whooping, pell mell, over her!

Mr. Beggs, who has just written an elaborate treatise on what he calls the "Extent and Cames of Juvenile Depravity," gives us two good instances of sweeping smerrion. In 1829, when an official inquiry showed the number of known prostitutes in London to be 7,000, a voluntary association, multiplying them by nearly twelve, manfully statel them at 80,000? No assertion is more common in "Temperance Literature" than the assertion that 60,000 drunkards die annually in this kingtom. Now, the fact is, says Mr. Beggs, that 10,000—one sixth of this amoun —is a high estimate, for which there is no warrant in any known data. The favourite temperance statement of the sixty thousand, "making deductions for children under fifteen, and aged persons above eighty, as will as for the smaller proportion of female than male inchriates, gives us see y fourth or fifth person dying a d'unkard!" Is it not almost time that we had a Temperance Society in strong statemente as well as strong drinks?

But Mr. Beggs, while he repudiates these exag-

But Mr. Beggs, while he repudiates these exag-geratid falsehoots, still please the total abstinence (mismiles, in a sinilar want of honesty, the tem-perance) cause, and calls upon the women of Eng-land—not the drunken women, as one might sup-pose, but the women who do not get drunk—to "dash down the eup," and upon the met—again, not the drunken men, but the sober—to "banish the social glass," &c. &c., occasionally in an ex-cited trans which is more like the Temperance the sorial gass, and the series are the cited strain which is more like the Temperance Literature shose assertions he holds in such just estimation, than the patient pursuer of facts he generally shows himself to be. Premising that his elaborate treatise is, in a revised and improved form, an essay written by him in competition for a Hundred Pound prize recently offered for the best essay on Juvenile Departity; that the adjudicators a warded it the second prize; and that without making any pretensions to novelty of reflection or suggestion on the momentous subject of which it treats, it contains a mass of important and well-arranged ficts,—we propose to reason a little on this total abstinence question, and to investigate one or two main positions of its advocate sustained by Mr. Beggs.

Now, we will begin by expressing our opinion

We object, altogether, to the evidence of confirmed criminals in prisons, about the cup and the social glass. We have no doubt of their having been drunkards; we have no doubt of their having abused everything they should have used; but we believe that they inch, deserved, and violated the whole table of the inw, through many causes. Mr. Hegge supplies us with a return of the answers made by certain prisoners to the question, What did they smign as the first cause of their falling into error? One night reseasably suppose that

Beggs' book. The subject is a girl:—

It appears that ahe had been indulgently and well brought sp, that alse had obtained at a very carry age an arcellent situation as unresty-anald in a family which hadbeen known to her widowed mother is more prosperous days. All went on smoothly antil, in one of her holidays, she fell in with some female companions and went with them to the .es-gardens. At this place she met with a gentleman who paid her point and particular attention.—

The acquaintanceship was continued for some time. She was fractured by his addresses,—she was fracturedly hirsted to accompany him to amusements for which she had every inclination; but as also could not accept them on account of the rules of the family in which she lived, she begon to feel her situation irksome. One evening she obtained leave of absence on some pretence until a later hour, and went with her admirer to a basi, from which she was bianted a way, after having in a moment of processive chings of the collected what took place afterwards, but found hereaft in the morning away from her kind friends in a stamage place, and at the mercy of him who had wronged her.

We do not quite understand what share the "small glass of wine-negus" is supposed to have had in this metanctoly history. If it were drugged, we presume a cup of tea might have been drugged too. If the poor girl was stapified by the unassisted fumes of the negus (which we must beg to be excused for not believing), were suppose that a lotal abstinence from hugus on the part of Clapham and Stoke Ne rington would not have prevented the negus first hose, i.e. a great scale, for the moral redemption of the program of the sake of all-poor girls in the like gerit, there must be no tea-gardens and no had the negus to be excused for not be the negus of the poor girl from drinking [4]. This is all owing to drink, of course, and par-ticularly to the sober women who have sot dashed down their cups, and the sober men who have sot banished their soc al glasses. But there are minds so co. stituted, perhaps, as to infer from these pre-mises that there must be something a little amise in the Sunday schools themselves—unless they have a special dispensation from being known by their fruits, like all other institutious.

It is a good instance of the confusion of ideas which prevails among the declaimers about total alstinence, that the strengest piece of evidence in Mr. B. ggs volume goes directly to the advantages of moderation, and has nothing to do with total abstinence. In certain coal, copp. r, the, and chemical wooks im Glamorganshire, employing; of men, women, and children, about 4,500, it appears that a most just and humane system of society has been established by the employers. The sanitary coudition of their dwellings is of the most favourable kind, with suitable accommodation for the wants of families. There are churches and chapels. There are churches and chapels. There are churches on useful and onter tining subjects. There is singing in classes. It is a good instance of the confusion of it

It does not appear that these good employers have done any damage to their own cups and social glasses. It does not appear that they have got upon platforms to deliver statements "cooked" like Mr. Hudson's accounts, or sought to make a braggart reputation by administring pledges, to be broken like the same honourable gentleman's considered the state of the cooked.

But, before such an effort can be made with any

But, before such an effort can be made with any chance of success, a deep conviction of its accessity, and a full determination of the part of all classes of society to co-operate for such an end, must spread throughout we length and breadth of England. Now, we tell the total abstraction of the great question with the emphatic, homely English phrase of humbug; with Jesuitical perversions of all fact, and truth, and fair deduction; with slandered parts of the community; with visitations of their own faiture on the rational and reasonable home-enjoyments of honest men, who are capable of self-control; is fatal to that state of anion and their own failure on the rational and rememble home-enjoyments of honest men, who are capable of self-control; is fatal to that atoke of anion and preparation. If they would rest their case on the fair ground of temperance for those who can be temperate, and total abstinctive for those who can not be temperate, and would be content to mande the good they have done (which we do not dispute) in the exceptional cases where persons having no excuse for such misconduct, have yielded to a depay of the person of the such misconduct, have yielded to a depay of the person of the

In these remarks we have employed the term Free Soiler as applicable to those who condemn Shavery. MR. I. S. MACCONALD AND THE 'TOWN LOTS.

We notice that the Toronto Colonies has revived a buy-s-boo story against Mr. Sandfield MacDonald, the new Solicitis-General, in reference to some property in Cornwall, known as the The gravamen of the charge is, " Market Lots." that Mr. MacDonald bought these lots, two in number, at the price laid on them by the Government and its Agent, and that he did not inform those innocent victims of misplaced confidence that the property was worth more than they de manded for it. would not go unwhipt of justice. It is not contended that Mr. Mac.lonaid deceived the Agent, or that that officer's return was not fairly laid before the Government. The facts are these, as we understand them :- The Gove ament grated a lot of Land to the Town of Cornwall for the express purpose of building a Market Place. The people of Cornwall selected another site for a Mar-ket, and the said lot of Land became re-invested in the Crown. Some time after, Mr. MacDonald, intending to build, a dwelling house for himself, lowing terms of the courchased these lots from the Government, having of Representatives. got the usual certificate of value, &c., from the local Land Agent in Cornwall. These, we reference to incidental circumstances. We have no interest in the dispute, or in Mr. MacDonald, of his accusers; but we must say that the whole affair appears to us unwort y of the clamour that has been raised about it. The sum paid by Mr. MacDonald for the lots was £25 each. Judge Jarvis valued them at £50 each, and said they never ways wo th more; and even Col. Vankoughnets Mr. MacDonald's great opponent in the matter, did not pictend they were worth more than £30 for the whole. The quarrel originated chiefly in the jealousies and better insight into it, and enable us to anticipate more definitely the probable term nation of the struggle for Speakership:
