the supply of cod for the inshores, as it is well known that the presence of that fish is caused by the attraction offered by a large quantity of bait fishes, and as this quantity diminishes the cod will resort in fewer numbers to the coast.

The effect of this diminution may not in all probability be apparent for some years to come, and whilst United States fishermen will have the liberty of enjoying the fisheries for several years in their present seeming and remunerative state, the effects of overfishing may, after their right to participate in them has lapsed, become seriously prejudicial to the interests of the local fishermen.

II. The privilege of procuring bait and supplies, refitting, drying, transshipping, &c.

Apart from the immense value to United States fishermen of participation in the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, must be estimated the important privilege of procuring bait for the prosecution of the bank and deep-sea fisheries, which are capable of unlimited expansion. With Newfoundland as a basis of operations, the right of procuring bait, refitting their vessels, drying and curing fish, procuring ice in abundance for the preservation of bait, liberty of transshipping their cargoes, &c., in almost continuous prosecution of the bank fishery is secured to them. By means of these advantages, United States fishermen have acquired by the Treaty of Washington all the requisite facilities for increasing their fishing operations to such an extent as to enable them to supply the demand for fish food in the United States markets, and largely to furnish the other fish markets of the world, and thereby exercise a competition which must inevitably prejudice Newfoundland exporters. It must be remembered, in contrast with the foregoing, that United States fishing craft, before the conclusion of the treaty of Washington, could only avail themselves of the coast of Newfoundland for obtaining a supply of wood and water, for shelter, and for necessary repairs in case of accident, and for no other purpose whatever. They therefore prosecuted the bank fishery under great disadvantages, notwithstanding which, owing to the failure of the United States local fisheries, and the consequent necessity of providing new fishing grounds, the bank fisheries have developed into a lucrative source of employment to the fishermen of the United States.

That this position is appreciated by those actively engaged in the bank fishery is attested by the statement of competent witnesses, whose evidence will be laid before the Commission.

And in the reply of the British Government, referring to the same Newfoundland fisheries, is the following declaration:

As regards the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, it is availed of to a considerable extent by the United States fishermen, and evidence will be adduced of large exportations by them in American vessels, particularly from Fortune Bay and the neighborhood, both to European and their own markets.

The presence of United States fishermen upon the coast of Newfoundland, so far from being an advantage, as is assumed in the answer, operates most prejudicially to Newfoundland fishermen. Bait is not thrown overboard to attract the fish, as asserted, but the United States bank fishing vessels, visiting the coast in such large numbers as they do for the purpose of obtaining bait, sweep the coast, creeks, and inlets, thereby diminishing the supply of bait for local catch and scaring it from the grounds, where it would otherwise be an attraction for cod.

In support of these views, the most abundant testimony was produced by the British Government showing the extent of the United States herring fishery, the character and construction of the seines used, the time when the vessels came and left, and the employment of the native fishermen by the United States vessels. And it follows unanswerably that upon the existence of that fishery between the months of October and April (the very time prohibited by the colonial law), and upon the use of just such seines as were used by the complainants in this case (the very seines forbidden by the colonial law), and because the increasing direct fishery of the United States vessels was interfering with native methods and native profits, the British Government demanded and received compensation for the damages thus alleged to proceed from "the liberty to take fish of every kind" secured by the treaty.

This Government cannot anticipate that the British Government will now contend that the time and method for which it asked and received compensation are forbidden by the terms of the very treaty under which it made the claim and received the payment. Indeed, the language of Lord Salisbury justifies the Government of the United States in drawing the conclusion that between itself and Her Britannic Majesty's Government there is no substantial difference in the construction of the privileges of the treaty of 1871, and that in the future the colonial regulation of the fisheries with which, as far as their own interests are concerned, we have neither right nor desire to intermeddle, will not be allowed to modify or affect the rights which have been guaranteed to citizens of the United States.

You will therefore say to Lord Salisbury that the Government of the United States considers the engagements of the treaty of 1871 contravened by the local legislation of Newfoundland, by the prohibition of the use of seines, by the closing of the fishery with seines between October and April, by the forbidding of fishing for the purpose of exportation between December and April, by the prohibition to fish on Sunday, by the allowance of nets of only a specified mesh, and by the limitation of the area of fishing between Cape Ray and Cape Chapeau Rouge. Of course, this is only upon the supposition that such laws are considered as applying to United States fishermen; as local regulations for native fishermen we have no concern with them. The contravention consists in excluding United States fishermen during the very times in which they have been used to pursue this industry, and forbidding the methods by which alone it can be profitably carried on. The exclusion of the time from October to April covers the only season in which frozen herring can be procured, while the prohibition of the seines would interfere with the vessels, who, occupied in cod-fishing during the summer, go to Fortune Bay in the winter, and would consequently have to make a complete change in their fishing gear, or depend entirely upon purchase from the natives for their supply. The prohibition of work on Sunday is impossible under the conditions of the fishery. The vessels must be at Fortune Bay at a certain time, and leave for market at a certain time. The entrance of the schools of herring is uncertain, and the time they stay equally so. Whenever they come they must be caught, and the evidence in this very case shows that after Sunday, the 6th of January, there was no other influx of these fish, and that prohibition on that day would have been equivalent to shutting out the fishermen for the season.

If I am correct in the views hitherto expressed, it follows that the United States Government must consider the United States fishermen as engaged in a lawful industry, from which they were driven by lawless violence at great loss and damage to them; and that as this was in violation of rights guaranteed by the Treaty of Washington, between Great Britain and the United States, they have reasonable ground to expect at the hands of Her Britannic Majesty's Government proper compensation for the loss they have sustained. The United States Government, of course, desires to avoid an exaggerated estimate of the loss which has been actually sustained, but thinks you will find the elements for a fair calculation in the sworn statement of the owners, copies of which are herewith sent. You will find in the printed pamphlet which accompanies this, and which is the statement submitted to this department on behalf of twenty of the vessels, the expense of each vessel in preparation for the fishery and her estimated loss and damage. The same statement with regard to the two vessels New England and Ontario, not included in this list of twenty, you will find attached hereto, thus making a complete statement for the twenty two vessels which were in Fortune Bay on the 6th January, 1878, and the Government of the United States sees no reason to doubt the accuracy of these estimates. I find upon examining the testimony of one of the most intelligent of the Newfoundland witnesses called before the Halifax Commission by the British Government, Judge Bennett, formerly Speaker of the Colonial House, and himself largely interested in the business, that he estimates the Fortune Bay business in frozen herring, in the former years of purchase, at 20,000 to 25,000 barrels for the season and that it was increasing, and this is confirmed by others.

The evidence in this case shows that the catch which the United States fishing-fleet had on this occasion actually realized was exceptionally large, and would have supplied profitable cargoes for all of them. When to this is added the fact that the whole winter was lost and these vessels compelled to return home in ballast; that this violence had such an effect on this special fishery that in the winter of 1878-79 it has been almost entirely abandoned, and the former fleet of twenty-six vessels has been reduced to eight, none of whom went provided with seines, but were compelled to purchase their fish of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, the United States Government is of opinion that $105,305.02 may be presented as an estimate of the loss as claimed, and you will consider that amount as being what this Government will regard as adequate compensation for loss and damage.

In conclusion I would not be doing justice to the wishes and opinions of the United States Government if I did not express its profound regret at the apparent conflict of interests which the exercise of its treaty privileges appears to have developed. There is no intention on the part of this Government that these privileges should be abused, and no desire that their full and free enjoyment should harm the Colonial fishermen. While the differing interests and methods of the shore fishery and the vessel fishery make it impossible that the regulation of the one should be entirely given to the other, yet if the mutual obligations of the treaty of 1871 are to be maintained, the United States Government would gladly co-operate with the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in any effort to make those regulations a matter of reciprocal convenience and right; a means of preserving the fisheries at their highest point of production, and of conciliating a community of interest by a just proportion of advantages and profits.

FILED JANUARY 25, 1879.

To the Hon. THE SECRETARY OF STATE:

Sir: We have to acknowledge the receipt of Lord Salisbury's replies to your communications in reference to the attack upon the United States fishing vessels in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, with the affidavits inclosed.

After the most careful examination of these affidavits and a scrutinizing review of the affidavits made by the United States fishermen in support of their complaint, we cannot discover any facts or contradictions which discredit their history of the transaction.

There seems to be no dispute as to the following facts:

1. That twenty-two vessels, viz: Fred. P. Frye, Mary M., Lizzie and Nanari, Edward E. Webster, W. E. MacDonald, Crest of the Wave, F. A. Smith, Hereward, Moses Adams, Charles E. Warren, Moro Castle, Wildfire, Mand and Edle, Isaac Rich, Bunker Hill, Bonanza, H. M. Rogers, Moses Knowlton, John W. Bray, Maud B. Wetherell, New England, and Ontario went from Gloucester to Fortune Bay in the winter of 1877-78 for the purpose of procuring herring, as was their usual custom, and as they were entitled to do under the treaty of 1871.
2. That previous to that winter the United States fishermen had always purchased their herring of the Newfoundlanders, paying them in money or provisions, and a large and profitable trade had sprung up between the Americans and the inhabitants. The value of this trade to the inhabitants of Newfoundland clearly appears in the following extract from the British case before the Halifax Commission:

"It is not at all probable that possessing as they now do the right to take herring and capelin for themselves on all parts of the Newfoundland coasts, they will continue to purchase as heretofore, and they will thus prevent the local fishermen, especially those of Fortune Bay, from engaging in a very lucrative employment, which formerly occupied them during a portion of the winter season for the supply of the United States market."

Furthermore, in the affidavits of the Newfoundland fishermen forwarded by Lord Salisbury, it is plainly admitted that the only way in which the local fishermen can dispose of their herring is by selling them to the Americans.

In January, 1878, however, for the first time, the American vessels carried with them larger seines in order to take their own herring and save the expense of purchasing from the Newfoundlanders.

Captain Malonson, of the schooner Crest of the Wave, in his affidavit, says:

"The Newfoundland fishermen have for years been in the habit of selling all the herring to American vessels. I have been there eight years, and I have always bought my herring or engaged the Newfoundlanders to take them for me, paying them in cash. This has been the universal practice of American vessels. This year we carried the large mackerel seines we use in summer for taking mackerel. These seines will take from two to five thousand barrels at a haul, and the herring are better taken in this way. As most of the Newfoundlanders fish with gill-nets, our manner of seining would take away from them the monopoly of the herring trade."

The truth of Captain Malonson's affidavit, and that of the other American captains, is shown by the British affidavits:

"The Americans never used a seine before that day; they always employed the English to use their seines, and bought fish from the English." (Deposition of John Sanders.)

"The Americans do not bar fish. This was the first time I ever knew them to do so. They usually buy the fish from the Newfoundlanders, and also barter flour and pork for them." (Deposition of Mark Bolt.)

"We all consider it to be the greatest loss to us for the Americans to bring those large seines to catch herring. The seines will hold 2,000 or 3,000 barrels of herring, and if the soft weather continues, they are obliged to keep them in seines for sometimes two or three weeks until the frost comes, and by this means they deprive the poor fishermen of the bay of their chance of catching any with their small nets, and thus, when they have secured a sufficient quantity of their own, they refuse to buy of the natives." (Deposition of John Tharnely.)

"They would have probably frightened therest away, and it would have been useless for the English to stay, for the little left for them to take they could not have sold." (Deposition of John Cluett.)

The evidence offered by Her Majesty's Government before the Halifax Commission fully bears out the above affidavits and shows that previously to 1877 the so-called Newfoundland herring fishery was merely a purchase by the Americans of fish caught by the Newfoundlanders, and no attempt had ever been made by the Americans to take the fish themselves; that in the winter of 1877-78 the American vessels, taking advantage of their rights under the Treaty of Washington, carried down with them seines in order to take their own herring, and that the consequent loss of a valuable trade to the inhabitants, as foreseen by the British agent at the Halifax Commission, had taken place.

3. That these vessels waited for several weeks (from about December 15, 1877, to January 6, 1878) for the expected arrival of schools of herring in Fortune Bay.

4. That on Sunday, January 6, 1878, the herring entered the bay in great numbers, and that four of the vessels sent their boats with seines to commence fishing operations, and the others were proceeding to follow.

5. That the parties thus seining were compelled, by a large and violent mob of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, to take up their seines, discharge the fish already inclosed, and abandon their fishery; and that in one case, at least, the seine was absolutely destroyed. But the British and American affidavits give substantially the same account of this transaction.

6. That these seines were being used in the interest of all United States vessels waiting for cargoes in the harbor, and that the catch undisturbed would have been sufficient to load them all with profitable cargoes. The great quantity of fish in the harbor, and the fact that the American vessels, if permitted to fish, would have all obtained full cargoes, is admitted in the British deposition.

"If the Americans had been allowed to secure all the herrings in the bay for themselves, which they could have done that day, they would have filled all their vessels, and the neighboring fishermen would have lost all chance on the following week day." (Deposition of James Searwell.)

(Deposition of John Cluett.)

See also the affidavits of the American captains.

7. That in consequence of this violence all the vessels abandoned the fishing grounds; some without cargoes, some with very small cargoes purchased from the natives, and that their voyages were a loss to their owners.

8. That the seining was conducted at a distance from any land or fishing privilege in the occupation of any British subject. (See affidavits Willard G. Rodé, Charles Dagle, and Michael B. Murray.)

9. That none of the vessels of the United States made any further attempts to fish, but three or four which were delayed in the neighborhood purchased small supplies of herring. (See British depositions of John Saunders and Silas Fudge, wherein it is stated that the American vessels only remained a few days, and that after January 6 no fish came into the harbor.) All the American affidavits show that the United States vessels were afraid to use their seines after this, and that they left almost immediately, most of them coming home in ballast.

10. That this violence has had such an effect on this special fishing industry that in the present winter of 1878-1879 it has been almost entirely abandoned, and last winter's fleet of twenty-six (26) has been reduced to eight (8), and none of these have gone provided with seines, but they will all be compelled to purchase their fish of the inhabitants of Newfoundland. (See statement of the collector of the port of Gloucester.)

In support of these facts we append hereto—

1. A list of the vessels whose owners we represent.

2. The affidavits of the masters and crews of the same vessels.

3. Sworn statements of the owners as to the actual expenses of each vessel upon the interrupted voyage, the average profit of their previous voyages, and the loss of cargoes consequent upon their forcible expulsion in this case.

4. Statements of the collector of the port of Gloucester, giving the number of vessels engaged in the Newfoundland herring fishery in the winters of 1877-1878 and 1878-1879.

In the dispatch of Lord Salisbury, dated August 23, 1878, the British Government assert that "the United States fishermen on this occasion had committed three distinct breaches of the law," as stated in the report of Captain Sullivan, viz:

"1. That the Americans were using seines for catching herring on the 6th of January, 1878, in direct violation of Title XXVII, chapter 102, section 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, viz: 'No person shall haul or take herring by or in a seine or other such contrivance on or near any part of the coast of this colony, or of its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbors, or other places therein, at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April.'

"2. That the American captains were setting and putting out seines and hauling and taking herring on Sunday, the 6th of January, in direct violation of section 4, chapter 7, of the act passed 26th April, 1876, entitled, 'An act to amend the law relating to the coast fisheries,' viz: 'No person shall between the hours of twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night haul or take any herring, capelin, or squib, with net, seines, bunts, or any such contrivance for the purpose of such hauling or taking.'

"3. That they were barring fish in direct violation of the continuance of the same act, Title XXVII, chapter 102, section 1, of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same."

Leaving to your own consideration the general question whether or not colonial legislatures can enact any laws or local regulations which will in any way control or limit the United States fisherman while pursuing his avocation under the Treaty of Washington, we desire to call your attention to the full text of the laws alleged to be infringed (copies of which, as well as of an amendment passed April, 1877, are herewith inclosed).

Title XXXVII, chap. 102, of the consolidated acts of Newfoundland provides—

"SECTION 1. That no person shall take herring on the coast of Newfoundland by a seine or any other such contrivance at any time between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April in any year, or at any time use a seine except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same.

"SEC. 2. That no person shall, any time between the 20th day of December and the 1st day of April in any year, catch or take herring with seines of less than 2½ inches mesh, &c.

"SEC. 4. No person shall, between the 20th day of April and the 20th day of October in any year, haul, catch, or take herring or other bait, for exportation, within one mile, measured by the shore or across the water, of any settlement situated between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Point Enragé, near Cape Ray."

Section 28 provides that—

"Nothing in this chapter shall affect the rights and privileges granted by treaty to the subjects of any state or power in unity with Her Majesty."

The twenty-eighth section of this act is not referred to by Captain Sullivan in his report, and seems to have escaped the notice of Lord Salisbury. The enforcement of this act would deprive us of all the privileges which the British Government valued so highly, and for which the United States has paid the immense sum of five million five hundred thousand dollars, one million of which is understood to be allowed to Newfoundland.

By sections 1 and 2 we are prohibited from seining herring in any way from October to April, and limited as to the manner and method of fishing at all other times of the year. The American fishing vessel, being employed in the mackerel fishery in the summer and in the herring fishery in the winter, uses the same seines for both, and can not and should not be compelled to comply with local regulations as to the size, shape, and manner of using these seines, whether they are or are not just and proper when applied to the native fishermen living near the fishing grounds. But it appears, from Captain Sullivan's report and from the British depositions, that these laws were unknown as well as unenforced in Fortune Bay.

There is another section of this act which does not concern the present case, but which, if enforced, would almost totally deprive the United States cod-fishing vessels of their rights under the treaty of 1871. The right to obtain fresh bait on the coast of Newfoundland for use on the Grand Banks during the summer months was claimed by the British Government to be of immense value to our fishermen, and was so considered by the arbitrators in making their award. But section 4 prohibits the taking of bait for exportation during the summer months for a long distance along the southern coast of the island, comprising the whole of Placentia Bay, the nearest and most favorite resort of our fishermen from the Grand Banks after bait. It is true this law has not as yet been enforced, but there is no guaranty that it may not be at any time. During the past session the Newfoundland legislature have had under consideration a law prohibiting the sale of bait to the American fishermen, and placing a heavy duty on all ice sold to them for the purposing of preserving bait.

The section IV, act of April 26, 1876, quoted by Lord Salisbury and Captain Sullivan, is as follows:

"No person shall between the hours of twelve o'clock on Saturday night and twelve o'clock on Sunday night haul or take any herring, caplin, or squids, with nets, seines, bunts, or any such contrivance, or set or put out any such net, seine, bunt, or contrivance for the purpose of such hauling or taking."

This law only prohibits the taking of certain kinds of fish on Sunday, viz: Herring, caplin, or squid, and does not apply to cod or halibut, which the British evidence before the Halifax Commission endeavored to show were taken almost entirely within a short distance from the shore. By the amendment of 1877, this act was extended so as to apply to the taking of all fish for bait.

We deem it unnecessary to add to this statement any discussion as to the principles involved in Lord Salisbury's dispatches. The only fact to which we would further ask your attention is, that the very use of the fisheries for which we now contend was admitted to be ours under the treaty by the British Government before the Halifax Commission, and make the basis of the award of that tribunal.

The language of the treaty is as follows:

"It is agreed by the high contracting parties that in addition to the liberties secured to the United States fishermen by the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at London on 20th day of October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American colonies therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Art. XXXIII of the treaty, to take fish of every kind except shell fish on the sea coast and shores, and in the bays, harbors, and creeks of the provinces of Quebec," &c.

It must be borne in mind that "liberty in common" has been valued by the Halifax Commission at $5,500,000, and the price of its enjoyment has been paid. That award and that payment were made upon the representation of the British Government that the treaty gave certain privileges to the United States fishermen, the exercise of which inflicted upon the original proprietor a certain amount of loss and damage which in justice to their interests required such compensation. This exercise, therefore, as stated in the British case, as evidenced in the British testimony, as maintained in the British argument, for which the British Government demanded and received compensation, is the British construction of the extent of "the liberty in common" guaranteed by the treaty.

The British case states the argument as to the Newfoundland fisheries in the following language:

"It is asserted that the actual value of the privilege of doing as at present obligation of to the condition the somewhat because the time lease that the

"It is asserted, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that the actual use which may be made of this privilege at the present moment is not so much in question as the actual value of it to those who may, if they will, use it. It is possible, and even probable, that the United States fishermen may at any moment avail themselves of the privilege of fishing in Newfoundland inshore waters to a much larger extent than they do at present; but even if they should not do so, it would not relieve them from the obligation of making the just payment for a right which they have acquired subject to the condition of making that payment. The case may be not inaptly illustrated by the somewhat analogous one of a tenancy of shooting or fishing privileges; it is not because the tenant fails to exercise the rights which he has acquired by virtue of his lease that the proprietor should be debarred from the recovery of his rent.

"There is a marked contrast, to the advantage of the United States citizens, between the privilege of access to fisheries the most valuable and productive in the world and the barren right accorded to the inhabitants of Newfoundland of fishing in the exhausted and preoccupied waters of the United States north of the 39th parallel of north latitude, in which there is no field for lucrative operations, even if British subjects desired to resort to them; and there are strong grounds for believing that year by year, as United States fishermen resort in greater numbers to the coasts of Newfoundland for the purpose of procuring bait and supplies, they will become more intimately acquainted with the resources of the inshore fisheries and their unlimited capacity for extension and development. As a matter of fact United States vessels have, since the Washington Treaty came into operation, been successfully engaged in these fisheries; and it is but reasonable to anticipate that, as the advantages to be derived from them become more widely known, larger numbers of United States fishermen will engage in them.

"A participation by fishermen of the United States in the freedom of these waters must, notwithstanding their wonderfully reproductive capacity, tell materially on the local catch, and, while affording to the United States fishermen a profitable employment, must seriously interfere with local success. The extra amount of bait also which is required for the supply of the United States demand for the Bank fishery must have the effect of diminishing the supply of cod for the inshore, as it is well known that the presence of that fish is caused by the attraction offered by a large quantity of bait fishes, and as this quantity diminishes the cod will resort in fewer number to the coast. The effect of this diminution may not in all probability be apparent for some years to come, and whilst United States fishermen will have the liberty of enjoying the fisheries for several years in the present teeming and remunerative state, the effects of overfishing may, after their right to participate in them has lapsed, become seriously prejudicial to the interest of the local fishermen.

"II. The privilege of procuring bait and supplies, refitting, drying, transshipping, etc.

"Apart from the immense value to United States fishermen of participation in Newfoundland inshore fisheries must be estimated the important privilege of procuring bait for the prosecution of the Bank and deep-sea fisheries, which are capable of unlimited expansion. With Newfoundland as a basis of operations, the right of procuring bait, refitting their vessels, drying and curing fish, procuring ice in abundance for the preservation of bait, liberty of transshipping their cargoes, etc., an almost continuous prosecution of the Bank fishery is secured to them. By means of these advantages United States fishermen have acquired by the Treaty of Washington all the requisite facilities for increasing their fishing operations to such an extent as to enable them to supply the demand for fish food in the United States markets, and largely to furnish the other fish markets of the world, and thereby exercise a competition which must inevitably prejudice Newfoundland exporters. It must be remembered, in contrast with the foregoing, that United States fishing craft before the conclusion of the Treaty of Washington could only avail themselves of the coast of Newfoundland for obtaining a supply of wood and water, for shelter, and for necessary repairs in case of accident, and for no other purpose whatever; they therefore prosecuted the Bank fishery under great disadvantages, notwithstanding which, owing to the failure of the United States local fisheries and the consequent necessity of providing new fishing grounds, the Bank fisheries have developed into a lucrative source of employment to the fishermen of the United States. That this position is appreciated by those actively engaged in the Bank fisheries is attested by the statements of competent witnesses, whose evidence will be laid before the commission."

And in the reply of the British Government, referring to the same Newfoundland fisheries, is the following declaration:

"As regards the herring fishery on the coast of Newfoundland, it is availed of to a considerable extent by the United States fishermen, and evidence will be adduced of large exportations by them in American vessels, particularly from Fortune Bay and the neighborhood, both to European and their own markets.

"The presence of United States fishermen upon the coast of Newfoundland, so far from being an advantage, as is assumed in the answer, operates most prejudicially to Newfoundland fishermen. Bait is not thrown overboard to attract the fish, as asserted, but the United States Bank fishing vessels, visiting the coast in such large numbers as they do for the purpose of obtaining bait, sweep the coast, creeks, and inlets, thereby diminishing the supply of bait for local catch, and searing it from the grounds where it would otherwise be an attraction for cod."

In support of these views, the most abundant and complete testimony was produced by the British Government, showing the extent of the United States herring fishery, the character and construction of the seines used, the time when the vessels came and left, and the employment of the native fishermen by the United States vessels. And it follows unanswerably that upon the existence of that fishery between the months of October and April, and upon the use of just such seines as were used by the complainants in this case, and because the increasing direct fishery of the United States vessels was interfering with native methods and native profits, the British government demanded and received compensation for the damages thus alleged to proceed from "the liberty in common to take fish of every kind" secured by the treaty. With what justice can the British Government now contend that the time and the method for which they asked and received compensation are forbidden by the terms of the very treaty under which they made the claim and received the payment?

In conclusion, and in reference to the suggestion of Lord Salisbury that the United States fishermen were bound to abstain from the use of the fishery until due representation had been made to Her Britannic Majesty's government, we would say, without argument as to the correctness of any such assumption, that as a fact this is just what the United States fishermen did. They were engaged in the prosecution of a lawful industry, in a method which was recognized as lawful by the award of the Halifax Commission, the privilege to exercise which their government had agreed to pay for. They were forcibly stopped, not by legal authority, but by mob violence. They made no resistance; withdrew from the fishing grounds; represented the outrage to their Government; have not returned to Newfoundland, and are waiting in perfect confidence that the Government will vindicate their rights, and see that just compensation is made for their losses.

Respectfully,

DWIGHT FOSTER,
WM. HENRY TRESCOT,
Counsel for Claimant.

MEMORANDUM.

This schooner's seine was filled with herring when the mob tripped it, and they then endeavored to destroy the seine, but were prevented by the captain and crew, at the peril of their lives.

We had this schooner built for mackerel fishing in summer, and Newfoundland herring fishing in winter. She is all furnished with herring seines and boats for such business, but having been deprived the privilege of seining herring in Newfoundland, and by mobs, we have been obliged to abandon the enterprise, causing a great loss to us.

Affidavit in reply.

GLOUCESTER, December 10, 1878.

I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner Lizzie and Namari, of Rockport, district of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say, that I know Mr. Bolt, who resided in a hut or shanty near Tickle Beach, Newfoundland; that I was there on the 6th of January, 1878, and saw the hostile acts of the British fishermen. Mr. Bolt's hut is about 150 yards back from the beach. I have been to Newfoundland fourteen successive years, and never heard of any persons claiming any rights on the beach, everybody using it in common. The three huts there are in the nature of squatter property, used only in the winter. Mr. Bolt never made any claim that I knew of; and the American seines were not used within 300 yards of Bolt's place, except where the seines were hauled on the beach by British fishermen and destroyed. The seines that were obliged to be taken up were 500 yards or more from Bolt's place. The seine of the F. A. Smith, Captain McDonald, was one-fourth of a mile away. Mr. Hickey, a resident of Fortune Bay, had his seine nearest to Bolt's house. Mr. Hickey's seine was the first seine set on the 6th of January, 1878, and the British fishermen attacked him as well as the Americans.

In the year 1875 I made $5,300, clear of all expense, on my voyage to Newfoundland for herring. In 1874 I made $5,500, clear of all expense.

In the year 1876 I had a cargo of 1,445 barrels of salted herring; was very late in the season, and cleared only $2,060.

I, Peter Smith, of Gloucester, master of the American schooner Charles C. Warren, of Gloucester, do on oath, depose and say that I was at Tickle Beach, Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on the 6th of January, 1878. That I had been to Labrador, from thence to Bay of Islands, and thence to Fortune Bay, for a load of herring. On the morning of the 6th of January, 1878, herring made their appearance in close proximity to the shore in great abundance. I was provided with two seines with which to take herring, and should have loaded my vessel and others on that day. I had my seine in the boat, and was preparing to use it when the attack was made on the other American seines and I saw them destroyed, and found that the mob of two or three hundred of the British fishermen were determined to destroy every seine, and I did not dare put my seine in the water. After this time I bought of the British fishermen about 400 barrels of herring, paying one dollar and forty cents per barrel. My vessel would carry 1,300 barrels, all of which I could have taken on the 6th of January at little or no cost to myself. I was about a fortnight buying 400 barrels of herring. I consider that my loss was at least $3,000, in addition to the expense of the voyage, by the hostile acts of the British fishermen.

[Appendix B, No. 347.]

GLOUCESTER, MASS., March 7, 1878.

SIR: We herewith send to your department our claim for loss sustained by us through the destruction of the seines of the American fishing schooners Ontario and New England belonging to us.

The particulars are fully set forth in said claim and the affidavits of the masters and crews of said schooners.

We earnestly hope that the Government of the United States will take such action in the premises as will secure to American vessel-owners, their masters and crews, the right to fish in British waters, granted them by the treaties of Great Britain with the United States. It is a matter of great importance to the fishing interest of New England, and especially to the people of Gloucester. We are not safe in sending vessels to fish in British waters, and therefore the rights granted to our people by the Washington Treaty are of little value, while the rights granted by the United States to the subjects of Great Britain to bring fish to our markets free of duty is a great damage to our fisheries and of great value to the people of the British provinces.

With the fullest confidence that our application will receive due consideration,

We are, &c.,

JOHN PEW & SON.

P. S.—We also inclose you two printed copies of our petition and accompanying affidavits, thinking they may be a convenience to you.—J. P. & S.

To the honorable WILLIAM M. EVARTS,

Secretary of State:

Respectfully represent John Pew, Charles H. Pew, and John J. Pew, all of Gloucester, county of Essex, and commonwealth of Massachusetts, copartners under the firm style of John Pew & Son, that they are American citizens, and engaged in the fishing business at said Gloucester, and were and are owners and fitters of fishing vessels.

That they are the sole owners of the American fishing schooners Ontario and New England, of said Gloucester, and were such owners in the months of November, December, and January last past.

That both of said schooners were fitted for the herring fisheries in the month of November, 1877, and for voyages to Newfoundland, and provided with seines for catching herring. That said schooner Ontario, whereof Peter McAulay was master, sailed on the first day of December, 1877, from said Gloucester, and the said schooner New England, whereof John Dago was master, on the twenty-eighth day of November, 1877; that both schooners had a full supply of men and outfits for said voyage. That said schooner Ontario, when she sailed from said Gloucester on said voyage, with her outfits and seine, was worth the sum of seventy-five hundred dollars; and the said New England, with her outfits and seine, was then and there of the value of eighty-five hundred dollars. That said schooners both returned to said Gloucester from said voyage, on the seventeenth day of February, without any herring, except that the said Ontario had about fifty barrels purchased by her.

And we further represent that we are informed by the masters and crews of said schooners, and believe the same to be true, that the reason why they returned without any herring and made disastrous voyages is that they arrived at Long Harbor, Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on or about the sixteenth day of December, 1877, and found herring scarce, and were unable to obtain any considerable quantity of herring, and that the masters and crews of said schooners waited at said Long Harbor until the sixth day of January, 1878, to catch or purchase herring, as they might be able to do; that on said sixth day of said January, "the signs for herring being good," the masters and crews of both of said schooners joined their purse seines, thereby making a double seine, which was of the value of at least fourteen hundred dollars, and making a seine of about twenty-four hundred feet long and one hundred and fifty feet deep; that the masters and crews of said schooners threw said double seine at said Long Harbor and caught and secured therein a very large quantity of herring, amounting to at least two thousand barrels of herring and more than sufficient to load both of said schooners.

That at about four o'clock of said sixth day of said January some two hundred men, who belonged about Fortune Bay and had gone ashore from English vessels in said Long Harbor, made a war-like demonstration against the masters and crews of said schooners and seized hold of said double seine, tore it in pieces, and carried it off, and thereby freed all of said herring and prevented the masters and crews of said schooners from obtaining them, and thereby destroyed all hope of their obtaining a cargo for either of said vessels. That of said two hundred men some sixty took hold of said seine and destroyed it, and the others were participating in the destruction of the seine by inciting and encouraging those who were destroying it.

That the masters and crews of said schooners were pursuing their business of catching herring at said Fortune Bay in a lawful manner, and were not in any manner or form interfering with the rights of any party or parties at said Newfoundland, and that the action of said parties in destroying said seine was a most wanton destruction of the property of said firm, and was without the least justification in law or good conscience, and was intended to be a war-like demonstration against the American vessels, their owners, masters, and crews, and to intimidate them and prevent them from prosecuting the herring fisheries in the waters of Newfoundland by catching herring, and thereby compel them to buy herring of the inhabitants of Newfoundland, if they would obtain them, at such prices as said people of Newfoundland might ask for them. That all the American vessels at said Newfoundland on said sixth day of said January were from said Gloucester and were there for herring, and among them were the schooners Moses Adams, Herbert M. Rogers, John W. Bray, F. A. Smith, Hereward, William E. McDonald, Moro Castle, Ed. E. Webster, Bonanza, Wildfire, Bunker Hill, and Isaac Rich. That said schooners Ontario and New England were, by reason of the destruction of said seine and the freeing of the herring therein, were both prevented from obtaining cargoes for said schooners.

That after the destruction of said seine, as above set forth, the said parties who had destroyed the same returned to their vessels, and on the evening thereafter, to wit, on the evening of the sixth day of said January, they made a jubilant demonstration, blowing horns, firing guns, and shouting, as if celebrating a victory, to impress upon the masters and crews of the American vessels in said harbor that they were prepared to stand by and justify what had been done, and that the Americans might expect to be treated in future in the same manner should they attempt to catch herring in Newfoundland waters.

And we further respectfully represent that in view of the treatment of the American fishermen by the British subjects at said Newfoundland, it is wholly unsafe for American vessel owners to fit vessels for and send them to Newfoundland waters to catch herring, and that it is unsafe for American fishermen to attempt to catch fish in said waters, and that the demonstration against the American fishing-vessel owners, masters, and crews is of such a character as to make it a public violation of the rights of the citizens of the United States wishing to catch herring and attempting to catch herring there. That the loss to the said firm by reason of the war-like demonstration of the people of Newfoundland herein before set forth, and the destruction of said

SUMNER D. YORK,
Notary Public.

I, Peter McAnlay, of Gloucester, county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, master mariner, on oath, depose and say that on the first day of December, A. D. 1877, I was master of the fishing schooner Ontario of said Gloucester, of the burthen of ninety-one tons and twenty-nine one hundredths, and on said first day of said December I sailed on a voyage from said Gloucester to Fortune Bay, on the southwest of Newfoundland, for a cargo of herring, and back to same port of discharge in the United States; that said schooner Ontario was fully fitted for said voyage, and had on board a mate and five men, making in all seven men; that I arrived with said schooner on said voyage at Fortune Bay, Long Harbor, about the sixteenth day of said December; that I found herring very scarce, and up to the sixth day of January, A. D. 1878, had not been able to obtain, by purchase or otherwise, more than fifty barrels of herring.

That on the sixth day of said January, there being "good signs for herring," and the schooner New England, of said Gloucester, being a fishing schooner from said Gloucester, and provided with seine, which said schooner belonged to the firm of John Pew & Son, of said Gloucester, the same parties to whom the said Ontario belonged, the masters and crews of both of said schooners threw the said seine to catch herring to load both of said schooners.

That said seine, on being thrown, took a large haul of herring, amounting, at least, to two thousand barrels of herring, and more than sufficient to load both of said schooners. That said herring being fully secured in said seine, and said schooners and said seine being at said Long Harbor, this affiant saw about two hundred men on the shore at about four o'clock in the afternoon of said sixth day of said January, while the seine was in charge of the masters and crews of said schooners Ontario and New England, make an attack upon said seine in a most violent manner, and tear up and carry off the seine, and thereby let the herring out of said seine, and prevent the masters and crews of said schooners from obtaining any of said herring. That the men who made said attack upon and destroyed said seine prevented the masters and crews of said schooners from protecting said seine, and some sixty of said two hundred men took hold of said seine while all the rest of them were inciting and encouraging those who had hold of said seine and were destroying it. That the said men so destroying said seine and inciting those destroying it used threats and violence towards both the masters and crews of said schooners and fully overpowered them, so that they could not protect said seine and save the herring therein. That most of said two hundred men landed from boats in the said bay, and were men belonging in and about said Fortune Bay. That said men who made said attack upon said seine and destroyed the same had been fishing with nets during the day and with seines in the same neighborhood, and had taken quite a large quantity of herring.

And this affiant further says that both he and his crew and the master and crew of the schooner New England were pursuing their business in a peaceful and lawful manner, and were not interfering in any manner or form with the rights of any party at said Newfoundland. That the attack upon said seine by said persons from the shore of Fortune Bay was wholly without justification or excuse, and was a warlike demonstration against the American vessels there, which amounted to some fifteen in number, and were all from the said port of Gloucester, among which were the schooners F. A. Smith, Moses Adams, Hereward, William E. McDonald, Moro Castle, Ed. E. Webster, Bonanza, Wildfire, Heribert M. Rogers, Bunker Hill, Isaac Rich, and John W. Bray,

That this affiant believes that the only reason of said attack and demonstration by the said persons from the shore was to intimidate the American fishermen there and to prevent them from catching herring, so that the said parties on the shore of Newfoundland might sell herring to the vessels from the United States at a high price and keep the whole control of the herring fisheries in their hands, and wholly deprive the citizens of the United States from prosecuting said fisheries at Newfoundland or obtaining the herring there in any other manner than by purchase.

This affiant believes that it is wholly unsafe for American vessels to catch herring in the Newfoundland waters; that the people of Newfoundland are belligerent and threatening in their treatment of American fishermen, and seem determined to prevent them from prosecuting their business in Newfoundland waters in any manner which is not satisfactory to the inhabitants thereof. That this affiant, had he not been deprived of his herring in said seine, would have loaded his said schooner Ontario with herring and returned to Gloucester by about the twenty-fifth of January last past and made a successful voyage, but, by reason of the destruction of said seine and the losing of the herring therein, he was wholly prevented from getting any herring, and obliged to return to Gloucester in ballast, except fifty barrels of herring which he purchased and was unable to purchase more, making thereby a disastrous instead of a profitable voyage. And this affiant says that all he has said with reference to the schooner Ontario is also true of his personal knowledge of the said schooner New England, of which John Dago was master, both schooners arriving at Fortune Bay on the same day, and arrived from said voyage at Gloucester on the same day, and were not together and did not together in endeavors to obtain cargoes for said schooners, and were both affected alike by the destruction of said seine and the loss of the herring in the same at the time it was destroyed, as above set forth.

And this affiant further says that on the evening of the said sixth day of said January, after the destruction of said seine, the parties who destroyed it returned to their vessels in said harbor and made a jubilant demonstration, firing guns, blowing horns, and shouting as if celebrating a victory, to impress upon the masters and crews of the American vessels at said harbor that they were prepared to stand by and justify what had been done, and that the Americans might expect to be treated in future in the same manner should they attempt to catch herring in the Newfoundland waters.

That we sailed from said Gloucester about the first day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, to Newfoundland, for herring, and back to a port of discharge in the United States; that we arrived at Newfoundland at a place called Long Harbor, Fortune Bay, about the sixteenth day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven; that on the sixth day of January the seine belonging to the American fishing schooner New England was thrown at said Long Harbor by the master and crew of said schooner Ontario and the master and crew of said schooner New England, acting together, and a large quantity of herring were then and there secured in said seine. DOCUMENT No. 11.

Mr. Welsh to Mr. Evarts.

No. 347.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, August 13, 1879. (Received August 28.)

SIR : I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your most important dispatch No. 34 of the 1st instant, containing the statement of the claims of the owners of twenty-two fishing vessels for loss and damage arising from the conduct of certain inhabitants of Newfoundland, at Fortune Bay, in January, 1878.

As this instruction did not arrive until yesterday, and as I am to present my letter of recall to Her Majesty to-morrow, I have no time to embody its statements and arguments in a separate note to Lord Salisbury. I think, besides, that it is so full, clear, and convincing in its present shape that I should weaken its force by changing its form.

I have taken the liberty, therefore, to send a copy of it to-day to Lord Salisbury with a note, of which I inclose a transcript.

As the details of the losses contained in the printed pamphlet which accompanied your instruction appeared to me to be important, and as there was not sufficient time to copy them, I have sent the appendix to the pamphlet, and also the original account of the owners of the New England and Ontario, to his lordship for his information, with a request that he should return them to this legation at his entire convenience. I think it desirable that additional copies of these papers should be furnished to us by the Department of State.

I have to add that I have also this day sent to Lord Salisbury the statement of a claim for damages on behalf of the owners of the schooner Mist, agreeably to your instruction, No. 346, of the 1st instant.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, August 13, 1879.

MY LORD : I have just received a very important dispatch from Mr. Evarts, stating the claims for damages, amounting to $105,305.02, sustained by certain citizens of the United States, owners of twenty-two vessels, in Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in the month of January, 1878, which claims have already formed the subjects of a previous correspondence with your lordship.

As the argument for the payment of these by Her Majesty's Government is presented by Mr. Evarts in a very full, clear, and forcible manner, I have thought it proper to submit this instruction to me in its original form to your lordship, asking for it an early and favorable consideration.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,

SIR: Referring to my No. 111 of the 22d instant, I have the honor to acquaint you that, not having received a reply to my note of the 21st to Lord Salisbury, I went to the Foreign Office yesterday to obtain in person the information you requested. Neither his lordship nor Lord Tenterden or Sir Julian Pauncefoot were there; but I saw Mr. Barrington, one of Lord Salisbury's secretaries, who said that a note was being written in answer to mine, to the effect that the claims of the Fortune Bay fishermen were under consideration, and that a reply to your instruction to Mr. Welsh on that subject would be prepared as soon as practicable. He intimated that Lord Salisbury would come to the office in the evening, and he would convey to him my request for more definite information.

Not having heard from Mr. Barrington at six o'clock, and not venturing to postpone any later my acknowledgment of your telegram, I sent you a cable message. Some time after that was dispatched I had a note from Mr. Barrington, of which I inclose a copy herewith.

You will observe that Lord Salisbury regrets the delay in answering our claims, which he ascribes to the necessity of sending to the governor of Newfoundland for a report that has only just been received, that the subject is having his best attention, but he fears some time must elapse before he can make a communication in regard to it.

I expect a more formal answer to my note, but I shall send you the substance of this cable by to-night, as the importance of the subject and the shortness of the interval before Congress shall meet, justify the additional expense.

I beg to remind you of Mr. Welsh's statement in his No. 347, that by reason of the want of time to make copies he was obliged to send to Lord Salisbury the appendix to the printed pamphlet, and also the original account of the owners of the New England and Ontario. These have not yet been returned from the Foreign Office, as we requested, and I think it is desirable that duplicates should be supplied to us from Washington in order that our records may be complete.

Mr. Hoppin to Mr. Evarts.

No. 143.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, February 7, 1880. (Received February 24.)

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt yesterday of your dispatch in cipher relating to the great delay of the British Government in answering our claim for the Fortune Bay damages. I knew that Lord Salisbury had been seriously ill for some time past at Hatfield, and I ascertained at the foreign office, where I made immediate inquiries, that his illness still continued and that he was not attending to business. I therefore made an appointment with Sir Julian Pauncefote, who is in charge of the foreign office, Lord Tenderden being absent, for an interview to-day. I have just returned from this interview.

I called his attention in the course of it to the fact that our claim was presented as early as the 13th of August; that Lord Salisbury promised on the 16th it should receive immediate attention; that his lordship assured us on the 24th of November that an answer should be sent at as early a date as possible, and that nearly two months and a half had now elapsed without our having been favored with one. I then expressed the chagrin you felt at this delay, and gave him a copy of the translation of your cipher telegram.

Sir Julian admitted the delay, and said that it arose in part from the importance of the questions involved in the discussion; that after the claim had been received it was thought advisable to consult the authorities in Newfoundland; that some time elapsed before their answer arrived, when the matter was placed in his (Sir Julian's) hands to prepare a case upon it for submission to the law officers of the crown; that these gentlemen had the case before them still, the reason for their delay being the great importance of the points involved, and also the accumulation of references in other matters which had been made to them during the recess of Parliament.

Sir Julian promised that he would communicate with them immediately and press for a report, and would send them a copy of your telegram to hasten their action. He said, also, that he should send a copy of this to Lord Salisbury, notwithstanding his physician's injunctions that his lordship should abstain from all business. Finally he declared that I might expect to receive on Monday, for communication to yourself, something more definite in relation to this matter.

SIR: Referring to my No. 143, of the 7th instant, I have the honor to state that up to this time I have not received any further communication from the foreign office as to when we may expect an answer to our Fortune Bay claims, although, as I informed you both by that dispatch and by cable, Sir Julian Paucefote gave me to understand he should send me more definite information on that point yesterday.

I presume that his silence arises from Lord Salisbury's continued illness. It is possible a note may arrive after the closing of the bag. Whenever it comes I shall send you the substance of it by cable.

It is proper for me to state, in addition to what I wrote you on Saturday, that Sir Julian Paucefote intimated that they would probably be able to receive the opinions of the law officers of the crown very shortly, so that with the additional delay of reconsidering the matter in the foreign office, we might rely upon having a reply certainly within a month from the present time; but he preferred I should make no positive statement on this point until I should hear from him again.

DEAR MR. EVARTS: My attention has just been called to the passage in yesterday's Times, which I have marked with red pencil, in which a question is asked of the under foreign secretary about the Fortune Bay claims.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Thursday, February 12.

CANADIAN AND NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERIES.

Mr. GOURLEY asked whether the claim of the United States Government for $103,000 for damages alleged to have been done by Newfoundland fishermen in Fortune Bay to the Massachusetts fishing fleet had been amicably arranged; what measures were being adopted for the purpose of abrogating or amending clause 33 of the Treaty of Washington relative to the Canadian and Newfoundland inshore fisheries; and whether steps were being taken for the purpose of ascertaining if the proviso of the convention of 1818, which admits American fishermen to enter British North American bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter, repairing damages, and purchase of wood and water, was intended to exclude them from going inshore to traffic, transship, fish, purchase stores, mend nets, and hire seamen.

Mr. BOURKE. The claim of the United States Government for damages alleged to have been done by Newfoundland fishermen in Fortune Bay is still under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. No measures are being adopted for the purpose of abrogating or amending clause 33 of the Treaty of Washington. The extent of the fishing privileges accorded to the United States on the shores of Canada and Newfoundland is laid down in the convention of 1818 and in the Treaty of Washington of 1871. Her Majesty's Government have not at present found it necessary to make any communication to the United States Government with a view of defining more precisely the exact interpretation of the language of those treaties.

Mr. GOURLEY said that on an early day he would call attention to the convention of 1818 between this country and the United States relative to fisheries.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, February 27, 1880.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acquaint you that I received from the honorable the Secretary of State, last evening, a further telegram in relation to the delay of Her Majesty's Government in answering our claims for damages on account of the proceedings at Fortune Bay.

Your lordship will be good enough to remember that on the 7th instant, in the absence of your lordship, I had a conversation with Sir Julian Pauncefote at the foreign office on this subject, and gave him a copy of the cable dispatch I had received from Mr. Evarts the day before.

Afterwards, on the 12th instant, I received from Sir Julian a note in relation to a matter, a copy of which I sent to Mr. Evarts on the 14th, having already telegraphed the substance of it to him on the 13th instant.

During our conversation on the 7th of February, when I pressed Sir Julian Pauncefote for an approximate statement of the time within which we might expect your lordship's reply to our claims, he intimated that it would certainly be given within a month from that date, and I so informed Mr. Evarts in a dispatch of the 10th of February.

In the cable message which I have now received, Mr. Evarts states that he learns from "increased chagrin," from my dispatch to him last mentioned, "of even a possible further delay of one month," and he instructs me to "urge its avoidance if possible."

I lose no time, therefore, in bringing this subject again to your lordship's attention, in expressing the disquiet which Mr. Evarts feels that an answer to these claims which were brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government so long ago as the 13th of August last may possibly be still further delayed.

h's notes of the 13th

August last, in which he preferred, on the part of your government, a claim for 105,305.02, as compensation to some United States fishermen, on account of losses sustained to have been sustained by them through certain occurrences which took place at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, on the 6th of January, 1878. The delay which has arisen has been occasioned by the necessity of instituting a very careful inquiry into the circumstances of the case, to which, in all its bearings, Her Majesty's Government were anxious to give the fullest consideration before coming to a decision. Her Majesty's Government having now completed that inquiry, so far as lies within their power, I beg leave to request you to be so good as to communicate to your government the following observations on the case.

In considering whether compensation can properly be demanded and paid in this case, regard must be had to the facts as established, and to the intent and effect of the articles of the Treaty of Washington and the convention of 1818 which are applicable to those facts.

The facts, so far as they are known to Her Majesty's Government, are disclosed by the affidavits contained in the inclosed printed paper, which, for convenience of reference, have been numbered in consecutive order. Nos. 1 and 2 were received by Her Majesty's Government from his excellency the governor of Newfoundland. Nos. 3 to 10, inclusive, were attached to the report made by Captain Sullivan, of Her Majesty's ship Sirius, who was instructed to make an inquiry into the case. These were communicated to Mr. Welsh with my note of the 7th of November, 1878. Nos. 11 to 16, inclusive, are the affidavits of United States fishermen, printed in the New York Herald of the 28th of January, 1878, and were received by Her Majesty's minister at Washington. They have not been received officially from the Government of the United States, but Her Majesty's Government see no reason to doubt their authenticity. Nos. 17 to 22 were annexed to Mr. Welsh's note of the 13th of August last.

A careful examination of the above evidence shows that on the day in question a large number of the crews of the United States fishing vessels came on shore and from the beach barred the herrings, the ends of their seines being secured to the shore. That the fishermen of the locality remonstrated against these proceedings, and, upon their remonstrance proving unavailing, removed the nets by force.

Such being the facts, the following two questions arise:

1. Have United States fishermen the right to use the strand for purposes of actual fishing?
2. Have they the right to take herrings with a seine at the season of the year in question, or to use a seine at any season of the year for the purpose of barring herrings on the coast of Newfoundland?

The answers to the above questions depend on the interpretation of the treaties. With regard to the first question, namely, the right to the strand fishery, I would observe that article 1 of the convention between Great Britain and the United States of the 20th of October, 1818, secured to citizens of the United States the right, in common with British subjects, to take fish of every kind on certain specified portions of the coast of Newfoundland, and to use the shore for the purposes of purchasing wood and obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever.

Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington superadded to the above-mentioned privileges the right for United States fishermen to take fish of every kind with certain exceptions not relevant to the present case, on all portions of the coast of that island, and permission to land for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish, "provided that in so doing they do not interfere with the rights of private property or with British fishermen in the peaceable use of any part of the said coast for their occupancy for the same purpose."

Thus whilst absolute freedom in the matter of fishing in territorial waters is granted, the right to use the shore for four specified purposes alone is mentioned in the treaty articles, from which United States fishermen derive their privileges, namely, to purchase wood, to obtain water, to dry nets, and cure fish.

The citizens of the United States are thus by clear implication absolutely precluded from the use of the shore in the direct act of catching fish. This view was maintained in the strongest manner before the Halifax Commission by the United States agent, and, with reference to the proper interpretation to be placed on the treaty stipulations, said the following language: "No rights to do anything upon the land are conferred on the citizens of the United States under this treaty, with the single exception of the right to dry nets and cure fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, if we did possess that before. No right to land for the purpose of seining from the shore; no right to the 'strand fishery,' as it has been called; no right to do anything except, whether on our vessels, to go within the limits which had been previously for-den.

So far as the herring trade goes, we could not if we were disposed to carry it on successfully under the provisions of the treaty, for this herring trade is substantially seining from the shore, a strand fishing, as it is called, and we have no right anywhere conferred by this treaty to go ashore and seine herring any more than we have to establish fish-traps."

Her Majesty's Government, therefore, cannot anticipate that any difference of opinion will be found to exist between the two governments on this point.

The incident now under discussion occurred on that part of the shore of Fortunate Bay which is called Tickle Beach, Long Harbor. On this beach is situated the fishing settlement of Mark Bolt, a British fisherman, who in his evidence, taken upon oath, deposes as follows:

"The ground I occupy was granted me for life by government, and for which I have to pay a fee. There are two families on the beach; there were three in winter. Our living is dependent on our fishing off this settlement. If these large American seiners are allowed to be hauled, it forces me away from the place."

John Saunders, another British fisherman of Tickle Beach, deposed that the United States fishermen hauled their seine on the beach immediately in front of his property.

The United States fishermen, therefore, on the occasion in question, not only exceeded the limits of their treaty privileges by fishing from the shore, but they interfered with the rights of private property and with British fishermen in the peaceable use of that part of the coast in their occupancy for the same purpose," contrary to the express provisions of Articles XVIII and XXXII of the Treaty of Washington.

Further, they used seines for the purpose of in-barring herrings, and this leads me to the consideration of the second question, namely, whether United States fishermen have the right to take herrings with a seine at the season of the year in question, or to use a seine at any season of the year for the purpose of barring herrings on the coast of Newfoundland.

The in-barring of herrings is a practice most injurious, and, if continued, calculated in time to destroy the fishery; consequently it has been prohibited by statute since 1862.

In my note to Mr. Welsh, of the 7th of November, 1878, I stated "that British sovereignty, as regards these waters, is limited in its scope by the engagements of the Treaty of Washington, which cannot be modified or affected by any municipal legislation," and Her Majesty's Government fully admit that United States fishermen have the right of participation on the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, in common with British subjects, as specified in Article XVIII of that treaty. But it can not be claimed consistently with this right of participation in common with the British fishermen that the United States fishermen have any other, and still less that they have greater rights than the British fishermen had at the date of the treaty.

If, then, at the date of the signature of the Treaty of Washington, certain restraints were, by the municipal law, imposed upon the British fishermen, the United States fishermen were, by the express terms of the treaty, equally subjected to those restraints, and the obligation to observe in common with the British the then existing local laws and regulations, which is implied by the words "in common," attached to the United States citizens as soon as they claimed the benefit of the treaty. That such was the view entertained by the Government of the United States during the existence of the reciprocity treaty, under which United States fishermen enjoyed precisely the same rights of fishing as they do now under the Treaty of Washington, is proved conclusively by the circular issued on the 25th of March, 1856, to the collector of customs at Boston, which so thoroughly expressed the views of Her Majesty's Government on this point that I quote it here in extenso.

Mr. Marcy to Mr. Peaslee:

[Circular.]

"Washington, March 25, 1856.

"SIR: It is understood that there are certain acts of the British North American colonial legislatures, and also, perhaps, executive regulations intended to prevent the wanton destruction of the fish which frequent the coasts of the colonies, and injure to the fishing thereon. It is deemed reasonable and desirable that both the United States and British fishermen should pay a like respect to such laws and regulations which are designed to preserve and increase the productiveness of the fisheries of those coasts. Such being the object of these laws and regulations, the observance of them is enforced upon the citizens of the United States in the like manner as they are observed by British subjects. By granting the mutual use of the inshore fisheries, neither party has yielded its right to civil jurisdiction over a marine league along its coasts.

"Its laws are as obligatory upon the citizens or subjects of the other as upon its own. The laws of the British provinces, not in conflict with the provisions of the reciprocity treaty, would be as binding upon the citizens of the United States within that jurisdiction as upon British subjects. "COLLECTOR OF THE CUSTOMS, Boston."

I have the honor to inclose a copy of an act passed by the colonial legislature of Newfoundland, on the 27th March, 1862, for the protection of the herring and salmon fisheries on the coast, and a copy of cap. 102 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland, passed in 1872. The first section of the act of 1862, prohibiting the taking of herrings with a seine between the 20th day of October and the 12th day of April, and, further, prohibited the use of seines at any time for the purpose of barring herrings. These regulations, which were in force at the date of the Treaty of Washington, were not abolished, but confirmed by the subsequent statutes, and are binding upon the treaty upon the citizens of the United States in common with British subjects.

The United States fishermen, therefore, in landing for the purpose of fishing at Tickle Beach, in using a seine at a prohibited time, and in barring herrings with seines from the shore exceeded their treaty privileges, and were engaged in unlawful acts.

Her Majesty's Government have no wish to insist on any illiberal construction of the language of the treaty, and would not consider it necessary to make any formal complaint on the subject of a casual infringement of the letter of its stipulations which did not involve any substantial detriment to British interests and to the fishery in general.

An excess on the part of the United States fishermen of the precise limits of the rights secured to them might proceed as much from ignorance as from wilfulness; but the present claim for compensation is based on losses resulting from a collision which was the direct consequence of such excess, and Her Majesty's Government feel bound to point to the fact that the United States fishermen were the first and real cause of the mischief, by overstepping the limits of the privileges secured to them in a manner gravely prejudicial to the rights of other fishermen.

For the reasons above stated, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that, under the circumstances of the case as at present within their knowledge, the claim advanced by the United States fishermen for compensation on account of the losses stated to have been sustained by them on the occasion in question is one which should not be entertained.

Mr. Evarts will not require to be assured that Her Majesty's Government, while unable to admit the contention of the United States Government on the present occasion, are fully sensible of the evils arising from any difference of opinion between the two governments in regard to the fishery rights of their respective subjects. They have always admitted the incompetence of the colonia' or the imperial legislature to limit by subsequent legislation the advantages secured by treaty to the subjects of another power. If it should be the opinion of the Government of the United States that any act of the colonial legislature subsequent in date to the Treaty of Washington has trench upon the rights enjoyed by the citizens of the United States in virtue of that instrument, Her Majesty's Government will consider any communication addressed to them in that view with a cordial and anxious desire to remove all just grounds of complaint.

Deposition of Alfred Noel.

NEWFOUNDLAND, CENTRAL DISTRICT, ST. JOHN'S, to wit:

The examination of Alfred Noel, of St. John's aforesaid, master mariner, taken upon oath, and who saith:

I am master of the schooner Nautilus of this port, and on the 19th day of December last I was at Long Harbour, in Fortune Bay, in the Nautilus, which was anchored off Woody Island. I had a crew of seven men, and I was there engaged in the herring fishery. There were several American schooners; seven of them were lying off Woody Island, and two French vessels. This island forms the harbour within half a mile of the narrows of Long Harbour; and other American schooners and Newfoundland fishing craft were inside Woody Island, which is the inside part of Long Harbour. All the craft there, English and American, were hauling herrings in seines and nets, and the Americans were purchasing herring from the English. Everything went off quietly, and the greatest harmony prevailed until Sunday, the 6th day of January, when about half-past 2 o'clock in the afternoon five seines, belonging to the American schooners, were put into the water by their crews at the beach on the northeast side of Long Harbour. I know two of the captains by name, Dago and Jacobs, belonging to Gloucester, United States, but do not know the names of their schooners. The whole five seines were barred full of herrings, when the English crews of the crafts belonging to Fortune Bay ordered them to take their seines up or they would take them up for them; and the Fortune Bay men, finding they would not do as they were requested, then hauled up two of the American seines, but without any damage or injury, and two were at the same time taken up by the Americans; and at the same time a seine belonging to Captain Dago was taken up by the Fortune Bay men, the herrings thrown out, and the seine was torn up and destroyed. Before this occurrence on the said Sunday, one of the American schooners had a seine barred with herrings on the beach at Long Harbour for seven days, and it was not at any time meddled with by the Fortune Bay men or any one. Some of the Fortune Bay men had nets out in the water on that Sunday, and the same had been there during the week, but none of the Newfoundland fishermen attempted to haul herrings on Sunday at any time while I was at Long Harbour. The Americans' practice had been until lately to purchase herring from the Newfoundland fishermen in Fortune Bay, but this year and last year the Americans have brought their own seines to haul herring for themselves. The American seines are 30 fathoms deep and 200 fathoms long, whilst those used by our fishermen are 12 to 13 fathoms deep and 120 fathoms long. These American seines are used for barring herring in deep water, such as the Fortune Bay Harbours, viz., Long Harbour, Bay del Nord, and Rencontre. Our fishermen never bar herrings, and herrings have never been barred in Fortune Bay, to my knowledge, until the Americans brought the large seines I have alluded to into Fortune Bay and used them there to the disadvantage of our fishermen. This mode of barring herrings in such harbours as I have mentioned is most destructive and ruinous to the herring fishery in those localities. I do not know the names of the persons who destroyed the seines; there were about eighty vessels from different harbours of Fortune Bay at Long Harbour at the time the seine was destroyed by a great lot of people. I left Long Harbour for St. John's on the 31st day of January and arrived here on the 4th instant.

Harbour lay inside of Woody Island. Woody Island is about three miles from the entrance of Long Harbour. On the northern side, rather above the island, there is a fine beach about a mile long. This is the best hauling place in Long Harbour, and most all the herrings were taken there. It is only this year and last year that the American schooners have brought down very large seines for catching herring. I have been informed that some of these seines were 250 fathoms long and 35 fathoms deep. The seines which our Newfoundland fishermen use are about 120 fathoms long and from 8 to 13 fathoms deep. In the first week in January there were four or five American schooners who had the beach above mentioned barred for herring. The mode of inbarring for herring is as follows: When a place is selected, generally a smooth beach with deep water outside free from rocks, a party is sent ashore with a long line from one end of the seine; the seine-boat then goes off with the seine, makes a long sweep, and the other end of the seine is then brought into the beach also; then the crew begin to haul together on both ends of the seine with long seine lines running fore and aft up and down the beach; four or five seines thus barring herring would cover all the hauling ground on this long beach I have spoken of, and would occupy all the best ground for hauling herring in Long Harbour. On the first Sunday in January the beach was barred by four or five large American seines. On that day after dinner, a large number of people belonging to the crews of the Fortune Bay schooners then in Long Harbour went over to the beach, and I was informed there were 600 or 700 Newfoundland fishermen there. The Americans had barred the herring, and were hauling on their seines on the Sunday morning. The Newfoundland fishermen told the American captains to take up their seines or they would take them up for them. All the American seines, when taken up which were set on a Sunday except one; this one the American captain who owned it refused to take up. The Newfoundland fishermen then hauled it ashore, took the herrings out of the seine, and according as they hauled the seine out of the water they tore it up. I saw the seine the next day, Monday, on the beach, and it was completely destroyed; it was an old second-hand seine, and very rotten. I have been for thirteen or fourteen years carrying on the herring fishery in Fortune Bay, and during that time I have never known our Newfoundland fisherman to haul herrings on Sunday. If the American fishermen were permitted to bar herrings in the way that they were doing at Long Harbour Beach, all the rest of the craft would be deprived of the best place in the harbor to haul herrings; and such a mode of fishing for herrings is most injurious to the fishery, and must in time ruin the herring fishery there. The Americans, in hauling their long seines, often removed the Newfoundland fishermen's nets when they came in their way. I have known the Americans last year to have herrings barred in for a fortnight. Barring kills a great many herrings, and makes those who are barred in very poor. I have seen the bottom covered with dead herring after the seine had been barred for a week. The American schooners heave out their ballast in the channel between Woody Island and the shore, and if not prevented, will soon destroy the anchorage there.

The examination of John Saunders, of Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:

In January last there were a great number, close on 100, schooners and boats fishing for herring, both American and Newfoundlanders. The Americans were employing the English to haul their seines for them. There were some English schooners who had seines also. One Sunday, I do not know the date, John Hickey laid out a seine, and was told by the English or Newfoundlanders to take it up, as it was Sunday, which he did. The Americans laid out their seines, assisted by the English employed by them. The Newfoundlanders told them to take them up, as it was not legal their fishing on that day, being Sunday; J. McDonald took his up. Jacobs upset his net into Farrell's seine, who was employed by him. Farrell was barring for the Americans, and was not allowed by Jacobs to haul his seine until the hard weather came. After Jacobs had upset his seine into Farrell's he took it up to shoot again, and threatened with the revolver any one who interfered. Then they told McCauley to take it up, but he didn't, so the people hauled it in and tore it up.

I don't know any man concerned in the destruction of the net that I could swear to but one, John Pitman, a servant of Samuel Pardy, who was at "Jack Fountain." There was no other reason that I know for destroying nets but for fishing on Sunday, and because they would not take them up when they were told. The Americans never hauled a seine before that day; they always employed the English to use their seines, and bought fish from the English. The only reason that the Americans laid their seines out that day was because there were plenty of herrings, and no Englishman would haul them, being Sunday, excepting Hickey, who had been compelled to take his seine up.

Q. Where does Philip Farrel live?—A. In Bay-de-North, and so does Thomas Farrel.

Q. Was any obstruction or hindrance placed in the way of the Americans before or after that Sunday?—A. No.

Q. Did they remain in the harbour until the close of the season; until the herrings slackened away were any Americans compelled to leave the coast after this circumstance?—A. No; there was nothing to prevent their remaining, and they remained for some days, until the weather became soft, and there were no more herrings in the bay. Most of them left, but one American schooner remained about three weeks after that, when another lot of herrings came into the bay, and he filled up and went away the next fair wind. Jim Boy was the captain's name.

Q. Do you know any American of the name of Dago?—A. Yes; he has part in this seine. The Americans hauled their seine on the beach immediately in front of my property.

Q. Do you know the names of the schooners?—A. No.

Q. Do you know the names of the owners of the seine?—A. Yes; Captain Dago and McCauley.

Q. Do you know anything the Americans did by way of revenge?—A. The Americans, in revenge for the destruction of the net, afterwards drifted their vessels all about the bay or river with their anchors hanging, and so hooked and destroyed many nets, about fifty or sixty, I should think. The name of one of these captains was Smith—but I don't know the name of his vessel—and the other was Pool. We all believe that this was done in revenge. They were pretending to be at anchor, where there was about fifty fathoms of water, but were drifting all over the bay and hooking the nets; there was no weather to cause them to drift. Our small boats were anchored off the beach. We had never any difficulty with the Americans before this, but were always on good terms with them.

Deposition of Mark Bolt.

The examination of Mark Bolt, of Tickle Beach, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:

I am a native of Dorsetshire, England. I have been in this country twenty-one years, and have been fishing all that time. I have lived in this neighborhood fourteen or fifteen years, and at Tickle Beach since last fall. The ground I occupy (two feet) was granted me for life by Government, and for which I have to pay a fee. There are two families on the beach; there were three in the winter. Our living is dependent on our fishing off this settlement. If these large American seines are allowed to be hauled it forces me away from the place.

One Sunday in January last John Hickey, Newfoundlander, came first and hove his seine out. Five Newfoundlanders came and told him to take it up, and he did not; then others came and insisted upon it, then he took it up. If he had then refused to take it up it would have been torn up.

Then Jacobs, an American, came and laid his seine out and hauled about 100 barrels of herring in the big American seine, and capsized into Tom Farrel's seine—a Newfoundland fisherman employed by Jacobs and fishing for him.

Philip Farrel was also fishing for the Americans, being master of McCauley's seine. The Newfoundlanders then capsized Tom Farrel's seine of fish, who was only fishing for the Americans. After this Jim Macdonald, another American, threw out his seine. Then the people went and told Macdonald that he was not allowed to fish on Sunday, and he must take his seine up; and he took up his seine and carried it on board his vessel. Jacobs would not allow his seine to be touched, but drew a revolver. They went to McCauley, an American, who had laid his seine out for barring herring; this American also employed a Newfoundlander to lay his seine out. The Newfoundlander said it should not be done on a Sabbath day, and they resolved to tear up all the seines they could get hold of. They managed to seize McCauley's and tore it up. They would have torn up any they could have got at if laid out, whether English or American, because it was Sunday. The Americans do not bar fish. This was the first time

I ever knew them to do so; they usually buy the fish from the Newfoundlanders, and also barter flour and pork for them, and I have never known anything to complain of against them previous to this.

Q. Did the American schooners continue to fish after the destruction of McCauley's seine?—A. Yes.

They (the Americans) continued to fish, and left about the usual time, the 10th March. I do not know any reason for the conduct towards the Americans except that they were fishing on Sunday. I do not know what became of the nets that were torn up; it was left on the beach for some days, and then taken away. I do not know who took it away; the Americans, perhaps, but I don't know.

The Americans were often set afterwards, but not on Sunday; the Americans did not leave off catching herring after this on other days. The English did not prevent the Americans hauling their seines, but the Americans usually employed the English to haul them, as their crews were not sufficient in number, and are not acquainted with the work. The American crews are employed salting and freezing the fish, while the English employed by them with the American seines are catching them. The seine torn up was being worked by an Englishman for McCauley, the American, namely, Philip Farrel.

Jacobs' seine was in the water a night and a day. I was not aware that it was illegal to haul or catch herring by or in a seine at that time of the year, nor that barring is prohibited at all seasons, nor that the seine must be shot and forthwith hauled, but have heard some reports to that effect.

The nearest magistrate is at St. Jacques, about 25 or 30 miles from this, and there is no means of communicating with him excepting by a sailing boat.

The seine that was destroyed belonged to men called Dago and McCauley, who, I believe, were each of them captains of schooners, but the names of the vessels I do not know.

I have been nine years in Long Harbour. I was here in January last, when the American seine was destroyed. It was destroyed on account of barring herring on Sunday. I was watching their proceedings from the point opposite; they laid their seine out and went to haul it in because the English would not haul it in on Sunday, and the bay was full of fish. The fish would have remained. The Americans generally employ some Englishmen to work with their own crew; they don't generally lay out their own seines. Captain Dago and Samuel Jacobs would persist in hauling, and hauled once and barred them in Farrel's net. Farrel was working for him, and had been barring herrings for several days—perhaps about a fortnight—by the Americans' orders. I believe it is illegal to bar herrings; it destroys the fish, but we have no power to stop it. It is no good telling a magistrate; the Americans take no notice of them. The nearest magistrate to this place is at Harbour Briton, 25 or 30 miles off. The only thing to let people know what is right and what is wrong is to have a notice-board in each harbour, and some heavy fine imposed on law-breakers.

James Tamel is harbour-master.

I don't know if he is a special constable or not; but Mr. Enburn told me he was to see the Yankees did not heave their ballast over, and that their measures were correct, but they would not listen to him. They have their ballast overboard, and had tubs 22 inches in depth instead of 16 inches; in these tubs they measured the fish they bought from the Newfoundlanders, and they would not alter them. The fish are sold to the Americans by the barrel. For 100 barrels it is usual to pay for 90, which is considered fair, but a flour barrel cut down to 16 inches in depth is the proper measure; they only cut them to 22 inches or more, and insist on having them filled. The vessels from St. John's and Halifax always take the proper size tubs, but the Americans constantly overreach us, and choose the most ignorant to deal with, or those who are not so sharp as themselves. They generally otherwise behave well, and we have never had any quarrel with them before, but have always been on good terms. If the natives did not see the laws carried out themselves there might as well be no laws, for there is often no one else to enforce it. It is the only way I know, and is pretty well understood by both foreigners and natives.

Deposition of James Tharnell.

The examination of James Tharnell, of Anderson's Cove, Long Harbour, taken upon oath, and who saith:

I am a special constable for this neighborhood; I did not see anything of the alleged outrage last January, but I heard something about it; I believe some of the men named Pope were on the beach, but which I do not know.

Q. Have you formed any opinion as constable as to the cause of the dispute?—A. Mr. Snellgrove, of the customs, and myself, from what we were informed of the circumstances, were of opinion that the Americans were acting illegally in shooting their seines, but notwithstanding that, nothing would have been said to them for that had it not been on the Sabbath day. The men forbid them hauling seines on the Sabbath day, and told them to take them up or they would take them up for them, and what annoyed them so much was that the Americans drew their revolvers; probably, if it had not been for the threat of the revolvers the seines would only have been taken up, and not torn. They asked him three times to take them up before they did so themselves.

The people were not aware that it was illegal to set the seines that time of the year, and were only prompted to their act by the fact that it was Sunday. We all consider it to be the greatest loss to us for the Americans to bring those large seines to catch herring. The seines will hold 2,000 or 3,000 barrels of herring, and, if the soft weather continues, they are obliged to keep them in the seines for sometimes two or three weeks, until the frost comes, and by this means they deprive the poor fishermen of the bay of their chance of catching any with their small nets, and then, when they have secured a sufficient quantity of their own, they refuse to buy of the natives.

If the Americans had been allowed to secure all the herrings in the bay for themselves, which they could have done that day, they would have filled all their vessels, and the neighboring fishermen would have lost all chance the following week-days. The people believed that they (the Americans) were acting illegally in thus robbing them of their fish. If the natives had not defended themselves by enforcing the law, there was no one else to do it. I was sworn in as a special constable by Mr. Herbert, the magistrate of Harbour Briton, last October.

On the arrival of the Americans I showed my authority, signed by Mr. Herbert, and they laughed at it, and said it had no stamp, and they didn't, therefore, recognize it.

I told them the lawful size of a tub—sixteen gallons—and they said they required a brand on it. I have no means of branding tubs; there is no means to brand on the coast, and it is not the custom. I don't know if it is the custom at St. John's to brand them. I have cautioned the Americans about throwing ballast out inside Hoodey's Island, where it is very shallow; but they have continually done so notwithstanding up to this. There are now several shallow places there and in the cove, where the Americans have been in the habit of throwing out their ballast, and small vessels now,

SULIVAN,

The examination of George Snellgrove, of St. Jacques, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:

I am sub-collector of customs for the district of Fortune Bay. I went to Long Harbour on the 8th January, two days after the dispute between the Americans and Newfoundland fishermen had taken place.

Captains Jacobs and Dago informed me that an American seine had been taken up by the Newfoundland fishermen on the Sunday previous and destroyed; that the seine belonged to Dago and McCanley, and that they had other seines out, but they had taken them up when they found that the other was destroyed. One of these captains said that the fishermen had threatened to take up the seine if they didn't themselves. Captain Jacobs showed me a revolver, and said that he had threatened them with it. I remonstrated with him for doing so, when he replied that I couldn't suppose that he was really going to use it; that he only did it to frighten them; he had taken care there were no charges in it. I said to him, "Do you suppose that you would have got off that beach alive if you had used it?" and he said he never intended to use it.

Captain Warren told me that on the fishermen coming to haul in the seine that Captain Dago hailed them to say that they would take the seine in themselves if they waited, and that he (Warren) said to Dago, "It is too late now; you ought to have done it when they told you first; they are too excited now."

I then communicated with the natives of the place, who related the circumstances, and gave their reasons that the Americans were fishing illegally, and would have secured the whole of the fish, which they considered part of their property, and that they would have been distressed for the winter. They told me that they had at first told them to take up their seines, and they refused; that Captain Jacobs had threatened them with a revolver, but, notwithstanding this, they had taken up one and destroyed it.

I saw Captain Jacobs several times afterwards, and in the course of conversation with him I said: "If I had been there you would not have been allowed to shoot your seine." "What!" he said, "could you prevent me?" I said "Yes; I should have seen the law carried out and taken your seine and boat, which you forfeited for breaking the law," and I told him I would take the fine as well of $200, at which he said: "Do you think I care about paying the fine? I could pay the fine," by which I understood him to mean that the fine was not worth considering, as the quantity of fish would have more than paid for it.

Q. Was there any one in Long Harbour on the Sunday referred to who could have enforced the law and protected the interests of the fishermen?—A. No.

Q. Is it not illegal shooting seines at all at that time of the year?—A. There is an act to that effect, but it has never been carried out in Fortune Bay, nor are the natives aware of its illegality at that time of the year, nor would they have molested the Americans had it not been Sunday, and which they knew it to be not only the law, but the infallible custom to desist from fishing on that day.

Q. Has there ever been to your knowledge before quarrelsome disputes or ill-feeling between the Americans and native fishermen?—A. No, never; always on the best terms.

Q. How long did you remain in Long Harbour?—A. I remained till the 12th January.

Q. Did you observe during your stay in Long Harbour whether the three American captains remained and continued to fish or not?—A. I did, and I know that they continued to fish; they were not molested as far as I know.

Q. Was there anything to cause them to leave the harbour, or to cease fishing?—A. No, and they had not left it when I left. There were no further disputes to my knowledge afterwards.

Deposition of Silas Fudge.

The examination of Silas Fudge, of Bellaram, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:

I am mate of my father's schooner. I witnessed the disturbance at Long Harbour on Sunday, the 6th January last. I am certain that it was on the 6th January it happened.

I saw the seines in the water—two of them American and one English. We told them to take them up.

John Hickey, the Englishman, took his up. McCauley, the American, who owned the other, refused to take his up. There was another seine, which I did not see, in the water, belonging to Captain Jacobs. He had his in the boat at the time. He had shot once and discharged his seine into Thomas Farrel's, who was working for him, and was going to shoot his seine out again. I saw it in the boat ready for shooting when the crowd came over. They first spoke to McDonald, and asked him if he would take his seine up, and he said, "Yes, if I am forced;" and they then went to Hickey and told him to take his up, and he took it up; then they went to McCauley and asked him to take his up, and he said he would not. They then told him that if he didn't they would take it up for him. They then went to Jacobs, and told him they would let go the herring out of the seine of Tom Farrel, who was an Englishman. Jacobs then drew a revolver, and threatened to shoot any man who touched his property. The crowd were very excited. I saw them haul McCauley's seine in and tear it up. That was the end of the row that day. Farrel had, during the previous week, secured herring in the American seine, and then had placed his own round them, and taken up the American's. This was done before Sunday. It was in this seine of Farrel's that Jacobs emptied his own seine.

Q. You knew that the American fish were in the Englishman's seine; why was Farrel's seine allowed to remain?—A. Because he had not shot it on the Sunday, but on the week-day.

Q. Are you aware that it was illegal to use seines to catch herrings that time of the year?—A. No; I don't know.

Q. Did you believe it to be lawful to use seines for herring that time of the year?—

A. Yes, I thought so, as far as I could understand. I suppose the Americans thought, with reference to the destruction of the seine, that we did it in envy of them, but it wasn't; but it was from regard to the Sabbath, on which day we never fish.

Q. How far from the beach were the American seines shot?—A. Close to the beach; the hauling lines were on the beach.

The Americans remained in the bay after the occurrence for several days; they were never molested or interfered with afterwards; they continued to fish until they left the harbour; they were not compelled to leave the harbour, but I believe they were unsuccessful on account of the bad weather and for want of frost.

Deposition of John Cluett.

The examination of John Cluett, of Belloram, Fortune Bay, taken upon oath, and who saith:

I was in Long Harbour one Sunday in January last.

Q. Did you see anything of the quarrel between the Americans and other fishermen?—A. I did.

Q. Tell me what you know of it?—A. They commenced hauling herrings on Sunday, about midday. The first American seine shot was Captain Jacobs'. There were two more American seines shot. There was an Englishman working for the Americans who had a seine moored there for several days, but it was not shot or attempted to be hauled on the Sunday.

The first seine we came to was Captain McDonald's. They asked him if he was going to take his seine up. He said, "If we are forced to take it up we will;" and we told him if he didn't take it up we would take it up for him.

The next we came to was a man belonging to Fortune Bay, called John Hickey, an Englishman, and we told him to take up the seine, and he said he would take it up, and he did. The next we came to Peter McCauley, and we told him the same as the others, and he refused to take it up. Then we went on to Captain Jacobs, and when we got to him he was in his skill, a little off the shore. He had just hauled herring and shot them into Farrel's seine, who was working for him. They remonstrated about breaking the law and fishing on Sunday. There was an altercation between us. He said he would defend his seine if they touched it in a threatening way. I don't know what he said. There was a great crowd, and he was in an awful rage, and I heard that he drew a revolver, but I didn't see it. He then took his seine on board. Then all the seines were taken up but Farrel's and McCanley's. Farrel's seine was not touched because it was not laid on that day, and they therefore let it alone, although Jacobs's fish were in it; but McCanley's seine was taken up and destroyed, and that is all I know.

Q. Did the American captain remain in the harbour after?—A. Yes; I think about a fortnight, but perhaps more. They continued to fish and haul herring on week-days but not on Sunday again.

Q. Were they ever molested or interfered with in any way subsequently or not?—A. Not to my knowledge; they remained there as long as they chose, and there was never any more dispute. I don't know that it is illegal to haul seines that time of the year. I have heard of the law, but I have never seen it carried out; it had nothing to do with this dispute. The only cause of it was on account of its being Sabbath. I never saw herrings hauled on a Sunday before, either by American or Englishman.

The Americans, by hauling herring that day when the Englishmen could not, were robbing them of their lawful and just chance of securing their share in them, and, further, had they secured all they had barred they could have, I believe, filled every vessel of theirs in the bay. They would have probably frightened the rest away, and it would have been useless for the English to stay, for the little left for them to take they could not have sold.

The Americans would have a better chance than the English any day on account of the size of their nets, but the English would have had their fair chance the next day, and they thought they were justified, in the absence of any proper authority or power to enforce the law, to defend their rights themselves. There is no power or authority to enforce the law on all parts of the coast, and none nearer to Long Harbour than about 30 or 40 miles.

If there was not a good feeling and mutual understanding between all fishermen, whether foreigners or Englishmen, there would be no law carried out or upheld at all, but there was always prior to this a very good feeling and a mutual understanding between the Americans and ourselves, and I don't know anything to prevent the same in future. After the destruction of McCanley's seine some of the American schooners, one of which was Peter Smith's, drifted about the harbor among the fishermen's nets when blowing hard, with their anchors hanging to their bows, and destroyed several nets. I don't know if this was done out of revenge or not. I don't think it was done purposely.

Deposition of Charles Dagle.

GLOUCESTER, February 19, 1878.

I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner Lizzie and Namari, of Rockport, do on oath depose and say:

That I sailed from Gloucester on the 6th December, 1877, for Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, for a load of herring. The last year (1877) I had sold a seine and boat to parties in Newfoundland, and they were to supply me with herring in payment for the seine and boat. I arrived at Fortune Bay about the 19th December. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, with my vessel on the 6th January. Saw the seines of the American schooners New England and Ontario destroyed by the fishermen of Newfoundland. There is a decided objection to using netted or gill-net herring for freezing purposes, as these herring die in a short time after being taken in gill-nets. When they are seined they can be kept alive on the radius of the seine and taken out alive when the weather is suitable for freezing, while the netted herring, being dead, must be salted or spoiled; consequently the seined herring are the best for our purposes, and what the American vessels want for our market. Knowing this fact, the Newfoundland fishermen had endeavored to obstruct in every way the taking of herring with seines, as they use principally gill-nets; they placed their nets, which are set permanently, so as to hinder the using of seines. On the 6th January, 1878, the herring had come inshore, so that they were inside the gill-nets, thus giving our people an opportunity to seine them without interfering with the gill-nets. On the Americans attempting to put their seines in the water the Newfoundland fishermen threatened to destroy them, and when our fishermen had taken their seines full of herring, the Newfoundlanders came down to the number of 200, seized and destroyed the seines, letting out the fish, and afterwards stole and carried off the remnants of the seines. On account of this violence and the obstructions placed in the way of my men operating the seine, I was unable to procure a cargo, and have returned without a herring. If I had been allowed the privilege guaranteed by the Washington Treaty, I could have loaded my vessel and all the American vessels could have loaded. The Newfoundland people are determined that the American fishermen shall not take herring on their shores. The American seines being very large and superior in every respect to the nets of the Newfoundlanders, they cannot compete with them. These seines are the mackerel seines which are used in summer for mackerel and are setting for herring. When they are plentiful we can take from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels. The seines and boats we use cost 1,200 dollars when new, and are too expensive for the generality of Newfoundland fishermen, and they would have no use for seines only during the herring season, while we can use them both summer and winter, and thus make them pay for their great cost.

My loss by these acts of violence, and being deprived of my rights under the Washington Treaty, is fully 5,000 dollars, which I claim as indemnity. The netted herring are strangled while caught by the head in the net, and the eyes turn red from suffocation. They will not keep so long as seined herring, which are free to swim inside the seine, and are dipped out alive. The netted herring will not sell in the New York market, while the seined herring preserve their bright appearance and sell rapidly.

Deposition of William H. McDonald.

GLOUCESTER, February 19, 1878.

I, William H. McDonald, master of the American schooner William E. McDonald, of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say:

That I have just returned from Newfoundland, where I have been for a load of herring. I was at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, when the seines of the schooners New England and Ontario were destroyed. I had gone on shore and was on the beach at the time. The Newfoundlanders were much excited because of our use of the large seines, which for the first time were used last winter there. The Newfoundland fishermen had sunk large rocks off the beach in order to catch the seine and tear them, and had put their gill-nets where they would obstruct the use of the seines. These means failing, as the herring were close inshore, they took to personal violence, and destroyed one seine completely, and made the others take them up and release the fish. I had a seine, but was not allowed to use it. The nets they placed in the way and kept there only for the purpose of obstructing our operations with seines, as they took no herring there, but let the nets remain till they rotted. I can fully endorse the statement of Captain Dagle in all particulars. My vessel is a first-class vessel, and with the time and expense, and with the loss of herring, I have sustained a loss of fully 5,000 dollars to myself and owners, and I claim that, under the Treaty of Washington, I have a right to the herring fisheries and claim indemnity for this severe loss.

I, James McDonald, master of the American schooner F. A. Smith, of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say:

That the said schooner was chartered by George W. Plumer and others, of Gloucester, for a voyage to Newfoundland for herring. I sailed from Gloucester on the 29th November, 1877, and arrived at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, on or about the 15th December, 1877. I carried a large purse seine, such as is used to take mackerel. The seine will take 4,000 barrels of fish. I employed Newfoundland fishermen to operate the seine. I set my seine twice, but without catching anything, as my seine was torn by rocks that had been left off the beach. On the 6th January the herring made their appearance in great numbers, and the opportunity to take a large haul was improved by my men, and we took at least 1,000 barrels, enough to load my vessel and one other. The Newfoundland fishermen came off in their boats and told me to take my seine up, or they would take it up for me, and that they would cut it up. There were about 100 men engaged in this violence, and my own crew consisting of six men I could not resist, but was obliged to take up my seine. I saw the seines of the schooners New England and Ontario destroyed, and knew that mine also would be destroyed if I did not take it up. My seine was not attached to the shore when they came off, and the attack on me was made in boats. After destroying the other seines they all made for me, and my only safety was to gather up my seine. I lost all my fish, and the Newfoundland fishermen put all the obstructions they could in the way to prevent the use of our seines after that. From my knowledge of the facts I do say that the Newfoundland fishermen are determined to prevent American fishermen from using the shore fisheries. I consider that the loss to the vessel and the charter party at not less than 5,000 dollars, and under the Treaty of Washington I have been deprived of my rights as an American citizen, and full indemnity should be allowed for the outrage. I have read the statement of Captain Dagle, and know it to be true in all its particulars. The effect of this treatment will be to destroy the American fishing for herring at Newfoundland. There are annually about 100 voyages by American vessels made for herring to Newfoundland. The Newfoundland fishermen were taking herring on the same day the outrages before stated occurred.

Deposition of David Malanson.

GLOUCESTER, February 20, 1878.

I, David Malanson, master of the American schooner Crest of the Wave, of Gloucester, Massachusetts, do on oath depose and say :

That I sailed from Gloucester on the 8th December, 1877, on a voyage to Newfoundland for herring. I arrived at Long Harbour, Newfoundland, on the 23d December, 1877. I was interested in a seine carried by the schooners New England and Ontario. I was at Long Harbour on the 6th January, 1878, and was on the beach when the Newfoundland fishermen destroyed the seine belong to these vessels. The herring did not strike inshore until that day, and as it is very uncertain how long they will remain inshore, it is imperative, for successful prosecution of the business, to take them when they are inshore. By means of our large purse seines we can inclose the herring and keep them alive a month, if necessary, as we need to have freezing weather when we take them out to freeze them, to keep them fresh until we get them to market. On this occasion the herring were entirely inshore of the Newfoundland gill-nets, and as the seine proved, if we did not take them then and there we should lose the season catch. The seines were set in no way interfering or injuring the gill-net fishing, and inclosed and held certainly 2,000 barrels of herring, enough to load four vessels. Over 200 men came down to the beach, seized the seine, let out the fish, pulled the seine on shore, tearing and cutting it to pieces with knives. The crews operating the seines were powerless against so many ; and after they had destroyed this seine they went for the other American seines, shouting and gesticulating, saying : "Tear up the damned American seines." All of the vessels would have been loaded with herring if the Americans could have used their seines.

My loss by this outrage is not less than 5,000 dollars, which has been taken from me despite the provisions of the Washington treaty, and which I claim as indemnity.

The Newfoundland fishermen have for years been in the habit of selling all the herring to American vessels. I have been there eight years, and I have always bought my herring, or engaged the Newfoundlanders to take them for me, paying them in cash. This has been the universal practice of American vessels. This year we carried the large mackerel seines, which we use in summer for taking mackerel. These seines will take from 2,000 to 5,000 barrels at a haul, and the herring are better taken in this way. As most of the Newfoundlanders fish with gill-nets, our manner of seining would take away from them the monopoly of the herring trade, and hence the feeling which produced the outrage on our vessels. It is apparent that they will obstruct any American fishery on their shores, and are not men who would know much about rights or privileges under a treaty. I should say that there are at least 100 cargoes of herring taken from Newfoundland yearly by American vessels, and as things are now it would be useless for American vessels to go there for herring unless they bought the herring from the inhabitants at whatever price they may see fit to ask. This American trade has been a great benefit to Newfoundland, and the change in the manner of taking herring will greatly reduce the amount of money paid them for herring. Only three vessels of eighteen that were there got any herring whatever. Captain Jacobs, of the Moses Adams, held his seine with revolvers, and, being a native of Newfoundland, was allowed to take in the herring he had taken. The feeling was very intense and bitter against the Americans. The Newfoundland fishermen were catching and taking herring with their nets and boats on the same day.

Enough were taken, and could have been taken, that day to have loaded the fleet. After that day there was no opportunity to take any. to operate it for me. The first time they set it for me they put it out in a strong tide-way, and utterly destroyed it, and after that I had to depend on the other American seines. This was the understanding among the American captains, that we were to work together and load all our vessels. The setting of the seines on the 6th January did not interfere in any way with their nets or fishing. I think there is a local regulation that does not allow the Newfoundland fishermen to fish on Sundays; but the first seine (a small one) set on that day was one owned and operated by the natives, and they were picking their nets and boating their herring ashore all day. On the arrival of the American fleet the Newfoundlanders put their nets where they would obstruct our sailing, but on this day the herring were away inside of their nets, giving us the first chance and only opportunity we had to seine or get herring. I, Charles Dagle, master of the American schooner Lizzie and Namari, of Rockport, district of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say, that I know Mr. Bolt, who resided in a hut or shanty near Tickle Beach, Newfoundland; that I was there on the 6th January, 1878, and saw the hostile acts of the British fishermen. Mr. Bolt's hut is about 150 yards back from the beach. I have been to Newfoundland fourteen successive years, and never heard of any persons claiming any rights on the beach, everybody using it in common. The three huts there are in the nature of squatter property, used only in the winter. Mr. Bolt never made any claim that I knew of; and the American seines were not used within 300 yards of Bolt's place, except where the seines were hauled on the beach by British fishermen and destroyed. The seines that were obliged to be taken up were 500 yards or more from Bolt's place. The seine of the F. A. Smith, Captain McDonald, was one-fourth of a mile away. Mr. Hickey, a resident of Fortune Bay, had his seine nearest to Bolt's house. Mr. Hickey's seine was the first seine set on the 6th January, 1878, and the British fishermen attacked him as well as the Americans.

I, Peter Smith, of Gloucester, master of the American schooner Charles C. On the morning of the 6th January, 1878, herring made their appearance in close proximity to shore in great abundance. I was provided with two seines with which I was rigging, and should have loaded my vessel and others on that day. I had my boat, and was preparing to use it when the attack was made on the other day's seines, and I saw them destroyed, and I found that the mob of 200 or 300 of the fishermen were determined to destroy every seine, and I did not dare put my seine in the water. After this time I bought of the British fishermen about 400 barrels of herring, paying 1 dol. 40 c. per barrel. My vessel would carry 1,300 barrels, all of which I could have taken on the 6th January at little or no cost to myself. I was about fortnight buying 400 barrels of herring. I consider that my loss was at least 300 dollars, in addition to the expense of the voyage, by the hostile acts of the British fishermen.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your lordship's letter of the 3d instant in reply to Mr. Welsh's communications of the 13th of August last.

ation to the claims of United States fishermen for losses occasioned by certain occurrences at Fortune Bay, Newfoundland, in January, 1878; and I have to acquaint your lordship that I shall send a copy of your letter to the honorable the Secretary of State at Washington by the earliest post.

DOCUMENT No. 27.

Mr. Erarts to Mr. Babson.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 5, 1879.

SIR: Arrangements have been made by which the naval steamship Kearsarge, under the command of Commander Henry F. Pickens, will spend some weeks in cruising over the fishing grounds resorted to by our fishing fleet in the waters of the Newfoundland and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. You are desired to join that vessel at Shediack, New Brunswick, in company with Alfred D. Foster, esq., of Boston, with as little delay as possible. The vessel will be there ready to receive you, and Commander Pickens will have been advised of the duty assigned you and Mr. Foster, as set forth in the instructions given you.

The general purpose of this cruise of the Kearsarge is to examine the condition and conduct of our fishing interest in those waters; to observe the methods and equipage of our fishermen as used in the fisheries within three miles of the shore, and the treatment shown them in the pursuit of their industry by the local authorities and the population of the coasts to which they resort. You have been selected to accompany the Kearsarge in this cruise from your thorough and prolonged experience in the fishing interests of our people—from your personal acquaintance of the character and habits of the men engaged in this pursuit, and from your especial conversance with the general scope of the relations between these interests and those of the coast population of the provinces as developed by the rivalry and conflict between them, which have seemed inseparable from the common enjoyments of the fisheries.

Alfred D. Foster, esq., will accompany you as your legal adviser and to be in charge of the taking and reducing to form of such depositions or statements as you or he may think of importance for the information of the government in this important inquiry.

The consuls of the United States at the different points at which you may touch are expected to give you every aid in their power towards the objects in view, and to furnish you with any information in their possession that may be properly incorporated in your report of the situation of affairs on the coasts.

It is quite possible that some of our fishermen may wish to be advised as to the course which the government thinks them justified in taking should the local authorities assume to interfere with them in the peaceable pursuit within the three-miles line of their fishing methods and the use of their seines and fishing-tackle. This interference, if attempted, will doubtless be based upon the local legislation of the provinces regulating the fisheries on their coast within the three-miles line. In the view of this government, these local regulations are incompetent to curtail or control the participation of our fishermen, as accorded by the Treaty of Washington, in their inshore fisheries. So long as our fishermen use methods and apparatus in their judgment adapted to catching the fish in the most efficient and most profitable manner to the industry they are pursuing, to wit, fishing from vessels manned and fitted from our ports, and seeking profit therefrom, and so long as they do not molest the provincial fishermen, pursuing their own methods in their equal right, this government regards our fishermen as within the treaty right and under no necessity of conforming, either in regard to days or seasons, or apparatus, to the prescriptions of the local regulations of the provinces.

You will, however, be careful to make our fishermen understand that they are not to resist the lawful authorities in any legal or judicial process or proceedings which may be taken against them in maintenance of these local laws. Taking care to preserve due evidence of this interruption of their rights and of the loss and damage thus occasioned them, for the vindication of their rights and the redress of their grievances, they will leave to their government the proper representation to the British Government to secure indemnity for the past and the prevention of future injuries.

I do not deem it useful to indicate to Mr. Foster or yourself more specifically the line or methods of your inquiries. As full and trustworthy an exhibition of the working of the system of the Treaty of Washington within the three-miles line as you can gather from your own observation and from the evidence which you can acquire, is desired as the result of this expedition. While on board the Kearsarge you and Mr. Foster will be observant, of course, of the system of the ship's discipline so far as it may need to affect the execution of the duty confided to you, and to the cordial co-operation of the naval authorities both you and the government can safely trust the prosperity of the service expected from you.

You will correspond only with this department, and be careful to avoid any communications that may lead to any publication of the progress or results of the cruise, except by authority of this department.

I am, &c.,

WILLIAM M. EVARTS.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 5, 1879.

SIR: I have the honor to acquaint you with the purpose of this government, in view of the importance of the pending questions respecting the fisheries of Newfoundland and the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, and for the better obtaining of the latest accessible information with respect to those fisheries, to send a naval vessel of the United States to the maritime provinces and ports of the Dominion and the adjacent fishing-grounds, for the purpose of making a careful examination of the conduct of those inshore fisheries by the American fishing fleet, which, under the Treaty of Washington, may visit those waters, and also of the treatment which our fishermen and their industry receive at the hands of the local authorities and population.

The United States steamer Kearsarge, under the charge of Commander Henry F. Pickens, U. S. N., has been detailed for the assigned duty, and is now in the Gulf, with orders to await at Shediac, New Brunswick, the arrival of the agent, who has been directed to embark at that place. This agent is instructed to make inquiry and report as to the operation of the treaty stipulations and local laws, and the general condition of affairs in that locality, so far as the fishing interests of citizens of the United States are concerned, with a view to a better understanding of the questions involved, and the adjustment of points of difference between the two governments, if practicable.

DOCUMENT No. 29.

Messrs. Babson and Foster to Mr. Evarts.

BOSTON, September 29, 1879. (Received October 2.)

SIR: In accordance with the instructions received by us from the Department of State, under date of 5th August, 1879, desiring us to join the United States steamer Kearsarge for the purpose of examining the condition and conduct of the United States fishing interests in the waters of the British North American Provinces, and to "observe the methods and equipage of our fishermen as used in the fisheries within three miles of the shore, and the treatment shown them in the pursuit of their industry by the local authorities and the population of the coasts to which they resort," we have the honor to report that on August 10 we met the Kearsarge at Shediac, New Brunswick, and proceeded immediately to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island.

This island, from its situation in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, is the most convenient point of observation for examining the fisheries pursued by the American vessels in these waters.

The principal fishery followed by the American fisherman in the waters of the Gulf of Saint Lawrence is the mackerel fishery. These fish are found along the whole coast of North America north of Cape Hatteras, appearing near the New England coast in May, and in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence early in June.

There is a great diversity of opinion among scientific observers in regard to the habits of the mackerel, whether they spend the winter in the Gulf and near the coast where they appear in the summer, or whether they winter in the South Atlantic and gradually come north along the coast as the water becomes warmer in the spring, arriving in the Gulf in the early summer.

Whatever the true theory may be, it is certain that the American fisherman finds the mackerel in the spring in the South, and follows them along the coast of the United States until they finally reach the Gulf.

Previously to the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 the mackerel fishery was almost wholly in the hands of the Americans, the provincial fishermen confining themselves entirely to the cod fishery; this treaty, by opening the markets of the United States to Canadian fish, stimulated this industry, until now Canadian fishermen engage in this fishery on all the coasts of the maritime provinces.

The methods of taking mackerel in use by the Canadian and American fishermen differ widely. The Canadians fish in small boats, going out a short distance only from the shore, returning to their homes each night, and using hand-lines alone. In Prince Edward Island there were engaged in the fisheries during the year 1878, 1,175 boats, and only 11 vessels.

Professor Hind, in his confidential report to the Canadian Government upon the effect of the Washington Treaty on Canadian fisheries, speaking of the difference in the modes of fishing used by the Canadians and Americans, says:

Mackerel catching is a special industry, and requires sea-going vessels. The boat equipment so common throughout British American waters is wholly unsuited to the pursuit of the mackerel so largely carried on by United States fishermen. Immense schools of mackerel are frequently left unmolested in the Gulf and on the coast of Newfoundland in consequence of the fishermen being unprovided with suitable vessels and fishing gear.

The American fishermen carry on the mackerel fishery in large vessels of from 50 to 150 tons burden. These vessels are sailed on a mutual system of division of profits, the owners providing the vessels and outfits, and the crew their time and labor for the trip; the proceeds of the voyage are divided equally, one-half to the owners and the other half to the crew. The average value of one of these vessels is $3,000, the seine and seine-boat $1,000, and the cost of the outfit about $600; the length of time employed in a trip to the Gulf is usually about twelve weeks.

The mode of conducting the mackerel fishery on the part of the Americans, has, during the past few years, been undergoing great change and improvement. Formerly, the way of taking mackerel was by hand-lines; bait cut fine was thrown from the vessel into the water for the purpose of attracting the mackerel to the surface, and they were then taken by hand-lines.

As mackerel are often found in immense bodies or schools, the opportunity to take them in large quantities led to the invention of the purse or deep-water seine, which has been, for the last fifteen years, the usual mode of taking mackerel by the Americans, and is known as the American method. This method was in full operation long before the adoption of the Washington Treaty, and was as much a part of the business as the use of the vessel, and when American fishermen were allowed to use the Canadian inshore waters, it was well known and understood that they would use all their improved appliances for taking mackerel or any other fish. These large purse seines are fifteen hundred feet long and one hundred and fifty deep, and can be graduated in size and used in deep as well as shoal water.

Nearly all the American mackerel vessels are now equipped with purse seines, and by their use the time employed in taking a trip of mackerel has been very much shortened, for with a seine, when mackerel are plenty, a full fare can sometimes be obtained in a few days, while by the hand line it requires weeks and sometimes months to procure a trip.

Mackerel are a migratory fish, and their capture is a matter of much uncertainty; they appear and disappear in large bodies, and neither the time nor place where they can be taken can be determined beforehand with any accuracy. The only resource of the fishermen is to be prepared with the most expeditious means of taking them whenever the opportunity occurs.

The quality and value of mackerel depend upon their size and fatness. They are quoted in the market as numbers one, two, three, and four, according to the brand placed upon the barrel by the inspector. Small and poor mackerel are nearly worthless, while fine, large, fat mackerel, such as are taken off Block Island, near the coast of New England, are considered a great luxury and will sell for $30 a barrel.

The size, quality, and number of mackerel in the Gulf varies exceedingly in different years, sometimes being a mixed quality of large and small, and at other seasons being very poor and of little value.

During the present season the mackerel taken in the Gulf have been smaller and poorer than ever before, and will hardly pay even the Canadians themselves for taking them. At Prince Edward Island mackerel can be bought for about $1 a barrel unpacked, while packed, salted, and delivered in Boston, they can not be sold for more than $3, and the dealers there have refused to advance more than $2 upon the mackerel consigned to them. Indeed, the managers of some of the largest fishing establishments upon the island have this summer given up the mackerel fishery and turned their attention entirely to catching cod for the West Indies market, considering that after paying the expense of packing and transporting the mackerel there was no margin left for any profit.

The number of American vessels in the Gulf varies very much each year; there have been seasons previous to the Treaty of Washington when as many as five hundred vessels were in the Gulf at one time, but since the treaty has been in operation the number has greatly diminished.

By the official record kept by the collector of customs at Port Mulgrave in the Gut of Canso, there appear to have been in the Gulf in 1873, 254 vessels; 1874, 164 vessels.

This record for the years 1875 and 1876 was demanded by the counsel of the United States at the Halifax Commission, but was refused by the British counsel, although it was admitted that the records were in their possession. The evidence produced by the United States shows that during those years there were not more than 100 vessels in the Gulf.

There were in 1877, 60 vessels; 1878, 273 vessels; 1879, 41 vessels.

Of the vessels in the Gulf in 1879, 24 are reported as having obtained 7,045 barrels, an average of 293 barrels each, which would make for the whole fleet 13,905 barrels taken by American vessels in the Gulf this year. If one-half of these fish were caught within three miles of the shore, which is a very large estimate, the value of the Canadian inshore mackerel fishery to the United States in 1879 was only $6,850—this is calculating the value of the fish at the price for which it can be purchased unpacked in Prince Edward Island, and making no allowance for the expense of catching the mackerel.

In 1878 more American vessels went to the Gulf than in any year since the treaty has been in operation. Early in the season the fishing was poor upon the United States coast, and many vessels went to the Gulf in hope that they would find the mackerel there, but most of them returned at once and did much better on the American shore.

The whole American catch in the Gulf in 1878 was only 61,923 barrels, while 134,545 barrels were taken on our own coast. Every vessel engaged in the Gulf mackerel fishery during the last two years has lost money.

We inclose a list of the United States mackerel fishing vessels in the Gulf of Saint Lawrence during the present summer, and the number of barrels taken by each vessel, as reported at Port Mulgrave, in the Gut of Canso, September 1 (inclosure No. 1).

The reports of the Canadian department of marine and fisheries for several years have contained complaints from different parts of the coast about the poorness of the mackerel fishery; the usual reason given being that the use of purse seines by the Americans broke up the schools of mackerel, and the casting overboard of the small fish, which are sometimes killed by the seines, prevented the mackerel from taking the bait.

The fishery overseer from Prince County, Prince Edward Island, speaking of the decrease in value of the fisheries, says :

This falling off is principally in the mackerel fishery. Fishing was never more vigorously prosecuted than last season, 614 boats and 2,066 men being engaged in this industry; but the fishermen state that owing to so many vessels fishing with seines and throwing overboard large quantities of dead fish the mackerel will not take the bait (Report Department Marine and Fisheries, 1878, p. 283).

Similar complaints appear in the reports from the other maritime provinces, and petitions have been presented to the department urging that purse seines should be prohibited.

In the report for 1877, page 53, Mr. Whiteher, the commissioner of fisheries, says :

The modes of fishing most objectionable amongst the fishermen, and not provided against by our fishery laws, are purse seines and trawls. Their use has been petitioned against from several sea-coast districts. It is not desirable to interfere with either until further inquiries and more particular observations can be made.

Although the Canadian commissioner of fisheries in 1877 was of the opinion that the use of purse seines was not provided against by the Canadian fishery laws, yet on June 6, 1879, the following notice was issued from the Canadian department of marine and fisheries at Ottawa, and signed by Mr. Whiteher :

CANADIAN INSHORE FISHERIES.—DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES, FISHERIES BRANCH.

OTTAWA, June 6, 1879.

Public notice, and particularly the attention of deep-sea and inshore fishermen, is directed to the following provisions of the statute, 31 Vic., cap. 60, known as the fishery act, passed on the 22d May, 1868.

1. Section 14 prohibits the throwing overboard or leaving of dead or decaying fish, or remains of offals of fish, or other marine animals, within any water where fishing is carried on, or upon any fishing bank; also forbids doing the same in any net or other fishing apparatus.

2. Section 14, subsection 2, provides that dead or decaying fish, or any other deleterious substance, shall not be drawn into, or allowed to pass into, or be left or remain in any water frequented by any kinds of fish mentioned in the fishery laws.

3. Section 13, subsection 7.—Bag-nets and trap-nets and fish-pounds are prohibited, excepting under special licenses.

Besides the fines imposed by said statute, any offender against the fishery laws is liable to the forfeiture of the nets, materials, implements, or appliances used in connection with the offense.

Fishery officers may seize upon their own view, or on complaint, any fishing gear subject to confiscation, and fine offenders forthwith.

British and foreign fishermen alike are required to conform to the Canadian fishery laws.

It having been established in evidence that certain kinds of nets used for mackerel and other fish are fished in contravention of the fishery laws, by destroying quantities of small fish, besides mature fishes which are thrown away dead or dying, or are left to decay on the fishing grounds or within the inshore waters, the fishery officers are instructed to strictly enforce the fishery laws passed to prevent such illegal and injurious practices.

They are also instructed that British subjects, when fishing in British waters, are bound to conform in every respect to the Canadian fishery laws, and that foreigners fishing within three miles of the coasts of Canada, under treaties, in common with British subjects, are required to do so in conformity with the fishery laws which govern the operations of British fishermen.

By order :

W. F. WHITCHER,
Commissioner of Fisheries.

This circular is an attempt to place a forced and unreasonable construction upon certain sections of the Canadian fishery act, statute 31 Vic., cap. 60, and to apply this to American fishermen fishing in Canadian waters under the Treaty of Washington, in order to prevent the XXXI Victoria, Cap. 60.

SEC. 14. Whoever throws overboard ballast, coal, ashes, stones, or other prejudicial or deleterious substances, in any river, harbor, or roadstead, or any water where fishing is carried on, or throws overboard or lets fall upon any fishing bank or ground, or leaves, or deposits, or causes to be thrown, left, or deposited upon the shore, beach, or bank of any water, or upon the beach between high and low water mark, inside of any tidal estuary, or within two hundred yards of the mouth of any salmon river, remains or offals of fish or of marine animals, or leaves decayed or decaying fish in any net or fishing apparatus, shall incur for any such offense a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or imprisonment for not more than two months, and every person so doing, whether master or servant, and the master or owner of any vessel or boat from which such ballast, offals, or other prejudicial substance are thrown, shall severally become liable for each offense; provided always, that it shall be lawful to bury such remains or offals ashore, beyond the mouths of rivers, for carrying on deep-sea fisheries, to drop the same into perforated boxes or inclosures built upon the beach or under stage-heads in such manner as to prevent the same from being floated or drifted into the streams, or to dispose of them in such other manner as may be prescribed by any fishery officer.

2. Lime, chemical substances, or drugs, poisonous matter (liquid or solid), dead or decaying fish, or any other deleterious substance, shall not be drawn into, or allowed to pass into, be left or remain in any water frequented by any of the kinds of fish mentioned in this act; and saw-dust or mill-rubbish shall not be drifted or thrown into any stream frequented by fish, under a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars; provided always, that the minister shall have power to exempt from the operation of this subsection, wholly or from any portion of the same, any stream or streams in which he considers that its enforcement is not requisite for the public interest.

SEC. 13 (7). Bag-nets and trap-nets and fish-ponds are prohibited, except under special licenses for capturing deep-sea fishes other than salmon. (Fishing acts of Canada, inclosure No. 11.)

After citing the foregoing sections, Mr. Whiteher lays down his construction of the fishery act in the instructions to the fishery officers.

It having been established in evidence that certain kinds of nets used for mackerel and other fish are fished in contravention of the fishery laws, by destroying quantities of small fish, besides mature fishes which are thrown away dead and dying, or are left to decay on the fishing grounds or within the inshore waters, the fishery officers are instructed to strictly enforce the fishery laws passed to prevent said illegal practices.

Among the many claims brought forward on behalf of the British Government before the Halifax commission as reasons why a large award should be made by the commissioners, the deleterious effect upon the Canadian inshore fisheries that would be caused by the use of purse seines by the Americans in the gulf was insisted upon. Evidence was brought forward attempting to show that seining at times destroyed large numbers of small fish, unfit for food, and these being thrown overboard were eaten by the mackerel, who thus gorged with food would not take the bait, or attracted predaceous fish which drove the mackerel away.

All the complaints now made by the fishermen against the use of purse seines were made before the Halifax commission. The size, shape, and mode of using these seines was shown by the evidence, and their alleged destructiveness, and the evil effect they would have upon the Canadian fisheries were pressed upon the commissioners by the British counsel in their final arguments, and must be presumed to have been taken into account by the commissioners in making their award.

All modes of fishing by which large bodies of fish are inclosed at once of necessity must take immature fish, but whether this waste has any effect upon the whole supply of fish in the sea is very doubtful.

In 1863 a commission was appointed by the British Government to examine into the sea fisheries of the United Kingdom, and to ascertain whether any of the methods of catching fish in use in such fisheries involves a wasteful destruction of fish or spawn, and, if so, whether it is probable that any legislative restriction upon such method of fishing would result in an increase of the supply of fish."

The commissioners, James Caird, Thomas H. Huxley, and George S. Lefevre, after a long and elaborate examination into the methods of fishing and the apparatus in use by the fishermen, in which the same complaints now made by the Canadians against purse seines were made by the English fishermen against the use of seines and beam-trawls, recommended to the British Government that all acts of Parliament which professed to regulate the modes of fishing pursued in the open sea or inshore waters be repealed. The commissioners state they do not consider that there is any evidence that operations of man have any great effect upon the supply of fish in the sea; and that whatever effect is produced by waste or extravagance in the capture of fish is itself so trifling in proportion to the natural wear and tear of the fish that it may be thrown entirely out of account. (Sea Fisheries Commission Report, 1866.)

The inspectors of salmon fisheries, in their report to the colonial office and inclosed in the dispatch from Sir M. Hicks Beach to the governor of Newfoundland (inclosures numbers 8 and 9), coincide with this opinion, and say further that no regulations which any single nation can make in regard to the fisheries are of any great value, and that any "regulations, therefore, applicable to the territorial waters would have the effect of driving the fishery further from the shore; they would have no effect whatever."

No attempt has been made to enforce the laws against seining during the present season, but if next year mackerel should be more plenty in the gulf, and American fishermen should resort there in greater numbers, any attempted enforcement would be productive of much trouble, and would practically prevent them from obtaining any benefit from the treaty in the inshore waters of the Dominion, by forcing them to fish entirely outside of the Canadian jurisdiction.

As by section 16 of the fishery act, and by the instructions of the commissioner of fisheries, the fishery officers may seize "upon their own view or on complaint" all nets and appliances used in contravention of this act, "and fine offenders forthwith," one-half of the fine going to the informer, American fishermen even when using their seines outside the three-mile limit will be liable to incessant trouble and interruption.

On Friday, August 15, we left Prince Edward Island for the Magdalen Islands, arriving there the evening of the 16th. Under the convention of 1818 the American fishermen have the right to fish on the shores of the Magdalen Islands without any restriction as to distance. Situated in the center of the Gulf of Saint Lawrence, these islands were formerly the resort of large bodies of mackerel, which remained there all summer; and until the last few years, American vessels found around these islands the best fishing places in the gulf.

Mr. Fox, the collector and fishery overseer of the Magdalen Islands, testified before the Halifax commission that in 1861 he counted 500 American schooners engaged in fishing near the islands. When we saw him there, this summer, he informed us he had not seen a single United States vessel. In 1877 about thirty vessels fished near the islands. In 1878 only 20, and none of these vessels did well. This year the mackerel catch at the islands has been a failure; very few have been taken by the inhabitants, and they were all small, not exceeding 12 inches in length.

Formerly a large herring business was carried on here, almost exclusively by Americans. This, although called a fishery, was really merely a commercial transaction, the vessels bringing seines and hiring the native fishermen to catch the herring at an agreed price per barrel, but this, like all the other gulf fisheries carried on by Americans, has steadily decreased. In 1877 there were engaged in this fishery 25 American vessels, 65 Canadian vessels. In 1878, 18 American vessels, 71 Canadian vessels, and of the American vessels only four obtained any herring.
In 1879, 5 American vessels, 42 Canadian vessels.

There have been usually during the summer a small fleet of American cod-fishing vessels near the Magdalen Islands; but only two have been seen this year.

In our whole cruise in the gulf, extending over the most frequented fishing grounds, we only saw seven American schooners, and they reported that there were not over twenty sail in the bay.

Leaving the Magdalen Islands, we crossed to Cape Breton, landing at Aspée Bay, where there had been this summer some trouble between the native fishermen and the Americans. During the present season some American fishermen, finding that there was at the French islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon a large demand for squid, engaged in the business of carrying squid there and selling it in a slightly salted condition to the French and American bankers, to be used as bait upon the Grand Banks. This has proved very profitable, squid having been sold at St. Pierre as high as seven francs a hundred, and there are already about ten vessels engaged in this trade.

In June of the present year several of these vessels were at Whitehead, Cape Breton, to procure squid. Whitehead is a small settlement in Aspée Bay, at the extreme northern part of Cape Breton, and inhabited by about two hundred fishermen. The people are very poor and uneducated, and their only employment is cod-fishing and catching squid and selling them to the bankers that come for bait. While these vessels were at Whitehead the squid appeared in the bay in large schools, and, as is usually the case when schooling, would not bite at the jig, so neither the native fishermen nor the Americans were able to take any.
Two of the captains of the American vessels, Captain Anderson, of the schooner Cadet, and Captain Goodwin, of the Bay State, had carried with them from the United States seines in order to seine squid, and with these seines they could have surrounded the squid as they schooled, and probably in a few hauls have taken a large portion of the squid in the bay, selling their own vessels and selling the remainder to the bankers that were there waiting for bait. When, however, they attempted to use these seines, they were informed by the native fishermen that they would not be permitted to seine any squid in the bay, and that if the seines were placed in the water they, the native fishermen, would tear them up.
No actual violence was used by the natives, but threats were freely made that any attempt to use a seine for squid would be prevented by force. As these seines are valuable, being worth from four to five hundred dollars each, the American captains did not dare risk having them destroyed, and were obliged to leave without any squid. Captain Anderson afterwards returned and purchased a load of squid of the native fishermen, paying them $561, all of which he could have saved if he had been permitted to use his seine. These facts are clearly shown both by the depositions of the American fishermen and that of Mr. Challoner, a Canadian merchant living at Whitehead, which we herewith inclose (inclosure No. 13).

While at Aspée Bay we saw a number of the Canadian fishermen themselves, who admitted that they had threatened Captain Anderson and Captain Goodwin, and that they had not allowed them to seine in the bay. The fishermen said what, from our own observation, we believe to be entirely true, that they were very poor, and all the cod they caught they sold to the dealers, and were compelled to take their pay in goods and supplies at high prices, and the only money they ever received during the whole year was the little they procured by selling squid to the American vessels, and that they look forward all summer to the squid season, which only lasts a few weeks, to get this money to pay their taxes and other expenses; that if the seines had been used when the squid were schooling, they would have been deprived of this money which they had hoped to earn. They were very glad to have the Americans come to purchase squid, and were willing that the Americans should jig for squid, but the large seines would soon take all the squid in the bay.
S. Ex. 113—16

There is no law in the Dominion of Canada against seining squid, and the Americans were acting clearly within their rights under the treaty in attempting to seine.

The native fishermen, in opposing the use of seines, were only endeavoring to prevent the loss of a very lucrative trade by the Americans taking the squid with seines.

It is the same opposition that always appears when improved machinery and advanced methods of production come into competition with unskilled labor.

The great dependence of the Canadian fishing industry upon the markets of the United States for the sale of their fish, and the great benefit which they receive from the remission of duties, clearly appears from the returns. Nearly one-half of all the fish exported from Canada goes to the United States, while of mackerel alone nearly four-fifths of the entire exportation is to the United States. In 1877, 102,698 barrels of mackerel were exported to the United States, and only 28,623 barrels to all other countries. Practically the United States is the only market for the best qualities of mackerel, and if a prohibitory duty should be imposed, that fishery would be almost abandoned by the Canadians. If an average duty of 20 per cent. had been imposed on Canadian fish, more than two millions of dollars would have been received by the United States since the Treaty of Washington came into force.

The amount of fish exported from Canada to the United States, from 1873 to 1878, is as follows, viz :

After leaving Cape Breton we proceeded to St. John's, Newfoundland, calling on our way at the French islands, St. Pierre and Miquelon. These islands, from their situation immediately opposite Fortune Bay, the headquarters of the herring fishery, would be very available as a baiting and supply station for our fleet of cod-fishermen if, after the expiration of the Treaty of Washington, they should be prohibited from going to the coast of Newfoundland. There is already a large trade in bait between St. Pierre and Newfoundland, which would increase if the American vessels also came in there for bait. At times so much bait comes from St. Pierre to Newfoundland at once that it cannot be sold at any price, and has to be thrown away. At present the American fishing vessels are subject to excessive port charges at St. Pierre, and this has prevented many of them from coming there for bait.

We arrived at St. John's on the 21st of August, and spent several days in visiting the various places in Trinity and Conception Bays, frequented by American fishermen for procuring bait and ice, and in making inquiries into the general condition of the inshore fisheries of Newfoundland, and how much they are prosecuted by the Americans.

The case presented on behalf of the colony of Newfoundland to the Halifax commission, after stating the great value of the inshore fisheries of that island, says:

It may be contended, on the part of the United States, that their fishermen have not in the past availed themselves of the Newfoundland inshore fisheries, with but few exceptions, and that they would and do resort to the coasts of that island only for the purpose of procuring bait for the Bank fishery. * * * It is not at all probable that, possessing as they do the right to take herring and caplin for themselves on all parts of the Newfoundland coasts, they will continue to purchase as heretofore, and they will thus prevent the local fishermen, especially those of Fortune Bay, from engaging in a very lucrative employment, which formerly occupied them during a portion of the winter season for the supply of the United States market. (British case, p. 46.)

For many years American vessels have been accustomed to resort to Fortune Bay in the winter for herring, which are shipped in a frozen state and sold in the cities of the United States. These herring were, until the winter of 1878, always purchased of the native fishermen, and this trade is admitted to have been a great benefit to them, by giving employment during a season when they have no other occupation. The number of vessels engaged in this trade was about 50, and as each vessel purchased from 600 to 800 barrels of herring, paying about one dollar a barrel, a large amount of money was received by the inhabitants.

In the winter of 1878, for the first time, the American fishermen, taking advantage of their rights under the Treaty of Washington, carried with them to Fortune Bay seines, and themselves attempted to catch the herring, thus saving the money formerly expended in purchasing.

The Newfoundland fishermen being naturally desirous of retaining their former "lucrative trade," forcibly prevented the Americans from using the seines, and during the disturbance one of the seines belonging to an American vessel was destroyed, and they were all compelled to return to the United States empty and with a total loss of the voyage, resulting in great damages to the crews and owners of the vessels. In consequence of this trouble some correspondence ensued between the two governments, in which it was assumed by the British Government that United States fishermen fishing within three miles of the coast of the British North American Dominions, under the Treaty of Washington, must conform to all the local laws and regulations governing British fishermen, and it was claimed by the British Government that the American fishermen were engaged in three distinct violations of the local laws.

If this is the true construction to be placed on the treaty, it is difficult to see what advantages the United States have received, and for which more than one million dollars has been paid to Newfoundland as its share of the fishery award.

Since the Washington Treaty a series of laws have been enacted by the Newfoundland legislature, the tendency of which has been to limit and restrict the rights of the American fishermen, until at the present time fishing in the territorial waters of Newfoundland has been abandoned, so that absolutely no benefit is received under the treaty by the United States in Newfoundland waters.

The law against seining herring in the winter, which it was claimed the Americans had infringed (Consolidated Stat., cap. 102, § 1), with the exception of the change of date from April 25 to April 18, is exactly the same in form with the act in present force, 42 Vic., Cap. II, § 1:

No person shall haul, catch, or take herrings by or in a seine or other such contrivance, on or near any part of the coast of this colony or its dependencies, or in any of the bays, harbors, or other places therein, at any time between the twentieth day of October in any year and the eighteenth day of April in the following year, or at any time use a seine or other contrivance for the catching or taking of herrings, except by way of shooting and forthwith hauling the same: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the taking of herrings by nets set in the usual and customary manner, and not used for inbarring herring in a cove, inlet, or other place.

By this statute the American fisherman is prevented from seining herring during six months of the year, and during the only six months when there is any demand for herring in the United States, and when large catches and quick dispatch are of most vital importance to the success of a voyage.

The only way by which Americans can take herring during the winter months is by the slow process of setting gill-nets, and even as to these, by Consolidated Stat., cap. 102, § 2, they are limited to nets of a certain size and shape.

Herring taken in gill-nets sell for less in the market than seined herring, and the time necessary to take them in gill-nets is so long, and the expense that would be incurred by the vessels so great, that the only course that remains possible is to purchase of the native fishermen.

From the evidence taken by the British Government in reference to the trouble at Fortune Bay it appeared that the law against seining herring had never been enforced and was not known to the Newfoundland fishermen at Fortune Bay. As soon as the attention of the home government was called to this, the secretary of state for the colonies wrote to Sir John Glover, the governor of Newfoundland, suggesting, under date of July 30, 1878, that it might "be desirable that some steps should be taken for making the fishermen of Long Harbor (Fortune Bay) better acquainted with the law which prohibits the using of seines for taking herring on or near the coasts of the colony at any time between the 20th day of October and the 25th day of April in each year." This dispatch was communicated by Sir John Glover to his government (Journal of the House of Assembly, Newfoundland, 1879, appendix, p. 524.)

After this, and probably in consequence of the communication from the home government, the legislature of Newfoundland passed, March 19, 1879, an act entitled "An act to amend the law relating to the coast fisheries."

The first section of this law is the one quoted above and merely changes the date in the former law from April 25 to April 18. The third section increases the penalty for the violation of the law from fifty to two hundred dollars.

The fourth and fifth sections are as follows:

IV. The owners, masters, and other persons managing or controlling vessels conveying herrings in bulk between the twentieth day of October in any year and the eighteenth day of April in the following year, shall be deemed to have hauled, caught, or taken such herrings contrary to the provisions of chapter one hundred and two of the Consolidated Statutes, as amended by the said above recited act, thirty-nine Victoria, chapter six, and by this act, unless such owner, master, or other person aforesaid shall make proof to the contrary before a justice of the peace.

V. Any justice of the peace, subcollector of the customs, preventive officer, fishery warden, or constable may board any vessel suspected of carrying herrings in bulk between the twentieth day of October in any year and the eighteenth day of April in the following year; and in case any such justice, subcollector, preventive officer, fishery warden, or constable shall make signal to any vessel suspected as aforesaid, from any vessel employed by the government, by dipping the ensign at the main peak three times, and firing a gun, it shall be the duty of the owner, master, or person managing or controlling such vessel so signalled to heave-to such vessel until such justice, subcollector, preventive officer, fishery warden, or constable shall have boarded and examined such last-named vessel; and in case of such master, or owner, or person managing or controlling as aforesaid such last-named vessel omitting so to heave her to, or to afford facilities for such justice, subcollector, preventive officer, fishery warden, or constable boarding such vessel or obstructing such justice, subcollector, preventive officer, fishery officer, or constable boarding or examining any such vessel, he shall be subject to a penalty of five hundred dollars, to be recovered with costs in a summary manner before a justice of the peace, and in case default shall be made in the payment of such penalty, such justice shall issue his warrant and cause such offender to be imprisoned for a period not exceeding thirty days. (Fishery laws of Newfoundland, inclosure No. 12.)

The great injustice of this law and the effect that it will have of driving away all American vessels engaged in the winter herring fishery is very obvious. Instead of taking measures to have the laws of the colony obeyed by its own citizens, the government makes every American vessel carrying herring during the winter, whether the herring were caught by the Americans or purchased of the inhabitants, liable to a fine unless it can be shown to the satisfaction of a justice of the peace, and the burden of proof is upon the captain of the American vessel, that the herring were not taken in violation of law. And by section VI the only appeal from the decision is by a long and expensive litigation in the supreme court of Newfoundland, after giving security for the performance of the order appealed from and payment of costs.

This law was not passed until after the close of the last winter's fishing season, and has not yet been enforced. The practical enforcement of it next winter will result in a complete destruction of this industry, as carried on by the American fishermen; they cannot catch herring in their own manner and with their own nets; they are forced to purchase of the inhabitants, and finally they are liable to have their voyage broken up and their chance of carrying their herring to market in a proper condition destroyed unless they can show to the satisfaction of every petty local official that the Newfoundland fishermen from whom the herring were purchased have obeyed the laws of their own country.

In the winter of 1877, 40 vessels sailed from Gloucester alone to Fortune Bay for herring; in 1878, 26 vessels; and in 1879, only 8.

It may safely be asserted that if the law passed this year is strictly enforced, not one American vessel will in the future engage in this fishery.

The codfishery as pursued by the natives of Newfoundland is entirely an inshore fishery, carried on in small, open boats, or punts, containing three or four men, and never going beyond three miles from the shore. The fish taken are small and unsuited to the American markets; they are usually hard cured and exported to the West Indies, Portugal, and Brazil.

The American vessels fish for cod upon the Grand Banks, from thirty to one hundred miles from the shore, and never come within the inshore waters of Newfoundland, except to procure bait. The cod taken on the banks are a different species from the shore fish and much larger; indeed, the fish caught upon the various banks differ so much in appearance that after they have been landed an experienced fisherman can tell from what bank they were taken.

The vessels used in the bank fishery are large vessels of about one hundred tons. The Americans fish usually with trawls, but in some places where the tide is very strong hand-lines are used. The bait formerly used was salted clams and menhaden, which were carried from the United States, together with the offal of the fish and whatever fresh bait could be procured on the banks; but within the last few years American vessels have been accustomed to go to the harbors and bays of Canada and Newfoundland for fresh bait, which was preserved in ice and used on the banks. This bait at different parts of the season consists of herrings, caplin, and squid, in the order named.

The bait is always purchased of the Newfoundland fishermen, and the price paid is so high that they find it much more remunerative to catch bait and sell it to the Americans than to follow their usual business of codfishing, especially during the squid season. In nearly every cove along the coast ice-houses have been erected during the last few years for selling ice to the Americans to use in preserving this bait fresh.

There are about 300 American vessels on the banks that come into Newfoundland for fresh bait, and as these vessels will average about $400 expended for bait and ice during the season, at least $100,000 is annually paid by the Americans to the Newfoundlanders for this purpose.

Mr. Molloy, the consul at St. John's, informed us that he had in one summer cashed drafts drawn by the American vessels for bait and ice to the amount of over $25,000.

Much complaint is made by the American fishermen that the law prohibiting seining squid (39 Vic., cap. VI., § 3), passed April 26, 1876, prevents their taking any squid themselves, and compels them to purchase entirely of the natives. This law is as follows:

No person shall, at any time, haul, catch, or take squids, within or by means of any seine, bunt, or other such contrivance.

They say that at present they lose nearly a third of their time waiting for the local fishermen to catch the squid one by one on jigs, while if a seine could be used they would be able to take the squid themselves in a short time and leave for the banks without any delay.

Often squid will not take the jig, especially when schooling, and, although the water may be alive with them, the American vessels are obliged to leave for some other place where the squid will bite, and thus they often go from bay to bay before they can procure any bait, when, if seining could be used, they could easily have hauled all they needed. As the expenses of a codfishing vessel are about twenty dollars a day, this delay causes a great loss to the owners of the vessel. While at Trinity and Conception Bays, we saw several vessels that had waited more than ten days before they had been able to procure bait.

Each codfishing vessel requires about thirty thousand squid for a baiting, and the price usually paid is twenty cents per hundred, but in some places this summer competition has raised the price to fifty cents per hundred. Even when squid are very numerous no one man can take more than four or five hundred squid in a day with a jig, and it is impossible for the crew of the American vessel alone to take sufficient squid for a baiting in this manner, but if allowed to seine they could save not only the time now lost but the money paid to the native fishermen.

This law is very strictly enforced, and any attempt to seine would not only be punished by the authorities, but would probably be met with violence by the Newfoundland fishermen, who state very openly that they will not allow any seining of squid, and in this they are abetted by the local newspapers, which are very hostile to the American fishermen, and advise the local fishermen that if the government will not protect them they must protect themselves against any seining squid by the Americans.

By chapter 102, consolidated statutes, section IV, as amended April 26, 1876 (39 Victoria, cap. 6, § 2) :

No person shall, between the 10th day of May and the 20th day of October, in any year, haul, catch, or take herrings or other bait for exportation within one mile, measured by the shore or across the water, of any settlement situate between Cape Chapeau Rouge and Pointe Enragee, near Cape Ray.

This law does not seem to have ever been enforced, but by its terms it would prevent the procuring of bait by Americans on a large portion of the southern coast of Newfoundland, including Fortune Bay, and that part of the coast between Cape Ray and the Rameau Islands, where the liberty of taking fish of all kinds was granted by the convention of 1818.

The question whether the American fishermen fishing in the waters of Newfoundland under treaties with the British Government are bound to obey all the local laws and regulations was the subject of some correspondence between the colony and the home government during the time when the reciprocity treaty of 1854 was in force. And March 15, 1864, a message from the governor to the house of assembly of Newfoundland inclosed a dispatch from the Duke of Newcastle and an opinion of the law officers of the Crown upon this question. (Journal of the House of Assembly, 1864, p. 75; Appendix, 661-669.)

The Government of Newfoundland claim that the right of colonial legislatures to pass laws and regulations regarding the fisheries, and to enforce their obedience by American fishermen, was admitted by the Government of the United States, in a circular addressed to the collector of customs at Boston by Hon. W. L. Marcy, Secretary of State, March 28, 1856, enjoining upon American fishermen the observance of these laws. We inclose copies of the message of the governor and accompanying papers and of the circular of the State Department. (Inclosures numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5.)

The only use which the Americans make of the inshore waters of Newfoundland and the right to enter the harbors of that island is purchasing bait and ice of the colonial fishermen. This is entirely a commercial privilege, and, under the ruling of the Halifax Commissioners, is neither granted or guaranteed by the Treaty of Washington, and already several attempts have been made to prohibit the sale of bait and ice to the Americans under heavy penalties.

It may seem strange that the colonial government should desire to put an end to this trade in bait and ice, which we have shown to be of so much value to the native fishermen; but the reason appears very evident when the state of affairs in the colony is considered.

The persons engaged in the fishing business in Newfoundland are of two distinct classes, the merchants or planters and the actual fishermen. The planters, who purchase the fish of the fishermen, are wealthy and influential, and have the largest share in the direction of the government.

In the fishing business the money is made not by the actual workers, but by the capitalist. These planters provide the fishermen with their boats and gear and provisions for their families during the winter, taking pay in fish at a price settled previously by the planters, among themselves, to prevent competition. The fishermen are very improvident, and at the end of each year are usually in debt to the planter, whose only chance of being repaid is to keep the fishermen at work catching cod, which are credited against this debt. Thus the fisherman is kept in a situation almost of bondage, forced to sell his fish at a low price to the planter, and receiving his pay in supplies at a high price.

The testimony of the Newfoundland witnesses shows that the usual profit made by the planters on the fish purchased of the fishermen was more than 30 per cent., and that a further profit of from 25 to 30 per cent. was charged upon the supplies in which payment was made. Under this credit system, whenever the fishing is bad, the fishermen must be supported either by the planters or by the government. In 1878 more than one-tenth of the entire revenue of the island was expended in pauper relief, while in 1863 nearly one-third was so used.

The money which is paid by the Americans for bait to the native fishermen never gets into the hands of the planters, but is spent by the fishermen in some other way than in paying their debts to the planters.

The planters consider this money is wasted, and say that if this trade in bait and ice was prohibited the fishermen would not be drawn away from their usual codfishing and would be gradually reducing their debts. The fisherman, however, is very willing to earn ready money by selling bait. Mr. Fraiser, now a member of the Newfoundland ministry, in his evidence before the Halifax Commission said, with reference to this trade—

You see that all the fish that are caught are in the hands of the planters. The fishermen cannot get half a quintal or a quarter of this fish until it is weighed out to him or he is settled with. So he has not a copper between the time he goes out in the spring and the settlement in October, except in case of an independent fisherman. Therefore the inducement of a little ready money from the Americans is very alluring to him.

These attempts to prohibit the sale of bait and ice to the Americans have been, to a certain extent, party questions in the local politics of the colony.

In 1877 the governor called the attention of the Home Government to this traffic, saying that it had injured the fisheries by making it harder for the local fishermen to procure bait, and that it called "the colonial fishermen away from their own fishing to procure a supply of bait and ice for the Americans." (Sir John Glover to Earl Carnarvon, December 31, 1877; Journal of the House of Assembly, 1878; Appendix, pages 294, 295, and 296.)

No action was taken by the Home Government upon this communication, and on June 25, 1878, the governor wrote to the colonial office, inclosing an address of the house on this subject, and requesting that the Home Government might comply with the wishes of the colonists, as expressed in the address.

This letter was replied to by the colonial secretary, Sir M. Hicks Beach, December 25, 1878, inclosing a report by the inspectors of salmon fisheries on this subject, saying:

It will be perceived that the general conclusion of the inspectors, who are gentlemen of large experience in such matters, is to the effect that the operations of man have but a very slight effect on the supply of herring, and that, with the experience of this country before them, they doubt the necessity of any legislation for the protec-

But, apart from this view of the question, Her Majesty's Government deem the present moment inopportune to effect any such change in practice as that which it is desired should be established. They are giving their most careful consideration to the whole question of the fisheries, both as regards the United States subjects and the subjects of France, and they feel that a satisfactory solution of the several important points at issue might be considerably hindered by action in the direction suggested by the assembly. (Journal of House, 1879, Appendix, pages 404-413.)

Copies of this correspondence are herewith inclosed. (Inclosures Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9.)

This dispatch of Sir M. Hicks Beach follows the course pursued by one of his predecessors, the Duke of Newcastle, who, during the time the Reciprocity Treaty was in force, wrote to the governor of Newfoundland "that no act can be allowed which prohibits expressly, or is calculated by a circuitous method to prevent, the sale of bait." (Duke of Newcastle to Sir A. Bannerman, August 3, 1863.)

If such laws as were proposed by the Newfoundland assembly should ever be enacted, it is difficult to see how they could be practically enforced.

American fishermen having the right under the treaty to take fish of all kinds themselves, they must also have the right to hire others to take fish for them. And the British counsel before the Halifax Commission argued that the American fishermen, under the old maxim que facit per facit per se, must be considered to have taken the bait themselves when they purchased it of the Newfoundlanders. Under this construction any law prohibiting the sale of bait would be a violation of the treaty rights.

We heard in Newfoundland of no complaints of any trouble between the Americans and the native fishermen this year except in one instance, and that was of no great importance. An American desired to seine squid, and the natives told him they would not allow it; there was no violence of any kind, only some threatening language. We caused statements to be prepared by the captain and one of his crew, and they were given to Mr. Molloy, the consul of the United States, to have them sworn to. While we were absent Mr. Molloy, upon his own responsibility, forwarded copies of these statements to the governor of Newfoundland, with a request that an investigation should be made. We have not learned what the result of this investigation was, but Mr. Molloy has probably already forwarded a report to the Department of State.

Very little of the fish cured in Newfoundland is exported to the United States. In 1878, only $168,814 in amount came to the United States from Newfoundland, while the total export of fish to all other countries was $5,588,530.

Leaving St. John's, Newfoundland, on August 27, we reached Halifax, Nova Scotia, upon September 1, stopping one day at Port Mulgrave, in the Gut of Canso. During the Reciprocity Treaty, when many American vessels came to the Gulf, a large business in refitting vessels was carried on at Port Mulgrave, but now the wharves are deserted and very little seems to be done there.

At Halifax we left the United States steamer Kearsarge, and returned to the United States by land, arriving in Boston on September 7.

In conclusion we desire to express the very great obligations we are under to Commander Picking and the other officers of the United States steamer Kearsarge for their uniform courtesy, and for their kind endeavors to aid us in every way in our investigations.

We have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servants,

FITZ J. BABSON.

Message from his excellency the governor of Newfoundland, March 15, 1864.

A. BANNERMAN, GOVERNOR.

In the latter part of the year 1862 reliable information reached the admiral, commander-in-chief on this station, as well as the governor of the colony, that parties possessing fishing privileges on the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador contemplated to disregard laws in existence, or hereafter to be passed by the colonial legislature, for regulating the mode of conducting the fisheries, provided such laws interfered with the mode usually in practice.

The governor considered it to be his duty, therefore, to apprise the colonial minister, requesting instructions for his guidance, in order that the same might be communicated to the admiral.

His Grace, in a despatch dated 2d February, 1863, forwarded to the governor the opinion of the law officers of the crown in England on the question referred to them; and His Grace concludes the despatch by saying:

"I have only to add my desire that while asserting the authority of colonial law in colonial waters, within the limits of existing treaties, you will take care to do so in the manner which is likely to be least offensive to the foreigners who may fall within its scope."

It will be seen from the report of Captain Hamilton, laid before the house of assembly, that in the fishing season of 1863, that gallant officer had no trouble on the question referred to, or any other, during his cruises on the coast of Labrador.

The governor, however, considers it proper that the opinions of the law officers of the crown should be placed on record, and with that view they are herewith sent, and discussions having arisen in regard to the Treaties of 1818 and 1855, he sends authentic extracts from these Treaties, which may be useful as a matter of reference.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, 15th March, 1864.

Opinion of the law officers of the crown, whether United States citizens fishing in waters within the jurisdiction of Newfoundland are bound to obey and legally punishable for disregarding the laws and regulations enacted by the colonial legislature.

TEMPLE, January 6th, 1863.

MY LORD DUKE: We are honored with Your Grace's commands, signified in Sir F. Rogers' letter of the 17th December, ulto., stating that he was directed by Your Grace to request that we would favor you with our opinion upon the following question:

"That by a treaty between Great Britain and the United States of America, dated October 20th, 1818 (Hentslett II, p. 392), it was provided inter alia that the inhabitants of the United States should forever have the liberty to take fish on the coasts of Newfoundland (as therein described) in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty."

That this privilege was extended to the coasts of Canada, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, and the several islands thereto adjacent (Hentslett IX, p. 999) and acts were passed by the different colonies (Hentslett X, p. 648, 649, 651, 652, 653) to give effect to the treaty, and especially to suspend the laws of the different colonies which were inconsistent with the terms or spirit of the treaty.

Sir Frederick Rogers was also pleased to state that Your Grace desired to be informed whether inhabitants of the United States fishing in waters within the jurisdiction of the legislature of Newfoundland, or of any other of the above-mentioned colonies, are bound to obey and legally punishable for disregarding the laws or regulations enacted by or under the authority of the respective provincial legislatures, for the conduct of the fisheries; and that Your Grace presumed that such laws would only extend to waters situated within a marine league of the coast of the colony, which (in the case of Newfoundland to which this question especially relates) are defined by the governor's commission, from which an extract was annexed.

Sir Frederick Rogers was further pleased to inclose an extract from a report addressed to Sir A. Bannerman, by the officer employed on the coast of Newfoundland, copies of a letter from Sir Alexander Milne, transmitting that report to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and of a letter addressed to the Colonial Department by direction of their Lordships.

These papers would explain the object with which the present question was asked. In obedience to Your Grace's commands, we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honor to report:

That, in our opinion, inhabitants of the United States, fishing within waters of the territorial jurisdiction of the legislature of Newfoundland, or of any other of the above-mentioned colonies, are bound to obey, and are legally punishable for disregarding, the laws and regulations for the conduct of the fisheries enacted by, or under the authority of, the respective provincial legislatures. The plain object of the treaties above referred to was to put the inhabitants of the United States as regards the "liberty to take fish" within the parts (described) of the British dominions, on the same footing as "subjects of Her Britannic Majesty"—"in common with whom," in the terms of the treaties, such liberty was to be enjoyed.

The enactments subsequently passed did but confirm the treaties and provide for the suspension during the operation of those treaties, of such laws, &c., as were or would be inconsistent with the terms and spirit of the treaties; which "terms and spirit" are, it appears to us, in no respect violated by regulations bona fide made for the government of those engaged in the fishing, and applicable to British subjects so employed.

We think, at the same time, that this British authority, as regards the inhabitants of the United States, can be exercised within those limits only within which the treaty-rights were conferred; in other words, within which, but for the treaties, those inhabitants could not have insisted on their right to fish.

These limits may be safely taken on the main ocean as extending to three miles (or a marine league) from the beach seawards; but there will remain possibly the cases of bays and other points lying between headlands and other points of the mainland, the whole of which may be territorial, and subject to the ordinary municipal jurisdiction, to which the mainland owes obedience.

Beyond this we conceive that the matters to be considered are matters rather of fact than of law.

We have, &c., &c.,

Copy of a despatch from the secretary of state for the colonies in reply to a request from the governor that the copy of a draft bill for regulating the fisheries may be looked over, and any parts pointed out, such as probably might not be sanctioned by the crown.

DOWNING STREET, 3rd August, 1863.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch No. 34 of the 29th June, enclosing a printed copy of the proceedings of a committee appointed to enquire into the state of the fisheries of Newfoundland, together with a draft bill framed with a view to their proper regulation, and requesting that the provisions of this draft bill may be looked over, and any parts of it pointed out, such as probably might not be sanctioned by the Crown if it were passed.

2. I apprehend that it is not your expectation that I should express an opinion respecting the practical modes of conducting those fisheries, it being plain that the inhabitants of Newfoundland are or ought to be best capable of judging what regulations are calculated to increase the productiveness of their own seas, and with respect to imperial interests I do not think it desirable to anticipate that close inquiry to which any act passed upon this matter must be subjected in order to ascertain that it does not infringe upon the right guaranteed to foreigners or run counter to any principle of imperial policy.

3. The observations which suggest themselves to me, however, on the perusal of the draft bill are—

1st. That if any misconception exists in Newfoundland respecting the limits of the colonial jurisdiction, it would be desirable that it should be put at rest by embodying in the act a distinct settlement that the regulations contained in it are of no force except within three miles of the shore of the colony.

2nd. That no act can be allowed which prohibits expressly, or is calculated by a circuitous method to prevent, the sale of bait.

3rd. That all fishing acts shall expressly declare that their provisions do not extend or interfere with any existing treaties with any foreign nation in amity with Great Britain.

4th. That, in any part of the colonial waters, it would be highly unjust and inconvenient to impose upon British fishermen restrictions which could not, without violating existing treaties, be imposed upon foreigners using the same fisheries. On this point, however, I would refer you to my despatch, marked "confidential," of the 2nd of February.

I have, &c., &c.,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 10, 1856.

To the Collector of the Customs at ———, ——— :

Sir: I herewith transmit to you ——— printed copies of a circular letter addressed by this department to the collector of the customs at Boston on the 28th ultimo, concerning the fisheries on the coasts of the British North American Provinces, which circular you will be pleased to regard as having been addressed directly to yourself, and accordingly communicate copies thereof to the masters of such fishing vessels as belong to your port.

I am, &c., &c., &c.,

[Circular.]

Mr. Marcy to Mr. Peaslee.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 28, 1856.

Sir: It is understood that there are certain acts of the British North American Colonial legislatures, and also, perhaps, executive regulations, intended to prevent the wanton destruction of the fish which frequent the coasts of the colonies, and injuries to the fishing thereon.

It is deemed reasonable and desirable that both United States and British fishermen should pay a like respect to such laws and regulations, which are designed to preserve and increase the productiveness of the fisheries on these coasts. Such being the object of these laws and regulations, the observance of them is enjoined upon the citizens of the United States in like manner as they are observed by British subjects. By granting the mutual use of the inshore fisheries, neither party has yielded its rights to civil jurisdiction over a maritime league along its coast. Its laws are as obligatory upon the citizens or subjects of the other as upon its own. The laws of the British Provinces not in conflict with the provisions of the Reciprocity Treaty would be as binding upon citizens of the United States within that jurisdiction as upon British subjects. Should they be so framed or executed as to make any discrimination in favor of the British fisherman, or to impair the rights secured to American fishermen by that treaty, those injuriously affected by them will appeal to this government for redress. You will make this direction known to the master of such fishing vessels as belong to your port, in such manner as you may deem most advisable:

I am, &c.,

It is believed that the principal regulations referred to above are the following, from the Revised Statutes of New Brunswick, Vol. 1, Title 22, chapter 101:

"7. The wardens of any county shall, when necessary, make out and designate, in proper positions, 'gurry grounds,' putting up notices thereof, describing their limits and position, in the several school-houses and other most public places in the parishes where the gurry grounds are marked out, publishing the like notice in the Royal Gazette; and no person after such posting and publication shall cast overboard from any boat or vessel the offal of fish into the water at or near the said parish at any place except the said gurry grounds."

"12. Within the parishes of Grand Manan, Campo Bello, Pennfield, and St. George, in the county of Charlotte, no seine or net shall be set across the mouth of any haven, river, creek, or harbor, nor in such place extending more than one-third the distance across the same, or be within forty fathoms of each other; nor shall they be set within twenty fathoms of the shore at low-water mark."

"15. No herring shall be taken between the 15th day of July and the fifteenth of October in any year on the spawning-ground at the head of Grand Manan, to commence at the eastern part of Seal Cove, at a place known as Red Point, thence extending westerly along the coast and around the southern head of Bradford's Cove about five miles, and extending one mile from the shore. All nets or engines used for catching herring on the said ground within that period shall be seized and forfeited, and every person engaged in using the same shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished accordingly."

Governor Sir John H. Glover to Earl Carnarvon.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, 31st December, 1877.

MY LORD: I have the honor to enclose a minute of my executive council, giving their opinion as to the injurious results to the fisheries of Newfoundland from the barring for bait for exportation, as pointed out in the senior naval officer's report enclosed in your lordship's despatch No. 68.

2. At the same time, my ministers, in anticipation of legislative action upon this important subject, deem it advisable to request me to have it brought under your lordship's consideration before the next session, which annually meets near the end of January.

3. From the admission of the Americans to rights of fishery on this coast under the Washington Treaty, more difficulty will be experienced than heretofore in the carrying out of the local acts regulating the taking of herring; but with additional steam and it is hoped that more efficient protection will be afforded in those parts where breaches of the law will probably occur.

4. There is a strong feeling extant against the American fishermen, who this year with numerous vessels visited many of the fishing stations, before free from their intrusions, their chief object being to procure fresh bait and ice, which they did in large quantities, for their bankers, to the alleged injury of our inshore fishermen. This year there has been in several places a failure in the fishery, which to a large extent is attributed to this American interference.

5. The effect of the recent decision at Halifax, as reported, disallows this traffic under the treaty, and from the opinion prevailing my ministers surmise that more stringent legislation will be demanded effectually to check this traffic than at present exists, and that a large majority in the legislature on both sides will press for the adoption of such a policy.

6. Should such be insisted upon, it appeared probable to my ministers that it would embrace prohibition to colonial fisherman to supply or aid in supplying, or to export, fresh bait, which would in that respect apply equally to the French with the Americans, but the latter would have the advantage of taking for themselves if they pleased.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, 26th June, 1878.

Sir: I have the honor to enclose for your consideration a copy of an address from the house of assembly, accompanied by the report of a select committee of the house, and evidence taken on the subject of the traffic in bait and ice, and its effect on the fishery of the country.

2. I would observe that this address and report represent a very strong opinion prevailing generally throughout the colony on the matters in question, and it is hoped that Her Majesty's Government may find themselves able to comply with the wishes expressed in the address, and to enforce the provisions of the convention and act therein mentioned.

3. It was at first proposed in the legislature that a special act should be passed to prohibit the traffic, and the alternative of the present address was adopted at the suggestion of the government, who thought it the most expedient course of action.

I have, &c., &c.,

DOWNING STREET, 25th December, 1878.

Sir: I duly received your despatch No. 56 of the 25th June, in which you forwarded a report (with evidence) of a select committee of the house of assembly of Newfoundland, relating to the traffic in bait and ice, which is carried on in the colony with fishermen of the United States to an extent which is represented as having a very injurious effect upon the fishery.

2. I have considered the address of the house of assembly, founded on that report, respecting the opinion that this traffic should be prohibited, and urging that directions may be given for causing the provisions contained in the convention with the United States of America of 1818, and the imperial act 59, Geo. 3, cap. 38, to be put in operation, with the object of carrying such prohibition into effect.

3. This matter was previously brought to the notice of my predecessor in your despatch No. 104 of the 31st of October, 1877, to which he replied on the 7th of January of this year.

4. I thought it advisable on the receipt of your despatch, now under acknowledgment, to take the opinion, in the first instance, of the inspectors of salmon fisheries in this country, as to whether the reported deterioration of the bait fisheries might not be met by some general regulations for their prevention.

5. I enclose a copy of the report which I have received in reply.

6. It will be perceived that the general conclusion of the inspectors, who are gentlemen of large experience in such matters, is to the effect that the operations of man have a very slight effect upon the supply of herring, and that, with the experience of this country before them, they doubt the necessity of any legislation for the protection of herring; that they doubt the propriety of interfering under any circumstances with the capture of bait, as well as the possibility of making any regulation which would be effectual, applicable to the territorial waters of a single country, and that, reasoning from analogy, they would hesitate to advise the adoption of any regulations for the preservation of capelin or squid.

7. You will notice, in addition to these general conclusions, the observations of the inspectors as to the regulations which were established on the northwest coast of Scotland, which operated with considerable hardship to the fishermen, without there being apparently any increase in the number of fish, and which gradually fell into disuse and were subsequently repealed.

8. With this report before them, Her Majesty's Government can not but feel uncertain whether any failure in the bait fishery of Newfoundland would be remedied by the adoption of the measures proposed by the house of assembly, and whether the practice which is complained of, and which it is sought to prohibit, has been sufficiently proved to have diminished the actual quantity of bait visiting the coast; although the increased competition of the Americans may have made it less easy for the local fishermen to secure the bait they require for their own fishing.

9. But, apart from this view of the question, Her Majesty's Government deem the present moment inopportune to effect any such change in practice as that which it is desired should be established; they are giving their most careful consideration to the whole question of the fisheries, both as regards United States subjects and the subjects of France, and they feel that a satisfactory solution of the several important points at issue might be considerably hindered by action in the direction suggested by the assembly.

10. You will be so good as to communicate this despatch to your government.
I have, &c., &c.,

M. HICKS BEACH.

Inspector of salmon fisheries to colonial office.

HOME OFFICE, September 30, 1878.

SIR: We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th instant, enclosing, by direction of Secretary Sir Michael Hicks Beach, a copy of a despatch from the governor of Newfoundland, with an address from the house of assembly "relating to the deterioration of the bait fisheries of Newfoundland, and the measures proposed to be taken to remedy this evil."

Sir Michael Hicks Beach is so good as to ask us whether, without entering into a consideration of the course recommended by the house of assembly of Newfoundland, we could suggest any general regulations applicable to fishermen, of whatsoever nationality, for the preservation of the bait.

The term "bait," as it is used in the papers which have been sent to us, appears to comprise three distinct things—herring, caplin, and squid.

Herring appear to be used as bait for cod in the early part of the season, squid during the summer and autumn, and caplin during the other portions of the year.

The caplin (Mallotus villosus) is nearly allied to the smelt, but it is not met with in British waters. We have therefore no personal information respecting this fish. Squid are, we believe, occasionally used as bait in this country, but their use is only occasional, and we have no personal experience regarding them.

As, therefore, Sir M. Hicks Beach has asked us to furnish him with such suggestions as our experience may enable us to make in regard to bait, and as our experience does not extend either to caplin or to squid, we conceive that we shall be complying strictly with his wish by confining our observations to herring.

Herrings, usually immature or "spring" herrings, are largely used by line fishermen as bait both in England and Scotland.

During a portion of the year the line fishermen are mainly dependent on the herrings as bait.

A few years ago Parliament imposed a close season for herrings on the west coast of Scotland. The close season extended to herrings taken both for food and for bait; it is admitted to have occasioned considerable hardship to the fishermen; it does not appear to have been attended with any increase in the number of herring; it gradually fell into disuse, and so far as the northwest of Scotland is concerned it was repealed; so far as the southwest of Scotland is concerned it ceased to be observed.

A great many persons locally interested in the Scotch herring fisheries are desirous of re-enacting this close season, or for taking some other means for the increase of the herrings, but they are unanimous, or almost unanimous, in saying that this close season or these regulations must not apply to herrings taken for bait.

With the experience of previous legislation before them, they are satisfied that no restrictions whatever must be imposed upon the capture of herrings for bait.

We may say that similar conclusions were expressed to us during our inquiry into the crab and lobster fisheries of Great Britain. Many of the most experienced fishermen we found desired that some well-considered regulations should be made for the development of these fisheries. But nearly every fisherman considered that these regulations should not in any case apply to the crabs taken for bait.

Their argument seemed to us, we may add, perfectly sound.

Bait is of such importance to the fishermen, and in certain seasons and in certain places so difficult to be got, that we should in this country, at any rate, strongly dissent from any regulations which might interfere with its capture.

So far, then, as the mere question of bait is concerned, we doubt the propriety of any regulations interfering with its capture. But we also doubt the necessity, we doubt the possibility of any operations of man interfering with the stock of herrings in the sea.

The allegation that the stock of herrings is materially reduced by the operations of the net fishermen has been constantly made in various parts of the kingdom. But notwithstanding the constant increase of netting, the annual number of herrings taken by man has been continually and regularly increasing. Though the quantity of herrings taken off the Scotch coasts is now ten times greater than it was fifty years ago, there are no indications that this prodigious increase in their capture has made any impression on the stock of herrings in the sea.

It is true that there are some reasons for thinking that the increase of netting has prevented the herrings from entering some of the inland locks which used to be frequented by them; there is at any rate no doubt that herrings have deserted, or partially deserted, certain portions of the coast which were previously frequented by them.

But, in the first place, it is not absolutely clear that their desertion of such portions of the coast has been due to the operations of man; and in the second place, it is not clear that, if it be so due, any regulations which could easily be made would obviate the evil.

It is not clear that the desertion of certain portions of the coast by the herrings is due to the operations of man. (1) because it is a well known and ascertained fact that fish do desert certain places for a long series of years, whether they are netted or not, and (2) because it has also been ascertained that they have not been driven from other portions of the coast by unrestricted netting.

Even if the herring deserted certain portions of the coast in consequence of the excess of netting, it is not easy to see how any regulations which man could make would obviate the evil.

The regulations which man could make, or at any rate which any single nation could make, must necessarily apply to the territorial waters of that country; but herrings are just as easily taken ten miles from the shore, or even fifty miles, as well as within three miles of it.

The greater number of herrings are, in fact, taken more than ten miles from the land, and it is the almost universal opinion of fishermen that the operations of man have a greater effect in breaking up the shoals out at sea a long distance from land than close to the shore.

Regulations, therefore, applicable to the territorial waters would have the effect of driving the fishery farther from the shore. They would have no other effect whatever.

Writing, then, simply with the experience of this country before us, we doubt the necessity of any legislation for the preservation of herrings; we doubt the propriety of interfering under any circumstances with the capture of bait; and we doubt the possibility of making any regulations which would be effectual, applicable to the territorial waters only of a single country.

Reasoning only from analogy, we should also hesitate to adopt any regulations for the preservation of caplin or of squid; but as on these points we have no experience, we do not venture to pronounce a positive opinion on them.

Sir Michael Hicks Beach will observe that we have confined the preceding observations strictly to the point on which he has asked our opinion, viz, the possibility of making any regulations applicable to all fishermen of whatsoever nationality for the preservation of bait.

There are other points connected with these papers, such as the relative values of the cod and bait fisheries to the Newfoundland fishermen, or the difficulty of allowing the sale of a fish three miles from shore, the sale of which was illegal within three miles from the shore, on which we forbear from making any observations whatever.

We venture, in forwarding this reply, to transmit with it copies of our report (1) on the herring fisheries of Scotland, (2) on the crab and lobster fisheries of Great Britain, in which many of the arguments which we have summarized in this letter are stated more fully, and we have only to add that if there is any other point on which Sir Michael Hicks Beach desires information, and in which it may be in our power to assist him, it will afford us much pleasure to do so.

Depositions of James L. Anderson, James D. Norwood, Peter Tibboda, James Challoner, and Charles Dagle, taken in relation to the trouble between the Canadian and American fishermen at Aspee Bay, Cape Breton.

GLOUCESTER, Sept. 3, 1879.

I, James L. Anderson, of Gloucester, Mass., and master of the schooner Cadet, of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say that I left Gloucester on the 7th of June, 1874, bound for Aspee Bay, Capé Breton, to take squid. My vessel was fitted and furnished with a seine for the taking of squid, as I considered that under the provisions of the Treaty of Washington I had the right to take fish of any kind within three miles of the shores of the Dominion, and also to use seines or other apparatus for the purpose. I arrived at Aspee Bay on the 20th of June; the American schooner Bay State, Capt. Goodwin, arrived the same day. He was fitted with a seine for the purpose of taking squid. The inhabitants of Aspee Bay came off to my vessel, and seeing the seine on deck, asked me what I intended to do with it; I told them that it was for the purpose of taking squid; they then left my vessel and went on shore. The next morning I went on shore and was met by a fisherman named Gwin, who informed me that the fishermen of the place had consulted together and had made up their minds that no seine should be set in the bay, and if it was attempted they would cut it up and destroy it, and that they would serve me the same.

He gave as a reason for this that they believed the using of the seine would drive away the squid and deprive them of bait for their own fisheries, and ruin their business of jigging squid. I explained to them that squid had been seined in Chelabuco for several years with no more perceptible decrease of the squid than when they were caught by jigs; that the same amount of squid would be taken from the water by the jigs, as there are some two hundred men who fish for squid at that place. I found that it was useless to argue, as every time I went on shore the threats were repeated, and that they would be carried out.

I then attempted to compromise by offering to pay them for all the squid I might take in the seine, at the same rate as if they caught them with jigs, and divide the money among them equally. They said that if my seine was used in the bay that I would establish a precedent for selling there, and other vessels would not then be prevented, after one had been allowed to seine. Finding I could not use my seine, and knowing that if it was cut up I should not have it to use in other places, and be deprived of the means of getting my cargo, I felt obliged to give it up. When the boat came into the bay there was a large fleet of bankers, and if I could have used my seine, I could have supplied every vessel with bait and have also loaded my own vessel with squid to sell the vessels on the banks. For ten successive days the was swarming with squid, but not one would take the hook, and the people could not take any.

All of the vessels lying there were obliged to leave without obtaining any bait, and I left also, for Cheticamp; failing to find squid there, I returned to Aspee Bay on the 21st of July, and found squid in the bay that at that time would take the hook. I commenced buying of the fishermen, having over sixty boats with 180 men employed. I paid for this lot of squid $561.00 in cash, getting about two-thirds of the cargo. This cargo I carried to St. Pierre and sold the squid for 6½ francs per hundred to the Jersey fishermen. In a week's time I came back to Aspee Bay and found squid plenty in the bay, but they would not take the hook. I could have taken all the squid I wanted if I could have used my seine. I remained three days, and finding that I could not obtain any squid, as they would not bite, I left the bay, and I then started for Newfoundland, and in the dense fog the current set the vessel on the Little Mignelon, where she was lost. My loss or being deprived of the use of my seine on my first trip would be $5,000, as for this season I could have loaded my vessel in three days on the first trip and would have had them in St. Pierre's at least three weeks ahead of any other baiter, and as the squid failed at St. Pierre this season, I could have got $1.50 per hundred for them. The cargo I carried there three weeks later I got $1.25 per hundred for. I should have been at no expense in buying the squid, as my crew could have set the seine and handled the fish; on my second visit I paid the people 561 dollars for a partial cargo, and the third trip I could have seined my cargo, but was not allowed to and the squid not biting, I could not purchase from the people.

My third trip, by being so deprived, I suffered a loss of at least 2,000 dollars. The delay, the uncertainty, and the consequent waste of time, and the continued expense of my vessel and crew obliging me to cruise from port to port in search of fish, when I could have realized full cargoes every time I was there, with certain sales, will not be computed in this amount, but simply the cost of the squid to me at Aspee Bay if I could have seined, and the value of the squid at St. Pierre.

In this whole matter no fishery officer or officer of the law forbade my seining; the threats and all demonstrations came from the local fishermen acting independent of all law and combined together to act as a mob, violence enforced by numbers being their only authority. I told them time and again that under the Treaty of Washington I had a right to seine, as the government had paid 5½ millions of dollars for this right; they replied that they cared nothing for treaties or rights; they were going to take care of themselves; the money the government had got done them no good, but when they got cash for squid it did them some good.

The squid on those shores are about a third grown and are not mature enough for spawning; they are about 6 inches long, and they grow about two inches in a summer; they are the young squid, and every season they come on these coasts, always the young fish; by the use of the seine it makes the catch a certainty, while the hooking process cannot be depended upon.

On this trip my vessel was under a fishing license with a permit to touch and trade. I had a few boots and shoes and some cottons in case I had occasion to trade. On arriving at Aspee Bay I reported to the customs officer at Northwest Harbor, and entered my vessel; the most of my goods I carried to St. Pierre.

GLOUCESTER, Sept. 10, 1879.

I, James D. Norwood, master of the American schooner Messina, of Gloucester, do on oath depose and say that I left Gloucester for St. Ann's or Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, for a cargo of squid to sell for bait. I had been in these ports in previous years, and knew that the inhabitants would oppose the use of a seine in that bay, and consequently I went prepared to buy my squid.

I stopped at St. Ann's about a fortnight; got no squid, as they would not bite; then went to Aspee Bay and found that the squid would not take the hook, and that the people had opposed the use of any seine by Captain Anderson or any other person. I could have hired a seine and loaded my vessel if I had been allowed what I considered my rights under the Treaty of Washington, but finding the people in such a determined and threatening attitude I knew it would be useless to try to get my cargo there, and left for Newfoundland. I arrived at Torbay, where I bought 300,000 squid of the local fishermen, paying 900 dollars in cash for them.

The same hostility to Americans taking their own bait with seines exists at Newfoundland as at Cape Breton. The fishermen can make twice the amount of money taking squid for the American bankers and baiters than they can in their usual avocation of codfishing, and they will not be deprived of this lucrative trade if they can help it. It is cash to them, and the women and boys join with the local fishermen in the light work of taking squid with jigs. The whole community shares in the squid fishery and in the money they receive for them.

In my judgment full one hundred thousand dollars is paid annually on these shores for bait alone, and this could all be saved if the Americans could use their seines to take bait; and the bait if not purchased by the American fleet would be useless and valueless to the people.

I have been informed that there is a local law against seining squid at Newfoundland. The present mode of taking squid by jigs is a slow process, costing the Americans a great loss of time, when if the seine could be used it would save two-thirds the time it now takes to get bait. Each banker now has to spend at least 30 days out of each trip in going around from place to place for bait, as when the squid will not take the hook none can be obtained, and the seine makes the catch a certainty.

GLOUCESTER, Sept. 10, 1879.

I, Peter Thibodau, master of the American schooner Lizzie J. Jones, of Gloucester, do, on oath, depose and say, that I left Gloucester in the said vessel on the 3rd of June, 1879, for Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, on a trip for squid. I was not fitted with a seine, but was prepared to buy for this season; that the previous year I was at Aspee Bay with Capt. Dagle, and knew that the fishermen there would not, under any circumstances, permit a seine to be used there.

I was at Aspee Bay when Capt. Anderson, of the schooner Cadet, tried to use his seine, and Capt. Anderson asked me to assist him in using his seine for seining the squid, but the local fishermen, to a man, united in threatening destruction to the seine or any one who attempted to use it in that bay.

I am perfectly sure that the seine would have been destroyed, as the people warned me from having anything to do with it, and were constantly on the watch to see if Anderson attempted to use it, and were prepared to attack him on the first demonstration on his part. I did not get but 3,000 squid at Aspee Bay. My vessel would take, as a cargo, 500,000.

All of the vessels could have been loaded with squid, could the seine have been used; the bay was swarming with them.

I told the people that Americans had the right to take these squid with seines, and they said they cared nothing for that; they should and would protect themselves; if they allowed seining it would ruin their business of jigging squid, and then they thought the seining would drive away the squid from the bay.

At this place the local fishermen have no money, except what they get from the Americans for squid, and they say if this trade is taken from them they will have no money to pay their taxes, &c.

They usually receive from the local traders goods and groceries for the fish they take during the season, while the Americans pay cash for the squid and bait they buy.

I was obliged to leave Aspee Bay, as I could not obtain any squid, as they would not bite.

I then went to Newfoundland to Conception and Trinity Bays, where I bought no squid of the local fishermen.

The feeling is the same at Newfoundland as at Aspee Bay against seining.

No American will be allowed to use a seine to take squid in any of the bays or coves of Newfoundland under penalty of destruction of the seine. I have heard the people say this over and over again, and know that it is impossible to obtain what we consider our rights in this respect under the Treaty of Washington.

James Challoner, of White Point, Aspee Bay, being duly sworn, do depose and say: That about July 20th, 1879, Captain Anderson, of the schooner Cadet, of Gloucester, came to see me and said that his vessel the previous season had done very well with squid which they had purchased here and had sold at St. Pierre Miquelon; and that there were ten vessels this year engaged in the same business, and eight of them did come to this bay for the purpose of getting squid and carrying them to the banks for sale to the bankers, and remained here until about the 16th of July. Captain Anderson and Captain Goodwin, of the Bay State, had a seine for the purpose of seining squid in the bay and did not attempt to use it because the fishermen would not allow them to do so; they threatened to cut the seine if they placed it in the water; there never has been but one seine cast in this bay, and had Captain Anderson thrown his seine he would have swept the whole school of squid in the cove and the fishermen would have been deprived of all their bait for the season. Last season the Americans purchased their squid, giving 20 cents per hundred, and this, when the squid are plenty, is a source of profit and a large part of the business of the inhabitants. Captain Anderson could have purchased all he wished, but if the fishermen had allowed him to seine they would have lost the money paid for the squid by the cod-fishermen from the banks. No opposition was made to Captain Anderson's catching squid by hook and line.

American and French bankers come here every summer for bait, and if Captain Anderson had taken all the squid by his seine the bankers would have been forced to purchase of him instead of the native fishermen, of whom there are about one hundred and fifty. I am not aware of any colonial law against securing squid. The only reason the inhabitants threatened Captain Anderson was that he would ruin their squid catch. The only fishery officer lives at Fragnish, down the coast. Some Newfoundlanders living near here attempted, a little while ago, to use seines for taking caplin, but the natives would not permit them to do so. I have been a resident here for thirty years and engaged in the business of purchasing fish.

J. H. SEARS,

Ensign U. S. Navy, U. S. S. Kearsarge.

Charles Dagle, captain of the schooner Joseph Story, being duly sworn, doth depose and say that he was at Aspee Bay, Cape Breton, in the latter part of June, 1879, for the purpose of purchasing squid to carry to St. Pierre for bait for the French bankers; that while he was there Captain Anderson, of the schooner Cadet, of Gloucester, Massachusetts, who came for the purpose of catching squid at that place, and squid not being obtained in sufficient numbers by jigging, attempted to use a squid seine for the purpose of catching the squid which schooled in great numbers, but would not bite at the jig. The inhabitants of Aspee Bay threatened that if he set his seine they would cut it and there would be trouble, as selling squid was their only way of making money during the summer season, and if a seine was used in the cove all the squid would be taken or driven away, and they would lose all their summer's employment, as squid was the only bait they could obtain for catching cod. They were willing that Captain Anderson should jig his squid or purchase of them. Captain Anderson left the bay without a trip of squid, while if he had used his seine he would probably have filled his vessel.

That I have just come back from Torbay, Newfoundland, near St. John, with ninety-four thousand squid, which were all purchased of the inhabitants there. That there is a law in force in Newfoundland against seining squid, which forces us to purchase of the natives, as we have no time to take them by the slow process of jigging.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN FISHERMEN IN BRITISH NORTH

MESSAGE

FROM THE

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES,

TRANSMITTING

A letter from the Secretary of State, accompanied by the correspondence relating to the rights of American fishermen in British North American waters.

DECEMBER 8, 1886.—Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, which is accompanied by the correspondence in relation to the rights of American fishermen in the British North American waters, and commend to your favorable consideration the suggestion that a commission be authorized by law to take perpetuating proofs of the losses sustained during the past year by American fishermen, owing to their unfriendly and unwarranted treatment by the local authorities of the maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada.

I may have occasion hereafter to make further recommendations during the present session for such remedial legislation as may become necessary for the protection of the rights of our citizens engaged in the open-sea fisheries of the North Atlantic waters.

It will disclose the action of this Department, and of our minister to Great Britain, in relation to the disputed construction of the convention of 1818, and what has been done to procure such an interpretation of its provisions as will be acceptable to both parties to that instrument, and consistent with their mutual interest and honor.

From time to time since the conclusion of the treaty of 1813, differences have arisen between the two Governments as to the extent of the renunciation by the United States of their former fishing rights in common in the littoral waters of British North America, and the true definition of the rights and privileges retained by, and expressly guaranteed to, the United States in the first article of that convention.

The history of this question during the period from 1818 to the present time has been one of unsuccessful attempts to adjust the respective claims, and occasionally the difficulties have been bridged over by temporary arrangements, notably by the treaty of Washington of June 5, 1854, and by the treaty of Washington of May 8, 1871, the fishery articles of the latter having been abrogated by the United States on June 30, 1885.

It is deeply to be regretted that the efforts of this Department, as shown by the correspondence now submitted, to arrive at such an agreement as would permit instructions of like tenor to be issued by the Governments of Great Britain and the United States, to guide the citizens of the respective nationalities in the unmolested exercise of their rights of fishing in the waters in question, and defining the limits of lawful action therein, have not as yet reached a final and satisfactory result.

Although propositions are now pending for consideration, which it is hoped may prove the basis of a just and permanent settlement, yet as supplementary to the published history of this long-standing subject, and as illustrating the obvious necessity in the interest of amity and good neighborhood of having a clear and well-defined understanding of the relative rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens, it is considered expedient that Congress should have full knowledge of the action of the Executive in the premises to assist them in their deliberations upon this important subject.

It will be observed in the course of this correspondence that notification has not failed to be duly given to the Government of Great Britain, that compensation is expected for the loss and damage caused to American fishermen by the unwarrantable action of the local authorities of the Dominion of Canada, not merely by the summary seizure of their vessels and the exaction of heavy fines in advance of hearing or judgment, but for the curtailment of privileges to which they were justly entitled under commercial regulations as well as treaty stipulations, and the consequent interference with their legitimate voyages, whereby the natural profits of their industry were seriously diminished, and in many cases wholly destroyed.

It would seem proper that steps in perpetuum rei memoriam should be taken by Congress to allow proofs to be made and placed upon record of these losses and injuries to our citizens, to enable them to be properly presented to Her Majesty's Government for settlement; and that for this purpose a commission should be authorized by Congress to take the necessary proofs of the respective claimants.

Respectfully submitted.

IV.—EXTENSION OF CERTAIN FISHING RIGHTS UNDER THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

I.—CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE AND THE BRITISH LEGATION IN WASHINGTON.

No. 1.

Sir L. West to Mr. Bayard.

WASHINGTON, March 19, 1886. [Received March 20.]

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the Earl of Rosebery has requested me to ascertain whether it is intended to give notice to the United States fishermen that they are now precluded from fishing in British North American territorial waters, as Her Majesty's Government are considering the expediency of issuing a reciprocal notice with regard to British fishermen in American waters.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, March 23, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 19th instant, whereby you inform me that you have been requested by the Earl of Rosebery to ascertain "whether it is intended to give notice to the United States fishermen that they are now precluded from fishing in British North American territorial waters," and to inform you, in reply, that as full and formal public notification in the premises has already been given by the President's proclamation of 31st January, 1885, it is not now deemed necessary to repeat it.

The temporary arrangement made between us on the 22d of June, 1885, whereby certain fishing operations on the respective coasts were not to be interfered with during the fishing season of 1885, notwithstanding the abrogation of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, came to an end under its own expressed limitation on the 31st of December last, and the fisheries question is now understood to rest on existing treaties, precisely as though no fishery articles had been incorporated in the treaty of Washington.

BRITISH LEGATION,
Washington, March 24, 1886. [Received March 25.]

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 23d instant, in reply to mine of the 19th, informing me that, as full and formal public notification in the premises has already been given by the President's proclamation of the 31st January, 1885, it has not been found necessary to give to United States fishermen any further notification that they are now precluded from fishing in British North American territorial waters. I have duly informed Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Dominion of this decision.

I have, &c.,

No. 4.

Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 10, 1886.

SIR: On the 6th instant I received from the consul-general of the United States at Halifax a statement of the seizure of an American schooner, the Joseph Story, of Gloucester, Mass., by the authorities at Baddeck, Cape Breton, and her discharge after a detention of twenty-four hours.

On Saturday, the 8th instant, I received a telegram from the same official announcing the seizure of the American schooner David J. Adams, of Gloucester, Mass., in the Annapolis Basin, Nova Scotia, and that the vessel had been placed in the custody of an officer of the Canadian steamer Lansdowne and sent to St. John, New Brunswick, for trial.

As both of these seizures took place in closely landlocked harbors, no invasion of the territorial waters of the British Provinces, with the view of fishing there, could well be imagined; and yet the arrests appear to have been based upon the act or intent of fishing within waters as to which, under the provision of the treaty of 1818 between Great Britain and the United States of America, the liberty of the inhabitants of the United States to fish has been renounced.

It would be superfluous for me to dwell upon the desire which, I am sure, controls those respectively charged with the administration of the Governments of Great Britain and of the United States to prevent occurrences tending to create exasperation, or unneighborly feeling, or collision between the inhabitants of the two countries; but, animated with this sentiment, the time seems opportune for me to submit some views for your consideration, which I confidently hope will lead to such administration of the laws regulating the commercial interests and the mercantile marine of the two countries as may promote good feeling and mutual advantage, and prevent hostility to commerce under the guise of protection to inshore fisheries.

The treaty of 1818 is between two nations, the United States of America and Great Britain, who, as the contracting parties, can alone apply authoritative interpretation thereto, or enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation.

The discussion prior to the conclusion of the treaty of Washington in 1871 was productive of a substantial agreement between the two countries as to the existence and limit of the three marine miles within the line of which, upon the regions defined in the treaty of 1818, it should not be lawful for American fishermen to take, dry, or cure fish. There is no hesitancy upon the part of the Government of the United States to proclaim such inhibition and warn their citizens against the infraction of the treaty in that regard, so that such inshore fishing cannot lawfully be enjoyed by an American vessel being within three marine miles of the land.

But since the date of the treaty of 1818, a series of laws and regulations importantly affecting the trade between the North American Provinces of Great Britain and the United States have been, respectively, adopted by the two countries, and have led to amicable and mutually beneficial relations between their respective inhabitants.

This independent and yet concurrent action by the two Governments has effected a gradual extension, from time to time, of the provisions of Article I of the convention of July 3, 1815, providing for reciprocal liberty of commerce between the United States and the territories of Great Britain in Europe, so as gradually to include the colonial possessions of Great Britain in North America and the West Indies within the results of that treaty.

President Jackson's proclamation of October 5, 1830, created a reciprocal commercial intercourse, on terms of perfect equality of flag, between this country and the British American dependencies, by repealing the navigation acts of April 18, 1818, May 15, 1820, and March 1, 1823, and admitting British vessels and their cargoes "to an entry in the ports of the United States from the islands, provinces, and colonies of Great Britain on or near the American continent, and north or east of the United States." These commercial privileges have since received a large extension in the interests of propinquity, and in some cases favors have been granted by the United States without equivalent concession. Of the latter class is the exemption granted by the shipping act of June 26, 1884, amounting to one-half of the regular tonnage-dues on all vessels from the British North American and West Indian possessions entering ports of the United States. Of the reciprocal class are the arrangements for transit of goods, and the remission, by proclamation, as to certain British ports and places of the remainder of the tonnage-tax, on evidence of equal treatment being shown to our vessels.

On the other side, British and colonial legislation, as notably in the case of the imperial shipping and navigation act of June 26, 1849, has contributed its share toward building up an intimate intercourse and beneficial traffic between the two countries founded on mutual interest and convenience.

These arrangements, so far as the United States are concerned, depend upon municipal statute and upon the discretionary powers of the Executive thereunder.

The seizure of the vessels I have mentioned, and certain published "warnings" purporting to have been issued by the colonial authorities, would appear to have been made under a supposed delegation of jurisdiction by the Imperial Government of Great Britain, and to be intended to include authority to interpret and enforce the provisions of the treaty of 1818, to which, as I have remarked, the United States and Great Britain are the contracting parties, who can alone deal responsibly with questions arising thereunder.

The effect of this colonial legislation and Executive interpretation, if executed according to the letter, would be not only to expand the restrictions and renunciations of the treaty of 1818, which related solely to inshore fishery within the three-mile limit, so as to affect the deep-sea fisheries, the right to which remained unquestioned and unimpaired for the enjoyment of the citizens of the United States, but further to diminish and practically to destroy the privileges expressly secured to American fishing vessels to visit those inshore waters for the objects of shelter, repair of damages, and purchasing wood, and obtaining water.

Since 1818, certain important changes have taken place in fishing in the regions in question, which have materially modified the conditions under which the business of inshore fishing is conducted and which must have great weight in any present administration of the treaty.

Drying and curing fish, for which a use of the adjacent shores was at one time requisite, is now no longer followed, and modern invention of processes of artificial freezing, and the employment of vessels of a larger size, permit the catch and direct transportation of fish to the markets of the United States without recourse to the shores contiguous to the fishing grounds.

The mode of taking fish inshore has also been wholly changed, and from the highest authority on such subjects I learn that bait is no longer needed for such fishing, that purse-seines have been substituted for the other methods of taking mackerel, and that by their employment these fish are now readily caught in deeper waters entirely exterior to the three-mile line.

As it is admitted that the deep-sea fishing was not under consideration in the negotiation of the treaty of 1818, nor was affected thereby, and as the use of bait for inshore fishing has passed wholly into disuse, the reasons which may have formerly existed for refusing to permit American fishermen to catch or procure bait within the line of a marine league from the shore lest they should also use it in the same inhibited waters for the purpose of catching other fish, no longer exist.

For it will, I believe, be conceded as a fact that bait is no longer needed to catch herring or mackerel, which are the objects of inshore fishing, but is used, and only used, in deep-sea fishing, and, therefore, to prevent the purchase of bait or any other supply needed in deep-sea fishing, under color of executing the provisions of the treaty of 1818, would be to expand that convention to objects wholly beyond its purview, scope, and intent, and give to it an effect never contemplated by either party, and accompanied by results unjust and injurious to the citizens of the United States.

As, therefore, there is no longer any inducement for American fishermen to "dry and cure" fish on the interdicted coasts of the Canadian Provinces, and as bait is no longer used or needed by them [for the prosecution of inshore fishing] in order to "take" fish in the inshore waters to which the treaty of 1818 alone relate, I ask you to consider the results of excluding American vessels, duly possessed of permits from their own Government to touch and trade at Canadian ports as well as to engage in deep sea-fishing, from exercising freely the same customary and reasonable rights and privileges of trade in the ports of the British colonies as are freely allowed to British vessels in all the ports of the United States under the laws and regulations to which I have adverted.

Among these customary rights and privileges may be enumerated the purchase of ship-supplies of every nature, making repairs, the shipment of crews in whole or part, and the purchase of ice and bait for use in deep-sea fishing.

Concurrently, these usual rational and convenient privileges are freely extended to and are fully enjoyed by the Canadian merchant marine of all occupations, including fishermen in the ports of the United States.

The question therefore arises whether such a construction is admissible as would convert the treaty of 1818 from being an instrumentality for the protection of the inshore fisheries along the described parts of the British American coast into a pretext or means of obstructing the business of deep-sea fishing by citizens of the United States, and of interrupting and destroying the commercial intercourse that since the treaty of 1818, and independent of any treaty whatever, has grown up and now exists under the concurrent and friendly laws and mercantile regulations of the respective countries.

I may recall to your attention the fact that a proposition to exclude the vessels of the United States engaged in fishing from carrying also merchandise was made by the British negotiators of the treaty of 1818, but being resisted by the American negotiators was abandoned. This fact would seem clearly to indicate that the business of fishing did not then, and does not now, disqualify a vessel from also trading in the regular ports of entry.

I have been led to offer these considerations by the recent seizures of American vessels to which I have adverted and by indications of a local spirit of interpretation in the Provinces, affecting friendly intercourse, which is, I firmly believe, not warranted by the terms of the stipulations on which it professes to rest. It is not my purpose to state the facts of the cases, nor have I any desire to shield any vessel from the consequences of violation of international law. The views I advance may prove not to be applicable in every one of those particular cases, and I should be glad if no case whatever were to arise calling in question the good understanding of the two countries in this regard in order to be free from the grave apprehensions which otherwise I am unable to dismiss.

It would be most unfortunate, and, I cannot refrain from saying, most unworthy, if the two nations who contracted the treaty of 1818 should permit any questions of mutual right and duty under that convention to become obscured by partisan advocacy or distorted by the heat of local interests. It cannot but be the common aim to conduct all discussion in this regard with dignity and in a self-respecting spirit, that will show itself intent upon securing equal justice rather than unequal advantage. Comity, courtesy, and justice cannot, I am sure, fail to be the ruling motives and objects of discussion.

I shall be most happy to come to a distinct and friendly understanding with you, as the representative of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, which will result in such a definition of the rights of American fishing-vessels under the treaty of 1818 as shall effectually prevent any encroachment by them upon the territorial waters of the British Provinces for the purpose of fishing within those waters, or trespassing in any way upon the littoral or marine rights of the inhabitants, and, at the same time, prevent that convention from being improperly expanded into an instrument of discord by affecting interests and accomplishing results wholly outside of and contrary to its object and intent, by allowing it to become an agency to interfere with and perhaps destroy those reciprocal commercial privileges and facilities between neighboring communities which contribute so importantly to their peace and happiness. It is obviously essential that the administration of the laws regulating the Canadian inshore fishing should not be conducted in a punitive and hostile spirit, which can only tend to induce acts of a retaliatory nature.

Everything will be done by the United States to cause their citizens engaged in fishing to conform to the obligations of the treaty, and prevent an infraction of the fishing laws of the British Provinces; but it is equally necessary that ordinary commercial intercourse should not be interrupted by harsh measures and unfriendly administration.

I have the honor, therefore, to invite a frank expression of your views upon the subject, believing that, should any differences of opinion or disagreement as to facts exist, they will be found to be so minimized that an accord can be established for the full protection of the inshore fishing of the British Provinces, without obstructing the open-sea fishing operations of the citizens of the United States or disturbing the trade regulations now subsisting between the countries.

Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,

Washington, May 20, 1886.

SIR: Although without reply to the note I had the honor to address to you on the 10th instant, in relation to the Canadian fisheries and the interpretation of the treaty of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain as to the rights and duties of the American citizens engaged in maritime trade and intercourse with the Provinces of British North America, in view of the unrestrained, and, as it appears to me, unwarranted, irregular, and severe action of Canadian officials toward American vessels in those waters, yet I feel it to be my duty to bring impressively to your attention information more recently received by me from the United States consul-general at Halifax, Nova Scotia, in relation to the seizure and continued detention of the American schooner David J. Adams, already referred to in my previous note, and the apparent disposition of the local officials to use the most extreme and technical reasons for interference with vessels not engaged in or intended for inshore fishing on that coast.

The report received by me yesterday evening alleges such action in relation to the vessel mentioned as renders it difficult to imagine it to be that orderly proceeding and "due process of law" so well known and customarily exercised in Great Britain and the United States, and which dignifies the two Governments, and gives to private rights of property and the liberty of the individual their essential safeguards.

By the information thus derived it would appear that after four several and distinct visitations by boats' crews from the Lansdowne, in Annapolis Basin, Nova Scotia, the David J. Adams was summarily taken into custody by the Canadian steamer Lansdowne and carried out of the Province of Nova Scotia, across the Bay of Fundy, and into the port of St. John, New Brunswick, and without explanation or hearing, on the following Monday, May 10, taken back again by an armed crew to Digby, in Nova Scotia. That in Digby the paper alleged to be the legal precept for the capture and detention of the vessel was mailed to her mast in such manner as to prevent its contents being read, and the request of the captain of the David J. Adams and of the United States consul-general to be allowed to detach the writ from the mast for the purpose of learning its contents was positively refused by the provincial official in charge. Nor was the United States consul-general able to learn from the commander of the Lansdowne the nature of the complaint against the vessel, and his respectful application to that effect was fruitless.

In so extraordinary, confused, and irresponsible a condition of affairs, it is not possible to ascertain with that accuracy which is needful in matters of such grave importance the precise grounds for this harsh and peremptory arrest and detention of a vessel the property of citizens of a nation with whom relations of peace and amity were supposed to exist.

From the best information, however, which the United States consul-general was enabled to obtain after application to the prosecuting officials, he reports that the David J. Adams was seized and is now held (1) for alleged violation of the treaty of 1818; (2) for alleged violation of the act 59 Geo. III; (3) for alleged violation of the colonial act of Nova Scotia of 1868; and (4) for alleged violation of the act of 1870 and also that of 1883, both Canadian statutes.

Of these allegations there is but one which at present I press upon your immediate consideration, and that is the alleged infraction of the treaty of 1818.

I beg to recall to your attention the correspondence and action of those respectively charged with the administration and government of Great Britain and the United States in the year 1870, when the same international questions were under consideration and the statute of law was not essentially different from what it is at present.

This correspondence discloses the intention of the Canadian authorities of that day to prevent encroachment upon their inshore fishing grounds, and their preparations in the way of a marine police force, very much as we now witness. The statutes of Great Britain and of her Canadian Provinces, which are now supposed to be invoked as authority for the action against the schooner David J. Adams, were then reported as the basis of their proceedings.

In his note of May 26, 1870, Mr. (afterwards Sir Edward) Thornton, the British minister at this capital, conveyed to Mr. Fish, then Secretary of State, copies of the orders of the royal Admiralty to Vice-Admiral Wellesley, in command of the naval forces "employed in maintaining order at the fisheries in the neighborhood of the coasts of Canada."

All of these orders directed the protection of Canadian fishermen and cordial co-operation and concert with the United States force sent on the same service with respect to American fishermen in those waters. Great caution in the arrest of American vessels charged with violation of the Canadian fishing laws was scrupulously enjoined upon the British authorities, and the extreme importance of the commanding officers of ships selected to protect the fisheries exercising the utmost discretion in paying especial attention to Lord Granville's observation, that no vessel should be seized unless it were evident, and could be clearly proved, that the offense of fishing had been committed, and the vessel captured within three miles of land.

This caution was still more explicitly announced when Mr. Thornton, on the 11th of June, 1870, wrote to Mr. Fish:

You are, however, quite right in not doubting that Admiral Wellesley, on the receipt of the later instructions addressed to him on the 5th ultimo, will have modified the directions to the officers under his command so that they may be in conformity with the views of the Admiralty. In confirmation of this I have since received a letter from Vice-Admiral Wellesley dated the 30th ultimo, informing me that he had received instructions to the effect that officers of Her Majesty's ships employed in the protection of the fisheries should not seize any vessel unless it were evident, and could be clearly proved, that the offense of fishing had been committed and the vessel itself captured within three miles of land.

This understanding between the two Governments wisely and efficiently guarded against the manifest danger of intrusting the execution of powers so important and involving so high and delicate a discretion to any but wise and responsible officials, whose prudence and care should be commensurate with the magnitude and national importance of the interests involved. And I should fail in my duty if I did not endeavor to impress you with my sense of the absolute and instant necessity that now exists for a restriction of the seizure of American vessels charged with violations of the treaty of 1818 to the conditions announced by Sir Edward Thornton to this Government in June, 1870.

The charges of violating the local laws and commercial regulations of the ports of the British Provinces (to which I am desirous that due and full observance should be paid by citizens of the United States), I do not consider in this note, and I will only take this occasion to ask you to give me full information of the official action of the Canadian authorities in this regard, and what laws and regulations having the force of law, in relation to the protection of their inshore fisheries and preventing encroachments thereon, are now held by them to be in force.

But I trust you will join with me in realizing the urgent and essential importance of restricting all arrests of American fishing vessels for supposed or alleged violations of the convention of 1818 within the limitations and conditions laid down by the authorities of Great Britain in 1870, to wit: That no vessel shall be seized unless it is evident and can be clearly proved that the offense of fishing has been committed and the vessel itself captured within three miles of land.

In regard to the necessity for the instant imposition of such restrictions upon the arrest of vessels, you will, I believe, agree with me, and I will therefore ask you to procure such steps to be taken as shall cause such orders to be forthwith put in force under the authority of Her Majesty's Government.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 22, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR LIONEL: I have telegraphed to-day to Mr. Phelps, urging the advantage and need of my coming to some immediate understanding with you expressive of the views of the two parties to the treaty.

My conviction strengthens as to the importance of having a stop put at once to vexatious interpretations and action by local authorities, which can only hinder an amicable accord, and I have asked that these seizures be suspended without prejudice to the legal results pending an authoritative treatment of the main question.

It surely cannot be the purpose of the provincial authorities to embarrass the two Governments, by whom alone the issues are cognizable. A frank and friendly spirit has been exhibited by both Governments in abstaining from any demonstration of naval force in the provincial waters, and it is desirable that this should be continued, as it will add to the moral impressiveness of any settlement we may arrive at.

Very faithfully yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 29, 1886.

SIR: I have just received an official imprint of House of Commons bill No. 136, now pending in the Canadian Parliament, entitled "An act further to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," and am informed that it has passed the house and is now pending in the senate.

This bill proposes the forcible search, seizure, and forfeiture of any foreign vessel within any harbor in Canada, or hovering within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, where such vessel has entered such waters for any purpose not permitted by the laws of nations, or by treaty or convention, or by any law of the United Kingdom or of Canada now in force.

to enforce according to their own construction the provisions of any convention between the United States and Great Britain, and, by the interpolation of language not found in any such treaty, and, by interpretation not claimed or conceded by either party to such treaty, to invade and destroy the commercial rights and privileges of citizens of the United States under and by virtue of treaty stipulation with Great Britain and statutes in that behalf made and provided.

I have also been furnished with a copy of circular No. 371, purporting to be from the customs department at Ottawa, dated May 7, 1886, and to be signed by J. Johnson, commissioner of customs, assuming to execute the provisions of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded October 20, 1818, and printed copies of a warning, purporting to be issued by George E. Foster, minister of marine and fisheries, dated at Ottawa, March 5, 1886, of a similar tenor, although capable of unequal results in its execution.

Such proceedings I conceive to be flagrantly violative of the reciprocal commercial privileges to which citizens of the United States are lawfully entitled under statutes of Great Britain and the well-defined and publicly proclaimed authority of both countries, besides being in respect of the existing conventions between the two countries an assumption of jurisdiction entirely unwarranted and which is wholly denied by the United States.

In the interest of the maintenance of peaceful and friendly relations, I give you my earliest information on this subject, adding that I have telegraphed Mr. Phelps, our minister at London, to make earnest protest to Her Majesty's Government against such arbitrary, unlawful, unwarranted and unfriendly action on the part of the Canadian Government and its officials, and have instructed Mr. Phelps to give notice that the Government of Great Britain will be held liable for all losses and injuries to citizens of the United States and their property caused by the unauthorized and unfriendly action of the Canadian officials to which I have referred.

WASHINGTON, June 2, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR LIONEL: A telegram from Eastport, in Maine, to the member of Congress from that district, announces a threat by Dominion collectors of customs to seize American boats if they buy herring for canning in the Dominion weirs.

This additional threatened inhibition of trade relates to the sardine industry, which consists in canning in the United States very small and young herring, which, I am informed, are caught very closely inshore in weirs, in Canadian waters, by the inhabitants and sold to citizens of the United States.

The occupation is carried on solely by Canadian fishermen, along the coasts of their own country, so that the interference suggested is with their freedom of contract to dispose of property lawfully the result of their own labors, because the sale is to citizens of the United States. It is important that the facts should be made known plainly.

Yours very sincerely,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 7, 1886.

SIR: I regret exceedingly to communicate that report is to-day made to me, accompanied by affidavit, of the refusal of the collector of customs at the port of St. Andrews, New Brunswick, to allow the master of the American schooner Annie M. Jordan, of Gloucester, Mass., to enter the said vessel at that port, although properly documented as a fishing vessel with permission to touch and trade at any foreign port or place during her voyage.

The object of such entry was explained by the master to be the purchase and exportation of "certain merchandise" (possibly fresh fish for food, or bait for deep-sea fishing).

The vessel was threatened with seizure by the Canadian authorities, and her owners allege that they have sustained damage from this refusal of commercial rights.

I earnestly protest against this unwarranted withholding of lawful commercial privileges from an American vessel and her owners, and for the loss and damage consequent thereon the Government of Great Britain will be held liable.

*Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 14, 1886.

SIR: The consul-general of the United States at Halifax communicated to me the information derived by him from the collector of customs at that port to the effect that American fishing vessels will not be permitted to land fish at that port of entry for transportation in bond across the province.

I have also to inform you that the masters of the four American fishing vessels of Gloucester, Mass., Martha A. Bradley, Rattler, Eliza Boynton, and Pioneer, have severally reported to the consul-general at Halifax that the subcollector of customs at Canso had warned them to keep outside an imaginary line drawn from a point three miles outside Canso Head to a point three miles outside St. Esprit, on the Cape Breton coast, a distance of 40 miles. This line for nearly its entire continuance is distant 12 to 25 miles from the coast.

The same masters also report that they were warned against going inside an imaginary line drawn from a point three miles outside North Cape, on Prince Edward Island, to a point three miles outside of East Point, on the same island, a distance of over 100 miles, and that this last-named line was for nearly that entire distance about 30 miles from the shore.

The same authority informed the masters of the vessels referred to that they would not be permitted to enter Bay Chaleur.

Such warnings are, as you must be well aware, wholly unwarranted pretensions of extraterritorial authority and usurpations of jurisdiction by the provincial officials.

It becomes my duty, in bringing this information to your notice, to request that if any such orders for interference with the unquestionable rights of the American fishermen to pursue their business without molestation at any point not within three marine miles of the shores, and within the defined limits as to which renunciation of the liberty to fish was expressed in the treaty of 1818; may have been issued, the same may at once be revoked as violative of the rights of citizens of the United States under convention with Great Britain.

I will ask you to bring this subject to the immediate attention of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, to the end that proper remedial orders may be forthwith issued.

It seems most unfortunate and regrettable that questions which have been long since settled between the United States and Great Britain should now be sought to be revived.

This act received the royal allowance on the 3d of September, 1844, and an order was on the same day made by Her Majesty in council declaring that its clauses and provisions should be the rules, regulations, and restrictions respecting the fisheries on the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of the island of Prince Edward; and notification of said royal assent and of the said order was published in the Royal Gazette, a newspaper of this island, on the 8th day of October, 1844.

31 VICTORIA, CHAP. 61.

AN ACT respecting fishing by foreign vessels. Assented to 22d May, 1868.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the senate and house of commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The governor may, from time to time, grant to any foreign ship, vessel, or boat, or to any ship, vessel, or boat not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom, or of Canada, at such rate, and for such period not exceeding one year, as he may deem expedient, a license to fish for or take, dry or cure any fish of any kind whatever, in British waters, within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors whatever, of Canada, not included within the limits specified and described in the first article of the convention between his late Majesty King George the Third and the United States of America, made and signed at London on the 20th day of October, 1818.

2. Any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy serving on board of any vessel of Her Majesty's navy cruising and being in the waters of Canada for purpose of affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects engaged in the fisheries, or any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, fishery officer, or stipendiary magistrate on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the Government of Canada and employed in the service of protecting the fisheries, or any officer of the customs of Canada, sheriff, magistrate, or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel, or boat within any harbor in Canada or hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, and stay on board so long as she may remain within such place or distance.

3. If such ship, vessel, or boat be bound elsewhere, and shall continue within such harbor or so hovering for 24 hours after the master shall have been required to depart, any one of such officers or persons as are above mentioned may bring such ship, vessel, or boat into port and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command shall not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall forfeit $400; and if such ship, vessel, or boat be foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and have been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada, not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the period named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel, or boat under the first section of this act, such ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited.

4. All goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo liable to forfeiture under this act may be seized and secured by any officers or persons mentioned in the second section of this act; and every person opposing any officer or person in execution of his duty under this act, or aiding or abetting any other person in any opposition, shall forfeit $300, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years.

5. Goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo seized as liable to forfeiture under this act, shall be forthwith delivered into the custody of the collector or other principal officer of the customs at the port nearest to the place where seized, to be secured and kept as other goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo seized are directed by the laws in force in the province in which such port is situated, to be secured and kept, or into such other custody and keeping as the governor in council, or a court of vice-admiralty shall order.

6. All goods, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo, condemned as forfeited under this act, shall, by direction of the collector or other principal officer of the customs at the port where the seizure has been secured, be sold at public auction, and the proceeds of such sale shall be applied as follows: The amount chargeable for the custody of the property seized shall first be deducted and paid over for that service; one-half of the remainder shall be paid without deduction, to the officer or person seizing the same, and the other half, after first deducting therefrom all costs incurred, shall be paid to the receiver-general of Canada, through the department of marine and fisheries; but the governor in council may, nevertheless, direct that any ship, vessel, boat, or goods, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo seized and forfeited, shall be destroyed or be reserved for the public service.

7. Any penalty or forfeiture under this act may be prosecuted and recovered in any court or vice-admiralty within Canada.

8. The judge of the court of vice-admiralty may, with the consent of the person seizing any goods, ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo, as forfeited under this act, order the redelivery thereof, on security by bond to be given by the party, with two sureties, to the use of Her Majesty, and in case any goods, ship, vessel, or boat, or the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo so redelivered is condemned as forfeited, the value thereof shall be paid into court, and distributed as above directed.

9. Her Majesty's attorney-general for Canada may sue for and recover in Her Majesty's name any penalty or forfeiture incurred under this act.

10. In case a dispute arises as to whether any seizure has or has not been legally made, or as to whether the person seizing was or was not authorized to seize under this act, oral evidence may be heard thereupon, and the burden of proving the illegality of the seizure shall be upon the owner or claimant.

11. No claim to anything seized under this act and returned into any court of vice-admiralty for adjudication shall be admitted unless the claim be entered under oath with the name of the owner, his residence and occupation, and the description of the property claimed, which oath shall be made by the owner, his attorney, or agent, and to the best of his knowledge and belief.

12. No person shall enter a claim to anything seized under this act until security has been given in a penalty not exceeding two hundred and forty dollars to answer and pay costs occasioned by such claim, and in default of security the things seized shall be adjudged forfeited, and shall be condemned.

13. 14. Every such action shall be brought within three months after the cause thereof has arisen.

15. If on any information or suit brought to trial under this act on account of any seizure, judgment shall be given for the claimant, and the judge or court shall certify on the record that there was probable cause of seizure, the claimant shall not recover costs, nor shall the person who made the seizures be liable to any indictment or suit on account thereof; and if any suit or prosecution be brought against any person on account of any seizure under this act, and judgment be given against him, and the court or judge shall certify that there was probable cause for the seizure, then the plaintiff, besides the thing seized or its value, shall not recover more than three and a half cents damages, nor any costs of suit, nor shall the defendant be fined more than twenty cents.

16. Any officer or person who has made a seizure under this act may, within one month after notice of action received, tender amends to the party complaining, or his attorney or agent, and may plead such tender.

17. All actions for the recovery of penalties or forfeitures imposed by this act may be commenced within three years after the offense committed.

18. No appeal shall be prosecuted from any decree, or sentence of any court touching any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this act, unless the inhibition be applied for, and decreed within twelve months from the decree or sentence being pronounced.

19. In cases of seizure under this act, the governor in council may, by order, direct a stay of proceedings; and in cases of condemnation may relieve from the penalty in whole or in part, and on such terms as may be deemed right.

20. The several boats or upon the boats in respect to any foreign ship, and any penalty or one of the superior may arise.

AN ACT to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels. Assented to 12th May, 1870.

Whereas it is expedient, for the more effectual protection of the in-shore fisheries of Canada against intrusion by foreigners, to amend the act entitled "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," passed in the thirty-first year of Her Majesty's reign: Therefore, Her Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the senate and house of commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The third section of the above cited act shall be, and is hereby repealed, and the following section is enacted in its stead:

2. "Any one of such officers or persons as are above-mentioned may bring any ship, vessel, or boat being within any harbor in Canada, or hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, into port, and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master, or person in command, shall not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination, he shall forfeit $400; and if such ship, vessel, or boat be foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom, or of Canada, and have been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or have been fishing (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada, not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the period named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel, or boat, under the first section of this act, such ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited."

3. This act shall be construed as one with the said act "respecting fishing by foreign vessels."

34 VICTORIA, CHAP. 23.

AN ACT further to amend the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels. Assented to April 11, 1871.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the senate and house of commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The fifth section of the act respecting fishing by foreign vessels, passed in the thirty-first year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter sixty-one, is hereby repealed, and the following section is hereby enacted in its stead:

2. "5. Goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo seized as liable to forfeiture under this act shall be forthwith delivered into the custody of such fishery officer, or customs officer, or other person as the minister of marine and fisheries may from time to time direct, or retained by the officer making the seizure in his own custody, if so directed by the minister, in either case to be secured and kept as other goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo seized are directed by the laws in force in the province in which the seizure is made, to be secured and kept."

3. The sixth section of the said act is hereby repealed, and the following section is hereby enacted in its stead:

4. "6. All goods, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo condemned as forfeited under this act, shall be sold by public auction, by direction of the officer having the custody thereof, under the provisions of the next preceding section of this act, and under regulations to be from time to time made by the governor in council; and the proceeds of every such sale shall be subject to the control of the minister of marine and fisheries, who shall first pay therefrom all ne-essary costs and expenses of custody and sale, and the governor in council may from time to time apportion three-fourths or less of the net remainder among the officers and crew of any Queen's ship or Canadian Government vessel, from on board of which the seizure was made, as he may think right, reserving for the Government and paying over to the receiver-general at least one-fourth of such net remainder to form part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada; but the governor in council may nevertheless, direct that any goods, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo, seized and forfeited, shall be destroyed, or be reserved for the public service."

3. This act shall be construed as one with the act hereby amended; and the sixth section of the said act, as contained in the second section of this act, shall apply to all goods, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo, condemned under the said act before the passing of this act, and to the proceeds of the sale thereof, remaining to be applied and paid at the time of the passing of this act.

46 VICTORIA, CHAP. 27.

AN ACT to extend to British Columbia the act relating to fishing by foreign vessels. Assented to 25th May, 1893.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the senate and house of commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. The act thirty-first Victoria, chapter sixty-one, intituled "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels," is hereby extended to the Province of British Columbia.

Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 2, 1886.

SIR: It is my unpleasant duty promptly to communicate to you the telegraphic report to me by the United States consul-general at Halifax, that the schooner City Point, of Portland, Me., arrived at the port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, landed two men, obtained water, and is detained by the authorities until further instructions are received from Ottawa.

The case as thus reported is an infringement on the ordinary rights of international hospitality, and constitutes a violation of treaty stipulations and commercial privileges, evincing such unfriendliness to the citizens of the United States as is greatly to be deplored, and which I hold it to be the responsible duty of the Government of Great Britain promptly to correct.

*Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 10, 1886.

SIR: On the 2d of June last I had the honor to inform you that dispatches from Eastport in Maine had been received, reporting threats by the customs officials of the Dominion to seize American boats coming into those waters to purchase herring from the Canadian weirs for the purpose of canning the same as sardines, which would be a manifest infraction of the right of purchase and sale of herring caught and sold by Canadians in their own waters—in the pursuance of legitimate trade.

To this note I have not had the honor of a reply.

To-day Mr. C. A. Boutelle, M. C. from Maine, informs me that American boats visiting St. Andrews, New Brunswick, for the purpose of there purchasing herring from the Canadian weirs, for canning, had been driven away by the Dominion cruiser Middleton.

Such inhibition of usual and legitimate commercial contracts and intercourse is assuredly without warrant of law, and I draw your attention to it in order that the commercial rights of citizens of the United States may not be thus invaded and subjected to unfriendly discrimination.

*Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 10, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I am in receipt of a report from the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, accompanied by sworn testimony stating that the Novelty, a duly registered merchant steam-vessel of the United States, has been denied the right to take in steam-coal, or purchase ice, or transship fish in bond to the United States, at Pictou, Nova Scotia.

It appears that, having reached that port on the 1st instant and finding the customs office closed on account of a holiday, the master of the Novelty telegraphed to the minister of marine and fisheries at Ottawa, asking if he would be permitted to do any of the three things mentioned above; that he received, in reply, a telegram reciting with certain inaccurate and extended application the language of Article 1 of the treaty of 1818, the limitations upon the significance of which are in pending discussion between the Government of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty; that on entering and clearing the Novelty on the following day at the custom-house, the collector stated that his instructions were contained in the telegram the master had received; and that, the privilege of coaling being denied, the Novelty was compelled to leave Pictou without being allowed to obtain fuel necessary for her lawful voyage on a dangerous coast.

Against this treatment I make instant and formal protest as an unwarranted interpretation and application of the treaty by the officers of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Nova Scotia, as an infraction of the laws of commercial and maritime intercourse existing between the two countries, and as a violation of hospitality, and for any loss or injury resulting therefrom the Government of Her Britannic Majesty will be held liable.

Washington, July 16, 1886.

SIR: I have just received through the honorable C. A. Boutelle, M. C., the affidavit of Stephen R. Balkam, alleging his expulsion from the harbor of St. Andrews, New Brunswick, by Captain Kent, of the Dominion cruiser Middleton, and the refusal to permit him to purchase fish caught and sold by Canadians, for the purpose of canning as sardines.

The action of Captain Kent seems to be a gross violation of ordinary commercial privileges against an American citizen proposing to transact his customary and lawful trade and not prepared or intending in any way to fish or violate any local law or regulation or treaty stipulation.

I trust instant instructions to prevent the recurrence of such unfriendly and unlawful treatment of American citizens may be given to the offending officials at St. Andrews, and reparation be made to Mr. Balkam.

*Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 30, 1886.

SIR: It is my duty to draw your attention to an infraction of the stipulations of the treaty between the United States of America and Great Britain, concluded October 20, 1818.

By the provisions of Article I of that convention the liberty to take fish of every kind, forever, in common with the subjects of His Britannic Majesty is secured to the inhabitants of the United States "on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland, which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands," and on the other coasts and shores in the said article set forth.

Notwithstanding these plain provisions, I regret to be obliged to inform you that by the affidavit of the master of the American fishing vessel Thomas F. Bayard, that being at Bonne Bay, which is on the western coast of Newfoundland within the limits specified in Article I of the convention referred to, the master of the said vessel was formally notified by one N. N. Taylor, the officer of customs at that point, that his vessel would be seized if he attempted to obtain a supply of fish for bait or for any other transaction in connection with fishing operations within three marine miles of that coast.

To avoid the seizure of his vessel the master broke up his voyage and returned home.

I am also in possession of the affidavit of Alexander T. Eachern, master of the American fishing schooner Mascot, who entered Port Amherst, Magdalen Islands, and was there threatened by the customs official with seizure of his vessel if he attempted to obtain bait for fishing or to take a pilot.

These are flagrant violations of treaty rights of their citizens for which the United States expect prompt remedial action by Her Majesty's Government; and I have to ask that such instructions may be issued forthwith to the provincial officials of Newfoundland and of the Magdalen Islands as will cause the treaty rights of citizens of the United States to be duly respected.

For the losses occasioned in the two cases I have mentioned, compensation will hereafter be expected from Her Majesty's Government when the amount shall have been accurately ascertained.

Washington, August 2, 1886. [Received August 3.]

SIR: With reference to the several communications received by Her Majesty's legation referring to the action of the Canadian authorities in connection with the present position of the North American fisheries question, I have the honor to forward to you herewith, in compliance with instructions which I have received from the Earl of Rosebery, printed copies of three dispatches and their inclosures addressed by his lordship to Her Majesty's minister on the 23d ultimo, stating the views of Her Majesty's Government, in reply to your notes to Sir L. West of the 10th, 20th, 29th May, and 14th June.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES HARDINGE.

No. 1, with Mr. Hardinge's note of August 2, 1886.]

The Earl of Rosebery to Sir L. West.

FOREIGN OFFICE, July 23, 1886.

SIR: I have received your dispatch No. 28 (treaty), of the 11th of May last, inclosing a copy of a note addressed to you by Mr. Bayard, in which, whilst expressly referring to the seizure by the Canadian authorities of the American fishing vessels Joseph Story and David J. Adams, he discusses at length the present position of the North American fisheries question.

I have also received a communication upon the same subject from the United States minister at this court, dated the 2d June last, which, although advancing arguments of a somewhat different character, is substantially addressed to the consideration of the same question.

I think it therefore desirable to reply to these two communications together in the present dispatch, of which I shall hand a copy to Mr. Phelps.

The matter is one involving the gravest interests of Canada; and, upon receipt of the communications above mentioned, I lost no time in requesting the secretary of state for the colonies to obtain from the Government of the Dominion an expression of their views thereon. I now inclose a copy of an approved report of the Canadian privy council, in which the case of Canada is so fully set forth that I think it would be desirable, as a preliminary step to the further discussion of the questions involved in this controversy, to communicate a copy of it to Mr. Bayard, as representing the views of the Dominion Government; and I have to request that, in so doing, you will state that Her Majesty's Government will be glad to be favored with any observations which Mr. Bayard may desire to make thereon.

In regard to those portions of Mr. Phelps's note of the 2d June, in which he calls in question the competence of the Canadian authorities under existing statutes, whether imperial or colonial, to effect seizures of United States fishing vessels under circumstances such as those which appear to have led to the capture of the David J. Adams, I have to observe that Her Majesty's Government do not feel themselves at present in a position to discuss that question, which is now occupying the attention of the courts of law in the Dominion, and which may possibly form the subject of an appeal to the judicial committee of Her Majesty's privy council in England.

It is believed that the courts in Canada will deliver judgment in the above cases very shortly; and until the legal proceedings now pending have been brought to a conclusion, Her Majesty's Government do not feel justified in expressing an opinion upon them, either as to the facts or the legality of the action taken by the colonial authorities.

I do not, therefore, conceive it to be at present necessary to make any specific reply to Mr. Bayard's further notes of the 11th and 12th May and 1st, 2d, and 7th June last. But with regard to his note of the 20th May, relative to the seizure of the United States fishing vessel Jennie and Julia, I inclose for communication to Mr. Bayard a copy of a report from the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries dealing with this case.

I cannot, however, close this dispatch without adding that Her Majesty's Government entirely concur in that passage of the report of the Canadian privy council, in which it is observed that "if the provisions of the convention of 1818 have become inconvenient to either contracting party, the utmost that good-will and fair dealing can suggest is that the terms shall be reconsidered."

It is assuredly from no fault on the part of Her Majesty's Government that the question has now been relegated to the terms of the convention of 1818. They have not ceased to express their anxiety to commence negotiations, and they are now prepared to enter upon a frank and friendly consideration of the whole question with the most earnest desire to arrive at a settlement consonant alike with the rights and interests of Canada and of the United States.

Where, as in the present case, conflicting interests are brought into antagonism by treaty stipulations the strict interpretation of which has scarcely been called in question, the matter appears to Her Majesty's Government to be pre-eminently one for friendly negotiation.

I am, &c.

Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general on the 14th June, 1866.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a report from the minister of marine and fisheries upon the communications dated 10th and 20th May last from the Hon. Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, to Her Majesty's minister at Washington, in reference to the seizure of the American fishing vessel David J. Adams.

The committee concur in the annexed report, and they advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy thereof to the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk, Privy Council, Canada.

The undersigned having had his attention called by your excellency to a communication from Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, dated the 10th May, and addressed to Her Majesty's minister at Washington, and to a further communication from Mr. Bayard, dated the 20th May instant, in reference to the seizure of the American fishing vessel David J. Adams, begs leave to submit the following observations thereon:

Your excellency's Government fully appreciates and reciprocates Mr. Bayard's desire that the administration of the laws regulating the commercial interests and the mercantile marine of the two countries might be such as to promote good feeling and mutual advantage.

Canada has given many indisputable proofs of an earnest desire to cultivate and extend her commercial relations with the United States, and it may not be without advantage to recapitulate some of those proofs.

For many years before 1854 the maritime provinces of British North America had complained to Her Majesty's Government of the continuous invasion of their inshore fisheries (sometimes accompanied, it was alleged, with violence) by American fishermen and fishing vessels.

Much irritation naturally ensued, and it was felt to be expedient by both Governments to put an end to this unseemly state of things by treaty, and at the same time to arrange for enlarged trade relations between the United States and the British North American colonies. The reciprocity treaty of 1854 was the result, by which were not only our inshore fisheries opened to the Americans, but provision was made for the free interchange of the principal natural products of both countries, including those of the sea. Peace was preserved on our waters, and the volume of international trade steadily increased during the existence of this treaty, and until it was terminated in 1866, not by Great Britain, but by the United States.

In the following year Canada (then become a dominion and united to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick) was thrown back on the convention of 1818, and obliged to fit out a marine police to enforce the laws and defend her rights, still desiring, however, to cultivate friendly relations with her great neighbor, and not too suddenly to deprive the American fishermen of their accustomed fishing grounds and means of livelihood. She readily acquiesced in the proposal of Her Majesty's Government for the temporary issue of annual licenses to fish on payment of a moderate fee. Your excellency is aware of the failure of that scheme. A few licenses were issued at first, but the applications for them soon ceased, and the American fishermen persisted in forcing themselves into our waters "without leave or license."

Then came the recurrence, in an aggravated form, of all the troubles which had occurred anterior to the reciprocity treaty. There were invasions of our waters, personal conflicts between our fishermen and American crews, the destruction of nets, the seizure and condemnation of vessels, and intense consequent irritation on both sides.

This was happily put an end to by the Washington treaty of 1871. In the interval between the termination of the first treaty and the ratification of that by which it was eventually replaced, Canada on several occasions pressed, without success, through the British minister at Washington, for a renewal of the reciprocity treaty or for the negotiation of another on a still wider basis.

When in 1874 Sir Edward Thornton, then British minister at Washington, and the late Hon. George Brown, of Toronto, were appointed joint plenipotentiaries for the purpose of negotiating and concluding a treaty relating to fisheries, commerce, and navigation, a provisional treaty was arranged by them with the United States Government, but the Senate decided that it was not expedient to ratify it, and the negotiation fell to the ground.

The treaty of Washington, while it failed to restore the provisions of the treaty of 1854, for reciprocal free trade (except in fish), at least kept the peace, and there was tranquillity along our shores until July, 1885, when it was terminated again by the United States Government and not by Great Britain.

With a desire to show that she wished to be a good neighbor, and in order to prevent loss and disappointment on the part of the United States fishermen by their sudden exclusion from her waters in the middle of the fishing season, Canada continued to allow them, for six months, all the advantages which the rescinded fishery clauses had previously given them, although her people received from the United States none of the corresponding advantages which the treaty of 1871 had declared to be an equivalent for the benefits secured thereby to the American fishermen.

The President, in return for this courtesy, promised to recommend to Congress the appointment of a joint commission of the two Governments of the United Kingdom and the United States to consider the fishery question, with permission also to consider the whole state of trade relations between the United States and Canada.

This promise was fulfilled by the President, but the Senate rejected his recommendation and refused to sanction the commission.

Under these circumstances Canada, having exhausted every effort to procure an amicable arrangement, has been driven again to fall back upon the convention of 1818, the provisions of which she is now enforcing and will enforce, in no punitive or hostile spirit as Mr. Bayard supposes, but solely in protection of her fisheries, and in vindication of the right secured to her by treaty.

Mr. Bayard suggests that "the treaty of 1818 was between two nations—the United States of America and Great Britain—who, as the contracting parties, can alone apply authoritative interpretation thereto, and enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation."

As it may be inferred from this statement that the right of the Parliament of Canada to make enactments for the protection of the fisheries of the Dominion, and the power of the Canadian officers to protect those fisheries, are questioned, it may be well to state at the outset the grounds upon which it is conceived by the undersigned that the jurisdiction in question is clear beyond a doubt.

1. In the first place the undersigned would ask it to be remembered that the extent of the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada is not limited (nor was that of the Provinces before the union) to the sea-coast, but extends for three marine miles from the shore as to all matters over which any legislative authority can in any country be exercised within that space. The legislation which has been adopted on this subject by the Parliament of Canada (and previously to confederation by the Provinces) does not reach beyond that limit. It may be assumed that, in the absence of any treaty stipulation to the contrary, this right is so well recognized and established by both British and American law, that the grounds on which it is supported need not be stated here at large. The undersigned will merely add, therefore, to this statement of the position, that so far from the right being limited by the convention of 1818 that convention expressly recognizes it.

After renouncing the liberty to "take, cure, or dry fish on or within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of His Majesty's dominions in America," there is a stipulation that while American fishing vessels shall be admitted to enter such bays, &c., "for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, curing, or drying fish therein, or in any other manner whatever abusing the privileges reserved to them."

2. Appropriate legislation on this subject was, in the first instance, adopted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom. The Imperial statute 59 Geo. III, cap. 38, was enacted in the year following the convention, in order to give that convention force and effect. That statute declared that, except for the purposes before specified, it should "not be lawful for any person or persons, not being a natural-born subject of His Majesty, in any foreign ship, vessel, or boat, nor for any person in any ship, vessel, or boat, other than such as shall be navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, to fish for, or to take, dry, or cure any fish of any kind whatever within three marine miles of any coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors, whither, in any part of His Majesty's dominions in America, not included within the limits specified and described in the first article of the said convention, and that if such foreign ship, vessel, or boat, or any person or persons on board thereof shall be found fishing, or to have been fishing, or preparing to fish within such distance of such coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors within such parts of His Majesty's dominions in America, out of the said limits as aforesaid, all such ships, vessels, and boats, together with their cargoes, and all guns, ammunition, tackle, apparel, furniture, and stores, shall be forfeited, and shall and may be seized, taken, sued for, prosecuted, recovered, and condemned by such and the like ways, means, and methods, and in the same courts as ships, vessels, or boats may be forfeited, seized, prosecuted, and condemned for any offense against any laws relating to the revenue of customs, or the laws of trade and navigation, under any act or acts of the Parliament of Great Britain or the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, provided that nothing contained in this act shall apply or be construed to apply to the ships or subjects of any prince, power, or state in amity with His Majesty who are entitled by treaty with His Majesty to any privileges of taking, drying, or curing fish on the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors or within the limits in this act described. Provided always that it shall and may be lawful for any fishermen of the said United States to enter into any such bays or harbors of His Britannic Majesty's dominions in America as are last mentioned, for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever, subject nevertheless to such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent such fishermen of the said United States from taking, drying, or curing fish in the said bays or harbors or in any other manner whatever, abusing the said privileges by the said treaty and this act reserved to them, and as shall, for that purpose, be imposed by any order or orders to be from time to time made by His Majesty in council under the authority of this act, and by any regulations which shall be issued by the governor or person exercising the office of governor in any such parts of His Majesty's dominions in America, under or in pursuance of any such order in council as aforesaid. And that if any person or persons upon requisition made by the governor of Newfoundland, or the person exercising the office of governor, or by any governor in person exercising the office of governor in any other parts of His Majesty's dominions in America, as aforesaid, or by any officer or officers acting under such governor or person exercising the office of governor, in the execution of any orders or instructions from His Majesty in council, shall refuse to depart from such bays or harbors, or if any person or persons shall refuse, or neglect, to conform to any regulations or directions which shall be made or given for the execution of any of the purposes of this act, every such person so refusing or otherwise offending against this act shall forfeit the sum of two hundred pounds, to be recovered in the superior court of judicature of the island of Newfoundland, or in the superior court of judicature of the colony or settlement within or near to which such offense shall be committed, or bill, plaint, or information in any of His Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, one moiety of such penalty to belong to His Majesty, his heirs, and successors, and the other moiety to such person or persons as shall sue or prosecute for the same."

The acts passed by the Provinces now forming Canada, and also by the Parliament of Canada (now noted in the margin)* are to the same effect, and may be said to be merely declaratory of the law as established by the imperial statute.

3. The authority of the legislatures of the Provinces, and, after confederation, authority of the Parliament of Canada, to make enactments to enforce the provisions of the convention, as well as the authority of Canadian officers to enforce those rests on well-known constitutional principles.

Those legislatures existed, and the Parliament of Canada now exists, by the authority of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, which one of the nations referred to by Mr. Bayard as the "contracting parties." The colonial statutes have received the sanction of the British sovereign, who, and not the nation, is actually the party with whom the United States made two conventions. The officers who are engaged in enforcing the acts of Canada or the laws of the Empire, are Her Majesty's officers, whether their authority emanates directly from Queen, or from her representative, the governor-general. The jurisdiction thus exercised cannot, therefore, be properly described in the language used by Mr. Bayard as a supposed and therefore questionable delegation of jurisdiction by the Imperial Government of Great Britain. Her Majesty governs in Canada as well as in Great Britain; the officers of Canada are her officers; the statutes of Canada are her statutes, passed on the advice of her Parliament sitting in Canada.

It is, therefore, an error to conceive that because the United States and Great Britain were, in the first instance, the contracting parties to the treaty of 1815, no question arising under that treaty can be "responsibly dealt with," either by the Parliament or by the authorities of the Dominion.

The raising of this objection now is the more remarkable, as the Government of the United States has long been aware of the necessity of reference to the colonial legislatures in matters affecting their interests.

The treaties of 1854 and 1871 expressly provide that, so far as they concerned the fisheries or trade relations with the provinces, they should be subject to ratification by their several legislatures; and seizures of American vessels and goods, followed by condemnation for breach of the provincial customs laws, have been made for forty years without protest or objection on the part of the United States Government.

The undersigned, with regard to this contention of Mr. Bayard, has further to observe that in the proceedings which have recently been taken for the protection of the fisheries, no attempt has been made to put any special or novel interpretation upon the convention of 1815. The seizures of the fishing vessels have been made in order to enforce the explicit provisions of that treaty, the clear and long established provisions of the imperial statute and of the statutes of Canada expressed in almost the same language.

The proceedings which have been taken to carry out the law of the Empire in the present case are the same as those which have been taken from time to time during the period in which the convention has been in force, and the seizures of vessels have been made under process of the imperial court of vice-admiralty established in the provinces of Canada.

Mr. Bayard further observes that since the treaty of 1815, "a series of laws and regulations affecting the trade between the North American provinces and the United States have been respectively adopted by the two countries, and have led to amicable and mutually beneficial relations between their respective inhabitants," and that "the independent and yet concurrent action of the two Governments has effected a gradual extension from time to time of the provisions of article 1 of the convention of the 3d of July, 1815, providing for reciprocal liberty of commerce between the United States and the territories of Great Britain in Europe, so as gradually to include the colonial possessions of Great Britain in North America and the West Indies within the limits of that treaty."

The undersigned has not been able to discover, in the instances given by Mr. Bayard, any evidence that the laws and regulations affecting the trade between the British North American Provinces and the United States, or that "the independent and yet concurrent action of the two Governments" have either extended or restricted the terms of the convention of 1815, or affected in any way the right to enforce its provisions according to the plain meaning of the articles of the treaty; on the contrary, reference to the eighteenth article of the Washington treaty will show that the contracting parties made the convention the basis of the further privileges granted by the treaty, and it does not allege that its provisions are in any way extended or affected by subsequent legislation or acts of administration.

Mr. Bayard has referred to the proclamation of President Jackson in 1830, creating reciprocal commercial intercourse on terms of perfect equality of flag" between the United States and the British American dependencies, and has suggested that these commercial privileges have since received a large extension, and that in some cases favors have been granted by the United States without equivalent 'concession,' such as the exemption granted by the shipping act of the 26th June, 1884, amounting to one-half of the regular tonnage dues on all vessels from British North America and West Indies entering ports of the United States."

He has also mentioned under this head "the arrangement for the transit of goods, and the remission by proclamation as to certain British ports and places of the remainder of the tonnage tax on evidence of equal treatment being shown" to United States vessels.

The proclamation of President Jackson in 1830 had no relation to the subject of the fisheries, and merely had the effect of opening United States ports to British vessels on terms similar to those which had already been granted in British ports to vessels from the United States. The object of these "laws and regulations" mentioned by Mr. Bayard was purely of a commercial character, while the sole purpose of the convention of 1815 was to establish and define the rights of the citizens of the two countries in relation to the fisheries on the British North American coast.

Bearing this distinction in mind, however, it may be conceded that substantial assistance has been given to the development of commercial intercourse between the two countries.

But legislation in that direction has not been confined to the Government of the United States, as indeed Mr. Bayard has admitted in referring to the case of the Imperial shipping and navigation act of 1849.

For upwards of forty years, as has already been stated, Canada has continued to evince her desire for a free exchange of the chief products of the two countries. She has repeatedly urged the desirability of the fuller reciprocity of trade which was established during the period in which the treaty of 1854 was in force.

The laws of Canada with regard to the registry of vessels, tonnage dues, and shipping generally, are more liberal than those of the United States. The ports of Canada in inland waters are free to vessels of the United States, which are admitted to the use of her canals on equal terms with Canadian vessels.

Canada allows free registry to ships built in the United States and purchased by British citizens, charges no tonnage or light dues on United States shipping, and extends a standing invitation for a large measure of reciprocity in trade by her latest legislation.

Whatever relevancy, therefore, the argument may have to the subject under consideration, the undersigned submits that the concessions which Mr. Bayard refers to as "favours" granted by United States can hardly be said not to have been met by equivalent concessions on the part of the Dominion, and inasmuch as the disposition of Canada continues to be the same, as was evinced in the friendly legislation just referred to, it would seem that Mr. Bayard's charges of showing "hostility to commerce under the guise of protection to inshore fisheries," or of interrupting ordinary commercial intercourse by harsh measures and unfriendly administration, is hardly justified.

The questions which were in controversy between Great Britain and the United States prior to 1818 related not to shipping and commerce, but to the claims of United States fishermen to fish in waters adjacent to the British North American Provinces.

Those questions were definitely settled by the convention of that year, and although the terms of that convention have since been twice suspended, first by the treaty of 1854, and subsequently by that of 1871, after the lapse of each of these treaties the provisions made in 1818 came again into operation, and were carried out by the Imperial and colonial authorities without the slightest doubt being raised as to their being in full force and vigor.

Mr. Bayard's contention that the effect of the legislation which has taken place under the convention of 1818, and of executive action thereunder, would be "to expand the restrictions and renunciations of that treaty which related solely to their shore fishing within the three-mile limit, so as to affect the deep-sea fisheries," and "to diminish and practically destroy the privileges expressly secured to American fishing vessels to visit those inshore waters for the objects of shelter and repair of damages and purchasing wood and obtaining water," appears to the undersigned to be unfounded. The legislation referred to in no way affects those privileges, nor has the Government of Canada taken any action towards their restriction. In the cases of the recent seizures, which are the immediate subject of Mr. Bayard's letter, the vessels seized had not resorted to Canadian waters for any one of the purposes specified in the convention of 1818 as lawful. They were United States fishing vessels, and against the plain terms of the convention, had entered Canadian harbors. In doing so the David J. Adams was not even possessed of a permit "to touch and trade," even if such a document could be supposed to divest her of the character of a fishing vessel.

The undersigned is of opinion that while, for the reasons which he has advanced there is no evidence to show that the Government of Canada has sought to expand the scope of the convention of 1818 or to increase the extent of its restrictions, it would not be difficult to prove that the construction which the United States seek to place on that convention would have the effect of extending very largely the privileges which their citizens enjoy under its terms. The contention that the changes which may from time to time occur in the habits of the fish taken off our coasts, or the methods of taking them, should be regarded as justifying a periodical revision of the terms of the treaty, or a new interpretation of its provisions, cannot be accepted. Such changes may from time to time render the conditions of the contract inconvenient to one party or the other, but the validity of the agreement can hardly be said to depend on the convenience or inconvenience which it imposes from time to time on one or other of the contracting parties. When the operation of its provisions can be shown to have become manifestly inequitable, the utmost that good-will and fair dealing can suggest is that the terms should be reconsidered and a new arrangement entered into; but this the Government of the United States does not appear to have considered desirable.

It is not, however, the case that the convention of 1818 affected only the inshore fisheries of the British Provinces; it was framed with the object of affording a complete and exclusive definition of the rights and liberties which the fishermen of the United States were thenceforward to enjoy in following their vocation, so far as those rights could be affected by facilities for access to the shores or waters of the British provinces, or for intercourse with their people. It is therefore no undue expansion of the scope of that convention to interpret strictly those of its provisions by which such access is denied, except to vessels requiring it for the purposes specifically described. Such an undue expansion would, upon the other hand, certainly take place if, under cover of its provisions, or of any agreements relating to general commercial intercourse which may have since been made, permission were accorded to United States fishermen to resort habitually to the harbors of the Dominion, not for the sake of seeking safety for their vessels or of avoiding risk to human life, but in order to use those harbors as a general base of operations from which to prosecute and organize with greater advantage to themselves the industry in which they are engaged.

It was in order to guard against such an abuse of the provisions of the treaty that amongst them was included the stipulation that not only should the inshore fisheries be reserved to British fishermen, but that the United States should renounce the right of their fishermen to enter the bays or harbors excepting for the four specified purposes, which do not include the purchase of bait or other appliances, whether intended for the deep-sea fisheries or not.

The undersigned, therefore, cannot concur in Mr. Bayard's contention that "to prevent the purchase of bait, or any other supply needed for deep-sea fishing, would be to expand the convention to objects wholly beyond the purview, scope, and intent of the treaty, and to give to it an effect never contemplated."

Mr. Bayard suggests that the possession by a fishing vessel of a permit to "touch and trade" should give her a right to enter Canadian ports for other than the purposes named in the treaty, or, in other words, should give her perfect immunity from its provisions. This would amount to a practical repeal of the treaty, because it would enable a United States collector of customs, by issuing a license, originally only intended for purposes of domestic customs regulation, to give exemption from the treaty to every United States fishing vessel. The observation that similar vessels under the British flag have the right to enter the ports of the United States for the purchase of supplies loses its force when it is remembered that the convention of 1818 contained no restriction on British vessels, and no renunciation of any privileges in regard to them.

Mr. Bayard states "that in the proceedings prior to the treaty of 1818 the British commissioners proposed that United States fishing vessels should be excluded "from carrying also merchandise," but that this proposition "being resisted by the American negotiators, was abandoned," and goes on to say, "this fact would seem clearly to indicate that the business of fishing did not then, and does not now, disqualify vessels from also trading in the regular ports of entry." A reference to the proceedings alluded to will show that the proposition mentioned related only to United States vessels visiting those portions of the coast of Labrador and Newfoundland on which the United States fishermen had been granted the right to fish, and to land for drying and curing fish, and the rejection of the proposal can, at the utmost, be supposed only to indicate that the liberty to carry merchandise might exist without objection in relation to those coasts, and is no ground for supposing that the right extends to the regular ports of entry, against the express words of the treaty.

The proposition of the British negotiators was to append to Article I the following words: "It is, therefore, well understood that the liberty of taking, drying, and curing fish, granted in the preceding part of this article, shall not be construed to extend to any privilege of carrying on trade with any of his Britannic Majesty's subjects residing within the limits hereinbefore assigned for the use of the fishermen of the United States."

It was also proposed to limit them to having on board such goods as might "be necessary for the prosecution of the fishery or the support of the fishermen while engaged therein, or in the prosecution of their voyages to and from the fishing grounds." To this the American negotiators objected, on the ground that the search for contraband goods, and the liability to seizure for having them in possession, would expose the fishermen to endless vexation, and, in consequence, the proposal was abandoned. It is apparent, therefore, that this proviso in no way referred to the bays or harbors outside of the limits assigned to the American fishermen, from which bays and harbors it was agreed, both before and after this proposition was discussed, that United States fishing vessels were to be excluded for all purposes other than for shelter and repairs, and purchasing wood and obtaining water.

It, however, weight is to be given to Mr. Bayard's argument that the rejection of a proposition advanced by either side during the course of the negotiations should be held to necessitate an interpretation adverse to the tenor of such proposition, that argument may certainly be used to prove that American fishing vessels were not intended to have the right to enter Canadian waters for bait to be used even in the prosecution of the deep-sea fisheries. The United States negotiators in 1818 made the proposition that the words "and bait" be added to the enumeration of the objects for which these fishermen might be allowed to enter, and the proviso as first submitted had read "provided, however, that American fishermen shall be permitted to enter such bays and harbors for the purpose only of obtaining shelter, wood, water, and bait." The addition of the two last words was, however, resisted by the British plenipotentiaries, and their omission acquiesced in by their American colleagues. It is, moreover, to be observed that this proposition could only have had reference to the deep-sea fishing, because the inshore fisheries had already been specifically renounced by the representatives of the United States.

In addition to this evidence, it must be remembered that the United States Government admitted, in the case submitted by them before the Halifax commission in 1877, that neither the convention of 1818 nor the treaty of Washington conferred any right or privilege of trading on American fishermen. The British case claimed compensation for the privilege which had been given since the ratification of the latter treaty to United States fishing vessels "to transfer cargoes, to outfit vessels, by supplies, obtain ice, engage sailors, procure bait, and traffic generally in British ports and harbors."

This claim was, however, successfully resisted, and in the United States case it is maintained "that the various incidental and reciprocal advantages of the treaty, such as the privileges of traffic, purchasing bait and other supplies, are not the subject of compensation, because the treaty of Washington confers no such rights on the inhabitants of the United States, who now enjoy them merely by sufferance, and who can at any time be deprived of them by the enforcement of existing laws or the re-enactment of former oppressive statutes. Moreover, the treaty does not provide for any possible compensation for such privileges."

Now, the existing laws referred to in this extract are the various statutes passed by the imperial and colonial legislatures to give effect to the treaty of 1818, which, it is admitted in the said case, could at any time have been enforced (even during the existence of the Washington treaty), if the Canadian authorities had chosen to do so.

Mr. Bayard on more than one occasion intimates that the interpretation of the treaty and its enforcement are dictated by local and hostile feelings, and that the main question is being "obscured by partisan advocacy and distorted by the heat of local interests," and, in conclusion, expresses a hope that "ordinary commercial intercourse shall not be interrupted by harsh measures and unfriendly administrations."

The undersigned desires emphatically to state that it is not the wish of the Government or the people of Canada to interrupt for a moment the most friendly and free commercial intercourse with the neighboring Republic.

The mercantile vessels and the commerce of the United States have at present exactly the same freedom that they have for years passed enjoyed in Canada, and the disposition of the Canadian Government is to extend reciprocal trade with the United States beyond its present limits, nor can it be admitted that the charge of local prejudice or hostile feeling is justified by the calm enforcement, through the legal tribunals of the country, of the plain terms of a treaty between Great Britain and the United States, and of the statutes which have been in operation for nearly seventy years, excepting in intervals during which (until put an end to by the United States Government) special and more liberal provisions existed in relation to the commerce and fisheries of the two countries.

The undersigned has further to call attention to the letter of Mr. Bayard of the 20th May, relating also to the seizure of the David J. Adams in the port of Digby, Nova Scotia.

That vessel was seized, as has been explained on a previous occasion, by the commander of the Canadian steamer Lansdowne, under the following circumstances:

She was a United States fishing vessel, and entered the harbor of Digby for purposes other than those for which entry is permitted by the treaty and by the imperial and Canadian statutes.

As soon as practicable, legal process was obtained from the vice-admiralty court at Halifax, and the vessel was delivered to the officer of that court. The paper referred to in Mr. Bayard's letter as having been nailed to her mast was doubtless a copy of the warrant which commanded the marshal or his deputy to make the arrest.

The undersigned is informed that there was no intention whatever of so adjusting the paper that its contents could not be read, but it is doubtless correct that the officer of the court in charge declined to allow the document to be removed. Both the United States consul-general and the captain of the David J. Adams were made acquainted with the reasons for the seizure, and the only ground for the statement that a respectful application to ascertain the nature of the complaint was fruitless, was that the commander of the Lansdowne, after the nature of the complaint had been stated to those of both countries precise statements referred him to the Such conduct been extraordinary The legal proximity at Halifax at Digby courts grounds on which herein.

Such conduct on the part of the officer of the Lansdowne can hardly be said to have been extraordinary under the present circumstances.

The legal proceedings had at that time been commenced in the court of vice-admiralty at Halifax, where the United States consul-general resides, and the officer at Digby could not have stated with precision, as he was called upon to do, the grounds on which the intervention of the court had been claimed in the proceedings therein.

There was not, in this instance, the slightest difficulty in the United States consul-general and those interested in the vessel obtaining the fullest information, and no information which could have been given by those to whom they applied was withheld.

Apart from the general knowledge of the offenses which it was claimed the master had committed, and which was furnished at the time of the seizure, the most technical and precise details were readily obtainable at the registry of the court, and from the solicitors of the crown, and would have been furnished immediately on application to the authority to whom the commander of the Lansdowne requested the United States consul-general to apply. No such information could have been obtained from the paper attached to the vessel's mast.

Instructions have, however, been given to the commander of the Lansdowne and other officers of the marine police, that, in the event of any further seizure, a statement in writing shall be given to the master of the seized vessel of the offenses for which the vessel may be detained, and that a copy thereof shall be sent to the United States consul-general at Halifax, and to the nearest United States consular agent, and there can be no objection to the solicitor for the crown being instructed likewise to furnish the consul-general with a copy of the legal process in each case, if it can be supposed that any fuller information will thereby be given.

Mr. Bayard is correct in his statement of the reasons for which the David J. Adams was seized, and is now held. It is claimed that the vessel violated the treaty of 1818, and consequently the statutes which exist for the enforcement of the treaty, and it is also claimed that she violated the customs laws of Canada of 1853.

The undersigned recommends that copies of those statutes be furnished for the information of Mr. Bayard.

Mr. Bayard has, in the same dispatch, recalled the attention of Her Majesty's minister to the correspondence and action which took place in the year 1870, when the fishery question was under consideration, and especially to the instructions from the lords of the admiralty to Vice-Admiral Wollesley, in which that officer was directed to observe great caution in the arrest of American fishermen, and to confine his action to one class of offenses against the treaty. Mr. Bayard, however, appears to have attached unwarranted importance to the correspondence and instructions of 1870, when he refers to them as implying "an understanding between the two Governments," an understanding, which should, in his opinion, at other times, and under other circumstances, govern the conduct of the authorities, whether imperial or colonial, to whom under the laws of the Empire is committed the duty of enforcing the treaty in question.

When, therefore, Mr. Bayard points out the "absolute and instant necessity that now exists for a restriction of the seizure of American vessels charged with violations of the treaty of 1818" to the conditions specified under those instructions, it is necessary to recall the fact that in the year 1870 the principal cause of complaint on the part of Canadian fishermen was that the American vessels were trespassing on the shore fishing grounds and interfering with the catch of mackerel in Canadian waters, the purchase of bait being then a matter of secondary importance.

It is probable, too, that the action of the imperial Government was influenced very largely by the prospect which then existed of an arrangement such as was accomplished in the following year by the treaty of Washington, and that it may be inferred, in view of this disposition made apparent on both sides to arrive at such an understanding, that the imperial authorities, without any surrender of imperial or colonial rights, and without acquiescing in any limited construction of the treaty, instructed the vice-admiral to confine his seizures to the more open and injurious class of offenses which were especially likely to be brought within the cognizance of the naval officers of the imperial service.

The Canadian Government, as has been already stated, for six months left its fishing grounds open to American fishermen, without any corresponding advantage in return, in order to prevent loss to those fishermen, and to afford time for the action of Congress, on the President's recommendation that a joint commission should be appointed to consider the whole question relating to the fisheries.

That recommendation has been rejected by Congress. Canadian fish is by prohibitory duties excluded from the United States market. The American fishermen clamor against the removal of those duties, and, in order to maintain a monopoly of the trade, continue against all law to force themselves into our waters and harbors, and make our shores their base for supplies, especially for bait, which is necessary to the successful prosecution of their business.

They hope by this course to supply the demand for their home market, and thus to make Canada indirectly the means of injuring her own trade.

It is surely, therefore, not unreasonable that Canada should insist on the rights secured to her by treaty. She is simply acting on the defensive, and no trouble can arise between the two countries if American fishermen will only recognize the provisions of the convention of 1818 as obligatory upon them, and until a new arrangement is made, abstain both from fishing in her waters and from visiting her bays and harbors for any purpose save those specified in the treaty.

In conclusion, the undersigned would express the hope that the discussion which has arisen on this question may lead to renewed negotiations between Great Britain and the United States, and may have the result of establishing extended trade relations between the Republic and Canada, and of removing all sources of irritation between the two countries.

GEORGE E. FOSTER,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Report.

With reference to a dispatch from the British minister at Washington, to his excellency the governor-general, dated the 21st May last, and inclosing a letter from Mr. Secretary Bayard, regarding the refusal of the collector of customs at Digby, Nova Scotia, to allow the United States schooner Jennie and Julia the right of exercising commercial privileges at the said port, the undersigned has the honor to make the following observations:

It appears the Jennie and Julia is a vessel of about 14 tons register, that she was at all intents and purposes a fishing-vessel, and, at the time of her entry into the port of Digby, had fishing gear and apparatus on board, and that the collector fully satisfied himself of these facts. According to the master's declaration, she was there to purchase fresh herring only, and wished to get them direct from the weir fishermen. The collector acted upon his conviction that she was a fishing vessel, and, as such, debarred by the treaty of 1818 from entering Canadian ports for the purposes of trade. He, therefore, in the exercise of his plain duty, warned her off.

The treaty of 1818 is explicit in its terms, and by it United States fishing vessels are allowed to enter Canadian ports for shelter, repairs, wood, and water, and "for no other purpose whatever."

The undersigned is of the opinion that it cannot be successfully contended that a bona fide fishing vessel can, by simply declaring her intention of purchasing fresh fish for other than baiting purposes, evade the provisions of the treaty of 1818 and obtain privileges not contemplated thereby. If that were admitted, the provision of the treaty which excludes United States fishing vessels for all purposes but the four above-mentioned, would be rendered null and void, and the whole United States fishing fleet be at once lifted out of the category of fishing vessels, and allowed the free use of Canadian ports for baiting, obtaining supplies, and trans-shipping cargoes.

It appears to the undersigned that the question as to whether a vessel is a fishing vessel or a legitimate trader or merchant vessel, is one of fact and to be decided by the character of the vessel and the nature of her outfit, and that the class to which she belongs is not to be determined by the simple declaration of her master that he is not at any given time acting in the character of a fisherman.

At the same time the undersigned begs again to observe that Canada has no desire to interrupt the long-established and legitimate commercial intercourse with the United States, but rather to encourage and maintain it, and that Canadian ports are at present open to the whole merchant navy of the United States on the same liberal conditions as heretofore accorded.

The whole respectfully submitted.

GEORGE E. FOSTER,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

FOREIGN OFFICE, July 23, 1886.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your dispatch No. 46 (treaty), of the 30th May last, inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Bayard, in which he protests against the provisions of a bill recently introduced into the Canadian Parliament for the purpose of regulating fishing operations by foreign vessels in Canadian waters.

In reply I inclose an extract of a dispatch from the governor-general of Canada, containing observations on the subject.

I have to add that Her Majesty's Government entirely concur in the views expressed by the Marquis of Lansdowne in this extract, of which you will communicate a copy to Mr. Bayard, together with a copy of the present dispatch.

With regard to Mr. Bayard's observations in the same note respecting a customs circular and a warning issued by the Canadian authorities, and dated respectively the 7th May and the 5th March last, I have to acquaint you that these documents have now been amended so as to bring them into exact accordance with treaty stipulations; and I inclose, for communication to the United States Government, printed copies of these documents as amended.

I am, &c.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 2.]

The Marquis of Lansdowne to Earl Granville.

[Extract.]

CITADEL, QUEBEC, June 7, 1886.

Her Majesty's minister at Washington has been good enough to communicate to me, for my information, copy of a note received by him from the Secretary of State of the United States, in which the bill is criticised, not so much on account of its policy, or because its introduction is regarded as inopportune and inconvenient, as upon the ground that any legislation by the Parliament of the Dominion for the purpose of interpreting and giving effect to a contract entered into by the imperial Government is beyond the competence of that Parliament, and "an assumption of jurisdiction entirely unwarranted," and therefore "wholly denied by the United States."

Your lordship is no doubt aware that legislation of this kind has been frequently resorted to by the Parliament of the Dominion, for the purpose of enforcing treaties or conventions entered into by the imperial Government. In the present case the legislation proposed was introduced, not with the object of making a change in the terms of the convention of 1818, nor with the intention of representing as breaches of the convention any acts which are not now punishable as breaches of it. What the framers of the bill sought was merely to amend the procedure by which the convention is enforced, and to do this by attaching a particular penalty to a particular breach of the convention after that breach had been proved before a competent tribunal. It must be remembered that the convention itself is silent as to the procedure to be taken in enforcing it, and that effect has accordingly been given to its provisions at different times both through the means of acts passed, on the one side, by Congress, and, on the other, by the imperial Parliament, as well as by the legislatures of the British North American Provinces previous to confederation, and since confederation by the Parliament of the Dominion. The right of the Dominion Parliament to legislate for these purposes, and the validity of such legislation as against the citizens of a foreign country has, as far as I am aware, not been seriously called in question. Such legislation, unless it is disallowed by the imperial Government, becomes part of the law of the Empire.

The Government of the United States has long been aware of the necessity of referring to the Dominion Parliament in matters affecting Canadian interests, and has, I believe, never raised any objection to such reference. The treaties of 1854 and 1871, so far as they related to the fisheries or to the commercial relations of the Dominion, were made subject to ratification by her legislature. In the same way the treaty under which fugitive criminals from the United States into Canada are surrendered, is carried into effect by means of a Canadian statute. If a foreigner commits a murder in Canada he is tried, convicted, and executed by virtue of a Canadian and not of an imperial act of Parliament. Seizures of goods and vessels for breaches of the local customs law have in like manner been made for many years past without any protest on the ground that such laws involved an usurpation of power by the colony.

Mr. Bayard's statement that the Dominion Government is seeking by its action in this matter to "invade and destroy the commercial rights and privileges secured to citizens of the United States under and by virtue of treaty stipulations with Great Britain" is not warranted by the facts of the case. No attempt has been made either by the authorities intrusted with the enforcement of the existing law or by the Parliament of the Dominion to interfere with vessels engaged in bona fide commercial transactions upon the coast of the Dominion. The two vessels which have been seized are both of them beyond all question fishing vessels and not traders, and therefore liable, subject to the finding of the courts, to any penalties imposed by law for the enforcement of the convention of 1818 on parties violating the terms of that convention.

When, therefore, Mr. Bayard protests against all such proceedings as being "flagrantly violative of reciprocal commercial privileges to which citizens of the United States are lawfully entitled under statutes of Great Britain and the well-defined and publicly-proclaimed authority of both countries," and when he denies the competence of the fishery department to issue, under the convention of 1818, such a paper as the "warning," dated the 5th March, 1886, of which a copy has been supplied to your lordship, he is in effect denying to the Dominion the right of taking any steps for the protection of its own rights secured under the convention referred to.

Warning.

To all to whom it may concern :

The Government of the United States having by notice terminated Articles XVIII to XXV, both inclusive, and Article XXX, known as the fishery articles of the Washington Treaty, attention is called to the following provision of the convention between the United States and Great Britain signed at London on the 20th October, 1818:

"ARTICLE I. Whereas differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States, for the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, and cure fish, on certain coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Ramca Islands, on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks from Mount Joly, on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the straits of Belle Isle, and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company; and that the American fishermen shall also have liberty forever to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland hereabove described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same or any portion thereof, shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled, without previous agreement, for such purpose, with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

"And the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof, to take, dry, or cure fish on or within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America not included within the above-mentioned limits; provided, however, that the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter, and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them."

Attention is called to the following provisions of the act of Parliament of Canada, cap. 61, of the acts of 1868, entitled "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels":

"2. Any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, serving on board of any vessel of Her Majesty's navy cruising and being in the waters of Canada for purpose of affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects engaged in the fisheries, or any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, fishery officer, or stipendiary magistrate on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the Government of Canada, and employed in the service of protecting the fisheries, or any officer of the customs of Canada, sheriff, magistrate, or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel, or boat within any harbor in Canada, or hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or har-

Attention is also called to the following provisions of the act of the Parliament of Canada, cap. 61, of the acts of 1868, entitled "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels":

"2. Any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, serving on board of any vessel of Her Majesty's navy cruising and being in the waters of Canada for purpose of affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects engaged in the fisheries, or any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, fishery officer, or stipendiary magistrate on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the Government of Canada, and employed in the service of protecting the fisheries, or any officer of the customs of Canada, sheriff, magistrate, or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel, or boat within any harbor in Canada, or hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, and stay on board so long as she may remain within such place or distance.

"4. All goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo liable to forfeiture under this act, may be seized and secured by any officers or persons mentioned in the 2d section of this act; and every person opposing any officer or person in the execution of his duty under this act, or aiding or abetting any other person in any opposition, shall forfeit 800 dollars, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years."

Having reference to the above, you are requested to furnish any foreign vessels, boats, or fishermen found within three marine miles of the shore, within your district, with a printed copy of the warning inclosed herewith.

If any fishing vessel or boat of the United States is found fishing, or to have been fishing, or preparing to fish, or if hovering within the three-mile limit, does not depart within twenty-four hours after receiving such warning, you will please place an officer on board of such vessel, and at once telegraph the facts to the Fisheries Department at Ottawa, and await instructions.

SIR: I have received your dispatch No. 55, Treaty, of the 15th ultimo, in which you inclose a copy of a note from Mr. Bayard, protesting against a warning alleged to have been given to United States fishing vessels by a Canadian customs official, with the view to prevent them from fishing within lines drawn from headland to headland from Cape Canso to St. Esprit, and from North Cape to East Point of Prince Edward Island.

In reply, I have to request you to acquaint Mr. Bayard that Her Majesty's Government have ascertained that no instructions to this effect have been issued by the Canadian Government, but that a further report is expected upon the subject.

It appears that the collector at Canso, in conversation with the master of a fishing vessel, expressed the opinion that the headland line ran from Cranberry Island to St. Esprit, but this was wholly unauthorized.

*Mr. Bayard to Mr. Hardinge.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 9, 1886.

SIR: I regret that it has become my duty to draw the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the unwarrantable and unfriendly treatment, reported to me this day by the United States consul-general at Halifax, experienced by the American fishing schooner Rattler, of Gloucester, Mass., on the 3d instant, upon the occasion of her being driven by stress of weather to find shelter in the harbor of Shelburne, Nova Scotia.

She was deeply laden and was off the harbor of Shelburne when she sought shelter in a storm and cast anchor just inside the harbor's entrance.

She was at once boarded by an officer of the Canadian cutter Terror, who placed two men on board.

When the storm ceased the Rattler weighed anchor to proceed on her way home, when the two men placed on board by the Terror discharged their pistols as a signal, and an officer from the Terror again boarded the Rattler and threatened to seize the vessel unless the captain reported at the custom-house.

The vessel was then detained until the captain reported at the custom-house, after which she was permitted to sail.

The hospitality which all civilized nations prescribe has thus been violated and the stipulations of a treaty grossly infringed.

A fishing vessel, denied all the usual commercial privileges in a port, has been compelled strictly to perform commercial obligations.

In the interests of amity, I ask that this misconduct may be properly rebuked by the Government of Her Majesty.

SIR: An affidavit has been filed in this Department by Reuben Cameron, master of the American schooner Golden Hind, of Gloucester, Mass., setting forth that, on or about the 23d of July ultimo, being out of water, he attempted to put into Port Daniel, Bay of Chaleurs, to obtain a fresh supply; that at the entrance of the bay, about four or five miles from land, the Golden Hind was boarded by an officer from the Canadian schooner E. F. Conrad, and by him ordered not to enter the Bay of Chaleurs; that said officer furnished Captain Cameron with a printed warning with this indorsement written thereon: "Don't enter the Bay of Chaleurs, M. S.;" and that in consequence of said act of the Canadian officer the Golden Hind was obliged to go across to Tignish, Prince Edward Island, to obtain water, whereby his fishing venture was interfered with, and loss and injury caused to the vessel and her owners.

I have the honor to protest against this act of officers of Her Britannic Majesty as not only distinctly unfriendly and contrary to the humane usages of civilized nations, but as in direct violation of so much of Article I of the convention of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain as secures forever to American fishermen upon the British North American coast admission to the bays or harbors thereof for the purpose of obtaining water. And for all loss or injury which may be shown to have accrued by reason of the act in question the Government of Her Britannic Majesty will be held justly liable.

I have further the honor to ask with all earnestness that the Government of Her Britannic Majesty will cause steps to be forthwith taken to prevent and rebuke acts so violative of treaty and of the common rites of hospitality.

SIR: Grave cause of complaint is alleged by the masters of several American fishing vessels, among which can be named the schooners Shiloh and Julia Ellen, against the hostile and outrageous misbehavior of Captain Quigley, of the Canadian cruiser Terror, who, upon the entrance of these vessels into the harbor of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, fired a gun across their bows to hasten their coming to, and placed a guard of two armed men on board each vessel, who remained on board until the vessels left the harbor.

In my note to your legation of the 9th instant I made earnest remonstrance against another unfriendly act of Captain Quigley, against the schooner Rattler, of Gloucester, Mass., which, being fully laden and on her homeward voyage, sought shelter from stress of weather in Shelburne Harbor, Nova Scotia, and was then compelled to report at the custom-house, and have a guard of armed men kept on board.

Such conduct cannot be defended on any just ground, and I draw your attention to it in order that Her Britannic Majesty's Government may reprimand Captain Quigley for his unwarranted and rude act.

It was simply impossible for this officer to suppose that any invasion of the fishing privileges of Canada was intended by these vessels under the circumstances.

The firing of a gun across their bows was a most unusual and wholly uncalled for exhibition of hostility, and equally so was the placing of armed men on board the peaceful and lawful craft of a friendly nation.

By the sworn statement of Solomon Jacobs, master of the schooner Mollie Adams, it appears that on the 31st ultimo, whilst on his homeward voyage laden with fish from the fishing banks, he was compelled to put into Port Mulgrave to obtain water, and duly made report and entry at the custom house. The water-tank of the vessel having been burst in his voyage by heavy weather and thus rendered useless, he asked permission of the collector to purchase two or three barrels to hold a supply of water for his crew on their homeward voyage of about 500 miles.

On the arrival of your note in London, Her Majesty's secretary of state for the colonies telegraphed to the officers administering the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland calling attention to the cases, and explaining that under the treaty of 1818 United States fishermen have the right to fish off the coasts of the Magdalen Islands and off certain coasts of Newfoundland, and stating that it was presumed that the customs officials in those places had not been instructed in the same way as on other parts of the coast.

On the 25th ultimo the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland were further instructed by dispatches from the colonial office to make full reports on the subject of the complaints in question, and it was recommended that special instructions should be issued to the authorities at those places where the inshore fishery has been granted by the convention of 1818 to the United States fishermen, calling their attention to the provisions of that convention, and warning them that no action contrary thereto may be taken in regard to United States fishing vessels.

I may add that information has been received that the warning notices referred to by you were discontinued in the beginning of Aug. st.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, September 23, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to bring to your attention an instance which has been brought to my knowledge of an alleged denial of one of the rights guaranteed by the convention of 1818, in the case of an American vessel.

Capt. Joseph E. Graham, of the fishing schooner A. R. Crittenden, of Gloucester, Mass., states under oath that on or about the 21st of July last, on a return trip from the open-sea fishing grounds to his home port, and while passing through the Strait of Canso, he stopped at Steep Creek for water. The customs officer at that place told him that if he took in water his vessel would be seized; whereupon he sailed without obtaining the needed supply, and was obliged to put his men on shore at allowance of water during the passage homeward.

I have the honor to ask that Her Britannic Majesty's Government cause investigation to be made of the reported action of the customs officer at Steep Creek, and if the facts be as stated, that he be promptly rebuked for his unlawful and inhumane conduct in denying to a vessel of a friendly nation a general privilege, which is not only held sacred under the maritime law of nations, but which is expressly confirmed to the fishermen of the United States throughout the Atlantic coasts of British North America by the first article of the convention of 1818.

It does not appear that the A. R. Crittenden suffered other damage by this alleged inhospitable treatment, but reserving that point the incident affords an illustration of the vexatious spirit in which the officers of the Dominion of Canada appear to seek to penalize and oppress those fishing vessels of the United States, lawfully engaged in fishing, which from any cause are brought within their reach.

SIR: With reference to your note of the 14th June relative to certain warnings alleged to have been given to United States fishing vessels by the subcollector of customs at Canso, I have the honor to inclose to you herewith by instruction from the Earl of Iddesleigh an extract from an approved report of the Canadian privy council dealing with this question.

I have, &c.,

[Inclosure.]

Extract from a certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council approved by his excellency the administrator of the Government in council on the 16th August, 1886.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a dispatch dated 15 July, 1886, from the secretary of state for the colonies in which he asks for a report from the Canadian Government on the subject of an inclosed note from Mr. Secretary Bayard to the British minister at Washington relating to certain warnings alleged to have been given to United States fishing vessels by the subcollector of customs at Canso.

Mr. Bayard states:

First. That the masters of the four American fishing vessels of Gloucester, Mass., Martha C. Bradley, Rattler, Eliza Boynton, and Pioneer, have severally reported to the consul-general at Halifax, that the subcollector of customs at Canso had warned them to keep outside an imaginary line drawn from a point three miles outside Canso head to a point three miles outside St. Esprit on the Cape Breton coast.

Second. That the same masters also report that they were warned against going inside an imaginary line drawn from a point three miles outside North Cape, in Prince Edward Island, to a point three miles outside East Point on the same island.

Third. That the same authority informed the masters of the vessels referred to that they would not be permitted to enter Bay Chaleur.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosures were referred, observes that the instructions issued to collectors of customs authorized them in certain cases to furnish United States fishing vessels with a copy of the circular inclosed, and which constitutes the only official "warning" collectors of customs are empowered to give. It was to be presumed that the subcollector of customs at Canso, as all other collectors, would carefully follow out the instructions received, and that therefore no case such as that alleged by Mr. Secretary Bayard would be likely to arise.

BAYARD.

The minister states, however, so soon as the dispatch above referred to was received he sent to the subcollector at Canso a copy of the allegations, and requested an immediate reply thereto.

The subcollector, in answer, emphatically denies that he has ordered any American vessel out of any harbor in his district or elsewhere, or that he did anything in the way of warning, except to deliver copies of the official circular above alluded to, and states that he boarded no United States vessel other than the Annie Jordan and the Hereward, and that neither the Martha C. Bradley, Rattier, or Pioneer, of Gloucester, have, during this season, reported at his port of entry. He, with equal clearness, denies that he has warned any United States fishing vessels to keep outside the line drawn from Cape North to East Point, alluded to by Mr. Secretary Bayard, or that they would not be permitted to enter Bay des Chaleurs.

The minister has every reason to believe the statements made by the subcollector at Canso, and, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, is of the opinion that the information which has reached the Secretary of State does not rest upon a trustworthy basis.

With reference to the concluding portion of Mr. Bayard's note, the minister observes that the occasion of the present dispatch, which has to deal mainly with questions of fact, does not render it necessary for him to enter upon any lengthened discussion of the question of headland limits.

SIR: With reference to your notes of the 10th of July last protesting against the action of Canadian authorities with regard to the United States vessel Novetty, and the action of the Canadian cruiser Middleton, in preventing United States boats from visiting St. Andrews, New Brunswick, for the purpose of there purchasing herring for canning, I have the honor to inclose to you herewith by instruction from the Earl of Iddesleigh a copy of a certified report of the Canadian privy council dealing with both questions.

The committee respectfully submit the annexed report from the minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the said dispatch and its inclosures were submitted, and they advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy thereof, if approved, to Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for the colonies.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES,
Ottawa, August 14, 1886.

The undersigned has the honor to submit the following in answer to a dispatch from Lord Granville to the governor-general under date 29th July last enclosing two notes from Mr. Secretary Bayard to the British minister at Washington, and asking that Her Majesty's Government be furnished with a report upon the cases therein referred to.

In his first communication, dated July 10, Mr. Bayard says:

"I have the honor to inform you that I am in receipt of a report from the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, accompanied by sworn testimony stating that the Novelty, a duly-registered merchant steam vessel of the United States, has been denied the right to take in steam coal, or purchase ice, or trans-ship fish in bond to the United States, at Pictou, Nova Scotia.

"It appears that having reached that port on the 1st instant, and finding the customs office closed on account of a holiday, the master of the Novelty telegraphed to the minister of marine and fisheries at Ottawa, asking if he would be permitted to do any of the three things mentioned above. That he received in reply a telegram reciting, with certain inaccurate and extended application, the language of Article I of the treaty of 1818, the limitations upon the significance of which are impending discussion between the Government of the United States and that of Her Britannic Majesty. That on entering and clearing the Novelty on the following day at the customs-house, the collector stated that his instructions were contained in the telegram the master had received, and that the privilege of coaling being denied, the Novelty was compelled to leave Pictou without being allowed to obtain fuel necessary for her lawful voyage on a dangerous coast.

"Against this treatment I make instant and formal protest as an unwarranted interpretation and application of the treaty by the officers of the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Nova Scotia, as an infraction of the laws of commercial and maritime intercourse existing between the two countries, and as a violation of hospitality, and for any loss or injury resulting therefrom the Government of Her Britannic Majesty would be held liable."

With reference to this the undersigned begs to observe that Mr. Bayard's statement appears to need modification in several important particulars.

In the first place, the Novelty was not a vessel regularly trading between certain ports in the United States and Canada, but was a fishing vessel whose purpose was to carry on the mackerel-seining business in the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, around the coasts of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia; that she had on board a full equipment of seines and fishing apparatus and men; that she was a steam vessel and needed coal, not for the purposes of cooking or warming, but to produce motive power for the vessel, and that she wished to pursue her business of fishing in the above-named waters and to send her fares home over Canadian territory, to the end that she might the more uninterruptedly and profitably carry on her business of fishing. That she was a fishing vessel and not a merchant vessel was proved not only by the facts above mentioned, but also from a telegram over the signature of H. B. Joyce, the captain of the vessel, a copy of which is appended. In his telegram Captain Joyce indicates the character of his vessel by using the words "American fishing steamer," and he signs himself "H. B. Joyce, master fishing steamer Novelty."

There seems no doubt, therefore, that the Novelty was in character and in purpose a fishing vessel, and as such comes under the provisions of the treaty of 1818, which allows United States fishing vessels to enter Canadian ports "for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages therein, and of purchasing wood and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever."

The object of the captain was to obtain supplies for the prosecution of his fishing and to trans-ship his cargoes of fish at a Canadian port, both of which are contrary to the letter and spirit of the convention of 1818.

To Mr. Bayard's statement that, in reply to Captain Joyce's inquiry of the minister of marine and fisheries, "he received in reply a telegram reciting, with certain inaccurate and extended application, the language of Article I of the treaty of 1818," the undersigned considers it a sufficient answer to adduce the telegrams themselves.

1.—Inquiry by the captain of the Novelty.

"Pictou, N. S., July 1, 1886.

Hon. GEORGE E. FOSTER,

"Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Ottawa:

"Will the American fishing steamer now at Pictou be permitted to purchase coal or to trans-ship fresh fish in bond to United States markets?

Please answer.

"H. B. JOYCE,

"Master of Fishing Steamer Novelty."

2.—Reply of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries thereto.

"OTTAWA, July 1, 1886.

"To H. B. JOYCE,

"Master American Fishing Steamer Novelty, Pictou, N. S.:

"By terms of treaty, 1818, United States fishing vessels are permitted to enter Canadian ports for shelter, repairs, wood, and water, and for no other purpose whatever. That treaty is now in force.

"GEORGE E. FOSTER,
"Minister of Marine and Fisheries."

The undersigned fails to observe wherein any "inaccurate or extended application" of the language of the treaty can be found in the above answer, inasmuch as it consists of a de facto citation from the treaty itself, with the added statement, for the information of the captain, that said treaty was at that time in force.

As to the "unwarranted interpretation and application of the treaty," of which Mr. Bayard speaks, the undersigned has already discussed that phase of the question in his memorandum of June 14, which was adopted by council and has been forwarded to Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Bayard's second note is as follows:

"On the 2nd of June last I had the honor to inform you that dispatches from Eastport, in Maine, had been received reporting threats by the customs officials of the Dominion to seize American boats coming into those waters to purchase herring from the Canadian weirs for the purpose of canning the same as sardines, which would be a manifest infraction of the right of purchase and sale of herring caught and sold by Canadians in their own waters in the pursuance of legitimate trade.

"To this note I have not had the honor of a reply.

"To-day Mr. C. A. Bontelle, M. C., from Maine, informs me that American boats visiting St. Andrews, N. B., for the purpose of there purchasing herring from the Canadian weirs for canning had been driven away by the Dominion cruiser Middleton.

"Such inhibition of usual and legitimate commercial contracts and intercourse is assuredly without warrant of law, and I draw your attention to it in order that the commercial rights of the citizens of the United States may not be thus invaded and subjected to unfriendly discrimination."

With reference to the above, the undersigned observes that so far as his information goes no collector of customs or captains of cruisers have threatened to "seize American boats coming into Canadian waters to purchase herring from Canadian weirs for the purpose of canning them as sardines."

Collectors of customs have, however, in pursuance of their duties under the customs law of Canada, compelled American vessels coming to purchase herring to enter and clear in conformity to customs law.

With reference to the action of the Dominion cruiser Middleton, the undersigned cannot do better than quote from the official report of the captain of that vessel as to the facts of the case referred to.

In his report of date 9th July, 1886, Captain McLean, of the General Middleton, says:

"At 9 a. m. made sail and drifted with the tide towards the bay. Seeing a large number of boats of various sizes hovering around the fishing weirs, I ordered the boat in waiting and sent Officer Kent in charge, giving him instructions to row down among the boats and see if there were any Americans purchasing fish. On the return of the boat Chief Officer Kent reported the boats mentioned were Americans, there for the purpose of getting herring. I immediately directed the chief officer to return and order the American boats to at once report themselves to the collector of the port and get permits to load fish or leave without further delay. One of the boatmen complied with the request, and obtained a permit to load fish for Eastport. The others were very much disturbed on receiving the above instructions, and sailed away toward the American side of the river and commenced blowing their fog-horns, showing their contempt. Other boats, at a greater distance, seeing our boat approaching, did not wait her arrival, but up sail and left for the American shore."

The above extract from the report of the chief officer of the General Middleton, goes to show that it was not his object to prevent American boats from trading in sardines, but rather to prevent them from trading without having first conformed to the customs law of Canada.

The whole respectfully submitted.

GEORGE E. FOSTER,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

*Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 19, 1886.

SIR: The Everett Steele, a fishing vessel of Gloucester, Mass., in the United States, of which Charles B. Forbes, an American citizen, was master, was about to enter, on the 10th of September, 1886, the harbor of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, to procure water and for shelter during repairs. She was hailed, when entering the harbor, by the Canadian cutter Terror, by whose captain, Quigley, her papers were taken and retained. Captain Forbes, on arriving off the town, anchored and went with Captain Quigley to the custom-house, who asked him whether he reported whenever he had come in. Captain Forbes answered that he had reported always, with the exception of a visit on the 25th of March, when he was driven into the lower harbor for shelter by a storm and where he remained only eight hours. The collector did not consider that this made the vessel liable, but Captain Quigley refused to discharge her; said he would keep her until he heard from Ottawa, put her in charge of policemen, and detained her until the next day, when at noon she was discharged by the collector; but a calm having come on she could not get to sea, and by the delay her bait was spoiled and the expected profits of her trip lost.

It is scarcely necessary for me to remind you, in presenting this case to the consideration of your government, that when the northeastern coast of America was wrested from France in a large measure by the valor and enterprise of New England fishermen, they enjoyed, in common with other British subjects, the control of the fisheries with which that coast was enriched, and that by the treaty of peace of 1783, which, as was said by an eminent English judge when treating an analogous question, was a treaty of "separation," this right was expressly affirmed.

It is true that by the treaty of 1818, the United States renounced a portion of its rights in these fisheries, retaining, however, the old prerogatives of visiting the bays and harbors of the British northeastern possessions for the purpose of obtaining wood, water, and shelter, and for objects incidental to those other rights of territoriality so retained and confirmed. What is the nature of these incidental prerogatives, it is not, in considering this case, necessary to discuss. It is enough to say that Captain Forbes entered the harbor of Shelburne to obtain shelter and water, and that he had as much right to be there under the treaty of 1818, confirming in this respect the ancient privileges of American fishermen on those coasts, as he would have had on the high seas, carrying on, under shelter of the flag of the United States, legitimate commerce. The Government which you so honorably represent has, with its usual candor and magnanimity, conceded that when a merchant vessel of the United States is stopped in time of peace by a British cruiser on the groundless suspicion of being a slave trader, damages are to be paid to this Government not merely to redress the injury suffered, but as an apology for the insult offered to the flag of the United States. But the case now presented to you is a much stronger one than that of a seizure on the high seas of a ship unjustly suspected of being a slaver. When a vessel is seized on the high seas on such a suspicion, the seizure is not on waters where its rights, based on prior and continuous ownership, are guaranteed by the sovereign making the seizure. If in such case the property of the owners is injured, it is, however wrongful the act, a case of rare occurrence, on seas comparatively unfrequented, with consequences not very far reaching; and if a blow is struck at a system of which such vessel is unjustly supposed to be a part, such system is one which the civilized world execrates. But seizures of the character of that which I now present to you have no such features. They are made in waters not only conquered and owned by American fishermen, but for the very purpose for which they were being used by Captain Forbes, guaranteed to them by two successive treaties between the United States and Great Britain.

These fishermen also, I may be permitted to remind you, were engaged in no nefarious trade. They pursue one of the most useful and meritorious of industries. They gather from the seas, without detriment to others, a food which is nutritious and cheap, for the use of an immense population. They belong to a stock of men which contributed before the Revolution most essentially to British victories on the North-eastern Atlantic, and it may not be out of place to say they have shown since that Revolution, when serving in the Navy of the United States, that they have lost none of their ancient valor, hardihood, and devotion to their flag.

The indemnity which the United States has claimed, and which Great Britain has conceded, for the visitation and search of isolated merchantmen seized on remote African seas on unfounded suspicion of being slavers, it cannot do otherwise now than claim, with a gravity which the importance of the issue demands, for its fishermen seized on waters in which they have as much right to traverse for shelter as have the vessels by which they are molested. This shelter, it is important to observe, they will as a class be debarred from if annoyances such as I now submit to you are permitted to be inflicted on them by minor officials of the British Provinces.

Fishermen, as you are aware, have been considered, from the usefulness of their occupation, from their simplicity, from the perils to which they are exposed, and from the small quantity of provisions and protective implements they are able to carry with them, the wards of civilized nations; and it is one of the peculiar glories of Great Britain that she has taken the position—a position now generally accepted—that even in time of war they are not to be the subjects of capture by hostile cruisers. Yet, in defiance of this immunity thus generously awarded by humanity and the laws of nations, the very shelter which they own in these seas, and which is ratified to them by two successive treaties, is to be denied to them, not, I am confident, by the act of the wise, humane, and magnanimous Government you represent, but by deputies of deputies permitted to pursue, not uninfluenced by local rivalry, these methods of annoyance in fishing waters which our fishermen have as much right to visit on lawful errands as those officials have themselves. For let it be remembered that by annoyances and expulsions such as these the door of shelter is shut to American fishermen as a class.

If a single refusal of that shelter, such as the present, is sustained, it is a refusal of shelter to all fishermen pursuing their tasks on those inhospitable coasts. Fishermen have not funds enough nor outfit enough, nor, I may add, recklessness enough to put into harbors where, perfect as is their title, they meet with such treatment as that suffered by Captain Forbes.

To sanction such treatment, therefore, is to sanction the refusal to the United States fishermen as a body of that shelter to which they are entitled by ancient right, by the law of nations, and by solemn treaty. Nor is this all. That treaty is a part of a system of mutual concessions. As was stated by a most eminent English judge in the case of Sutton v. Sutton (1 Myl. & K., 675), which I have already noticed, it was the principle of the treaty of peace, and of the treaties which followed between Great Britain and the United States, that the "subjects of the two parts of the divided Empire should, notwithstanding the separation, be protected in the mutual enjoyment" of the rights those treaties affirmed. If, as I cannot permit myself to believe, Great Britain should refuse to citizens of the United States the enjoyment of the plainest and most undeniable of these rights, the consequences would be so serious that they cannot be contemplated by this Government but with the gravest concern.

Mr. Bayard to Sir L. West.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 20, 1886.

SIR: Permit me to ask you to draw the attention of your Government to the case set forth in the inclosed affidavit of Murdock Kemp, master of the American fishing vessel Pearl Nelson, of Provincetown, Mass., which has been subjected to treatment, by the customs officials at Arichat, Nova Scotia, inconsistent with the international law of ordinary amity and hospitality, and also plainly violative of treaty rights under the convention of 1818 between Great Britain and the United States.

The vessel in question was compelled by stress of weather to seek shelter in the harbor of Arichat, Nova Scotia, and arrived late at night, when the custom-house was closed.

Before the custom-house was opened the next day the captain went there, and after waiting over an hour the collector arrived, and the usual inward report was made and permission asked to land the clothing of a sailor lost overboard, whose family resided in that vicinity.

He was then informed that his vessel was seized for allowing his crew to go ashore the night before before reporting at the custom-house.

The cruel irony of this was apparent when the collector knew such report was impossible, and that the landing of the crew was usual and customary, and that no charge of smuggling had been suggested or was possible under the circumstances.

To compel the payment of a fine, or "a deposit" of $200, which is practically the same in its results, was harsh and unwarranted, and was adding a price and a penalty to the privilege of shelter guaranteed to American fishermen by treaty.

This vessel was a fishing vessel, and, although seeking to exercise no commercial privileges, was compelled to pay commercial fees, such as are applicable to trading vessels, but at the same time was not allowed commercial privileges.

I beg you will lose no time in representing the wrong inflicted upon an unoffending citizen of the United States, and procure the adoption of such orders as will restore the money so compelled to be deposited.

I am, sir, &c.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure.]

*Schooner Pearl Nelson.*UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
District of Massachusetts :

I, Murdock Kemp, of Provincetown, in Massachusetts, a citizen of the United States, on my oath do say that I was master and part owner of the schooner Pearl Nelson, a vessel of the United States duly licensed —, 1886, for the fisheries, and holding a permit to touch and trade during the existence of said license.

I further say that the crew of said vessel were shipped on wages at Provincetown and Boston for a fishing voyage to the Grand Banks and return to Provincetown for discharge. Said schooner, with license and permit as aforesaid, sailed May 23, 1886, from Provincetown, and on her passage home touched at Arichat, Cape Breton, driven in there by stress of weather. Sailed by the wind from Bank Quero, and blowing fresh, a heavy sea running, and foggy, made Point Michaux, 9 miles from Arichat. The vessel was deep; her dorys floated on deck in her lee waist, wind being about west. I concluded to make a harbor and wait for better weather and wind. I anchored the vessel in Arichat Harbor at 11 p. m., September 7, 1886. I had lost a man on the Grand Banks, named James Sampson, who belonged to Arichat, and I wanted to land his effects if the customs officers would allow me to. Some of my crew belonged in that neighborhood. William Babins, my cook, and nine others of the crew took boats off the deck and went ashore without asking my permission. I saw them, but had never known there was any objection. I had been in this and other British North American ports frequently and witnessed the landing from my own and other vessels' crews, but never before heard such landing was illegal or improper. These men took nothing from the vessel with them, nor carried away anything but the clothes they wore.

From the time I left Provincetown I had been into no port anywhere. Next morning after my arrival in Arichat, at 8½ o'clock, I went ashore to enter at the customs-house, and found it closed. I called at 9 o'clock and it was not open. I went again at 10 o'clock and found the collector opening the office door. I made the regular inward report to him and requested permission to land the clothes of James Sampson, who had been lost from my vessel on the Grand Banks. He told me he had sent a man for me. After I got there this man came in. The officer was holding my papers and told the man to go back and take charge of the vessel. I asked him why he held my papers; he replied he seized her because I had allowed my men to go ashore before reporting at the custom-house; that all he would tell me was he said he would telegraph to Ottawa and find out what to do with me; and he did telegraph immediately. About 5 o'clock p. m. the collector received an answer, and told me to deposit $200 and the vessel would be released. The collector would not allow me to land this dead man's clothes until after I had paid the $200 fine. I gave the clothes to the shopkeeper to give to Sampson's widow or friends. I came out of Arichat about 11 a. m. on the 8th of September, 1886, having bought there one bushel of potatoes with the collector's permission, and arrived at Provincetown September 14, 1886. I sailed from Arichat with all my crew on board, and had not at any time intended to leave any of my crew at that port. They were hired men, shipped to be discharged on return at Provincetown, and on our arrival there were all paid off and discharged.

Some of the crew that went ashore at Arichat returned aboard as early as 7 o'clock and all were aboard about the time the vessel was seized. I gave them no money there and had none myself. I further say I did not enter Arichat with any intention of violating any law of the Dominion of Canada, nor for any business, but solely because of the stress of weather that had driven me there. It was mere kindness only that prompted me to offer to land Sampson's clothes there where his friends could get them. There was no profit to the vessel, crew, or myself expected in so doing, or attempted to be gained in entering the port of Arichat other than shelter from the stress of weather we had been under from Quero Bank. If any revenue law of Canada was violated by my vessel or by myself, the same was done through ignorance and inadvertence and not with any intention to defraud the revenue or offend the laws.

SIR: I inclose copies of two letters received at this Department from George Steele, president of the American Fishery Union at Gloucester, Mass.

The object of these letters is to obtain authentic information of the administration of Canadian laws regulating the sale and exportation of fresh herring from Grand Manan Island and its vicinity, a trade which, the writer avers, has been carried on almost exclusively in American vessels for many years.

By the statements of the letter of Mr. Steele dated October 25, it appears that although the vessels employed in this trade are duly registered in their home port as fishing vessels, yet that so far as the proposed trade is concerned, they are not manned nor equipped, nor in any way prepared for taking fish, but their use is confined to the carriage of fish as merchandise to ports in the United States, a commercial transaction pur et simple.

May I ask the favor of an early response to the inquiries propounded by Mr. Steele?

Captain Cunningham reported his vessel inwards as follows, viz: Schooner Rattler of Gloucester, 93 tons register; 16 men from fishing bank, with 465 barrels mackerel came in for shelter. I was afterwards informed by the officers of cutter that they found the schooner the evening before at anchor off Sandy Point, 5 miles down the harbor, two men from cutter were put on board, and the master required to report at customs in the morning. I was also informed that the master, Captain Cunningham, made an attempt to put to sea in the night, by hoisting sails, weighing anchor, &c., but was stopped by officers from cutter.

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the administrator of the Government in council on the 21st September, 1886.

The committee of the privy council have had under their consideration a dispatch dated 5th August, 1886, from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, transmitting a copy of a letter from the foreign office with a copy of a note from Mr. Bayard, and protesting against the action of Captain Kent, of the Dominion cruiser General Middleton, in refusing Stephen A. Balkam permission to buy fish from Canadians.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the dispatch and inclosures were referred, submits the following report from the first officer of the General Middleton:

"HALIFAX, August 25, 1886.

"I have the honor to state that when boarding several boats in St. Andrews Bay I asked Stephen R. Balkam if the boat he was in was American. He replied that he thought she was. I informed him that if she was American he could not take fish from the weirs on the English side without a permit from the collector of customs at St. Andrews or West Isles.

"He asked permission to take the fish from the weirs in Kelly's Cove without a permit. I declined to accede to his request.

"Mr. Balkam went around the point in his boat, and, after accosting several others, I met him again, evidently trying to evade my instructions. I told him that he must not take the fish without permission from the customs. He left for the American shore and I returned to the Middleton.

"Mr. Stephen R. Balkam I have known for some years. He formerly belonged to St. Andrews, but is now living in Eastport. His business is to carry sardines from the English side to Eastport for canning purposes."

The minister is of opinion, in view of the above, that in warning Mr. Balkam that if his boat belonged to the United States he could not take herring from the weirs without first having reported at the custom-house, Mr. Kent acted within the scope of the law and his instructions.

The committee respectfully advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, as requested in his dispatch of the 5th August last.

Clerk, Privy Council, Canada.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 11, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith copies of the statements with affidavits from Capt. Medeo Rose, master of the schooner Laura Sayward, of Gloucester, Mass., and of Capt. Joseph Tupper, master of the schooner Jeannie Seaverns, also of Gloucester, forwarded to me by the collector of the port of Gloucester, under date of 5th instant.

The first impressively describes the inhospitable and inhuman conduct of the collector of the port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, in refusing to allow Captain Rose to buy sufficient food for himself and crew to take them home, besides unnecessarily retaining his papers, and thus preventing him, with a wholly inadequate supply of provisions, from proceeding on his voyage.

The second complaint is of Captain Quigley, commanding the Canadian cruiser Terror, in not only preventing Captain Tupper from landing to visit his relatives in Liverpool, Nova Scotia, but even forbidding his relatives from coming on board his vessel to see him, and likewise placing a guard on board of her to insure that result.

While I need not comment further than I have already done in previous notes on the unjust and unwarrantable acts of the Dominion officials of late towards our fishermen, of which the instances now presented are but repetitions, I must notice the new phase of Captain Quigley's abuse of authority in actually making Captain Tupper a prisoner on board of his own vessel, and in preventing his relatives, whom he states he had not seen for many years, from meeting him.

Such conduct, apart from all its legal and international aspects, is wholly unworthy of any one intrusted with the execution of a public duty and inconsistent with the national reputation for humanity and courtesy of an officer in Her Majesty's service.

Affidavit of Captain Rose, of the schooner Laura Sayward.

I, Medeo Rose, master of schooner Laura Sayward, of Gloucester, being duly sworn, do depose and say: That on Saturday, October 2d, being then on Western Bank on a fishing trip, and being short of provisions, we hove up our anchor and started for home. The wind was blowing almost a gale from the northwest, and being almost dead-ahead we made slow progress on our voyage home. On Tuesday, October 5th, we made Shelburne, Nova Scotia, and arrived in that harbor about 8 p. m. on that day, short of provisions, water, and oil to burn. On Wednesday I sailed for the inner harbor of Shelburne. Arriving at the town about 4 p. m., on going ashore I found the custom-house closed, and hunted up the collector and entered my vessel, and asked permission from him to buy 7 pounds sugar, 3 pounds coffee, one-half to 1 bushel potatoes, and 2 pounds of butter, or lard or pork, and oil enough to last us home, and was refused. I stated to him my situation, short of provisions, and a voyage of 250 miles before me and plead with him for this slight privilege, but it was of no avail. I then visited the American consul and asked his assistance and found him powerless to aid me in this matter. The collector of customs held my papers until the next morning, although I asked for them as soon as I found I could not buy any provisions, say about an hour and a half after I entered, but he refused to give them to me until the next morning. Immediately on receiving my papers on Thursday morning, I started for home, arriving on Sunday. I think the treatment I received harsh and cruel, driving myself and crew to sea with a scant supply of provisions, we having but little flour and water and liable to be buffeted about for days before reaching home.

Affidavit of Captain Tupper, of the schooner Jeannie Seaverns.

I, Joseph Tupper, master of schooner Jeannie Seaverns, of Gloucester, Mass., being duly sworn, do depose and say: That on Thursday, October 23, while on my passage home from a fishing trip, the wind blowing a gale from southeast, and a heavy sea running, I was obliged to enter the harbor of Liverpool, Nova Scotia, for shelter. Immediately on coming to anchor was boarded by Captain Quigley, of Canadian cruiser Terror, who ordered me to go on shore at once and enter at the custom-house, to which I replied that such was my intention. He gave me permission to take two men in the boat with me, but they must remain in the boat and not step on shore. I asked Captain Quigley if I could, after entering, visit some of my relatives who resided in Liverpool, and whom I had not seen for many years. This privilege he denied me. After entering, having returned to my vessel, some of my relatives came off to see me. When Captain Quigley saw their boat alongside of my vessel he sent an officer and boat's crew, who ordered them away, and at sundown he placed an armed guard on board our vessel, who remained on board all night, and was taken off just before we sailed in the morning.

I complied with the Canadian laws, and had no intention or desire to violate them in any way; but to be made a prisoner on board my own vessel, and treated like a suspicious character, grates harshly upon the feelings of an American seaman, and I protest against such treatment, and respectfully ask from my own Government protection from such unjust, unfriendly, and arbitrary treatment.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 1, 1886.

SIR: As possessing additional and very disagreeable bearing upon the general subject of the harsh treatment of American fishing vessels during the late season by the local authorities of the maritime provinces of Her Majesty's Dominion of Canada, I have the honor to send you herewith a copy of a letter addressed to me, under date of the 12th ultimo, by Capt. Solomon Jacobs, master of the American fishing schooner Molly Adams, of Gloucester, Mass. You will share, I doubt not, the regret I feel at such churlish and inhospitable treatment of a vessel which had freely, and with great loss and inconvenience, rendered such essential service to the suffering and imperiled crew of a Nova Scotian vessel. But for his generous act Captain Jacobs would have had no occasion to put into Malpeque, or, subsequently, when short of provisions, into Port Medway. As his narrative shows, the local authorities at Malpeque treated him with coldness and rudeness, making no provision to receive the Nova Scotian crew he had saved from such imminent danger, even causing him to incur a pecuniary burden in completion of his humane rescue, and even treating the landing of the property so saved from the wreck of the Nova Scotian vessel, on her own shores, as not lawful for an American fishing vessel "within the three-mile limit."

The treatment of Captain Jacobs at Port Medway is a fitting sequel to that received by him at Malpeque. Having undergone fourteen days detention in the latter port, and having shared his purse and slender stock of provisions with the men he had rescued, he put to sea, when, his supplies falling short by reason of his charitable action, he asked leave to purchase at Port Medway "half a barrel of flour, or enough provisions to take his vessel and crew home." With full knowledge of the cause of Captain Jacobs's dearth of provisions, even this the collector at Port Medway absolutely refused, and threatened Captain Jacobs with the seizure of his vessel "if he bought anything whatever." The urgent need of supplies in which Captain Jacobs stood, is shown by the fact that although the run with favorable weather from Port Medway to his home port, Gloucester, Mass., only occupied three days, his crew were on half rations for two days, and without food for one day of that time. It is painful to conjecture what might have been their distress had the Molly Adams encountered storms or head winds.

I am confident that Her Majesty's Government, than which none has more generously fulfilled the obligations of the unwritten code of seafaring humanity, will hasten to rebuke the treatment of Captain Jacobs at the hands of the local authorities of Nova Scotia, by exhibiting gratitude for his act in saving seventeen of their own people from death, and tendering him compensation for the delays and expenses he has undergone through the breaking up of his legitimate fishing venture.

The closing part of Captain Jacobs's letter may serve to show the irresponsible and different treatment he was subjected to in the several ports he visited, where the only common feature seems to have been a surly hostility. At Port Hood, for instance, Captain Jacobs being sick, his brother landed and reported in his stead, and, after paying the regular fee, was told that his report was a nullity, and that the vessel would be liable to penalty for unauthorized landing of her crew unless her captain reported in person, which, although ill, he was compelled to do, and the fee was thereupon levied a second time. This is a small matter measured by the amount of the fee, but it is surely discreditable and has a tendency which cannot be too much deplored.

In my late correspondence I have treated of the necessary and logical results of permitting so irritating and unfriendly a course of action, and I will not therefore now enlarge on this subject.

[Inclosure.]

Captain Jacobs to Mr. Bayard.

GLOUCESTER, November 12, 1886.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I would most respectfully ask your attention to the following facts as showing the spirit and manner of the application of law on the part of the officials of the Dominion of Canada.

On or about the 26th of September, when off Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, I fell in with the British schooner Neskilita, of Lockeport, Nova Scotia, which had run on Malpeque bar in making the harbor. It was blowing very heavy; sea running high. The crew was taken off by my vessel about 12 o'clock at night. There were seventeen men in all. We took care of them, and fed them for three days. The Neskilita became a total wreck. We saved some of the material.

The cutter Critic, Captain McClennan, one of the Canadian cruisers, was lying in the harbor of Malpeque. The captain boarded my vessel, and I reported to him the facts of the wreck and the condition of the men. They had saved a portion of their clothing. He neither offered to care for the wrecked crew, to feed them, nor to give them or myself any assistance whatever. Having some of the wrecked material on board, I asked the captain of the cutter for permission to land it. He referred me to the local collector. I went to the collector, and he referred me back to the captain of the cutter. As the cutter had gone out, the captain of the Neskilita assumed the responsibility and took the things ashore. The captain of the cutter told me that I could put the saved material on board a Nova Scotia vessel if I went outside of the three-mile limit to do it. I endeavored to get some of the people on shore to take the wrecked crew, but no one would do it unless I would be responsible for their board. Finally, I gave the crew $60, enough to pay their passage home on the cars, and also gave them provisions to last during their journey.

Malpeque is a barred harbor, and it is only in smooth water that it is safe to go out over the bar, and my vessel drawing fourteen feet of water, and there was only fourteen feet of water on the bar, it was impossible for me to go out. By being detained in port in disposing of this wrecked crew I lost over ten days of valuable time before I could get out to fish, and during that time the fleet took large quantities of mackerel. Having to feed so many on my vessel left me short of provisions, and in a short time afterwards I put into Port Medway, and stated the circumstances, and asked permission to buy half a barrel of flour or enough provisions, to take my vessel and crew home. This was absolutely refused, and the collector threatened me that if I bought anything whatever he would seize my vessel. I was obliged to leave without obtaining anything and came home in three days, on short rations, a distance of 300 miles. The wind and weather being favorable, we had a good passage, but yet we were without provisions for one day before we arrived home. I wish to state most emphatically that the officials differ in their construction of our rights. Fees are different in every port, and as there is no standard of right fixed by our own Government, the fishermen are at the mercy of a class of officials hostile to them and their business, and with but little knowledge of law or its application.

For instance, at Souris, Prince Edward Island, 15 cents is charged. For reporting at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, 50 cents is charged. At Port Hood, I being sick, my brother went to the custom-house to report. The official charged him 25 cents, and told him that unless the captain reported in person the report was invalid; that men from the vessel would not be allowed ashore unless the captain reported.

In the afternoon of the same day I was able to go to the office, and was charged 25 cents for my report, making 50 cents. In the matter of anchorage fees, at Port Mulgrave, Nova Scotia, I paid $1.50; at Malpeque, $1; at Sydney, $1.17. At some ports we have to pay anchorage fees every time we go in, as at Halifax; at others twice for the season.

Now, I would most respectfully state that the official service throughout is actuated apparently from a principle of annoyance wherever and whenever it can be so applied; that there is only harmony of action in this regard alone, and that local laws and regulations are enforced against us without regard to any rights we may have under treaty; that the effect of this enforcement is not to promote but to interfere and to limit by unjust pains, fees, and penalties the right of shelter, obtaining wood and water, and making of repairs guaranteed by treaty of 1818; that instead of the restriction contemplated the local laws make a technical obligation that is without their province or power, and enforce penalties that should never be admitted or allowed by our Government.

And I would pray that in the case recited, and many others that can be shown if required, we may be protected from local laws and their enforcement that abridge our rights and have never received the sanction of the two great contracting powers in the construction and agreement of the treaty of 1818.

Certified copy of a report of a committee of the honorable the privy council of Canada, approved by his excellency the governor-general, in council, on the 24th day of November, 1886.

The committee of the privy council having had their attention called by a telegram, dated 15th November instant, from Her Majesty's minister at Washington, to his former dispatch of the 28th October ultimo, inclosing a copy of a note from the honorable Mr. Bayard, and the inclosures, asking for authentic information respecting the Canadian laws regulating the sale and exportation of fresh herring from the Grand Mandan Island.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom said dispatch was referred for early report, states that any foreign vessel "not manned nor equipped, nor in any way prepared for taking fish," has full liberty of commercial intercourse in Canadian ports upon the same conditions as are applicable to regularly registered foreign merchant vessels; nor is any restriction imposed upon any foreign vessel dealing in fish of any kind different from those imposed upon foreign merchant vessels dealing in other commercial commodities.

That the regulations under which foreign vessels may trade at Canadian ports are contained in the customs laws of Canada (a copy of which is herewith), and which render it necessary, among other things, that upon arrival at any Canadian port a vessel must at once enter inward at the custom-house, and upon the completion of her loading, clear outwards for her port of destination.

The committee recommend that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, together with a copy of the customs laws, as containing authentic information respecting Canadian laws regulating the sale and exportation of fresh herring, to Her Majesty's minister at Washington, for the information of the honorable Mr. Bayard, Secretary of State for the United States.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk, Privy Council.

FORTY-SEVEN VICTORIA, CHAP. 29.

AN ACT to amend the customs act, 1883. Assented to April 19, 1884.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the senate and house of commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. Section 188 of "the customs act, 1883," is repealed and the following section enacted in lieu thereof:

"188. All penalties and forfeitures incurred under this act or any other law relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, may, in addition to any other remedy provided by this act or by law, be prosecuted, sued for and recovered with full costs of suit, in the exchequer court of Canada, or in any superior court or court of vice-admiralty, having jurisdiction in that province in Canada where the cause of prosecution arises, or wherein the defendant is served with process; and if the amount of any such penalty or forfeiture does not exceed $200, the same may, in the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Manitoba, and Prince Edward Island, respectively, also be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered in any court having jurisdiction in the place where the cause of prosecution arises, or where the defendant is served with the process."

2. Section 153 of the said act is repealed and the following section enacted in lieu thereof:

"153. If any person, with intent to defraud the revenue of Canada, smuggles or clandestinely introduces into Canada any goods subject to duty, or makes out, or issues, or attempts to pass through the custom-house any false, forged, or fraudulent invoice, or in any way attempts to defraud the revenue by evading the payment of the duty, or of any part of the duty on any goods, such goods shall be seized and forfeited; and every such person, his aiders and abettors, shall, in addition to any other penalty or forfeiture to which he and they may be subject for such offense, be liable, on conviction, to a penalty of not less than $50 and not more than $200, or to imprisonment for a term not less than one month nor more than one year, or to both fine and imprisonment within the said limits; and such conviction may be had in a summary manner, before any two justices of the peace or before any judge or magistrate having the powers of two justices of the peace."

3. Section 86 of the said act is hereby repealed.

4. This act shall be construed as part of the act amended by it, but its provisions, so far as they differ from those for which they are substituted, shall apply not only to cases in which the offense has been committed, but also to those in which the prosecution for the penalty or forfeiture thereby incurred is commenced after the passing of this act, although the offense was committed before the passing thereof.

FORTY-SIX VICTORIA, CHAP. 12.

AN ACT to amend and consolidate the acts respecting the customs. Assented to 25th May 1883.

Her Majesty by and with the advice and consent of the senate and house of commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. This act may be cited as "the customs act, 1883."

2. This act shall be construed as being passed in amendment and consolidation of the act passed in the fortieth year of Her Majesty's reign (A. D. 1877), entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the act respecting the customs," and of any act amending the same.

3. This act shall come into force upon, from, and after the day of the passing thereof, and upon, from, and after the said day the acts and part of acts mentioned in the schedule hereto, and all acts, enactments, or provisions of law inconsistent with this act, or making any provision for any matter provided for by this act, are hereby repealed, and this act is substituted for them; provided always, that all acts or enactments repealed by any of the said acts shall remain repealed, and that all orders in council and regulations made under the acts hereby repealed, or under any former act relating to customs, so far as the same have not been revoked, or are not inconsistent herewith, shall remain in force until revoked or altered by competent authority; and all things lawfully done, and all obligations incurred, bonds given, duties accrued, and rights acquired under the said acts, or any of them, shall remain valid and may be enforced, and all offenses committed, penalties, forfeitures, or liabilities incurred under them, or any of them, may be prosecuted, punished, and enforced, and all proceedings and things lawfully commenced under them, or any of them, may be continued and completed under the said acts, or under corresponding provisions of this act, which shall not be construed as now law, but as a consolidation and continuation of the said repealed acts, subject to the amendments and new provisions hereby made. Anything heretofore done, or any offense committed or liability incurred under any provisions of any of the said repealed acts, which is repeated without material alteration in this act, may be alleged or referred to as having been done, committed, or incurred under the repealed act in which such provision was made, or under this act; and every such provision shall be construed as having had and as having the same effect, and from the same time, as under such repealed act, and any reference in any former act or document to any such provision in any of the said repealed acts, may hereafter be construed as a reference to the corresponding provision of this act.

4. The following terms and expressions wherever used in this act, or in any other laws relating to the customs, shall, unless it be otherwise specially provided, or there be something in the context repugnant to or inconsistent with such construction, be construed and interpreted as follows: The word "port" means a place where vessels or vehicles may discharge or load cargo; the word "collector" means the collector of the customs at the port or place intended in the sentence, or any person lawfully deputed, appointed, or authorized to do the duty of collector thereat; the word "officer" means an officer of the customs; the word "vessel" means any ship, vessel, or boat of any kind whatever, whether propelled by steam or otherwise, and whether used as a sea-going vessel or on inland waters only, unless the context be manifestly such as to distinguish one kind or class of vessel from another, and the word "vessel" includes "vehicle"; the word "vehicle" means any cart, car, wagon, carriage, barrow, sleigh, or other conveyance of what kind soever, whether drawn or propelled by steam, by animals, by hand or other power, and includes the harness or tackle of the animals, and includes also the fittings, furnishings, and appurtenances of the vehicle; the word "master" means the person having or taking charge of any vessel or vehicle; the word "conductor" means the person in charge or having the chief direction of any railway train; the words "owner," "importer," or "exporter,"

All the terms and provisions of this act, or of any such law as aforesaid, shall receive such fair and liberal construction and interpretation as will best insure the protection of the revenue and the attainment of the purpose for which this act or such law was made, according to its true intent, meaning, and spirit.

5. The following provisions of this act shall apply to all duties of customs imposed by any act of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, whether now in force or passed in the present session or in any future session of the said Parliament.

6. On each and every non-enumerated article which bears a similitude, either in material, quality, or the use to which it may be applied, to any enumerated article chargeable with duty, the same rate of duty shall be payable which is charged on the enumerated article which it most resembles in any of the particulars before mentioned.

7. If any non-enumerated article equally resembles two or more enumerated articles on which different rates of duty are chargeable, the duty on such non-enumerated article shall be the same as that on the enumerated article which it resembles, paying the highest duty.

8. On all articles manufactured from two or more materials, the duty shall be that charged on the article (if there be a difference of duty) which is charged with the highest duty.

9. If an article be enumerated in the tariff under two or more names or descriptions, and there be a difference of duty, the highest duty provided shall be charged and collected thereon.

10. Spirits and strong waters, from whatever substance distilled or prepared, having the flavor of any kind of spirits or strong waters, subject to a higher duty than whisky, shall be liable to the duty imposed on spirits or strong waters of which they have the flavor.

11. Inasmuch as disputes may arise as to whether any or what duty is payable on particular goods, therefore when there is no decision in the matter by any competent tribunal, or there are decisions inconsistent with each other, the governor in council may declare the duty payable on the kind of goods in question, or that such goods are exempt from duty; and any order in council containing such declaration and fixing such duty (if any) and published in the Canada Gazette, shall, until otherwise ordered by Parliament, have the same force and effect as if such duty had been fixed and declared by law; and a copy of the said Gazette containing a copy of any such order shall be evidence thereof.

12. All duties, penalties, or forfeitures imposed by any act relating to the customs shall be payable in money, being a legal tender, at such rate as that $4.86½ of such money shall be of equal value with the British sovereign or pound sterling; and all such duties shall be paid and received according to the weights and measures established by statute in that behalf:

(2) All invoices of goods shall be made out in the currency of the country whence the goods are imported, and shall contain a true statement of the value of such goods; and in computing the value for duty of such currency, the rate thereof shall be such as has been ordered and proclaimed from time to time by the governor in council, who is hereby empowered to make such order; and the rate ordered shall be based upon the actual value of the standard coins or currency of such country as compared with the standard dollar of Canada in so far as such comparative values are known; and in all cases wherein the value of a currency has not been proclaimed, or where there is no fixed standard value, or wherein from any cause the value of such currency has become depreciated, then there shall be attached to the invoice of the goods imported the certificate of some consul resident in such place or country, showing the extent of such depreciation, or the true value of the currency in which such invoice is made out, then and there, as compared with the standard dollar of Canada; provided, however, that in cases where the value of a depreciated currency is dependent upon the rate of exchange on London, it shall be optional with the importer, with the consent of collector of customs, to compute the value for duty at the rate of exchange certified by the bank through which drawn, as current at the time and place when and whence the goods were exported to Canada; provided further, that when the currency value is so determined at the time of entry, either by a consul's certificate, or by the certificate of the bank as above provided, such rate or value shall be final and not open to any readjustment by reason of the subsequent production of any certificate not corresponding in rate or value with that adopted.

13. In all cases wherein the duties are imposed according to any specific quantity or to any specific value, the same shall be deemed to apply in the same proportion to any greater or less quantity or value, and to any fractional part of such specific quantity.

14. The duties imposed by any act relating to the customs shall be held to be duties within the meaning of the act of the Parliament of Canada, entitled "As act to provide for the better auditing of the public accounts," and of any act of the said Parliament amending the same, and shall, with all matters and things thereunto relating, be subject to the provision of the said act or acts, and to the regulations and orders of the governor in council, made or to be made under the authority thereof, in so far as the same are not inconsistent with this act; and all moneys arising from such duties, or from any penalties hereby imposed, and belonging to Her Majesty, shall be paid over by the officer receiving the same to the receiver-general, and shall form part of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

15. The true amount of customs duties payable to Her Majesty with respect to any goods imported into Canada or exported therefrom, and the additional sum (if any) payable under section 102 of this act, shall, from and after the time when such duties should have been paid or accounted for, constitute a debt due and payable to Her Majesty, jointly and severally, from the owner of the goods at the time of the importation or exportation thereof, and from the importer or exporter thereof, as the case may be; and such debt may at any time be recovered with full costs of suit in the exchequer court of Canada, or in any provincial court having jurisdiction in cases of debt to the amount claimed.

16. No goods shall be unladen from any vessel arriving at any port or place in Canada from any place out of Canada, nor from any vessel having dutiable goods on board brought coastwise, nor shall bulk be broken within 3 leagues of the coast until due entry has been made of such goods, and warrant granted for the unloading of the same; and no goods shall be so unladen (unless for the purpose of lightening the ship or vessel in crossing over a shoal or bar or sand-bank) except between sunrise and sunset, and on some day not being a Sunday or statutory holiday, and at some hour and place at which an officer of the customs is appointed to attend the unloading of goods, or at some place for which a surffiance has been granted by the collector or other proper officer for the unloading of such goods; and if, after the arrival of the vessel within 3 leagues of the coast, any alteration be made in the stowage of the cargo so as to facilitate the unlawful unloading of any part thereof, or if any part thereof be fraudulently staved, destroyed, or thrown overboard, or any package be opened, it shall be deemed a breaking of bulk, and all goods unladen contrary to this act shall be seized and forfeited; and if bulk be broken contrary to this act, the master shall forfeit $200, and the vessel may be detained until the said fine is paid or satisfactory security is given for the payment thereof; and unless payment be made or security be given within thirty days such vessel may, at the expiration thereof, be sold to pay the said penalty.

17. The governor in council may, by regulation from time to time, appoint the ports and places of entry for the purposes of this act, and may in like manner increase or diminish the number, or alter the position or limits thereof.

18. All goods imported into Canada, whether by sea, land, coastwise, or by inland navigation, whether dutiable or not, must be brought in at a port of entry where a custom-house is lawfully established.

19. All goods or merchandise exported by sea, land, or by inland navigation, shall be reported at the nearest custom-house, or, if exported from any place where no custom-house is established, they must be reported within twenty-four hours of the time of such export at the nearest custom-house, according to such regulations as may be established by the governor in council from time to time.

20. If any goods are imported into Canada at any other place than at some port or place of entry at which a custom-house is then lawfully established, or being brought into such port or place of entry by land or inland navigation, are carried past such custom-house or removed from the place appointed for the examination of such goods by the collector or other officer of the customs at such port or place before the same have been examined by the proper officer and all duties thereon paid and a permit given accordingly, such goods shall be seized and forfeited; and each and every person concerned in such unlawful importation or removal shall be subject to a penalty equal to the value of such goods.

22. If any vessel, worth more than $300, with dutiable goods on board, enters any place other than a port of entry (unless from stress of weather or other unavoidable cause), such goods (except those of an innocent owner) shall be seized and forfeited, and the vessel may be seized and the master or person in charge thereof shall incur a penalty of $500, and the vessel may be detained until such penalty be paid or security given for the payment thereof; and, unless payment be made or satisfactory security be given within thirty days, such vessel may, at the expiration thereof, be sold to pay the said penalty.

23. If any goods are unlawfully imported by land they shall be seized and forfeited, together with the vehicle in or by which such goods are so imported or removed, and the horses or other cattle employed in drawing such vehicle, or in importing or removing such goods.

24. If any goods are unlawfully imported on any railway they shall, in like manner, be seized and forfeited, and the car in which such goods were so imported shall be seized and detached from the train and forfeited; and any conductor, baggage-master, or any officer or servant employed on any railway, and any officer or servant employed by any express company, who is privy to or aids or abets in such unlawful importation, shall, upon summary conviction thereof, be liable to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200, or to imprisonment for not less than three months nor more than twelve months, or to both fine and imprisonment within the said limits.

25. The master of every vessel coming from any port or place out of the Dominion of Canada, or coastwise, and entering any port in Canada, whether laden or in ballast, shall go without delay, when such vessel is anchored or moored, to the custom-house for the port or place of entry where he arrives, and there make a report in writing to the collector or other proper officer, of the arrival and voyage of such vessel, stating her name, country, and tonnage, the port of registry, the name of the master, the country of the owners, the number and names of the passengers (if any), the number of the crew, and whether she is laden or in ballast, and if laden, the marks and numbers of every package and parcel of goods on board, and where the same was laden, and the particulars of any goods stowed loose, and where and to whom consigned, and where any and what goods, if any, have been laden or unladed, or bulk has been broken, during the voyage, what part of the cargo and the number and names of the passengers which are intended to be landed at that port, and what and whom at any other port in Canada, and what part of the cargo (if any) is intended to be exported in the same vessel, and what surplus stores remain on board—as far as any of such particulars can be known to him.

26. In the case of every vessel bound for any seaport in Canada, from any port out of Canada, the collector or proper officer of such Canadian port may cause such vessel to be boarded by an officer of customs, detailed by him for such service, at any place within three marine miles of the anchorage ground, and such officer may demand from the master or purser of such vessel a correct copy of the report inwards, intended by him to be presented at the custom-house on arrival. Such boarding officer may remain on board the vessel until she anchors, and the copy of the report so received by him shall be deposited by him at the custom-house as the vessel's report inwards for comparison with that to be presented by the master in person.

27. The master or person in charge of any vessel, whether laden or in ballast, arriving by inland navigation in any port or place of entry in Canada, from any place beyond the limits of Canada, and having any goods therein (whether any duty be payable on such goods or not) shall go without delay, when such vessel is anchored or moored, directly to the custom-house for such port or place of entry, and make a report in writing (in such form as may be appointed for that purpose by competent authority), to the collector or other proper officer, of the arrival of such vessel, stating in such report the marks and numbers of every package and parcel of goods in such vessel, or in the charge and custody of such person, from what place the same are respectfully brought, and to what place and to whom consigned or belonging, as far as such particulars are known to him; and he shall then and there produce such goods to the collector or other proper officer, and shall declare that no goods have been unladed from such vessel or have been put out of his possession, between the time of his coming within the limits of Canada and of his making his report and affidavit, and shall further answer all such questions concerning such vessel or goods as are demanded of him by such collector or officer.

28. The master shall at the time of making his report, if required by the officer of customs, produce to him the bills of lading of the cargo, or true copies thereof, and shall make and subscribe an affidavit referring to his report and declaring that all the statements made in the report are true; and shall further answer all such questions concerning the vessel and cargo, and the crew, and the voyage, as shall be demanded of him by such officer, and shall, if required, make the substance of any such answer part of his report.

29. If any goods are unladen from any vessel before such report be made, or if the master fails to make such report, or makes an untrue report, or does not truly answer the questions demanded of him, as provided in the next preceding section, he shall forfeit the sum of $400, and the vessel may be detained until the said fine be paid.

30. Any goods not reported, found on board of any vessel or landed, shall be seized and forfeited, unless it appears that there was no fraudulent intention, in which case the master shall be allowed to amend his report; but the necessary discharging of any goods for the purpose of lightening the vessel in order to pass any shoal, or otherwise for the safety of such vessel, shall not be deemed an unlawful landing or breaking of bulk.

31. If the contents of any package intended for importation into another port, or for exportation, be unknown to the master, the officer may open and examine it, and cause it for that purpose to be landed if he sees fit; and if any prohibited goods be found therein, all the goods in such package shall be seized and forfeited.

32. In order to avoid injuries delay to steamers and other vessels under certain circumstances, the governor in council may make such regulations as may be considered advisable for the appointment of suflerance wharves and warehouses, at which goods arriving by vessels in transit to other ports, or confined to certain days of departure, may be landed and afterward stored before entry, such vessels being duly reported to the custom-house, and having obtained the collector's warrant for the purpose; provided such landing be effected between sunrise and sunset, on a day not being Sunday or a statutory holiday, and provided the goods, on being so landed, are immediately stored in some such approved suflerance warehouse, and such goods shall be thereafter dealt with by the customs as prescribed by law; but nothing in this section shall affect any contract, express or implied, between the master or owner of any such vessel and the owner, shipper, or consignee of any such goods as aforesaid, or the rights or liability of any party under such contract; and provided further, that the governor in council may make similar regulations for the appointment of suflerance warehouses, in which goods arriving by railway may be stored before entry, such goods having been duly reported to the collector or proper officer of customs.

33. The conductor of every railway train carrying freight arriving at any port in Canada from any foreign port shall come directly, and before bulk is broken, to the custom-house at such port, and report all merchandise on board his train, or in any particular car belonging to such train, stating the marks and numbers of every package and parcel of goods on board, and where the same was laden, and where and to whom consigned, and what part thereof, if any, is intended to pass in transitu through Canada to some port or place in the United States, or to be transhipped at some other port in Canada, to be exported to a port or place out of Canada; and if any goods are unladen before such report is made, except by written permission of the collector, or proper officer of customs, or if the conductor fails to make such report, or makes an untrue report, or does not truly answer any questions put to him respecting the same, he shall forfeit the sum of $400.

34. The person in charge of any vehicle, arriving by land in any place in Canada, and containing goods, whether any duty be payable on such goods or not, and the person in charge of any vehicle so arriving, if the vehicle or its fittings, furnishings or appurtenances, or the animals drawing the same or their tackle, is or are liable to duty, and any person whosever so arriving in Canada from any port or place out of Canada, on foot or otherwise, and having with him or in his charge or custody, any goods, whether such goods be dutiable or not, shall come to the nearest custom-house or to the station of the nearest officer of customs, before unloading or in any manner disposing of the same, and make a report in writing to the collector or proper officer of customs, stating the contents of each and every package and parcel of goods, and the quantities and values of the same; and shall also then answer all questions respecting such goods or packages, and the vehicle, fittings, furnishings and appurtenances, and animals, and the tackle appertaining thereto, as the said collector, or proper officer of customs, may require of him, and shall then and there make due entry of the same, in accordance with the law in that behalf.

35. Fresh fish, coin, or bullion may be landed without entry or warrant, as may also goods in any stranded or wrecked vessel; provided they be duly reported and entered as soon as possible after being safely deposited on shore, and that the landing be in presence of an officer of the customs or receiver of wreck, or other person authorized to do the acts of such receiver under "the wreck and salvage act, 1873," and any act amending the same.

36. If a vessel having live stock or perishable articles on board arrives after business hours, the collector or any officer at the port may permit the master to unlade the same before report; but report shall in such case be made as soon as may be after the next opening of the customs office.

34. It shall not be lawful, unless otherwise authorized by the governor in council, to import any goods, wares, or merchandise from any port or place out of Canada in any vessel which has not been duly registered and has not a certificate of such registry on board.

35. If any goods are unladen from any vessel or vehicle, or put out of the custody of the master or person in charge of the same, before report is made as required by this act, or if such person or master fails to make such report, or to produce such goods, or makes an untrue report, or does not truly answer the questions demanded of him, he shall for each such offense forfeit the sum of $400; and if any such goods are not so reported and produced, or if the marks and numbers or other description of any package do not agree with the report made, such goods or package shall be seized and forfeited, and the vessel or vehicle and the animals drawing the same shall be detained until such amount be paid.

36. Every importer of any goods by sea or from any place out of Canada shall, within three days after the arrival of the importing vessel, make due entry inwards of such goods, and land the same; and every importer of any goods imported by inland navigation in a decked vessel of 100 tons burden or more, shall, within twenty-four hours of the arrival of the importing vessel, make due entry inwards of such goods, and land the same; and every importer of any goods imported by inland navigation in any undecked vessel, or in any vessel less than 100 tons burden, or by land, shall, forthwith, after the importation of such goods, produce the same to the proper officer and make due entry thereof.

37. The person entering any goods inwards shall deliver to the collector or other proper officer, an invoice of such goods showing the place and date of purchase and the name or style of the firm or person from whom the goods were purchased, and a full description thereof in detail, giving the quantity and value of each kind of goods so imported, and a bill of the entry thereof, in such form as shall be appointed by competent authority, fairly written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, and in duplicate, containing the name of the importer,—and, if imported by water, the name of the vessel and of the master, and of the place to which bound, and of the place, within the port, where the goods are to be unladen,—and the description of the goods, and the marks and numbers and contents of the packages, and the place from which the goods are imported, and of what country or place such goods are the growth, produce, or manufacture.

38. Unless the goods are to be warehoused in the manner by this act provided, the importer shall, at the same time, pay down, or cause to be so paid, all duties upon all goods entered inwards; and the collector or other proper officer shall, immediately thereupon, grant his warrant for the unlading of such goods, and grant a permit for the conveyance of the same goods further into Canada, if so required by the importer.

39. In default of such entry and landing, or production of the goods, or payment of duty, the officer of customs may convey the goods to a customs warehouse, or some secure place appointed by the collector for such purpose, there to be kept at the risk and charge of the owner; and if such goods be not duly entered within one month from the date of their being so conveyed to the custom warehouse, or other appointed place, and all charges of removal and warehouse rent duly paid at the time of such entry, the goods shall be sold by public auction to the highest bidder, and the proceeds thereof shall be applied, first to the payment of duties and charges, and the overplus, if any, after discharging the vessel's lien, or other charges for transportation, shall be paid to the owner of the goods or to his lawful agent; provided, always, that in case the same cannot be sold for a sum sufficient to pay the duties and charges if offered for sale for home consumption, or the charges if offered for sale for exportation, such goods shall not be sold, but be destroyed.

40. Any goods unladen or landed before due entry thereof and warrant for landing, shall be seized and forfeited, and any person concerned in landing or receiving or concealing goods so landed, shall, for each offense, forfeit $400.

41. If any goods are brought in any decked vessel, from any place out of Canada to any port of entry therein, and not landed, but it is intended to convey such goods to some other port in Canada in the same vessel, there to be landed, then the duty shall not be paid nor the entry completed at the first port, but at the port where the goods are to be landed, and to which they shall be conveyed accordingly, under such regulations and with such security or precautions for compliance with the requirements of this act, as the governor in council may, from time to time, appoint.

46. The collector may require from the importer (or from his agent) of any goods charged with duty, or conditionally exempted from duty, or exempt therefrom, before admitting the said goods to entry, such further proof as he deems necessary, by oath or declaration, production of invoice or invoices, or bills of lading or otherwise, that such goods are properly described and rated for duty, or come properly within the meaning of such exemptions.

47. Any package of which the importer or his agent declares the contents to be unknown to him, may be opened and examined by the collector or other proper officer, in the presence of such importer or agent, and at the expense of the importer, who shall also bear the expense of repacking.

48. No entry, nor any warrant for the landing of any goods, or for the taking of any goods out of any warehouse (as hereinafter provided) shall be deemed valid, unless the particulars of the goods and packages in such entry or warrant correspond with the particulars of the goods and packages purporting to be the same in the report of the vessel, or other report (where any is required) by which the importation or entry thereof is authorized, nor unless the goods have been properly described in such entry by the denominations, and with the characters and circumstances according to which such goods are charged with duty or may be imported; and any goods taken or delivered out of any vessel, or out of any warehouse, or conveyed into Canada beyond the port or place of entry, by virtue of any entry or warrant not corresponding with the facts in all such respects, or not properly describing the goods, shall be deemed to be goods landed or taken without due entry thereof, and shall be seized and forfeited; and the collector or proper officer, after the entry of any goods, may, on suspicion of fraud, open and examine any package of such goods, in presence of two or more credible witnesses, and if, upon examination, the same are found to agree with the entries, they shall be repacked by such collector or proper officer, at the public cost, but otherwise they shall be seized and forfeited.

49. The quantity and value of any goods shall always be stated in the bill of entry thereof, although such goods are not subject to duty; and the invoice thereof shall be produced to the collector.

50. The surplus stores of vessels arriving in Canada shall be subject to the same duties and regulations as if imported as merchandise; but if the owner or master desires to warehouse the same for reshipment for the future use of the vessel, the collector may permit him so to do.

51. Vessels entering the Gut of Annapolis may be reported and entered, and the duties on goods therein imported paid either at the port of Digby or Annapolis.

52. Vessels entering the Great Bras d'Or and Little Bras d'Or shall be reported and entered at such place as the minister of customs may, from time to time, direct.

53. If any goods imported by water, or partly by water and partly by land, on which duties (ad valorem or specific or both) are payable, receive damage during the voyage of importation between the actual departure of the vessel in which they are laden from the foreign port of exportation and the actual arrival of the goods at the port of destination in Canada, whereby such goods have become lessened in value, an abatement may be made in the manner hereinafter provided in the duty payable upon such goods, or in case duty has been paid thereon, a refund of a part of such duty may be made proportionate to the damage sustained; provided the claim therefor is made in due form and properly substantiated at the first landing from such vessel of the goods, and while they are in the custody of the Crown, or as soon after such first landing as they can be examined; provided also, that such examination be completed and certified by the collector of customs, customs appraiser, or other proper officer, whose duty it shall be to assess such damage within ten days of such landing.

54. If any goods imported by railway, or by any other land vehicle, on which duties (ad valorem, or specific, or both) are payable, receive damage during the course of transportation, after they are laden on such railway or other vehicle, and before they arrive at the Canadian port of destination, whereby they become lessened in value, an abatement may be made in the manner hereinafter provided in the duty payable upon such goods, provided the claim for such abatement is made in due form within ten days of the arrival of such goods at the Canadian port of destination, and substantiated in the same manner as provided in the next preceding section.

55. The collector of customs or appraiser or other proper officer whose duty it may be to examine and assess the amount of damage sustained on voyage or in course of importation, shall do so with all possible dispatch on being notified to that effect, and shall certify to the exact cause and extent of such damage with reference to the value of the goods in the principal markets of the country whence imported, and not according to the value in Canada.

56. The collector or appraiser shall not regard as evidence of the existence or amount of damage any price realized at an auction or forced sale thereof, nor shall he estimate nor shall any damage be allowed which may have originated from decay,

57. Upon the collector or appraiser ascertaining the percentage of damage, such percentage shall be deducted from the original value thereof, and duty shall then be levied and collected on such reduced value at an ad valorem rate which shall be equivalent to the rate of specific or specific and ad valorem duty which should have been collected upon such goods if they had not been so damaged.

58. When any vessel is entered at the custom-house at any port in Canada, on board of which there are any goods on which any duty has been levied or collected or on which any duty has been deposited, and thereafter the said goods are lost or destroyed before the same are landed from such vessel, or from any vessel or craft employed to lighten such vessel, then, on proof being made on the oath of one or more credible witnesses or witnesses, before and to the satisfaction of the collector or proper officer of the customs at the place (who shall administer the oath) that such goods, or any part thereof (specifying the same), have been so lost or destroyed before the landing of the same, the duties on the whole or the part thereof so proved to be lost or destroyed shall, if the same have been paid or deposited, be returned to the owner or his agent.

59. If any vessel having received damage puts into a port in Canada to which she is not bound, having dutiable goods on board, which it may be necessary to land for the purpose of repairing the vessel in order to enable her to proceed on her voyage, the collector, upon application of the master or agent, may permit such goods to be unladen and deposited in a warehouse in the custody of the collector; and the collector shall cause to be taken an exact account of the packages and contents, and entry of the goods shall then be made by the master or agent as hereinbefore directed, and they shall remain in the custody of the collector until the vessel is ready for sea, when upon payment of storage and the reasonable charges of unloading and storing, the collector shall deliver up the same to the master or agent to be exported or carried coastwise, as the case may be, under the same security and regulations as if such goods had been imported in the usual manner, and without payment of duty. No person shall be entitled to the benefit of this section who shall have sold any of such goods, except such as it may have been necessary to sell to defray the expense of repairs and charges of the vessel, or as may have been authorized by the collector of customs; and if goods are sold for payment of repairs and charges they shall be subject to duty, and shall be warehoused, or the duties thereon paid by the purchaser.

60. Goods derelict, flotsam, jetsam, or wreck, or landed or saved from any vessel wrecked, stranded, or lost, brought, or coming into Canada, shall be subject to the same duties and regulation as goods of the like kind imported are subject to.

61. If any person has in his possession, in port or on land, any goods, derelict, flotsam, jetsam, or wreck, the same being dutiable, and does not give notice thereof to the nearest officer of customs without unnecessary delay, or does not on demand pay the duties thereon or deliver the same to the proper officer, he shall forfeit $200, in addition to all other liabilities and penalties incurred by him, and the goods shall be seized and forfeited; and if any person removes or alters in quantity or quality any such goods, or unnecessarily opens or alters any package thereof or abets any such act before the goods are deposited in a warehouse under the custody of the customs officers, he shall, in addition to all other liabilities and penalties incurred by him, forfeit $200.

62. If the duties on such goods are not paid within eighteen months from the time when the same were so delivered as aforesaid, the same may be sold in like manner and for the same purposes as goods imported may in such default be sold; if they are sold for more than enough to pay the duty and charges thereon, the surplus shall be paid over to the person entitled to receive it.

63. All goods exempt from duty as being imported or taken out of warehouse for the use of Her Majesty's troops, or for any purpose for which such goods may be imported free of duty, shall, in case of the sale thereof after importation, become liable to and charged with the duties payable on like goods on their importation for other purposes; and if such duties be not paid, such goods shall be forfeited, and may be seized and dealt with accordingly.

64. In all cases where duties are charged according to the weight, tale, gauge, or measure, such allowances shall be made for tare and draft upon the packages as may be appointed by regulation made by the governor in council; but when the original invoice of any goods is produced, and a declaration of the correctness thereof made as hereinafter provided, the tare according to such invoice shall be deducted from the gross weight of the goods instead of the allowances aforesaid; subject, however, to such further regulation as the governor in council may, from time to time, make.

65. The collector or any appraiser under this act, may take samples of any goods imported, for the purpose of ascertaining whether any and what duties are payable on such goods, and such samples shall be disposed of as the minister of customs may direct.

65. The governor in council may appoint one or more appraisers, to be called Dominion customs appraisers, with jurisdiction at all ports and places in Canada; and may also appoint customs appraisers with jurisdiction at such ports and places in Canada as may be designated in the order in council in that behalf; and each such appraiser shall, before acting as such, take and subscribe the following oath of office before any collector or other person duly authorized to administer such oath:

"I, A. B., having been appointed an appraiser of goods, wares, and merchandise, and to act as such at the port of _____ (or as the case may be), do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully perform the duties of the said office without partiality, fear, favor or affection, and that I will appraise the value of all goods submitted to my appraisement according to the true intent and meaning of the laws imposing duties of customs in this Dominion; and that I will use my best endeavor to prevent all fraud, subterfuge, or evasion of the said laws, and more especially to detect, expose, and frustrate all attempts to undervalue any goods, wares, or merchandise on which any duty is chargeable. So help me God."

67. If no appraiser is appointed in any port of entry, the collector there shall be as appraiser, but without taking any special oath of office as such; and the minister of customs may, at any time, direct any appraiser to attend at any port or place for the purpose of valuing any goods, or of acting as appraiser there during any time in which such appraiser shall accordingly do without taking any new oath of office; and every appraiser shall be deemed an officer of the customs.

68. Where any duty ad valorem is imposed on any goods imported into Canada, the value for duty shall be the fair market value thereof, when sold for home consumption, in the principal markets of the country whence and at the time when the goods were exported directly to Canada.

(69. Such market value shall be the fair market value of such goods in the usual and ordinary commercial acceptance of the term, at the usual and ordinary credit and not the cash value of such goods, except in cases in which the article imported is by universal usage, considered and known to be a cash article, and so bona fide paid for in all transactions in relation to such article; and all invoices representing cash values, except in the special cases hereinbefore referred to, shall be subject to such additions as to the collector or appraiser of the port at which they are presented may appear just and reasonable, to bring up the amount to the true and fair market value as required by this section.

70. Where a drawback of duties has been allowed by the government of the country where the goods were manufactured, the amount of such drawback shall be taken into account and considered to be a part of the fair market value of such goods; and in cases where the amount of such drawback has been deducted from the value of such goods upon the face of the invoice under which entry is to be made, or is not shown thereupon, the collector of customs, or proper officer, shall add the amount of such deduction to the drawback and collect and cause to be paid the lawful duty thereon.

71. No deduction of any kind shall be allowed from the value of any goods imported into Canada because of any drawback paid or to be paid thereon, or because of any special arrangement between the seller and purchaser having reference to the exportation of such goods, or the exclusive right to territorial limits for the sale thereof, or because of any royalty payable upon patent rights but not payable when goods are purchased for exportation, or on account of any other consideration under which a special reduction in price might or could be obtained; provided that nothing herein shall be understood to apply to general fluctuations of market values.

72. No deduction from the value of goods contained in any invoice shall be allowed on account of the assumed value of a package or packages, where no charge for such package or packages has been made in such invoice; and where such charge is made, it shall be the duty of the customs officer to see that the charge is fair and reasonable, and represents no more than the original cost thereof.

73. No deduction from the value of goods in any invoice shall be made on account of charges for packing, or for straw, twine, cord, paper, cording, wiring, or cutting, or for any expense incurred or said to have been incurred in the preparation of packing of goods for shipment, and all such charges and expenses shall, in all cases, be included as part of the value for duty.

74. The governor in council may provide that in the cases and on the conditions to be mentioned in the order, goods bona fide exported to Canada from any country, but passing in transitu through another country, shall be valued for duty as if they were imported directly from such first-mentioned country.

75. The standards or instruments by which the colors and grades of sugar are to be regulated, and the class to which sugars shall be held to belong, with reference to duty chargeable thereon, shall be selected and furnished from time to time to the collectors of such ports of entry as may be necessary, by the minister of customs, in such manner as he may deem expedient; and the decision of the appraiser, or of the collector of a port where there is no appraiser, as to the class to which any sugar belongs, and the duties to which it is subject, shall be final and conclusive, unless upon appeal to the commissioner of customs, within thirty days, such decision be, with the approval of the minister, changed; the decision of the commissioner, with such approval, shall then be final.

76. All cane-juice, sirup of sugar or of sugar-cane, melado, concentrated melado or concentrated molasses, entered as molasses, or under any other name than cane-juice, sirup of sugar or of sugar-cane, melado, concentrated melado, or concentrated molasses, shall be seized and forfeited.

77. The value for duty on which any ad valorem duties on sugar, molasses, melado, sirup of sugar, or sugar-cane, sirup of molasses or of sorghum, concentrated melado or concentrated molasses, and sugar candy, shall, unless otherwise provided, be calculated and taken, shall include the value of the packages containing the same, and the shipping and other charges on such articles; and the value for duty shall be the value of the goods "free on board," at the place or port whence last exported direct to Canada; and the governor in council shall have power to declare what charges shall be included in such value so defined.

78. The governor in council shall have power to interpret, limit or extend the meaning of the conditions upon which it is provided in any act imposing duties of customs, that any article may be imported free of duty for special purposes, or for particular objects or interests; and to make regulations either for declaring or defining what cases shall come within the conditions of such act, and to what objects or interests of an analogous nature, the same shall apply and extend, and to direct the payment or non-payment of duty in any such case, or the remission thereof by way of drawback if such duty has been paid.

79. If the importer of any goods whereon a duty ad valorem is imposed, or the person authorized to make the declaration required with regard to such goods, makes and subscribes a declaration before the collector or other proper officer, that he cannot, for want of full information, make perfect entry thereof, and takes the oath in such cases provided, then the collector or officer may cause such goods to be landed on a bill of sight for the packages and parcels thereof, by the best description that can be given, and to be seen and examined by such person and at his expense, in the presence of the collector or principal officer, or of such other officer of the customs as shall be appointed by the said collector or other proper officer, and to be delivered to such person, on his depositing in the hands of the collector or officer a sum of money sufficient in the judgment of the collector or officer to pay the duties thereon; and if the importer does not complete a perfect entry within the time appointed by the collector, the money so deposited shall be taken and held to be the duty accruing on such goods, and shall be dealt with and accounted for accordingly.

80. Such sight entry may be made as aforesaid and the goods may be delivered, if such importer or person as aforesaid makes oath or affirms that the invoice has not been and cannot be produced, and pays to the collector or proper officer aforesaid a sum of money sufficient in the judgment of such collector or officer to pay the duties on such goods, and such sum shall then be held to be the amount of the said duties.

81. Except only in cases where it is otherwise provided herein, or by regulation of the governor in council, no entry shall be deemed perfect unless a sufficient invoice of the goods to be entered, duly certified in writing thereon as correct by the person, firm, and corporation from whom the said goods were purchased, has been produced to the collector and duly attested as required by this act.

82. With the bill of entry of any goods there shall be produced and delivered to and left with the collector an invoice of the goods, as provided in the next preceding section, attested by the oath of the owner, and if the owner be not the person entering such goods then verified by the oath of the importer or consignee, or (subject to the provision hereinafter made) other person who may lawfully make such entry and verify such invoice in the form or to the effect of the oath or oaths provided or to be provided by order in council in that behalf, which oath or oaths shall be written or printed, or partly written and partly printed on such invoice, or on the bill of entry (as the case may be), or shall be annexed thereto, and shall in either case distinctly refer to such invoice so that there can be no doubt as to its being the invoice to which such oath is intended to apply, and shall be subscribed by the party making it and certified by the signature of the person before whom it is made; and the bill of entry shall also contain a statement of the quantity and value for duty of the goods therein mentioned, and shall be signed by the person making the entry, and shall be verified in the form or to the effect of the oath provided or to be provided by order in council in that behalf.

83. If there be more than one owner, importer, or consignee of any goods, any one of them cognizant of the facts may take the oath required by this act; and such oath shall be sufficient unless the goods have not been obtained by purchase in the ordinary way, and some owner resident out of Canada is the manufacturer or producer of the goods, or concerned in the manufacture or production thereof, in which case the oath of such non-resident owner (or one of them, if there be more than one) cognizant of the fact shall be requisite to the due attestation of the invoice.

84. The invoice of any goods produced and delivered to the collector with the bill of entry thereof, must, if required by the collector, be attested by the oath of the owner or one of the owners of such goods, and must be verified also by the oath of the importer, or consignee, or other person who may, under this act, lawfully make entry of such goods and verify such invoice, if the owner or one of the owners is not the person entering such goods, and must also, if required by the collector, be attested by the oath of the non-resident owner being the manufacturer or producer of such goods, in the case mentioned in the next preceding section, although one of the owners be the person entering the goods and verifying the invoice on oath.

85. If the owner, importer, or consignee of any goods be dead, or a bankrupt, or insolvent, or if for any cause his personal estate be administered by another person, then his executor, curator, administrator, or assignee, or person administering as aforesaid, may, if cognizant of the facts, take any oath and make any entry which such owner, importer, or consignee might otherwise have taken or made.

86. No evidence of the value of any goods imported into Canada, or taken out of warehouse for consumption therein, at the place whence and the time when they are to be deemed to have been exported to Canada, contradictory to or at variance with the value stated in the invoice produced to the collector, with the additions (if any) made to such value by the bill of entry, shall be received in any court in Canada.

87. Any oath required under the provisions of this act connected with the entry of goods may be made in Canada before the collector, subcollector, surveyor, or chief clerk at the port where the goods are entered, or if the person making such oath is not resident there, then before the collector or proper officer of some other port; and when such oath is required to be made out of the limits of Canada, it may be made at any place within the United Kingdom, or at any place in Her Majesty's possessions abroad, before the collector or before the mayor or other chief municipal officer of the place where the goods are shipped, or before a notary public, and at any other place before a British consul, or if there be no British consul, then before a foreign consul at such place.

88. The commissioner of customs or other person acting as deputy head of the department, and all officers holding under order in council the rank of chief clerk of the inside service in the said department, and all duly appointed inspectors of customs ports, shall, by virtue of their office, have full authority to administer oaths and receive all affirmations and declarations required or authorized by this act, and the governor in council may, from time to time, by regulation, appoint or designate such other and additional persons, officers, or functionaries, as he sees fit, by name, or by their name of office, and in Canada or out of it, as those before whom such oaths may be validly taken, and may, by any order in council relax or dispense with the provisions of this act touching such oaths, in or with regard to goods imported by land or inland navigation, or to any other class of cases to be designated in such regulation.

89. No person other than the owner, consignee, or importer of the goods of which entry is to be made, shall be allowed to take any oath connected with the entry, unless there be attached to the bill of entry therein referred to, a declaration by the owner, consignee, or importer of the said goods or his attorney and agent duly appointed to transact business with the collector, pursuant to the provisions in that behalf of this act, to the same effect as the oath, distinctly referring to the invoice presented with such bill of entry, and signed by such owner, importer or consignee, or by his attorney and agent appointed as aforesaid, either in presence of the agent making the entry, who shall attest the signature, or of some justice of the peace or notary public, who shall attest the same.

90. Such declaration shall be kept by the collector; and if there be any willful false statement in such declaration, the goods shall be liable to seizure and forfeiture in the same manner and with the same effect as if such false statement were contained in the oath, and the person making such false statement shall be subject to the same penalties, forfeitures, and criminal punishments as if he had himself taken the oath and had made such false statement therein; but such written declaration may

All vessels with the guns, tackle, apparel, and furniture thereof, vehicles, harness, tackle, horses, and cattle made use of in the importation or unshipping or landing or removal of any goods liable to forfeiture under this act, shall be seized and forfeited; and every person assisting or otherwise concerned in importing, unshipping, landing, or removal, or in the harboring of such goods, or into whose hands or possession the same knowingly come, shall forfeit treble the value of such goods, or the penalty of $200 at the election of the party suing for the same; and the averment in any information or libel exhibited for the recovery of such penalty, that such party has elected to sue for the same mentioned in the information or libel, shall be sufficient proof of such election, without any other evidence of the fact.

163. If any vessel is found hovering (in British waters) within one league of the coasts or shores of Canada, any officer of customs may go on board and enter into such vessels and stay on board such vessel while she remains within the limits of Canada or within one league thereof; and if any such vessel is bound elsewhere and so continues hovering for the space of twenty-four hours after the master has been required to depart by such officer of customs, such officer may bring the vessel into port and examine her cargo, and if any goods prohibited to be imported into Canada are on board, then such vessel with her apparel, rigging, tackle, furniture, stores, and cargo shall be seized and forfeited; and if the master or person in charge refuses to comply with the lawful directions of such officer or does not truly answer such questions as are put to him respecting such ship or vessel or her cargo, he shall forfeit and pay the sum of $400.

164. Every person proved to have been on board any vessel or boat liable to forfeiture for having been found within one league of the coasts or shores of Canada, having on board or attached thereto or conveying or having conveyed anything subjecting such vessel or boat to forfeiture, or who shall be proved to have been on board any vessel or boat from which any part of the cargo shall have been thrown overboard or destroyed, or in which any goods shall have been unlawfully brought into Canada, shall forfeit $100, provided such person shall have been knowingly concerned in such acts.

165. Officers of customs may board any vessel at any time or place and stay on board until all the goods intended to be unladen shall have been delivered; they shall have free access to every part of the vessel, with power to fasten down hatchways, the fore-castle excepted, and to mark and secure any goods on board; and if any place, box or chest be locked, and the keys withheld, the officer may open the same. If any goods be found concealed on board they shall be seized and forfeited, and if any mark, lock, or seal upon any goods on board be wilfully altered, opened, or broken, before the delivery of the goods, or if any goods be secretly conveyed away, or if hatchways fastened down by the officer be opened by the master, or with his assent, the master shall forfeit $400, and the vessel may be detained until the said fine be paid, or satisfactory security be given for the payment thereof.

166. The collector or other proper officer of the customs may station officers on board any ship while within the limits of a port, and the master shall provide every such officer with suitable accommodation and food, under a penalty of $200.

167. If any person at any time forges or counterfeits any mark or brand to resemble any mark or brand provided or used for the purposes of this act, or forges or counterfeits the impression of any such mark or brand, or sells or exposes to sale, or has in his custody or possession, any goods with a counterfeit mark or brand, knowing the same to be counterfeit, or uses or affixes any such mark or brand to any other goods required to be stamped as aforesaid, other than those to which the same was originally affixed, such goods so falsely marked or branded shall be seized and forfeited, and every such offender, and his aiders, abettors or assistants, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $200, which penalty shall be recoverable in a summary way, before any two justices of the peace in Canada; and in default of payment the party so offending shall be committed to any of Her Majesty's jails in Canada, for a period not less than two months and not exceeding twelve months.

168. If any person counterfeits or falsifies, or uses when so counterfeited or falsified, any paper or document required under this act, or for any purpose therein mentioned, whether written, printed, or otherwise, or by any false statement, procures such document, or forges or counterfeits any certificate relating to any oath, or declaration or affirmation hereby required or authorized, knowing the same to be so forged or counterfeited, such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being thereof convicted, shall be liable to be punished accordingly.

party making the same shall be guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, and liable to the punishment provided for that offense.

170. If any person required by this act or by any other law to answer questions put to him by any officer of the customs, refuses to answer or does not truly answer such questions, the person so refusing or not truly answering such questions, shall, over and above any other penalty or punishment to which he becomes subject, forfeit the sum of $400.

171. Every officer and person employed under the authority of any act relating to the collection of the revenue, or under the direction of any officer in the customs department, or being an officer of the said department, shall be deemed and taken to be duly employed for the prevention of smuggling; and in any suit or information, the averment that such party was so duly employed shall be sufficient proof thereof.

172. Any such officer or person as mentioned in the next preceding section, and any sheriff or justice of the peace, or person residing more than 10 miles from the residence of any officer of customs and thereunto authorized by any collector of customs or justice of the peace, may, upon information, or upon reasonable grounds of suspicion, detain, open and examine any package suspected to contain prohibited property or smuggled goods, or goods respecting which there has been any violation of any of the requirements of this act, and may go on board of and enter into any vessel or vehicle of any description whatsoever, and may stop and detain the same, whether arriving from places beyond or within the limits of Canada, and may rummage and search all parts thereof, for such goods; and if any such goods are found in any such vessel or vehicle, the officer or person so employed may seize and secure such vessel or vehicle, together with all the sails, rigging, tackle, apparel, horses, harness, and all other appurtenances which, at the time of such seizure, belong to or are attached to such vessel or vehicle, with all goods and other things laden therein or thereon, and the same shall be seized and forfeited.

173. Any officer or person in the discharge of the duty of seizing goods, vessels, vehicles, or property liable to forfeiture under this act, may call in such lawful aid and assistance in the Queen's name, as may be necessary for securing and protecting such seized goods, vessels, vehicles, or property; and if no such prohibited, forfeited or smuggled goods are found, such officer or person, having had reasonable cause to suspect that prohibited, forfeited, or smuggled goods would be found therein, shall not be liable to any prosecution or action at law for any such search, detention or stoppage.

174. Every master or person in charge of any vessel, and every driver or person conducting or having charge of any vehicle or conveyance, refusing to stop when required to do so by an officer of customs, or person employed as such, in the Queen's name, and any person being present at any such seizure or stoppage, and being called upon in the Queen's name by such officer or person to aid and assist him in a lawful way, and refusing so to do, shall forfeit and pay the sum of $200, which penalty shall be summarily recovered before any two justices of the peace in Canada, or before any judge or magistrate having the powers of two justices of the peace; and in default of payment the offender shall be committed to any jail in Canada, for a period not exceeding six months.

175. Any officer of customs having first made oath before a justice of the peace that he has reasonable cause to suspect that goods liable to forfeiture are in any particular building, or in any yard or other place, open or inclosed, may, with such assistance as may be necessary, enter therein at any time between sunrise and sunset, until the doors are fastened, then admission shall be first demanded, and the purpose for which entry is required declared, when, if admission shall not be given, he may forcibly enter; and when in either case entry shall be made, the officer shall search the premises, and seize all goods subject to forfeiture; these acts may be done by an officer of customs without oath or the assistance of a justice of the peace, in places where no justice resides, or where no justice can be found within five miles at the time of search.

176. If any building be upon the boundary line between Canada and any foreign country and there is reason to believe that dutiable goods are deposited or have been stored therein, or carried through or into the same, without payment of duties and violation of law, and if the collector or proper officer of customs makes oath before a justice of the peace that he has reason to believe as aforesaid, such collector or officer shall have the right to search such building and the premises belonging thereto, as far as the same may be within the limits of Canada, and if any such goods be found therein the same shall be seized and forfeited; and any merchant or the person who shall have been guilty of a violation of the provisions of this section shall be punishable by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $1,000.

177. Upon application by or on behalf of the attorney-general of Canada to the superior court of Canada, or any judge thereof in chambers, such court or judge shall grant a writ of assistance for such officer or officers of customs as may be named in the application. Such writ shall have force and effect over the whole of Canada, unless upon the application of the attorney-general it be limited to some part or parts thereof. Such writ shall remain in force so long as any person named therein remains an officer of the customs, whether in the same capacity or not, or until such writ is revoked by the minister of customs.

178. Every writ of assistance granted before the coming into force of this act, under the authority of the acts hereby repealed shall remain in force, notwithstanding such repeal, as if such acts had not been repealed.

179. Under the authority of a writ of assistance any officer of the customs, or any person employed for that purpose with the concurrence of the governor in council, expressed either by special order or appointment or by general regulation, may enter at any time in the day or night into any building or other place within the jurisdiction of the court granting such writ, and may search for and seize and secure any goods liable to forfeiture under this act, and in case of necessity, may break open any doors and any chests or other packages for that purpose.

180. Any officer of customs, or person by him authorized thereunto, may search any person on board any vessel or boat within any port in Canada, or in any vessel, boat or vehicle entering Canada by land or inland navigation, or any person who may have landed or got out of such vessel, boat, or vehicle, or who may have come into Canada from a foreign country in any manner or way, provided the officer or person so searching has reasonable cause to suppose that the person searched may have goods subject to entry at the customs, or prohibited goods, secreted about his person; and whoever obstructs or offers resistance to such search, or assists in so doing, shall thereby incur a forfeiture of $100; and any person who may be on board of or may have landed from or got out of such vessel, boat, or vehicle, or who may have entered Canada from a foreign country in any manner or way, may be questioned by such officer, as to whether he has any such goods about his person, and if he denies having any such goods, or does not produce such as he may have, and any such goods are found upon him on being searched, the goods shall be seized and forfeited, and he shall forfeit treble the value thereof: Provided, That before any person can be searched, as aforesaid, such person may require the officer to take him or her before some police magistrate, justice of the peace, or before the collector or chief officer of the customs at the place, who shall, if he sees no reasonable cause for search, discharge such person; but if otherwise he shall direct such person to be searched; and if a female, she shall not be searched by any but a female; and any such magistrate or justice of the peace or collector of customs may, if there be no female appointed for such purpose, employ and authorize a suitable female person to act in any particular case or cases.

181. Any officer required to take any person before a police magistrate, justice of the peace, or chief officer of customs, as aforesaid, shall do so with all reasonable dispatch; and if any officer requires any person to be searched without reasonable cause, such officer shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding $40.

182. If any goods or property or vehicle, subject or liable to forfeiture under this act, or any other law relating to the customs, are stopped or taken by any police or peace officer, or any person duly authorized, such goods and property and vehicle shall be taken to the custom-house next to the place where the same were stopped or taken and there delivered to the proper officer authorized to receive the same within forty-eight hours after the same were stopped and taken.

183. If any such goods or property or vehicles are stopped or taken by such police or peace officer on suspicion that the same have been feloniously stolen, such officer shall carry the same to the police office to which the offender is taken, there to remain until and in order to be produced at the trial of the said offender; and in such case the officer shall give notice in writing to the collector or principal officer of Her Majesty's customs at the port nearest to the place where such goods have been detained, of his having so detained the said goods, with the particulars of the seizure, and immediately after the trial all such goods shall be conveyed to and deposited in the custom-house or other place appointed as aforesaid, and proceedings relative to the same shall be had according to law.

184. In case any police or peace officer, having detained such goods, neglects to convey the same to the custom-house, or to give notice of having stopped the same as before prescribed, such officer shall forfeit the sum of $100; and such penalty shall be recoverable in a summary way before any one or more justices of the peace or a police magistrate, and in default of payment the party so offending shall be committed to any of Her Majesty's jails for a period not exceeding thirty days.

185. If any person whatever, whether pretending to be the owner or not, either secretly or openly, and whether with or without force or violence, takes or carries away any goods, vessel, vehicle, or other thing which have been seized or detained on suspicion, as forfeited under this act, before the same have been declared by competent authority to have been seized without due cause, and without the permission of the officer or person having seized the same, or of some competent authority, such person shall be deemed to have stolen such goods, being the property of Her Majesty, and to be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to punishment accordingly.

136. If any person, under any pretense, either by actual assault, force, or violence, or by threats of such assault, force, or violence, in any way resists, opposes, molests, or obstructs any officer of customs, or any person acting in his aid or assistance, in the discharge of his or their duty, under the authority of this act, or any other law in force in Canada, relating to customs, trade, or navigation, or wilfully or maliciously shoots at or attempts to destroy or damage any vessel belonging to Her Majesty, or in the service of the Dominion of Canada, or maims or wounds any officer of the Army, Navy, marine, or customs, or any person acting in his aid or assistance while duly employed for the prevention of smuggling and in execution of his or their duty,—or if, any person is found with any goods liable to seizure or forfeiture, under this act or any other law relating to customs, trade, or navigation, and carrying offensive arms or weapons, or in any way disguised, or staves, breaks, or in any way destroys any such goods, before or after the actual seizure thereof, or scuttles, sinks, or cuts adrift any vessel, or destroys or injures any vehicle or animal, before or after the seizure, or wilfully and maliciously destroys or injures, by fire or otherwise, any custom-house or any building whatsoever in which seized, forfeited, or bonded goods are deposited or kept, such person being convicted thereof, shall be adjudged guilty of felony, and shall be punishable accordingly.

137. If any officer of the customs, or any person who, with the concurrence of the minister of customs, is employed for the prevention of smuggling, makes any collusive seizure, or delivers up, or makes any agreement to deliver up or not to seize any vessel, boat, carriage, goods, or thing liable to forfeiture under this act, or takes or accepts a promise of any bribe, gratuity, recompense, or reward for the neglect or non-performance of his duty, such officer or other person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, forfeit for every such offense the sum of $500, and be imprisoned for a period not less than three months nor more than two years, and be rendered incapable of serving Her Majesty in any office whatever; and every person who gives, or offers or promises to give, or procure to be given, any bribe, recompense, or reward to, or makes any collusive agreement with, any such officer or person as aforesaid, to induce him in any way to neglect his duty, or to conceal or connive at any act whereby the provisions of this act, or any law relating to the customs, trade, or navigation, might be evaded, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction, forfeit for every such offense the sum of $500, and be imprisoned for a period not less than three months nor more than two years.

138. All penalties and forfeitures incurred under this act, or any other law relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, may, in addition to any other remedy provided by this act or by law, be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered, with full costs of suit, in the exchequer court of Canada, or in any superior court having jurisdiction in that province in Canada where the cause of prosecution arises, or wherein the defendant is served with process; and if the amount of any such penalty or forfeiture does not exceed $200, the same may, in the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, British Columbia, Manitoba, and Prince Edward Island, respectively, also be prosecuted, sued for, and recovered in any county court or circuit court having jurisdiction in the place where the cause of prosecution arises, or where the defendant is served with process.

139. All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this act, or by any other act relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, shall, unless other provisions be made for the recovery thereof, be sued for, prosecuted, and recovered, with cost, by Her Majesty's attorney-general of Canada, or in the name or names of the commissioner of customs, or some officer or officers of the customs, or other person or persons thereunto authorized by the governor in council, either expressly or by general regulation or order, and by no other party.

140. All penalties and forfeitures imposed by this act, or by any other law relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, may, in the Province of Quebec, be sued for, prosecuted, and recovered, with full costs of the suit, by the same proceeding as any other moneys due to the Crown, and all suits or prosecutions for the recovery thereof shall, in that province, be heard and determined in like manner as other suits or prosecutions in the same court for moneys due to the Crown, except that in the circuit court the same shall be heard and determined in a summary manner; but nothing in this section shall affect any provisions of this act, except such only as relate to the form of proceeding and of trial in such suits or prosecutions as aforesaid.

141. Any prosecution or suit in the exchequer court of Canada, or in any superior court or circuit court of a province, for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture imposed by this act, or by any other law relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, may be commenced, prosecuted, and proceeded with in accordance with any rules of practice, general or special, established by the court for Crown suits in revenue matters, or in accordance with the usual practice and procedure of the court in civil cases in so far as such practice and procedure may be applicable, and wherever not applicable, then in accordance with the directions of the court or a judge in chambers.

The venue in any such prosecution or suit may be laid in any county in the province notwithstanding that the cause of prosecution or suit did not arise in such county.

192. Any judge of the court in which any prosecution or suit is brought for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture as aforesaid may, upon being satisfied by affidavit that there is reason to believe that the defendant will leave the province without satisfying such penalty or forfeiture, issue a warrant under his hand and seal for the arrest and detention of the defendant in the common jail of the county, district or place until he has given security (before and to the satisfaction of such judge or some other judge of the same court) for the payment of such penalty, with costs, in case judgment be given against him.

193. In any declaration, information, statement of claim, or proceeding in any such prosecution or suit, it shall be sufficient to state the penalty or forfeiture incurred, and the act or section under which it is alleged to have been incurred, without further particulars; and the averment that the person seizing was and is an officer of the customs shall be sufficient evidence of the fact alleged unless it be contradicted by some superior officer of the customs.

191. In every prosecution, information, suit, or proceeding brought under this act for any penalty or forfeiture, or upon any bond given under it, or in any matter relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, Her Majesty, or those who sue for such penalty or forfeiture, or upon such bond, shall, if they recover the same, be entitled also to recover full costs of suit; and all such penalties and costs, if not paid, may be levied on the goods and chattels, lands and tenements of the defendant, in the same manner as sums recovered by judgment of the court in which the prosecution is brought may be levied by execution, or payment thereof may be enforced by capias ad satisfaciendum against the person of the defendant under the same conditions and in like manner.

195. If in any case the attorney-general is satisfied that the penalty or forfeiture was incurred without intended fraud, he may enter a nolle prosequi on such terms as he may see fit, and which shall be binding on all parties; the entry of such nolle prosequi shall be reported to the minister of customs, with the reasons therefor.

196. In any prosecution, suits or other proceeding for the recovery of any penalty or forfeiture as aforesaid, or for an offense against this act or any other law relating to the customs, or to trade or navigation, the averment that the cause of prosecution or suit arose, or that such offense was committed, within the limits of any district, county, port, or place shall be sufficient, without proof of such limits, unless the contrary is proved.

197. If any prosecution or suit is brought for any penalty or forfeiture under this act, or any other law relating to the customs or to trade or navigation, and any question arises whether the duties have been paid on any goods, whether the same have been lawfully imported, or lawfully laden or exported, or whether any other thing hath been done by which such penalty or forfeiture would be avoided, the burden of proof shall lie on the owner or claimant of the goods, and not on the party bringing such prosecution or suit.

193. All vessels, vehicles, goods, and other things seized as forfeited under this act, or any other law relating to customs, or to trade or navigation, shall be placed in the custody of the nearest collector and secured by him, or if seized by an officer in charge of a revenue vessel, shall be retained on board thereof until her arrival in port, and shall be deemed and taken to be condemned, without suit, information, or proceedings of any kind, and may be sold, unless the person from whom they were seized, or the owner thereof, or some person on his behalf, within one month from the day of seizure, do give notice in writing to the seizing officer or other chief officer of the customs at the nearest port that he claims or intends to claim the same; and the burden of proof that such notice was duly given in any case shall always lie upon the person claiming.

199. Notwithstanding that no such notice has been given, proceedings for the condemnation of the things seized may be commenced and prosecuted to judgment.

200. So soon as proceedings have been commenced in any court for the condemnation of anything seized, notice thereof shall be posted up in the office of the clerk, registrar, or prothonotary of the court, and also in the office of the collector at the port at which the thing has been seized as aforesaid; and if it be a vessel, shall also be posted on a mast thereof, or on some other conspicuous place on board.

201. Any person desiring to claim anything seized after proceedings for condemnation thereof have been commenced must file such claim in the office of the clerk, registrar, or prothonotary of the court; such claim must state the name, residence, and occupation or calling of the person making it, and must be accompanied by an affidavit of the claimant or his agent having a knowledge of the facts, setting forth the nature of the claimant's title to the thing seized.

202. Before any claim can be filed the claimant shall give security to the satisfaction of the court or a judge thereof by bond in a penalty of not less than $200, or by a deed of money not less than that sum, for the payment of the costs of the proceedings for condemnation.

293. If within one month after the last posting of the notice, under section 200, no claim to the thing seized be duly made, and security for costs given in accordance with the provisions of this act and of the practice of the court, judgment by default for the condemnation of the thing seized may, with the leave of the court or a judge thereof, be entered.

294. Any collector of customs may, as may also any court or judge having competent jurisdiction to try and determine the seizure, with the consent of the collector at the place where the things seized are, order the delivery thereof to the owner, on the deposit with the collector in money of a sum at least equal to the full duty-paid value (to be determined by the collector) of the things seized and the estimated costs of the proceedings in the case; and any sum or sums of money so deposited shall be immediately deposited in some bank appointed for that purpose by competent authority, to the credit of the receiver-general of Canada, there to remain until forfeited in the course of law or released by order of the minister of customs; and in case such seized articles are condemned, the money deposited shall be forfeited.

295. If the thing seized be an animal or a perishable article, the collector at whose port the same is may sell the same so as to avoid the expense of keeping it or to prevent its becoming deteriorated in value. The proceeds of such sale shall be deposited in some chartered bank to the credit of the receiver-general of Canada, and shall abide the judgment of the court with respect to the condemnation of the thing seized, in case proceedings for condemnation be taken in court, or shall become the property of Her Majesty, in case the thing seized becomes condemned without proceedings in court: Provided always, that the collector shall deliver up such animal or perishable article to the claimant thereof upon such claimant depositing with him a sum of money sufficient in the opinion of the collector to represent the duty-paid value of the thing claimed and the costs of any proceedings to be taken in court for the condemnation of the thing seized. The money so deposited shall be paid into some chartered bank to the credit of the receiver-general of Canada, and shall be dealt with in the same manner as above provided for in the case of the proceeds of a sale of such thing.

296. If notice of intent to claim has been given, and the value of the goods or thing seized does not exceed $100 and the prosecutor chooses to proceed under this section, he shall forthwith cause the goods to be valued by a competent appraiser, and if such appraiser certifies them to be under the said value, a summary information, in writing, may be exhibited in the name of the collector at or nearest to the place of seizure, or in the name of any officer authorized thereto by the minister of customs, before two justices of the peace, charging the articles seized as forfeited under some particular act and section thereof, to be therein referred to, and praying condemnation thereof; and the justices shall thereupon issue a general notice to all persons claiming interest in the seizure to appear at a certain time and place, there to claim the articles seized and answer the information, otherwise such articles will be condemned; and a copy of the notice shall, at least eight days before the time of appearance, be served upon the person from whose possession the things were taken, or shall be left at or affixed to the building or vessel in which they were seized, if any, and if there remaining, or at two public places nearest the place of seizure; if any person appears to answer the information, the justices shall hear and determine the matter in a summary manner and acquit or condemn the articles, but if no person appears, judgment of condemnation shall be given; and the justices, on condemnation, shall issue a warrant to the collector to sell the goods; and such two justices shall be deemed a court, and each of them to be a judge thereof, for the purposes of this act.

297. All prosecutions or suits for the recovery of any of the penalties or forfeitures imposed by this act, or any other law relating to the customs, may be commenced at any time within three years after the cause of prosecution or suit arose, but not after ten years; and the vessels, vehicles, goods, or things forfeited shall be liable to forfeiture during the same period.

298. An appeal shall lie from a conviction by any magistrate, judge, justice or justices of the peace under this act in the manner provided by law from convictions in cases of summary conviction in that province in which the conviction was had, on the appellant furnishing security, by bond or recognizance with two sureties, to the satisfaction of such magistrate, judge, justice or justices of the peace, to abide the event of such appeal.

299. And an appeal shall also lie from the exchequer court of Canada, the superior, county, and circuit courts, respectively, in cases where the amount of the penalty or forfeiture is such that if a judgment for a like amount were given in any civil case an appeal would lie; and such appeal shall be allowed and prosecuted on like conditions and subject to like provisions as other appeals from the same court in matters of like amount.

in the matter as he may desire to furnish. Such evidence may be by affidavit or affirmation, made before any justice of the peace, any collector of customs, any commissioner for taking affidavits in any court, or any notary public.

220. After the expiration of the said thirty days, or sooner if the person so called upon to furnish evidence so desires, the commissioner may consider and weigh the circumstances of the case, and report his opinion and recommendation thereon to the minister of customs.

221. The minister may thereupon give his decision in the matter, respecting the seizure, detention, penalty, or forfeiture, and the terms (if any) upon which the thing seized or detained may be released, or the penalty or forfeiture remitted; and if the owner or claimant of the thing seized or detained, or the person alleged to have incurred the penalty, signifies in writing, by himself or his agent, his acceptance of the decision, he shall be bound thereby, and the terms thereof may be enforced and carried out, and in any action, suit or proceeding to recover any money claimed by virtue of such decision the person accepting the same shall not be at liberty to set up that the thing seized was not liable to seizure or detention, or that he had not incurred any penalty or forfeiture.

222. But if the said owner, or claimant, or person, or his agent, within twenty days after having been notified of the decision, gives to the minister of customs notice in writing that such decision will not be accepted, or if such twenty days elapse without such decision being accepted, proceedings for the condemnation of the thing seized or for the enforcement of the penalty or forfeiture may be taken without delay.

223. If the said decision be accepted as by this act provided, and if the terms thereof be not forthwith complied with, the minister of customs may elect either to enforce the terms of the decision or to take proceedings for the condemnation of the thing seized, or for the enforcement of the penalty or forfeiture.

224. If a term of the decision be that the thing seized or detained be released upon payment of a sum of money, and if such money be not paid forthwith after acceptance of the decision, and if the minister elects to enforce the decision, such thing may be sold and the net proceeds applied towards payment of such sum, the balance (if any) to be handed over to the person entitled thereto. If such net proceeds be not sufficient to pay such sum the person accepting the decision shall be liable to pay the amount of the deficiency, and the same may be recovered from him as a debt due to Her Majesty.

225. If after acceptance of the decision, the person required thereby to pay any sum of money as a penalty or forfeiture, does not forthwith pay the same, the amount thereof may be recovered from him as a debt due to Her Majesty.

226. No action, suit, or proceeding shall be commenced, no writ shall be sued out against, nor a copy of any process served upon any officer of the customs or person employed for the prevention of smuggling as aforesaid, or upon any officer of customs for anything done in the exercise of his office, until one month after notice in writing has been delivered to him, or left at his usual place of abode, by the attorney or agent of the party who intends to sue out such writ or process, in which notice shall be clearly and explicitly contained the cause of the action, the name and place of abode of the person who is to bring such action, and the name and place of abode of the attorney or agent; and no evidence of any cause of such action shall be produced except of such as is contained in such notice, and no verdict or judgment shall be given for the plaintiff, unless he proves on the trial that such notice was given; and, in default of such proof, the defendant shall receive a verdict, or judgment and costs.

227. Any such officer or person against whom any action, suit, or proceeding is brought on account of anything done in the exercise of his office, may, within one month after such notice, tender amends to the party complaining, or his agent, and plead such tender in bar to the action, together with other pleas; and if the court or jury (as the case may be) find the amends sufficient, judgment or verdict shall be given for the defendant, and in such case, or in case the plaintiff becomes non-suited, or discontinues his action, or judgment is given for the defendant upon demurrer or otherwise, then such defendant shall be entitled to full costs of defense; the defendant, by leave of the court in which the action is brought, may, at any time before issue joined, pay money into court as in other actions.

228. Every such action, suit, or proceeding must be brought within three months after the cause thereof, and laid and tried in the place or district where the facts were omitted; and the defendant may plead the general issue and give the special matter in evidence; and if the plaintiff becomes non-suited or discontinues the action, or if upon a demurrer or otherwise judgment is given against the plaintiff the defendant shall recover full costs of defense.

229. If in any such action, suit, or proceeding, the court or judge before whom the action is tried certifies upon the record that the defendant in such action acted upon probable cause, then the plaintiff in such action shall not be entitled to more than 20 cents damages nor to any costs of suit, nor in case of a seizure shall the person who

230. In addition to the purposes and matters hereinbefore or hereinafter mentioned, the governor in council may from time to time, and in the manner hereinafter provided, make regulations for or relating to the following purposes and matters:

(1) For the warehousing and bonding of such cattle and swine as may be slaughtered and cured in bond, and of such wheat, maize, and other grain as may be ground and packed in bond, and of such sugar as may be refined in bond.

(2) For the branding and marking of all duty-paid goods and goods entered for exportation, and for regulating and declaring what allowances shall be made for tare on the gross weight of goods.

(3) For declaring what shall be coasting trade, or inland navigation, respectively, and how the same shall be regulated in any case or classes of cases, and for relaxing or dispensing with any of the requirements of this act, as to vessels engaged in such trade, on any conditions which he may see fit to impose.

(4) For appointing places and ports of entry, and warehousing and bonding ports, and respecting goods and vessels passing the canals, and respecting the horses, vehicles and personal baggage of travelers coming into Canada, or returning thereto, or passing through any portion thereof.

(5) For regulating or restricting the importation of spirits, wine, and malt liquors, or other goods requiring to be weighed, gauged, or tested for strength or quantity, and limiting or prescribing the kind and capacity of packages in which the same may be imported, and the conveyances by which and the ports or places at which the same may be landed and entered.

(6) For exempting from duty any flour or meal or other produce of any wheat or grain grown in and taken out of Canada into the United States to be ground, and brought back into Canada within two days after such wheat or grain has been so taken out to be ground, or any boards, planks, or scantling, the produce of any logs or timber grown in and taken out of Canada into the United States to be sawn, and brought back into Canada within seven days after such logs or timber were so taken out to be sawn.

(7) For regulating the quantity to be so taken out or brought in at any one time by any party, and the mode in which the claim to exemption shall be established and proved.

(8) For authorizing the appointment of warehouses, and regulating the security which shall be taken from warehouse keepers, the forms and conditions subject to which goods are to be warehoused, the mode of keeping goods in warehouse, and of removing such goods therefrom, and the amount of warehouse rent or license fees.

(9) For extending either by general regulation or by special order, the time for clearing warehoused goods, and for the transport of goods in bond from one port or place to another.

(10) For regulating the form in which transfers of goods in a warehouse or bond from one party to another shall be entered.

(11) For exempting goods from duty as being the growth, produce, or manufacture of Newfoundland, if such exemption be provided for by any act relating to Customs, and for regulating the mode of proving such exemption.

(12) For transferring to the list of goods which may be imported into Canada free of duty, any or all articles (whether natural products or products of manufactures) used as materials in Canadian manufactures, and any such materials transferred to the free list by such order in council, shall be free of duty of customs for the time therein appointed for that purpose; and for granting a drawback of the whole or part of the duty paid on articles which may have been used in Canadian manufactures; or for granting a certain specific sum in lieu of any such drawback.

(13) For appointing the manner in which the proceeds of penalties and forfeitures shall be distributed.

(14) For authorizing the taking of such bonds and security as he deems advisable for the performance of any condition on which any remission or part remission of duty, indulgence or permission is granted to any party, or any other condition made with such party, in the matter relating to the customs or to trade or navigation; and such bonds, and all bonds taken with the sanction of the minister of customs expressed either by general regulation or by special order, shall be valid in law, and upon breach of any of the conditions thereof, may be sued and proceeded upon in like manner as any other bond entered into under this act or any other law relating to the customs.

(15) For any other purpose for which by this act, or any other law relating to the customs or to trade and navigation, the governor in council is empowered to make orders or regulations; it being hereby declared competent for him (if he deems it expedient) to make general regulations in any matter in which he may make a special order, and any such general regulation shall apply to each particular case within the extent and meaning thereof, as fully and effectively as if the same referred directly

231. And whereas it frequently happens that goods are conveyed, directly through the Canadian canals or otherwise by land or inland navigation, from one part of the frontier line between the Dominion of Canada and the United States to another, without any intention of unlading such goods in Canada, and that travelers in like manner pass through a portion of Canada, or come into it, with their carriages, horses, or other carriages drawing the same, and personal baggage, with the intention of forthwith returning to the United States, or having gone to the United States from Canada, return to it with such articles, and though the bringing of such goods and other articles into Canada is strictly an importation thereof, it may nevertheless be inexpedient that duties should be levied thereon; with regard to all such cases as aforesaid, the governor in council may, from time to time, and as occasion may require, make such regulations as to him seem meet, and may direct under what circumstances such duty shall be or shall not be paid, and on what conditions it shall be remitted or returned, and may cause such bonds or other security to be given, or such precautions to be taken at the expense of the importer (whether by placing officers of the customs on board any such vessel or carriage or otherwise) as to him seem meet; and on the refusal of the importer to comply with the regulations to be so made, the duty on the goods so imported shall forthwith become payable; and all and every animal, vehicle, or goods of any kind, brought into Canada by any traveler, exempted from duty under such regulations or otherwise, shall, if sold or offered for sale in Canada, provided the duties thereon have not been previously paid, be held to have been illegally imported, and shall be seized and forfeited, together with the harness or tackle employed therewith or in the conveyance thereof.

232. In any regulation made by the governor in council, under this act, any oath or declaration may be prescribed and required which the governor in council deems necessary to protect the revenue against fraud, and any person or officer may be authorized to administer the same; and by any such regulation, a declaration may be substituted for an oath in any case where an oath is required by this act.

233. The governor in council may by proclamation or order in council, at any time, and from time to time, prohibit the exportation or the carrying coastwise or by inland navigation of the following goods: Arms, ammunition, and gunpowder, military and naval stores, and any articles which the governor in council shall judge capable of being converted into or made useful in increasing the quantity of military or naval stores, provisions, or any sort of victual which may be used as food by man; and, if any goods so prohibited be exported, carried coastwise, or by inland navigation, or waterborne, or laden in any railway carriage, or other vehicle, for the purpose of being so exported or carried, they shall be seized and forfeited.

234. The governor in council may grant yearly coasting licenses to British vessels navigating the inland waters of Canada above Montreal, and may direct that a fee of fifty cents shall be payable for each such license, and that the master or person in charge of any vessel navigating the said waters, and not having a coasting license, shall, on entering any port in the Dominion with such vessel, pay a fee of fifty cents if such vessel is not over fifty tons burthen, and of one dollar if she is more than fifty tons burthen, to the collector on each entry, and a like fee of fifty cents, or one dollar, according to the burthen of the vessel, on each clearance of such vessel at any port; and such fees shall be payable accordingly before such vessel shall be entered or cleared; provided that the governor in council may reduce or readjust such fees, but may not increase them; and provided also, that vessels merely passing through any of the Canadian canals, without breaking bulk, shall not be liable to such fees.

235. All goods shipped or unshipped, imported or exported, carried or conveyed contrary to any regulation made by the governor in council, and all goods or vehicles and all vessels under the value of $400, with regard to which the requirements of any such regulations have not been complied with, shall be seized and forfeited, and if such vessel be of or over the value of $400, the master thereof shall, by such non-compliance, incur a penalty of $400, and the vessel may be detained until the said penalty is paid, or satisfactory security is given for the payment thereof; and any such forfeitures and penalties shall be recoverable and may be enforced in the same manner, before the same court and tribunal, as if incurred by the contravention of any direct provision of this act.

236. All general regulations made by the governor in council under this act, shall have effect from and after the day on which the same have been published in the Canada Gazette, or from and after such later day as may be appointed for the purpose in such regulations, and during such time as shall be therein expressed, or if no time be expressed for that purpose, then until the same are revoked or altered; and all such regulations may be revoked, varied, or altered by any subsequent regulation; and a copy of the Canada Gazette containing any such regulation shall be evidence of such regulation to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

237. Any copy of an order of the governor in council made in any special matter, and not being a general regulation, certified as a true copy by the clerk or assistant clerk of the Queens privy council for Canada, shall be evidence of such order to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

238. In every case where the person required to take any oath under any act or regulation relating to the customs, is one of the persons entitled by law to take a solemn affirmation instead of an oath in civil cases, such person may instead of the oath heroby required make a solemn affirmation to the same effect; and every person before whom any oath is, by any such act or regulation, required or allowed to be taken, or solemn affirmation to be made, shall have full power to administer the same; and the wilfully making any false statement in any such oath shall be perjury, and the wilfully making any false statement in such solemn affirmation shall be a misdemeanor punishable as perjury.

239. Whenever on the levying of any duty, or for any other purpose, it becomes necessary to determine the precise time of the importation or exportation of any goods, or of the arrival or departure of any vessel, such importation, if made by sea, coastwise, or by inland navigation in any decked vessel, shall be deemed to have been completed from the time the vessel in which such goods were imported came within the limits of the port at which they ought to be reported, and, if made by land or by inland navigation in any undecked vessel, then from the time such goods were brought within the limits of Canada; and the exportation of any goods shall be deemed to have been commenced from the time of the legal shipment of such goods for exportation, after due entry onwards, in any decked vessel, or from the time the goods were carried beyond the limits of Canada, if the exportation be by land or in any undecked vessel; and the time of the arrival of any vessel shall be deemed to be the time at which the report of such vessel was, is, or ought to have been made, and the time of the departure of any vessel to be the time of the last clearance of such vessel on the voyage for which she departed.

240. Although any duty of customs has been overpaid, or although after any duty of customs has been charged and paid, it appears or is judicially established that the same was charged under an erroneous construction of the law, no such overcharge shall be returned after the expiration of three years from the date of such payment, unless application for repayment has been previously made.

241. No refund of duty shall be allowed after the lapse of fourteen days from the time of entry, for any alleged misdescription of goods by the importer; and should any error of the kind be discovered by the importer while unpacking his goods, he shall immediately and without further interference with the goods, report the facts to the collector, in order that the same may be verified.

242. The governor in council may, under regulations to be made for that purpose, allow, on the exportation of goods which have been imported into Canada, and on which a duty of customs has been paid, a drawback equal to the duty so paid, with such deduction therefrom as may be provided in such regulations; and in cases to be mentioned in such regulations and subject to such provisions as may be therein made, such drawback or a specific sum in lieu thereof, may be allowed on duty-paid goods manufactured or wrought in Canada into goods exported there from as aforesaid; and the period within which such drawback may be allowed after the time the duty was paid shall be limited in such regulations.

243. All bonds and securities of what kind and nature soever authorized to be taken by any law relating to customs, trade, or navigation shall be taken to and for the use and benefit of Her Majesty, and such bonds shall be taken before the performance of any act or matter with regard to which the taking of any such bond or bonds is required.

244. All bonds, documents, and papers necessary for the transaction of any business at the respective custom houses or places or ports of entry in Canada, shall be in such form as the minister of customs shall from time to time direct.

245. Certificates and copies of official papers, certified under the hand and seal of any of the principal officers of the customs in the United Kingdom, or of any collector of colonial revenue in any of the British possessions in America or the West Indies, or other British possessions, or of any British consul or vice-consul in a foreign country, and certificates and copies of official papers made pursuant to this act or any act in force in Canada relating to the customs or revenue, shall be received as presumptive evidence in reference to any matter contained in this act or any act relating to the customs or on the trial of any suit in reference to any such matter.

246. Whenever any person makes any application to an officer of the customs to transact any business on behalf of any other person, such officer may require the person so applying to produce a written authority from the person on whose behalf the application is made, and in default of the production of such authority, may refuse to transact such business; and any act or thing done or performed by such agent shall be binding upon the person by or on behalf of whom the same is done or per-

Any attorney and agent duly thereunto authorized by a written instrument, which he shall deliver to and leave with the collector, may, in his said quality, validly make any entry, or execute any bond or other instrument required by this act, and shall thereby bind his principal as effectually as if such principal had himself made such entry or executed such bond or other instrument, and may take the oath hereby required of a consignee or agent, if he be cognizant of the facts therein averred; and any instrument appointing such attorney and agent shall be valid if in the form prescribed by the minister of customs.

Any partner in an incorporated company, association, or copartnership of persons, or their attorney and agent authorized as aforesaid, may, under the name and style usually taken by such company, association, or copartnership, make any entry or execute any bond or other instrument required by this act, without mentioning the name or names of any of the members or of the other members of the company or association or partnership, and such entry, bond, or instrument shall nevertheless bind them as fully and effectually, and shall have the same effect in all respects as if the name of every such member or partner had been therein mentioned and he had signed the same, and (if it be a bond or other instrument under seal) as if he had thereunto affixed his seal and had delivered the same as his act and deed; and the seal thereunto affixed shall be held to be the seal of each and every such member or partner as aforesaid; and the provisions of this section shall apply to any instrument by which any company, association, or partnership of persons appoint an attorney or agent to act for them under the next preceding section. The person who, under this section, makes any entry or executes any bond or instrument on behalf of any company, association, or partnership, shall, under the name and style usually taken by them, write his own name with the word "by" or the words "by their attorney," or words to the like effect, as the case may be, thereunto prefixed.

No. 55.

Sir L. West to Mr. Bayard.

WASHINGTON, December 7, 1886.

SIR: With reference to your note of the 30th of July last, I am instructed by the Earl of Iddesleigh to communicate to you the inclosed copy of a dispatch, with its inclosures, from the officer administering the government of Canada, respecting the action of the customs officer at Magdalen Islands, in the case of the United States fishing vessel Mascotte.

I have, &c.,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

[Inclosure 1 in No. 55.]

Acting Governor Lord A. G. Russell to Mr. Stanhope.

HALIFAX, NOVA SCOTIA, October 30, 1886.

SIR: With reference to your telegraphic message of the 22d August, and to your dispatch of the 25th of August, marked Secret, transmitting copy of a dispatch from Her Majesty's chargé d'affaires at Washington, with a note from Mr. Bayard, complaining of the action of the customs officer at Magdalen Islands with reference to the American fishery schooner Mascotte. I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, embodying a report of the minister of marine and fisheries on the subject.

I have, &c.,

A. G. RUSSELL,
General.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 55.]

Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council, approved by his excellency the administrator of the Government in council for Canada on the 30th day of October, 1886.

The committee of the privy council have had under consideration a telegram of the 22d August and a dispatch of the 25th August last, from the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies, transmitting copy of a letter from Her Majesty's minister at Washington, inclosing a note from Mr. Secretary Bayard, complaining of the action of the customs officer at Magdalen Islands, with reference to the American fishing schooner Mascotte.

The minister of marine and fisheries, to whom the correspondence was referred, observes that Mr. Bayard, in his note to the British minister at Washington, says:

"I am also in possession of the affidavit of Alex. T. Vachem,* master of the American fishing schooner Mascotte, who entered Port Amherst, Magdalen Islands, and was there threatened by the customs official with seizure of his vessel if he attempted to obtain bait for fishing or take a pilot."

And from a report of the customs officer at Magdalen Islands, a copy of which, so far as it relates to the case in point, is hereto annexed, it appears that no grounds exist for the complaint made by the master of the Mascotte.

The minister states that Captain Vachem [McEachern] was served with a printed copy of the "warning," and was, in addition, informed by the collector that under the treaty of 1818 he had no right to buy bait or to ship men. He was not forbidden to take fish, but, on the contrary, the collector pointed out to him on the chart the places in which, by the convention of 1818, he, as a United States fisherman, had the right to inshore fishing, and one of the places so pointed out to him was the Magdalen Islands.

Notwithstanding the "warning" and the personal explanation of the collector, it appears that Captain Vachem [McEachern] did go up the country and attempt to hire men, and upon his return informed the collector that he could not get any. For this, clearly an illegal act, he was not interfered with by the collector.

The minister further observes that the convention of 1818, while it grants to United States fishermen the right of fishing in common with British subjects on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, does not confer upon them privileges of trading or of shipping men, and it was against possible acts of the latter kind, and not against fishing inshore, or seeking the rights of hospitality guaranteed under the treaty, that Captain Vachem [McEachern] was warned by the collector.

With reference to the remarks of the colonial secretary that "Her Majesty's Government would recommend that special instructions should be issued to the authorities at the places where the inshore fisheries has been granted by the convention of 1818 to the United States fishermen, calling their attention to the provisions of that convention, and warning them that no action contrary thereto may be taken in regard to United States fishing vessels," the minister states that the circular instructions issued to collectors of customs recite the articles of the convention of 1818, which grant to United States fishermen the right to take fish upon the shore of the Magdalen Islands, and of certain parts of the coasts of Labrador and Newfoundland, which instructions the collector in question had received, and the import of which his report shows him to be familiar with.

In addition to this, the commander of the fishery protection steamer La Canadienne was ordered to visit Magdalen Islands, and explain fully to collectors there the extent of their powers.

The minister, in view of these instructions, printed and oral, does not deem it necessary to send further special orders.

The committee, concurring in the foregoing report, advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy hereof, if approved, to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk, Privy Council.

Mr. Poinchaud to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, MAGDALEN ISLANDS,
August 28, 1886.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram respecting captain of the schooner Mascotte's report in reference to my having threatened him with seizure. I replied, on receipt: "Mascotte information incorrect. Particulars per mail Tuesday."

* So in the British copy. The master's name is Alex. McEachern. (See Doc. No. 66, page 147.)

Particulars: On arrival of the captain I served him a "warning" personally; informed him he could not buy [(?) bait] or ship men.

I say this to all American fishermen. He tried, however, to hire; went up the country to hire, but could not hire a man.

I saw him and men go up, and on his return he told me he could not hire. I did not oppose him. He attended halibutting at Seven Islands, Dominion. I found this out since. I deny having said I would seize him if he obtained bait, himself or crew. I did not use the term, but it suits the captain or owners to use it, as it serves their meaning to make the report good.

I particularly showed him where, on the chart, he had the right to fish inshore, to wit, at the Magdalen Islands, Cape Ray, &c., as per treaty in my hands then.

I think I was very lenient with him and all American fishermen calling here, knowing their privileges.

I treated them so gentlemanly that I am surprised to hear he made the above inaccurate report to you.

Yours, &c.,

J. B. F. POINCHAUD,
Collector of Customs.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, furnishing the report asked for in your dispatch of the 1st September last, respecting the alleged unfriendly treatment of the United States fishing schooner Rattler in being required to report to the collector of customs at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, when seeking that harbor for shelter.

I beg also to draw your attention to the statement of the captain of the Terror, appended to the above order in council, which gives the facts concerning the cases of the Shiloh and Julia Ellen, a report as to which was requested in your dispatch of the 9th ultimo.

council, that having considered the statements, copies of which are annexed, of Captain Quigley, of the Government cutter Terror, and of the collector of customs at Shelburne, with reference to the subject-matter of the dispatch, he is of opinion that these officers only performed their respective duties in the case of the Rattler, and that no just grounds exist for the complaint put forward in Mr. Bayard's dispatch of a violation of that hospitality which all civilized nations prescribe, or of a gross infraction of treaty stipulations.

The minister states that it does not appear at all certain, from the statements submitted, that this vessel put into Shelburne for a harbor in consequence of stress of weather. It does, however, appear that immediately upon the Rattler coming into port, Captain Quigley sent his chief officer to inform the captain of the Rattler that before sailing he must report his vessel at the custom-house, and left on board the Rattler a guard of two men to see that no supplies were landed or taken on board, or men allowed to leave the vessel during her stay in Shelburne Harbor. That at midnight the guard fired a shot as a signal to the cruiser, and the first officer at once again proceeded to the Rattler, and found the sails being hoisted and the anchor weighed preparatory to leaving port. The captain being informed he must comply with the customs regulations and report his vessel, headed her up the harbor. That on the way up she became becalmed, when the first officer of the Terror took the captain of the Rattler in his boat and rowed him to the town, where the collector of customs received his report at the unusual hour of 6 a. m. rather than detain him, and the captain with his vessel proceeded to sea.

The minister observes that under section 25 of the customs act every vessel entering a port in Canada is required to immediately report at the customs, and the strict enforcement of this regulation as regards the United States fishing vessels has become a necessity in view of the illegal trade transactions carried on by the United States fishing vessels when entering Canadian ports under pretext of their treaty privileges.

That under these circumstances, a compliance with the customs act, involving only the report of a vessel, cannot be held to be a hardship or an unfriendly proceeding.

The minister submits, in view of the repeated groundless complaints of being harshly treated that have been made during the present season by captains of United States fishing vessels, and in almost every instance traceable to a refusal or neglect to observe the customs regulations, which, it is proper to state, are enforced upon other vessels as well as those of the United States, herewith a letter written by Captain Blake, of the United States fishing schooner Andrew Burnham, which appeared in the Boston (Massachusetts) Herald of the 7th instant, and also the editorial comments thereon made in a subsequent issue of the paper referred to.

The minister believes that the statements made by Captain Blake are strictly accurate, and as applied to other vessels are substantiated by the weekly boarding reports, received by the fishery department from the different captains engaged in the fisheries protection service. He, the minister, therefore respectfully submits that the reflections of Mr. Secretary Bayard, characterizing the treatment extended to the captain of the Rattler as unwarrantable and unfriendly, is not merited, in view of the facts as stated by Captain Quigley and Collector Attwood.

The committee concur in the report of the acting minister of marine and fisheries, and advise that your excellency be moved to transmit a copy of this minute, if approved, to the right honorable Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for the colonies.

All which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

JOHN J. MCGEE,
Clerk, Privy Council.

[Extract from the Boston Herald of October 9, 1886.]

A Fishing Captain's Experience.—The letter of Capt. Nathan F. Blake, of the fishing schooner Andrew Burnham, of this city, which we published on Wednesday, would apparently indicate that the Canadian officials have not been disposed to push the requirements of their law quite as vigorously as some of our fishermen have maintained. Captain Blake says he has experienced not the least trouble in his intercourse with the Canadian officials, but that as he treated them courteously, they, on their side, have reciprocated in like terms. There is, undoubtedly, a great deal of bitterness felt on both sides, and probably this bitterness has led both parties to be ungracious in their own conduct, and to exaggerate the wrongs they have endured, hardships frequently due to an unwillingness to observe the requirements of the law as these are now laid down. If all American fishing captains exhibited the same courtesy and moderation that Captain Blake has shown, we imagine that there would be very little trouble in arriving at an equitable and pleasing understanding with Canada.

Captain Quigley to Major Silton.

SHELBURNE, September 30, 1886.

SIR: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th instant, requesting the circumstances connected with the boarding of the vessels Rattler, Julia and Ellen, and Shiloh.

In the case of the Rattler, she came into Shelburne Harbor on the evening of the 14th August at 6 o'clock. She being at some distance from where I was anchored, and being too rough to send my boat so far, I fired a musket signal for her to round-to, which she did, and came to an anchor alongside of my vessel.

I then sent the chief officer to board her; he reported she put in for shelter. The captain was then told by the chief officer to report his vessel before he sailed, and that he must not let his men on shore, and that he would leave two men, who are always armed, on board to see that he did not otherwise break the law.

About midnight the captain hoisted his sails to leave port, thereby evading the customs law requiring him to report (for which I refer you to section 25 of the customs act), and disregarding my instructions.

The watchman fired a signal, calling my attention to his act, when I sent the chief officer to tell him he must lower his sails and report his vessel in the morning, otherwise he would like to have his vessel detained. He did so, and sailed up in company with the chief officer at 4 o'clock a. m. On the way it was calm, and the vessel anchored.

The chief officer with my boat's crew rowed him up to the custom-house, where he reported at 6 a. m.; and returned, passing out to sea at 8 a. m. The captain was only asked to report his vessel as all others do, but was not disposed to do so.

In the case of the Julia and Ellen, she came into the harbor of Liverpool on the 14th of August, about 5 p. m. Being some distance from me, I fired a blank musket shot to round her to. When she anchored I boarded her, and the captain reported that he came in for water. I told him to report his vessel in the morning, as it was then after customs hours, and that he must not let his men ashore, and that I would leave two men on his vessel to see that my instructions were carried out, and to see that he did not otherwise break the law.

In the morning, at 8 o'clock, I called for the captain to go to the custom-house and told him his men could go on and take water while he was reporting, so that he would be all ready to sail when he returned, which they did, and he sailed at noon.

In the case of the Shiloh, she came into the harbor about 6 p. m. on the 9th of August, at Liverpool, and a signal was fired in her case the same as the others.

When she anchored I boarded her, and the captain reported she was in for water. I told him it was then too late to report at the customs till morning, and that he must not allow his crew on shore; also that I would leave two men on board to see that he did not otherwise break the law, and that my instructions were carried out.

In the morning I called for the captain, when taking the Julia and Ellen's captain ashore. When there I told him, as I did the other, that his men could go on taking water while he was reporting, so that he could sail when he returned, and not be delayed. This they did not do.

I have reason to know that it was not water this vessel came in for, as several of the crew lived there, and it was for the purpose of letting his men ashore, and not for taking water, that he put in. He afterwards emptied six barrels of water, stating that they were sour, and fooled all day filling them, delaying the time, that he might get his crew on shore. I refused to allow his crew on shore for any other purpose than to take water, after completing which, the weather being fine, I ordered him to sea in the evening.

The signals that were fired were not intended to make them come-to quickly, but a signal for them to either round-to or show their ensign.

After the Shiloh sailed the harbor master informed me that she landed two men at the mouth of the harbor, 7 miles down, before she reported, and the evening she sailed she called after dark and picked them up.

In many cases it is an understood thing between the captains and crews to let the men ashore and then make out they have deserted. In all cases where a vessel puts in for shelter the captain reports, and the rest of his crew are not allowed ashore, as the vessel only put in for the privilege of shelter and for no other purpose.

When she puts in for water, after reporting, the captain is allowed to take his boats ashore, the men he requires to procure water, and the rest remain on board, after which he is ordered to sea. When in for repairs he is allowed all the privileges he requires after reporting, and when ready is ordered to sea. In all cases, except when in for repairs, I place men on board to see that the law is not violated, as many of those vessels put into the harbor and make taking water and seeking shelter an excuse either to get men or land them, or to allow them a chance to see their friends, or to get goods ashore if the vessel is on her way from American ports to the fishing grounds, and have landed men here and at other ports on this coast in my absence.

In one case in this port, a vessel, finding I was in the harbor, let men take a boat and land, she going on her way home to the States. That is why I put men on these vessels, to keep them from breaking the law under cover of night. I might remark here that the collector of customs at Liverpool informed me that the Shiloh on her previous voyage remained in port five days after being ordered out, delaying for the purpose of letting the men be with their friends.

Now that they are not allowed all the privileges they once enjoyed, it is an outrage on my part.

These are the facts connected with those vessels which I reported to Captain Scott while in Halifax some time ago. I treat all courteously, but firmly, and find no trouble with any but a few who wish to evade the law.

I am, &c.,

THOMAS QUIGLEY,
Government Cruiser Terror.

Mr. Attwood to the Commissioner of Customs, Ottawa.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, SHELburne, September 6, 1886.

SIR: I have to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of the 4th instant relative to schooner Rattler, and I wired an answer this morning as requested.

On the morning of the 4th ultimo chief officer of Terror, accompanied by Capt. A. F. Cunningham, called at this office. Captain Cunningham reported his vessel towards as follows, viz: Schooner Rattler, of Gloucester, 93 tons register, 16 men, from fishing banks, with 465 barrels mackerel, came in for shelter.

I was afterwards informed by the officer of cutter that they found the schooner the evening before at anchor off Sandy Point, 5 miles down the harbor. Two men from cutter were put on board, and the master required to report at customs in the morning. I was also informed that the master, Captain Cunningham, made an attempt to put to sea in the night by hoisting sails, weighing anchor, &c., but was stopped by officer from cutter.

[Extract from the Montreal Gazette of October 13, 1886.]

A Fisherman's Tale.—The following letter which appears in the Boston Herald conveys a different impression to many statements that have appeared on the subject:

"So much has been written and printed about the experiences of American fishermen in Canadian waters, and the indignities put on them, I wish you would open your columns and give your readers an insight into the other side of the story. I sailed from Boston for North Bay on the 16th June, not knowing just what the cutters would do or how the law would be interpreted. I neared the coast with fear and anxiety. The first land sighted was White Head, and immediately cries came from aloft, 'Cutter in sight, ahead.' I rushed to the deck, found the vessel, which proved to be the Howlet, commanded by Captain Lowry, nearing us rapidly. At time of sighting the cutter we were standing inshore. She hoisted her flags to let us know what she was and we immediately 'about ship,' and put to sea to get out of her way, for fear we might be placed on the prize-list of the captures. We finally headed up for Port Mulgrave, in Canso, expecting to receive rough usage from the authorities, but, to our surprise, found Collector Murray a perfect gentleman, willing to assist me as far as he could without encroaching on the Canadian laws. From there we put in at Port Hawkesbury, and boarded the cutter Conrad, and asked the captain for instructions in regard to the three-mile limit, and what privileges, if any, we had. I was answered in a courteous and hearty way, that he did not have them aboard, but would go ashore in a few moments and get me a printed copy of the regulations, which he did, and assured us that if we followed them we would be unmolested; that he was there to see that the law was not violated, but not to cause unnecessary annoyance. After receiving instructions from the captain, thanks to him, I went to the custom-house and entered my vessel, paying 25 cents. I found a very pleasant gentleman in the collector, who did all in his power to relieve my mind and make us comfortable. Some was our next port of landing, where we also reported and were well treated. From there we went to Malpeque, where we found another gentleman in the collector. We met the cutter Howlet at Cassumpece, and had several interviews with the commander, Captain Lowry, whom I found a quiet, just, and gentlemanly officer. My vessel was one of the fleet ordered out of harbor by him. At that time it was as good a fish day as one could ask for, and the instructions were plain that at such times we had no right to remain in harbor. At no time is there much water to spare on the bar, and it is a common occurrence for vessels to ground in going in or out, and that some did touch was due to ignorance of the channel or carelessness on the part of captains. At the time the order was issued the weather was fair, but before all the fleet could work out through the channel, one of the sudden changes in weather, so much to be dreaded on such a coast, came, and the cutter rescinded the order and the fleet returned. It has been printed in a Boston paper that, owing to being forced to sea by the cutter's orders in bad weather, my schooner, the Andrew Burnham, fouled two Englishmen, and narrowly escaped serious damage. If true, it would look like a hardship. It was simply this: In getting under way, in a small and crowded space, finding I would not have room, I dropped our starboard anchor. That not holding, we let go the other, and it brought us up all right; not much in this to point to as an outrage or danger from stress of weather. I believe Captain Lowry to be a man who would carry out all the requirements of the Canadian laws, but I saw nothing in my experience in those waters that could be considered as being arbitrary, or taking a mean advantage of his official authority to annoy any one. Captain Lowry has been a master of vessels for twenty-five years, is a man of high reputation as a seaman, and as good a judge of whether the weather is favorable for a vessel to go to sea as any man who walks a deck, and when he ordered the fleet to sea he went himself, and I know he would not order a vessel to leave harbor if there was any danger of loss of life or property. We reported at Cassumpece, and were treated the same as at all other ports we touched at. If our vessels would attend to reporting at the custom-house, the same as they do in our ports, no trouble would be met with.

"If we had free fish it would give the Canadians some recompense for what our fishermen want, viz, the right to go anywhere and everywhere, use their harbors, ship men, get provisions, land and mend our nets, buy salt and barrels, and ship our catch home by rail or steamer without expense or annoyance, the same as we have heretofore.

"If we had had that privilege this year, myself and vessel would have been $5,000 better off this season, and all the fishermen in the bay would have been in the same boat with me. I do not say that I am too honest not to fish within the three-mile limit, nor do I believe there is a vessel in the fleet who would not, if the cutter was out of sight. I made two trips to the bay, both of which were very successful, and I lived up to the requirements of the law as well as I knew how, and did not find them obnoxious or to interfere with my success, and everywhere I went I was courteously treated by the officials, especially so by both the cutters. Should it be a bay year next season, I hope to meet them again. Those who openly preached that they would go where they pleased, do what they wanted to in spite of law or cutters, shipped men, smuggled, or openly fished inside the limit, and indulged in the satisfaction of damning the cutter, the captain, the Government, and everything else when they knew they could do it with impunity, and that the men they were talking to could not resent it by word or blow, were looked after sharp, and were not extended the courtesy that was shown so many of us.

"In the interest of fair play, I could not help writing you and asking you to give this to your readers, if not taking up too much of your valuable space.

"Very respectfully,

"NATHAN F. BLAKE,

"Captain Schooner Andrew Burnham, of Boston.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of an approved minute of the privy council of Canada, expressing the regret of my Government at the action of the captain of the Canadian cutter Terror in lowering the United States flag from the United States fishing schooner Marion Grimes, of Gloucester, Mass., while that vessel was under detention at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, by the collector of customs at that port for an infraction of the customs regulations.

I have communicated a copy of this order in council to Her Majesty's minister at Washington.

I have, &c.,

A. G. RUSSELL,
General.

[Inclosure 2 in No. 57.]

Report of a committee of the honorable the privy council for Canada, approved by his excellency the administrator of the Government in council on the 26th October, 1886.

On a report, dated the 14th October, 1886, from the Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, for the minister of marine and fisheries, stating that on Monday, the 11th October instant, the United States fishing schooner Marion Grimes, of Gloucester, Mass., was under detention at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, by the collector of customs at that port for an infraction of the customs regulations; that while so detained, and under the surveillance of the Canadian Government cutter Terror, the captain of the Marion Grimes hoisted the United States flag.

The minister further states that it appears that Captain Quigley, of the Terror, considered such act as an intimation that there was an intention to rescue the vessel, and requested Captain Landry to take the flag down. This request was complied with. An hour later, however, the flag was again hoisted, and on Captain Landry being asked if his vessel had been released, and replying that she had not, Captain Quigley again requested that the flag be lowered. This was refused, when Captain Quigley himself lowered the flag, acting under the belief that while the Marion Grimes was in possession of the customs authorities, and until her case had been adjudicated upon, the vessel had no right to fly the United States flag.

The minister regrets that he should have acted with undue zeal, although Captain Quigley may have been technically within his right while the vessel was in the custody of the law.

The committee advise that your excellency be moved to forward a copy of the minute, if approved, to the right honorable the secretary of state for the colonies and to Her Majesty's minister at Washington, expressing the regret of the Canadian Government at the occurrence.

All of which is respectfully submitted for your excellency's approval.

UNITED STATES CONSULATE-GENERAL,
Halifax, May 15, 1886.

SIR: As instructed by message from the honorable Secretary of State to personally report, fully and carefully, all the facts and proceedings connected with the seizure of the American schooner David J. Adams by armed men from the Canadian steamship Lansdowne, I left Halifax for St. John May 10 as soon after receiving the message as the means of travel would permit. After leaving I learned that the vessel had been taken back to Digby, where I proceeded, and found her anchored close to the Lansdowne in Digby Harbor. Shortly after my arrival Captain Scott, of the Lansdowne, formally transferred the custody of the vessel to the collector of the port of Digby to be held on a charge, as the collector informed me, of violating the customs act of 1883, the penalty being $400. He said if this sum was paid and the vessel not claimed by the minister of fisheries he would release her. On the following morning, in order to get at the facts in connection with the seizure, I addressed a note to the collector asking him to furnish me a copy of the charges against the vessel. He replied verbally that the vessel passed out of his possession, and was again in Captain Scott's custody. I then addressed Captain Scott a communication asking him to state in writing, fully and specifically, with as little delay as possible, why he detained this vessel. (A copy marked A attached.)

Captain Scott replied by referring me to the deputy minister of fisheries in Ottawa (Reply attached marked B.) The refusal of Captain Scott to give this information, which I had a right to have, even without asking for it, was not only discourteous to me, but an indignity to the nation whose vessel he seized. The next morning I heard that a process in an admiralty suit against the schooner was served on the vessel. I went on board and found that the process was served by affixing to the mast with nails what I supposed to be a warrant or summons; no part of which, except the endorsement, was visible. I requested permission from the person in charge of the schooner to take down this process so that I might read, and, if possible, ascertain from its contents what offenses were charged against this vessel. My request was refused; and right here I may remark that it seems a strange course of procedure to serve a party with a process to appear and defend a suit, and then prohibit that party and those interested in his protection and defense in respect to that suit, from seeing or inspecting the process thus served. The frequent changes as to the custodians of this vessel, the mysterious, secret, and unexplained movements of these officials, and their refusal to set forth any of the alleged offenses charged to the vessel, was most aggravating.

All the parties to the controversy were on the ground, and want of knowledge could not be urged as a reason why this information was withheld. Not until after my arrival in Halifax, on the 14th of May, did I receive the slightest intimation of the charge against the vessel, but on the contrary every effort was made to conceal it. All I could do under the circumstances was to serve Captain Scott, and the person in charge of the schooner, with protest (marked C). Captain Scott arrived in Halifax on the 12th. On the 14th he sent me a second reply (marked D), in which he stated that the vessel was seized for a violation of the imperial statutes in entering a port for other than a legal purpose.

The facts in this case, as I obtained them from Captain Kinney, are as follows:

The David J. Adams entered Digby Bay on Wednesday evening, May 5, 1886. Her captain purchased from a fisherman named Ellis, residing at the entrance of Digby Bay, nearly five barrels of bait. On Thursday he purchased from several fishermen, whose names he did not know, nearly seven barrels of bait. He then brought his vessel to anchor. It appears that this man Ellis had promised to sell this bait to a Canadian captain named Sproule for 75 cents per barrel, but getting $1.25 from the captain of the David J. Adams, sold it to him. The Canadian captain reported the sale to the collector, who telegraphed for the Lansdowne which arrived during the night. On Friday morning the David J. Adams in sailing out of the basin, was hailed by a boat from the Lansdowne and came alongside, the commander of which asked the name of the vessel and that of her owner, where she was from, and her business in the basin. Being answered by the captain in his own way, the boat returned to the Lansdowne without ordering the vessel to sea. The schooner continued her course, but ran aground, and while in this position she was boarded a second time. The officer in charge stated that he had orders from Captain Scott to seize the vessel, and immediately proceeded to carry out the order, and found some herring. The captain was asked how old they were. He replied about ten days. The boat again returned to the Lansdowne and brought to the schooner a new officer, who examined the vessel and returned to the Lansdowne. The fourth visit to the vessel brought Captain Scott, who, in the name of the Queen, seized her. On Saturday morning the vessel was taken to St. John, N. B., and on Sunday she was returned to Digby, the place of capture.

A suit has been begun in the supreme court of Nova Scotia at Halifax in the name of the Queen against Alden Kinney, master, in which the following claim is made, namely, for £200 sterling, equal to $973.33, for violation of a certain convention between his late Majesty, George the Third, King of Great Britain and Ireland, of the one part, and the United States of America of the other part, made on the 20th day of October, A. D. 1818, and for violation of the act of Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the fifty-ninth year of the reign of his late Majesty, George the Third, King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, being chapter 38 of the acts of the said last Parliament, and passed in said year. In addition to the above, an action has been instituted in the vice-admiralty court at Halifax to have the vessel and cargo forfeited. The charges are (1) that she violated the treaty of 1818; (2) that she violated the provisions of the act 59, George the Third; (3) that she violated the provisions of chapter 61 of the Canadian acts of 1870, and chapter 23 of the acts of Canada, 1871. Also a suit was instituted later for violating the customs act of Canada for 1883. Under this act it is charged that the vessel did not report her arrival at Digby to the customs officer. Digby is a fishing village without a corporation, and, so far as I could learn, and I made special inquiry, the harbor is not defined, and the practice has been that only vessels having business at Digby entered at the custom-house. The records of the office will show, and the collector admitted, that during his forty years' service fishermen went in and out the bay at pleasure and were never required to report. It is very plain that this suit was not instituted to vindicate the law, as the vessel was not apprehended on that charge, but instituted to annoy and harass our fishermen. The other suits are for violating the treaty of 1818, and statutes made under it. I confidently report that the only charge against the vessel that can be sustained, or that she is guilty of, is purchasing fish in British waters.

My conclusions are therefore as follows:

- (1) That the David J. Adams was not fishing, had not fished, and was not preparing to fish in British waters.
- (2) She did not conceal her name nor attempt to conceal her name.
- (3) She did not report to the custom-house at Digby, because she did not enter the harbor of Digby, but only Digby Basin.
- (4) She purchased twelve barrels of fish for bait in British waters for deep-sea fishing, and not to fish in such waters.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

M. H. PHELAN,
Consul-General.

Deposition of the captain and crew of the David J. Adams.

In the matter of the seizure of the United States schooner David J. Adams, of Gloucester, now held by the Dominion of Canada.

We, the captain and crew of the schooner David J. Adams, of Gloucester, Mass., in the United States of America, depose and saith under oath, as follows: I, Captain Alden Kinney; I am 25 years old; occupation, seaman; citizen of the United States. What is your present occupation? Master of the David J. Adams. What is her tonnage? Sixty-six register. Owned by Capt. Jesse Lewis. We left Gloucester, Mass., for Eastport, Me., for bait on or about the 10th day of April last. We arrived at Eastport, Me., on the following Monday, April 12, and got bait and proceeded to the Banks. We fished for several days, say about twelve days, and set out for and returned to Eastport, Me., that being a central station as a general thing for fishermen's headquarters at this season of the year for bait and other supplies. We again left Eastport for the Banks and put into Digby Basin about 11 o'clock on the 6th day of May, and we anchored under Lower Granville. We got under way the next morning at about 5 o'clock, bound out. The reason we could not get out was on account of the wind dying away, and we drifted back with the tide. We sailed up off of Digby Town and tacked, anchoring off of or about Bear Island. This was about 10 o'clock in the forenoon. Not being satisfied with the place we layed we shifted further up the basin, say about two miles further. We again anchored there until 5 o'clock, got under way, and shifted to another part of the basin and anchored until Friday morning about 4 o'clock. We then got under way and started to go out of the basin into the Bay of Fundy. Shortly after we got under way a boat from the steamer lying off the harbor, which proved to be the steamer Lansdowne, of the Dominion service, was seen coming toward us and we continued our course as we were before we saw the boat coming. The boat caught up to us when we were about a mile and a half from our recent anchorage of the night. The officer on board the boat asked us where we hailed from, and the vessel's name and tonnage; captain's name and owner's, and what we were there for, and if we had any bait in. Receiving my reply (captain's) the boat rowed away. We still continued on our course until we got into St. George's Channel (they called), and grounded at low water, and there remained aground for about two hours, and after floating the tide was too strong for us to proceed out of the basin. We were at that time again boarded by the same boat and officer of the Lansdowne, who searched our vessel. The officer, on boarding with armed men, said that he was ordered by Captain Scott to search the vessel, which they did by coming on board and examining the hold of the vessel and different parts of the deck. They stated to Captain Kinney that some herring was below in the hold, and we answered that they were ten days old. The officer of Lansdowne and boat returned to their ship. Afterwards the Lansdowne boat boarded us for the third time, and brought another officer, whom I understand was Captain Dakin, who also entered hold and examined the herring, and then returned to their vessel. Again for the fourth time the same officers and crew of the Lansdowne boarded us, who informed us that we would be held here in Digby for some time. We were ordered by the same officer to bring our vessel to Digby and to anchor as near as possible to the steamer Lansdowne, which order we obeyed. This was the morning of May 7. The same boat, after being towed up to the town by us, cast off from us also; the officer and crew in charge went on board his vessel. Soon after an officer boarded us and ordered us to lower our sails and await further orders. About four hours afterward Captain Scott ordered the hatches removed, and he examined the cargo, and returning to the deck of our vessel Captain Scott said he had seized us in the Queen's name. Then Captain Scott notified us that we might go on shore to the American consul, and said he would at once return with Lansdowne and the schooner David J. Adams to St. John, N. B. We remained on board our own vessel during that night under charge of five armed men of the Lansdowne's crew. Saturday morning early all of us and our captain, with the exception of three of our men, were ordered on board the Lansdowne. We were then taken to St. John and went on shore, according to the order of the night previous to go on shore. Our captain took the papers and articles belonging to the David J. Adams with him on shore. Our vessel was towed to St. John at the same time and fastened to the Lansdowne with chain cable, both lying at the wharf at St. John. The vessel was there on Sunday morning, when I was informed by an officer of the Lansdowne that they were going to remove her to Digby. I was told that I could return to Digby in the vessel if I chose, or otherwise take out my personal effects and that of the crew. The Lansdowne and our vessel then left St. John. On Wednesday, the 12th day of May, on our arrival in Digby, Captain Scott came to me as captain of the D. J. Adams and demanded her register of said vessel before I had landed from the steamboat, which I refused to give up.

Question. Captain, there is a charge that you concealed the name of your vessel by tacking canvas or by other means of covering the name on the stern of the vessel?
 Captain Kinney answers that he denies the charge; it is not true. I never concealed nor attempted to conceal the name of the vessel.

Did you ever fish or attempt to fish in British waters during this season?

Captain answers that he never did; that he never saw the land from where I fished. Deep-sea fishing is the only fishing that we are engaged.

Did you ever buy bait or attempt to buy bait for the purpose of fishing in British waters?

No, sir; I did not.

Did you come into Digby Basin to buy bait for the purpose of fishing in British waters during this season?

Answer. No, I did not.

Did you purchase bait or attempt to purchase bait while at anchor above Bear River?

Answer. No, I did not.

ALDEN KINNEY,
 Master.

We, the undersigned seamen or crew of the schooner David J. Adams, of Gloucester, Mass., in the United States of America, being present and having heard the above testimony of Capt. Alden Kinney, and we all being under oath, do certify that the same is true to our best knowledge and belief and we know no other fact bearing on or in connection with this case.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 11th instant, I am directed by the minister of marine and fisheries to state to you that the David J. LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, June 5, 1886. [Received June 14.]

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the copy of a note which I have this day addressed to the Earl of Rosebery, Her Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, on the subject of the Canadian fisheries, embodying the substance of the views which, under instructions from the Department of State, I have already presented to his lordship orally in various interviews, and of the arguments adduced in support of the same.

I have, &c.,

E. J. PHELPS.

[Inclosure with Mr. Phelps's No. 203.]

*Mr. Phelps to Lord Rosebery.*LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES,
London, June 2, 1886.

MY LORD: Since the conversation I had the honor to hold with your lordship, on the morning of the 29th ultimo, I have received from my Government a copy of the report of the consul-general of the United States at Halifax, giving full details and depositions relative to the seizure of the David J. Adams, and the correspondence between the consul-general and the colonial authorities in reference thereto.

The report of the consul-general and the evidence annexed to it appear fully to sustain the point submitted to your lordship in the interview above referred to, touching the seizure of this vessel by the Canadian officials.

I do not understand it to be claimed by the Canadian authorities that the vessel seized had been engaged or was intending to engage in fishing within any limit prohibited by the treaty of 1818.

The occupation of the vessel was exclusively deep-sea fishing, a business in which it had a perfect right to be employed. The ground upon which the capture was made was that the master of the vessel had purchased of an inhabitant of Nova Scotia, near the port of Digby, in that province, a day or two before, a small quantity of bait to be used in fishing in the deep sea, outside the three-mile limit.

The question presented is whether, under the terms of the treaty and the construction placed upon them in practice for many years by the British Government, and in view of the existing relations between the United States and Great Britain, that transaction affords a sufficient reason for making such a seizure and for proceeding under it to the confiscation of the vessel and its contents.

I am not unaware that the Canadian authorities, conceiving, apparently, that the affirmative of this proposition could not be maintained, deemed it advisable to supplement it with a charge against the vessel of a violation of the Canadian customs act of 1883, in not reporting her arrival at Digby to the customs officer. But this charge is not the one on which the vessel was seized, or which must now be principally relied on for its condemnation, and standing alone could hardly, even if well founded, be the source of any serious controversy. It would be at most, under the circumstances, only an accidental and purely technical breach of a custom-house regulation, by which no harm was intended, and from which no harm came, and would in ordinary cases be easily condoned by an apology, and perhaps the payment of costs.

But trivial as it is, this charge does not appear to be well founded in point of fact. Digby is a small fishing settlement and its harbor not defined. The vessel had moved about and anchored in the outer part of the harbor, having no business at, or communication with Digby, and no reason for reporting to the officer of customs. It appears by the report of the consul-general to be conceded by the customs authorities there that fishing vessels have for forty years been accustomed to go in and out of the bay at pleasure, and have never been required to send ashore and report when they had no business with the port, and made no landing; and that no seizure had ever before been made or claimed against them for so doing.

Can it be reasonably insisted under these circumstances that by the sudden adoption, without notice, of a new rule, a vessel of a friendly nation should be seized and forfeited for doing what all similar vessels had for so long a period been allowed to do without question?

It is sufficiently evident that the claim of a violation of the customs act was an afterthought, brought forward to give whatever added strength it might to the principal claim on which the seizure had been made.

Recurring, then, to the only real question in the case, whether the vessel is to be forbidden for purchasing bait of an inhabitant of Nova Scotia, to be used in lawful fishing, it may be readily admitted that if the language of the treaty of 1818 is to be interpreted literally, rather than according to its spirit and plain intent, a vessel engaged in fishing would be prohibited from entering a Canadian port "for any purpose whatever" except to obtain wood or water, to repair damages, or to seek shelter. Whether it would be liable to the extreme penalty of confiscation for a breach of this prohibition in a trifling and harmless instance might be quite another question.

Such a literal construction is best refuted by considering its preposterous consequences. If a vessel enters a port to post a letter, or send a telegram, or buy a newspaper, to obtain a physician in case of illness, or a surgeon in case of accident, to land or bring off a passenger, or even to lend assistance to the inhabitants in fire, flood, or pestilence, it would, upon this construction, be held to violate the treaty stipulations maintained between two enlightened maritime and most friendly nations, whose ports are freely open to each other in all other place and under all other circumstances.

PHELPS.

If a vessel is not engaged in fishing she may enter all ports; but if employed in fishing, not denied to be lawful, she is excluded, though on the most innocent errand. She may buy water, but not food or medicine; wood, but not coal. She may repair rigging, but not purchase a new rope, though the inhabitants are desirous to sell it. If she even entered the port (having no other business) to report herself to the custom-house, as the vessel in question is now seized for not doing, she would be equally within the interdiction of the treaty. If it be said these are extreme instances of violation of the treaty not likely to be insisted on, I reply that no one of them is more extreme than the one relied upon in this case.

I am persuaded that your lordship will, upon reflection, concur with me that an intention so narrow, and in its result so unreasonable and so unfair, is not to be attributed to the high contracting parties who entered into this treaty.

It seems to me clear that the treaty must be construed in accordance with those ordinary and well-settled rules applicable to all written instruments, which without such salutary assistance must constantly fail of their purpose. By these rules the letter often gives way to the intent, or rather is only used to ascertain the intent.

The whole document will be taken together, and will be considered in connection with the attendant circumstances, the situation of the parties, and the object in view, and thus the literal meaning of an isolated clause is often shown not to be the meaning really understood or intended.

Upon these principles of construction the meaning of the clause in question does not seem doubtful. It is a treaty of friendship and not of hostility. Its object was to define and protect the relative rights of the people of the two countries in these fisheries, not to establish a system of non-intercourse or the means of mutual and unnecessary annoyance. It should be judged in view of the general rules of international comity and of maritime intercourse and usage, and its restrictions considered in the light of the purposes they were designed to serve.

Thus regarded it appears to me clear that the words "for no other purpose whatever," as employed in the treaty, mean no other purposes inconsistent with the provisions of the treaty, or prejudicial to the interests of the provinces or the Indians, and were not intended to prevent the entry of American fishing vessels into Canadian ports for innocent and mutually beneficial purposes, or unnecessarily to restrict the free and friendly intercourse customary between all civilized maritime nations, and especially between the United States and Great Britain. Such, I cannot but believe, is the construction that would be placed upon this treaty by any enlightened court of justice.

But even were it conceded that if the treaty was a private contract, instead of an international one, a court in dealing with an action upon it might find itself hampered by the letter from giving effect to the intent, that would not be decisive of the present case.

The interpretation of treaties between nations in their intercourse with each other proceeds upon broader and higher considerations. The question is not what is the technical effect of words, but what is the construction most consonant to the dignity, the just interests, and the friendly relations of the sovereign powers. I submit to your lordship that a construction so harsh, so unfriendly, so unnecessary, and so irritating as that set up by the Canadian authorities is not such as Her Majesty's Government has been accustomed either to accord or to submit to. It would find no precedent in the history of British diplomacy, and no provocation in any action or assertion of the Government of the United States.

These views derive great, if not conclusive, force from the action of the British Parliament on the subject, adopted very soon after the treaty of 1818 took effect, and continued without change to the present time.

An act of Parliament (59 George III, chap. 38) was passed June 14, 1819, to provide for carrying into effect the provisions of the treaty. After reciting the terms of the treaty, it enacts (in substance) that it shall be lawful for His Majesty by orders in council to make such regulations and to give such directions, orders, and instructions to the governor of Newfoundland or to any officer or officers in that station, or to any other persons "as shall or may be from time to time deemed proper and necessary for the carrying into effect the purposes of said convention with relation to the taking, drying, and curing of fish by inhabitants of the United States of America, in common with British subjects within the limits set forth in the aforesaid convention."

It further enacts that any foreign vessel engaged in fishing, or preparing to fish, within three marine miles of the coast (not authorized to do so by treaty) shall be seized or forfeited upon prosecution in the proper court.

It further provides as follows:

"That it shall and may be lawful for any fisherman of the said United States to enter into any such bays or harbors of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America as are last mentioned for the purpose of shelter and repairing damages therein and of purchasing wood and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever, subject nevertheless to such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent such fishermen of the

It further provides as follows:

"That if any person or persons upon requisition made by the governor of Newfoundland, or the person exercising the office of governor, or by any governor or person exercising the office of governor, in any other parts of His Majesty's dominions in America as aforesaid, or by any officer or officers acting under such governor, or person exercising the office of governor, in the execution of any orders or instructions from His Majesty in council, shall refuse to depart from such bays or harbors; or if any person or persons shall refuse or neglect to conform to any regulations or directions which shall be made or given for the execution of any of the purposes of this act; every such person so refusing or otherwise offending against this act shall forfeit the sum of £200, to be recovered, &c."

It will be perceived from these extracts, and still more clearly from a perusal of the entire act, that while reciting the language of the treaty in respect to the purposes for which American fishermen may enter British ports, it provides no forfeiture or penalty for any such entry unless accompanied either (1) by fishing or preparing to fish within the prohibited limits, or (2) by the infringement of restrictions that may be imposed by orders in council to prevent such fishing or the drying or curing of fish, or the abuse of privileges reserved by the treaty, or (3) by a refusal to depart from the bays or harbors upon proper requisition.

It thus plainly appears that it was not the intention of Parliament, nor its understanding of the treaty, that any other entry by an American fishing vessel into a British port should be regarded as an infraction of its provisions, or as affording the basis of proceedings against it.

No other act of Parliament for the carrying out of this treaty has ever been passed. It is unnecessary to point out that it is not in the power of the Canadian Parliament to enlarge or alter the provisions of the act of the Imperial Parliament, or to give to the treaty either a construction or a legal effect not warranted by that act.

But until the effort which I am informed is now in progress in the Canadian Parliament for the passage of a new act on the subject, introduced since the seizures under consideration, I do not understand that any statute has ever been enacted in that Parliament which attempts to give any different construction of effect to the treaty from that given by the act of 59 George III.

The only provincial statutes which, in the proceedings against the David J. Adams, that vessel has thus far been charged with infringing are the colonial acts of 1868, 1870, and 1883. It is therefore fair to presume that there are no other colonial acts applicable to the case, and I know of none.

The act of 1868, among other provisions not material to this discussion, provides for a forfeiture of foreign vessels "found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing, in British waters within three marine miles of the coast," and also provides a penalty of $400 against a master of a foreign vessel within the harbor who shall fail to answer questions put in an examination by the authorities. No other act is by this statute declared to be illegal; and no other penalty or forfeiture is provided for.

The very extraordinary provisions in this statute for facilitating forfeitures and embezzling defense, or appeal from them, not material to the present case, would, on any occasion, deserve very serious attention.

The act of 1883 has no application to the case, except upon the point of the omission of the vessel to report to the customs officer already considered.

It results, therefore, that at the time of the seizure of the David J. Adams and other vessels there was no act whatever, either of the British or colonial parliaments, which made the purchase of bait by those vessels illegal, or provided for any forfeiture, penalty, or proceedings against them for such a transaction, and even if such purchase could be regarded as a violation of that clause of the treaty which is relied on, no law existed under which the seizure would be justified. It will not be contended that custom-house authorities or colonial courts can seize and condemn vessels for a breach of the stipulations of a treaty when no legislation exists which authorizes them to take cognizance of the subject, or invests them with any jurisdiction in the premises. Of this obvious conclusion the Canadian authorities seem to be quite aware. I am informed that since the seizures they have pressed or are pressing through the Canadian parliament in much haste an act which is designed for the first time in the history of the legislation under this treaty to make the facts upon which the American vessels have been seized illegal, and to authorize proceedings against them there-

What the effect of such an act will be in enlarging the provisions of an existing treaty between the United States and Great Britain need not be considered here. The question under discussion depends upon the treaty and upon such legislation warranted by the treaty as existed when the seizures took place.

The practical construction given to the treaty down to the present time has been in entire accord with the conclusions thus deduced from the act of Parliament. The British Government has repeatedly refused to allow interference with American fishing vessels, unless for illegal fishing, and has given explicit orders to the contrary.

On the 26th of May, 1870, Mr. Thornton, the British minister at Washington, communicated officially to the Secretary of State of the United States copies of the orders addressed by the British Admiralty to Admiral Wellesley, commanding Her Majesty's naval forces on the North American station, and of a letter from the colonial department to the foreign office, in order that the Secretary might "see the nature of the instructions to be given to Her Majesty's and the Canadian officers employed in maintaining order at the fisheries in the neighborhood of the coasts of Canada." Among the documents thus transmitted is a letter from the foreign office to the secretary of the Admiralty, in which the following language is contained:

"The Canadian Government has recently determined, with the concurrence of Her Majesty's ministers, to increase the stringency of the existing practice of dispensing with the warnings hitherto given, and seizing at once any vessel detected in violating the law.

"In view of this change and of the questions to which it may give rise, I am directed by Lord Granville to request that you will move their lordships to instruct the officers of Her Majesty's ships employed in the protection of the fisheries that they are not to seize any vessel unless it is evident and can be clearly proved that the offense of fishing has been committed and the vessel itself captured within three miles of land."

In the letter from the lords of the Admiralty to Vice-Admiral Wellesley of May 5, 1870, in accordance with the foregoing request, and transmitting the letter above quoted from, there occurs the following language:

"My lords desire me to remind you of the extreme importance of commanding officers of the ships selected to protect the fisheries exercising the utmost discretion in carrying out their instructions, paying special attention to Lord Granville's observation that no vessel should be seized unless it is evident and can be clearly proved that the offense of fishing has been committed, and that the vessel is captured within three miles of land."

Lord Granville, in transmitting to Sir John Young the aforesaid instructions, makes use of the following language:

"Her Majesty's Government do not doubt that your ministers will agree with them as to the propriety of these instructions, and will give corresponding instructions to the vessels employed by them."

These instructions were again officially stated by the British minister at Washington to the Secretary of State of the United States in a letter dated June 11, 1870.

Again, in February, 1871, Lord Kimberly, colonial secretary, wrote to the governor-general of Canada as follows:

"The exclusion of American fishermen from resorting to Canadian ports, except for the purpose of shelter, and of repairing damages therein, purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, might be warranted by the letter of the treaty of 1818, and by the terms of the imperial act 59 George III, chap. 38, but Her Majesty's Government feel bound to state that it seems to them an extreme measure, inconsistent with the general policy of the Empire, and they are disposed to concede this point to the United States Government under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent smuggling, and to guard against any substantial invasion of the exclusive rights of fishing which may be reserved to British subjects."

And in a subsequent letter from the same source to the governor-general, the following language is used:

"I think it right, however, to add that the responsibility of determining what is the true construction of a treaty made by Her Majesty with any foreign power must remain with Her Majesty's Government, and that the degree to which this country would make itself a party to the strict enforcement of the treaty rights may depend not only on the literal construction of the treaty, but on the moderation and reasonableness with which these rights are asserted."

I am not aware that any modification of these instructions or any different rule from that therein contained has ever been adopted or sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government.

Judicial authority upon this question is to the same effect. That the purchase of bait by American fishermen in the provincial ports has been a common practice is well known. But in no case, so far as I can ascertain, has a seizure of an American vessel ever been enforced on the ground of the purchase of bait, or of any other supplies. discussed, and no case could be produced of any such condemnation. Vessels shown to have been condemned were in all cases adjudged guilty, either of fishing, or preparing to fish, within the prohibited limit. And in the case of the White Raven, tried in the admiralty court of New Brunswick before Judge Hazen in 1870, I understand it to have been distinctly held that the purchase of bait, unless proved to have been in preparation for illegal fishing, was not a violation of the treaty, nor of any existing law, and afforded no ground for proceedings against the vessel.

But even were it possible to justify on the part of the Canadian authorities the adoption of a construction of the treaty entirely different from that which has always heretofore prevailed, and to declare those acts criminal which have hitherto been regarded as innocent, upon obvious grounds of reason and justice, and upon common principles of comity to the United States Government, previous notice should have been given to it or to the American fishermen of the new and stringent instructions it was intended to enforce.

If it was the intention of Her Majesty's Government to recall the instructions which I have shown had been previously and so explicitly given relative to the interference with American vessels, surely notice should have been given accordingly.

The United States have just reason to complain, even if these restrictions could be justified by the treaty or by the acts of Parliament passed to carry it into effect, that they should be enforced in so harsh and unfriendly a manner without notice to the Government of the change of policy, or to the fishermen of the new danger to which they were thus exposed.

In any view, therefore, which it seems to me can be taken of this question, I feel justified in pronouncing the action of the Canadian authorities in seizing and still retaining the David J. Adams to be not only unfriendly and discourteous, but altogether unwarrantable.

The seizure was much aggravated by the manner in which it was carried into effect. It appears that four several visitations and searches of the vessel were made by boats from the Canadian steamer Lansdowne, in Annapolis Basin, Nova Scotia. The Adams was finally taken into custody and carried out of the Province of Nova Scotia, across the Bay of Fundy, and into the port of St. John, New Brunswick, and without explanation or hearing, on the following Monday, May 10, taken back by an armed crew to Digby, Nova Scotia. That, in Digby, the paper alleged to be the legal precept for the capture and detention of the vessel was nailed to her mast in such manner as to prevent its contents being read, and the request of the captain of the David J. Adams and of the United States consul-general to be allowed to detach the writ from the mast for the purpose of learning its contents was positively refused by the provincial official in charge. Nor was the United States consul-general able to learn from the commander of the Lansdowne the nature of the complaint against the vessel, and his respectful application to that effect was fruitless.

From all the circumstances attending this case, and other recent cases like it, it seems to me very apparent that the seizure was not made for the purpose of enforcing any right or redressing any wrong. As I have before remarked, it is not pretended that the vessel had been engaged in fishing, or was intending to fish in the prohibited waters, or that it had done or was intending to do any other injurious act. It was proceeding upon its regular and lawful business of fishing in the deep sea. It had received no request, and of course could have disregarded no request, to depart, and was, in fact, departing when seized; nor had its master refused to answer any questions put by the authorities. It had violated no existing law, and had incurred no penalty that any known statute imposed.

It seems to me impossible to escape the conclusion that this and other similar seizures were made by the Canadian authorities for the deliberate purpose of harassing and embarrassing the American fishing vessels in the pursuit of their lawful employment. And the injury, which would have been a serious one, if committed under a mistake, is very much aggravated by the motives which appear to have prompted it.

I am instructed by my Government earnestly to protest against these proceedings as wholly unwarranted by the treaty of 1818, and altogether inconsistent with the friendly relations hitherto existing between the United States and Her Majesty's Government; to request that the David J. Adams, and the other American fishing vessels now under seizure in Canadian ports, be immediately released, and that proper orders may be issued to prevent similar proceedings in the future. And I am also instructed to inform you that the United States will hold Her Majesty's Government responsible for all losses which may be sustained by American citizens in the dispossession of their property growing out of the search, seizure, detention, or sale of their vessels lawfully within the territorial waters of British North America.

The real source of the difficulty that has arisen is well understood. It is to be found in the irritation that has taken place among a portion of the Canadian people on account of the termination by the United States Government of the treaty of Washington on the 1st of July last, whereby fish imported from Canada into the United States, and which so long as that treaty remained in force was admitted free, is now liable to the import duty provided by the general revenue laws, and the opinion appears to have gained ground in Canada that the United States may be driven by harassing and annoying their fishermen, into the adoption of a new treaty by which Canadian fish shall be admitted free.

It is not necessary to say that this scheme is likely to prove as mistaken in policy as it is indefensible in principle. In terminating the treaty of Washington the United States were simply exercising a right expressly reserved to both parties by the treaty itself, and of the exercise of which by either party neither can complain. They will not be coerced by wanton injury into the making of a new one. Nor would a negotiation that had its origin in mutual irritation be promising of success. The question now is, not what fresh treaty may or might be desirable, but what is the true and just construction, as between the two nations, of the treaty that already exists.

The Government of the United States, approaching this question in the most friendly spirit, cannot doubt that it will be met by Her Majesty's Government in the same spirit, and feels every confidence that the action of Her Majesty's Government in the premises will be such as to maintain the cordial relations between the two countries that have so long happily prevailed.

SIR; I have received and read with much satisfaction your No. 293 of the 5th instant, inclosing a copy of a note addressed by you on that day to Lord Rosebery, in reference to the seizures of American fishing vessels in Canadian waters, and other interference with our commercial rights.

The views and arguments you adduce are fully in accord with the instructions already sent you, and are so ably advanced and enforced that I have for the present, and pending Lord Rosebery's reply, nothing further to suggest on these points.

I now transmit for your information a copy of a note addressed by me, on the 14th instant, to Sir Lionel West, on the subject of certain verbal notifications not to approach the coasts of Nova Scotia, which, as I have been informed by our consul-general at Halifax, were given to four of our fishing vessels by the subcollector of customs at Canso, and the information from the collector at Halifax that no American fishing vessels would be permitted to land fish at that port for transportation in bond across the province.

In reply to my note, Sir Lionel West informed me that the subject has been brought by him to the notice of Her Majesty's Government.

My notes of the 10th, 20th, and 29th of May last to Sir Lionel West continue without reply, and this, I suppose, is one of the serious impediments to prompt and practical exchange of views which results from the triangular attitude of the United States, the imperial Government of Great Britain, and the American dependencies of the latter power, towards all questions in which the interests of the provinces are involved.

The last note of the British minister, stating that he has brought the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the questions raised by the action of provincial officials will, I hope, be productive of authoritative expression, and afford some solid basis for our judgment and progress.

Halifax, June 15, 1886. [Received June 18.]

SIR: I have the honor to report that I sent with dispatch No. 83, dated May 27, 1886, a circular issued by J. Johnson, Esq., Canadian commissioner of customs, known as Circular No. 371, dated May 7, 1886, containing instructions to customs collectors concerning foreign fishing vessels. I now inclose herewith a confidential circular of the same date and number issued by the same officer, with a note saying "that the confidential circular was to be substituted for the one of the same date and number previously received."

It will be seen by comparing the circulars that the two last paragraphs in the first circular issued are stricken out and the following substituted in lieu thereof:

"Having reference to the above you are requested to furnish every foreign fishing vessel, boat, or fisherman found within three marine miles from shore with a copy of the warning inclosed herewith. If any fishing vessel or boat of the United States is found fishing, or to have been fishing, or preparing to fish, or, if hovering within the three-mile limit, does not depart within twenty-four hours after receiving such warning, you will place an officer on board such vessel and at once telegraph the facts to the fisheries department at Ottawa and await instructions."

Everything about shipping crews, purchasing supplies, and trading is eliminated in the confidential circular.

I am, &c.,

M. H. PHELAN,
Consul-General.

CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT.

Ottawa, May 7, 1886.

SEA: The Government of the United States having by notice terminated article 18 to 25, both inclusive, and article 30, known as the fishery articles of the Washington treaty, attention is called to following provision of the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at London on the 20th October, 1818:

"ARTICLE 1. Whereas, differences have arisen respecting the liberty claimed by the United States for the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, and cure fish on certain coasts, bays, harbors and creeks, of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, it is agreed between the high contracting parties that the inhabitants of the said United States shall have forever, in common with the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, the liberty to take fish of every kind on that part of the southern coast of Newfoundland which extends from Cape Ray to the Rameau Islands on the western and northern coast of Newfoundland, from the said Cape Ray to the Quirpon Islands, on the shores of the Magdalen Islands, and also on the coasts, bays, harbors, and creeks, from Mount Joly on the southern coast of Labrador, to and through the Straits of Belle Isle, and thence northwardly indefinitely along the coast, without prejudice, however, to any of the exclusive rights of the Hudson's Bay Company; and that the American fishermen shall also have liberty, forever, to dry and cure fish in any of the unsettled bays, harbors, and creeks of the southern part of the coast of Newfoundland hereabove described, and of the coast of Labrador; but so soon as the same or any portion thereof shall be settled, it shall not be lawful for the said fishermen to dry or cure fish at such portion so settled, without previous agreement for such purpose with the inhabitants, proprietors, or possessors of the ground.

"And the United States hereby renounce forever any liberty heretofore enjoyed or claimed by the inhabitants thereof to take, dry, or cure fish on or within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of his Britannic Majesty's dominions in America, not included within the above-mentioned limits; provided, however, that the American fishermen shall be admitted to enter such bays or harbors for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of obtaining water, and for no other purpose whatever. But they shall be under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent their taking, drying, or curing fish therein, or in any manner whatever abusing the privileges hereby reserved to them."

Attention is also called to the following provisions of the act of the Parliament of Canada, cap. 61 of the acts of 1868, entitled "An act respecting fishing by foreign vessels":

(2) "Any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, serving on board of any vessel of Her Majesty's navy, cruising and being in the waters of Canada for purpose of affording protection to Her Majesty's subjects engaged in the fisheries, or any commissioned officer of Her Majesty's navy, fishery officer, or stipendiary magistrate on board of any vessel belonging to or in the service of the Government of Canada and employed in the service of protecting the fisheries, or any officer of the customs of Canada, sheriff, magistrate, or other person duly commissioned for that purpose, may go on board of any ship, vessel, or boat within any harbor in Canada, or hovering (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors in Canada, and stay on board as long as she may remain within such place or distance."

(3) "If such ship, vessel, or boat be bound elsewhere, and shall continue within such harbor, or so hovering for twenty-four hours after the master shall have been required to depart, any one of such officers or persons as are above mentioned may bring such ship, vessel, or boat into port and search her cargo, and may also examine the master upon oath touching the cargo and voyage; and if the master or person in command shall not truly answer the questions put to him in such examination he shall forfeit $400; and if such ship, vessel, or boat be foreign, or not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada, and have been found fishing, or preparing to fish, or to have been fishing (in British waters) within three marine miles of any of the coasts, bays, creeks, or harbors of Canada not included within the above-mentioned limits, without a license, or after the expiration of the period named in the last license granted to such ship, vessel, or boat, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo thereof shall be forfeited.

(4) "All goods, ships, vessels, and boats, and the tackle, rigging, apparel, furniture, stores, and cargo liable to forfeiture under this act, may be seized and secured by any officers or persons mentioned in the second section of this act; and every person opposing any officer or person in the execution of his duty under this act, or aiding or abetting any other person in any opposition, shall forfeit $300, and shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction be liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 29, 1886.

SIR: I transmit to you, herewith, copies of the President's message of the 24th instant, to the Senate, relative to seizures and detentions of American vessels in Canadian waters.

I am, &c.,

T. F. BAYARD.

[Inclosure with No. 369.—Senate Ex. Doc. No. 217, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to Senate resolutions of May 10 and July 10, 1886, a report of the Secretary of State relative to seizure and detentions of United States vessels in Canadian waters.

JULY 24, 1886.—Read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolutions of the Senate dated, respectively, May 10 and July 10, 1886, touching alleged seizures and detentions of vessels of the United States in British North American waters, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, July 24, 1886.

To the President:

Responding to the accompanying resolutions, of the respective dates of May 10 and July 10, 1886, adopted by the Senate of the United States, and which were referred by the President to this Department, the undersigned, Secretary of State, has the honor to reply:

That the list hereunto appended gives all the cases of seizure or detention of American vessels in foreign ports since January 1, 1886, of which the Department of State has been informed; and, as it will be observed, no other cases of such seizure or detention have occurred than those in the ports of the Dominion of Canada, and under the alleged authority of the officials of that Government.

All of the vessels so seized or detained were vessels licensed for fishing under the laws of the United States.

They have all been released excepting the schooner David J. Adams, of Gloucester, Mass., which is still held in custody at Digby, Nova Scotia, her owners not having sought to procure her release by giving bond.

The period for which each vessel was detained and the terms upon which they were respectively released are stated in the appended list.

Instantly upon receiving authentic information of an alleged seizure from the owners of the vessels or their agents, or from the consular officers of the United States in Canada, this Department gave instructions to the United States consular officers to make full and careful investigation of the facts in each case; and wherever an infringement of treaty rights or the commercial rights and privileges of citizens of the United States appeared to have occurred, representation was promptly made to Her Britannic Majesty's minister at this capital, calling for redress, and notification given of demand for compensation for all loss and injury to the vessels in question and their owners.

In order properly to assert and maintain the rights of our citizens and our international rights under conventions and by the law of nations which might be brought in question by these proceedings and by the action of the Canadian Government, the professional services of two gentlemen learned in the law—Mr. George W. Biddle, of the city of Philadelphia, and Mr. William L. Putnam, of the city of Portland, in Maine—were retained by the Executive; and since the 20th of May last these gentlemen have bestowed their careful consideration upon the circumstances and the law in connection therewith in each case.

Proceedings have been commenced in the vice-admiralty court at Halifax, Nova Scotia, in the name of Her Majesty the Queen as plaintiff, against the schooner David J. Adams and the schooner Ella M. Doughty in both of which cases the complaint is substantially the same. Copy is herewith appended of the complaint signed by the solicitor for the attorney-general of the Dominion of Canada against the Ella M. Doughty, which sets forth at length the alleged grounds for the seizure and detention of that vessel.

Concurrently with these events, correspondence has begun and is still proceeding between this Department and the British minister at this capital, and also between the minister of the United States in London and the foreign office of Her Britannic Majesty's Government, to obtain satisfactory recognition and enforcement of our rights under treaty and international law and the laws and commercial usages of both countries, which are brought in question by the action of the Canadian authorities in making the seizures and detentions of American fishing vessels herein referred to and described.

Pending this correspondence, which it is believed must soon terminate in an amicable settlement mutually just and honorable, and, therefore, satisfactory to both countries and their inhabitants, the undersigned is unable to recommend the President to communicate its contents in its present incomplete status, believing that to do so would not be compatible with the public interests as connected with the transactions referred to.

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

London, September 11, 1886.

MY LORD: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of September 1, on the subject of the Canadian fisheries.

I received also on the 16th of August, last, from Lord Rosebery, then foreign secretary, a copy of a note on the same subject, dated July 23, 1886, addressed by his Lordship, through the British minister at Washington, to Mr. Bayard, the Secretary of State of the United States, in reply to a note from Mr. Bayard to the British minister of May 10, and also to mine addressed to Lord Rosebery under date of June 2. The retirement of Lord Rosebery from office immediately after I received his note, prevented a continuance of the discussion with him. And in resuming the subject with your lordship, it may be proper to refer both to Lord Rosebery's note and to your own. In doing so I repeat in substance considerations expressed to you orally in recent interviews.

My note to Lord Rosebery was confined to the discussion of the case of the David Adams, the only seizure in reference to which the details had then been fully made known to me. The points presented in my note, and the arguments in support of them, need not be repeated.

No answer is attempted in Lord Rosebery's reply. He declines to discuss the questions involved on the ground that they are "now occupying the attention of the courts of law in the Dominion, and may possibly form the subject of an appeal to the judicial committee of Her Majesty's privy council in England."

He adds:

"It is believed that the courts in Canada will deliver judgment in the above cases very shortly, and until the legal proceedings now pending have been brought to a conclusion, Her Majesty's Government do not feel justified in expressing an opinion upon them, either as to facts or the legality of the action taken by the colonial authorities."

And your lordship remarks, in your note of August 24, "it is clearly right, according to practice and precedent, that such diplomatic action should be suspended pending the completion of the judicial inquiry."

This is a proposition to which the United States Government is unable to accede.

The seizures complained of are not the acts of individuals claiming private rights which can be dealt with only by judicial determination, or which depend upon facts that need to be ascertained by judicial inquiry. They are the acts of the authorities of Canada, who profess to be acting, and in legal effect are acting, under the authority of Her Majesty's Government. In the report of the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, which is annexed to and adopted as a part of Lord Rosebery's note, it is said:

"The colonial statutes have received the sanction of the British sovereign who, and not the nation, is actually the party with whom the United States made the convention. The officers who are engaged in enforcing the acts of Canada, or the laws of the Empire, are Her Majesty's officers, whether their authority emanates directly from the Queen or from her representative, the governor-general."

The ground upon which the seizures complained of are principally justified is the allegation that the vessels in question were violating the stipulations of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain. This is denied by the United States Government. The facts of the transaction are not seriously in dispute, and, if they were, could be easily ascertained by both Governments without the aid of the judicial tribunals of either, and the question to be determined is the true interpretation of the treaty as understood, and to be administered between the high contracting parties.

The proposition of Her Majesty's Government amounts to this, that before the United States can obtain consideration of their complaint that the Canadian authorities without justification have seized and are proceeding to confiscate American vessels, the result of the proceedings in the Canadian courts, instituted by the captors as the means of the seizures, must be awaited, and the decision of that tribunal on the international questions involved obtained.

The interpretation of a treaty when it becomes the subject of discussion between two governments is not, I respectfully insist, to be settled by the judicial tribunals of either. That would be placing its construction in the hands of one of the parties to it. It can only be interpreted for such a purpose by the mutual consideration and agreement which were necessary to make it. Questions between individuals arising upon the terms of a treaty may be for the courts to which they resort to adjust.

Questions between nations as to national rights secured by treaty are of a very different character and must be solved in another way.

The United States Government is no party to the proceedings instituted by the British authorities in Canada. Nor can it consent to become a party. The proceedings themselves are what the United States complain of as unauthorized, as well as unfriendly. It would be inconsistent with the dignity of a sovereign power to become a party to such proceedings, or to seek redress in any way in the courts of another country for what it claims to be the violation of treaty stipulations by the authorities of that country.

Still less could it consent to be made indirectly a party to the suits by being required to await the result of such defense as the individuals whose property is implicated may be able and may think proper to set up.

Litigation of that sort may be indefinitely prolonged. Meanwhile fresh seizures of American vessels upon similar grounds are to be expected, for which redress would in like manner await the decisions of the local tribunals, whose jurisdiction the captors invoke and the United States Government denies.

Nor need it be again pointed out, how different may be the question involved between the Governments from that which those proceedings raise in the Canadian courts. Courts in such cases do not administer treaties. They administer only the statutes that are passed in pursuance of treaties. If a statute contravene the provisions of a treaty, British courts are nevertheless bound by the statute. And if, on the other hand, there is a treaty stipulation which no statute gives the means of enforcing, the court cannot enforce it.

Although the United States Government insists that there is no British or colonial act authorizing the seizures complained of, if the British courts should nevertheless find such authority in any existing statute, the question whether the statute itself or the construction given it is warranted by the treaty would still remain. And also the still higher question, whether if the strict technical reading of the treaty might be thought to warrant such a result, it is one which ought to be enforced between sovereign and friendly nations acting in the spirit of the treaty.

The United States Government must therefore insist that, irrespective of the future result of the Canadian legal proceedings, the authority and propriety of which is the subject of dispute, and without waiting their conclusion, it is to Her Majesty's Government it must look for redress and satisfaction for the transactions in question, and for such instructions to the colonial authority as will prevent their repetition.

While, as I have observed, Lord Rosebery declines to discuss the question of the legality of these seizures, the able and elaborate report on the subject from the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, which is made a part of it, attempts in very general terms to sustain their authority. He says:

"It is claimed that the vessel (the David J. Adams) violated the treaty of 1818, and consequently the statutes which exist for the enforcement of the treaty."

It is not clear from this language whether it is meant to be asserted that if an act, otherwise lawful, is prohibited by a treaty, the commission of the act becomes a violation of a statute which has no reference to it, if the statute was enacted to carry out the treaty, or whether it is intended to say that there was in existence, prior to the seizure of the vessel in question, some statute which did refer to the act complained of and did authorize proceedings or provide a penalty against American fishing vessels for purchasing bait or supplies in a Canadian port to be used in lawful fishing.

The former proposition does not seem to require refutation. If the latter is intended, I have respectfully to request that your lordship will have the kindness to direct a copy of such act to be furnished to me. I have supposed that none such existed, and neither in the report of the Canadian minister, nor in the customs circulars or warnings thereto appended, in which attention is called to the various legislation on the subject, is any such act pointed out.

The absence of such statute provision either in the act of Parliament (59 Geo. III. c. 38) or in any subsequent colonial act, is not merely a legal objection, though quite sufficient one, to the validity of the proceedings in question. It affords the most satisfactory evidence that up to the time of the present controversy no such construction has been given to the treaty by the British or by the colonial parliament, as is now sought to be maintained.

No other attempt is made in the report of the Canadian minister to justify the legality of these seizures.

It is apparent from the whole of it that he recognizes the necessity of the proposed enactment of the act of the Canadian Parliament already alluded to in order to sustain them.

This remark is further confirmed by the communication from the Marquis of Lansdowne, governor-general of Canada, to Lord Granville, in reference to that act, annexed by Lord Rosebery to his second note to the British minister of July 23, 1886, a copy of which was sent me by his lordship, in connection with his other note of date above referred to.

I do not observe upon other points of the minister's report not bearing upon the point of note to Lord Rosebery. So far as they relate to the communications addressed to the British minister, the British minister's reply as may be seen in various provincial and local newspapers.

Some of these newspapers have been prevented at this time to protest against the two recent men, of a somewhat to ask your lordship.

These vessels were sent to Am on the northwestern islands.

For this purpose having reported similar attempts on board a pilot boat, and the twenty-four men to break up the copies of the affidavits.

the British minister by Mr. Bayard, the Secretary of State will doubtless make such reply as may seem to him to be called for.

In various other instances American vessels have been seized or driven away by the provincial authorities when not engaged or proposing to engage in any illegal employment.

Some of these cases are similar to that of the Adams, the vessels having been taken possession of for purchasing bait or supplies to be used in lawful fishing, or for alleged technical breach of custom-house regulations, where no harm was either intended or committed, and under circumstances in which for a very long time such regulations have been treated as inapplicable.

In other cases, an arbitrary extension of the three-mile limit fixed by the treaty has been announced so as to include within it portions of the high sea, such as the Bay of Fundy, the Bay of Chaleur, and other similar waters, and American fishermen have been prevented from fishing in those places by threats of seizure. I do not propose at this time to discuss the question of the exact location of that line. But only to protest against its extension in the manner attempted by the provincial authorities.

To two recent instances of interference by Canadian officers with American fishermen, of a somewhat different character, I am specially instructed by my Government to ask your lordship's attention, those of the schooners Thomas F. Bayard and Mascot.

These vessels were proposing to fish in waters in which the right to fish is expressly secured to Americans by the terms of the treaty of 1818; the former in Bonne Bay, on the northwest coast of Newfoundland, and the latter near the shores of the Magdalen Islands.

For this purpose the Bayard attempted to purchase bait in the port of Bonne Bay, having reported at the custom-house and announced its object. The Mascot made a similar attempt at Port Amherst in the Magdalen Islands, and also desired to take on board a pilot. Both vessels were refused permission by the authorities to purchase bait, and the Mascot to take a pilot, and were notified to leave the ports within twenty-four hours on penalty of seizure. They were therefore compelled to depart, to break up their voyages, and to return home, to their very great loss. I append copies of the affidavits of the masters of these vessels, stating the facts.

Your lordship will observe, upon reference to the treaty, not only that the right to fish in these waters is conferred by it, but that the clause prohibiting entry by American fishermen into Canadian ports, except for certain specified purposes, which is relied on by the Canadian Government in the cases of the Adams and of some other vessels, has no application whatever to the ports from which the Bayard and the Mascot were excluded. The only prohibition in the treaty having reference to those ports is against curing and drying fish there, without leave of the inhabitants, which the vessels excluded had no intention of doing.

The conduct of the provincial officers toward these vessels was therefore not merely unfriendly and injurious, but in clear and plain violation of the terms of the treaty. And I am instructed to say that reparation for the losses sustained by it to the owners of the vessels will be claimed by the United States Government on their behalf as soon as the amount can be accurately ascertained.

It will be observed that interference with American fishing vessels by Canadian authorities is becoming more and more frequent, and more and more flagrant in its disregard of treaty obligations and of the principles of comity and friendly intercourse. The forbearance and moderation of the United States Government in respect to them appear to have been misunderstood and to have been taken advantage of by the provincial government. The course of the United States has been dictated, not only by an anxious desire to preserve friendly relations, but by the full confidence that the interposition of Her Majesty's Government would be such as to put a stop to the transactions complained of, and to afford reparation for what has already taken place. The subject has become one of grave importance, and I earnestly solicit the immediate attention of your lordship to the question it involves, and to the views presented in my former note and in those of the Secretary of State.

The proposal in your lordship's note that a revision of the treaty stipulations bearing upon the subject of the fisheries should be attempted by the Government, upon the basis of mutual concessions is one that under other circumstances would merit and receive serious consideration. Such a revision was desired by the Government of the United States before the present disputes arose, and when there was a reasonable prospect that it might have been carried into effect. Various reasons not within its control now concur to make the present time inopportune for that purpose, and greatly to diminish the hope of a favorable result to such an effort. Not the least of them is the irritation produced in the United States by the course of the Canadian Government, and the relief thereby engendered that a new treaty is attempted to be forced upon the United States Government.

It seems apparent that the questions now presented and the transactions that are the subject of present complaint must be considered and adjusted upon the provisions of the existing treaty, and upon the construction that is to be given to them.

A just construction of these stipulations, and such as would consist with the dignity, the interests, and the friendly relations of the two countries, ought not to be difficult, and can doubtless be arrived at.

As it appears to me very important to these relations that the collisions between the American fishermen and the Canadian officials should terminate, I suggest to your lordship whether an ad interim construction of the terms of the existing treaty cannot be reached by mutual understanding of the Governments, to be carried out informally by instructions given on both sides, without prejudice to ultimate claims of either, and terminable at the will of either, by which the conduct of the business can be so regulated for the time being as to prevent disputes and injurious proceedings until a more permanent understanding can be had.

Should this suggestion meet with your lordship's approval, perhaps you may be able to propose an outline for such an arrangement.

I am not prepared nor authorized to present one at this time, but may hereafter be instructed to do so if the effort is thought advisable.

I have, &c.,

E. J. PHELPS.

Sworn statement of James McDonald, master of the Thomas F. Bayard, dated July 23, 1886, with accompanying notice served on him by N. N. Taylor, officer of customs, dated July 12, 1886.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Commonwealth of Massachusetts :

I, James McDonald, of Gloucester, on my oath do say I am master and part owner of the schooner Thomas F. Bayard, a licensed vessel of the United States; that she sailed with a permit to trade from Gloucester June 22, on a trip for halibut. We fished on the northwest coast of Newfoundland, near Bonne Bay, where, my supply of bait being exhausted, I ran into the port July 12 and reported at the custom-house, stating to the collector that my purpose was to buy bait. The collector immediately served me with the notice hereto appended and made part of this affidavit. I had with me a copy of the Canadian Warning of March 5, 1886, which contained the clause 2 of the treaty of 1818. This I showed to the collector and argued that I had the right under the treaty there set out. In substance his reply was that he had an official duty to perform and would not permit me.

Fearing that my vessel would be seized should I remain or should I buy bait or take it, I determined to return to Gloucester, as my trip was broken up by reason of the threats in the notice and the action of the collector in refusing to recognize the rights secured to my vessel by the treaty. I arrived in Gloucester July 26. I say great losses and damages have inured to said vessel, her owner, and crew by reason of being warned off said coast and said Bonne Bay, as will be duly made to appear.

The night was stormy, with a strong head-wind against her, and her sole object was temporary shelter. She remained at the spot where she anchored, which was about seven miles from the port of Shelburne, no one leaving her until 6 o'clock the next morning, when she hoisted sail in order to put to sea. She had scarcely started, however, before she was arrested and boarded by a boat's crew from the Canadian cruiser Terror. Captain Landry was compelled to proceed to Shelburne, about seven miles distant, to report to the collector. When the report was made, Captain Landry was informed that he was fined $400 for not reporting on the previous night. He answered that the custom-house was not open during the time that he was in the outer harbor. He further insisted that it was obvious from the storm that caused him to take shelter in that harbor, from the shortness of his stay, and from the circumstances that his equipments were exclusively for deep-sea fishing, and that he had made no effort whatever to approach the shore, that his object was exclusively to find shelter. The fine, however, being imposed principally through the urgency of Captain Quigley, commanding the Terror, Captain Landry was informed that he was to be detained at the port of Shelburne until a deposit to meet the fine was made. He consulted Mr. White, the United States consular agent at Shelburne, who at once telegraphed the facts to Mr. Phelan, United States consul-general at Halifax, it being of great importance to Captain Landry, and to those interested in his venture, that he should proceed on his voyage at once. Mr. Phelan then telegraphed to the assistant commissioner of customs at Ottawa that it was impossible for Captain Landry to have reported while he was in the outer harbor on the 8th instant, and asking that the deposit required to release the vessel be reduced. He was told in reply that the minister declined to reduce the deposit, but that it might be made at Halifax. Mr. Phelan at once deposited at Halifax the $400, and telegraphed to Captain Landry that he was at liberty to go to sea. On the evening of October 11 Mr. Phelan received a telegram from Captain Landry, who had already been kept four days in the port, stating that "the custom-house officers and Captain Quigley" refused to let him go to sea. Mr. Phelan the next morning called on the collector at Halifax to ascertain if an order had issued to release the vessel, and was informed that the order had been given, "but that the collector and captain of the cruiser refused to obey it, for the reason that the captain of the seized vessel hoisted the American flag while she was in custody of Canadian officials." Mr. Phelan at once telegraphed this state of facts to the assistant commissioner at Ottawa, and received in reply, under date of August 12, the announcement that "collector has been instructed to release the Grimes from customs seizure. This department has nothing to do with other charges." On the same day a dispatch from the commissioner of customs at Ottawa was sent to the collector of customs at Halifax reiterating the order to release the Grimes, and saying "this [the customs] department has nothing to do with other charges. It is department of marine."

The facts as to the flag were as follows :

On October 11, the Marion Grimes, being then under arrest by order of local officials for not immediately reporting at the custom-house, hoisted the American flag. Captain Quigley, who, representing, as appeared, not the revenue, but the marine department of the Canadian administration, was, with his "cruiser," keeping guard over the vessel, ordered the flag to be hauled down. This order was obeyed; but about an hour afterwards the flag was again hoisted, whereupon Captain

Quigley boarded the vessel with an armed crew and lowered the flag himself. The vessel was finally released under orders of the customs department, being compelled to pay $8 costs in addition to the deposit of $400 above specified.

The seriousness of the damage inflicted on Captain Landry and those interested in his venture will be understood when it is considered that he had a crew of twelve men, with full supplies of bait, which his detention spoiled.

You will at once see that the grievances I have narrated fall under two distinct heads.

The first concerns the boarding by Captain Quigley of the Marion Grimes on the morning of October 8th, and compelling her to go to the town of Shelburne, there subjecting her to a fine of $400 for visiting the port without reporting, and detaining her there arbitrarily four days, a portion of which time was after a deposit to meet the fine had been made.

This particular wrong I now proceed to consider with none the less gravity, because other outrages of the same class have been perpetrated by Captain Quigley. On August 18th last I had occasion, as you will see by the annexed papers, to bring to the notice of the British minister at this capital several instances of aggression on the part of Captain Quigley on our fishing vessels. On October 19, 1886, I had also to bring to the British minister's notice the fact that Captain Quigley had, on September the 10th, arbitrarily arrested the Everett Steele, a United States fishing vessel at the outer port of Shelburne. To these notes I have received no reply. Copies are transmitted, with the accompanying papers, to you in connection with the present instruction, so that the cases, as part of a class, can be presented by you to Her Majesty's Government.

Were there no treaty relations whatever between the United States and Great Britain, were the United States fishermen without any other right to visit those coasts than are possessed by the fishing craft of any foreign country simply as such, the arrest and boarding of the Grimes, as above detailed, followed by forcing her into the port of Shelburne, there subjecting her to fine for not reporting, and detaining her until her bait and ice were spoiled, are wrongs which I am sure Her Majesty's Government will be prompt to redress. No Governments have been more earnest and resolute in insisting that vessels driven by stress of weather into foreign harbors should not be subject to port exactions than the Governments of Great Britain and the United States. So far has this solicitude been carried that both Governments, from motives of humanity, as well as of interest as leading maritime powers, have adopted many measures by which foreigners as well as citizens or subjects arriving within their territorial waters may be protected from the perils of the sea. For this purpose not merely light-houses and light-ships are placed by us at points of danger, but an elaborate life-saving service, well equipped with men, boats, and appliances for relief, stands our seaboard in order to render aid to vessels in distress, without regard to their nationality. Other benevolent organizations are sanctioned by Government which bestow rewards on those who hazard their lives in the protection of life and property in vessels seeking in our waters refuge from storms. Acting in this spirit the Government of the United States has been zealous, not merely in opening its ports freely, without charges to vessels seeking them in storm, but in insisting that its own vessels, seeking foreign ports under such circumstances, and exclu-

In cases of vessels carried into British ports by violence or stress of weather [said Mr. Webster in instructions to Mr. Everett, June 28, 1842] we insist that there shall be no interference from the land with the relation or personal condition of those on board, according to the laws of their own country; that vessels under such circumstances shall enjoy the common laws of hospitality, subjected to no force, entitled to have their immediate wants and necessities relieved, and to pursue their voyage without molestation.

In this case, that of the Creole, Mr. Wheaton, in the Revue Française et Étrangère (IX, 345), and Mr. Legaré (4 Op. At. Gen., 98), both eminent publicists, gave opinions that a vessel carried by stress of weather or forced into a foreign port is not subject to the law of such port; and this was sustained by Mr. Bates, the umpire of the commission to whom the claim was referred (Rep. Com. of 1853, 244, 245):

The municipal law of England [so he said] cannot authorize a magistrate to violate the law of nations by invading with an armed force the vessel of a friendly nation that has committed no offense, and forcibly dissolving the relations which, by the laws of his country, the captain is bound to preserve and enforce on board. These rights, sanctioned by the law of nations, viz, the right to navigate the ocean and to seek shelter in case of distress or other unavoidable circumstances, and to retain over the ship, her cargo, and passengers, the law of her country, must be respected by all nations, for no independent nation would submit to their violation.

It is proper to state that Lord Ashburton, who conducted the controversy in its diplomatic stage on the British side, did not deny as a general rule the propositions of Mr. Webster. He merely questioned the applicability of the rule to the case of the Creole. Nor has the principle ever been doubted by either Her Majesty's Government or the Government of the United States; while, in cases of vessels driven by storm on inhospitable coasts, both Governments have asserted it, sometimes by extreme measures of redress, to secure indemnity for vessels suffering under such circumstances from port exactions, or from injuries inflicted from the shore.

It would be hard to conceive of anything more in conflict with the humane policy of Great Britain in this respect, as well as with the law of nations, than was the conduct of Captain Quigley towards the vessel in question on the morning of October 8th.

In such coasts, at early dawn, after a stormy night, it is not unusual for boats, on errands of relief, to visit vessels which have been struggling with storm during the night. But in no such errand of mercy was Captain Quigley engaged. The Marion Grimes, having found shelter during the night's storm, was about to depart on her voyage, losing no time while her bait was fresh and her ice lasted, when she was boarded by an armed crew, forced to go 7 miles out of her way to the port, and was there under pressure of Captain Quigley, against the opinion originally expressed of the collector, subjected to a fine of $400 with costs, and detained there, as I shall notice hereafter, until her voyage was substantially broken up. I am confident Her Majesty's Government will concur with me in the opinion that, as a question of international law, aside from treaty and other rights, the arrest and detention under the circumstances of Captain Landry and of his vessel were in violation of the law of nations as well as the law of humanity, and that on this ground alone the fine and the costs should be refunded and the parties suffering be indemnified for their losses thereby incurred.

It is not irrelevant, on such an issue as the present, to inquire into the official position of Captain Quigley, "of the Canadian cruiser Terror." He was, as the term "Canadian cruiser" used by him enables us to conclude, not an officer in Her Majesty's distinctive service. He was not the commander of a revenue cutter, for the head of the customs service disavowed him. Yet he was arresting and boarding, in defiance of law, a vessel there seeking shelter, over-influencing the collector of the port into the imposition of a fine, hauling down with his own hand the flag of the United States, which was displayed over the vessel, and enforcing arbitrarily an additional period of detention after the deposit had been made, simply because the captain of the vessel refused to obey him by executing an order insulting to the flag which the vessel bore. If armed cruisers are employed in seizing, harassing, and humiliating storm-bound vessels of the United States on Canadian coasts, breaking up their voyages and mulcting them with fines and costs, it is important for reasons presently to be specified that this Government should be advised of the fact.

From Her Majesty's Government redress is asked. And that redress, as I shall have occasion to say hereafter, is not merely the indemnification of the parties suffering by Captain Quigley's actions, but his withdrawal from the waters where the outrages I represent to you have been committed.

I have already said that the claims thus presented could be abundantly sustained by the law of nations, aside from treaty and other rights. But I am not willing to rest the case on the law of nations. It is essential that the issue between United States fishing vessels and the "cruiser Terror" should be examined in all its bearings, and settled in regard not merely to the general law of nations, but to the particular rights of the parties aggrieved.

It is a fact that the fishing vessel Marion Grimes had as much right under the special relations of Great Britain and the United States to enter the harbor of Shelburne as had the Canadian cruiser. The fact that the Grimes was liable to penalties for the abuse of such right of entrance does not disprove its existence. Captain Quigley is certainly liable to penalties for his misconduct on the occasion referred to. Captain Landry was not guilty of misconduct in entering and seeking to leave that harbor, and had abused no privilege. But whether liable or no for subsequent abuse of the rights, I maintain that the right of free entrance into that port, to obtain shelter, and whatever is incident thereto, belonged as much to the American fishing vessel as to the Canadian cruiser.

The basis of this right is thus declared by an eminent jurist and statesman, Mr. R. R. Livingston, the first Secretary of State appointed by the Continental Congress, in instructions issued on January 7, 1782, to Dr. Franklin, then at Paris, intrusted by the United States with the negotiation of articles of peace with Great Britain:

The arguments on which the people of America found their claim to fish on the banks of Newfoundland arise, first, from their having once formed a part of the British Empire, in which state they always enjoyed as fully as the people of Britain themselves the right of fishing on those banks. They have shared in all the wars for the extension of that right, and Britain could with no more justice have excluded them from the enjoyment of it (even supposing that one nation could possess it to the exclusion of another) while they formed a part of that Empire than they could exclude the people of London or Bristol. If so, the only inquiry is, how have we lost this right? If we were tenants in common with Great Britain while united with her, we still continue so, unless by our own act we have relinquished our title. But we parted with mutual consent, we should doubtless have made partition of our common rights by treaty. But the oppressions of Great Britain forced us to a separation (which must be admitted, or we have no right to be independent); and can not certainly be contended that those oppressions abridged our rights or gave new ones to Britain. Our rights, then, are not invalidated by this separation, more particularly as we have kept up our claim from the commencement of the war, and assigned the attempt of Great Britain to exclude us from the fisheries, as one of the causes of our recurring to arms.

As I had occasion to show in my note to the British minister in the case of the Everett Steele, of which a copy is hereto annexed, this "tenancy in common," held by citizens of the United States in the fisheries, they were to "continue to enjoy" under the preliminary articles of 1782, as well as under the treaty of peace of 1783; and this right, as a right of entrance in those waters, was reserved to them, though with certain limitations in its use, by the treaty of 1818. I might here content myself with noticing that the treaty of 1818, herein reciting a principle of the law of nations as well as ratifying a right previously possessed by fishermen of the United States, expressly recognizes the right of these fishermen to enter the "bays or harbors" of Her Majesty's Canadian dominions, "for the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein." The extent of other recognitions of rights in the same clause need not here be discussed. At present it is sufficient to say that the placing an armed cruiser at the mouth of a harbor in which the United States fishing vessels are accustomed and are entitled to seek shelter on their voyages, such cruiser being authorized to arrest and board our fishing vessels seeking such shelter, is an infraction not merely of the law of nations, but of a solemn treaty stipulation. That, so far as concerns the fishermen so affected, its consequences are far-reaching and destructive, it is not necessary here to argue. Fishing vessels only carry provisions enough for each particular voyage. If they are detained several days on their way to the fishing banks the venture is broken up. The arrest and detention of one or two operates upon all. They cannot as a class, with their limited capital and resources, afford to run risks so ruinous. Hence, rather than subject themselves to even the chances of suffering the wrongs inflicted by Captain Quigley, "of the Canadian cruiser Terror," on some of their associates, they might prefer to abandon their just claim to the shelter consecrated to them alike by humanity, ancient title, the law of nations, and by treaty, and face the gravest peril and the wildest seas in order to reach their fishing grounds. You will therefore represent to Her Majesty's Government that the placing Captain Quigley in the harbor of Shelburne to inflict wrongs and humiliation on United States fishermen there seeking shelter is, in connection with other methods of annoyance and injury, expelling United States fishermen from waters, access to which, of great importance in the pursuit of their trade, is pledged to them by Great Britain, not merely as an ancient right, but as part of a system of international settlement.

It is impossible to consider such a state of things without grave anxiety. You can scarcely represent this too strongly to Her Majesty's Government.

It must be remembered, in considering this system, so imperiled, that the preliminaries to the article of 1782, afterwards adopted as the treaty of 1783, were negotiated at Paris by Dr. Franklin, representing the United States, and Mr. Richard Oswald, representing Lord Shelburne, then colonial secretary, and afterwards, when the treaty was finally agreed on, prime minister. It must be remembered, also, that Lord Shelburne, while maintaining the rights of the colonies when assailed by Great Britain, was nevertheless unwilling that their independence should be recognized prior to the treaty of peace, as if it were a concession wrung from Great Britain by the exigencies of war. His position was that this recognition should form part of a treaty of partition, by which, as is stated by the court in Sutton v. Sutton (1 Rus. & M., 675), already noticed by me, the two great sections of the British Empire agreed to separate, in their articles of separation recognizing to each other's citizens or subjects certain territorial rights. Thus the continuance of the rights of the United States in the fisheries was recognized and guaranteed; and it was also declared that the navigation of the Mississippi, whose sources were, in the imperfect condition of geographical knowledge of that day, supposed to be in British territory, should be free and open to British subjects and to citizens of the United States. Both powers also agreed that there should be no further prosecutions or confiscations based on the war; and in this way were secured the titles to property held in one country by persons remaining loyal to the other. This was afterwards put in definite shape by the following article (Article X) of Jay's treaty:

It is agreed that British subjects who now hold lands in the territories of the United States, and American citizens who now hold lands in the dominion of His Majesty, shall continue to hold them according to the nature and tenure of their respective estates and titles therein, and may grant, sell, or devise the same to whom they please in like manner as if they were natives; and that neither they nor their heirs or assigns shall, so far as may respect the said lands and the legal remedies incident thereto, be regarded as aliens.

It was this article which the court in Sutton v. Sutton, above referred to, held to be one of the incidents of the "separation" of 1783, of perpetual obligation, unless rescinded by the parties, and hence not abrogated by the war of 1812.

It is not, however, on the continuousness of the reciprocities, recognized by the treaty of 1783, that I desire now to dwell. What I am anxious you should now impress upon the British Government is the fact that, as the fishery clause in this treaty, a clause continued in the treaty of 1818, was a part of a system of reciprocal recognitions which are interdependent, the abrogation of this clause, not by consent, but by acts of violence and of insult, such as those of the Canadian cruiser Terror, would be fraught with consequences which I am sure could not be contemplated by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain without immediate action being taken to avert them. To the extent of the system thus assailed I now direct attention.

When Lord Shelburne and Dr. Franklin negotiated the treaty of peace, the area on which its recognitions were to operate was limited. They covered, on the one hand, the fisheries; but the map of Canada in those days, as studied by Lord Shelburne, gives but a very imperfect idea of the territory near which the fisheries lay. Halifax was the only port of entry on the coast; the New England States were there and the other nine were provinces, but no organized governments to the west of them. It was on this area only, as well as on Great Britain, that the recognitions and guarantees of the treaty were at first to operate. Yet comparatively small as this field may now seem, it was to the preservation over it of certain reciprocal rights that the attention of the negotiators was mainly given. And the chief of these rights were: (1) the fisheries, a common enjoyment in which by both parties took nothing from the property of either; and (2) the preservation to the citizens or subjects of each country of title to property in the other.

Since Lord Shelburne's premiership this system of reciprocity and mutual convenience has progressed under the treaties of 1842 and 1846, so as to give to Her Majesty's subjects, as well as to citizens of the United States, the free use of the river Detroit or both sides of the island Bois

Blanc, and between that island and the American and Canadian shores, and all the several channels and passages between the various islands lying near the junction of the river St. Clair with the lake of that name. By the treaty of 1846 the principle of common border privileges was extended to the Pacific Ocean. The still existing commercial articles of the treaty of 1871 further amplified those mutual benefits by embracing the use of the inland waterways of either country, and defining enlarged privileges of bonded transit by land and water through the United States for the benefit of the inhabitants of the Dominion. And not only by treaties has the development of Her Majesty's American dominion, especially to the westward, been aided by the United States, but the vigorous contemporaneous growth under the enterprise and energy of citizens of the Northwestern States and Territories of the United States has been productive of almost equal advantages to the adjacent possessions of the British Crown, and the favoring legislation by Congress has created benefits in the way of railway facilities which under the sanction of State laws have been and are freely and beneficially enjoyed by the inhabitants of the Dominion and their Government.

Under this system of energetic and co-operative development the coast of the Pacific has been reached by the transcontinental lines of railway within the territorial limits of the respective countries, and, as I have stated, the United States being the pioneers in this remarkable progress, have been happily able to anticipate and incidentally to promote the subsequent success of their neighbors in British America.

It will be scarcely necessary for you to say to Lord Iddesleigh that the United States, in thus aiding in the promotion of the prosperity, and in establishing the security of Her Majesty's Canadian dominions, claims no particular credit. It was prompted, in thus opening its territory to Canadian use, and incidentally for Canadian growth, in large measure by the consciousness that such good offices are part of a system of mutual convenience and advantage growing up under the treaties of peace and assisted by the natural forces of friendly contiguity. Therefore it is that we witness with surprise and painful apprehension the United States fishermen hampered in their enjoyment of their undoubted rights in the fisheries.

The hospitalities of Canadian coasts and harbors, which are ours by ancient right, and which these treaties confirm, cost Canada nothing and are productive of advantage to her people. Yet, in defiance of the most solemn obligations, in utter disregard of the facilities and assistances granted by the United States, and in a way especially irritating, a deliberate plan of annoyances and aggressions has been instituted and plainly exhibited during the last fishing season—a plan calculated to drive these fishermen from shores where, without injury to others, they prosecute their own legitimate and useful industry.

It is impossible not to see that if the unfriendly and unjust system, of which the cases now presented are part, is sustained by Her Majesty's Government, serious results will almost necessarily ensue, great as is the desire of this Government to maintain the relations of good neighborhood. Unless Her Majesty's Government shall effectually check these aggressions a general conviction on the part of the people of the United States may naturally be apprehended that, as treaty stipulations in behalf of our fishermen, based on their ancient rights, cease to be respected, the maintenance of the comprehensive system of mutual commercial accommodation between Canada and the United States could not reasonably be expected.

In contemplation of so unhappy and undesirable a condition of affairs I express the earnest hope that Her Majesty's Government will take immediate measures to avert its possibility.

With no other purpose than the preservation of peace and good will and the promotion of international amity, I ask you to represent to the statesmen charged with the administration of Her Majesty's Government the necessity of putting an end to the action of Canadian officials in excluding American fishermen from the enjoyment of their treaty rights in the harbors and waters of the maritime provinces of British North America.

The action of Captain Quigley in hauling down the flag of the United States from the Marion Grimes has naturally aroused much resentment in this country, and has been made the subject of somewhat excited popular comment; and it is wholly impossible to account for so extraordinary and unwarranted an exhibition of hostility and disrespect by that official. I must suppose that only his want of knowledge of what is due to international comity and propriety and overheated zeal as an officer of police could have permitted such action; but I am confident that, upon the facts being made known by you to Her Majesty's Government, it will at once be disavowed, a fitting rebuke be administered, and the possibility of a repetition of Captain Quigley's offence be prevented.

It seems hardly necessary to say that it is not until after condemnation by a prize court that the national flag of a vessel seized as a prize of war is hauled down by her captor. Under the fourteenth section of the twentieth chapter of the Navy Regulations of the United States the rule in such cases is laid down as follows:

A neutral vessel, seized, is to wear the flag of her own country until she is adjudged to be a lawful prize by a competent court.

But, a fortiori, is this principle to apply in cases of customs seizures where fines only are imposed and where no belligerency whatever exists. In the port of New York, and other of the countless harbors of the United States, are merchant vessels to-day flying the British flag which from time to time are liable to penalties for violations of customs laws and regulations. But I have yet to learn that any official, assuming, directly or indirectly, to represent the Government of the United States, would under such circumstances order down or forcibly haul down the British flag from a vessel charged with such irregularity and I now assert that if such act were committed, this Government, after being informed of it, would not wait for a complaint from Great Britain, but would at once promptly reprimand the parties concerned in such misconduct and would cause proper expression of regret to be made.

A scrupulous regard for international respect and courtesy should mark the intercourse of the officials of these two great and friendly nations, and anything savoring of the contrary should be unhesitatingly and emphatically rebuked. I cannot doubt that these views will find ready acquiescence from those charged with the administration of the Government of Great Britain.

You are at liberty to make Lord Iddesleigh acquainted with the contents of this letter, and, if desired, leave with him a copy.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, November 20, 1886.

SIR: On the 6th of the present month I wrote you concerning the treatment of the United States fishing schooner Marion Grimes, of Gloucester, Mass., on October 7, 1886, in the outer harbor of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, by Captain Quigley, of the Canadian cruiser Terror.

I received yesterday and now inclose a copy of the statement made under oath by Captain Landry of the Marion Grimes, and present it as supplementary and confirmatory of my former communication on the subject.

I am, &c.,

T. F. BAYARD.

I, Alexander Landry, master of schooner Marion Grimes, of Gloucester, being duly sworn, do depose and say:

That on Monday, October 4, 1886, I sailed from Gloucester on a fishing trip to Western Bank. On the night of Thursday, October 7, the wind blowing almost a gale from the southeast and a heavy sea running, we came to anchor in the entrance of Shelburne Harbor about midnight for shelter. We were then fully 10 miles from the custom-house at Shelburne. At 4.30 a. m. of the next day we hove up our anchor to continue our voyage, the wind having died away almost to a calm. Just as we had got our anchor on the bow an officer and boat's crew from Canadian cruiser Terror (which laid off Sand Point some 3 miles above us) came on board and told me we must come to anchor at once and go to the custom-house at Shelburne and enter and clear. I at once anchored the vessel and taking my boat and two of my crew started for the custom-house. When we reached the Terror, Captain Quigley ordered me to come on board his vessel, leave my boat and men, and go with him in his boat to Shelburne. I arrived at the custom-house at about 8.30 a. m., and waited until 9 a. m., when Collector Attwood arrived. I then entered and cleared my vessel and was about to pay the charges and depart, when Captain Quigley entered the office and told the collector he ought not to clear my vessel as I had attempted to leave the harbor without reporting, and that the case should be laid before the authorities at Ottawa. Collector Attwood then withheld my papers until a decision should be received from Ottawa. I then tried to find the American consul, calling at his office three times during the day, and was unable to find him. But in the afternoon found a Mr. Blatchford in the consul's office, who informed me that my vessel had been fined $400, and I wired my owners accordingly. At 4 p. m. returned with Captain Quigley on board the Terror, and when on board he informed me that my vessel was fined $400.

He then sent a boat's crew on board my schooner, telling me to go with them, but retaining my boat and two men, and ordered me to take my schooner up to Shelburne at once. We started and got as far as Sand Point, and came to anchor for want of wind at about 10 o'clock p. m., and alongside the Terror. At 3 o'clock a. m. on Saturday, October 9, accompanied by the Terror, we started again for Shelburne inner harbor, arriving there about 7 o'clock a. m., and then the boat's crew left us and my two men came on board in my boat. I then went on shore and found the American consul, who informed me he could not give me any assistance. During Saturday, Sunday, and Monday I awaited dispatches from my owner in regard to the payment of the fine. On Monday morning, it being the anniversary of my birthday, I hoisted the American flag to the mast-head, and immediately Captain Quigley (speaking from the deck of his vessel) ordered me to haul it down, which I did; but after thinking the matter over, I concluded that as no regular seizure of my vessel had been made, no broad arrow put upon my mast, but my vessel only detained until a deposit of the fine had been made, Captain Quigley had acted beyond his authority, and acting on this conclusion I again set my flag at the mast-head. Captain Quigley again ordered me to haul down the flag, which I refused to do; upon which he came on board my vessel with eight men, and asked who gave the authority to hoist that flag. I replied that I took the authority myself. He then said, "Well, I'll haul it down myself," which I forbid him to do; but without heeding me he immediately hauled down the flag, unbent it, unrove the halliards, and passed the flag to me. I passed it back to him, telling him as he had hauled it down he better take charge of it himself. He then ordered his men to haul the vessel into the wharf, which they did, and Collector Attwood came on board and put a broad arrow (\nearrow) on the mainmast and placed two watchmen on the wharf to watch the vessel. On Tuesday, October 12, at 10 a. m., Collector Attwood informed me that the vessel was released, but I must pay the bill for watching, amounting to $3, and to save further delay I did so. On Tuesday evening, October 12, sailed for the Western Bank in continuation of my voyage.

BAYARD.

STATE DEPARTMENT, April 9, 1886.

The question of the right of American vessels engaged in fishing on the high seas to enter Canadian ports for the purpose of shipping crews may possibly involve construction of treaty with Great Britain. I expect to attain such an understanding as will relieve our fishermen from all doubts or risk in the exercise of the ordinary commercial privileges of friendly ports, to which, under existing laws of both countries, I consider their citizens to be mutually entitled free from molestation.

T. F. BAYARD.

No. 74.

Mr. Woodbury to Mr. Bayard.

BOSTON May 21, 1886. [Received May 24.]

SIR: In behalf of Jesse Lewis, esq., I inclose a statement by him and the crew of the D. J. Adams of the damages inuring to them by the seizure of that schooner by the British authorities near the Gut of Annapolis, and her detention at Digby, for an alleged violation of the convention of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain. Mr. Lewis employed counsel at Halifax, who has informed him that there are "two suits pending, one in rem, under section 2, imperial act 1819, for alleged violation of the treaty 1818, act of 1819, and the Canadian fishery acts of 1868, 1870, 1871; no proceedings taken yet for violation of customs act other than seizure and detention by customs officer at Digby. The charge in this respect, I believe, is under sections 25 and 29, Canada customs act, chap. 12, 1883. The other suit against captain personally, and is for a penalty under section 4, imperial act, 1819."

The information I have from the master is that the Adams was arrested some miles from the town of Digby and ordered into the Lansdowne by an armed boat, she being at that time beating out of the gut against a head tide from an anchorage five or six miles up the basin beyond Digby, and was in the possession of the captors from the Lansdowne before she changed her course, and headed by their command into Digby. No seizure was made by any custom-house officer whilst the master controlled the vessel, and the owner and master are in profound ignorance of any such proceeding, or of the grounds, except the telegram which I cite above, and his counsel in Halifax has not yet been able to be more definite. Mr. Lewis, through his friends, has furnished security for costs to enable him to interpose a defense in the admiralty court against the libel in rem, based on the treaty of 1818. His vessel had been lately extensively repaired, and he has no means to bond her. Indeed, as it is in the power of the authorities there to seize her over and over, it would be impossible to know in what amount he would need to find security before he could get the vessel out of the hands of the provincial authorities—out of their local jurisdiction.

The only cause of seizure avowed is that the master "bought bait" somewhere along the coast and received it on the vessel. The undersigned has not discovered any statute forbidding a master to buy bait or anything else in a British Canadian port, nor one that subjects a vessel of the United States to forfeiture for exporting bait from such ports. It is supposed the provincials assert the doctrine that trading in their ports either is a violation of the treaty of 1818 or of the act of 1819. It cannot be that a private person can in the inferior courts of a foreign country undertake to defend the American construction of that treaty against the suit of the Crown, who alone is imperative in its courts of admiralty as to matters of treaty or maritime privilege; nor can it be that in such inferior courts the consonance of the act of 1819, with the principles of the treaty of 1818, or the law of nations, can be put in issue by the citizen of the United States defending his property; it is only the United States in its sovereignty that can arraign before the sovereignty of Great Britain the question whether the act of 1819 conflicts with or impairs the American right under the convention or the law of nations. My client would not humiliate his native land so much as to ask its Executive to appear by counsel before a local inferior tribunal of the other party to the convention of 1818 and submit to its decision any question affecting the sovereignty of the contracts it had made with Great Britain. It seems, then, to my perhaps imperfect understanding of the principles of national law, that my client must rely upon his own Government for defense and redress for the outrage upon his property, and he requests the intervention of the Executive as the only adequate protection he can have against the aggressive spoliation of his property by subordinate British officials. It is proper also that I should invite your attention to the evident fact that the cause put forth is the alleged shortcoming of the United States in not living up to its con-

No. 75.

Mr. Woodbury to Mr. Bayard.

BOSTON, May 22, 1886. [Received May 24.]

SIR: In the matter of Mr. Lewis's statement of damages incurred by the seizure of the D. J. Adams, I yesterday transmitted some papers sent me from Gloucester, perhaps without as mature consideration as they should have received. Mr. Lewis's claim to the fish caught, as I take the law to be, is that of owner, but the law makes his ownership a trust to divide among the sharesmen their share of the net proceeds of the fish when received by him.

The master and crew appear, claiming their loss by the breaking up of the trip. This is their own adventure, and I must not be considered as their counsel in this matter, nor as in any way sanctioning their statement as to their citizenship, residence, &c. I have to-day from Gloucester the official fact that the custom-house at Digby have seized under the sections referred to in the telegram quoted in my last, together with a reference to sections which make this seizure for a $400-penalty a lien on the vessel.

I learn Mr. Meagher, the counsel of Mr. Lewis at Halifax, is in town, and hope to see him within a day or two for consultation, and will advise the Department of our views as to that; meanwhile we are hardly ripe for any step of reclamation.

I beg you to believe that Mr. Lewis and myself wish to conform in our action to the wishes and policy of the Department, and to rely on its generous efforts to protect his property.

I am, &c.,

CHAS. LEVI WOODBURY,
Counsel at Boston for Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Steele to Mr. Bayard.

GLOUCESTER, May 22, 1886. [Received May 24.]

SIR: Learning by telegraphic news that your consideration of the provincial seizures has been somewhat delayed by the want of documentary evidence, I inclose affidavits this morning received from Eastport relative to the schooner Jennie and Julia of that port. They were sent me by a reputable merchant. I am in no way interested in the vessel, nor do I know who are her owners. If there is any service which the members of the American Fishery Union or its officers can render that would be of use in your efforts to obtain redress from Canadian annoyances, they will very cheerfully be at your service.

I am, &c.,

GEO. STEELE,
President of the American Fishery Union.

Statement of Capt. William H. Farris, master of schooner Jennie and Julia, of Eastport.

I, William H. Farris, master of the schooner Jennie and Julia, a vessel of the United States hailing from Eastport, Me., cleared from Eastport on 17th inst., taking out a register, crew list and all papers required for a foreign voyage. I left Eastport at about 4 o'clock, p. m., arriving at Digby, Nova Scotia, at about 10 o'clock of the forenoon of the 18th inst., dropping anchor in Digby Harbor. I immediately went ashore and reported to United States Consular Agent Stewart, and delivered all my papers to him. After looking over the papers Mr. Stewart informed me that he did not think he could do anything for me, except if my vessel was seized or cast away, he could send myself and crew home. He further said that he did not know whether he was appointed under this new administration or not.

I then took my papers from the consul and went to the custom-house and found the door locked. Turning from the door I met the collector, Veits, and his son coming to the office. He asked if I was Captain Farris. I answered that I was. He said, "What are you here for—bait?" I answered, "I am here for fresh herring." He said, "You can't have any." I then asked him to look at my papers. He examined them and asked what I had this kind of a register for. I answered, "After stating to the collector at Eastport what I wanted to do, he gave me these papers as the proper ones." The collector, Mr. Veits, then said, "You can't buy fresh herring here for any purpose."

I said to him that I had two smoke-houses at home empty, and I would like to buy fresh herring to fill them up. He answered, "You cannot buy herring for any purpose."

I then said to him, "If I can't buy herring I will take my papers and go home" and the collector said, "No; wait till afternoon and then I will let you know."

At about 3 o'clock I went to the custom-house again, when the collector told me that he had telegraphed to headquarters, but had received no answer.

About 7 o'clock p. m. the collector informed me that he could allow me to enter my vessel but could not give a clearance. I then said to him, "If I buy one barrel of fresh herring I am liable to seizure" and the collector answered, "Yes."

I then went on board my vessel and started for home.

Statement of Arthur Farris, mate to the schooner Jennie and Julia.

The Jennie and Julia sailed from Eastport, May 17, for Digby, N. S., arriving there about 10 o'clock of the morning of the 18th. Immediately after dropping anchor, the captain went on shore. About half an hour after a steam tug came alongside, and a man on board, whom I afterwards learned was the collector of the port of Digby, took out a note-book and wrote something in it; then threw a line aboard, to which I paid no attention. He then asked, "What are you doing here?" I answered, "We are here to buy herring." He then asked me, if I did not know we were violating the law. I answered, "No, I think not." He then asked me if I did not know we were liable to seizure. I then told him that we were under register, and had cleared for Digby, to return to Eastport when we left Digby. He then asked if I was captain. I told him no, the captain had gone ashore to the custom-house. He then asked me what we were doing with fishing-gear on deck. I told him to ask the captain and he would tell him. The collector then said, "I warn you not to buy herring."

Mr. William H. Jordan to Mr. Bayard.

GLOUCESTER, MASS., June 4, 1886. [Received June 7.]

SIR: We see by recent dispatches from Halifax that the Canadian Government propose seizing schooner James A. Garfield whenever they have an opportunity, for having purchased bait and ice within their jurisdiction as they allege. The captain of the Garfield denies their charge of purchasing bait and ice, but that will make no difference about the seizure of the vessel, and if seized will be condemned whether guilty or not, judging from our past experience, as we had a vessel seized some years since (schooner A. I. Franklin) and condemned for alleged violation of their laws, and we had absolute knowledge that their charge was not correct in whole or in part. What we want to know is this: Can we be sustained by our Government in resisting capture to the best of our ability, where we are sure we have not violated their laws, and so instruct our captains?

We have another case, occurring about four weeks ago. The captain of schooner Annie H. Jordan wished to purchase bait at St. Andrews, New Brunswick. He had a permit to touch and trade, but being afraid of trouble he anchored the vessel outside the three-mile limit and went ashore in a dory to enter vessel at custom-house. The collector refused to allow him to enter his vessel, and ordered him to leave forthwith, saying they would have nothing to do with his vessel.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

District of Massachusetts:

I, Alexander Hains, of Gloucester, State of Massachusetts, on my oath do say that I was master of the schooner Annie M. Jordan, enrolled and licensed at Gloucester, Mass, when she sailed on a fishing voyage for cod and halibut on the 26th day of April, A. D. 1886, and further say that before I sailed I applied at the custom-house for and received a permit to touch and trade at foreign ports during my said voyage.

I further say that on the 4th day of May, 1886, I arrived and anchored at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, in the Dominion of Canada, and went ashore to the custom-house at that port, where I reported my arrival; applied to the collector, or person representing the collector, to enter my vessel for purposes of purchasing and exporting certain merchandise therein.

Said person refused to receive my papers and admit me to an entry, saying my papers were of no account. I asked why, and stated I had a permit to touch and trade from the United States authorities at Gloucester.

It was replied to me by said custom-house officer that it made no difference; my vessel had no business in these waters, and that she would be seized by the Canadian authorities if she was here when the cutter came into port. Being thus refused an entry, I returned to my vessel and left the port.

I arrived in Gloucester, Mass., May 28, 1886. I further say that damage to my voyage and loss has accrued to the owners of said vessel, Rowe & Jordan, of Gloucester, from the refusal to admit her to an entry, and I further say that I anchored in said port and reported in good faith for purpose of trade, under the belief that the laws of Great Britain gave to vessels of the United States all the privilege of trade and export from British North America which British vessels enjoyed.

ALEXANDER HAINS,
Master of Schooner Annie M. Jordan.

Mr. Steele to Mr. Bayard..

GLOUCESTER, MASS., June 5, 1886. [Received June 7.]

SIR: I take the liberty to write to you in regard to the present relation of American fisheries with England and her provinces.

I first desire to call attention to the reciprocity treaty of 1854, during which the Government paid fisherman a bounty of $4 per ton, which was an assistance to us, and helped in part offset the remittance of duties on foreign fish during that period.

During the treaty of Washington, which expired by limitation, we received no bounty from our Government, that having been abolished in 1866, and we felt the effect of the second reciprocity treaty more than the one covering the years 1854 to 1866 inclusive.

We have no occasion to regret the action of the Government in allowing the treaty of Washington to expire by limitation, and we are also pleased at the action of the House of Representatives in granting the President the power to deny to foreign nations the same commercial rights denied us in their ports.

If it is the pleasure of the President to use that power, I think it would meet the approval of every person interested in the fishing business, both the property owner and the individual fisherman, but if this power to pass retaliatory measures the President does not see fit to use, we earnestly beg that the settlement of so important a matter will not be left with ministers or commissioners to arbitrate on our existing fishery rights or make new treaty definitions, because we have seen that diplomacy is untrained in commercial affairs, and incapable of appreciating the business and commercial effects following contracts concerning them, and we know that long or permanent contracts on such subjects are a mere gambling with interests where consequences can rarely be foreseen at the time they are made.

We have an invincible dread that in such negotiations in the future as in the past our interests would be sacrificed to Canadian interests.

We think the powers Congress has delegated to the President are enough for the protection of our right to trade with Canadian ports, if he use them with his usual firmness and sense of justice. Should he be reluctant to do this, still we do not desire to obtain privileges of trade by another treaty. We prefer to accept the present situation, even if more seizures and more exclusion from Canadian ports are practiced on our vessels touching there for trade. We had better lose twenty vessels or even fifty, than that we should enter into another such treaty with England.

We know full well that Canada would use any and all means, no matter how barbarous, to drive our Government into a reciprocity treaty again, and we think this is the object of her present conduct.

We thank you for furnishing counsel to look after the individual interests at the trial of these cases in the admiralty court at Halifax, as no individual ought to be compelled to bear the burden of cases of this nature in foreign courts.

I desire to bring to your attention that the mackerel fleet of the United States will sail from about the 15th of June to July 1, for the eastward; a few have already gone.

The Canadians have a fleet of cruisers as they say to guard their three-mile limit from the intrusion of our craft, but as we think to prey on our vessels without regard to the distance of three miles from the shores. Owners here instruct their masters to keep out of the three-mile limit in good faith. It is American property that is at risk and the American right on the high seas, outside of the three-mile question, that is to be guarded from encroachment.

The "men-of-war" of the United States should be at hand to protect our flag, our citizens and their property.

What are the spoils derived from the confiscation and dividing of the prey of half a dozen bait-buying smacks entering their ports, compared to the chances of capture among three to five hundred sail of mackerelmen who may lawfully fish within a fathom outside of the three-mile limit, and on whom Canadian law devolves the burden of proof, that where they lay was more than three miles? Whilst by the same law the seizure is primary proof that the prize was within the three-mile limit. If a hundred sail were in sight at the seizure, what means but the arrested master to ascertain their names to obtain their testimony in a prize court, and possibly constraining the side of it, and

This extract from a letter in the Boston Herald of June 4, 1886, written from Cape Breton, shows the animus of the provincials:

Three American mackerel seiners passed through the straits this morning bound for North Bay. They will be closely watched by the Howlett and customs officers. The moiety on a seizure would amount to at least $2,000, and every person in authority on the coast lies awake nights thinking how he can make an arrest of some unlucky Yankee fisherman. If sufficient ground is given there is not a doubt but what seizures will be made, as the bounty is a very substantial incentive outside of the credit to be gained therefrom. Yankees will do well to be cautious and avoid "the appearance of evil."

If a duty of 1 cent per pound could be put upon fresh and salt fish the Canadians would stop their overt acts and be brought to a realizing sense of the commercial rights of nations, quicker than any other way.

The fact is Canada has nothing whatever that she can compensate us with, for the privilege of the markets of the United States free for her fish.

Canada is fighting from business motives and nothing more, and if she succeeds in bullying the United States into any agreement by which she can bring in her fish free, said fish untaxed and bounty-fed with fishing grounds in close proximity, while we are heavily taxed, it would not take more than ten or twelve years to wipe out the Atlantic fisheries.

As well to allow English men-of-war to enter our ports and destroy our vessels and other property, as for us to see the humiliating spectacle of our fishing industry passing under the control of the English flag, through the default of our Government, an industry that all other Governments afford ample protection.

My own personal experience as owner of twelve fishing vessels; an experience in this business, on this coast, in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, on the Newfoundland coast, and on the Grand and Western Banks, directly and indirectly since the year 1848, proves to me conclusively that in what I have here written I voice the sentiments of every man in the fishing business, whether owner or fisherman.

SIR: I have to-day received your letter dated the 5th instant, accompanied by the affidavit of the master of the fishing schooner Alice M. Jordan, of Gloucester Mass., alleging the refusal by the collector of customs at the port of St. Andrews, New Brunswick, to allow the entry of said vessel, duly documented as a fishing vessel, with permission to touch and trade at any foreign port or place during her voyage, the object of such entry, as stated by the master of the schooner, being the purchase of certain merchandise.

Although not disclosed by the affidavits, I suppose the merchandise in question was fresh fish for use as bait in deep-sea fishing.

I have made instant representation, accompanied by earnest protest, to the British minister at this capital, of this unlawful withholding of commercial rights from an American vessel and her owners, and of the loss and damage thereby sustained, for which, as I have informed him, the Government of Great Britain will be held responsible.

SIR: I have received your letter of June 5, giving at length your views upon the present "relation of American fisheries with England and her provinces."

Your discussion of the situation is comprehensive, and will receive due consideration.

The chief remedy you propose—the levy of a tariff duty of 1 cent per pound upon fresh and salt fish—is, of course, solely for the consideration of Congress.

The object and earnest endeavor of the Executive will be to secure American citizens the full enjoyment of all the rights under treaties and law without molestation, and no effort to that end has been or will be lacking on the part of those charged with the administration of the laws.

DEAR SIR: I write for information as regards the seizure of my vessel, the schooner David J. Adams, by Canadians. What I want to know is what is to be done, whether my vessel is condemned as my loss, or if there is any way that we could demand a trial to see just what the consequences will be, or why I cannot bond my vessel as I want here to use. No. 85.

Mr. Bayard to Capt. Jesse Lewis.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 30, 1886.

SIR: I have your letter dated the 26th instant, stating the severe loss you occasioned by the summary seizure by the Canadian authorities, in Annapolis Basin, Nova Scotia, of your fishing schooner, the David Adams, which, as you say, is all the property you possess, and constitutes your "only support."

It is proper that I should inform you that the demand was made upon the Government of Great Britain for the release of the vessel, coupled with a notification that that Government would be held answerable for loss and damage caused by her seizure and detention.

Your case commands my sincere sympathy, and ever since it was brought to my knowledge has had the constant consideration of this Department and of the consular officers of the United States in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. William L. Putnam, of Portland, Me., in conjunction with Mr. George W. Biddle, of Philadelphia, has been engaged by this Government as its counsel in respect of its rights and duties which may be brought in question by reason of the seizure of your vessel.

If you will communicate with Mr. Putnam he will no doubt give you all information in his power in relation to the laws under which your property was so seized, and suggest what steps should be taken to protect your private interest in the premises.

Moreover, I suggest that you should carefully secure evidence of all the facts connected with the presence of your vessel in Annapolis Basin, and of the absence of any unlawful act or intent on the part of her master, crew, or owner, as well as proof of the actual loss and injury sustained by you by reason of this harsh, and, as I believe, wholly unwarranted action by the Canadian officials; such evidence to be obtained and preserved as the basis of claims for your remuneration.

More than one year ago I sought to protect our citizens engaged in fishing from the results which might attend any possible misunderstanding between the Governments of Great Britain and the United States as to the measure of their mutual rights and privileges in the territorial waters of British North America, after the termination of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington in June last.

It seemed to me then and seems to me now very hard that differences of opinion between the two Governments should cause loss to the honest citizens whose line of obedience might be thus rendered vague and uncertain, and their property be brought into jeopardy.

Influenced by this feeling, I procured a temporary arrangement which secured our fishermen full enjoyment of all the Canadian fisheries, free from molestation during a period which would permit discussion of a just international settlement of the whole fishery question. But other counsels prevailed, and my efforts further to protect the fishermen from such trouble as you now suffer were unavailing.

To secure for them full protection in the enjoyment of all their just rights and privileges is still my earnest intent and object, and for all losses to which they may be unlawfully subjected at the hands of the authorities of foreign Governments I shall seek and expect to obtain full redress.

I regret exceedingly the disturbance in their long-customary pursuits and the serious loss and inconvenience attendant upon a disputed construction of laws and treaties by two separate Governments; and I trust that I shall soon be enabled to secure such a clear and comprehensive declaration of agreement between those charged with the administration of the two Governments as will define the line of their rights and secure from molestation those American fishermen who, obeying the injunctions of their Government respecting subordination to the laws of foreign Governments, keep within the laws of their own country.

Reparation for all losses, unlawfully caused by foreign authority, will be made the subject of international presentation and demand.

I am, &c.,

T. F. BAYARD.

Mr. Willard to Mr. Bayard.

[Telegram.]

PORTLAND, ME., July 3, 1886. [Received July 4.]

We have received the following dispatch from Shelburne, Nova Scotia, to-day, viz:

Cushing boarded last night 8 miles from custom-house. Brought here seized to-day. Charge, seeking bait and not reporting at custom-house. Have not bought anything. Wire instructions.

C. B. JEWETT.

She left here last Tuesday with the understanding you had settled the right of our vessels to buy bait. How long are we to be tormented in this kind of style? If it is to continue long we should prefer to haul our vessels up. It seems to us about time the President issued his non-intercourse proclamation and settled this thing one way or the other.

Please instruct us what to do under the circumstances, as she is a valuable vessel.

No. 88.

Mr. Woodbury to Mr. Bayard.

BOSTON, July 7, 1886. [Received July 10.]

SIR: I forward twelve affidavits of respectable fishermen of Gloucester laying the foundation to show that the Canadian authorities have this year, without notice, radically reversed their administration of laws toward American bait buyers and others. That thereby some of our fishermen have been entrapped and seized is well known to you. I retain a duplicate set, for use in case a suit is brought for a penalty of $400 against an assumed master of the D. J. Adams, which the customs authorities allege has been incurred.

I have sent these in the expectation that, in the varying phases these Canadian assaults on our commerce assume, these facts may be useful to the Department, if not in the matter of the D. J. Adams.

No. 89.

Mr. Willard to Mr. Bayard.

PORTLAND, ME.,

July 7, 1886. [Received July 9, 1886.]

DEAR SIR: We wired you the particulars of the seizure of our schooner George W. Cushing by the Canadian authorities. As yet we have no reply to our question as to what we should do in the matter. We suppose, however, that you are giving it the consideration that it deserves, and that we shall hear from you when you have reached a satisfactory conclusion.

This vessel we kept tied to the wharf three weeks, and only allowed her to go after we understood you had arranged matters and that our vessels could have all the privileges that we accorded to theirs. It seems that everybody here so understood it, and this is the cause of so many of our vessels calling at Nova Scotia ports for a week past. They notify us that we can have the vessel by the payment of a fine amounting to about $600, and that she is not held for a violation of the treaty of 1818, but for violation of customs regulations. This is plainly only pretext, as they forbid our vessels the privilege of entering and purchasing supplies, as we understand their law, by the reading, it applies to vessels in the coasting trade, but if it applied to fishermen there has been only a technical violation, and where it can be plainly shown that there was no intent to evade the laws they ought to release the vessel, and our Government did in the case of the schooner Sisters, which was held for gross ignorance on the part of the skipper. The captain of this vessel has been getting bait and ice in their ports for thirty years, and until the present has never seen the inside of a custom house. Their vessels have always entered our ports and sold fresh fish, got supplies, and enjoyed privileges that even our own vessels have not enjoyed, but it seems that they are determined to harass our fishing vessels in hopes to drive us into letting them have our markets free, which, with the bounties they enjoy from the money our Government paid, they can destroy the business in New England and get a complete monopoly. We claim that it is not an actual necessity for our vessels to procure bait and ice in their ports, but it is more convenient, as it is nearer the fishing grounds. Only such vessels engaged in the halibut fishery ever get bait there. The cod-fishermen take salt bait from here, and besides we furnish their cod-fishermen in the spring with thousands of barrels of salt clams.

While we think that these are matters which require time and caution, we do not think there is a nation on earth that would have stood the petty bulldozing that this Government has for the last twenty years, and we are of the opinion that this matter requires more than ordinary attention and haste, for there may be a rupture at any time that might involve the Government far more than it could by pursuing a vigorous policy. Our fishermen are getting into a bad frame of mind, and men like these, used to hardship and peril, might not hesitate to do most anything. Of course we deprecate any such measures, but they are not wholly within our control.

Everybody's opinion is entitled to some weight, and we venture to give ours as to the best course to pursue.

We think that your Department ought to telegraph the Dominion Government that, inasmuch as the vessels seized have been guilty of only a technical violation of customs laws, that they ought to release the vessels on the same terms that our Government has always released theirs. If they refuse to do this, then the President, with the power given him by Congress, should give them notice that he should immediately issue his proclamation, declaring non-intercourse in all matters pertaining to the fisheries, and that from the 1st day of August no fish from the provinces can be landed in the United States and none exported from here thence, such decree to remain in force six months, unless sooner revoked.

The effect of this would be to bring them to terms very quick, as they are almost wholly dependent upon our market for the disposition of their fish, and without this privilege Nova Scotia is almost helpless.

For the honor of the old Democratic party something must be done. Three-quarters of the people engaged in this business are Democrats, and they have been made so by the actions of the Republicans in the past. We understand that there are those that would manufacture political capital out of this matter, but it is too serious a thing, and they can easily be handicapped by vigorous action in this matter by your Department.

As a faithful defender of the faith these many years, we pray that we may see one of the ends for which we have fought brought to a successful issue.

Please do not leave this important matter to assistants, and you will greatly oblige if you will let us know what we have to expect, and if we have any rights which Canada is bound to respect.

This is a private letter and is not given to the papers for publication, and if you will give us a reply in full we will treat it as confidential.

Yours respectfully, &c.,

E. G. WILLARD.

*Mr. Bayard to Mr. Willard.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 9, 1886.

SIR: Your telegram of the 3d, and your letter of the 7th instant, stating the seizure at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, by the local authorities of that port, of the schooner George W. Cushing, were duly received.

Before the receipt of either, news of this seizure had been received by this Department and instant instructions had been sent to the consul-general at Halifax to proceed to Shelburne and obtain full knowledge of all the facts and make full report to this Department of the cause of such seizure, and the nature of the complaint upon which such proceeding were founded.

In the absence of such authentic information it is impossible for this Department to take any action, or to give you advice.

As the contents of your telegram and letter disclose, you are well aware that questions are now pending between this Government and that of Great Britain in relation to the just definition of the rights of American fishing vessels in the territorial waters of British North America.

I shall relax no effort to arrive at a satisfactory solution of the difficulty, and in the mean time it is the duty and manifest interest of all American citizens entering Canadian jurisdiction to ascertain and obey the laws and regulations there in force.

For all unlawful deprivation of property or commercial rights this Government will expect to procure due redress and compensation for the innocent sufferers.

Very respectfully, yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

*Mr. Bayard to Hon. Mr. Boutelle.*DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
July 10, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have just received your telegram of this date, stating that you had a dispatch from Eastport, Me., that American boats after herring for sardines at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, were driven away by the Dominion cruiser Middleton, with the announcement that no American boats will be allowed to take herring for any purpose.

And to this you invoke the immediate attention of this Department. On the 2d of June last you called at this Department in company with Senator Hale, of Maine, and then drew my attention to a similar threat of interference with the purchase of small herring for canning as sardines from the Canadian weirs.

On the same day I made representation of the alleged threats to the British minister at this capital, and drew his attention to the alleged violation of lawful commercial intercourse between British subjects in Canada and the citizens of the United States.

I was in hopes that further interference with a recognized and legitimate trade would be prevented, but will again address the British minister on the subject.

It will assist materially in all such cases of alleged violation of commercial rights, if accurate and full statements of all the facts in each case are procured and forwarded to this Department accompanied by affidavits.

A great deal of loose rumor and sensational statement would be thus disposed of, and a tangible basis be laid for claim for compensation by the injured parties.

Washington, July 14, 1886. [Received July 5.]

SIR: Acknowledging receipt of your letter of 13th instant, stating that the view presented by me will receive due consideration, I beg to inclose herewith the affidavit of Stephen R. Balkam, of Eastport, setting forth the facts of the refusal of the commander of the cruiser Middleton to permit him to purchase herring at St. Andrews, New Brunswick, on Friday, July 9, 1886, as referred to in the telegram forwarded by me to the Department on the 10th instant.

I am, &c.,

C. A. ROUTELLE.

[Inclosure.]

I, Stephen R. Balkam, of Eastport, in the county of Washington, State of Maine, on oath declare that on Friday morning, July 9, 1886, I was at St. Andrews, N. B. My business was to procure herring for canning. I am employed by Hiram Planchard & Son. The Dominion cruiser Middleton was at anchor near the beacon at St. Andrews. A boat from the Middleton, commanded by Capt. William Kent, came alongside of my boat and asked if my boat was American, and where my boat was owned. I replied that the boat was owned at Eastport, Me. He then said I could not take any herring, and if I took any would be liable to be seized. He told me if I wished to get herring I must get an English boat; that I could not get herring with an American boat. It had been my practice to buy the herring of men who caught them in seines, they delivering the herring in the gunwale of my boat. On the day the Middleton drove me away I was paying $10 per hoghead for the herring. The men of whom I bought them were Dominion fishermen. The captain of the Middleton then left me and went to other American boats and ordered them away. They left without having procured any fish. I took an English boat in tow that had taken fish from the seine, towed her into American waters, then took her fish, and came to Eastport.

Mr. Woodbury to Mr. Bayard.

BOSTON, July 28, 1886. [Received July 29.]

SIR: I have the honor to enclose for your consideration the affidavit of James McDonald, master of the schooner Thomas F. Bayard, who has been illegally driven from the waters of Bonne Bay, on the northwest coast of Newfoundland, in direct violation of the treaty of 1818.

In this connection I would refer you to the fact that the British Government have twice declined to ratify laws of Newfoundland prohibiting the sale of bait (see Executive Document No. 84, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, House of Representatives, pp. 106-7): once when the Duke of Newcastle was minister, and again when Sir M. Hicks Beach was colonial secretary, in 1878. In 1885 I wrote to our minister at London requesting him to ascertain at the colonial office whether since 1878 any law of Newfoundland prohibiting the sale of bait to foreigners had been approved, and the reply furnished him was, none had been. This is the only instance of the kind from Newfoundland that has come to my knowledge. Captain McDonald sails to-morrow, but proof of his loss will be made up and transmitted to the Department.

I forwarded some time since some evidence as to the collector at Magdalen Islands denying treaty rights to our vessels. I inclose the affidavit of A. McEachern, master of the schooner Mascot, that he was denied at Fort Amherst, June 10th, any privilege except wood and water, and also threatened with seizure even if he should take a pilot. The Magdalen Islands, like the west coast of Newfoundland, are by treaty particularly stated to be places where the common rights of fishery on land or sea are to be enjoyed by both parties to the treaty.

GLOUCESTER, July 28, 1886.

SIR: The schooner Thomas F. Bayard, of Gloucester, of which I am master and part owner, sailed from Gloucester June 22 on a trip after halibut, with license and trade permit. My supply of bait becoming exhausted, I entered the port of Bonne Bay, on the northwest coast of Newfoundland, for the purpose of procuring a supply of bait on July 12. Directly on anchoring, I reported at the custom-house to the collector and stated my object was to buy bait. Mr. Taylor, the collector of the port, immediately served upon me a notice, which I transmit herewith, to the effect that the presence of my vessel in the port was in violation of the articles of the convention

Having a copy of the Ottawa circular of March 5, 1886, with me, I produced it and read to the collector the treaty clause there printed, and argued with him that I had the treaty right to come in here. His reply was, in substance, that he must perform his duty and prevent me from buying bait. I returned to my vessel, and, fearing I should be seized if I bought bait or fished in the three-mile limit or remained, I sailed for home, and arrived at Gloucester July 26, my voyage being broken up, and having a small fare. I left one of the best chances to obtain a large fare of fish, that were very plentiful in the vicinity of the port. I estimate the losses of the vessel and crew at $4,000, roughly.

I thought it proper to lay this matter before you that, if I had the right to fish on that coast, I might procure recompense and damages for the injury done my voyage.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, Essex, ss :

GLOUCESTER, July 29, 1886.

We, the undersigned, on oath declare and say that we were members of the crew of the schooner Thomas F. Bayard, of the port of Gloucester, on the trip that commenced June 15, 1886, and ended July 19. We entered Port Mulgrave, and were informed that we had a right to fish in the northwest coast of Newfoundland. We entered Bonne Bay July 12, and were forbid to buy bait or to fish, and returned home with but a small part of a fare. The fishermen at Bonne Bay were anxious to sell bait to us if we could buy. We know the fish were there, and if we had been allowed to buy bait and to fish should have procured a full fare.

Affidavit of Captain McDonald, of the schooner Hereward.

GLOUCESTER, August 6, 1886.

I, Daniel McDonald, master of American schooner Hereward, of Gloucester, do depose and say: That I went into Cape Canso, N. S., with my vessel, on the afternoon of July 2, and went to the custom-house and reported. One of my crew went on shore without authority and failed to return at night; some of the crew thought he had deserted and engaged another man to take his place (all without any authority from me), but he returned the next morning.

The next morning the collector, Mr. Young, came on board and demanded my papers (charging me with shipping a man). I gave them to him, and he kept them until 10.30 o'clock that eve, when he returned them to me. As I was all ready to sail that morning, it detained the vessel two (2) days in that port, as the next day was Sunday.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, GLOUCESTER, MASS.,

Collector's Office, August 10, 1886. [Received August 11.]

SIR: In reply to your telegram of 5th instant I inclose affidavits of Captain Cunningham, of schooner Rattler, and his passenger and crew, in relation to their treatment at Shelburne, Nova Scotia, on going in there for shelter on 3d instant.

Very respectfully, &c.,

D. S. PRESSON,
Collector.

[Inclosure.]

Affidavit of Captain Cunningham, of the schooner Rattler.

I, Augustus F. Cunningham, master of the schooner Rattler, of Gloucester, being duly sworn, do depose and say: That on Thursday, July 8, 1886, we sailed from Gloucester on a mackerel cruise. On Tuesday August 3d (having secured a fare of mackerel and while on our passage home), at 7 p. m., the wind blowing hard, the sea being rough, and our vessel being deeply loaded, with two large seine-boats on deck, we put into the harbor of Shelburne, N. S., for shelter. Just inside of the harbor we were brought to by a gun fired from the Canadian cruiser Terror, Captain Quigley, and came to anchor.

Immediately a boat from the Terror came alongside and its commander, Lieutenant Bennett, asked why we were in the harbor. My reply was, "For shelter." Then taking the name of our vessel, names of owner and captain, where from, where bound, and how many fish we had, and forbidding any of the crew to go on shore, he returned to the Terror for further instructions.

Boarding us again, after a lapse of perhaps forty-five minutes, he put two armed men on board of us, asked for our crew-list, and said if I remained until morning I must enter at the custom-house, but if I could sail in the night to tell his men to fire a revolver and a boat would be sent to take them off. At 12 o'clock that night, preferring to risk the dangers of the sea to the danger of seizure, I ordered the anchor hove short, the mainsail hoisted preparatory to sailing, and told one of the Terror's men to fire a revolver, which he did.

Receiving no reply, and seeing no signs of life on board the Terror, I ordered the revolver to be fired again. This brought a boat from the Terror, commanded by First Lieutenant Bennett, who boarded my schooner, gave each of the two men on board an extra revolver, and told me the orders of Captain Quigley were, that I should not leave the port until I had reported to the customs officer at Shelburne. Upon receipt of these orders I paid out the chain and lowered the mainsail. The boat went back to the Terror and immediately returned with Captain Quigley on board.

He denied the permission given me by his first officer to sail in the night and ordered me to go to Shelburne and enter and clear at the custom-house there.

I asked him how I should go, as we were 8 miles distant from the custom-house. His reply was, "I don't care, sir, how you go; but you must go there; and on your return show your clearance to me or suffer the consequences." He told me my vessel was in charge of his two men, and to them he gave these orders:

"Gunner, you will allow the captain to proceed to Shelburne with the vessel, come to anchor, take his dory and two men, no more, and go on shore to enter. Allow them to bring nothing off in their dory; and if a man puts his hand on the wheel to go to sea, chop his arm off or shoot him, as the case may require."

I asked him if the law was not very strict that did not allow a vessel arriving at night after office hours to proceed before daylight, and why the law was enforced. He replied, it was to prove that Canadian harbors were a benefit to American fishermen.

At daylight we got under way and started for Shelburne, and Lieutenant Bennett and four more armed men came on board. We arrived at Shelburne about 4.30 o'clock a. m. I went on shore with Lieutenant Bennett and his boat's crew, woke up Collector Atwood, who, after inquiring of the lieutenant if there were any charges against me, entered and cleared the vessel.

On my return to the vessel the lieutenant requested me to exhibit my clearance, which I did, and we were then allowed to depart. I would state that when we first entered the harbor of Shelburne a Canadian vessel entered just ahead of us, and she was unmolested, sailing at her pleasure during the night, which showed plainly that an American vessel was not accorded the same treatment in Canadian ports as are Canadian vessels, although, as the collector at Halifax informed me in June last, the same laws applied to Canadian vessels as to American vessels.

During the whole difficulty my language was respectful and I quietly submitted to the detention, to the sarcastic language and overbearing conduct of Captain Quigley, but I deem my treatment and detention severe and unjust and an outrage upon the international courtesy that should exist between two friendly nations.

SIR: I inclose affidavit of Capt. Reuben Cameron, of schooner Golden Hind, of this port, who was forbidden to enter the harbor of Port Daniel, N. S., for water. This being a clear violation by the Canadian Government of the treaty of 1818, I respectfully submit the case for your consideration.

Affidavit of Captain Cameron, of the schooner Golden Hind.

I, Reuben Cameron, master of the American schooner Golden Hind, of Gloucester, do depose and say: That we sailed from Gloucester July 3, 1886, bound to the Bay of St. Lawrence, on a fishing voyage. That on or about July 23, being out of water, started to go into the Bay of Chaleurs (Port Daniel) to fill water. At the entrance of the bay, four or five miles from land, was met by the Canadian schooner E. F. Conrad; an officer came on board, took my name, name of vessel, tonnage, name of owner, &c., and ordered me not to go into Bay of Chaleurs. He also furnished me with a printed "warning" with this indorsement written thereon: "Don't enter the Bay of Chaleurs, N. S." After this warning I put to sea, and was obliged to go across to Tignish, P. E. I., to obtain a supply of water for use of my crew.

This delayed me at least a week, and the loss of at least a good trip of mackerel, as during that time another vessel from the same firm, in five days, on the same fishing grounds, took 460 barrels of mackerel, and caused a loss to my owners of at least five thousand dollars ($5,000).

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 14th instant, inclosing affidavits of Reuben Cameron, master of the schooner Golden Hind, setting forth that he was forbidden by officers of the Canadian Government from en-

Earnest request was also made that orders should be issued forthwith to prevent a repetition of such unlawful and unfriendly conduct towards our vessels engaged in fishing.

Washington, August 19, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: Referring to your complaint of the 3d of July last, concerning the detention of your fishing schooner City Point, by the Canadian authorities at the port of Shelburne, Nova Scotia, which was at once communicated to the British minister here, I have to inform you that her Britannic Majesty's Government has made reply, alleging that the master of the City Point committed a breach of the customs laws of the Dominion by not reporting to the customs authorities, and by landing part of the crew and luggage. It is further stated that the vessel in question was subsequently released on deposit of $400.

It appears from this reply that no charge of violating the fishing laws or infringing the treaty was made against the City Point, but that the sole allegation is the failure of her master to observe the customs regulations applicable to any vessel resorting to a port of entry, and communicating with the shore.

The United States consul-general at Halifax will be instructed to watch the case, and, in the event of the penalty being affirmed, to ascertain the laws and regulations on which such judgment rests.

Affidavit of Captain Kemp, of the schooner Pearl Nelson.

PEARL NELSON, U. S. A.,
District of Massachusetts:

I, Mordock Kemp, of Provincetown, in Massachusetts, a citizen of the United States, on my oath depose: That I was master and part owner of the schooner Pearl Nelson, a vessel of the United States duly licensed —, 1886, for the fisheries, and holding a permit to touch and trade during the existence of said license.

I further say that the crew of said vessel were shipped on wages at Provincetown and Boston for a fishing voyage to the Grand Banks, and return to Provincetown for discharge. Said schooner, with license and permit as aforesaid, sailed May 29, 1886, from Provincetown, and in her passage home touched at Arichat, Cape Breton, driven in there by stress of weather. Sailed by the wind from Bank Quero, and blowing fresh a heavy sea running and foggy, made Point Michaux, 9 miles from Arichat. The vessel was deep; her dories floated on deck in her lee waist; wind being about west I concluded to make a harbor and wait for better weather and wind. I anchored the vessel in Arichat Harbor at 11 p. m., September 7, 1886. I had lost a man on the Grand Banks, named James Sampson, who belonged to Arichat, and I wanted to land his effects, if the customs officers would allow me to. Some of my crew belonged in that neighborhood. William Babino, my cook, and nine others of the crew took boats off the deck and went ashore without asking my permission. I saw them, but had never known that was any objection. I had been in this and other British North American ports frequently, and witnessed the landing from my own and other vessels' crews, but never before heard such landing was illegal or improper. These men took nothing from the vessel with them nor carried away anything but the clothes they wore.

From the time I left Provincetown I had been into no port any where. Next morning, after my arrival in Arichat, at 8½ o'clock, I went ashore to enter at the custom-house, and found it closed. I called at 9 o'clock and it was not open. I went again at 1 o'clock, and found the collector opening the office door. I made the regular inward report to him, and requested permission to land the clothes of James Sampson, who had been lost from my vessel on the Grand Banks. He told me he had sent a man for me. After I got there this man came in. The officer was holding my papers and told the man to go back and take charge of the vessel. I asked him why he held my papers; he replied, he seized her because I had allowed my men to go ashore before reporting at the custom-house; that all he would tell me was, he said he would telegraph to Ottawa and find out what to do with me; and he did telegraph immediately. About 5 o'clock p. m. the collector received an answer, and told me to deposit $200 and the vessel would be released. The collector would not allow me to land this dead man's clothes until after I had paid the $200 fine. I gave the clothes to the shop-keeper to be given to Sampson's widow or friends. I came out of Arichat about 11 a. m. on the 8th of September, 1886, having bought there one bushel of potatoes with the collector's permit and arrived at Provincetown September 14, 1886. I sailed from Arichat with all my crew on board and had not at any time intended to leave any of my crew at that port. They were hired men shipped to be discharged on return at Provincetown, and on our arrival there were all paid off and discharged.

Some of the crew that went ashore at Arichat returned aboard as early as 7 o'clock, and all were aboard about the time the vessel was seized. I gave them no money there, and had none myself. I further say I did not enter Arichat with any intention of violating any law of the Dominion of Canada, nor for any business, but solely because of the stress of weather that had driven me there. It was mere kindness only that prompted me to offer to land Sampson's clothes there where his friends could get them. There was no profit to the vessel, crew, or myself expected in so doing, or attempted to be gained in entering the port of Arichat, other than shelter from stress of weather we had been under from Quero Bank.

If any revenue law of Canada was violated by my vessel or by myself the same was done through ignorance and inadvertence, and not with any intention to defraud the revenue or offend the law.

MURDOCK KEMP.

Personally appeared before me Murdock Kemp, at Provincetown, State of Massachusetts, United States of America, this 27th day of September, 1886, who subscribed and made oath to the foregoing.

[SEAL.]

JAMES GIFFORD,
Notary Public.

[Inclosure No. 2.]

Affidavit of Henry Cook, owner of the schooner Pearl Nelson.

Personally appeared before me, James Gifford, deputy collector of customs at the port of Provincetown, in the District of Barnstable and State of Massachusetts, this 25th day of September, 1886, Henry Cook, of said Provincetown, who, being by me duly sworn, deposes and says that he is a citizen of the United States of America, a resident of said Provincetown, and managing owner of the schooner Pearl Nelson, of Provincetown, of which Murdock Kemp was master during a fishing voyage to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland, and which terminated on the 14th day of this month by the arrival of said vessel at this port.

The affiant further deposes that [previous?] to the sailing of said vessel to the Grand Banks he gave explicit instructions to Captain Kemp, as he also did to five other masters of Bank fishing vessels, to not enter any Canadian port on said voyage, going to or coming from said fishing banks, unless compelled to enter by disaster to the vessel or by stress of weather; and hence the masters were not supplied with any funds for themselves or their crews, nor authorized to draw drafts on me for payment of crew's wages, or for any purpose but for repairs in case of meeting with serious disaster.

He also deposes that the crew of said vessel Pearl Nelson consisted of fifteen men besides Captain Kemp; that five of them, viz, Cyprian Briand, Henry Briand, Andrew Cardo, John McDonald, and William Babino ——— were shipped in Provincetown, and the balance, viz, Alexander Cardo, William Boudrot, Albert Robin, Andrew Frazer, Jeffrey Landry, Henry Duong, Henry Sampson, Alfred Langley, E. H. C. Lisbon, Duncan McKee, and James Sampson, were shipped in Boston, and were engaged to return directly to this port from the Grand Banks at the end of the voyage; and that excepting James Sampson, who was reported by Captain Kemp as lost on said banks, they did return to Provincetown, and were discharged here, and paid each one by draft on the First National Bank of Provincetown, which are now on file in said bank.

The affiant declares that if Captain Kemp violated any law of Canada in entering Arichat on the 7th of September, 1886, he did it unwittingly, and that the affiant feels that the collection of the $200 fine imposed upon the Pearl Nelson is unwarranted by the circumstances under which the entry into that port was made.

that he served as cook on the schooner Pearl Nelson, of Provincetown, of which Murdock Kemp was master, during a fishing voyage to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland and return to this port the present fishing season; that he shipped in said vessel in Boston, State of Massachusetts, to be discharged in Provincetown, in said State; that on the homeward passage to this port the said vessel encountered a strong head wind with a heavy sea and a thick fog, and while off the coast of Cape Breton, N. S., the wind being still ahead with the sea, and the vessel making but little headway towards her destination, Captain Kemp, without before expressing any intention to run for that harbor, sailed her into Arichat, N. S. Arriving there about 11 o'clock on the night of September 7, 1886, and having anchored the vessel, the affiant and nine others of the crew left the vessel and went ashore, where he and the others remained the rest of the night without permission of the captain. We returned to the vessel the following morning, and about 10 o'clock that forenoon a customs officer came aboard the Pearl Nelson and seized her because, as he declared, the men had landed before the vessel was reported to the custom-house; that after the captain had paid a fine of $200 the vessel was next day released, and sailed with all her crew on board for this port, where they arrived September 14, 1886, and were here all paid off in full and discharged.

The affiant further deposes he had not prior to the night of entering Arichat heard the captain say anything about entering there either for the purpose of landing the clothes and personal effects of James Sampson, one of the crew, who had been lost on the Grand Banks, and belonged to Arichat, or near there, nor for any other object.

He also deposes that neither he, nor, as he believes, neither of the 9 men who landed with the affiant, took with them any goods or effects whatever ashore, nor had he or they any knowledge or suspicion that their landing was in violation of any law or regulation of the Dominion of Canada.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 15, 1886.

SIR: I have your letter of the 12th instant, accompanied by sundry affidavits, stating the deposit of $200 by the master of the American fishing schooner Pearl Nelson, under the compulsion of the customs officers at the port of Arichat, Cape Breton, the ground alleged for this action by the officials at Arichat being the unlawful landing of the crew of the Pearl Nelson before reporting at the custom-house.

The case will be presented to the British minister at this capital, and notification given to him that compensation will be demanded for violation of the treaty privileges, should the British Government be found liable for breach of international duty on examination of the law and facts.

Your obedient servant,

GLOUCESTER, MASS., October 18, 1886. [Received Oct. 20.]

SIR: The season is approaching when American vessels have been accustomed to buy herring at the Grand Manan Island and vicinity, and bring them to Boston, Gloucester, New York, and Philadelphia.

The present position of the Dominion Government as to that trade concerns our interests greatly, and the fish trade desires to be informed whether that Government now considers the purchase of herring as open to American vessels, either when registered or licensed, with permit to trade.

We do not wish to explore their power of seizing or detaining these vessels, or of inflicting fines. If they object to our vessels continuing in that business, we prefer to keep away from those shores until the Dominion Government is better advised.

I apply to you for this information, which our merchants need, because I know of no other mode of obtaining it in a reliable shape.

I am, &c.,

GEO. STEELE,

President American Fishery Union.

P. S.—This trade in winter herring has been carried on in our vessels almost exclusively for many years, and fifty or a hundred cargoes come in usually during the fall, winter, and spring.

They are largely consumed as food, and to some extent used as bait in our winter fishing to Georges and the Banks.

It is very rare for a British vessel to bring herring to our ports.

As you are well aware, a construction has been placed by the Dominion authorities upon the language of the treaty of 1818 between the United States and Great Britain under which they have assumed to exclude American fishing vessels from entrance into certain described territorial waters of Canada for any other than the three objects in the treaty mentioned—she'ter, repairs, and to obtain wood and water—and have insisted that the words "and for no other purpose whatever" were to be rigidly enforced according to the strict letter.

This position, I need not say to you, is not accepted by the United States, but is repelled and denied, and that this Department is now endeavoring to secure such a joint interpretation of the treaty in question, considered in connection with the subsequent legislation by Great Britain and the United States creating commercial rights in the citizens of both countries, as will enable our vessels, whether engaged in fishing or not, to enter the established ports of entry of British North America and purchase lawful merchandise of any character in open market.

The United States have no diplomatic intercourse with Canada, but conduct all such matters directly with the imperial Government, through its minister at this capital or through our own minister at St. James.

This creates circumlocution and delay which is unavoidable.

It is my object to relieve the question of the rights of our fishermen from all uncertainty, and to obtain such a conceded, unambiguous, and clear definition of their rights and duties in Canadian ports and waters as will enable them to pursue their legitimate business with certainty, and in this duty I am now engaged.

It would be well for you to state whether the vessels so sent to purchase herring are to be manned and fitted out so as to be able to take fish or to trade only.

When I have received your answer on the last point I will at once endeavor to obtain a plain response to your reasonable question, and will communicate a reply at the earliest practicable moment.

Respectfully, &c.,

T. F. BAYARD.

SIR: I have the pleasure to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated October 20.

My original inquiry referred both to vessels under license and to those sailing under a register. Your letter satisfies the inquiry as to those licensed for the fisheries.

We still desire to be informed as to whether vessels under registry of the United States will be allowed to enter at Grand Manan and other ports, and load and export herring to the United States.

Such vessels will be manned by a sailing crew, on wages, and not by fishing complement of sharemen, nor will they carry the fishing gear which such vessels use when fishing under a fishing license.

The fishing interests, I assure you, appreciate the courtesy of your letter to procure this information seasonably for them.

I remain, &c.,

President of the American Fishery Union.

IV.—EXTENSION OF CERTAIN FISHING RIGHTS UNDER THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

No. 110.

[Senate Ex. Doc. No. 32, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, TRANSMITTING, IN RESPONSE TO SENATE RESOLUTION OF JANUARY 5, 1886, INFORMATION RELATIVE TO THE EXTENSION OF CERTAIN FISHING RIGHTS UNDER THE TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

JANUARY 12, 1886.—Read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed

To the SENATE:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, a report of the Secretary of State containing all the correspondence and information in the custody of his Department relative to the extension of certain fishing rights and privileges under the treaty of Washington from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,

Washington, January 12, 1886.

To the PRESIDENT:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of January 5, 1886, I herewith transmit a copy of all the correspondence between this Department and the representative of the Government of Great Britain in relation to the extension of certain fishing rights and privileges under the treaty of Washington from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886.

As part of this transaction the following paragraph of your late message to Congress seems appropriate for consideration in connection with the correspondence:

The termination of the fishing clauses of the treaty of Washington, in pursuance of the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, must have resulted in the abrupt cessation of the 1st of July of this year, in the midst of their ventures, of the operations of citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in British American waters, but for a diplomatic understanding reached with Her Majesty's Government in June last, where assurance was obtained that no interruption of those operations should take place during the current fishing season.

In the interest of good neighborhood and of the commercial intercourse of adjacent communities, the question of North American fisheries is one of much importance. Following out the intimation given by me when the extensory arrangement above described was negotiated, I recommend that the Congress provide for the appointment of a commission, in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be respectively represented, charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States.

and British North America. The fishing interests being intimately related to other general questions dependent upon contiguity and intercourse, consideration thereof, in all their equities, might also properly come within the purview of such a commission, and the fullest latitude of expression on both sides should be permitted.

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
January 12, 1886.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN RESPECTING THE FISHERIES. CONCLUDED JUNE 22, 1885.

NOTICE.

By direction of the President, the undersigned, Secretary of State, hereby makes known to all whom it may concern that a temporary diplomatic agreement has been entered into between the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in relation to the fishing privileges which were granted by the fishery clauses of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of May 8, 1871, whereby the privilege of fishing, which would otherwise have terminated with the treaty clauses on the 1st of July proximo, may continue to be enjoyed by the citizens and subjects of the two countries engaged in fishing operations throughout the season of 1885. This agreement proceeds from the mutual good-will of the two Governments, and has been reached solely to avoid all misunderstanding and difficulties which might otherwise arise from the abrupt termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season. The immunity which is accorded by this agreement to the vessels belonging to citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in the British American waters will likewise be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States.

The joint resolution of Congress of March 3, 1883, providing for the termination of the fishing articles of the treaty of May 8, 1871, having been repealed in terms the act of March 1, 1873, for the execution of the fishing articles, and that repeal being express and absolute from the date of the termination of the said fishing articles, under due notification given and proclaimed by the President of the United States, to wit, July 1, 1885, the present temporary agreement in no way affects the question of statutory enactment or exemption from customs duties, as to which the abrogation of the fishing articles remains complete.

As part of this agreement, the President will bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a joint commission by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain to consider the matter, in the interest of maintaining good neighborhood and friendly intercourse between the two countries, thus affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America.

Copies of the memoranda and exchanged notes on which this temporary agreement rests are appended.

Reference is also made to the President's proclamation of January 1, 1885, terminating the fishing articles of the treaty of Washington.

By direction of the President:

T. F. BAYARD,
Secretary of State.

[Memorandum.—Confidential.]

The fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington of 1871 will expire on the 1st of July next. It has been represented by the Canadian Government that much inconvenience is likely to arise in consequence, unless some agreement can be made for an extension of the period.

When the time comes (1st of July next) American ships will be actually engaged in fishing within the territorial waters of the Dominion. These vessels will have been fitted out for the season's fishing and have made all their usual arrangements for following it up until its termination in the autumn. If, under these circumstances, the provincial or municipal authorities in Canada were to insist upon their strict rights, and to compel such vessels, under pain of seizure, to desist from fishing, considerable hardship would be occasioned to the owners, and a feeling of bitterness engendered on both sides, which it is clearly the interest of both Governments to avert.

It seems, therefore, desirable, in order to avoid such possible complications, that both Governments should come to an agreement under which the clauses might be in effect extended until the 1st of January, 1886.

If this were done the existing state of things would come to an end at a date between the fishery season of 1885 and that of 1886, and an abrupt transition at a moment when fishery operations were being carried on would be thus avoided.

MEMORANDUM.

The legislation passed by the Congress of the United States, act of March 1, 1873, for the execution of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, has been repealed by the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, the repeal to take effect July 1, 1885. From that date the effects of the fisheries articles of the treaty of Washington absolutely determine, so far as their execution within the jurisdiction of the United States is concerned, and without new legislation by Congress modifying or postponing that repeal the Executive is not constitutionally competent to extend the reciprocal fisheries provisions of the treaty beyond the 1st of July next, the date fixed by the action of Congress.

Mr. West's memorandum of March 12, 1885, suggests the mutual practical convenience that would accrue from allowing the fishing ventures commenced prior to July 1, 1885, to continue until the end of the season for fishing of that year, thus preventing their abrupt termination in the midst of fishing operations on the 1st of July.

It has been, moreover, suggested on the part of the Province of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada, that in view of the mutual benefit and convenience of the present local traffic, consisting of the purchase of ice, bait, wood, and general ship supplies by the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing from the inhabitants of the British American fishing coast, the usual operations of the fishing season of 1885 should be continued by the fishing vessels belonging to citizens of the United States until the end of the season of that year, and that the local authorities of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada, in a spirit of amity and good neighborhood, should abstain from molesting such fishermen or impeding their progress or their local traffic with the inhabitants incidental to fishing during the remainder of the season of 1885, and all this with the understanding that the President of the United States would bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain should be respectively represented, which commission should be charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America.

The President of the United States would be prepared to recommend the adoption of such action by Congress with the understanding that in view and in consideration of such promised recommendation there would be no enforcement of restrictive and penal laws and regulations by the authorities of the Dominion of Canada or of the Province of Newfoundland, against the fishermen of the United States resorting to British American waters between the 1st of July next and the close of the present year's fishing season; the mutual object and intent being to avoid any annoyance to the individuals engaged in this business and traffic, and the irritation or ill-feeling that might be engendered by a harsh or vexatious enforcement of stringent local regulations on the fishing coast pending an effort to have a just and amicable arrangement of an important and somewhat delicate question between the two nations.

Public knowledge of this understanding and arrangement can be given by an exchange of notes between Mr. West and myself, which can be given to the press.

3.—Mr. West's memoranda of June 13, 1885.

[Memoranda.]

It is proposed to state in notes according temporary arrangements respecting fisheries that an agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America.

The government of Newfoundland do not make refunding of duties a condition of their acceptance of the proposed agreement, but they rely on it having due consideration before the international commission which may be appointed.

4.—Mr. Bayard to Mr. West, June 19, 1885.

[Confidential.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 19, 1885.

MY DEAR MR. WEST: I assume that the two confidential memoranda you handed to me on the 13th instant embrace the acceptance by the Dominion and the British American coast provinces of the general features of my memorandum of April 21, concerning a temporary arrangement respecting the fisheries, with the understanding expressed on their side that the "agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America."

To such a contingent understanding I can have no objection. Indeed I regard it as covered by the statement in my memorandum of May 21 that the arrangement therein contemplated would be reached "with the understanding that the President of the United States would bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain should be respectively represented, which commission should be charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America."

The equities of the question being before such a mixed commission would doubtless have the fullest latitude of expression and treatment on both sides; and the purpose in view being the maintenance of good neighborhood and intercourse between the two countries, the recommendation of any measures which the commission might deem necessary to attain those ends would seem to fall within its province, and such recommendations could not fail to receive attentive consideration.

I believe this statement will be satisfactory to you, and I should be pleased to be informed at the earliest day practicable of your acceptance of the understanding on behalf of British North America; and by this simple exchange of notes and memoranda the agreement will be completed in season to enable the President to make the result publicly known to the citizens engaged in the fishing on the British American Atlantic coast.

BRITISH LEGATION,
Washington, June 20, 1885.

MY DEAR MR. BAYARD: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your confidential note of yesterday's date, concerning the proposed temporary arrangement respecting the fisheries, which I am authorized by Her Majesty's Government to negotiate with you on behalf of the Government of the Dominion of Canada and the government of Newfoundland, to be effected by an exchange of notes founded on your memorandum of the 21st of April last.

The two confidential memoranda which I handed to you on the 13th instant contain, as you assume, the acceptance by the Dominion and the British American coast provinces of the general features of your above-mentioned memorandum, with the understanding expressed on their side that the agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospects of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America, a contingent understanding to which, as you state, you can have no objection, as you regard it as covered by the terms of your memorandum of April 21.

In authorizing me to negotiate this agreement, Earl Granville states, as I have already had occasion to intimate to you, that it is on the distinct understanding that it is a temporary one, and that its conclusion must not be held to prejudice any claim which may be advanced to more satisfactory equivalents by the colonial governments in the course of the negotiation for a more permanent settlement. Earl Granville further wishes me to tell you that Her Majesty's Government and the colonial governments have consented to the arrangement solely as a mark of good will to the Government and people of the United States, and to avoid difficulties which might be raised by the termination of the fishery articles in the midst of a fishing season; and also the acceptance of such a modus vivendi does not, by any implication, affect the value of the inshore fisheries by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland. I had occasion to remark to you that while the colonial governments are asked to guarantee immunity from interference to American vessels resorting to Canadian waters, no such immunity is offered in your memorandum to Canadian vessels resorting to American waters, but that the Dominion Government presumed that the agreement in this respect would be mutual. As you accepted this view, it would, I think, be as well that mention should be made to this effect in the notes.

Under the reservations, as above indicated, in which I believe you acquiesce, I am prepared to accept the understanding on behalf of British North America, and to exchange notes in the above sense.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, sir, your obedient servant,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

Hon. T. F. BAYARD, &c.

6.—Mr. Bayard to Mr. West, June 20, 1885.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 20, 1885.

SIR: I have just received your note of to-day's date in regard to the proposed temporary arrangement touching the fisheries.

Undoubtedly it is our clear and mutual understanding that the arrangement now made is only temporary, and that it proceeds from the mutual good will of our respective Governments, and solely to avoid all difficulties which might otherwise arise from the termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season.

I understand, also, that the same immunity which is accorded by this agreement to the vessels belonging to the citizens of the United States, engaged in fishing in the British American waters, will be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States. Perceiving, therefore, no substantial difference between our respective propositions and these statements as contained in our correspondence on the subject, I shall consider the agreement as embodied in our memoranda and the correspondence between us and as thus concluded; and public notification to that effect will be given in a few days by the President.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this morning that I should restate part of my note to you of the 19th, I repeat that the arrangement, whereby a modus vivendi on the fishing question has been reached, rests on the memoranda and correspondence exchanged; that your memorandum of the 13th instant expressed the understanding on your side that the "agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America"; that I not only had no objection to such an understanding, but, in fact, regarded it as amply embraced in our proposal to recommend a commission to deal with the whole subject in the interest of good neighborhood and intercourse, and that the recommendation of any measures which the commission might deem necessary to attain those ends would seem to fall within its province, and such recommendations could not fail to have attentive consideration.

Having thus not only admitted the proviso of your memorandum in your own language, but gone still further and pointed out that no limits would be set, so far as I was concerned, to the proposals to be brought forward in the suggested commission on behalf of either party, I do not see how it is possible for me to give any stronger assurance that the understanding has "been reached under circumstances affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British America."

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir,

WASHINGTON, June 22, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your notes of the 20th and 22d instant in regard to the proposed temporary arrangement touching the fisheries, in which you state that it is our clear and mutual understanding that such arrangement is only temporary, and that it proceeds from the mutual good-will of our respective Governments, and solely to avoid all difficulties which might otherwise arise from the termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season. Also that the same immunity which is accorded by this Government to the vessels belonging to the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in the British American waters will be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States, and that the agreement has been reached under circumstances affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America.

As therefore there exists no substantial difference between our respective propositions and the statements as contained in our correspondence on the subject, I shall consider the agreement as embodied in our memoranda and the correspondence between us as thus concluded, and shall inform Her Majesty's Government and the Governments of the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland accordingly.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your obedient servant,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

Hon. T. F. BAYARD, &c.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.
