House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Saturday, August 10, 1946

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVATE BILL

WORKERS BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre) moved the first reading of bill No. 374 (from the senate), respecting Workers Benevolent Association of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

TIMBER CONTROL

RESIGNATION OF CONTROLLER—APPOINTMENT OF SUCCESSOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Press dispatches from Vancouver this morning indicate that there is to be some change in the timber control. Could the minister make a statement on that?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, the report has just been called to my attention. It is a fact that Mr. David Rosenberry, who has been associated with timber control for the past six years, has tendered his resignation, to take effect on August 15. He has been suffering from overwork for some time and felt that he must be relieved so that he could take a prolonged holiday before returning to his private business. Consideration is being given to his successor, and the most suitable man seems to be the present coordinator of housing, Mr. Terrence Flahiff. It is the present intention to recommend Mr. Flahiff to succeed Mr. Rosenberry.

FREE PORTS

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO PORT OF QUEBEC—REPORT OF INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON B. ISNOR (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire from the Minister of Transport whether a promise has been made to the port of Quebec or to any representative of that port regarding the establishment of a free port at Quebec?

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I gave no promise to anyone that legislation would be enacted concerning free ports. The delegation which waited on several ministers of the crown was told that legislation would depend on the report of the interdepartmental committee, and then again upon whether the committee recommended in favour of or against the establishment of free ports. The delegation was assured, however, that every effort would be made by the interdepartmental committee to expedite the conclusion of its report.

PRICES AND TRADE BOARD

HANDLING OF RATION COUPONS BY BANKS—BANQUE PROVINCIALE DU CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Justice give the house a report on the present condition of affairs with regard to the proceedings being taken in connection with coupon revelations affecting Banque Provinciale du Canada, on which he recently made a report? Perhaps the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance will indicate also whether the licence of the bank has been renewed.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, just before I came into the house I communicated with the deputy minister of justice and the chief enforcement officer of the wartime prices and trade board, and was informed that there have been no developments concerning any employee of the bank since I answered the hon. gentleman's question a week ago.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA REGIONAL WAR LABOUR BOARD AS TO WAGE INCREASES ABOVE 10 CENTS AN HOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, based on an item from Vancouver in to-day's Ottawa Journal that the British Columbia regional war labour board has announced that it will not approve any wage increases above ten cents an hour until the parliamentary committee on industrial relations has reported. I would ask the minister whether his department was informed of this decision and whether any directive went out from his office in regard to it.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I have not seen the report in the newspaper, but I shall be glad to make inquiry of the chairman of the national war labour board in regard to the matter.

COAL

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, several days ago the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis) inquired when we might expect the report of the royal commission on coal. I have a letter dated August 3 from Judge C. C. McLaurin, one of the commissioners, who writes as follows:

Dear Mr. Howe:

I have been advised by your office that further inquiries have been made of you as to the progress being made by this commission.

A substantial portion of the report is now prepared. The work of completion is being vigorously pressed and I do not anticipate any circumstances arising which will prevent submission thereof at an early date.

ARMY SUPPLIES

PRESS REPORT AS TO DISCARDING OF SHOES AND SLIPPERS—SHIRTS, TOWELS, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): There is one other question I should like to direct to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply, because I believe he is in charge of the department concerned. It has to do with reports in the Montreal Star of yesterday with regard to the dumping of shoes, which is still unexplained, and also the destruction of a quantity of khaki and blue shirts, towels, et cetera. Will the minister have an investigation made into this matter, in view of the fact that there have been so many reports of destruction of necessary goods when they are in short supply? Also will consideration be given to setting up a commission to look into the matter, particularly to report on the dumping of shoes?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): A most exhaustive investigation was instituted into the question of shoes, and it was found that the allegations that were made of destruction of usable property by War Assets Corporation are wholly without foundation. We invited the reporters to visit the plant at Valleyfield at any time they cared to do so without notice, and I understand the Star reporter did visit the plant with photographers yesterday. I expect that Monday's Star will give the results of his investigation. He was given authority to make a most complete investigation on his own. I can assure my hon. friend that since the first allegations were made, every service of the government has investigated the situation from its point of view at Valleyfield and at the point of shipment of the materials. War Assets Corporation have made a thorough investigation and I can assure my hon. friend that the allegations of destruction of valuable property are wholly without foundation.

As to the shirts, so far as we can find out that report is based entirely on gossip. We have found that no usable shirts have been sold as scrap material by War Assets Corporation.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Or destroyed?

Mr. HOWE: Or destroyed.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I ask a supplementary question? When the minister brings down his report with respect to the destruction and dumping of used materials will he answer a question which I asked, and which has been asked on several occasions, namely, who did the dumping at Point St. Charles? There has been a good deal of talk about destruction, but I should like to know who did the dumping. I understand War Assets Corporation and the Department of National Defence have the names of those who did the dumping, but they cannot be released as yet.

Mr. HOWE: I released the name to the press some weeks ago. I do not recall the name at the moment, but I shall be glad to get it. I think to table it now would be giving rather second-hand information, since it has been so widely circulated.

FLOUR

SHIPMENTS TO ECUADOR—QUESTION OF RESTRICTION OF EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): Last Monday I asked a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is not here this morning, with respect to the export of certain flour. He has not answered it, and I wonder if somebody would direct his attention to it so that I may have an answer.

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Victoria, B.C.): I think I can give the hon. member some information in connection with the flour. Two fairly large ships arrived in Canada about a week ago to load flour, but it was necessary that they undergo extensive repairs which it would take a couple of weeks to complete. During that period the railway companies could not unload their cars because the ships were not ready to receive them. They had much other work for the cars to do, and they used their cars for that purpose. In addition, the flour could be kept in better shape in the warehouse than in cars alongside the track. I am glad to be able to report that the repairs to these ships are about completed, and the movement of flour will again start from the mills.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I am sure we are all glad to have the information, but it does not answer the question I asked.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Prime Minister): May I direct the attention of the hon. member to the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to be found at page 4376 of Hansard.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): Thank you; I was not here.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE CONTROL

STATUTORY AUTHORITY FOR ORDERS IN COUNCIL PASSED UNDER WAR MEASURES ACT

Mr. R. W. MAYHEW (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of bill No. 195, respecting the control of the acquisition and disposition of foreign currency and the control of transactions involving foreign currency of non-residents.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

PROVISION FOR ADDITIONAL COMMISSIONERS, TRANSFER OF CERTAIN JURISDICTION, AND GRANTING OF MONEY

The house resumed from Friday, August 9, consideration in committee of bill No. 357, to amend the Federal District Commission Act—Mr. St. Laurent—Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—National capital district.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention at this time, or perhaps at any time, to make any lengthy plea in favour of the provisions for the improvement of the federal area. This bill is nothing new; it is simply a continuation of provisions that have been made for almost the last fifty years in that regard. The fact that the matter had been in progress for fifty years should not surprise anyone. I should be very much surprised, and my descendants would be very much disappointed, I am sure, if it did not go on for more than fifty years in the future. I think it is the fairly general view that the development of the national capital will keep pace with the development of the country as a nation, and I hope that will go on for a very long time.

The leader of the opposition asked me at the resolution stage if I would make a brief statement on the historical background of this movement, which is not the policy of any one party but is something to which all those who have had responsibility for government in Canada over the last half century have been giving careful, sympathetic and effective consideration and cooperation.

The historical background of the commission is given on pages 60 and 61 in No. 3 of the proceedings of the joint committee of the senate and the House of Commons, reporting its sittings of Wednesday, June 28, 1944. I mention this because it is given in greater detail than I propose to give it in summarizing it this morning. But perhaps for the immediate information of hon. members who may not have this report at hand just at the moment, I may say that the federal district commission had its inception as the Ottawa improvement commission in 1899. It was established for the purpose of beautifying and improving the city of Ottawa as the capital of Canada by the construction of parks, driveways, public squares, boulevards and so forth.

Four commissioners comprised its membership, three being appointed by the governor in council and the fourth by the city of Ottawa. The chairman was named by the governor in council. All were to serve without remuneration. An annual grant of $60,000 was provided for a period of ten years from July 1, 1899. By an amending act assented to on August 13, 1903 the period during which the annual grant of $60,000 was to be paid was extended to twenty years, from the first of July, 1899 and the commission was given power to borrow up to $250,000 by the sale of debentures.

By an amending act assented to on May 4, 1910 the annual grant was increased to $100,000 for a ten-year period commencing July 1, 1909. An act to consolidate and amend the acts respecting the Ottawa improvement commission was then assented to on July 17, 1919. These dates will indicate that it was a matter that was being dealt with not only by one party but by whatever administration had responsibility for the affairs of the country.

The act of 1919 increased the annual grant to $150,000 for a ten-year period from July 1, 1919, and then in 1927 the name of the commission was changed from the Ottawa improvement commission to the federal distict commission. The act passed in that year increased the powers of the commission to enable it to extend its activities to areas or districts outside the capital proper, and provided for the appointment of a commissioner as a representative of the city of Hull. The dominion government, I am told, was actuated by the desire to widen the scope of the commission's functions to embrace not only Ottawa and the immediate vicinity but Hull and the adjoining municipalities on both sides as an integral part of the national capital area.

The act of 1927 also increased the annual grant of the commission to $250,000, but this was reduced again to $200,000 in 1928 when provision was made for a grant of $3,000,000 to be expended upon capital improvements over a period of years. The beautification and improvement works which had been commenced in 1900 for Ottawa and district, under these authorizing acts of parliament, consist of parks, landscapes, driveways, the latter extending from Rockcliffe park east of the city of Ottawa to Aylmer road west of the city of Hull. The driveway follows as closely as convenient the banks of the Ottawa and Rideau rivers and the Rideau canal. Approximately twenty-two miles of driveways have been constructed. Gatineau park, comprising 16,000 acres situated in the Laurentian hills on the Quebec side of the river, about seven air miles northwest of Ottawa, is being preserved in its natural state of wooded hills, valleys, lakes and streams, for the enjoyment of the public.

By orders in council the responsibility of improving and maintaining the grounds of Rideau Hall, those surrounding the national research council buildings and other dominion government buildings in Ottawa was transferred from the Department of Public Works to the commission in the years 1932 to 1934. Amounts for this work are voted annually by parliament in estimates approved by the governor in council.

The number of properties now serviced by the commission is 110. The land now owned or controlled by the federal district commission in and around Ottawa, exclusive of the 16,000-acre national park, is: Owned by the federal district commission, 758 acres; leased from the crown, 224 acres; leased from the city of Ottawa and developed and maintained by the commission, 129 acres; grounds of government buildings maintained through the instrumentality of the commission under these orders in council, about 200 acres, or a total of grounds thus administered and maintained by the commission in Ottawa and the immediate vicinity of 1,311 acres. In addition, as I stated a moment ago, there is the 16,000 acres of land in the Gatineau park.

The leader of the opposition in his inquiry the other day, seemed particularly interested in having a statement of receipts and expenditures of the commission since its inception. The figures I have been given are as follows:

Statutory grants from 1899 to 1909, $60,000 a year for 10 years.....	$600,000
Statutory grants from 1909 to 1919, $100,000 a year for 10 years.....	1,000,000
Statutory grants from 1919 to 1927, $150,000 a year for 8 years.....	1,200,000
Statutory grants from 1927 to 1928, 1 year.....	250,000
Statutory grants from 1928 to 1946, $200,000 a year for 18 years.....	3,600,000
In addition thereto, special grant made under the act of 1928.....	3,000,000
Grand total	$9,650,000

In addition to that there have been votes by parliament over that period of $1,162,788. There have also been advances from government departments for work on the maintenance of grounds and new buildings of $2,016,766, making a grand total of $12,829,554 over the forty-eight years.

I come now to the expenditures for that period: For the construction and maintenance of the parkway system, $10,690,117; for the maintenance of grounds of government buildings, $1,375,125; for the development of grounds of new government buildings, $641,640.

In connection with the future work of the commission there are a few points I should like to mention. First of all I wish to point out that there is no provision in this bill or in anything parliament is being asked to pass making this a national war memorial. This is a bill to amend the act respecting the federal district commission, and these amendments are required, and I trust will be made by the house, entirely apart from any idea as to whether or not the development of the national capital should be classified as a national war memorial. I know that the Prime Minister has urged that the development of the national capital might be a fitting way for the nation to express its gratification at the role played by the Canadian nation in the last war. That is a matter about which it was apparent from the debate last evening that there is no unanimity of opinion, and it is not my purpose to ask the house to make any pronouncement about it at this time.

This bill is for the continuation of the development of the capital area consisting of Ottawa and the surrounding district. I think there is much to be said for the view that it is something that the Canadian nation would wish to do entirely regardless of any other consideration. I think it is something that the Canadian nation feels should keep pace with the development of the country. The appropriation suggested at this time would not be required, and would probably not be justified, if we in this house felt that the Canadian nation had reached the full stage of its national development and of its importance in world affairs. But as the nation develops—and I think we all feel that it will develop for a long period still, and that this immense area of the habitable portion of the globe is to be the home of a much larger population than the twelve million people who control it at the present time—as that goes on, it will be necessary that the national capital keep pace with the development of the nation. In order that that may be possible I think it is only the part of prudence and foresight to lay out plans which will not be carried out at any early day but which it would be possible to realize without having to destroy too much placed in the way of their realization when the proper time comes. It was for that purpose, and it is for the same purpose, that these capital sums are being asked parliament to appropriate. There are a great many places in Canada where the development has been such that it has necessitated the tearing down of things which would still intrinsically have had some value but which had to make way for something more useful which the developments had made necessary.

As I said at the resolution stage, the work will be somewhat greater in extent than it had been hitherto, because of two factors. One is that over the past five or six years the development of our people as a nation has proceeded with greater rapidity than it had at any previous period. Canada's position as one of the nations of the world has asserted itself to a much greater degree during the last few years than had happened at any time before, though it must be at once stated that the groundwork for that development and for that expansion had been laid from the very beginning. This is just one example of what I have in mind. The exchange of diplomatic representatives between the Canadian government and the other governments has brought to Ottawa a large body of officials representing other nations of the world. Their presence in Ottawa has put some strain upon the buildings, upon the layout which had previously sufficed for the requirements of the business transacted on behalf of the nation at the national capital, and that is still going on.

The second factor which makes it appear desirable to proceed a little more rapidly is that so much of the maintenance and development work had to give way to more urgent matters during the war period, and they had to be deferred until this time. The federal district commission is like any other large body in Canada. It had to allow activities that were not of vital necessity to win the war to be deferred until the war had been won.

This bill does not deal with any general plan of development which may be decided on for the capital, and I would not expect that there would be any decision made at this time or in the immediate future blueprinting what was to be done and at what dates it would be done. But a general over-all plan is being prepared which would make possible the development of a national capital with a population two or three times what it is at the present time, showing what a city of that size as the national capital would be apt to require. It is suggested in this bill that there be such cooperation between the various authorities concerned as would prevent the doing of things which would be obstacles to the realization of that larger plan, as and when conditions made it proper to develop it.

To cover expenditures of a capital type, such as those for the purchase of lands and works, the development of the parkway system and so on, the bill before the house provides that over a period of years the sum of $3,000,000 may be allocated to the commission, as a similar sum of $3,000,000 was made available between 1928 and 1935 under the terms of the 1928 act. To cover the increased current expenditures an increase in the annual grant from $200,000 to $300,000 is also requested.

The part of the work of the commission which will be connected with the broader developments of the capital will require special arrangements. As hon. members know, the government has had Mr. Jacques Greber to advise on the general planning. I was much interested and impressed by what was said last evening by the hon. member for Eglinton. I think all Canadians wish this capital to be expressive of Canadian mentality and Canadian conditions, that it be the capital of the Canadian nation and not a pocket edition of anything already in existence elsewhere. But as the hon. member suggested, in that connection it is wise to have advice as good as can be obtained, and I think the knowledge a competent landscape or town development architect has acquired over a long period of years in examining the layout of other capitals or other cities is something which can be of considerable assistance. I do not suppose there is a city in the world where mistakes have not been made. I think it wise to have the advice of one who has studied the situation elsewhere, who knows what mistakes it is necessary to guard against and who can suggest outlines and general plans to be worked out in the atmosphere of a Canadian mentality and of Canadian conditions in this federal area. I have been here only a few years and am not competent to express any views, but I am not convinced that the development of the railway terminal here has not been a mistake to a certain degree, and that it might not have been wiser and more helpful to the ultimate development of a greater federal capital to have made some other arrangements for bringing the railway systems into the city. I am not expressing that as a definite opinion, but there are those who are not convinced that some mistake was not made there.

The work being prepared under the guidance of Mr. Greber is being done here in Canada by a staff of Canadian architects and draftsmen, and is something that will make available not a plan for immediate realization but a plan which will show what kind of arrangements it would appear in the light of experience to be necessary to provide for in a national capital that might have two or three times or perhaps even more the population of present day Ottawa.

Mr. REID: In the report made by the committee the government was authorized to ask the federal district commission to call the railways together with regard to a new union station and also with regard to the elimination of their tracks. I was wondering if that authorization had been carried out.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That matter is under consideration, and I was about to state to the committee what has been done in that connection. Last December the matter was quite fully gone into and a tentative decision arrived at to set up three committees, one to be known as a national planning committee, the second to be known as a parks committee and the third to be known as a railway committee. The national planning committee I understand has been authorized and would consist of seventeen members comprising the mayors of both Ottawa and Hull, with the other members to be appointed by the federal district commission, not necessarily chosen only from among their own members, to advise on the acceptance or otherwise of this general plan as something to work to in future years. Some of the members are to be well qualified in the science and practice of town planning and to be chosen, because of the necessity for frequent meetings, largely from the cities of Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto. They are to be appointed by the federal district commission under authority of order in council P.C. 5634 of August 16, 1945. As I said, two of them are to be the mayors of Ottawa and Hull. The personnel of this committee is to serve on an honorary basis, getting only the reasonable out of pocket expenses incurred in attending meetings. I may add that from the outset the whole of the work that has been done by this Ottawa improvement commission, or the federal district commission, has been done entirely without remuneration, as a voluntary and very willing contribution of public-minded citizens.

Mr. BOUCHER: A work of love.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: A work of love, to provide for the future generations of Canadians. The principal function of this national planning committee will be to meet as often as required for the purpose of laying down the broad general outline of the master plan for the capital district, with Mr. Greber acting in the capacity of a consultant, a capacity which I understood the hon. member for Eglinton to favour in his address last evening. The actual work is being done at the expense of the federal district commission by a staff which I understand now consists of thirteen members, architects, draftsmen and so forth, working under the general direction of Mr. Greber. This national planning committee will report to the government through the commission and will advise the commission as to the subsequent and gradual development of the general scheme, as and when conditions appear to make it opportune to undertake it.

The second committee which has not yet been formally set up by by-law of the federal district commission, but which is under consideration, could not operate effectively it was felt, until the general plan was available. This parks committee would have a membership of five persons chosen by the federal district commission from the federal capital area, persons who have in particular displayed a keen interest in the formation and development of Gatineau park. Its chief duty would be to advise as to the management and further development of Gatineau park and other park areas, from the point of view of the maximum use the public could make of those facilities.

The third committee would be the railways committee. It was felt that there again there must be this general master plan as a thing to work to in the future before the railway committee could do any valuable or effective work toward the solution of that part of the problem. After the national planning committee have determined the extent of the changes which would ultimately be required in the railway lines in and around Ottawa, in order to conform with the requirements of a much larger capital city and development this committee would work out the details and the cost of such changes. I anticipate that would be something which it would be very important to have carefully gone into.

We have heard the old saying that Rome was not built in a day. I do not think the capital of Canada is going to be built in a day. I do believe that no matter how desirable certain things might appear to be, they will have to wait until the opportune time—until they can be undertaken without putting any undue burden upon the economy of the nation.

This railways committee will be appointed by the federal district commission and will consist of the chosen representatives of the railway companies, representatives of Ottawa and Hull and also of the board of transport commissioners.

Before concluding these remarks I wish to say a word about the interesting and useful suggestion by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) and the remarks and comments made upon it by other hon. members. I think everyone is in agreement that this federal area should be regarded as a thing of interest not only to the citizens of Ottawa and Hull but to the citizens of Canada generally.

The bill does propose that of a commission of fifteen members, at least five—and the number has not been limited to five—would be chosen as representing not the residents of the capital area but the residents of the rest of Canada. It would be possible, even with a commission of fifteen, to have a representative from each of the nine provinces. The object the government had in view in submitting the bill as it now stands was to have the Canadian public generally represented in this body.

If it is the feeling of the house that there should be a legislative requirement that at least one member of the commission would be ordinarily resident in each of the nine provinces, it does make the commission a little more unwieldly, inasmuch as there would be a commission of nineteen instead of the fifteen as set out in the bill. But that is not a serious objection. I am sure that if there were a commission of nineteen there would be occasions when routine meetings would be held, at which times the whole nineteen would not feel they had to attend. But when there was anything of major importance they would feel it their duty to respond.

Of course hon. members realize that as in the past this is going to be asked of them as a labour of love. They are going to be asked to serve without remuneration because they would be chosen by reason of their vision, outlook and public-spiritedness. We felt we might achieve that object by having regional representation. However, if hon. members feel it is preferable to have the nine provinces, as provincial units, separately represented, there will be no objection to accepting an amendment along those lines.

Having made these remarks I suggest that the committee might now be prepared to consider the terms of the legislation proposed. There may be other points which during the course of the discussion hon. members may wish to urge. They may feel sure that there is no desire to force anything upon the country. There is a desire to do what the predecessors of this government, to whatever party they belonged, have been doing for the last half-century, and to which I feel sure all future governments, composed of no matter which of the political parties, will also wish to add their respective contributions.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Chairman, with the general objectives of this measure I am sure a large proportion of hon. members will be in accord. Certainly this party is.

I should like to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent) for the historical background he has given the committee respecting this project over a period of time stretching back for almost half a century. He has shown that this project has had the support of every government in power since 1899. He has shown, too, that during that time $13 million has been put into it. He has pointed out further that the development, which began by costing the state $60,000 a year, had recently cost more than $300,000 a year and, when this measure passes, is likely to cost $600,000 a year. I mention this only as a fact, and not necessarily as a criticism.

During the course of his remarks the minister said that there is nothing in the bill which states that the present plan is to make of this project a national war memorial. I was glad to hear the minister say that, because if it had been the idea of the government to change the original conception and plan a national war memorial rather than the development of a federal capital area on its own merits I would have felt it necessary to move that any national funds set aside for a national war memorial should not all be spent in Ottawa, but be shared with the provincial capitals. But the minister has removed that doubt from our minds.

With respect to the national planning commission and other commissions or committees working in connection with this project, has there been any intimation by the government to these bodies that they are working now on a national war memorial rather than on a project for the development of a federal capital area?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Not to my knowledge. My information is that the instructions to them have been to work out a general plan that might make possible the existence of a city two or three times the size of the present Ottawa, with the facilities and amenities which that kind of city would require. The question whether it be a national war memorial or not I think is more a matter of nomenclature than something that would make any change in the nature of the planning. There has not been I think any request that there be aything specific planned that would be similar, for instance, to the monument in Confederation square or to the peace tower. They have not been asked to plan anything that would be the centre of a national memorial scheme. They have been asked to plan for the possibilities of a national capital two or three times the size of the present Ottawa.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am very glad to hear the observations of the minister. I think it is important that this house and the country should know what the purpose is behind this move by parliament. If it is for the development of a federal capital area in which the whole Canadian people can take pride, we are all behind it—I am speaking only for ourselves. But if it were to be a national war memorial involving the spending of large sums here and very little elsewhere we would oppose that feature.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I can give the hon. member the assurance that we are not asking parliament to commit itself in one way or another in that regard at the present time. We are asking parliament to commit itself to the preparation of plans for the long-term development of a national capital area two or three times the size of the present city of Ottawa.

[Mr. Bracken.]

Mr. BRACKEN: I commend the minister and the government for that attitude. The reason I raised the question was that there is an impression throughout the land that we are being asked to start in now to develop a great national war memorial in the nation's capital. The minister, in introducing the resolution on this matter, said, at page 4384 of Hansard:

> As hon. members are aware, the government has taken action to have plans begun for the development of the national capital area as a national war memorial. A large part of the work to be carried out in this connection will devolve upon the federal district commission.

It is because of statements such as that, as well as statements credited to the Prime Minister, that this development would be a great national war memorial that I raised the question. I do not think I need labour it further.

The minister in justification of this project pointed out that this country is growing, that the nation's capital will grow, and that it is wise to plan to avoid so far as possible mistakes in the development of this area. I think that is a very desirable objective. He mentioned that there had possibly been mistakes in some of the cities' plans in the past, and he referred specifically to the railway terminals. I think there will be considerable agreement with him in that. But I do not think that all the mistakes were made in the distant past. I have heard people say that this Confederation square which has been developed since the federal district commisison came into being is not without criticism. That feeling is widespread. So that even though we proceed to plan in the way proposed we are not necessarily going to avoid mistakes in the future.

I have one question in regard to detail to ask the minister. In outlining the expenditures over the last forty-eight years for the development of this area, amounting to about $13,000,000, the minister indicated that the federal district commission administers certain sums which are voted to various departments. Are those in addition to the $13,000,000?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No, those are included in the $13,000,000. I gave the details. There are votes made to certain departments, and the amounts are turned over for expenditure to the federal district commission to discharge the responsibilities for which the votes have been made by parliament. But all that is included in the figure I gave.

Mr. BRACKEN: Thank you. Might I ask the minister if there is any more recent report from Mr. Greber with respect to his ideas for future plans?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Greber left Ottawa ten days ago to go back to France after spending nearly five weeks here. He was directing the personnel of thirteen in the Hunter building, Canadian architects and draftsmen who under the direction of Mr. Greber are preparing the master plan. Mr. Greber will be back probably in three or four months and hopes to have a plan prepared for the approval of the federal authorities and the municipal authorities surrounding the capital city. Before any definite plan is decided upon all these bodies will be consulted and have an opportunity to express their views as to the usefulness of making changes in the suggested plan. The joint committee that sat in 1944 recommended the preparation of this plan, including the setting up of the committees which the Minister of Justice mentioned, a planning committee and a railway committee. These two committees have not yet been set up but the federal district commission has passed a by-law which was confirmed by order in council some time ago for the setting up of a planning committee composed of Canadian architects representing the two cities and even the surrounding municipalities across the river. This planning committee has been set on foot but it has not sat yet because Mr. Greber happens to be the consultant to that committee. On his return to Canada we hope that the members of that committee will have been appointed and that the committee will study with Mr. Greber and the local authorities the completion of this plan.

Mr. BRACKEN: My only comment in connection with the remarks of the minister is that it is to be regretted that when we are considering a measure of this importance we could not have before us the latest report or recommendation by Mr. Greber. In that connection may I ask the minister in charge of the bill or the Minister of Public Works whether the federal district commission was responsible for the development of Confederation square?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am glad the hon. member brought up that matter. Those who lived in Ottawa ten years ago will remember the situation at the corner of Sparks and Rideau streets. They will recall the old Russell hotel, the old post office and the other buildings that were there at that time. In those days Ottawa had a population of about 125,000 or 130,000, but during the past few years the population has increased by nearly 40,000. Compared with ten years ago, traffic in Ottawa to-day is about ten times as great. I do not say that the plan is perfect, but if that square had not been developed we would not be able to get through at all with our present traffic. I think those who lived in Ottawa in those days and remember how it was will bear me out. The hon. member for Carleton knows this city quite well and he will remember the corner of Sparks and Rideau street as it was ten years ago and I think he will admit how difficult it would have been to move traffic through there to-day if this had not been done.

Mr. BOUCHER: I would probably repeat what it is called to-day, hell's half acre.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): However, traffic can still move through, and that would have been impossible if it had been left in its former state.

Mr. BRACKEN: I was not asking the minister to justify or excuse the plan; I asked him who was responsible for the plan, and he has not answered.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The government was. At that time Mr. Greber was called in, when there was some question of where the war memorial in memory of those who lost their lives in the last war should be placed. That memorial was designed by Canadian artists.

Mr. BOUCHER: March brothers.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am speaking from memory, and I may be wrong, but I believe the plans for the square were prepared by Mr. Greber. I know he was called in in connection with the location of the new post office. However, the government of the day was responsible for that work. Perhaps mistakes were made, and more property should have been expropriated, perhaps the boulevard should have been extended down Metcalfe street instead of Elgin, but that is a matter of opinion.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister says that the government was responsible for the plan, so the federal district commission is absolved.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I think everybody had a share in the preparing of that plan.

Mr. BOUCHER: I think the minister will agree that the federal district commission had no responsibility for that plan.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I did not say they were responsible.

Mr. BRACKEN: I am glad to have that answer from the minister, because we can have more confidence in the federal district commission when we know that they were not responsible for that monstrosity. The minister referred to the membership of this commission, and indicated that he was agreeable to an amendment which would provide for every province being represented. I had planned to offer such an amendment when the appropriate section was before us. I do not see why the membership would have to be increased from fifteen to nineteen, however, in the development of the national capital there should not be any province left out of representation on the commission, and when I say that I am not advocating that the membership be increased. I think the nine provinces could be represented in the suggested membership of fifteen.

Mr. BURTON: I wish to thank the minister for the clear statement he made this morning, and my only regret is that he did not see fit to say something of that kind when the resolution was before the house. There are a few things I should like to inquire about. The leader of the opposition referred to the fact that this was considered as a national war memorial, and I understood the minister to say in answering the hon. gentleman that that was not necessarily part of this scheme. The explanatory note reads in part:

> The purpose of this bill is to amend the Federal District Commission Act, 1927, so as to enable the commission to discharge more readily the duties that will devolve upon it in connection with the development of the national capital area as a national war memorial.

If it is not the intention of the government to do that, why should that explanatory note be placed in the bill? I would suggest to the minister that that be deleted. I am quite in accord with the idea that there should be a national war memorial in the national capital, but let us go ahead with it on that basis and proceed with this other work on its own merits. As I mentioned on the second reading, those whose memories we wish to commemorate by a war memorial did not all come from Ottawa. I contend that the various provinces should be given assistance in the building of suitable monuments or memorials.

From time to time the leader or the acting leader of this group speaks on behalf of this party, but I wish to make it clear that I have the privilege of speaking on behalf of the people of Humboldt constituency. When I speak on matters of this kind I endeavour to be governed by what I believe are the considered wishes of the people of my constituency. In our party it is recognized that a member has that right. The people in the constituency which I have the honour to represent know that I am a firm believer in democratic government. They know that I am prepared to obey the will of the majority when it is expressed in an orderly manner.

Last night this house approved the principle of this bill, and apparently that approval was given by a majority of the members. Being a true democrat I accept that decision and I shall be prepared to represent the people I am supposed to represent by continuing my efforts to work within that orbit and endeavour to make this bill a better bill. Therefore I shall be prepared to support any amendments, whether they come from this or any other section of the house, which in my opinion will remove the objectionable features of the bill.

While I am speaking of amendments, I may say for the benefit of the member for Fraser Valley that in discussing the principle of the bill yesterday I took occasion to note what some of the objections were, but I fully realized that it was not the time to move any amendments. I might further inform him that my experience in the past has been that if you really want something worth while done for the improvement of a bill, you should use your persuasive powers to the best of your ability to have the minister, or one of his colleagues appreciate the necessity for such amendments as you may suggest and move them accordingly. I can see that someone, whether myself or the member for Fraser Valley, had some influence on the minister, because he is prepared to go at least part of the way with us. For that I wish to thank the minister, and I may say that if either he or the member for Fraser Valley does not move some of the amendments I have in mind, I am prepared to bring them forward myself. I have some ready.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: My good friend the member for Humboldt rather flattered me—well, no; he did not flatter me; he described me correctly—when he said that I used my persuasive powers on the minister. But the member for Humboldt yesterday did everything he could think of to oppose the bill in principle and otherwise.

An hon. MEMBER: He knocked it down and threw it out.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: He may have tried to throw it out, but he did not succeed. There were too many of us from British Columbia for that. After I spoke last night, and I can be checked by reference to Hansard, the leader of the opposition stepped in, and he can read for himself what is reported in the record. I am proud that I brought that hon. gentleman into my little party in this connection, because I believe he will second the amendment I announced last night that I would move. But going still further, the member for Fraser Valley used those same persuasive powers which the member for Humboldt speaks of to win to his side—that is, to win to the side of the member for Fraser Valley—not only the leader of the official opposition but the Acting Prime Minister, who has stated this morning that he will accept the amendment suggested by the member for Fraser Valley.

I am doing rather good work for the city of Ottawa, and if I stayed here long enough I might be able to fix that death trap at Confederation square that has been spoken of. I do not know who is to blame for it.

Mr. BOUCHER: We should be glad to have you.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am sure I could be elected in Carleton if I ran there.

Mr. BOUCHER: At least I admire the hon. member's courage.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I had an amendment which I intended to move in connection with section 2, because I want the people of Manitoba and of all Canada to know that the leader of the opposition was right at least in this instance, because he is prepared, I understand, to second my motion, which will be to the effect that of the members appointed by the governor in council one shall ordinarily be a resident of each of the nine provinces.

In conclusion, may I suggest to the member for Humboldt that the most constructive speech made in this debate was delivered by the member for New Westminster, who said it would be an excellent thing if each province had the privilege of taking part in the beautification of one particular section of the capital. The only thing the member for New Westminster forgot to mention was that ninety per cent of the shrubs, flowers, and ornaments would come from Fraser valley, British Columbia.

Mr. BOUCHER: I am pleased to see the committee in such a happy mood when discussing the beautification of the federal area. One point I mentioned last night I would impress upon the minister who is piloting the bill. As a matter of fact, I do not think it is necessary for me to urge it upon him because in the course of his remarks this morning he mentioned the same thing several times. What I mean is that the word "area" is far more appropriate than the word "district". While it is true that this body was first incorporated as the Ottawa improvement commission, it had a title that more fittingly represented its activity then than that of district commission. For a number of years in this house and in the country at large a great deal of confusion, as well as some antagonism to the aims and objects of the government in the improvement of the federal capital area, has arisen because of the use of the terms "federal district" and "federal district commission."

I do not think the people of Canada are in favour of creating a federal district to be run by a commission with the probable loss of local autonomy. I do not think the people of Canada want to have established a federal area similar to that in Washington, run by commission government. I do not think it makes for harmony or the welfare of the community or of the project itself, when we bear in mind that we are taking in portions of two provinces with different municipalities, two provinces with different types of law, different laws governing real property, different educational desires, different municipal management and all the rest of it. Under these circumstances I do not think there should be any doubt about our intentions. There should be no loss to the community or to the province of local autonomy.

The commission that has been appointed has acted well as an advisory coordinating committee rather than as a legislative and enacting body. I feel therefore that the word "area" should be substituted for that of "district", and the word "committee" for that of "commission". The minister who is piloting the bill might consider adopting this suggestion, which would assist greatly in furthering the objects we have in view. I think we should change the name from "federal district commission" to "federal area committee". If such a change were made the people of Canada generally and in the area locally would look much more favourably upon this undertaking, and from a more realistic point of view. I am pleased to notice that the minister himself, whether intentionally or accidentally, used the words "federal area" three times in his speech this morning. Other speakers yesterday and to-day have done the same. It would be a great improvement and would make for better advertising and understanding if the change were made.

As a means of bringing the suggestion before the house for discussion—I will not insist on the exact wording—I propose at the appropriate time to introduce an amendment to that effect.

Some discussion has arisen to-day in regard to Confederation square. I do not think any of us wish to attribute blame to anyone in particular for the location of Confederation square, but we all realize that, beautiful in itself, it is a very great handicap to the community in that it accentuates traffic congestion and adds to the difficulty in going and coming from Rideau street to Sparks street, from Elgin street and so on. Every day in the city of Ottawa trouble is caused by this bottleneck, and the difficulty is increased by the present location of Confederation square.

Mr. REID: Is it not a fact that the city council has given little cooperation in the diversion, or proper handling, of traffic?

Mr. BOUCHER: My hon. friend asked a fit and proper question, because just yesterday, in behalf of the residents of my own riding, I sought permission to get a bus coming from the suburban area west of the city to Confederation square, to serve the shoppers, the workers and the people from the west end. I was told that because of the bottleneck on Confederation square a bus service to serve the west end of the city could not be permitted there; they could not be served. In further answer to my hon. friend I would say that Ottawa never sought to have Confederation square as it is. They have always sought and continue to seek to have that congested area improved, but their hands are tied. The difficulty is there. I believe that they have done their best to try to re-route traffic, to try to manage traffic, to try to arrange traffic to create as little congestion as possible. They have gone so far as to place extra policemen in the area in busy hours to guide the traffic. I do not know what else can be done, except to put in a new thoroughfare to take some of the traffic from that bottleneck. Until that is done the authorities of Ottawa are helpless to mitigate in any way the conglomerated traffic conditions on Confederation square. I do not know what can be done other than a new route which will take traffic elsewhere.

Now that parliament is considering the grant of $3 million, one of the most necessary, must urgent and most useful ways of spending some portion of that money is to relieve conditions in that area. The minister has said that the committee on railways and the committee on planning must each await the returns of the greater federal area general scheme. I agree with that in part, but only in a very small part. The general scheme is one of long development. It has been worked on in one form or another for fifteen or twenty years. The report of no committee has ever been accepted by parliament, not even the report made by the Holt committee. Mr. Greber has now been working on it for approximately a year. Coordinating committees are working on it. Surely the time has long since past when for the sake not only of the city of Ottawa but of everybody who comes to this city and who must pass that area, something should be done about it. I believe I would be doing my duty, not as a citizen of Ottawa but as a citizen of Canada, to urge upon the government the imminent necessity of relieving the situation which prevails there. I have had experience in Ottawa with respect to the building of houses, factories, warehouses and all that kind of thing. Buildings of that type are being held up in so far as planning is concerned until a master plan is produced. Ottawa does not wish to complain about it. We are very glad to wait, but I say in a kindly way that the quicker we can get a guide to the development of the city and the relief of traffic and the establishment of industrial areas and some insight as to when, where and how the railway situation can be improved, the quicker it will be for the development not only of Ottawa but of the federal area.

The highway situation throughout both sections of Ottawa, east and west, is not a happy one. It is not as bad as Confederation square, but if you go through the westerly section of the city you will come to a junction of two or three railways, and you find traffic areas seriously congested. Development of improvements in directing the railways and the directing of traffic in the congested areas all await the master plan. May I therefore, expressing my own opinion, and probably asking the members of the committee to direct their thoughts to it, move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo:

That the Federal District Commission Act, 1927, and this bill, be amended so as to have the words "district commission" wherever they appear in the said act or bill be substituted for the words "area committee."

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the minister a question, but before doing that I should like to appear as a dissenter. I think there has been far too much said against Confederation square. I think anybody who goes about his business in an orderly and regular manner can navigate traffic there without any difficulty. Too much talk has been had about the congestion of traffic there. If you go and look at the traffic in other cities you will find that there is no congestion on Confederation square at all. I realize I am merely a dissenter, and on that subject will suffer the fate of all dissenters.

May I ask the minister a question? I do not wish to appear like the proverbial puppy with a rag, but I come back to the war memorial aspect of this bill, for this reason. I find in the explanatory notes that it is still stated that this is for the development of a national war memorial. I want to ask this question, purely as a matter of construction of bills. Before doing that I want to remind the minister that last September in the speech from the throne it was definitely stated that this planning was for a national war memorial. In fact the minister himself reiterated that last Tuesday, I think it was, and here we have it in the explanatory notes. May I take it from what he said this morning that this bill can be read without carrying this explanatory note. May I take it that what we are now discussing is a matter of government policy, and which is stated to be merely the extension of the activity which the federal district area or commission was set up to engage in and has been actually engaging in these many years.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes. There has been far too much importance attached to the use of words. Some seem to have forgotten that a rose would smell the same whatever you called it. All that parliament is being asked to adopt are the provisions on the left-hand pages of the document which is before the committee. There are some who may regard this as a tribute to the effort of Canada during the war which has speeded up this development; but all that is being asked for are the provisions which are set out to become part of the statute, and the explanations, can be accepted or rejected without in any way affecting the purport of the legislation parliament is asked to enact.

I know that the Prime Minister personally feels that the development as rapidly as possible of the national capital might be such a fitting memorial that there might not have to be other forms of memorials, but it is quite evident that that is not by any means a unanimous view. What is asked for here is something that would and should be asked for even had there been no war at all, and it will have to be done whether or not there are other forms of memorials provided as tributes to the gallant men who served the state in the armed forces during the war.

With respect to the amendment proposed by the hon. member, I would ask him if he would not withdraw it at this time. This is a matter in which a great many people are interested. The name "federal district commission" is the name under which the property is now held. To change it would involve rewriting another bill to carry out the idea which prompts this amendment, and I would ask the hon. member if he would not withdraw it at this time. It has been placed before the house and the country. I can assure the hon. gentleman that it will be given consideration, but I do not know enough about the affairs of this commission to feel at all comfortable about taking the responsibility of accepting or definitely turning down this suggestion.

This is a long range matter. The name "federal district commission" has been used since 1927, I think. The fact that in the United States there is under the control of the government of that nation a district known as a federal district may have indisposed some toward the aims of this commission. As a matter of fact there is nothing and there never has been, in the statute or in the attitude of the commission, constituting any threat to the local autonomy of the two bodies governing on the two sides of the river here. I think the hon. member will agree with that. There is nothing and never has been anything in the statute or in the attitude of the members of the commission that implied the slightest threat to the autonomy of the municipal corporations, and I do not think there has been at any time anything done by the commission or any member of it that would make the municipal authorities feel their prerogatives were being trespassed upon; and I am sure that is the present mentality of the commission. It may be that it would be desirable to avoid any suggestion of a possible menace resulting from the similarity of this name with that of the United States commission, but I would be much obliged to my hon. friend if he would just allow the matter to stand as something to be considered at another time, and not insist that a decision be made concerning it at this moment.

Mr. BOUCHER: I shall be very pleased to withdraw my motion at the suggestion of the minister, because I believe what he has said is quite correct. But I think this has illustrated the difficulties we have had and those which have been experienced by the federal district commission, and no doubt he has been impressed by the necessity of some change in that regard. I think it would be very improper to press my motion at this time, but I do urge the minister to take into consideration some means to alleviate the fears which do prevail in regard to the creation of a district governed by a commission, instead of an area coordinated by it.

Mr. SHAW: My colleagues and I have had very little to say during this debate, but just in case our silence may be misunderstood I should like to make it quite clear that we approve the bill at present before the committee. We feel, however, that on this particular occasion it should not require hours of debate to indicate approval, or hours of debate to indicate disapproval. My personal view is that Canada, as a great nation, should have the finest capital possible. Let me repeat what I said at the outset, that we approve this bill.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Chairman, I am gratified at the tendency of hon. members not to try to isolate this area from other parts of Canada, or to regard it as something separate from the general interest; because after all Ottawa is the capital of our great land. I think it only natural that we should take pride in having a capital which will be a credit to the country generally, and I believe that is the feeling of the committee, regardless of the details which may sometimes divide us in connection with its beautification.

I suppose the idea of associating this beautification scheme with a national war memorial arose from a movement which has made considerable headway in Canada in the period following World War II, as a result of which in various municipalities and counties throughout Canada something perhaps more material in the way of war memorials is being proposed. In many places community centres seem to have gained great favour. I express no opinion concerning the matter, other than to suggest that we should not go too far in either direction. I believe there is a course which will appeal to most Canadians; and if I may express a personal thought in connection with a national war memorial, I should hope that what is set out in the explanatory note of this bill will not prevent further consideration of the whole matter of a national war memorial on some other basis if in the days to come that should be considered the proper thing to do. Our boys have just come back. I do not suppose they have had much opportunity to give consideration to what they believe is the right kind of memorial to their pals and comrades who lost their lives in this war. So I would hope the acceptance of this bill would not preclude the creation in Canada of a national war memorial which would conform to the opinion of those whose views I think are much more important than those of any of us in this chamber, except those sitting here who served in the armed forces; that is, the views of the people who fought the battle that we might have a war memorial in this country.

Before I sit down I want to say this one thing further. There are more than material considerations in the matter of a war memorial. There is the sentimental consideration. Every visitor to these buildings, whether he be a civilian or an ex-serviceman, goes away more impressed by the dignified reverence of our memorial chamber than with any other single thing in Ottawa. I think that must be kept in mind in considering a national war memorial; and I only suggest that we be assured by the government that adoption of this legislation will not preclude a free, open and proper discussion and final decision at some future day in regard to a national war memorial for this last war. Of all the many things I saw a few months ago, when I had the privilege of going overseas, I think especially of the great Scottish national war memorial at Edinburgh.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The finest in the world.

Mr. GRAYDON: I agree entirely with my hon. friend, who has perhaps had a much greater opportunity of assessing it than I had; but it was the finest I had ever seen.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And ours is the second finest in the world.

Mr. GRAYDON: That may be so, though in connection with war memorials it is hardly a question of competition. Actually our own war memorial, for its size and type, does not have to take second place. But I will say this—

Mr. MACKENZIE: I was speaking about the war memorial chamber, not about the monument. I am not in favour of the monument.

Mr. GRAYDON: We understand each other on that. But I think for reverence and for dignity, that great shrine at the top of Castle Rock in Edinburgh, overlooking from its prominence that great city of culture, that great centre of so many good things the world has to offer, stands supreme.

While overseas I wrote the weekly newspaper in my area certain paragraphs, one of which I should like to place on record, because it states clearly what my thoughts were as I left that great war memorial. This is what I wrote:

> The people of cultured, quiet Edinburgh point with deep pride and reverence to the Scottish national war memorial, built after the last war on the prominent Castle Rock which overlooks from its dizzy prominence the whole city. There in an indescribably beautiful and appropriate setting are to be found the names of the men and women of Scotland who laid down their lives in world war No. 1. Above a bronze plaque on one of its many walls of stone are these words: In honour of all Scotswomen who amid the stress of war sought by their labour, sympathy and prayers to obtain for their country the blessings of peace.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Federal district commission.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to move an amendment to this section. I am not sure who will second it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The leader of the opposition.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am going to leave that up to the house. I hope there will be very little difficulty in getting a seconder. I move, in amendment:

That section 3 (1) be amended to read as follows: "Of the members appointed by the governor in council, one shall be ordinarily a resident in each of the nine provinces."

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have no objection to the object behind the amendment, but I am not sure that it will accomplish what we wish to have done.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Well, put it into good phraseology.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the hon. member would allow his amendment to be substituted by the following, perhaps its would be satisfactory. The suggested amendment is as follows:

That section 3 in clause 2 of bill 357 be amended—

(1) By the deletion of the word "fifteen" in paragraph (1) and the substitution of the word "nineteen" therefor;

(2) By the deletion of the word "thirteen" in paragraph (2) and the substitution of the word "seventeen" therefor;

(3) By the deletion of all the words in paragraph (5) after the word "in" in line two and the substitution of the words "each of the nine provinces of Canada" therefor.

This would do what the hon. member wishes to have done, and would bring the other subsections into line with the specific amendment.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Mr. Chairman, with your permission, and through the kindness of the Acting Prime Minister, I should like to move that one instead. My people in the Fraser Valley will be delighted at my legal knowledge.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask one or two questions. First of all, is the hon. member for Fraser Valley sure that the amendment suggested by the Minister of Justice is to the same effect as the one he moved? I would ask the minister also whether there is anything in the section which would preclude the appointment of members of parliament to the commission. It seems to me the hon. member for Fraser Valley would agree that it would be more suitable to have members of parliament, who, after all, are presumably as intelligent and patriotic as any other persons, and who are here in Ottawa part of the year and could serve.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That very question occurred to me this morning. I asked the Deputy Minister of Justice if there would be anything in the Independence of Parliament Act which would prevent it. Thus far he did not seem to think there would be any obstacle, and it may be convenient to have that done. It has not been done in the past, and I do not think it would be the desire of parliament that the commission be made up entirely of parliamentarians. The question whether or not there would be any obstacle in the Independence of Parliament Act is one I have asked the deputy minister to consider. If there did happen to be something there, it might be proper at another session to bring in an amendment to that act to say that nothing in it would prevent a member of parliament from serving without remuneration on this district commission.

Mr. HAZEN: Does the minister think the words "of the nine" are necessary? Are they not superfluous? Would it not be sufficient to say "in each province of Canada"? We may have ten provinces before long.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: We shall have to do some amending to get another province and at that time we could also make an amendment along that line.

Mr. HAZEN: "Ordinarily resident in each province of Canada" would cover it. How often do the members of this commission meet? How often did they meet in the past?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: In the past there has been ordinarily one meeting a month.

Mr. HAZEN: What are they paid?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There is no remuneration; they serve without remuneration.

Mr. HAZEN: Should it not be stated in this measure that they shall serve without remuneration?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It is stated.

Mr. BRACKEN: Before calling it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman, may I compliment the hon. member for New Westminster upon the expedition with which—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Oh, Fraser Valley —not New Westminster.

Mr. BRACKEN: I meant it as a compliment to the hon. member. But since he has changed his mind as to the number of commissioners I do not know that I can follow him as I would have done before he changed it. I may say that whenever he is right I am glad to follow him. But that occurs so frequently—so infrequently, I should say—

An hon. MEMBER: Make up your mind.

Mr. BRACKEN: The hon. member has agreed to change his amendment to one which will increase the number of members on the commission from fifteen to nineteen. I shall read the amendment I had proposed, in order that hon. members may consider it. This amendment would not have increased the number from fifteen to nineteen. It would read as follows:

That clause 3, section 2, be amended by striking out the word "thirteen" in the first line thereof and substituting therefor "four";

That clause 2 subsection 5 be amended to read as follows:

"One member shall be appointed by the governor in council for each of the provinces of Canada to hold office during pleasure for such period not exceeding five years as the governor in council may decide."

The only difference in substance between this amendment and the one already suggested is that this would provide for fifteen members as already planned, instead of nineteen as now proposed. I present that suggestion for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That possibility had been discussed. But there are already on the commission nine gentlemen who have served with devotion and distinction. This would have required eliminating some of them, and it was felt it would be ungracious and a poor recognition of the devoted service they have already given if any of them were asked to retire before the expiration of their term of office.

Mr. BRACKEN: And therefore we have to go to the expense of paying nineteen instead of fifteen.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They serve without remuneration.

Mr. BRACKEN: Oh well; they do not serve without cost to the state. They serve without personal reward, but there are all the expenses which must be considered.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Before we call it one o'clock may I point out that section 2 was not carried? I believe it was the wish of the committee that that section be carried. We now have an amendment to section 3.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): We are on section 2.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): It is clause 3 that hon. members are speaking to.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Section 3 of the original act, but clause 2 of the bill.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Bracken.]

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): When the committee rose at one o'clock there was an amendment before the chair moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, and later we had an amendment moved by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Chairman, I offered that only as a suggestion for the consideration of the committee.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Perhaps I had better read what the suggestion of the leader of the opposition was. It was as follows:

That clause 3, section 2, be amended by striking out the word "thirteen" in the first line thereof and substituting therefor "four";

That clause 2, subsection 5, be amended to read as follows:

"One member shall be appointed by the governor in council for each of the provinces of Canada to hold office during pleasure for such period not exceeding five years."

Is there any further discussion before I put the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, which reads:

(1) That clause 3 be amended by the deletion of the word "fifteen" in paragraph (1) and the substitution of the word "nineteen" therefor;

(2) By the deletion of the word "thirteen" in paragraph (2) and the substitution of the word "seventeen" therefor;

(3) By the deletion of all the words in paragraph (5) after the word "in" in line two and the substitution of the words "each of the nine provinces of Canada" therefor.

Mr. BRACKEN: The effect of the amendment is to increase the total number of members of the commission from fifteen to nineteen so as to make it possible to have a representative from each province. The effect of my suggestion would be to make it possible to have a representative from each province on the commission without increasing its numbers. The minister has indicated that he prefers the larger number because certain members now on the commission have given good service and out of respect to them he does not wish to dispense with their services. I think I shall have to say that I do not favour the policy of still further increasing the membership of the commission. We have commissions all over this country doing much bigger jobs than this with a much smaller membership than nineteen. I can respect the minister's reason for agreeing to the larger number, but it does not appeal to me as a business proposition.

Mr. REID: Various small matters of routine will have to be attended to by the commission, and if you do not increase the number to nineteen it will mean that only a very small group of men will be dealing with these routine matters, because you could hardly call the representatives of the nine provinces together to deal with matters of detail. I can see a great deal of merit in having enough members to carry on the ordinary work of the commission, and when any larger matter of policy has to be discussed the representatives of all the provinces could be called together.

Mr. BURTON: I am not a stickler as to just how the purpose should be accomplished, and if the minister thinks that the suggestion of the hon. member for Fraser Valley would answer the purpose I would be agreeable, but I was of the opinion that fifteen members on the commission would be sufficient. The leader of the opposition has indicated his suggestion as a possible amendment. I have also prepared a suggestion to amend clause 5 of this section by striking out the words "either" and "or" where they appear in the third, fourth and fifth lines of the clause; and that the clause be further amended by inserting the words "one in" immediately preceding the names of each of the following provinces: Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I think that would cover what we have in mind. It would give to each province a representative on the commission and leave the membership on the commission at fifteen, which in my opinion would be sufficient for the time being.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The reason I gave this morning against this suggestion was that there are already nine commissioners in office who have performed valuable service. The next section of the bill provides that they shall remain as part of the number to constitute the enlarged commission. It would be embarrassing to ask any of these gentlemen to retire before the expiry of his term of office. In view of the desire expressed that there be a member chosen especially to represent the whole people of each province it was felt that the easier way would be to provide them as additions to the commission rather than to ask the members of the commission who have been giving good service and who are entitled to the gratitude of the community for the services they have given to retire before the time fixed in the following section.

Mr. BRACKEN: What are the names of the members of the commission?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They are: Frederic E. Bronson, Chairman; Dr. R. Chevrier; J. W. Ste. Marie; C. J. Booth; J. B. Spencer; J. A. Ewart; D. K. MacTavish; A. J. Major; Mayor Stanley Lewis; and there is one vacancy, which is to be filled by an appointee of the municipal council of the city of Hull. Of course, technically the desire which has been expressed could be satisfied if we had no one representing the provinces as a whole of Ontario and Quebec in addition to those representing the cities of Ottawa and Hull, but that would not be carrying out the spirit of the proposals. The spirit of the proposal is to have one from each province not representing the immediate locality but the people of the province as a whole. It would not be carrying out that idea to have the whole population of Ontario represented by the Mayor of Ottawa, or to have the whole population of Quebec represented by the mayor or a designate of the council of the city of Hull. So it seemed that the spirit moving hon. members' request that there be a representative of the whole population of each province would be better met by increasing the number of those who make up the commission than by asking any of the gentlemen who have heretofore served to retire and make way for someone else.

Mr. BRACKEN: I have a suggestion, if the minister would be prepared to consider it, which would perhaps accomplish both his own purpose and what I think would be the desire of the house. As the terms of the present members expire they could be replaced with representatives of provinces not then represented on the commission. I offer that as a suggestion to the minister.

Mr. BOUCHER: May I point out to the minister another thing that might be taken into consideration in the appointment of these men. Ottawa is allowed one member, and Hull, with a population of about 33,000, is allowed one member, but the suburban areas surrounding Ottawa, which have a population perhaps greater than Hull and which bear a substantial relation to the population of Ottawa, are not represented. As I said last night, I think Carleton county is a most important part of the federal area. In choosing these men we have to choose them from the national rather than the local viewpoint, yet we should choose men who will be primarily concerned with the problem facing the government.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Give us the nineteen members and we will be able to do that.

Mr. BOUCHER: The members of the present federal district commission have been conversant with the problems here and they have done an excellent job. The members of this commission should be familiar with the local problems, the layout of the land and so on, so that they will be able to plan first things first and not always be up in the air with some future plan; they should develop the area economically as well as aesthetically.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to say a word about the last paragraph of this new section, which provides that—

The governor in council may from time to time designate an area within and in the district surrounding the city of Ottawa to be known as the national capital district.

Why is that "governor in council," and why is there no reference to the commission?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The commission makes the recommendations and they are made effective by an order in council. That is what was done in connection with the present federal district. The federal district commission passed the following as its by-law No. 27.

Pursuant to the provisions of the Federal District Commission Act under which the federal district commission may cooperate with any municipality, or interested persons or any other body, within the district of the national capital, which is more particularly described in section (3) hereof and shown in outline on the attached plan, for planning, development, improvement and beautification in the aforesaid area, be it enacted as by-law No. 27 of the federal district commission.

The first paragraph deals with the appointment of committee or committees; the second provides that the chairman of the commission shall be ex officio a member of any committee, and the third paragraph provides that for the purposes of this by-law the district of the national capital shall be defined as follows, and then follows the technical description. That was passed on April 13, 1945; it was submitted to the governor in council and made effective by order in council P.C. 5634, of August 16, 1945.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I still do not see where it is not left open to have that change, unless there is something else in the statute. I have only before me that paragraph of the new section 3. Why would it not be proper to have in there, "and the governor in council may on the recommendation of the commission from time to time designate"? Even following the by-law as read by the minister, and even though it were adopted by order in council, it would not be as effective as if it were introduced into the statute.

[Mr. Boucher.]

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If hon. members fear that the governor in council will make the description of the federal district different from that found satisfactory by the federal district commission, the members of which will have been appointed by the governor in council, then the language suggested by the hon. member would be appropriate, but I do not think it is necessary. The cooperation that has existed between the commission and the governor in council has always been such that it is unnecessary, but if hon. members are fearful that there may be a clash between the governor in council and the commission, the language suggested would make the requirement of a recommendation of the commission a prerequisite.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to seem to be niggling or technical, but I know there is a feeling in certain quarters that the commission has not had as much to do with certain things as might have been intended, and if the minister would consent to the introduction of these words I should be glad to see them in.

Mr. IRVINE: It would seem to me that it would be only right and proper that the governor in council should have some say in a project in which the whole Dominion of Canada is interested and on which it is intended to spend money. If I understood the hon. gentleman to my right correctly, he wants to give a greater power to the commission and less to the governor in council; is that right?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to be sure the commission has a say, that is all. I understood the minister to say that these words could go in if they were desired, and I should like to know just how far he is willing to go.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the majority of the committee feel that the qualification suggested should be there, I shall raise no objection, but I do not think it is necessary.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Commission to coordinate work in district.

Mr. BOUCHER: This section provides:

(6) In any case where the commission does not give its approval under this section the governor in council may give such approval.

As the minister has stated, I do not think it is probable that the commission will be recommending one thing or opposing one thing and then the privy council take the opposite stand, but I believe in the past there have been occasions on which buildings have been erected in inopportune locations near the federal district driveway and which were not approved of by the commission. It is possible that some of those buildings were erected by the government as well as by private individuals and they have interfered with the proper zoning and the proper intentions of the commission so far as the driveway is concerned. In the case of the dominion government deciding to build a building in a certain location and not being able to get the approval of the federal district commission, this section would give the governor in council the power to pay no attention, as it were, to the federal district commission. But I think this section goes even farther, it gives the governor in council the right to overrule any power which may be given to the federal district commission by section 4, which will be the new section 6A. I think it is desirous that there be a limit upon the power of the governor in council to disregard the commission's findings. Has the minister any particular reason for wanting that there? If the governor in council does overrule the federal district commission, it should be in direct and specific terms rather than by implication or necessity, as it might be here.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the hon. member reads the section he will find that the bill has not purported to take away from the municipal authorities their rights with respect to zoning and has not proposed to substitute the authority of the federal district commission for the rights of the local autonomous bodies; and until something has been worked out with them, and to which they will have agreed, it would probably be looked upon as an undue interference with their autonomous powers. This section 6A provides in subsection 1 that the commission shall coordinate construction and development work in the national capital district in accordance with general plans approved from time to time under the act. That is the general principle, and to carry out that principle the following provisions are made:

(2) Proposals for the location, erection, alteration or extension of a building or other work by or on behalf of the government of Canada or by any person on lands owned, leased or otherwise controlled by the government of Canada in the national capital district shall be referred to the commission prior to the commencement of the work.

(3) No building or other work shall be erected, altered or extended by or on behalf of the government of Canada in the national capital district unless the site, location and plans thereof have first been approved by the commission.

(4) No person shall erect, alter or extend a building or other work on land in the national capital district owned, leased or otherwise controlled by the government of Canada unless the site, location and plans thereof have first been approved by the commission.

(5) Every person who contravenes or fails to comply with subsection four of this section is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars.

So it is only the activities of the government of Canada, or the placing of buildings on land owned or controlled by the government of Canada, that come, under this section and has to be submitted to the federal district commission for approval. It is only in such cases that section 6A applies. It would seem that the matter has to go before the federal commission before the government can act. The federal commission has full opportunity to investigate it and to make its recommendations. If these recommendations are such that the governor in council feels they should not be complied with, it does not seem unreasonable that he should overrule. But it is only the activities of the government of Canada or the activities carried on on land controlled by the government that are dealt with in these provisions.

Mr. BOUCHER: My main concern about this section arose out of the proposal that was dealt with by the committee that sat about a year or a year and a half ago to deal with federal district commission matters. At that time it was brought to our attention—I forget the details—that the dominion government had erected a building, unwittingly I believe, that did interfere with the federal district commission's scheme, I felt that if we are to set up a federal district commission to deal with federal district land it would not seem necessary for the government to have an overriding power, except to a limited degree, and by specific enactment rather than by implication.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not think this means merely implication. In any case where the commission does not give its approval under this section, the governor in council may give such approval. It is something that is normally within the control of the government. All agencies of the government will have to go to the commission. If the commission feels that something should not be done and the government agency feels it is a proper thing to do, the government can overrule the commission in that respect. That I believe is a provision that will avoid any unwitting interference with the plans of the commission. No government agency, after this is adopted, will be able to go ahead within the federal district without communicating its plans to the commission and trying to secure its approval.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

On section 7—$3,000,000 for purposes of commission.

Mr. BURTON: Will the minister explain this section a little more fully? To me it is ambiguous. Does it apply to the purchasing of property alone? Is the $3,000,000 the aggregate that can be spent in any one year, or is it the aggregate sum that can be spent under this clause for the period of fifteen years mentioned previously?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: As far as the appropriation is concerned it is $3,000,000, and there is no more either within or outside the fifteen years, unless and until parliament makes another appropriation for capital purposes. Until then this is all that is available. There is no determination as to when it can be spent, but after it has been spent it will have been exhausted.

Mr. BURTON: In other words, the income of the commission will be the $300,000 per annum provided for under this act plus the $3,000,000 to be spent for the entire period of fifteen years unless parliament votes more at some future time.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes, not only for fifteen years, but for all time. They get an annual income, plus, once for all, $3,000,000 until parliament votes something more.

Mr. BURTON: It is provided here that money may be obtained from unappropriated sums in the consolidated revenue fund or by some other means. Is it the intention that the commission may issue debentures in order to obtain a certain amount of money?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes. That was done at one time and the bonds were redeemed, and though it remains in this form I believe the commission is apt to say to the Minister of Finance that it would much prefer to have the grant of $3,000,000, or such portion of the $3,000,000 as it might require for proper capital investment, rather than issue bonds for it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: How much of the $3,000,000 has been used?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: In 1928 $3,000,000 was provided and was used. This is another $3,000,000.

Sections 8 to 10 inclusive agreed to.

On section 15—Annual statement.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. HERRIDGE: This section provides that the commission shall send to the president of His Majesty's privy council for Canada on or before the first day of September in each year a detailed statement of all its receipts and expenditures up to the last day of March in such year and copies of such statements shall be laid before parliament within the first fourteen days of the next following session thereof. This type of accounting is not very convenient if members of parliament wish to follow the public accounts in order to see that the public is getting value for its money. When you build a railway you know that it costs so much per mile. When you put up a building you can ascertain how much per unit of measurement you will pay for that type of construction. When you come to developments of this type it is difficult for members of the house, or anyone else, from a simple statement of receipts and expenditures, to know whether the public is getting value for its money. Has the commission been in the habit of keeping a working projects cost accounting system so that the various activities of the commission and the expenditures on certain aspects of their work are segregated and analysed and hon. members or any other person interested may determine what certain projects cost or certain parts cost, and so on?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the hon. member will look at the form of the federal district commission reports which have been issued in the past I think he will find that they are made up in a clear-cut manner, and supply all the information the hon. member has in mind. The act also provides that all expenditures are subject to the audit of the auditor general in the same manner as other public moneys; and having to keep their accounts so that they may be audited in the same manner as the accounts which are kept for all public moneys, the commission prepares and issues a comprehensive and clear-cut report which indicates what the various projects have cost. The one I hold in my hand is for the year 1942-43. It shows in detail the amount expended on each project. It consists of a whole page of headings. If the hon. member gets these reports I think he will find in them all the information which can be of assistance in coming to a conclusion when further votes are required.

Bill reported.

Mr. SPEAKER: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. MACKENZIE: With the permission of the house, now.

Mr. ST. LAURENT moved that the bill be now read the third time.

Mr. BRACKEN: I wish to move an amendment. I shall not ask that the time be taken for a recorded vote on it, but I do wish to express my objection to appointing nineteen members instead of fifteen on this commission. I do not ask for a recorded vote, but I wish to put this party on record as being opposed to that section of the bill. Therefore I move:

That Bill No. 357 be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the committee with instructions to provide for the representation of each of the provinces of Canada without increasing the number of commissioners from fifteen to nineteen.

I wish only to add, Mr. Speaker, that that can be accomplished without showing any discourtesy to the present members, by providing that when their time is up the provinces not now represented shall become represented.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The amendment is lost on division. I understand the hon. gentleman does not wish to press the amendment.

Mr. BRACKEN: I do want to press the amendment, but I do not ask that time be lost in having a recorded vote.

Amendment negatived on division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REMOVAL OF RESTRICTION ON CARRYING CAMERAS BY VISITORS TO PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

Mr. SPEAKER: I am pleased to inform the hon. member for Peel that tourists are no longer obliged to check their cameras at the entrance of the House of Commons before making a visit of the building. As in the past, they will be allowed to keep their cameras inside the building, under the same regulations as were in force prior to the war.

CANADIAN FORCES

REINSTATEMENT IN CIVIL EMPLOYMENT ACT, 1942 —REGULATIONS GIVEN STATUTORY EFFECT

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of bill No. 307, to provide for the reinstatement in civil employment of discharged members of His Majesty's forces and other designated classes of persons.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. GREEN: Is the minister not going to explain?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not think much explanation is necessary.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have put the question to the house.

Mr. GREEN: We are all trying to cooperate in getting the business of the house finished, but it does not help to rush these things through in that way. The minister was half way up to make a statement while Your Honour was calling the second reading. I suggest that he be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The question must be formally put to the house before the minister is able to say a word about it.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would not have any objection, but the hon. member will understand that I put the motion and nobody rose; therefore, I said "carried." I put the motion that the house go into committee. The minister will have an opportunity to make his statement when the house is in committee.

The house went into committee on the bill, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—Short title.

Mr. GREEN: I should like to have a statement from the minister now.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): This bill is based on a number of orders in council. Originally the bill was introduced in 1942. It was operated with a number of orders in council providing for regulations, as I explained when the bill was up previously. Then on the advice of the law officers of the crown, in view of the possible expiration of the National Emergency Powers Act, the orders in council were embodied in a bill to which some hon. members took objection; and I may say privately I objected myself.

Mr. GREEN: But you did not say so that night.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, and you would not have said so had you been over here.

Mr. GREEN: Quite right.

Mr. GRAYDON: There are some things you just do not do.

Mr. MITCHELL: Of course. With the consent of the house I suggested that the matter be referred to the committee on veterans affairs, which has consolidated the orders in council and the original bill into the measure now before the committee. I do not know that I need say anything more, except that the regulations, both under the order in council and the original bill, have worked admirably. There is no fundamental change brought about by the consolidation of the orders in council and the bill. As I have said, the bill has been scrutinized by the committee on veterans affairs; and as a member of that committee—though, as my colleague says, one of the "mobile reserves"—I think they did an excellent job. This house may rest assured that the veterans have received every protection in connection with this very important question. If in the course of the debate hon. members want to know the number of veterans who have come under this legislation, or who have been reinstated under it, or the organization that is in existence for its application and to see that the provisions of the act are followed, I shall be very glad to give the information. My own view is that the legislation has worked much better than even the most optimistic anticipated. We have had excellent cooperation as between the employers, the veterans' organizations, the Department of Veterans Affairs and my own department. Out of a total placement of some 175,000 it has been necessary to prosecute only two persons, which gives some indication of the degree of cooperation extended in connection with the problem of reinstating veterans into civil life, following the conclusion of the war.

Mr. GREEN: Is the bill in the identical terms of the recommendation of the veterans affairs committee?

Mr. MITCHELL: Absolutely; word for word.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 13 inclusive agreed to.

On section 14—Proceedings against employers.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Will the minister outline the procedure in taking action against employers who fail to comply with the regulations? Does the returning soldier have to take action against the company?

Mr. MITCHELL: No; we do it for him.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then in any case where he requires legal advice, what is the procedure?

Mr. MITCHELL: We take it if he complains to us, but he can take it himself if necessary. I said just now that of some 175,000 people who have been reinstated there have been only two prosecutions. If my hon. friend would like to know the names of the people who were prosecuted, I shall be glad to give them.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I was simply interested in the matter of procedure. Has the minister the number of cases in which returning veterans were not given their position?

Mr. MACKENZIE: We could not know, of course, unless they made specific complaints to us, either to the Department of Labour or to the Department of Veterans Affairs; but I think the record stated by the Minister of Labour is most excellent in every way.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Could the minister give us the number of complaints he has received?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I have received none.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What about the Minister of Labour?

Mr. MITCHELL: 4,277.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is that the number of complaints? That is rather large.

Mr. MITCHELL: No. I should say those are the cases pending. We have not had any complaints.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What I want to know is whether you have heard any complaints from veterans who want to return to their old employment and have not been able to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I am asking these questions because on several occasions certain men, I suppose they are firemen at the C.N.R. shops in Saskatoon, complained to me that when they went to return to their old employment they found themselves put on in the C.N.R. shops as firemen and were granted no promotions for the period of their absence in the armed forces. They find that men who stayed in the shops as firemen later had been acting as engineers, and apparently they were trying to get their cases adjusted through the union. I understood the union had taken their case up with the superintendent of the C.N.R., and the last I heard the matter was in abeyance. In the one instance of which I heard some eight or ten men were affected. Must these men have recourse to any other course of action in order to have their cases properly heard by a court, through the Department of Labour?

Mr. MITCHELL: The answer is no.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then this procedure did not apply to them?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes, it does. It is very simple. As you know, seniority on the railroad goes by divisions. You have seniority as firemen, seniority as wipers, seniority as maintenance men, seniority as maintenance trainmen, seniority as conductors and so on. They are in more or less watertight compartments. You get your seniority in the division or the compartment, in conformity with the agreement between the employers and the employees. Let me say to my hon. friend that I know something about the railroad organizations in this country, that is the engineers, the trainmen, the shopmen, the maintenance of way employees and so on; and I do not know of any organization that could do a better job for the protection of the veterans of this war than those organizations. They have a background of fifty years of experience.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I do not know whether the case has been finally settled. The last I heard it was being placed before the company for adjustment, and I understood the Department of Labour was assisting.

Mr. MITCHELL: Oh, absolutely.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has the case been settled, and if so what is the settlement?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not know the particular case to which my hon. friend is referring. Here we have had 175,000 people—

Mr. CASTLEDEN: You said there were only two complaints.

Mr. MITCHELL: Let me say this to my hon. friend, and I have made these observations previously. This is not the place to discuss cases; here we should discuss principles. If the hon. member will give me the names of the individuals I shall be glad to get the information for him, and he can rest assured that they will get justice.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to ask a question in regard to this whole matter of employers, in so far as the employer is the government of this country. I refer particularly to two branches, the penitentiary service and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. In the penitentiary service numbers of employees resigned for the purpose of enlisting for overseas service, and went overseas. During their absence their positions were filled by temporary employees. When these men return my information is that they are refused reemployment because they chose to serve in the armed forces of their country instead of remaining in their civil duties.

The other example I should bring to mention is that of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. This matter has been up on more than one occasion, and I take this opportunity to bring it to the attention of the minister. Men who were in the mounted police, instead of continuing in that organization, saw fit, because of the call which came to them, to go overseas. Some of them upon their return are being refused reemployment. In any event if they do secure reemployment they are penalized in various ways. Surely the government and the people of Canada should give a lead in the matter of showing consideration to those who served, and should comply with the law to an extent no less than is required by private employers.

Mr. MITCHELL: I shall be glad to bring this to the attention of the Minister of Justice, whose estimates are still to come before the committee. It will be noticed that this bill deals only with reinstatement in civil employment.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to ask a question respecting section 14, and in doing so would support what has been said by the hon. member for Lake Centre. My particular reference is to employees who are in the service of the House of Commons. Certain cases have come to our attention showing that, whereas it is true enough that those involved were reinstated or reemployed, the question has arisen whether they have been put back in the positions they would have occupied had they not joined the forces. In other words those who now have the employment appear to have a preference over the returned veterans. The particular case I have in mind has been adjusted by the man's leaving the service of the House of Commons and going to work somewhere else. Therefore I shall not deal with that case in detail. Other hon. members have mentioned to me the facts surrounding certain other cases. It would seem therefore that there have been times when the House of Commons has not complied with the intent of the measure. I should like to ask the minister to make sure that in respect of employees of the House of Commons particularly we should live up to the spirit of the measure and what was in the mind of the government and of hon. members when the order in council was passed from which this measure has come.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I say at once that I appreciate the remarks of the hon. members for Lake Centre and Kamloops. Might I point out that both the Minister of Labour and I happen to be old sweats, and anything in the world that can be done for the veterans will be done.

Mr. FULTON: I have just this observation to make: I am sure something will be done if it is brought to the minister's attention. But I realize he cannot know everything. Perhaps if occasionally he would take a look around and see what is going on, it might help.

Mr. MITCHELL: If my hon. friend has any cases, let us have them.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I appreciate what has been said by the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I am sure that the minister and hon. members on this side of the house who have raised the question desire that all their comrades should receive proper attention. But they are not receiving it; that is the point. They are not receiving it in the penitentiary service, and they are not receiving it in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Will my hon. friend permit me to interrupt? If the hon. member himself or the hon. member for Kamloops would bring to my attention any cases in which they think there has been injustice, I will follow them up.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. I would remind hon. members that penitentiaries employees and members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were considered when the estimates of the Minister of Justice were before the committee.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No; with the greatest of deference, they were not fully discussed. The point I make is that if we in parliament pass a measure requiring civilians to grant certain considerations to returning veterans who were formerly in civilian employment, the government ought to carry out those provisions with equal diligence.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Will the hon. member accept my assurance that we will definitely follow out the suggestion which he and the hon. member for Kamloops have made?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes.

On section 16—Powers of reinstatement officers.

Mr. GILLIS: I was in the industrial relations committee and could not be in the chamber when section 10 was discussed. With the permission of the committee I should like to say a few words on that section. What I have to say affects only Ontario. I am not quarreling with the measure, because it is clear and gives the administration and employers considerable latitude.

In Ontario there is a statutory limitation in respect of the provisions concerning vacations with pay. Under the provisions of the Ontario Hours of Work and Vacations with Pay Act the soldier who comes back is to be reinstated in his former employment. The arrangement respecting vacation with pay in this province is fixed by statute, and it states that all the employer can pay the soldier going on his vacation is two per cent of his earnings during the time he has been employed. A soldier coming back who has had only ninety days employment and receives vacation with pay would receive only two per cent of the amount he earned in ninety days. The result is that he goes on vacation with a very small amount of money. Many of them want to take only a day or two, but the vacation is mandatory. The result is that they are going on vacations without pay. This condition is peculiar only to Ontario.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Is that our fault?

Mr. GILLIS: No, it is not your fault; it is the fault of the Ontario legislature. This is the only province in which that limitation prevails respecting vacations with pay. If it were in Nova Scotia, and a man were to go on vacation who had worked only two or three weeks, he would get his full vacation with pay. There has been considerable correspondence back and forth. I have received many letters from veterans in Ontario asking if something cannot be done under the federal act, or some representations made by the federal to the provincial government in Ontario with a view to working out an arrangement such as they have in the other provinces.

Mr. MITCHELL: I shall be glad to make those representations.

IMMIGRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS FOR PURPOSES OF CONFORMITY WITH CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

Hon. J. A. GLEN (Minister of Mines and Resources) moved the second reading of bill No. 367, to amend the Immigration Act.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister make an explanation on the second reading.

Mr. GLEN: The reason for this bill is that under the Canadian Citizenship Act which is now in force certain provisions are made which conflict with the provisions of the Immigration Act, and these amendments are necessary to bring the Immigration Act into conformity with the Canadian Citizenship Act. There are no changes of major importance. There is a redrafting of certain provisions to make them clearer, and when we deal with the bill section by section hon. members will see exactly the changes that are made. There is also the elimination of one part of a clause made necessary by the passing of the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Golding in the chair.

On section 1—"Canadian citizen."

Mr. GLEN: This proposed amendment furnishes a new definition of the term "Canadian citizen" to conform with the Canadian Citizenship Act. Until the passing of the Canadian Citizenship Act, the only definition of a Canadian citizen in the statutes was that provided in section 2 of the Immigration Act. By paragraph (b) of this section a British subject who acquired domicile became a Canadian citizen, and such status was relinquished by loss of domicile. Further, a person naturalized also became a Canadian citizen but lost such status on relinquishing domicile. Under section 20 of the Canadian Citizenship Act, a Canadian citizen other than a natural-born Canadian citizen ceases to be a Canadian citizen if he resides outside of Canada for a period of at least six years, unless his certificate of citizenship or passport is endorsed by the officer in charge of a consulate that the person concerned has established that his absence from Canada is of a temporary nature, and that he intends to return to Canada for permanent residence. Since Canadian citizens are admissible to Canada as a matter of right, it is necessary to have the same definition of what constitutes a Canadian citizen in the two acts.

Mr. GREEN: What is the effect of this bill on the British subject who comes to Canada and does not become naturalized under the Canadian Citizenship Act? Under the Immigration Act as it now stands he would become domiciled here after five years for the purposes of the Immigration Act; but now with these amendments he will not do so unless he becomes a Canadian citizen. Is that not right? In other words, we are taking away some of the rights of a British subject from the other parts of the commonwealth.

Mr. GLEN: No; the position is just as it was, and he acquires domicile in the same manner as before. We are taking away no rights at all from a British subject.

Mr. GREEN: Does the British subject who comes here, let us say, from Australia not have to take out naturalization as a Canadian in order to acquire domicile in Canada under the Immigration Act as it is now proposed to be amended?

Mr. GLEN: No, he does not.

Mr. GREEN: How can he acquire domicile under the Immigration Act as it is to be amended?

Mr. GLEN: By five years' residence after legal landing in Canada he acquires domicile and becomes a Canadian citizen.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has that always been so?

Mr. GLEN: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Surely the minister is confused when he says that he can acquire domicile and yet not become a Canadian citizen. The procedure for becoming a Canadian citizen is a new procedure which has just been enacted this year in the Canadian Citizenship Act. The case I referred to was that of a British subject who comes here from Australia but does not take out naturalization under the Canadian Citizenship Act. You are now changing the Immigration Act so that that man cannot acquire domicile in Canada at any time unless he becomes naturalized.

Mr. GLEN: By five years' residence in Canada the British subject my hon. friend refers to will acquire domicile now, but does not become a Canadian citizen.

Mr. GREEN: Under what section?

Mr. GLEN: Under section 2(e) of the Immigration Act, which says:

> "domicile" means the place in which a person has his home or in which he resides, or to which he returns as his place of permanent abode, and does not mean the place where he resides for a mere special or temporary purpose.

That is the same definition exactly in the new act. Then paragraph (e)(i) provides:

> Canadian domicile can only be acquired, for the purposes of this act, by a person having his domicile for at least five years in Canada after having been landed therein within the meaning of this act.

So that the British subject to whom my hon. friend refers, being landed within the meaning of the act and residing here for five years, would acquire domicile.

Mr. GREEN: But the bill strikes out paragraph (e) and substitutes a new paragraph.

Mr. GLEN: Yes, we are changing that, and my hon. friend will find when we come to the new clause dealing with Canadian domicile that we have redrafted that long paragraph in order to put it in better form from a draftsman's point of view. We are repealing the present paragraph (e) but retaining the first portion dealing with Canadian domicile.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Rules re the acquisition and loss of domicile.

Mr. FULTON: With reference to 2A(a), is a person required to have Canadian domicile before he has the vote, or is the vote just a matter of residence?

Mr. GLEN: It is just a matter of residence for the period required under the elections act.

Section agreed to.

On section 6—Persons leaving Canada to assist enemy.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to know the purpose of section 6(3). I cannot understand why a person who during the war left Canada to fight for an enemy country or for the ally of an enemy country should now be allowed to enter Canada. What is the purpose of this amendment?

Mr. GLEN: The only purpose is to change the act with regard to a Canadian citizen. It prevented his reentry into Canada if he had gone to a foreign country and had fought with an alien enemy. This amendment refers not to Canadian citizens but to persons other than Canadian citizens. A Canadian citizen who has done as has been suggested is still a Canadian citizen and is always admissible to his own country when he comes back. However, when he does get back he will be subject to the penalties that are imposed upon him by the courts. The section reads:

> A person to whom subsection 3 of this section applies may be prosecuted for any offence of which he may be guilty and shall be liable to undergo any punishment imposed on him pursuant to the said prosecution before he is deported.

The reason is that the Canadian citizen who went abroad had no country if the former section still stood; a Canadian citizen always has the right of admission into this country but he would be subject to the laws for what he had done.

Mr. FULTON: It says, "except with the permission of the minister, no person other than a Canadian citizen" may come back. Is it the intention to give them permission to come back and then punish them?

Mr. GLEN: That is the intention, yes. Cognizance will be taken of the fact and the authority for these men to come back will be the permission of the minister.

Mr. GREEN: Let us get down to cases with regard to this section. Take a Japanese born in Canada who went to the orient and fought in the Japanese army—

Mr. MACKENZIE: He would not be allowed in British Columbia, I can tell you that.

Mr. GREEN: The Minister of Veterans Affairs might not want him in British Columbia, but we are amending the Immigration Act so that he can come back.

Mr. FULTON: If the minister gives him permission.

Mr. GREEN: Canadian citizens are excluded from this section. According to the explanatory note, the section previously read:

> No resident of Canada, whether he is a Canadian citizen or not . . .

Such a man who goes abroad and fights against us has no right to come back. We are now opening the door deliberately by amending this section, allowing the man born in Canada who went and fought against us to come back to Canada. It is contended that we would then have the right to punish him, but we do not want him back at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Shoot him.

Mr. GREEN: He should not be allowed back at all, and I cannot understand why the Immigration Act should be opened up in that way.

Mr. GLEN: There is a power of revocation under section 21 whereby the governor in council may order that any person other than a natural-born Canadian citizen shall cease to be a Canadian citizen if, upon report from the minister, he is satisfied that such a person has fought on the enemy side. There is that power of revocation in the minister. The only change that is made here is that the Canadian citizen who has always the right to return to his own country may come back to this country, but that matter would have to be brought before the minister to inquire into and, I presume, take whatever steps were necessary in the circumstances. Meantime, under section 21 of the Canadian Citizenship Act there is the power of revocation.

Mr. GREEN: I do not think there is that power in the minister with regard to a person born in Canada. I would urge upon the Minister of Veterans Affairs that he give careful consideration to this section.

Mr. MACKENZIE: As to the man mentioned by my hon. friend, would he not be a Japanese national?

Mr. GREEN: As my hon. friend knows, many of these Japanese are both Japanese and Canadian. Here is a Japanese born in British Columbia who goes back to Japan and fights with the Japanese army. After the war is over, he cannot get back the way our Immigration Act reads because he has fought against us. But we are being asked deliberately to change the Immigration Act so that he can come back because he was born in Canada. That is not right.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I agree entirely with my hon. friend.

Mr. GREEN: I suggest that the words "other than a Canadian citizen" in the second line should be struck out. The section would then give the minister discretion to let people in, but it would not provide automatic entry to anyone who was born in Canada. That is exactly what it means now.

Mr. MACKENZIE: If it means that, I am against it.

Mr. REID: So am I.

Mr. FULTON: So are we all.

Mr. GLEN: A Canadian citizen has an inalienable right to return to this country.

Mr. GREEN: We do not think a man like that has an inalienable right or any other kind of right to come back to Canada. I think the minister is admitting that my submission is correct.

Mr. GLEN: I have not said so.

Mr. GREEN: The minister said that the man born in Canada who went to Japan to fight against us has a right to come back to Canada, that nobody can stop him because he was born in Canada. I would move that the words "other than Canadian citizen" be struck out of the second line of subsection 3 on page 3 of the bill.

Mr. GLEN: I cannot agree to that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: If you will read the section you will find that he cannot come back except with the permission of the minister.

Mr. GREEN: That is the law as it stands to-day, but when this change is made the person born in Canada will be exempted from that provision. The new subsection reads:

> Except with the permission of the minister, no person other than a Canadian citizen, whether he has Canadian domicile or not, who during any war in which Canada is engaged leaves Canada to perform any military or other service for any country then at war with Canada or for the purpose of aiding or abetting in any way the enemies of Canada, shall be permitted to land in Canada or to remain therein.

Mr. REID: That means that the Japanese who was born in British Columbia can return.

Mr. GREEN: He does not require any permission; he has the automatic right to come back.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I must assert my right as a private member and disagree with the language of this amendment as proposed. I agree entirely with the hon. member for Vancouver South. I did not think anyone who has gone to Japan to fight against us should be allowed to come back to Canada, even with the consent of the minister.

Mr. GLEN: Section 18 of the Immigration Act contains the following proviso:

> Provided always that Canadian citizens and persons who have Canadian domicile shall be permitted to land in Canada as a matter of right.

That is a principle that has been recognized throughout the years, and I think I am correct in saying that the section that we propose to amend was inserted in 1914 during the war when there was fear of people going abroad and entering the war against Canada. The right to citizens to return has always been a provision in the Immigration Act.

Mr. FULTON: Were there not means by which these persons could lose their Canadian citizenship, such as going abroad to fight against the country?

Mr. GLEN: Persons who are abroad for one year with the intention of remaining abroad, and without having their citizenship established, lose their right of citizenship, apart from Canadian-born citizens. The permission of the minister is now required for any person, in the category we are now discussing, to come back, but that principle of law still applies, namely, that a national, a natural-born Canadian subject, has always the right to return to the country of his origin, and if he is a criminal against the laws of the country the law will punish him for the acts he has committed. That is the only intention in the amendment that is before us.

Mr. KNIGHT: I rose before and suggested that we should leave the Japanese out of the question, because I think we can discuss these matters more calmly if we leave particular cases out of consideration. In this case the persons in question were enemies of the country. I would ask the hon. member for Vancouver South where he would suggest that a Canadian citizen, who is now resident in another country and who is considered undesirable in that country, can go if his own country will not accept him. Before the hon. member answers that question, may I say that I would be a little careful about granting Canadian citizenship, but once it is granted I think it should be irrevocable. I suggest that we should be prepared to take the responsibility for our own mistake. This man has to have citizenship somewhere, I do not care whether he is in Japan, France or anywhere else; and if he is thrown out of that country, what will you do with him if you do not admit him here? Let us take our responsibilities as Canadians, and if the man is a criminal let us punish him as a criminal. But let us not dodge our responsibility by having him hounded from country to country over the face of the earth. That is my position.

Mr. GREEN: The hon. member has asked me a question, and I will give him my answer. I would not spend any time worrying about a man who went from Canada and fought against us, no matter where he may be. He has no right to come back here, and if we allow him to come back we are crazy. That is the kind of sloppy sentimentality that has got us into a lot of trouble in the past and it is about time we woke up.

Mr. MACKENZIE: One has already been shot for treason, born in British Columbia, and the other is now being tried for treason.

Mr. KNIGHT: I deliberately appealed to the minister and to the hon. member for Vancouver South to leave out of this argument that particular question of someone who has fought against us.

Mr. GREEN: But that is what the section deals with.

Mr. KNIGHT: If a Canadian citizen is not considered desirable in another country, where will he go except to his own land, the land of his adoption? We have a responsibility regarding that man. The hon. member for Vancouver South said that we should not worry about him, but he was good enough to be given certification of citizenship in this country and to me that means something. It is not simply a scrap of paper to be torn up at the will of any particular government that happens to be in power or at the whim of a particular government that happens to be in power when the country is at war temporarily. Our friends of to-day, I would point out, are our enemies of to-morrow, and that works in reverse. I say, however, once a Canadian citizen, always a Canadian citizen. I am proud to be a Canadian citizen; I want to remain a Canadian citizen, and for the same reason I want to take my medicine as a Canadian citizen if I violate any Canadian law. But where shall I go if I cannot go to my own country?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Go away.

[Mr. Knight.]

Mr. KNIGHT: That is all very well, but where to? I should like to have that question answered if my hon. friends will leave aside for the moment these hatreds engendered by war.

Mr. REID: We shall always have trouble in regard to this question so long as we refuse to face up to the situation. For many years now I have propounded this question in the House of Commons: Can a man be a citizen of two countries at one and the same time?

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. REID: Then I would say, put him on a spot and say, "In God's name, to which country do you owe allegiance?" If he says Japan, then what compunction should we have? I am taking the hon. gentleman's argument as he has stated it. He says, once a citizen, always a citizen. But if a man says, "I owe allegiance to Japan or to Russia," what compunction should we have about taking his Canadian citizenship away from him? I do not wish to deprive him of his citizenship, and I may say that my attitude toward the Japanese is not one of bitter hatred. But why do they not come out and say, "I was born in this country and I am a Canadian"? As I say, I have propounded that question here for many years. I put it to the civil liberties league of Ottawa and so far they have refused to answer it. If an answer can be given to this dual citizenship question, in heaven's name let me have it.

Mr. FULTON: Leaving the Japanese out of it for the moment—

Mr. MACKENZIE: British Columbia on the march.

Mr. FULTON: I would point out that there are many other rights which we in this party have always regarded as inalienable, which we have inherited, and which the C.C.F. would have no hesitation in taking from us. They do not mind if we set up boards, and we had an example yesterday.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. FULTON: Well, Mr. Chairman, we are discussing rights of citizenship, and there is not only one inalienable right which we have as citizens of Canada. May I point out that Canadian citizenship is not only a right but a privilege, and further, that every right carries corresponding duties, so that if you do not live up to those duties you should have the right taken away. If you go abroad and fight against your country you forfeit your right of citizenship and it should be taken from you. I do not see how the hon. member can put his question under this section and expect to have it answered. This section deals with those who fought against us, and his question would have more force if his party would show some interest in, and regard for, some of the rights which the rest of us have always regarded as inalienable.

Mr. GREEN: I would point out to the hon. members that the explanatory note to this section states: "The repealed paragraph reads," and then it proceeds to list "(3)." But actually there is no such number in the Immigration Act. That is a mistake.

Mr. GLEN: It has been omitted in the copy the hon. member has. That is an office copy.

Mr. GREEN: There is an express provision in the Immigration Act which I will read.

Mr. REID: It has been there for years.

Mr. GREEN: It reads:

No resident of Canada, whether he is a Canadian citizen or not, and whether he has a Canadian domicile or not, who leaves Canada to perform any military or other service for any country then at war with His Majesty, or for the purpose of aiding or abetting in any way His Majesty's enemies, shall be permitted to land in Canada, or remain therein, except with the permision of the minister.

That is an express provision which, I submit, overrides the wording in section 18.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Why not strike out the last six words?

Mr. GREEN: As I say, we have an express provision in the law as it now stands, and the Minister of Mines and Resources comes along with an amendment to take away that power in so far as a person who is a Canadian citizen is concerned. He says so in the explanatory note, wherein it is stated that the first of these paragraphs has been revised to exclude Canadian citizens. The very explanation proves my case, and I submit that the words "other than a Canadian citizen" should be deleted. I so move.

Mr. GLEN: The effect of the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman is to bring us back to the former subsections 3 and 4 which are to be revised. It is apparent there is a strong feeling that the former sections cover what is desired by this committee. I would not wish to impose my own wishes upon the committee except to say to the hon. gentleman who has spoken that with regard to a citizen born in Canada; no matter what he does in Canada, if he goes abroad and fights against our own country he is a man practically without a state. He is in that category. He would have to be returned to somewhere, and the only place to which he could come naturally would be to the place of his birth, which is Canada. He could be deported from that country to Canada.

Mr. GREEN: The way the law reads now he could not be deported here.

Mr. GLEN: It is giving to that national what I think is his inalienable right to return to the country of his birth, for he has no other place.

Mr. FULTON: He can come in now with the minister's permission.

Mr. GLEN: The provision of the former subsections 3 and 4 read as follows:

. . . shall not be allowed to land except with the permission of the minister.

There is that discretion. It is intended only to give the right to a Canadian-born. That was the intention of the act, but all other persons were excluded from the act. The act was to remain as it was formerly. The deletion of section 6 would mean that we would come back to what has been the law of the country, and I am not going to make any objection to it. We are willing to accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman and drop section 6 from the bill and number the remaining sections accordingly.

Mr. GRAYDON: I do not desire to prolong the discussion on this bill, but a question was raised by the hon. member for Saskatoon City to which there is a proper answer which has not been given to the committee, namely, that if one of our own citizens fights in the army of another country opposed to us it is not a question of his not having a nationality or no rights as a citizen, because when he fights in that army against us he takes the oath of allegiance of the country with which he was fighting, and that is the country to which he must belong. I think that answers the whole question. He does not belong to us; he belongs to them.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): With reference to the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver South may I say that a ruling was made yesterday on a similar amendment. At that time it was held that the amendment was out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We can refuse to carry the section.

Mr. GREEN: That is the same thing; that satisfies me.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): We want to have it right.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

296. Branch administration, $245,100.

Mr. REID: We have been doing very well to-day, and I think we had better take a breather for a minute or two to discuss some of these estimates. I have one or two other matters that I wish to discuss on this item because it is the only item on which I think I can discuss what I have in mind. What are the intentions of the department in regard to Ripple Rock? I know that this is a troublesome matter. It is a matter on which a great deal of money has been spent, but I wish to draw the minister's attention to one striking feature in regard to the carrying out of this work which I think has not so far been brought to his attention. Ripple Rock has been the bane of navigators for many long years. When the war commenced it is my information that the United States offered to take out this rock, but for reasons which are commendable we intimated that we would take it out ourselves. We did not say it in those words, but we had that national pride in ourselves which is commendable. Steps were then taken to take out the rock. A model was built at the university of Seattle to test out the tides and the effect of water and the best procedure to be followed in the removal of the rock. Alongside the model was a model constructed for the international Pacific salmon fisheries commission. Since I was down there doing work in regard to the commission I naturally visited the model of Ripple Rock. I said to the man in charge: "Your model of Ripple Rock did not turn out very satisfactorily." I was astounded when he said to me: "Mr. Reid, the trouble was that either the department or the contractor paid no attention whatsoever to the results of our findings." I said: "Why would they have doubts of your findings?" He said: "They have not had much experience in models," and owing to the fact that in the model they had been using small thread the contractor and I think some of our engineers were of the opinion that because it was thread it did not give a proper recording of what the actual work would be or the dangers of the work when they undertook it.

I should be glad if the minister would make a statement, because I am particularly interested in this matter from several points of view. I think of the United States wanting to take it out, and of Canada refusing. I know great sums of money have been expended there, but surely we are not going tacitly to say to the United States, "Well, you would have taken it out. We thought we could, but we did not." I am going to urge upon the minister that the whole matter be looked into again, in the light of the work done on the model in Seattle. If he investigates I believe he will find that the reports concerning that work were ignored to a large extent. According to the information I have been given, they simply refused to believe that the work on the model would have any bearing on the actual work when it was undertaken. That is my first question. I have one or two to ask, and I should like the indulgence of the committee to allow me to conclude with my questions.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): In my estimates this year there is no item concerning any work on Ripple Rock. The moneys expended were voted in previous years, and I have not with me the complete file concerning the matter, so that to a certain extent I shall have to rely upon my memory in giving the facts to the committee.

In 1941 naval ships of the United States and Canada were travelling in Seymour Narrows, and there was some discussion as to the possibility of taking out Ripple Rock. The Canadian government did make a war appropriation in the amount of $250,000, as I recall it, to commence this work. We called for tenders, and had a tender from one company who commenced the work; but after expending the $250,000 they had absolutely no success beyond building the scow which was used to try to drill into the rock. They had adopted the method of anchoring the scow in order to drill from it; but the currents and tides were such that they could not do any drilling, so at the end of that season they had to cease work. The next year we again asked who would undertake this work, but could find no one to make a firm bid. We came to an arrangement with one company, I believe it was the British Columbia Bridge and Dredging company, to undertake the work for a fee of $35,000, with this government paying the expenses. This was during the war. They changed the method of dealing with the scow. They put up cables over the straits and tied the scow down in order that the drilling could be carried out. They did drill about 122 holes from five to six feet deep, and of that number I believe they blew up something around 80 holes. That was only the first layer they were trying to take off. But when it came to dredging this rock which had been blown off, they could not devise any means of clearing it away, and up to the present time no one else has been able to devise any method of dredging even that part which was blown off.

Then we turned around and made an offer to the same company, asking them to give us a definite estimate as to what it would cost to bring the channel down to about thirty-one feet. By that time I may say we had expended $802,825.47, and, if I remember correctly, that company did give us an estimate. They started at $1,200,000, and then it went up to $1,800,000 to complete the work; but they would not give us a guarantee that they could do it even on the firm price they gave us by correspondence. We were prepared to guarantee that over and above that firm price we would be ready to pay fifty per cent of any additional cost if they could find some insurance company that would guarantee payment of the other fifty per cent. I believe they did look around, not only in this country but all over the world, for some company that would guarantee this payment, but they could not find one.

At last the most rabid proponents of taking away Ripple Rock had to throw up their hands. We are trying to devise some way to help navigation there. On one side of the rock there is a channel of about 1,300 feet and on the other side a channel of five or six hundred feet, and we have had contradictory opinions as to the navigability of those two streams. Actually if the government could have found somebody to undertake the work at an exact or even approximate cost, so that we would know where we were going, we would have had the work done. The best engineers were consulted. My own deputy minister was in Washington and New York to meet their experts, but as yet no method has been found which would promise success. Perhaps if we stayed on the job for another five or six years and spent a million or so a year we might find a way of doing it, but right now the government hesitates to start this work unless we can find some means which will offer a reasonable hope of success. Speaking from memory, I recall attending meetings where this matter was discussed, and the general opinion seemed to be that the cable system was the best method of stabilizing the scow in order to drill the holes, but that did not succeed.

Mr. GREEN: They did get eighty holes drilled.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, but to a depth of only five or six feet; and to get down to thirty-one would mean they would have to repeat that process four or five times. But we could not blow up any more of that rock before clearing out what had been blown up early in the work, and up to the present no one has found a way of doing that. I am told that the cable system was successful at that level, but that they did not have much hope of being able to drill to the required depth. I must say that if my department had succeeded in removing Ripple Rock it would have been extremely proud of the feat; it would have been known all over the world, and the engineers doing that work would have become outstanding men, not only in Canada but elsewhere. Within the last six or seven months I have not received any further requests concerning this work, because it seems to be agreed that unless we can find the proper method we should not be simply spending money. We have put nearly a million dollars into this work to show our good faith. We went all over the place consulting people, trying to get advice and help. No responsible firm seems to wish to undertake this project unless we keep them working without knowing exactly what results we shall get and what will be the cost to the people of Canada. On the other hand, the engineers of my department are still studying the matter to see if they cannot find some way of proceeding. The first method, of simply anchoring the scow, was not a success. The second method, using cables, did bring certain results. Other scientists are studying the rock to see whether by the tunnel process we could not get under the rock and blow it up. The last time I heard any discussion about this matter, someone said the rock was not of the proper formation in order to tunnel under it and blow it up. It has been suggested that cement caissons be used to take the water out. But nobody has said we can get the caissons on this rock to proceed with the work. My advisers have not any method which will assure the government that we would not be spending this money uselessly.

Mr. REID: I take it that it is not the minister's intention to drop this project.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No; it has been discussed for years.

Mr. REID: May I say to him and to his engineers that I have received some information about Seymour Narrows. I doubt if it reached the department, but it should reach the department and I will place it on record now. One of the contractors interested in obtaining the work spent considerable of his own time in a rowboat on Seymour Narrows making tests of the tides, for his own information, looking to the day the contract would be given him. He informed me that he was more than astounded to learn from practical experience that there were at least from eight to ten days when slack tides lasted for twelve hours, and his suggestion was that the work be carried on only on those days when the tides are slack, and that the work be left when the tides are racing through, the condition when the work was attempted by the British Columbia Bridge and Dredging company.

Anyone who has ever seen them at work knows that a contractor could hardly get men to stay on a dredge, so great were the noise and tension of those cables holding the work scow in place.

I am suggesting to the minister that, principally in view of the fact that this is a menace and will ever remain so to navigation, and again owing to the fact that we refused the United States the right to take it out—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. REID: The information was that the United States wanted to take it out, as a war project.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And that is correct, too.

Mr. REID: The United States said, "We will take it out if you will leave it," and we said no. We took considerable pride at that time and told the United States that we would look after our own affairs—perhaps not in those words, but that was what they meant. Are we now going to say, "You could have taken it out, but we cannot do it. Just forget about it." I say we should have more pride than that.

An hon. MEMBER: Who said that?

Mr. REID: I do not know who said it, but whoever carried on the negotiations between the two governments said it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I can tell my hon. friend that I have studied the files from the first page to the last, and there is not a single document stating that the United States government would undertake this work. There was a discussion about it, as to whether it was advisable whether it be done for the protection of naval vessels, warships, during war time.

Mr. REID: I do not think that would come before the Department of Public Works.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It came before the war committee of the cabinet.

[Mr. Reid.]

Mr. REID: Probably the minister is quite correct when he says his files do not have that entry. But we had it definitely stated to us from Ottawa that that suggestion had been made by the United States government. Certain ministers made the statement that the offer had been made by the United States government to Canada to take out that rock, because military vessels had to go up through Seymour Narrows on their way to Alaska, and they were afraid of it.

We said no to the United States government, and we were probably right in having said that. But I think pride in our country should make us put forth a great effort to take out that rock, after further survey has been made along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. GREEN: There is no doubt that this is a difficult engineering problem, but I am afraid that the department has more or less given up hope. The minister spoke this afternoon to the effect that if someone could find a way to remove the rock the government would be glad to step in and do it.

But the position is that the government must find the way. We cannot expect a private individual to find a way to remove that rock; it is up to the government to do it; because the situation is so very serious. It has been discussed at considerable length in editorials; this is from an editorial which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of February 27 of this year:

> Ottawa has been crowding its luck ever since its own royal commission reported in 1931 that the existence of Ripple Rock in the main channel of coastwise shipping through Seymour Narrows constitutes "an ever present possibility of a major accident involving great loss of human life."

It would just take one good wreck to lose probably a good deal more than a million dollars.

Mr. MACKENZIE: One was lost last year.

Mr. GREEN: One of the government's own ships was wrecked.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We lost men there doing that work.

Mr. GREEN: One of your own ships was lost.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It was a government ship.

Mr. GREEN: A government survey ship which was used last year.

Mr. REID: Why not use a small atomic bomb?

Mr. GILLIS: It would kill the fish.

Mr. GREEN: The minister has said that the plan being used was not practical. However, again I quote from the Vancouver Sun this time the issue of May 2 of this year which states, as a heading, "Ripple Rock plan proved practical." This is a dispatch dated at Victoria, stating:

Removal of Ripple Rock, dangerous hazard to navigation in Seymour Narrows, has been proved feasible from an engineering standpoint—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Who says that?

Mr. GREEN:

—K. W. Morton, district engineer for the Department of Public Works, told the second annual conference of the Pacific Northwest Trade Association here to-day.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What date was that?

Mr. GREEN: May 2 of this year, and this is a statement by one of your own men.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And one of his best men, too.

Mr. GREEN: The dispatch goes on to say:

Discussion of the Ripple Rock problem was the initial subject on the agenda after the conference was opened this morning by Lieut-Governor W. C. Woodward.

It goes on to say:

Mr. Morton estimated it would take 34 months' work to remove the top of the rock under the system used by the B.C. Bridge & Dredging Co. This is the company which did all the experimental work that was finally stopped by dominion order when funds ran out.

"The method has proved workable," Mr. Morton said, "most of the problems connected with it have been ironed out. Any of the other more complicated schemes would require a great deal more experimentation and loss of time."

He was referring to the method of anchoring the drill barge over the rock with overhead cables attached to the two shores of the channel.

Cost of the work is estimated at $1,900,000. It is expensive because of the overtime involved for crews and the fact that actual drilling can only be done at ebb tide.

Summarizing the work done, he said 139 holes were drilled, a total of 717 feet. Of these 93 were blasted.

This is the minister's own engineer.

The other 46 were not blasted because of broken drills or other causes. Deepest hole drilled was 15 feet—

Not eight, as the minister said.

—and the average 5·7 feet.

There was complete control over the barge and the experiments definitely showed Ripple Rock can be blasted by this method, he said.

There is the evidence from within the minister's own department. I suggest to him that this scheme should not be dropped.

Mr MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: If there were a rock like that in the St. Lawrence it would have been moved decades ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. GREEN: But it is out on the Pacific coast, a long way from Ottawa. People out there cannot keep pressing for something to be done about it all the time. This is of vital importance, not only to Canada but to the United States, because the bulk of their shipping to Alaska goes up past that rock. I submit it is a tragedy that this plan should be dropped by the federal government at the present time. There will be a real disaster out there one of these days; possibly a passenger ship will be lost, with several hundred lives. Then there will be greater responsibility on the government, if the work is not proceeded with.

That rock must be moved. The departmental officials cannot just sit here, fold their hands and say, "It's too bad, but we cannot get anything done."

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, twice in one day I find myself in strange company—

Mr. GREEN: Good company.

Mr. MACKENZIE: —agreeing with the hon. member for Vancouver South. If I might be permitted to divest myself of the mantle of ministerial responsibility, I must say that I agree with every single point he has made. We have there a definite and positive menace to navigation and to the safety of the lives of the people who go up north and come down south. I have quarrelled with the department, and my correspondence will so prove, over its lack of attention to this problem, and speaking for the moment as a private member from Vancouver Centre I can join with the hon. member for Vancouver South and say that British Columbia insists and will insist upon the removal of this menace to safe navigation. We are far away in British Columbia, and very often we are the forgotten people. But if the members from British Columbia will join together—

Mr. REID: Do not forget I started this.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I know you did. If the members from British Columbia will join together we can compel a solution of this problem. We are not going to allow the effete policy of any department to thwart what is a necessary improvement in our province in regard to the removal of Ripple Rock. If the engineers are not able to find a solution, we should find other engineers. If the public works department is not able to solve the problem, we should find another department or an independent commission or committee which will solve it and remove this menace to the security of our people. Last year we lost a ship there costing a million dollars. The security and the safety of the lives of the people of British Columbia are menaced every day and every night by this navigation menace. The problem is being tackled only in an anaemic and effete way. Support has not been given to the contractors, and I know why. There is a definite responsibility on the officials of the Department of Public Works to try in every single possible way to solve this problem and to start in to do it. I know it to be practical. The members from British Columbia, regardless of politics and party, are united in this thing; we are determined in this thing, and we shall see it through.

Mr. PEARKES: Since this rock is only a few miles outside of my constituency I should like to add my comments to what has already been said and my endorsation of the appeal that has been made to have this menace to navigation removed. Only last week I sent to the minister's department a suggestion that I received from a practical engineer and master marine on the Pacific coast as to a new method by which perhaps this rock may be destroyed. I hope that the minister will have his engineers investigate that method and see whether it can provide a practical solution through removing this dangerous obstacle.

Mr. LANGLOIS: A few moments ago the hon. member for Vancouver South made a reference which I think is not quite in accordance with the facts. He was talking about local complaints in British Columbia, and that can be very easily understood, but he added that if this obstacle to navigation were present in the St. Lawrence river it would be removed. I have the honour to represent one of the constituencies along the lower St. Lawrence, and I want to tell the hon. member for Vancouver South that we do not get all we want by any means.

Mr. GREEN: Well, you should.

Mr. LANGLOIS: We should, and you should, too. But I want to make this point. If the members from British Columbia or any other province want something and do not get it, they should not blame any other province for that.

Mr. GREEN: I was not blaming any other province.

[Mr. Mackenzie.]

Mr. LANGLOIS: Before this committee considers the items of the chief engineer's branch, I wish to make a few remarks of a general nature on these items.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I wish to draw the attention of the committee to some items of the engineer's branch which are of particular concern to my constituency. If I have waited until the committee had reached this stage of the discussion on the public works estimates to make my remarks, it is because in my constituency we are not, for the moment at least, specially interested in public buildings which we consider as a luxury. We are primarily interested in the kind of public works that are absolutely essential to our economic development and to the expansion of the two important industries of our district. I shall therefore deal only with the improvement work that has to do with our fishing harbours and with the construction of commercial wharves.

First, as regards the fishing harbours, the sea fisheries of the province of Quebec are mostly concentrated in the constituency of Gaspé, where they form an industry which comes immediately after lumbering. The Gaspé coast being quite precipitous and exposed to the winds which so frequently rage in the gulf of St. Lawrence, it affords no shelter for our fishermen's boats. That is why, if we wish to maintain that industry, we must give special attention to the improvement and construction of easily accessible fishing harbours.

I need not emphasize the important part which our sea fisheries play to-day in the food programme this country has launched with a view to helping the nations devastated by war. To realize that, we merely have to consider the fish exports made through UNRRA. I may add that the Gaspé district has already suffered from the great international crisis which has come to an end with the cessation of hostilities, on account of the participation of this country with the allied nations in efforts to maintain peace, before the last war. The members of this committee no doubt remember the economic sanctions that were imposed against Italy at the time of the Ethiopian war and which entailed for our Gaspé fishermen the loss of the important market they then had in Italy for their dried fish. Moreover, we must recognize the merit of our fishermen who, during the war, did not hesitate to face the ordinary perils of the sea besides the dangers resulting from the incursions of the enemy in the St. Lawrence.

I must add here, better to emphasize the importance of that industry from a national standpoint that the Department of Veterans Affairs is now reestablishing in commercial fisheries the numerous veterans of my district. As every one knows, through legislation introduced in this parliament during the present session, the government is spending huge amounts in order to finance the establishment of our veterans as farmers or fishermen. When we settle a veteran on a farm, the land and buildings he acquires are not so exposed to loss as if the same funds were advanced to him for investment in the fishing boat with which he must earn a living. Besides, in the case of a farm, the veteran may cover any risks by taking out fire or some such insurance. This is however quite impossible to the veteran engaged in salt water fishing because maritime risks on fishing boats and equipment cannot be covered by any form of insurance now extant. Unless therefore provision is made for the setting up of fishing harbours or safe shelters for our fishermen's boats, I am very much afraid that we shall soon have to cope with the problem of veterans who, having borrowed money from the government to invest in boats, have lost them in the storm before they have had the chance to pay for them. What the government proposes to do in such cases I don't know, but I must point out that so far they have not been provided for by legislation. As an instance of the very real hazards involved, I merely have to mention the case of the small town of Cap des Rosiers, in my constituency, where in a single storm last summer fifteen fishing boats were lost. Each year we sustain similar losses which, unfortunately, are too often coupled with loss of human lives.

The fisherman's task is a hard one; but my Gaspesian fishermen are not seeking wage increases, are not holding out nor ever did hold out the threat of strikes which have brought local economy to a standstill and often threaten the whole national economy. All they ask our government is to give them at least the means to carry on and extend their work.

The fishermen I represent and myself find it hard to understand, that in the transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy, when we are spending huge sums on reconversion, we cannot find the money required, not to reconvert an operating industry, but merely to ensure its survival and expansion. My constituents' claims in this connection I have on many occasions made known to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Fournier) and to the officials of his department. And I must here give credit to the minister for having heard my representations with unfailing kindness and sympathy. I repeat those requests, without detailing them, in the hope that the minister and the members of the treasury board will give them the consideration they deserve. To the latter, that is the members of the treasury board, I wish to point out that our share of public works in the Gaspé area is inadequate to our needs and inferior to the allotments granted elsewhere. If only Gaspé were given what other parts receive in the way of subsidies for the construction of railways, of public buildings, which we lack; for the erection and maintenance of radio stations, and the like, we would be content. If the members of the treasury board require a further argument to justify the development of our fishing harbours, which should be carried out at once, I shall refer for a few minutes to order in council P.C. 360, approved on February 13, 1922, at the request of the Quebec legislature and amended by P.C. 1890, on March 15, 1943. As a result of this order in council the dominion agreed to hand back to Quebec the whole administration of commercial fisheries, thus creating the only exception of this kind in the country.

Some time ago I asked the Department of Fisheries for the amounts paid to the various provinces for the administration of fisheries at the date on which the first order in council was passed, and similar figures for 1944-45. I secured the following data:

Province	1921-1922	1944-1945
Nova Scotia	$250,329 40	$584,300 59
Prince Edward Island	34,757 27	98,309 59
New Brunswick	146,059 75	383,917 98
Ontario	80,403 37	1,569 84
Manitoba	71,934 16	16,034 68
Alberta	22,430 25	.....
Saskatchewan	21,487 53	.....
British Columbia ...	496,631 69	817,888 81

If we compute the average amounts granted to other provinces we find that the fishing industry in Quebec is losing some $500,000 yearly. This money is paid to other provinces out of the national income to which the province of Quebec contributes to the extent of almost one third, if not more.

If, for political reasons, certain autonomists of the province of Quebec do not want our fishermen to benefit by this money I believe the government must find some other way of enabling them to benefit therefrom, as they are just as much entitled to those sums as the fishermen of other provinces.

I take this opportunity to draw the attention of the fishermen of my constituency upon the cost to them of the policy of autonomy advocated by their Quebec leaders. A summary computation shows that our Gaspé fishermen have thus lost since 1922 over ten million dollars, as the result of the autonomy policy advocated by the so-called Quebec nationalists. I, therefore, ask the minister and the treasury advisers to take this into consideration when they plan a programme of public works for the province of Quebec, and I appeal to them, on behalf of the Gaspé fishermen, to make good this sum by immediately launching a programme for the construction of modern fishing harbours, out of the funds which they have thus lost and which they will lose in future as long as this policy is maintained. They are entitled to this money and I do not see why they should be deprived of it.

Second, our commercial wharves to which my previous remarks about the importance of our fishing harbours also apply. There again, I submitted to the minister and Department of Public Works a list of urgent projects and I hope that by next year, they will begin to carry out this programme.

We have very important sea ports to which, every year, we ship huge quantities of lumber and pulpwood. As I said earlier, we are almost without rail service; only a fourth rate railroad barely 60 miles in length and a belt road in even worse shape; therefore, as I said on the address in reply to the speech from the throne when parliament was convened, the maritime route is the only means of communication available to our people.

The lumber industry is our main activity and I refer the hon. minister as well as the government to a report on the inventory of the natural resources of the Gaspé area carried out in 1937 by the Quebec government. I will therefore take the liberty of submitting to the hon. minister a suggestion which I have already put to the officers of his department. Considering the scarcity of lumber resulting from the British Columbia strikes as well as from the house-building programme, I suggest once again that the Minister of Public Works determine at once the approximate quantity and dimensions of the lumber required for the projects he intends to carry out during the summer of 1947 and immediately place contracts so that he may count on having his order filled by next spring. I might add that if such contracts are handed out this fall, we will be able to secure locally in the Gaspé area a good deal of the lumber needed for these projects and thus reduce the quantities we will require from British Columbia.

I have one more suggestion for the hon. minister; it deals with the dredging near the fishing harbours and commercial docks of my riding. This summer, we experienced a great deal of trouble in having urgent work carried out due to the fact that the Department of Public Works has placed its dredge at the disposal of two constituencies, Bonaventure and Gaspé, and also because this machinery is so ancient that it is falling apart. As a result, we had to hire outside dredging contractors to do part of the dredging in my constituency; this was done after we had experienced much difficulty and after several of our fishing harbours had been paralysed for a good part of the season owing to the delay in carrying out the necessary dredging operations.

It is therefore necessary and urgent that the Department of Public Works build a dredge for use in Gaspé county and I hope that it will do so shortly.

My third and last suggestion pertains to the lack of personnel at the district engineer's office, at Rimouski. That office is shorthanded in view of the volume of work and of the vast territory it has to cover. As a result, work in our district is delayed, sometimes to a point that it is not carried out during the fiscal year for which the funds have been appropriated. I therefore urge the minister to take the necessary steps in order to increase the staff of that office without further delay.

(Text):

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I wish to say a few words, reverting to the Ripple Rock question. I was surprised to hear British Columbia members this afternoon saying that they had been insisting on this work for the last three years. I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that every week in my office I have heard representations and have received letters, and I have consulted the best men around me in regard to the work. This afternoon some members made a few remarks which I do not think I should allow to pass without indicating exactly how the government came to its decision.

In my department we had an oustanding engineer, the chief engineer of the department, Mr. Kenneth Cameron, who had been a past president of the Canadian institute of engineers. He is one of the outstanding engineers in the country, has headed that branch of my department for many years, after rising from resident engineer to the top rank, and has now been superannuated. This gentleman had absolutely no interest in giving his minister any advice in which he did not believe. He was honest in the way in which he conducted his work, and I am looking at the hon. member for Carleton when I make that statement, because he knew Mr. Cameron. I am sure the hon. member will agree that Mr. Cameron is one of the outstanding citizens of the country.

He made an investigation in conjunction with my deputy minister. He spent three weeks on the coast and made his final report on the Ripple Rock works. He has now been superannuated, but after his return from that trip he came back to the office for a week or so. Does anyone think I would set aside the report made to me by my chief engineer and accept reports given to me by any outsider who did not know one-tenth as much about the situation as my chief engineer?

Mr. GREEN: What about your own engineer, Mr. Morton, who is right on the coast?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Though I have a great deal of respect for the engineer on the coast, I must point out that he was under the direction of Mr. Cameron. Mr. Cameron met him there and they travelled together. That two engineers would not agree on a subject of this kind is not surprising. You can find two engineers, one of whom will have one opinion and the other a different view. But would anyone advise the Minister of Public Works to disregard the advice of his deputy, who is also a civil engineer and an outstanding one, and the advice given by the chief engineer of the department, and say to them, "No, gentlemen; Mr. Morton is out there. He is one of our engineers; he advises otherwise, and we will take his advice."

What the hon. member read in the clipping from the Vancouver Sun is part of what I said at the outset of my remarks. We did get this report giving the figure $1,900,000, but we asked whether that was their firm price, and we said, "Will you give a guarantee that you will do the work for that price?" No answer came. No one would undertake it.

Mr. GREEN: Would you expect the firm to give a set price?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Certainly; we asked for tenders. They had the specifications and, if they know so much about the work, they ought to be able to put a price on it. Will anyone tell me that contractors would come to Ottawa and see the public works department and say they would do the work, and then spend $802,000, without producing results? And these same people said that they could do it for $300,000. Now they say they will do it for $1,900,000. Judging by past performances, am I to set aside the report of my chief engineer and say to these gentlemen, "Of course we will give you that contract"; and after spending $1,900,000 without results would you expect me to come back to the house and ask for another $2,000,000? What would people say?

Mr. GREEN: You have already got some results.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I think I am being logical in the argument. We decided at the time that if we could get a firm price we would undertake the work. We went farther and said to them, "Though we do not believe in that estimate, if you will find an insurance company who will guarantee fifty per cent of the excess over $1,900,000 we will undertake to pay fifty per cent and your insurance company can give us a guarantee to pay the other fifty per cent." Nobody came forward, however; nobody would undertake it.

Does anyone think we would be justified in spending the people's money at that rate, when I am convinced myself, on the best advice which I could obtain, that they have not found the right method by which to get rid of Ripple Rock? That is our position.

I respect the opinions of those who come from the coast, and hon. members have a right to press their point; but it is not fair to my department to urge me to undertake expenditures of public money when I am not satisfied that we can have the work done. That is the position with regard to Ripple Rock.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I have listened very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Langlois). He is probably the hon. member whose constituency is, to the highest degree, dependent on the Department of Public Works for the improvement of the fishing harbours of the Gaspé coast. During the war years, we have been unable to do as much as usual. This year, I believe the amounts spent for the improvement of wharves, breakwaters and ports have been increased. He has but to present a request which he does regurlarly—and the Department of Public Works gets busy improving every part of his constituency as soon as the money is granted by parliament. I feel bound to give him the testimony that, of all the members from Quebec, he probably gives me more work than any other in the interests of his constituents. A single day hardly goes by, but I receive from him some request for the betterment of his fishermen's lot. He may be sure that my officials and myself will do our utmost to help his fisherfolk.

Mr. LANGLOIS: Thank you.

(Text):

Mr. BRACKEN: With your permission, Mr. Chairman, and with the permission of the committee I should like to raise another matter. When the Acting Prime Minister moved that we sit on Saturdays he indicated that he would leave it to the wishes of the house as to whether it would sit on Saturday night as well as Saturday morning and Saturday afternoon. Last night the leader of the house indicated that he would expect us to sit to-night. Intimations have been made to me by some hon. members that they would prefer to sit until seven o'clock to-day and then adjourn until Monday morning if that were satisfactory. I raise that suggestion for the consideration of hon. members.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Of course this motion should be properly made with the Speaker in the chair. With the consent of the committee I would say that the government is entirely in the hands of the committee and of the house in regard to this matter. I have had representations made to me from various quarters that we continue to sit until seven o'clock this evening and then adjourn until Monday morning at eleven o'clock. If that is the desire I would have to make the motion.

Mr. IRVINE: Why not make it six o'clock? Why run to seven? What difference will an hour make?

Mr. MACKENZIE: If we sit until seven o'clock my hon. friend will find out. If this meets with the consent of the committee—I am not pressing it, mark you—I would move:

That standing order 6 be suspended and that the committee continue sitting after 6 p.m.

With unanimous consent that would mean until seven o'clock. I think that seems to be the general wish of the committee. If that is not agreeable we shall sit as usual in the evening until eleven o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move:

That standing order 6 be suspended and that the house continue sitting after 6 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. REID: Does that mean that the house sits until eleven o'clock?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Until after six; until the house is adjourned.

Mr. REID: I was going to move that the house sit from nine o'clock in the morning to one o'clock the following morning.

[Mr. Langlois.]

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Golding in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Engineer's branch—

296. Branch administration, $245,100.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Now that we can come back again for a few minutes to Ripple Rock, because it is still there, may I say that this afternoon I listened with a great degree of interest to the remarks of the hon. members for New Westminster, Vancouver South and Vancouver Centre. I wish to associate myself with all that they have said and, if there is any way of making it stronger, I do so. I think I can say this afternoon that I have probably sailed through Seymour Narrows more often than any other member in the committee, because during the past few years I have sailed through them on a good many occasions. I have seen some of the largest steamers which ply on the Pacific coast in these northern waters timing their sailings and their movements to arrive at Seymour Narrows at either high slack or low slack tide. With all the power that they are able to develop, if they should arrive too soon they never attempt to sail through; they anchor. Why? Because, although we have heard this afternoon of many hundreds of feet on this side or on the other side of the rock, a vessel trying to go through these dangerous waters and these tremendous currents runs the danger of being swept irresistibly upon that rock. I know something of how mariners of the north Pacific coast feel every time that they approach Ripple Rock. They approach that rock with a degree of fear and wholesome respect.

I am glad to know that so much money has been spent by the government so far in an attempt to remove Ripple Rock, but I cannot quite understand some of the remarks which the minister made this afternoon. One of the difficulties which seem to baffle them at the present moment is how to clear the top of the rock after blasting operations have taken place. I can hardly visualize that difficulty when I know something of the force of the explosives used. If it does not blow the rock completely away from the surface I can tell the minister that if there are chunks of rock on the top as big as this desk the tides and currents will sweep them off.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): They are probably bigger than that.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): If they are bigger than that I do not think their methods of handling the matter have been as useless or as ineffective as the minister tries to make out.

This is still a live issue on the Pacific coast and it is going to be until Ripple Rock is removed.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): You need not tell me.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): To show that it is so, the Vancouver Sun runs every week or so a quiz programme in which they ask the people to express their point of view on certain questions. Possibly two or three months ago this question was asked on the programme: "Are you in favour of asking the United States now to remove Ripple Rock, seeing that we cannot do it ourselves?"

Mr. REID: They offered to.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Yes. And eighty-six per cent expressed their conviction that we should ask the United States to remove it.

Mr. LANGLOIS: Can the hon. member give me the percentage of those who said "yes" or "no"?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Eighty-six out of one hundred, eighty-six per cent, said yes.

Mr. LANGLOIS: Eighty-six per cent of what?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Of the total population of the Vancouver area.

Mr. BERTRAND (Laurier): Of those who were questioned?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): I was not at this particular meeting where this question was put. I am merely quoting from the paper.

Mr. LANGLOIS: The hon. gentleman gave a figure of eighty-six per cent; eighty-six per cent of what?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): It was eighty-six per cent of those who were questioned.

An hon. MEMBER: What was the number?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): I could not tell you that. I was not there, and I cannot state that number.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I say that generally these polls are accurate.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): The point is that we have spent a great amount of money so far, and I do not for one moment think we are justified now in throwing up our hands and saying that, because our engineers cannot find a satisfactory way to remove the rock, it will have to stay there. I know how the minister feels, that if he goes ahead and spends so many millions of dollars and fails, his department will be censured, but I can assure the minister that his department will be censured far more if we lose a large vessel on that rock, with heavy loss of life; and that is likely to happen any moment, even while I am speaking. It may happen at any time.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Certainly; and it could have happened in the past hundred and fifty years.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): It was stated here this afternoon that the last vessel to suffer damage on the rock was a government vessel, and that the delicate instruments on that vessel, worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, were absolutely ruined. So my contention is that if our Canadian engineers have failed we should call in the engineers of some other country.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We did. My deputy spent a good deal of time consulting the best engineers in New York and Washington, the best engineers on that kind of work in the United States, and their report agreed with the report I received from my own officials. We are not all engineers, you know.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): The last method adopted was to string a cable, at tremendous expense to the country.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): What about the other methods? Did you study them? Did you study the tunneling method?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Yes; I know the methods they have been trying to follow. The overhead cable method was the most successful so far. Why was the cable taken down?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I gave that answer a moment ago. Ten feet of water flows continually over this rock. In addition to that, we were to drill another twenty-one or twenty-two feet. We did start drilling so many holes at the first level of five feet. That was the average; perhaps it may have been six feet, and they drilled as many holes as they could. Then they filled the holes with dynamite or some explosive, and tried to explode it. Two-thirds were blown up, say eighty holes out of 120. Ripple Rock is not just a peak of rock coming up in the middle of the water. It spreads around, and the rock that was blown off spread over the rest of it. The contractors tried to remove the loose rock but had no success, and they could not go on and drill a second level of five or six or seven feet without removing the first rock. Then the deeper they went, to drill the harder it became to keep the barge and scow sufficiently stable that the drills would not be broken. That was the second method. The first was to anchor the scow and barge, but that did not succeed at all.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): I know.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The first project cost us around $350,000, and the second one, nearly $500,000, and we have had no success.

Mr. GREEN: Some success.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): A third method was suggested, that of tunneling, but we were advised against it. I am no expert; I am only repeating what I have heard when this matter has been discussed. We were told that the rock formation would not permit of tunneling and having the rock blown up. A fourth method suggested, which would be a costly one and in one connection with which no one could assure us of success, would be by dropping cement caissons on the rock, taking out the water and then trying to drill. All these ideas came from engineers; they did not come from laymen, and in each case the objections were such that, after spending $800,000, I did not feel I could recommend to the government that we proceed farther unless I could be convinced by the experts that it was feasible. We have consulted engineers in the United States. Hon. members have said the government of the United States told us they would do the work, but I have been dealing with this question for nearly four years and it has not come to my knowledge yet that the United States government asked to be allowed to proceed with the work. There is a lot of talk about doing this and doing that, but when you come down to the facts there is nothing on the file that would show that any other government would undertake this work, or that they had better engineers than we have in our own country.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): From all I can gather, the last method adopted, using the overhead cable, did bring a certain amount of success. The minister himself admits that a certain number of holes were drilled and blasted. What I cannot understand is why, after all that expenditure and all the risk of life and limb in stringing that overhead cable, it was not left there. Why take it down?

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Because we could not get a price from anybody to complete the work by the cable method. As I said, I have dealt with this matter for nearly four years. It was the most important thing I had in my mind in connection with the department, because we were anxious to make a success of it. Just imagine; if our department could have succeeded in that work—I am repeating what I have said previously—our engineers would have become great men amongst the engineers on this continent. When we tried last fall to get a firm price for the work, no firm prices were given to us. We had one estimate of $1,800,000 or $1,900,000, but there was no guarantee that they would do the work for that amount, any more than they did the work for the $250,000 or $300,000 we paid in the first place, and we asked for a guarantee. They could not find anybody even to guarantee fifty per cent of the excess over the estimate of about $1,900,000.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Even yet the minister does not answer my question. We had a cable strung across a given area at tremendous expense. It would not have hurt the department to leave that cable there even yet, until you finally decided whether or not you were going to use the cable method again. It may be that you will have to come back to the cable.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I can give you the reason in a minute if you want it.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): Pardon me; the minister has spoken enough. You may have to go back to the cable method yet, and all I want to know is, why did you take down the cable before you were absolutely sure that method could not be used?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When we put up the cables we had reports that they were dangerous to navigation. Opinion was divided even in connection with stringing up those cables across the rock. When we were convinced that we could not proceed by the cable method we did not think we should hinder navigation by allowing those cables to remain over the straits.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): I am not satisfied that navigation was hindered. Navigation went on all the time. The minister can wave his hand; but, as the hon. member for Vancouver Centre said, Ripple Rock is too far from Ottawa; that is the whole trouble. I would repeat what the hon. member for Vancouver South said, that if it had been in the St. Lawrence river they would have made greater attempts to remove it than have so far been made. Let the government go ahead and spend money without asking for too many guarantees that this will be done or that will succeed.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Would you suggest that in dealing with public works I should go ahead and give out work without getting firm prices; that I should spend the money of the taxpaying public of Canada without any guarantee that the work will be completed for the money we pay out? Do you think that would be the proper way to administer the Department of Public Works? Do you think I could rise in this house and defend that policy; that I could say, "All right; you want work out in British Columbia. We don't care what the cost is. We don't care if you can do the work. We are just going to spend the money of the people." Do you think that sort of policy would be upheld in this house? Do you think I could rise in my place and defend a policy of that kind? If that sort of policy were to be adopted I probably would not be long in this government, because I do not believe it would be good government.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): That is exactly what the minister has been doing up to now.

Mr. LANGLOIS: May I ask a question?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): I have the floor.

Mr. LANGLOIS: You are afraid to answer a question?

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): The minister has expended a good many hundred thousand dollars on a worth-while experiment, and we are asking that the experimentation proceed. I think that is fair. The minister has been prosecuting this work, and there has been no criticism of his department from any source for having done so. His department is worthy of commendation, because he has tried to do something. But we maintain that this is not the time to fold up and say, "We give up, because Ripple Rock is too large for us." I still feel there are engineers in this country—and if Canadian engineers cannot do it, others can—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Name them.

Mr. MATTHEWS (Kootenay East): That is not my place. It is not for hon. members to find a solution; it is for the government to find one. The warning still holds good that some day there will be a disaster at Ripple Rock, and it will reflect upon the government, if this work is not carried out.

Mr. LANGLOIS: Speaking in French a short time ago, I asked the minister to increase the number of personnel in the engineering branch office at Rimouski. I think at this time I should withdraw my request, because it would seem that there are many good engineers right in the house.

I wish to reply to the hon. member who just took his seat, when he said—and I am afraid I am not quoting his words exactly—that if this condition were in Quebec it would be cured right away. My reply to him is that he should come down to my constituency and—

Mr. MacINNIS: The hon. member for Kootenay East did not refer to the province of Quebec.

Mr. LANGLOIS: I have the floor.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Let the hon. member proceed.

Mr. LANGLOIS: I referred to the St. Lawrence.

Mr. MacINNIS: Say "St. Lawrence", then.

Mr. LANGLOIS: Let him come down to my constituency, and he will see—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Is the hon. member rising to a point of order?

Mr. MacINNIS: On a point of order, the hon. member for Kootenay East did not say "province of Quebec". Some may be willing to think they can use that for the purpose of raising prejudice. But the hon. member for Kootenay East—

An hon. MEMBER: The same as British Columbia.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is not in the province of Quebec, either.

Mr. LANGLOIS: May I have the floor?

Mr. BELZILE: The river St. Lawrence runs from Montreal to Rimouski.

Mr. LANGLOIS: I should like to ask a question of the hon. member who made this reference. Can he tell me how much his province has contributed toward the total revenue of this country, as compared with Quebec? I am ready to place the figures before him. Yet we are not getting any more than his province is getting, if we take into consideration the amount of revenue that Quebec contributes.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I think we had better get down to the item.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was not in the chamber when the discussion on this item began, but—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is no item for Ripple Rock, you know.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is the trouble.

Mr. MacINNIS: I wish to tell the minister that it appears that Ripple Rock is a considerable item. I was not in the chamber when the discussion began, so that to that extent I am under a handicap because I do not know what other members have said.

I am not an engineer and I know nothing about Ripple Rock, except that I have heard it is there and is dangerous. I also know it is a live question in British Columbia. I listened to what the minister said about what had already been done in attempting to remove this obstruction to navigation. I believe there was considerable merit in the stand he took, provided that the matter is not allowed to drop because of the difficulties now being met. If the Department of Public Works will give a guarantee to put an item in the estimates to keep on with this work—and I am not suggesting that the minister should keep on with a method that has not proved successful—but if he will give the assurance that attempts will be made to remove the danger, that is all we are entitled to ask. He has said that he would be criticized if he spent money on this without obtaining results. He would be criticized, and criticized from this side of the house.

That has been the practice in parliament, and we should not press him to undertake work where he is satisfied that he will not succeed. But no matter how difficult it is, the removal of Ripple Rock is of great importance. In the light of the engineering feats which have been accomplished in the world in the last few years, surely we are not going to allow ourselves to be baffled by this situation. The minister should give the committee an undertaking that every effort will be continued for the removal of Ripple Rock. The minister has said that engineers had been consulted in New York, but I suggest that they could be brought on the scene, and their opinions obtained. When that is done I am sure some means will be found for removing the rock. If large expenditures are undertaken, but without success, I will assure the minister that so far as I am concerned I shall support him if the question is brought up in the house.

Mr. RICHARD (Gloucester): I should like to take a few minutes to make a few general remarks on the subject now being discussed, because it relates to the fishing industry, an industry which I am sure—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. We are discussing the item for the chief engineer's branch.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. RICHARD (Gloucester): I wish to speak about wharves and dredging, which would come under this item. The hon. member for Gaspé touched upon these two subjects, and since they are related to the fishing industry I believe I am entitled to speak. I would not speak at all at this time if I had thought all hon. members had understood what was said by the hon. member for Gaspé. He has expressed facts which I would urge in connection with the fishing population, and the problems he has set out are, I believe, identical with those of the fishing population in my constituency in New Brunswick, and in the maritime provinces generally.

All hon. members realize that during the war many projects had to be abandoned. However, now that we are about to enter the period of reconstruction, let me point out to the Minister of Public Works that we are in need of many improvements and many facilities to promote the fishing industry in the maritime provinces. I should hope that when he considers the problems pointed out by the hon. member for Gaspé, and the promise he made to the hon. member, he would also keep my section of New Brunswick in mind, because we have similar problems. There is a certain attitude which I do not approve in the Department of Public Works with reference to new undertakings. I do not blame the officials. But on occasions when I have approached them respecting the construction of new projects I have always been told that it was impossible because the revenue at the point in question was not sufficient to warrant the expenditure. I do not blame the officials because they are following a policy. But I think the policy is wrong. I do not think the necessity for a certain public work should be gauged by the actual revenue at that point. That should not be the criterion. I think what should also be considered is the potential revenue that might be derived if proper facities were provided.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. RICHARD (Gloucester): The hon. member says "hear, hear" and I presume that members from the west would say the same. The maritime provinces, during the last thirty or forty years when great developments were taking place in other parts of the country in the matter of railways and canals, did not suggest that the actual revenue to be derived from the start of such construction should be considered, but the potential revenue if the great open spaces were opened up and developed, and we hope that the same policy will be applied to the maritimes.

Our most important industry in the maritimes is the fishing industry, and I want to emphasize that public works are linked with the success of our most important industry. We admit that in the maritimes we do not possess great wealth. As I look toward the west I see the great forest resources of British Columbia, that great wheat basket in the western plains, the rich forest and mining resources of Quebec and Ontario. But in the maritimes we do not possess great natural resources. Therefore our most important industry, the fishing industry, should be developed to the hilt. This cannot be done unless the fisherman has adequate facilities and the protection which he needs. I have heard in this house many a recital of the hardships of the farmers of the west and other parts of this dominion. I am not acquainted, I regret to say, although I hope to be some day, with conditions in the west. I know, however, that the farmer has a hard life. But it is nothing compared with that of the fisherman. There is no comparison whatever between the two. The fisherman starts out for two or three weeks fishing in the treacherous waters of the north Atlantic, never knowing whether he will return to his family. When he does return he has not the facilities, the wharves and breakwaters, to approach the shore and protect his boat and gear. The farmer's hardships are nothing compared with those of the fisherman.

Let us look forward to what the fishing industry might be if proper facilities were provided. We must remember also that the youth of to-day will not stand for the hardships of the pioneers of yesterday. He wants something better than his forefathers had and which he knows he should get. If we really want our young men to take up fishing as a vocation we have to give them the facilities which they should have. Study the figures of the returns which the fisherman gets in normal times, not the higher prices they are getting now, and the damages sometimes running into hundreds of dollars, wiping out the earnings of a whole year's work or two years which he sometimes suffers when his boat is smashed against the shore because of lack of proper protection. I know communities which have been in existence for over a hundred years in the northern part of New Brunswick and where fishing has been the mainstay of the people, which still lack these facilities. I do not blame the minister and his officials. It is the policy which has been followed for years that is to blame.

The other day I asked for a little improvement on a wharf. The capital expenditure to improve it would be about $800, and the annual maintenance, $200. The officials of this department pointed out to me that the revenue was not sufficient. I admitted it. But that wharf was not built for revenue purposes. It was built to accommodate the fishermen who go out into the ocean and produce wealth for this country running into thousands of dollars—untold wealth if they were only provided with proper facilities. I also pointed out that over this same wharf $350,000 worth of sea products was handled, all of which went as a contribution to the country's wealth. It helped to support a number of people; it provided revenue for our railways. Therefore I say that the actual revenue of the wharf should not be the criterion as to whether an expenditure should be made for improvements. We should rather look forward and consider how such improvements might develop the fishing industry.

I am told, and I have it for a certainty, that a number of firms are willing to come and establish themselves in our fishing communities if they can be assured that the fishermen will have proper landing facilities so that these firms can be guaranteed a steady supply. Remember that the fishing industry has changed considerably in the last few years, and therefore we must change our policy to meet those changing conditions.

I hope the Minister of Public Works will be as generous in dealing with these problems in the maritimes as his predecessor in office was, even to other parts of the dominion. We are only asking for the maritimes what we are entitled to. We do not ask for works to be constructed just for the sake of spending money. If I ever looked upon a wharf and thought I had asked for money to be spent on it just for the sake of spending money I would be ashamed and think that wharf was a monument to false judgment on my part. We are asking only what we are entitled to. I know it has been impossible for the department to undertake certain public works during the past five or six years, but from now on let it study our problems in the maritimes so that we will get our just share of assistance.

Mr. HAZEN: I would point out to the Minister of Public Works and to the members from British Columbia, as the hon. member for Gaspe has already done, that all menaces to navigation are not confined to British Columbia. In my constituency there is a reef known as Hilliard's reef that has proved itself a menace to navigation. The board of trade of the city from which I come have on more than one occasion called the attention of the government to the dangers of that reef, but nothing was ever done about it. As a consequence a ship went aground there a year or two ago through the fault of somebody, resulting in a loss of over $4,000,000. The minister said, while Ripple Rock was being discussed so vigorously a few minutes ago, that if the members here could convince him of a feasible way of removing the obstacle he would undertake the work. I wonder if the minister could give assurance to the people in my constituency that he will remove the rock there if they can convince him that it is feasible to do so.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I know more about Ripple Rock than I do about the one in my hon. friend's constituency.

Mr. HAZEN: If we could convince you that there is a feasible way of removing that rock would you give your best consideration to having it removed?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): You would not want me to make a commitment without looking into the whole matter. Otherwise I would have to make commitments for every rock in every harbour.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—Dredging—
299. Maritime provinces, $769,020.

Mr. HAZEN: What dredging is it planned to do in New Brunswick and will any dredging be done at Dipper Harbour?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I could give a list of the proposed dredging in the maritime provinces. Dredge No. 4 will operate at Bathurst, to remove 55,000 scow measure yards at a cost of $38,500. Dredge No. 5 will operate at Yarmouth to dredge 1,000,000 cubic yards at a cost of $34,000. Dredge No. 9 will operate at Charlottetown, Wood Island, Georgetown and Summerside at a cost of $46,900. Dredge No. 13 will operate at Cariboo and Pictou at a cost of $48,000. Dredge No. 14 at Summerside, Wood Island, Little Sands, Georgetown, Graham's Pond and Rocky Point, $7,000. Dredge No. 15, LeHave Islands, Vogler's Cover and Hunts Point, $7,500. Dredge No. 16, Shag Harbour, The Hawk, West Baccro, $7,500. Dredge No. 17, Red Head, Naufrage, Souris, Poplar Point, South Cardigan, Lower Montague, and Beach Point, $8,000. Dredge No. 18, Carey's Passage, Pondville, Petit de Grat, West Arichat, Troy Pond, Skinners Cove, Little Harbour and Ogden's Pond, $5,700. Dredge No. 19, Murphy's Pond, McKay's Point, Walker's Cove, Little Judique Harbour and Port Hood Island, $5,700. Dredge Pownal No. 2, Cheticamp Point, Margaree Harbour, Cheticamp Beach, Victoria and Charlottetown, $27,200. Dredge No. 115, Dingwall, $136,000. Those are the places where our dredges will operate.

Mr. HAZEN: I notice in the details on page 198 of the estimates there is an item covering maintenance and operation, one covering new plant and another covering contract and day labour works. Under which item would that work come?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member will notice there is one item covering temporary assistance and wages, which would cover the wages of the crews. Then farther down on the page there is maintenance and operation, $276,825.

Mr. HAZEN: It would be included in that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. McLURE: While a certain amount of dredging has been provided for Prince Edward Island, I should like to mention one item which I drew to the minister's attention last year and again this fall, at Rustico harbour. This dredging is needed by the fishermen. It has been a number of years since any dredging has been done and the bay has filled up. This makes it inconvenient for the fishermen because, after they enter the harbour, they have to go the length of the bay up to the creek. It would not be an expensive job and it would be of great help to the fishermen. If this dredging were done the fishermen could bring their boats in at low tide and land at their own wharves. While no provision has been made in the estimates for doing this work this year, I want to impress, on behalf of the fishermen of Rustico, that the minister must give consideration to this dredging.

Mr. WINTERS: I notice in the particulars there is an item of $158,900 for new plant, and I was wondering if any new dredging equipment for Nova Scotia is to be purchased under that item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This increase is to replace worn-out scows attending our various dredges and to purchase six tugs from War Assets Corporation. There will be one tug for dredge No. 4; to complete two steel scows under contract with the Saint John Dry Dock Company to replace two scows sold. For dredge No. 5, one steel coal scow to replace scow lost when on tow by navy from Sydney to Yarmouth. For dredge No. 16, one wooden scow to replace scow in very bad condition; contract with M. C. McKay and Son. $3,500. For dredge No. 16, new hull under contract, M. C. McKay and Son; old hull bad condition, $8,000. For dredge No. 17, one wooden scow urgently required as only one at present with this dredge, $3,500. For dredge No. 18, one wooden scow under contract, R. A. Douglas, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, replacing worn-out scow, $4,100. To purchase of six tugs from War Assets Corporation under negotiation at present, $80,000.

Mr. WINTERS: Is the department considering the purchase of new dredges?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not under these estimates.

Mr. HAZEN: Would it be possible to have a breakdown of contract and day labour works?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The list is quite a long one:

Bay St. Lawrence	$4,050
Belfrey Gut	300
Broad Cove	No estimate
Burke's Head	10,650
Cherry Hill	No estimate
Falls Point	5,584
L'Acheveque	20,179
McCreadyville	12,250
Paul's Point	45
Petit de Grat (Landry's)	989
Petit de Grat (Martells)	6,000
Smithville	9,832
Trenton	15,414
Troy Pond	450
Upper Port Latour	1,444
Upper Port Latour	No estimate
Wallace	21,800
Dipper Harbour	13,500
St. Andrews	10,600
Cape Bald	17,420
Bottsford	6,700
Campbellton	No estimate
Cocagne Bar	18,800
Dalhousie	10,500
Little Shemogue	6,000
Richibucto	No estimate
Shippigan	3,600

Mr. STANFIELD: I did not hear the minister say anything about Parrsboro, Nova Scotia. Has the department any request for dredging that harbour?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is not in the estimates and I do not recall having received any request. I will look into the matter.

Mr. ISNOR: I was interested in the discussion that took place this afternoon in connection with Ripple Rock. I am not going to transgress the rules by discussing that question, but it was a matter of interest to me to note the manner in which the members from the Pacific coast advanced their claim for expenditures.

There is one item in which I am particularly interested and which I believe will come under this vote. It is a problem for the engineering branch of the Department of Public Works, and the matter is one that I have brought to the attention of the department and of the minister on more than one occasion. I refer to the situation that exists at Devil's Island. This is a lonely spot about seven miles by sea from the docks of Halifax city and half a mile from the shores of eastern passage, a small fishing and farming hamlet on the east mainland, where a tiny wedge of slate rock forces its way above the swelling tides and rolling breakers of the Atlantic. In the past, I admit, a considerable amount of money has been spent in connection with breakwaters, but unfortunately it has not provided the protection which is required to enable the fishermen to carry on their pursuits as such.

I cannot do better, in attempting to describe this locality, than to quote the words of Miss May C. O'Regan. She says:

> Remote, grim and desolate, devoid of trees, swept by winds which carry off the sparse soil, the tiny dot just outside the entrance to Halifax harbour, to-day merits the name of Devil's Island even more than it did four generations ago when a little colony of fishermen and pilots settled there to be near the sources of their living.

I emphasize those words, "swept by winds." I am asking the Minister of Public Works to be good enough to go into this matter more fully than apparently he has done in the past. It is extremely difficult and sometimes impossible to get medical help to this island. The district can be serviced by planes, but at certain times it is impossible to land either from a boat or from a plane, and we would be pleased if the minister would give us some assurance that this matter will be looked into.

An hon. MEMBER: Perhaps a bridge.

Mr. ISNOR: If the minister would give us the assurance of a bridge we would be satisfied, but I am not asking for unreasonable things. I am simply asking him to go into the question of providing a breakwater which will serve the purpose. I believe I have given him in the past practically all the information that would be helpful in dealing with this problem, but if he feels that it would cost too much money to erect and maintain a breakwater on the island so as to afford the protection which the people who live there desire, then I would ask him to present to the government, for their consideration, a scheme whereby there might be provided some place on the mainland where these people can be properly housed and given the attention which we expect human beings to receive in these modern days.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ISNOR: No, it is not carried. It is a human need I am talking about. I do not know how closely the minister has followed the doings of the lightkeepers and those who dwell in these remote places along our Atlantic coast, but if he has not been in touch with the situation there, I suggest to him that he read an interesting book written by E. M. Robertson, wife of the lightkeeper at one of the lighthouses on the Atlantic coast of Nova Scotia. If he will do this he will realize something of the hardships with which these people have to put up day in and day out, particularly during stormy seasons. I could dwell at great length in describing their hardships, but I will not make myself unpopular at this late hour by taking up more of the time of the committee, though it is an important question and I am making a plea for the satisfaction of a crying human need. I hope the Minister of Public Works will give this matter the attention which I believe it deserves.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. ISNOR: No, it is not carried. May I have an assurance from the minister?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member may rest assured that the moment the house closes, I will read the book and give attention to the request that has been made. I say that seriously.

Mr. ISNOR: That sounds all right, but I am in the position of members of the opposition when they rise in their places and present a case. I expect a little more consideration than simply to have the minister say that when the house closes he will read the book. It is not the book that I am talking about; I am talking about the plight of the people on Devil's Island. I am asking whether favourable consideration could not be given to the construction of a suitable breakwater which would meet the requirements of these people, or, if not that their problem be taken into consideration and a decision made as to the best scheme to follow. If it is not possible to build or repair the breakwater, then some scheme should be devised to bring these people to the mainland so that they may enjoy the privilege which the minister and the rest of us enjoy in these modern times.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I wish to apologize if the hon. member thinks I was treating his suggestions lightly. I listened most attentively to what the hon. gentleman said, and I was trying to recall the numerous cases which were brought to my attention in my office by other hon. members. I am giving attention to the particular case he has mentioned and I shall continue to do so. I am sorry if I offended him.

Mr. ISNOR: I wish to thank the minister for adopting a more serious tone with respect to this matter.

300. Ontario and Quebec, $583,840.

Mr. HENDERSON: Since I am one of the few members present from Ontario and since I have not the problem of rocks and harbours I should like to say a few words on a drainage scheme, known as Running creek. This Running creek is a small offshoot from the St. Clair river. It leaves the river in an unusual way. Most creeks run into the river, but this particular creek near the town of Wallaceburg leaves the river, goes across the country, meets with another creek at the town of Wallaceburg and then finds its way down to lake St. Clair.

In 1905 the Department of Public Works did dredge running creeks. They did it in those days to help out the sugar beet industry. At that time they inaugurated the sugar beet industry in that section of the country and a factory was built at Wallaceburg. That was before the advent of good roads, and in order to assist the farmers who lived six or eight miles out to get their sugar beets into the factory the department dredged that creek. The creek is now filled up. If it were dredged it would serve two purposes. In the first place, that section of the country consists of low-lying land; we call it Little Holland. You pretty nearly have to wear your wooden shoes when you go there, particularly after a rainstorm. There are two or three pumping works there where they have to pump water off the land into this particular creek. Of course they have to pay a municipal tax for that purpose. It was under a municipal scheme.

If the dredging were done it would provide better health services for Wallaceburg, because the little creek water runs for a good many miles before it comes to that town. It runs through several little towns and the sewage disposal is not very well taken care of. In the summer time, around Wallaceburg the water becomes quite stagnant in Running creek. When it was dredged out a number of years ago the blue water left the St. Clair river and came down to the Skey river. You could trace it all the way into the town of Wallaceburg, and the other water was washed away and the town kept healthy. At the present time it is filled up. Wallaceburg is one of the most progressive little towns in western Ontario. Its citizens are all cooperatively-minded, they all work together for the good of their town. They are very much interested in this matter at the present time and hope that we can get the Department of Public Works interested in carrying out that dredging scheme. I believe last fall the engineers got their own local engineer and he made a survey of it. I believe there will be two or three townships interested in it.

I notice in the estimates that there are $200,000 more allocated to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec than was the case last year. That would be about $100,000 each. I was wondering whether it would be possible for the Department of Public Works to assist municipal councils in a drainage scheme of this kind, particularly when the department is not taking care of their own local waters, but is taking care of international waters which leave the river and go across the country.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall have my engineers report on the case the hon. member has just submitted. The hon. member understands that if it is completely a drainage project we do not contribute to that, but I shall see what we can do about it.

Mr. HENDERSON: It is drainage, but the water is international water which leaves the river. I thought we would have to take care of international waters.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have no estimates at all for drainage purposes; I am sorry. We are discussing item 300. We have no money for drainage purposes under this item, nor under any item.

301. Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories, $269,550.

Mr. BRYCE: I had intended telling the minister about some of the hazards of shipping on lake Winnipeg and the Red river, up to the harbour of Winnipeg, but since the hour is late I shall refrain from doing so. I want the minister to know that I am going to take these matters up with him, and I hope he will give me an attentive ear. Are the dredges on lake Winnipeg in full operation now, or are they still operating on the war schedule?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My information is that we are operating at full time in Manitoba.

Mr. BRYCE: Can the minister tell me what they are doing at Warren's Landing to straighten the channel there? The department made a survey there last year and put in new range lines. If the minister has not the information now, perhaps he could let me have it later.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall send it over to the hon. member.

Mr. BENTLEY: I do not know just how big a field dredging takes in. We do not have a great deal of that work in Saskatchewan, although I believe there is some work along that line that could be done. I was absent this afternoon in the industrial relations committee when the bill to beautify Ottawa was passed, which I would have opposed. Could the minister possibly find an appropriation somewhere to do a little dredging in the Swift Current river. We need a swimming-pool there which would help us out quite a bit.

302. British Columbia and Yukon, $386,080.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: There is just one point I should like to bring up. I do not wish to criticize or to raise the devil too much with the minister because I see he has an item in here for Hazelton; therefore I shall go fairly easily.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That has been voted.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I am not going to speak on that. I should like to deal with dredging at Dalketla slough. I received a letter from the district engineer, Mr. K. W. Morton, of New Westminster, with an outline of the projects contemplated for the Pacific coast, and in that was $301,950 for a breakwater at Wiah Point. I do not see that included in the estimates here. Has it been dropped?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am informed that the estimates which were given to the hon. member were probably a post-war and timing project. They are not in these estimates. I shall look up the item mentioned by the hon. member and see what can be done about it, but not at this session.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Under these contemplated post-war projects, I should like to bring in this matter; along with Wiah Point, dredging should be done at the village of Massett, so that the fishermen can go over and live in that district. It is important to the fishermen who go out on long-line trawling in that area. It would build up the Queen Charlotte islands. It is a marvellous harbour if it was improved.

Mr. PEARKES: I hesitate to rise and urge a complaint against another British Columbia constituency, particularly since that constituency is represented by an hon. member on the other side of the house; but all the filth from the Fraser valley is brought down and deposited in my constituency. I want it removed. The silt from the Fraser river comes down and is filling up the harbours of Nanaimo, Ladysmith and Chemainus; the harbours in the Gulf islands; Sidney; the great harbour of Victoria—about which I shall have something to say in a moment—and the entrance of the San Juan river.

First, I want to deal with the entrance of the San Juan river. That is the very centre of an extensive logging country. Every year hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of logs are exported through that harbour. The entrance of the harbour leading to Port Renfrew is silting up to such an extent that the tugs of the Malahat Logging Company and the Hemmingsen-Cameron Logging Company are having the greatest difficulty in getting their logs over that bar. I suggest that one thing we need in this country at the present time is lumber; and if from the heart of the lumber country we cannot export our logs to the mills on the mainland because of a lack of dredges, then this department must make a strenuous effort to provide the necessary dredges so that these logs can be exported.

That condition exists not only on the southern coast of Vancouver island but also on the eastern coast, at those other harbours I mentioned: Nanaimo, Ladysmith and Chemainus, where the big mills of the Victoria Lumber Company are situated, and at the harbour of Sidney, where we have ferries running not only from the mainland of British Columbia but also from the United States. All those harbours are silting up. All those harbours demand immediately the dredging operations they were denied during the war years, and one can understand why they were denied that work. A great deal of work is now needed, not only to make up for what should have been done during the war years, but in order to get the lumber from Vancouver island out to the mills, and to the reconstruction projects all over Canada.

I want to say one word about the harbour of Victoria, which is also silting up. As the minister no doubt knows, recommendations have been made as to the purchase of Riffett docks and the development of what is known as fishermen's harbour in Victoria. I believe the minister has this question under consideration. I should like to ask the minister what is being done and how far the negotiations have proceeded in connection with those two projects in the harbour of Victoria. I should like also to have the minister to tell us how many dredges we have on the Pacific coast. I listened with amazement a few minutes ago to references to dredge No. 11, No. 12, No. 13, No. 14, No. 15, No. 16 and No. 17 being employed on the Atlantic coast. I do not believe we have anything like that number on the Pacific coast.

[Mr. Pearkes.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: Before the minister replies, may I tell my hon. friend that the committee will note with great appreciation this "war of the Georges."

Mr. PEARKES: I should like an answer to my question.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sorry, but under item 302 my hon. friend is discussing matters which come under item 321, where he will see:

Victoria—toward dredging, $100,000.
Victoria—fishing harbourage, $67,000.

The contract for the fishing harbour has not yet been given out, but I understand that we are calling for tenders in the very near future.

The other question was as to how many dredges we have on the Pacific coast. We have four dredges, two tugs, six scows, two motor boats, sixty-four pontoons and one pile-driver barge.

Mr. PEARKES: I am afraid the motor boats will not do much dredging, will they?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know. I am no expert, but they might help.

Mr. PEARKES: What about Riffett wharf at Victoria? What is the position of those negotiations?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sorry I have not the information here, but I shall let my hon. friend know. I shall send a request to the official to prepare a report and shall give my hon. friend the information.

Mr. PEARKES: Negotiations have been under way for some time, and that is all linked up with the development of the harbour at Victoria and the dredging necessary there.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have two items covering what the hon. gentleman has asked. We are now calling for tenders as to the first item, and we are negotiating in regard to the fishing harbour. That is about all the information I have now, unless I look over the file.

Mr. PEARKES: Surely the minister can tell me how far those negotiations have gone. We have been talking about this matter for the past three years; it has been actively discussed in all the newspapers month after month.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. gentleman will find those two items concerning Victoria on page 46 of the estimates under item 321. I can read what notes I have here and give him the information they contain as to this item of fishing harbourage. This item is to provide for dredging and the construction of an approach landing pier, gangway and floats. Proposed work is urgently required to accommodate an additional 220 fishing boats which have no permanent place to moor at present. The proposed work includes the removal of approximately 22,000 cubic yards of gravel, silt and so on; constructing main float sixteen feet by 1,770 feet; constructing eight floats ten feet by 200 feet with moorings, constructing approach landing pier and gangway. The estimated cost for the removal of 22,000 cubic yards of gravel at eighty cents per cubic yard is $17,600; for floats, gangway and pier, $48,958; for inspection, advertising and contingencies, $442, making a total of $67,000 for that one item. We are not on the right item. I wonder if the hon. member would let this item pass and when we get to item 321—

Mr. REID: No, it is not carried at the present time. We cannot get away without saying something about what the hon. member for Nanaimo said about the Fraser river. It was nice that he said it with a smile, but that smile will not appear on Hansard. It was a kind of slur about what the Fraser river brings down. From what I know about his riding—and I lived there for many years—it is just what his riding needs.

Mr. PEARKES: May I suggest that the Nanaimo riding needs little free silt.

Mr. REID: Of course Nanaimo has deteriorated since I left there—because I did happen to live there for a certain number of years. But to keep the record clear, he knows very well that what the Fraser river brings down does not go farther than the middle of the gulf. You can see the line of demarcation. But it is just too bad it does not go any farther.

Having disposed of that, I should like to speak about something more practical in connection with dredges. We have operating on the Fraser river two dredges. It was news to me that there were four of them, when the minister said so a minute ago. But the two dredges operating on the Fraser river—and I think sometimes in Nanaimo and sometimes at Victoria—are not sufficient at all for the work in British Columbia.

Those dredges are forty-five or fifty years old, and they are inadequate. I should like the minister seriously to tell hon. members from British Columbia—not myself particularly, because we are all interested in the matter—when we are to have modern dredges, fit and able to keep up with the work required. I know he was presented with a large brief by the New Westminster board of trade, and they set out just what industry's position was in regard to water transportation and dredging requirements. I am not going to read into the record what these firms have said, because it will take too much time. But if the minister has read it—and I hope he has—he will realize that there is great need for modern dredges for the Fraser river.

During the period of the war a great deal of work was done by these dredges, with the result that siltation took place on the river. In many places industries were entirely blocked because, as is well known, thousands of tons of fine silt or sand come down the Fraser river every year, and are deposited at various places along the bank. If this is not taken out this year, twice as much will have to be taken out next year. Many places have become almost impassable for boats, so far as reaching the wharves is concerned.

We are years behind the time, and I would ask the minister to give some assurance that the matter of new dredges will be looked into and considered seriously—not just by saying, "Oh, well, after the session is over we will give the matter some consideration." Appeals have been made to him for the last three or four years, and we were told that the war was on. But, as the hon. member for Nanaimo has said, the war is now over, and we want to cash in by getting some results.

I would appreciate it if the minister would give us some assurance as to what will be done in the matter of dredges. I would refer, too, to the railway bridge across the Fraser river at New Westminster. Siltation has been taking place until it has become an expensive item to keep that part of the river dredged. This year it was suggested that a model be set up by the national research council, with a view to finding out what steps could or should be taken to keep that portion of the river free from silting up. It has become so serious that it would be necessary to keep a dredge working continuously at that one spot, if satisfactory results were to be obtained.

I do not know whether the minister has seen the model, but one of his engineers took me to see it in operation. I suggest that that model is in the wrong place. No man who has seen the Fraser river only once, and then has returned to Ottawa and attempts to carry out his experiments three thousand miles away, can operate successfully. I suggest that if the minister has any say at all, so far as the national research council is concerned, he should ask that this model and the experimentation be taken out to British Columbia, so that the work could be carried on more effectively than it can be done here, so far from the coast.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: It being so close to seven o'clock, may I call it seven o'clock?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I wish—

Mr. REID: I should have an answer in connection with this matter of dredging. Monday morning it will be forgotten.

Mr. FULTON: We will bring it up again.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have had a discussion about, not four new dredges, but one new dredge on the coast. I thought that would be a good start. We are looking into the matter and, without giving a definite assurance, I may tell the hon. member that we will consider most seriously the construction of a new dredge.

As to the silt near the bridge, and the model mentioned, I must admit I have not seen the model.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): It does not mean anything, anyway.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I might ask the national research council if they would send the model to British Columbia.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): It is made out of plasticine.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am not very well acquainted with the model, or the condition of silt under the bridge. But I shall have my engineer, who showed the hon. member the model, see if it can be sent out, to help work out there.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move that the committee rise, and report the resolution.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member for Kootenay West.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, report the resolutions and ask leave to sit again.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk)

INCOME TAX—MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES

Mr. McMASTER:

1. Is the method stated on pages 235-238 of the report of the Royal Commission on Cooperatives the one adopted by the department in assessing and collecting income tax on mutual fire insurance companies?
2. If so, what is the authority of the minister in so assessing the said companies?

Mr. McCANN:

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.

REPATRIATION OF JAPANESE

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. Was one Kosho Matano, a naturalized Canadian of Japanese origin, who served in the Canadian forces in the first world war, among those repatriated to Japan this year?
2. Was he confined in the British Columbia mental hospital at the time of his departure for Japan?
3. If so, how long had he been a patient in the mental hospital?
4. Did he sign the repatriation form being circulated among those of Japanese origin?
5. If so, did an R.C.M.P. officer or constable secure his signature?
6. How many other patients of Japanese origin in the British Columbia mental hospital have been sent to Japan?
7. How many from mental hospitals in the other provinces?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. Since January, 1933.
4. No.
5. No.
6. One was deported by Immigration branch; 15 went at their own request.
7. None.

Mr. STIRLING:

1. How many Japanese left Greenwood, British Columbia, for Japan (a) prior to January 1, 1946; (b) since January 1, 1946?
2. On what dates did they leave and how many were in each group?
3. Of the total, how many were (a) nationals; (b) citizens of Canada, by naturalization; (c) native born?

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. (a) 10; (b) 185.
2. 10 left for Japan August, 1943; 134 left for Japan June, 1946; 51 left for Japan August, 1946.
3. (a) 26; (b) 56; (c) 32 Canadian born 16 years of age and over; 81 Canadian born minors.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

A.R.P. FIRE-FIGHTING EQUIPMENT

Mr. DORION:

1. What quantity of A.R.P. fire-fighting equipment has been disposed of by the government?
2. What quantity of such equipment was sold to municipal corporations?
3. What was the sale price of such equipment?

CANADIAN-SOVIET FRIENDSHIP LEAGUE—MEETINGS IN RESEARCH COUNCIL BUILDING

Mr. HLYNKA:

1. Have any meetings been held by the Canadian-Soviet Friendship League in the auditorium of the National Research Council building during the years 1944, 1945 and 1946?
2. If so, how many and on what dates?
3. What was the subject of discussion at each of these meetings, and who presided?
4. Was there any charge for the use of the auditorium for these meetings? If so, what charges were made for each meeting and to whom was the money paid?
5. What was the name of the individual who applied for the use of the auditorium on each occasion?
6. What is the name of the official or officials responsible for renting the auditorium to the above-mentioned organization?

SUBSIDIES TO PROVINCES

Mr. REID:

What have been the total amounts given by way of assistance or subsidies to the provinces of Alberta, Manitoba and Saskatchewan in the years 1940 to 1945?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF B.C. REGIONAL WAR LABOUR BOARD AS TO INCREASES ABOVE TEN CENTS AN HOUR

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) asked me if any direction or suggestions had gone forward from my office with respect to decisions being made by the regional war labour board of British Columbia within the limit of ten cents an hour increase. I have checked up as I promised and I can assure the hon. member that no such direction or suggestion has been advanced. It may be that the regional war labour board of British Columbia, in view of the sittings of the industrial relations committee of the House of Commons, feel that they should wait until the committee has reported to this house before making final findings and directions in some cases.

PASSPORTS

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE" OF AUGUST 12

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if the item in the Montreal Gazette of this morning, entitled "Suspicion in false passport ring points to federal cabinet member" has been drawn to his attention, and if he has any report to make to the house in connection thereto?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Prime Minister): Before I got out of bed this morning I began to have questions asked me as to what I knew about this report in the Gazette and its reproduction as a dispatch of the Canadian Press. Just as soon as I got to the office I started to telephone myself to others to find out if I could get any information about it. So far I have not been able to get anything that I could convey to the house. There may be something—

Mr. MacINNIS: Something in it?

Mr. ST. LAURENT:—on which the dispatch is built, but I have not yet been able to trace it. If the writer of the dispatch were to give me more precise information perhaps it would assist me in running down whatever it may be, if there is anything, around which it is written. The paper has another dispatch about a reshuffle in the cabinet, and if the one about the passports is not built on any surer foundation than that one, I do not think we need be very much concerned about it.

ARMY SUPPLIES

PRESS REPORT AS TO DISCARDING OF SHOES AND SLIPPERS—SHIRTS, TOWELS, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): On Saturday I directed a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply as to the disclosure of the name of the merchant or merchandiser who had left or had abandoned shoes on the dump at Point St. Charles. The minister was good enough to indicate at that time that he had already given that information. I have run down the matter as far as I can and I do not think the minister has given the information. I should be glad if he would now correct the answer he gave on Saturday.

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I ran down the question myself and I found I gave the address to the press gallery representative of the Montreal Star. I gave it to him in writing. He had been pressing me for it and I understood it would be published. I found later that his lawyer advised him it would be very unwise for the paper to publish it and it was not published. However, I will get the name. I intended to have it this morning, but I will get it and I shall be glad to give it to the house.

EXCISE ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 371, to amend the Excise Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 372, to amend the Special War Revenue Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—"Net premiums."

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister be good enough to explain a little further the effect of the change from the section as it now stands.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend may recall that prior to the proposed amendment mutual insurance companies other than life insurance companies were taxed on gross premiums rather than on net. This section amends the definition in order that the same principle shall apply to that type of company as to the others which were previously taxed on a net basis.

Mr. HACKETT: I have not been able to get a copy of the bill. Does this delete as part of the premium the interest on deposits made on the premium deposit plan?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am advised that this does eliminate the interest item to which my hon. friend refers, and it puts on a net basis all companies other than life.

Mr. HACKETT: I am sorry, but I have not been able to get a copy of the bill. I know the definition of net premiums in the statute; it includes, with regard to the reciprocals and the factory mutuals, interest on amounts deposited on the premium deposit plan, which it seems to me is more in the nature of income on capital than a premium paid for insurance. I understand from the minister that that particular part of the definition has been deleted.

Mr. ABBOTT: I understand that the same definition of net premiums applies to the deposits of mutuals as to the other mutuals under the proposed new law. I do not know whether that assists by hon. friend in appreciating the definition.

Mr. HACKETT: If that is so, I am satisfied.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is so.

Mr. SENN: I wish to ask the minister a question with regard to farmers' mutuals, which are purely mutual, where they take the premium note and assess it periodically. I suppose the total premiums are taken for the year and deductions made for losses which are sustained, and other expenses of operation, and what is left, as I understand it, is the net premium, and that is being taxed. Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know exactly how these mutuals operate, but in view of the terms of my hon. friend's question I believe he is confusing income tax with premium tax. This is the tax on net premiums.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 369, to amend the customs tariff.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Schedule "A" amended.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In view of the fact that many hon. members have no copies of this bill, I should like to ask that it stand until hon. members have had the opportunity to see it.

Mr. ABBOTT: It was distributed on Saturday morning.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is not on my file.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There has not been much time to study this bill. Can we take it that the items here are exactly those which were in the schedule?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, they are exactly the same as the ones which were discussed, as my hon. friend will recall, in some detail in committee. There is no change in the items in any respect whatever. The bill is in the usual form to amend the Customs Tariff.

Mr. SHAW: I am not sure whether it would be in order on this item to discuss the general question of tariffs which go beyond the specific items contained in the bill. I have received a complaint from a certain bus company and I cannot find any other opportunity of bringing it up except on this section of the bill. I should like to know whether I am in order.

Mr. ABBOTT: If my hon. friend had thought of it a moment ago I think it would have been in order for him to do it on the motion for second reading, but I do not think it is in order in committee. My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, has yet to pass his estimates, and it will be in order for the hon. member for Red Deer to raise the question when these estimates are before the committee.

Mr. HACKETT: When are the estimates coming down?

Mr. MACKENZIE: As soon as the hon. member will allow us to bring them down.

On the schedule.

Mr. MacNICOL: When item 180e was before the house some time ago—I am now speaking from recollection— I believe I asked the minister whether he had any representations in opposition to the admission of engineer's plans as outlined in this item. My memory is that he said no, but he has had many since, has he not?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not many. I have had one.

Mr. MacNICOL: That particular one being from the Canadian engineering institute?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have had a representation from the Engineering Institute of Canada, Mr. Austin Wright, of Montreal, secretary, has written to me since the introduction of the resolutions and since they were passed in committee.

Mr. MacNICOL: I too have had a number of communications from Mr. Austin Wright. I received one this morning, but it is not before me at the moment. He points out that passage of this item will have a very serious effect on all that branch of Canadian engineering. As I said before, I can plainly see how it would have. I am wondering whether the minister or the department do not now wish to change this item, or whether they have looked into it thoroughly, because as one who in past years had a great deal to do with engineering plans I can plainly see that the admission without duty of engineering plans from the United States will have a deterring effect on the expansion of Canadian engineering in this regard. Has the minister had it looked into, or is he familiar with the subject?

Mr. ABBOTT: I must say I am not as familiar with the subject as the hon. member for Davenport. I have looked into it, particularly since the discussion took place in the house and since I received the letter from Mr. Wright, the secretary of the Engineering Institute of Canada, relating to the matter. The purpose of including plans of this kind on the free list is to lower the cost of production in Canada by lowering the cost of the construction of industrial plants and the installation of machinery. It was thoroughly investigated by the tariff branch, and it is felt desirable to do this. Should it develop that it is injurious to the engineering profession in Canada it will, of course, be reconsidered, but the feeling is that it should be tested out first. In view of the investigations to which I have referred, it is felt that it is desirable to put plans of this kind on the free list, and that it will not be injurious to the profession in Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister says that the tariff board or tariff commission investigated the application of this item. Did they have before them representatives of the institute mentioned by the minister? Did they send notice to such bodies that the item was to be discussed and, if so, were any replies received?

Mr. ABBOTT: It was not as the result of a public hearing, of course, and I do not know whether or not notices were sent out, but I am told that the question was thoroughly looked into.

Mr. MacNICOL: I shall not further oppose the item at the moment, but this is something in connection with which I have had a good deal of experience, having drawn a multitude of engineering plans in certain lines. Personally I cannot see anything but disaster to certain branches of engineering in Canada through the admission to this country of engineering plans for the construction of buildings. I appreciate what certain people may have in mind, that they would like to bring in plans for a factory building duplicating one in the United States, and that they would like to bring in not only the construction plans but the engineering plans as well, but on the other hand I believe those plans should be drawn by Canadian engineers; and I say that for several reasons. Naturally in drawing their plans the United States engineers will specify certain lines of material, which in turn will be specified for the buildings being constructed in Canada. If contractors in Canada have to figure on United States material instead of Canadian material, and not only figure on it but use it in construction, as the minister can appreciate it will have a serious effect on several important firms in his own city of Montreal who make excellent engineering equipment. It is not necessary to mention them by name; they are splendid Canadian firms in the city of Montreal. If these United States engineering plans come in here specifying United States material it may have a severe effect on firms in the minister's own city. I suggest that if nothing can be done about the plans themselves, when specifications are brought in from the United States detailing American material, instructions should go out that Canadian material of equivalent manufacture and equivalent capacity be used instead. After all, the minister and I and others must think of these big cities, where there are many engineers and where they make much engineering equipment. In the minister's own city of Montreal there are many eminent engineers, and firms manufacturing excellent equipment. Would the minister care to comment on the use of Canadian material?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have taken careful note of what my hon. friend has said. He may rest assured that we shall watch the operation of this item very closely to see whether or not it has any injurious effect on the Canadian economy and the use of Canadian materials. If it has, he may be sure the item will be changed.

Mr. ISNOR: I should like to direct the minister's attention to item 703, dealing with baggage. Does this refer to the importation of luggage or baggage for resale?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am told that it does not relate to luggage brought in for resale, but only to travellers' luggage brought in under the $100 limitation which now exists.

Mr. JAENICKE: In several items, as for example the first two, there does not appear to be any change; the present rates are the same as the rates proposed according to the schedule filed on June 27. I should like to know why they are included in this amendment.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think I explained some of those when the items were considered in detail. Where there is no change in the rates, as my hon. friend points out, there is a change in the descriptive language of the item. For instance in item 1, dealing with horses, the change is the addition of "n.o.p." which means "not otherwise provided for." He will find other items where the rate of duty is the same but the item is inserted because of a change in description, perhaps a broadening of the description as contained in the tariff item.

Mr. JAENICKE: That did not show in the schedule when it was filed on June 27.

Mr. ABBOTT: The rates are the same as shown in the schedule of June 27. There has been no change in rates in this bill, no change whatever in the schedule.

Mr. McKAY: In connection with item 326k, concerning high thermal shock resisting glass parts, I should like to ask if any change has been made.

Mr. ABBOTT: The only change there was made in committee, where we dropped the words "in their own factories." Those words were contained in the item as it originally appeared in the resolution.

Mr. McKAY: Actually there has not been any change in the tariff?

Mr. ABBOTT: No change at all in the rate of duty.

Mr. McKAY: Then what is the purpose of this tariff item?

Mr. ABBOTT: I meant to say there was a change in the duty in the original resolution, but there has been no change since it was discussed in committee.

Mr. McKAY: What is the change?

Mr. ABBOTT: Formerly shock resisting glass parts of this kind were dutiable at the rate of 15 per cent. Now they are free.

DOMINION SUCCESSION DUTY ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 373, to amend the Dominion Succession Duty Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Substituted first schedule.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a question in connection with a situation which arises frequently, particularly in respect of smaller estates where an executor designate or an applicant for administration finds it impossible, owing to financial difficulties, to make payment of succession duties even though there are moneys in the bank. I offer to the minister a suggestion which comes from two or three sources. One of these, Mr. H. E. Keown, K.C., is a bencher of the law society of Saskatchewan. If the suggestion made here were adopted it would help materially an executor designate or an applicant for administration. I shall read from the letter, because I feel it sets out the facts more clearly than I could hope to do:

> Where there is a bank account the executor, after the application for letters probate or administration have been filed, is unable to issue a cheque until the necessary release is received from the dominion succession duty department. I take the position that succession duty due, either to the dominion or the province, is a first charge against the estate and should be paid.
> My practice has been to have the executor or administrator issue a cheque on the bank account payable to the department, forward the cheque to the department asking them to send the necessary release to deposit with the bank and hold the cheque a day or two. However, it usually works out that the release has not been received by the time the cheque comes through and the bank then returns the cheque unpaid, which causes considerable inconvenience.

This gentleman suggests that in order to improve the process of collection of succession duties a change be made, either by amendment to the act or by regulation, whereby an executor or administrator could issue the necessary cheque for payment, either to the dominion or to the province, or to both, notwithstanding the fact that the release had not been received from the respective departments. I do not think there is anything in the suggestion which would interfere with the routine practice, and I believe it would be beneficial to executors designate and applicants for administration.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. It does sound like a matter which could be handled administratively, as he has suggested, without amendment to the law. I am not sufficiently familiar with the practice in the common law provinces to know what is done in connection with an executor designate. But in my own province we often do adopt a practice somewhat similar to the one suggested. We arrange with the provincial succession duties office to take a cheque in payment of succession duties, the cheque being issued on the bank account before complete returns have been filed, and before the general waivers have been issued. The practice there is to give authorization to the bank to pay that cheque. In some cases where preliminary returns can be filed, if it is thought desirable to do so they will even release some other assets.

I am pleased to have my hon. friend's suggestion. My colleague the Minister of National Revenue has followed it closely. The matter will be discussed with departmental officials to see whether or not it would be practicable to arrange the administrative regulations so as to permit what the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. MacNICOL: Would an estate, part of which is in Maryland and part in Ontario, have to pay four separate succesion duties, namely to the dominion, to Ontario, to Maryland and to the United States?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is possible. The liability for succession duties depends both upon the situs of the assets and the domicile of the deceased at the time of death. The estate of a man who dies in Ontario would be liable for succession duties on all assets wherever situate, both for dominion and for provincial succession duty purposes. He can take credit for certain duties paid abroad, I understand; and my colleague the Minister of National Revenue informs me that under the tax agreement with the United States the estate would be able to take credit for duties paid to the United States, thereby to some extent eliminating double succession duties.

Mr. LOW: Has an agreement been reached with the old country in this respect?

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe it was approved in the house a few days ago.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Is the minister satisfied with the word "successor", a word which I do not believe is familiar in the common law? Is the word sufficiently defined to be familiar to the courts?

Mr. ABBOTT: The word "successor" is defined in the interpretation section of the Dominion Succession Duty Act, and I believe has been in the act since it was adopted. I have not given any special consideration from the legal point of view to the question whether the term is or is not appropriate. It is defined in paragraph (n) as follows: "'successor' means the person entitled under a succession." Then the word "succession" is defined at considerable length.

On section 2—Allowable deductions.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. FULTON: Has any effect been given to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver South on July 26, when the resolutions were being discussed, following which the minister said he would give the matter consideration? I cannot tell offhand from looking at the bill whether consideration has been given to it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I had intended making a statement, but I saw the hon. member for Vancouver South was not in the house. When the resolutions on which this bill is based were before the committee the hon. member for Vancouver South suggested that double rates should apply only in those provinces which consented to give up their succession duties, and that the present rates continue in force in those provinces which had not by agreement given up those duties. At that time I told the hon. member that I would explore his suggestion.

Upon looking into the matter I find that his suggestion was considered prior to the making of the offer to the provinces, but that it could not be adopted since it meant that the dominion law would not be uniform in application in all parts of Canada. I think hon. members will agree it would be highly improper under a dominion statute to levy one set of rates of duties for application in some provinces and a different set of rates for application in others. For this reason it was felt the hon. member's suggestion was not one which could be adopted.

Mr. FULTON: I do not think anyone will disagree with the suggestion that it would be unfair or inadvisable to levy different sets of rates. But could not the matter be taken care of by making a differential in the amount to be deducted? The act as it stands at present allows a successor to deduct from duties otherwise payable either the amount he pays to the provinces or fifty per cent of the duty otherwise payable, which ever is the lesser. It seems to me a third paragraph could be inserted providing that if the effect of the preceding two paragraphs is that a successor will now have to pay more duty than he would before the act came into force, he shall be allowed to deduct an amount so as to equalize his tax with that paid in the other provinces, or with that previously paid. Then the minister would be applying a uniform rate, and simply varying the amount of deduction.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not know whether I am quite right in this, but it seems to me the suggestion the hon. member is putting forward would be that in some provinces a man would be entitled to deduct a fixed amount, say up to fifty per cent of the dominion tax, whether he had paid it to the province or not. It seems to me it is clear that that would result in a person in one province paying a lesser sum than one in another.

Mr. FULTON: I was not referring to the question whether it was paid or not. If the effect of this bill is that the total tax to the successor both dominion and provincial, will be increased, then he should be allowed to make a larger deduction from the amount of the dominion tax than in the other province where the net result is different. In other words, if you had a uniform scale of rates it would simply allow the deductions to follow.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it would have exactly the effect I indicated a moment ago. If my hon. friend will reduce it to a concrete case I think he will see my point. Assuming that the dominion tax would be $200, the provincial tax would be $100, making a total of $300—that is as things stand now. If the dominion is doubling its rates the new dominion tax would be $400 while the tax in the province would still remain at $100. Under the proposed law he would be entitled to deduct from his dominion tax of $400 either the amount he has paid in the province or fifty per cent of the dominion tax, whichever is the lesser. In that case he would deduct $100 and his net dominion tax would be $300, the provincial tax remaining at $100. He would be paying the same tax as the man in another province whose dominion tax was $400.

Section 3 agreed to.

On the schedule.

Mr. PROBE: Perhaps the question I intend to ask will show my ignorance of succession duties generally, but I am happy to have that happen if I can obtain an answer. The schedule of rates shown here strikes me as being exceedingly generous to the person who receives an estate. Where a person receives an estate or a sum of money as a result of a bequest is there any tax levied by the federal government in addition to the regular succession duty tax? In the case of a $35,000 estate, a class A beneficiary would pay a tax of six per cent, which would amount to $2,100; then the rates for other classes of beneficiary go up slightly but none of them seems to be too burdensome when an estate of that magnitude is passed. Is that property or money also subject to some other tax?

Mr. ABBOTT: This is a capital amount received as a result of succession. My hon. friend has referred to an estate of $35,000. Such an estate left by a young or middle aged professional man might represent life insurance being left to his widow. It would represent his savings over a period of years and it is left to his widow and children to help take them over the rest of their lives. That estate would pay the tax indicated here, but the income in the form of dividends or whatever it is would be subject to income tax from the date of the man's death. The capital levy, if I may call it that, is the succession duty tax which is paid following the death of the deceased.

Mr. PROBE: The minister has taken the most compassionate case; that of an immediate widow.

Mr. IRVINE: Take the $5,000,000 one.

Mr. PROBE: I will still stick with this $35,000 estate; that is big enough for me to discuss. I am prepared to concede that there is a case for the widow, but the utter stranger, who would be considered a class D beneficiary, pays only ten per cent, so his capital accretion would be $31,500 net. There would be no further tax on that net amount except as it produces income.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. Of course when he dies it goes through the same process again if it is still there.

Mr. PROBE: When we think of an eight per cent sales tax on a number of modest commodity purchases and compare it with a ten per cent tax paid by a class D beneficiary, it does not seem sufficient.

Mr. ABBOTT: When my hon. friend talks about sales tax he is talking about a current transaction, but this $35,000 may represent the residence of the deceased or it may include other assets. It is seldom that you will find an estate made up only of cash. My hon. friend may have some good farms out around Saskatchewan that are worth $35,000, and sometimes it is not too easy for a successor to find $2,500 or $3,000 in cash to pay the succession duty on a farm. It covers all types of assets.

Mr. PROBE: Whether it was a western farm or an eastern estate would not change the argument as far as I am concerned, because I think the principle is identical. It seems to me that the class D beneficiary is getting a reasonable hand-out at a time when we are looking for sources of revenue. Here is a chance to get in a most painless manner, revenue that the federal government requires.

Mr. JACKMAN: That will be good in the next campaign.

Mr. PROBE: This is not a campaign.

Mr. JACKMAN: Where do you get that hand-out stuff?

Mr. PROBE: Besides providing a painless method of collecting a tax, there is a measure of justice in it of which the hon. member over here who keeps interrupting has not the slightest conception. I did not ask him to make a speech, and I want to have my little say. I am simply trying to point out that when a stranger receives a bequest, as a class D beneficiary he is entitled to contribute a larger sum to the national revenue than the ten per cent provided by this bill.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to revert to the matter we were discussing before, because it is a little difficult to follow. It seems to me that according to the figures the minister gave this man is going to have to pay another $100 duty because he can deduct only the lesser of the alternatives. If the previous dominion tax was $200 with a provincial tax of $100, he paid $300. If the dominion duty goes up to $400 and the provincial tax is $100, he pays $500. He can deduct only the lesser of half the dominion tax or the provincial, so he could deduct only $100 which would mean that he is paying $400 whereas before he had to pay only $300.

Mr. ABBOTT: He deducts from his dominion tax the $100 he pays to the province; that is a tax credit.

Mr. FULTON: He pays $300 to the dominion but he pays $100 to the province.

Mr. ABBOTT: He pays $400 altogether.

Mr. FULTON: Whereas previously he paid $300.

Mr. ABBOTT: He paid $300 before the dominion raised its rates.

Mr. FULTON: I understood the intention was to try to keep the total tax the same. I suggest that that could be done by eliminating the words "lesser of" so as to allow him to deduct half of the increase in the dominion duties.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend's suggestion in effect would be that there should be no limit. Under what he is proposing the provinces could increase their taxes up to our double rates and then we would get nothing.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 370, to amend the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940.

[Mr. Probe.]

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Corporations and persons liable to tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps a word of explanation would be useful. This bill does three things: it eliminates the flat rate of excess profits tax and incorporates it with the corporation tax, it removes partnerships and sole proprietors from the operation of the Excess Profits Tax Act, and it reduces from 20 to 15 per cent the rate of tax payable on profits in excess of 116⅔ of standard. The other changes are incidental to accomplishing these purposes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not quite sure that I have read this correctly, but unless there is an explanation which does not occur to me, the effect of this section is to do away with the minimum of $5,000 which was incorporated last autumn. What is the reason for that? I am looking now at the act of 1945, section 3, subsection 2.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no change in substance in the act in that respect. Perhaps there may be some confusion in numbering the section.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What I am referring to is printed in the explanatory notes, at the bottom, opposite the first page.

Mr. ABBOTT: The subsection 2 to which my hon. friend refers no longer operates. That section was introduced to prevent the 22 per cent fixed rate under the Excess Profits Tax Act from operating to reduce the taxable profit of a taxpayer below $5,000. Since the 22 per cent rate is being repealed, the section becomes no longer necessary. It was a sort of saving section, if my hon. friend appreciates that, to prevent the Excess Profits Tax Act from operating to reduce the tax below $5,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I think I follow the answer; nevertheless was there not a broader intention of establishing this $5,000 as a minimum in itself, not merely with regard to that part of the Excess Profits Tax Act which, I appreciate, is now altered? May I draw the minister's attention to these words—reading now from subsection 2:

(2) The aggregate of the taxes exigible under paragraph two of the first part of the second schedule to this act and under the Income War Tax Act shall in no case operate—

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, but shall in no case operate——to reduce the profits of a taxpayer below the amount to which they would be reduced by the aggregate of the taxes exigible under paragraph one of the said first part and under the Income War Tax Act . . .

It is simply to prevent the tax under paragraph 2 of the first part of the second schedule operating to reduce the profits below what I might refer to as the standard amount. It is a little complex, I know, but, having eliminated the 22 per cent tax I am assured that this section becomes no longer necessary, and the position of the corporation which earns up to $5,000 is not prejudiced by this amendment.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am sorry to be so persistent. I want to put the matter once again, and here is where I may be wrong. As I read this, it said in terms that this limit should be preserved, should not fall below this $5,000, whether under the operation of the 100 per cent of the first part or under the Income War Tax Act. Am I right in thinking that that says in effect that a man's $5,000 shall be the minimum below which the profits shall not go no matter which tax applies, and if you take that off, will he not be able to go below the $5,000 under the ordinary operation?

Mr. ABBOTT: Has my hon. friend read the first part of the second schedule of the Excess Profits Tax Act? Perhaps I had better read it to make the point clear:

Where the profits of a corporation or joint stock company in the taxation year before deduction therefrom of any tax paid thereon under the Income War Tax Act or any payment to a shareholder by way of salary, interest or otherwise, are five thousand dollars or less, twelve per centum of the profits before deduction therefrom of any tax paid under the Income War Tax Act, except in the case of a taxpayer referred to in subparagraph (b) of paragraph two of this part.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I cannot quite get the point my hon. friend is making. If the minister will say that the position of the man with the minimum of $5,000 is still protected as it was, I think that meets my point.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am advised that by reason of the amendments to the act there is nothing to protect him against in the sense that we needed to protect him before the present rate changes in that law were made. While the existing rates were still in effect, he would have been subject to the flat rate of 22 per cent and 18 per cent.

Mr. JACKMAN: I do not understand very much about it either. Is it true that the man doing $5,000 worth of business was protected against the excess profits tax under existing statutes, so that his tax was not more than eighteen per cent?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. He paid 18 per cent and then was protected against part of the 22 per cent.

Mr. JACKMAN: They protected the small man. Now, with the changes we are making, the normal corporation tax being 30 per cent, the little man who has a $5,000 a year business no longer has protection as to that 30 per cent. He will be taxed at least 30 per cent now, which puts him in a worse position than before, when he was taxed only 18 per cent, that being the limit.

Mr. ABBOTT: He paid 30 per cent before. He did not pay the 22 per cent, but the 12 per cent. I am sorry the deputy minister of taxation is not here. He could supply the answer at once.

Mr. JACKMAN: I thought the bracket had been raised the previous year to $15,000, or $12,500.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, but standard profits are still at $15,000. There is a limit of $15,000. Below $15,000 there is no application of the special tax on excess profits.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is the way it stands now.

Mr. ABBOTT: That still stands at $15,000, so that the $5,000 man was not subject to tax on excess profits before. He is not subject to it now, and he will continue to pay the rate of tax he paid under the income war tax act.

Mr. JACKMAN: Thirty per cent?

Mr. ABBOTT: This proviso was put in to protect that same man against a part of the flat rate tax of 22 per cent. That has been repealed so that he no longer needs that protection.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Nevertheless has he not gone up from 18 to 30?

Mr. ABBOTT: But he paid that even under the protecting section, under part 1 of the second schedule. He paid 12 per cent under the first part of the second schedule, but was protected against paying 10 per cent of the 22 per cent under paragraph 2. He always paid 30 per cent.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In other words—

Mr. ABBOTT: The statement I made was correct. He was protected against paying the 22 per cent, or against paying the 100 per cent excess profits under the second part of the second schedule, but he always paid the 12 per cent under paragraph 1 of the same schedule, so his effective rate was the old rate of 18 per cent plus 12 per cent. Now we have repealed the 22 per cent. This proviso was put in to protect him against part of that. He was already protected against the 100 per cent by the amendment which raised the ceiling of profits to $15,000 for small businesses, and in the result, when this amendment passes, his position will be exactly as it has been for the last two years.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): It seems to me, if it is as I understand it now, that before, and as the section had stood, he paid 12 per cent of the 22 per cent. In other words, he was paying 30 per cent. If that is so, I am answered.

Mr. ABBOTT: That sums it up.

Section agreed to.

Sections 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On section 5—Second schedule.

Mr. JACKMAN: On section 5, which is the substance of the bill, I have on two different occasions made an argument to which the minister—not the acting minister—gave a reply which in my opinion was fallacious, and I quoted both my argument and the minister's contention when the acting minister had the resolutions in front of him. To refresh his memory, I may say that my argument is that the excess profits tax of 15 per cent is very detrimental to business and employment in this country because of the invidious comparison of taxation of business in Canada with taxation in the United States particularly. I do not know whether I need to rehearse the various points with the minister. He may have them in his mind. Succinctly, however, the situation is this. Our tax on business is 30 per cent plus 5 per cent for the provinces, and if your business volume is large, as most businesses are, there is a 15 per cent excess profits tax, making our rate 50 per cent as against the United States rate on larger corporations—it is less on smaller businesses—of 38 per cent. The Minister of Finance, winding up the budget debate, after quoting the figures I had given, made this statement at page 3596:

> But taking the tax over the whole range of their business,—

Speaking of Canadians.

> —they will have to have very large excess profits indeed for their excess profits tax and their corporation tax to be greater than 38 per cent plus state taxes in the United States.
> [Mr. Abbott.]

Then he said:

> What therefore becomes of this argument that by our short-sighted, ignorant way of taxing corporations we are going to drive manufacturing business from Canada to the United States?

No answer was given by the acting minister when I contended that the position taken by the Minister of Finance was most fallacious. The minister said, taking the tax over the whole range of their business, there was not an unfair comparison with the American tax. It seemed to me that that was very much like telling the working man who refused to work on Fridays, or more particularly on Saturdays, because he got into a higher bracket, that his average rate was not at all bad, only five or six per cent. That was not what interested the working man. What concerned him was that his tax on Friday or Saturday was 25, 30 or 40 per cent. In the same way, businesses—and I mention particularly American companies that have tremendous investments in branch plants in Canada, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars—would find, as far as their export business was concerned, that it would be more profitable to do that export business from their American plants where the retainable profit was greater than it was if they did the business from their Canadian branches. The minister's contention that the average rate of profit was the one that determined the question has nothing to do with the matter, as I see it. If our rate is 50 per cent in the taxation of business in the excess profits tax class, whereas in the United States there is no excess profits tax and the rate is 38 per cent, or one or two per cent more, allowing for state tax, if there is any—I have not heard of any—then it will certainly have a deterrent effect on Canadian business. Therefore the provision of this excess profits tax is to my mind in direct contradiction to many of the government's policies.

The government is spending a great deal of money in advertising through the Department of Trade and Commerce; it has representatives abroad, and there is a great deal of money entailed in the Exports Credits Insurance Act. We are appropriating hundreds of millions, in fact billions, in order to give credits to other countries to buy our goods. We are spending money on the Canadian Commercial Corporation—$10,000,000 I believe—for the purpose of developing our trade, and we have similar items in connection with the Canadian information service, all of which, as part of their purpose, are intended to develop our trade. Yet we find the enterprising manufacturer placed under a competitive handicap, and export business is largely lost to a great many concerns, particularly where the alternative is to manufacture either in the United States or in Canada. I mentioned a Canadian manufacturer who was developing some business in Newfoundland. He found that he lost out to a United States firm because that firm had more retainable profit and could quote a lower price on the product. Therefore the government is working at cross purposes with itself in keeping this tax and at the same time trying to develop the export business of the country. It indicates to those of us who should approach this subject with an open mind that there is a complete lack of business experience in the Department of Finance or on the part of those who are advising the government on these matters. It also indicates that the present administration do not do as some other Liberal administrations did, namely, consult with business men, even of their own political persuasion, and find out exactly how some of these tax laws would affect business and employment.

At the present time Canada has a wonderful opportunity of developing export business, because so few countries are in the fortunate position, as we are, of being able to offer goods in the export market. But our government does not seek practical advice on these matters and has little or no practical experience in the field; they are muffing the ball. They are nothing but football strategists who never saw a playing field or even a dressing-room, but live in the ivory tower of the club-house. I should be pleased if the minister would answer my argument.

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not think there is anything I can add to the statement I made the other day, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister says there is nothing he can add to what he said the other day. But he did not even start the other day. Add nothing to nothing and you still have nothing.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what my hon. friend thinks; I thought it was a pretty good answer. Opinions differ on that.

Mr. JACKMAN: What was a pretty good answer?

Mr. ABBOTT: The average rate.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is not the average rate which interests the ordinary person; it is the rate of taxation on the last unit of business you have under consideration. That is what you are considering. If the minister will be good enough to listen to me for a moment I shall tell him again. It is exactly the position in which the workman finds himself in regard to Saturdays. The government may say that the average tax on the workman is five or ten per cent, but he will say: "It is my business; I can see right away that the tax on the Saturday's business is twenty-five or thirty-five per cent." It is exactly the same way here; the business will not be done in Canada, and if we are faced with unemployment in the future it will be directly traceable to this government's action.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a matter of opinion. This tax relates only to companies whose profits run over 116⅔ of their standard during the standard period.

Mr. JACKMAN: With the present national income any good company should earn more than its standard.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a fifteen per cent tax on the excess, and I do not believe it will deter any up-and-coming concern from going ahead and doing all the business it can and making all the profits it can, although my hon. friend may think it will.

Mr. JACKMAN: That is exactly the point. I want to give the up-and-coming concern a fair competitive break in this country.

Mr. ABBOTT: So do I.

Mr. JACKMAN: If there are plants in the United States and Canada the business is going to be done where the greater retainable profit is. An up-and-coming concern, which was probably a friend of the acting minister, was in a position to do business in Newfoundland, but because its retainable profit was less than that of the United States concern, the United States concern could quote a lower price and took the business away from our own people.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Chief engineer's branch—Dredging—
302. British Columbia and Yukon, $386,080.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am sorry I was not here on Saturday afternoon when this item was discussed. I understand the hon. member for New Westminster spoke on dredging, and I wish to concur in everything he said. So far as the Fraser river is concerned conditions have changed owing to the fact that the surrounding territory is all logged out. Because of that there is a much quicker run-off of water than used to be the case years ago. The dredge used out there is thirty or forty years old. It is supposed to take care of the whole Fraser river, including the finest fresh water stretch in the Dominion of Canada, that around New Westminster. The present dredge cannot possibly look after the Westminster area alone, quite apart from the whole Fraser valley. The farmers are in danger because the Department of Public Works are unable to keep the channel open. In addition the vast investment in the Canadian National Railways is endangered because the line may go out at any time owing to the floods. If that happens it will be a serious matter in the Fraser river valley, the New Westminster district and the whole of Canada.

In spite of the fact that the government says it is not the duty of the federal department, I think it is unreasonable to expect the local districts to look after the river banks and erosion. It might have been all right forty years ago to say that it was a local matter; but conditions have changed and each year we are losing a tremendous amount of earth and farms into the river through erosion. Earth and silt are clogging up the channel. I understand that the federal department is responsible for navigation channels. But the act which gave them that authority was drawn many years ago, and conditions in that respect also have changed. The reason we have so much erosion is that the channels are not kept open. In the Fraser river there are many places where sandbars have closed the channels. Years ago boats could cross over these places, but now you can wade across in rubber boots. That should be obvious even to the Department of Public Works.

As far as dredging is concerned, I want to support what was said by the hon. member for New Westminster. The present dredge is entirely inadequate, and it is time the federal department gave an order for a new modern dredge. I understand there is one down in the Columbia district which should serve as an example of the class and size of dredge we need. I want to urge the minister not to wait until the Canadian National is put out of business before something is done. Some years ago the dike at Matsqui broke, and for forty-eight hours the railway was out of action and the city of Vancouver was cut off. We all hope there may never be another war, but suppose that had happened during the war period, when we were rushing supplies not only to Canadian and British forces on the Pacific coast but also to American forces, who as far as that area was concerned received most of their supplies over the Canadian National. What would have happened if the dike had gone out then? I hope there will be no more wars, though I doubt it very much, but look at it in a broad sense; if that should happen what would be the result? In addition, the city of Vancouver and the people of British Columbia are entitled to some consideration, since Vancouver is our only Pacific port of any importance, and the possibility that it might be cut off is a serious matter to the business men there. My friends of the stock exchange in Toronto talked a long time about $3.20 or something in regard to the gold market. We are entitled to talk about the few industries we have in British Columbia, and surely this government cannot afford to risk the possibility of having those industries cut off and men thrown out of work, when that possibility may be avoided by doing a very little dredging. I am not an engineer, but I think the solution to the problem of erosion, at least, is dredging the channel properly.

Unfortunately I did not hear the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo on Saturday, but I understand he made reference to some filth in the Fraser river. I am glad the hon. member for New Westminster was here; he could be depended upon to do something about it; but the only time water runs uphill, as far as I know, it when the filth from the other side comes up the Fraser river. We have no filth coming down the Fraser river. Not knowing what the hon. member said I cannot very well reply, but I am sure my colleague from New Westminster gave a good answer. Any filth we have in the Fraser river would be going to the proper depository if it went across the channel.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I want to make similar complaints about a much more important river than the Fraser; I refer to the Columbia river that flows from the Big Bend country to the north of my constituency, south into the United States. We have had steamer navigation on the river to my knowledge for something over fifty years. In the early years of this century the dominion government undertook an extensive dredging programme to aid navigation between the upper and lower Arrow lakes, and to permit steamers to land at the docks at Arrowhead. In those years we had a very small population, possibly only two or three hundred people in a distance of 150 miles. Later the population grew considerably, and we had an all-year boat service from one end of the lakes to the other. Dredging operations were later curtailed, and to-day, with a greatly increased population, with much greater activity in farming and lumbering, we only have through service from about the end of April until the beginning of November, owing to the fact that the expenditure on dredging has been limited. As a result, at low water steamers cannot go between the upper and lower lakes. I suggest to the minister that he provides a larger appropriation in order to keep open the channel between the upper and lower Arrow lakes, and in addition I should like to draw to his attention the fact that silt from the Columbia entering the upper Arrow lake is deposited in large quantities on bars around the mouth of the river and the wharf at Arrowhead. I suggest to the minister, and I have had this advice from skippers who have operated on the lakes for a number of years, that a considerable portion of the expense of dredging around the wharf at Arrowhead, and possibly a portion of the bar at the mouth of the Columbia river, could be avoided if the department could get the Canadian Pacific to move their dock at Arrowhead some three hundred yards to the east, where there is deep water, and the area is never silted up.

I do not suggest that we should have a new or larger dredge on the Columbia, because we all realize that within the next few years we may have immense developments in that area which will completely change the situation. But I do ask the minister to give consideration to an increased appropriation for dredging, particularly between the upper and lower Arrow lakes, because when the season is curtailed and we do not have through steamer traffic it is a great handicap and inconvenience to the whole district. I should like to know what is the appropriation for dredging this year.

Hon. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Minister of Public Works): I want to congratulate the hon. member for Fraser Valley on the way he told the committee of the need for dredging in the Fraser river. I told the hon. member for New Westminster on Saturday that we were considering purchasing or building a new dredge for that river, and my officials are actively looking into the matter now. We hope to come to some decision in the near future. As to dredging the Columbia river, I understand a commission has been appointed, on which are representatives of the United States and Canadian governments, to study the situation described by the hon. member for Kootenay West. One of the outstanding engineers of my department, Mr. Goodspeed, is on that commission, and we are expecting a report in the near future. The hon. gentleman may rest assured that we shall do our utmost to carry out their recommendations.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—Dredging—
303. New dredge for great lakes (revote $50,000), $162,000.

Mr. SENN: Earlier in the session I asked the minister to send one of his inspectors down to the mouth of Nanticoke creek—that is in Ontario; perhaps I am out of order in asking this question—to see whether some dredging could not be done to help the fishermen there. Would the minister say whether anything has been done, or if anything is contemplated?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): As soon as the hon. member spoke to me about this dredging I instructed the officials to send an engineer to that point to make a report on the feasibility and possibility of doing this work. As yet I have not received the report, but as soon as I do I shall let my hon. friend know the conclusion. This vote is for a new dredge we are putting on to expand dredging on lake Ontario.

Mr. SENN: May I ask the minister to see to it that the report is made and, if it is favourable, to act upon it?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, yes. I think under the general vote we shall have funds to do the work if it is necessary.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Is this dredge for any particular part of the great lakes?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is for lake Ontario.

Mr. JACKMAN: If I may direct a question concerning item 301, which is for dredging in Manitoba, is any part of that money to be spent in the harbour of Churchill?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. Churchill is a national harbour and does not come under public works.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): What type of dredge is this?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): A dipper dredge.

Item agreed to.

Chief engineer's branch—Maintenance and operation of roads and bridges—
313. Generally, $65,000.

Mr. GRAYDON: I have been seeking some item upon which I might bring to the attention of the minister a matter of some importance, and it seems to me that this is the appropriate item. My observations shall not be directed to the inclusion in the estimates of a certain sum of money, but rather to a matter which the minister has had before him, and one to which I believe the department feels its jurisdiction does not extend.

Along the shores of lake Ontario, and I fancy the same would apply to the shore lines along others of the great lakes, a considerable degree of erosion has taken place within the last few years. Many newspapers and other publications have carried news items and pictures showing the serious degree to which this erosion has developed in the great lakes area. While there seems to be some difference of opinion as to the cause of this condition, there is a feeling in the Port Credit area, and at points lying along the shore line of Peel county, that it comes from an artificial diversion or change made at points nearer the headwaters. In my part of Ontario this condition of erosion has reached serious proportions. Many of the residents in the south portions of Peel find that those parts of their properties abutting the lake have been worn away, and the foundation of their homes endangered thereby.

I have made an appeal to the minister privately, and received the courteous consideration one would expect from him. I would ask him now however to consider the responsibility of the federal government in respect of this problem. If the experience in other parts of Canada is similar to that which we have had, the loss must run into many millions of dollars in the great lakes area.

Local authorities have attempted to relieve the situation by various means, but in many cases the projects overreach the financial ability of the municipalities to pay. I would ask the minister to see if the department can do something to help. My only regret is that the minister has not been able to visit that part of Ontario to see what the condition is, because I know if he did see it he would consider it most serious. He knows, of course, that no matter what be the occasion for his visit, he would be a most welcome visitor in that part of the country at any time—as indeed the Minister of Veterans Affairs has been on many occasions. I suggest that departmental officials, and if possible the minister, ought to visit the area to see what is happening, having in mind the possibility of extending the dominion's jurisdiction to relieve the suffering and loss that is now being sustained.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The condition of erosion along lake Ontario, as well as other lakes and rivers in Canada, has become serious. We are willing to admit that in the Department of Public Works. Speaking generally, two kinds of protection works would be studied by my department, under the first of which we admit responsibility by stating that the erosion has been caused by some works or act of the federal government. In cases of that kind, on both coasts and along the shores of rivers and lakes, we do a considerable amount of protection work. The second type of erosion, which arises from natural causes, and has not arisen from anything done by the federal government, is not generally accepted as a federal problem.

I believe that in 1932 the government did in a general vote, and for the purpose of relieving unemployment in years of depression, spend moneys on this second type of work. The vote, which was originally under the Department of Labour, was transferred to the Department of Public Works, and the result was that in each province we undertook protective works.

I do not believe there is any subject which causes so much correspondence in our department as requests for protection works. The policy of the government is to assume what we believe to be our responsibility, and to do those works. Other works would seem to come more under provincial or municipal authorities. As the hon. member for Peel has said, in some instances the damage is so great that the local authorities cannot meet the needs. I cannot say that at this session, even in the supplementary estimates, I can get an amount for protection works of that kind. As time goes on we are making a serious study in the hope that we shall have an amount of money to relieve the most pressing cases, or to conduct works at points where the most damage has been done by erosion. I would not wish, however, to have people hoping too much that I shall succeed in getting money for that purpose. When we make demands for our estimates we are bound to stay within our jurisdiction, and unless there is a general consensus in the house that the federal government should undertake these works, I should imagine that condition would continue. If we ever did undertake them we would have to spend millions upon millions of dollars on works which up to the present have never been recognized as our responsibility.

I sympathize with the hon. member for Peel and with many other hon. members. Indeed I do not think there are ten members in the house who have not in their own ridings suffered damage from erosion of this kind. If there were a vote for this type of damage, undoubtedly there is not a township along the Ottawa river which would not have a claim for some kind of protection work, to protect the property of people along its shores. To make any change in policy would be a most serious decision, especially this year when I have been asked to curtail all expenses not considered absolutely necessary for the upkeep and maintenance of works actually under our control.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to add a word to what has been said by the hon. member for Peel. He is perhaps the first member who has brought before the house something which I predicted years ago was going to happen. I am sorry to say that I fear this government is confronting the necessity of fighting thousands and upon thousands of damage actions through riparian rights which have been or may be destroyed. As my hon. friend has said, erosion has occurred, and I am going to give the minister the cause. You must consider the cause when you start negotiating about these matters. Perhaps the minister will remember that a bill passed this house a few years ago permitting a diversion of water in northern Ontario of 5,200 cubic feet per second from the Albany river watershed to the St. Lawrence river watershed. At that time Chicago had been taking perhaps 10,000 cubic feet per second from lake Michigan, and there was an argument advanced that the levels of the great lakes would be maintained by this diversion from the Albany river watershed to the St. Lawrence river watershed. However, since that time the United States government has had the diversion at Chicago reduced to 1,500 cubic feet per second in accordance with a United States supreme court order. In order to check my figures I wrote to the chief engineer at Chicago a few days ago to inquire what was being taken out of lake Michigan at the present time, and he replied that they were taking 1,500 cubic feet per second.

As I said a moment ago, we are diverting into the St. Lawrence river watershed 5,200 cubic feet per second which God Almighty never intended should go into that watershed. If we deduct the 1,500 cubic feet being taken out at Chicago, we find that an additional 3,700 cubic feet are pouring into the great lakes watershed every second in the year. The farmers along the whole lake front in Ontario will have a right to sue this government and the Ontario government for any destruction of their property as the result of this diversion. I fear it will not be long until every farmer along the shores of lake Ontario, lake Erie, lake Huron and Georgian Bay, and on the American side as well as on our side, will be suing the governments because of loss of riparian rights. A total of 3,700 cubic feet is pouring into this watershed every second and the water levels have been raised. I looked at the record of the levels this morning, not anticipating that this vote would be discussed, and I find that the general levels in these lakes have risen until they are not far short of the highest average levels before the forests were cut down.

I am afraid that this government and the United States government may be in for a series of headaches because of suits by property owners along the shores of the great lakes. In my judgment they have an absolute claim. In this case man has deliberately poured into the St. Lawrence watershed a vast volume of water from an outside watershed. We are told that it means an increased power production, but if that is so, should those who are producing the power reimburse the farmers fronting on lake Ontario, fronting on lake Erie, and fronting on lake Huron? I am sure the department must have been appalled at the multitude of letters they have received because of the breaking of the dikes in Essex county. I was up to that end of the province this last week-end and I know what the people are thinking. Those dikes were never intended to withstand the level of water that there is now in the summer time.

I do not want to be misunderstood about this. I am quite in accord with water levels being maintained, and I realize that something had to be done when Chicago was taking from 10,000 to 15,000 cubic feet per second; but according to the information I got from Chicago a few days ago, that is no longer being done. As I said before, they are now down to 1,500 cubic feet per second. I think the Department of Public Works should take close notice of what is happening in the great lakes watershed. Every second a total of 3,700 extra cubic feet is being poured into our great lakes. That is bound to be felt along the shores of lake Ontario, lake Erie and lake Huron. It will not affect the shores of lake Superior particularly because there is a dam at Sault Ste. Marie which controls the level of that lake. By raising the gates they are able to let the water out and maintain the lake at a static level, but there is no such control for lake Huron, lake Erie or lake Ontario.

At times there are many advantages in an increased level of water, but to-day, we have had a just presentation made by the hon. member for Peel. I believe the farmers in his county will have a just claim for protection again erosion caused by lake Ontario water being kept at such a high level at certain seasons of the year, a level at which God Almighty never intended it should be kept.

Mr. IRVINE: I think the hon. member has rendered a great service by bringing this question of erosion to the attention of the government. The hon. member has referred to erosion caused by the diversion of water, but I should like to refer to erosion generally. I warn the government that they must assume responsibility for this erosion because in the near future it will be one of the greatest problems that Canada will have to face.

Mr. REID: How large is the fund which is maintained in connection with the New Westminster bridge? Is it the intention to carry out the agreement reached some years ago that an engineer would be asked to find out the advisability or otherwise of putting a small span on the railway bridge?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The balance on account as at February 28, 1946, was $182,651.29. The complete figures are as follows:

Balance on account as at February 28, 1946		$182,651 29
Less unliquidated balance —rail replacement by C.N.R.	$60,000 00
Over-expenditure on maintenance and operation, Vote 281	2,201 19
		62,201 19
		$120,450 10
Plus estimated revenue for last half of year		50,000 00
		$170,450 10
Less transfer of estimated expenditure—Vote No. 281 for full fiscal year 1945-46. This is transferred at end of fiscal year		$36,000 00
Estimated free balance		$134,450 00

Mr. REID: Does the minister contemplate making the survey that was promised years ago?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have entered into a contract with an outstanding engineer, a Mr. Pratley, who is investigating the matter and will make a report.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Is the government taking any part in the building of the 65-mile link between Atlin and the Alaska highway?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That would not come under this department or this item. If I am well informed, it would come under Mines and Resources.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I see that the dry dock subsidies come under item 313. I do not just get that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No; that is by statute. It was under a special statute of 1910 and the amendments thereafter that we undertook to pay for twenty-five or thirty-five years an annual amount to companies which put up these dry docks. Probably the hon. gentleman has in mind the Prince Rupert dry dock. We have completed the payments to Canadian National railways, who are the owners, or built this dock. We have paid the amount which we undertook to pay some years ago.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: And do you contemplate putting it on again?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That cannot be done unless a special statute is passed to provide for it.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I suggest that the minister do that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is Canadian National property. I do not know why Public Works should ask for money to pay for the Prince Rupert dry dock.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: You have other subsidies down there, for instance for the Burrard dry dock, owned by a company which has all the money in the world with which to expand. Prince Rupert dry dock cannot compete in putting in bids on these boats which are being built.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Of all these dry docks there are only three left to which we pay annual subsidies for a time. Our payments in respect of all the other dry docks have ended; these are the three remaining ones, and we are just following the agreements by which we undertook to pay annual amounts.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The information given to the committee just before the luncheon recess was very interesting. I should like to have an explanation from the minister as to just what effect 5,200 cubic feet per second of water pouring into the great lakes has on the level of the lakes. I made a rough calculation during the recess, and I found that 5,200 cubic feet per second would raise 6,600 square miles one inch in a year; in other words it would raise lake Ontario, if the extra water did not run out, about ·875 inches in a year. This increase, which comes with extra rain flow, goes on year after year. I think an explanation is due to the hon. member for Davenport as to just what effect that water coming into the lake has had.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My information on this subject is that there flows by that Ogoki diversion 5,000 cubic feet per second. On the great lakes that would hardly have any effect on the raising of the water; it would be a rise of only three-quarters of an inch, and that water continuously flows down to the St. Lawrence, where there is a flow of 185,000 cubic feet per second. I am no expert on these matters, but my information from experts is that this diversion of water has hardly any effect on the level of the great lakes.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wonder what calculations have been made in that connection. According to the Canada Year Book, lake Ontario, for instance, has an area of 7,540 square miles. As I said, in a year that flow of 5,200 cubic feet per second would raise the level of lake Ontario by ·875 inches. Where does the water go which comes in—this added amount of water?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It flows down the St. Lawrence.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I can see that as regards lake Erie and so on the water would go on over the Niagara falls, and probably some water is used in the power houses on lake Ontario. But with that amount of water coming in year after year by rainfall I cannot help thinking that there would be a considerable difference in the levels. I do not know whether any careful calculations have been made as to just what the result would be. Probably it is an advantage to keep the water up in the lake. But I wondered what actually did happen.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that an exhaustive survey of the situation has been made, and the figures I have given the hon. members are from those studies. There is hardly any effect in the raising of the water on the great lakes, because the flow continues on down through the St. Lawrence; furthermore, I am told that this raising of the water in the great lakes goes in cycles; some years it rises higher, other years it is lower. This is the natural flow of it. This is, in my mind, no excuse for not considering the repairing of damages done by erosion whenever they come under our responsibility.

Mr. MacNICOL: I just happened to come in in time to hear the last few words of the hon. member for St. Paul's in reply to the minister. I want to warn the minister that it is a very serious matter, and he should not be misled by those who are not thoroughly conversant with the situation. This morning I received from the department which sends out these reports a bulletin of water levels, and I notice that at Goderich, where there is a registering station, reports that in the month of July the water level of lake Huron is 1·11 feet higher than the average stage of July for the last ten years. More significant than that is the statement on the next line that the water level of lake Huron at Goderich is only 0·18 feet lower than the average stage of July for the last eighty-six years—which is the period they use. During the last few years the water level has been so much below what it is to-day, that if to-day it is only 0·18 feet lower than the average stage during eighty-six years, one can picture what it will be when the full effect is felt of pouring an additional 5,200 cubic feet of water every second of the day every day of the year into the great lakes watershed.

I know what I would do if I were minister. I fought this thing from the very beginning. I warned the country here at Ottawa, and the government of Ontario also, as to what the result would be. As far as lake Erie is concerned the water level in July at Port Colborne on lake Erie is 0·80 feet higher than the average stage of July for the last ten years, but much more significant is the fact that the water level at Port Colborne is 0·29 feet higher than the average stage of July for the last eighty-six years. That is a significant statement. As far as lake Ontario is concerned, at Kingston, where the measuring instruments for that lake are located, the water level for July is 0·82 feet higher than the average stage for the last ten years, and 0·42 feet higher than the average stage for the last eighty-six years. The hon. member for Peel can grasp at a glance why that higher average is maintained on Lake Ontario: the water level has been maintained and materially increased in the last few years, and all along the shore line of Peel the higher waves dash up against the southern shore with a very disintegrating effect.

Trout Cove (Centreville)—towards breakwater reconstruction, $100,000.
Upper Whitehead—wharf reconstruction, $21,000.
West Head—wharf reconstruction, $62,000.
Total, $3,058,300.

Mr. STANFIELD: In looking over these estimates I do not notice any appropriation for the wharf at Windsor, Nova Scotia, which is in need of some repairs. Could the minister say where in these estimates provision is made for this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That would be taken out of this vote under "Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services and for repairs and reconstruction due to extremely heavy storms, $715,000." That is in the general vote.

Mr. KIRK: In this item there are two amounts of, respectively, $170,000 for Cow bay, (Port Morien), towards breakwater reconstruction and dredging, and $350,000 for Glace Bay, towards harbour improvements. Is any part of this taken from the $700,000 odd under item 299 for dredging in the maritime provinces?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. KIRK: None of this will be taken from that item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is a specific vote for a specific purpose, and the money will not come out of the general vote.

Mr. KIRK: I wish to say just a word or two in connection with dredges, and perhaps I should have brought this up under 299. Members from British Columbia referred to the condition of dredges on the Pacific coast; I wish to discuss the dredges on the Atlantic coast and make a requisition for some money for the provision of new equipment in that part of the country. There are plenty of dredges there now, but their condition is simply terrible and it is time we got new equipment. Dredges cannot be built overnight, and money ought to be appropriated now for the purpose so that we may have suitable dredges of light, medium and heavy type. The department informs me that there are dredges there, but no dredges are available for the kind of work needed, and as I say, they cannot be obtained at a moment's notice.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We know the condition of the dredges in question. During the war we had but the very barest necessities for the work that had to be done, and this year we are increasing the amounts not only for our own dredges but for the purpose of giving private contracts. The hon. member may rest assured that if I can get the consent of the government I will increase still further the appropriations to meet the needs of the fishermen on the coast.

Mr. KIRK: My contention is that the dredges of the Department of Public Works are not fit to do the work. The department has numbers of them, but what good are they? Proper dredges are needed for the work that has to be done in Guysborough county.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We admit that our dredges are not in good condition and that is why we are giving contracts; and we also realize that bigger dredges are needed. The question is being considered by the department, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that we are not holding back in public works just to penalize people. We find it difficult to get the money to do all the work that is requested by members on both sides of the house.

Mr. KIRK: I fear the people in those parts are under the impression that large dredges will be constructed for heavy dredging operations in centres like Saint John harbour, but something is badly needed for these little places where our fishermen have small motorboats.

Mr. WINTERS: In my constituency there are one or two localities that need either new breakwaters or extensions to existing breakwaters. I have had this question under review with the department and they tell me that no new work is to be undertaken at present because of shortages of labour and materials. In one or two cases in particular, these works have been badly needed for some years. Could the department give an estimate now, or give me some idea as to when new works or extensions to existing works will be undertaken?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In the preparation of next year's estimates I will certainly make requests of the treasury board to increase these amounts. If I can convince my colleagues, I shall be the first to get real satisfaction from the undertaking. Hon. members can rely on my good will at every turn, but if they will look up the estimates they will see that during the war my department got no estimates, or hardly any. This year we got a little more, and I hope that next year we shall be more successful.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I am in the unique position of having no complaints—at any rate, no major complaints—to make against the Department of Public Works in the matter of appropriations for my riding. I have returned from home, however, to find that whereas several generous appropriations have been made, the work cannot be proceeded with because the government is not buying lumber at black market prices. Will the minister make inquiries to see whether the works contemplated in my riding can be proceeded with by securing priority for the necessary materials?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Priorities are not granted by the Department of Public Works. If they were, I would keep all the timber for our own work.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Will the minister make inquiries?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, yes. I have been doing so through my officials. I have a good many contracts ready now, but I cannot get the timber. I will do my best for British Columbia.

Mr. WINTERS: That seems to be the particular problem I have in mind. I am not criticizing the department for not appropriating money. They are aware of the situation and have done their best to make money available, but they state that the materials cannot be procured. That is the reason for our particular grievance. Can we be given some idea as to when these new projects will go ahead, having regard to materials and labour?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The general policy seems to be to keep all the timber and lumber that is available for the housing situation, and every time I have asked for priorities I have been told that our work has not a first priority, that they must think first of housing the veterans and the general population. That is the answer they give me. However, as soon as there is relief in the housing situation I am sure I shall get all the timber I need.

Mr. STANFIELD: With regard to the wharf at Windsor, I cannot find the item to which the minister has referred. Has any money been appropriated for that wharf?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It will be taken out of the general vote for harbours and rivers generally, $715,000.

Item agreed to.

315. Prince Edward Island—
Charlottetown—towards wharf reconstruction and improvements (revote $50,000), $275,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—For maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $80,000.
Montague —wharf reconstruction, $30,000.
Naufrage harbour—retaining wall, $6,000.
Red Head—harbour improvements (revote $3,500), $11,500.
Rocky Point—wharf reconstruction (revote $20,000), $47,000.
Souris—breakwater repairs, $45,000.
Summerside—repairs to railway wharf (revote $18,000), $18,000.
Tignish—repairs to breakwaters, $45,000.
Wood Islands—wharf improvements, $30,000.
Total, $587,500.

Mr. McLURE: I notice a vote here for Charlottetown wharf reconstruction and improvements, $225,000, and also a revote of $50,000. I should like to find out from the minister how far that work has progressed and whether it will be continued sufficiently this year to take up this entire vote. The work is very much needed. I would point out to the minister that we had been promised a survey of the harbour for regular improvements, and among other things there was the definite promise that a survey would be made to see whether it was possible to build a railway marine slip there for the repairing of our ships. This promise has always been made prior to an election, and it is something that would be of great benefit to the unemployed. The building of this railway marine slip at Charlottetown would give us the opportunity of repairing our own ships. As the minister knows, and as the Minister of Transport in particular knows, there is serious delay in our transportation on account of the necessity of sending these ships to other places for repairs. We know also that in 1941, as a result of having to send the S.S. Charlottetown out for repairs, the government lost a $4,000,000 ship.

I would call attention to a vote of $27,000, which is included in this item, for the Rocky Point wharf. Who owns the Rocky Point wharf? Is it the federal or provincial government, or is it dually owned? There is a great deal of trouble over what I consider to be the dual ownership. If the federal government had complete ownership of it, we should not be constantly facing the great problem which always exists there. When the federal government starts to do repair work on the part of the wharf which is assigned to them, the provincial government ceases its work until the federal work is completed. Then the provincial government starts to do its repairs; consequently the wharf is never in a good condition and is seldom, if ever, passable. I should like the minister to tell the committee who owns this wharf.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The first question put by the hon. member concerns the railway wharf at Charlottetown. A contract was awarded on January 24, 1946, to J. P. Porter and Sons, for $374,627. That was the lowest tender. There were two other tenderers, the Diamond Construction Company Limited and the Foundation Maritime Limited. According to the contract the date of completion is July 28, 1947.

As to the second question, who owns Rocky Point wharf, I am informed that this wharf belongs to the federal government. It was completed under contract by the department in 1915 at a cost of $30,334.84. The contract for the reconstruction of this wharf was awarded to H. J. Phillips and Son, of Charlottetown, at $43,634.50.

316. New Brunswick—

Caissie's Cape—towards breakwater reconstruction and dredging, $50,000.

Caraquet (Young wharf), dredging (revote $5,000), $40,000.

Cocagne cape—wharf extension and repairs, $18,700.

Cocagne church—wharf extension and repairs, $16,900.

Dalhousie—wharf reconstruction and dredging (revote $7,500), $30,000.

Dipper Harbour—breakwater improvements, $45,000.

Grande Aldouane—wharf repairs and improvements, $11,000.

Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $130,000.

Leonardville—wharf reconstruction, $50,000.

Little Cape—towards breakwater replacement, $50,000.

Lorneville—towards wharf replacement, $50,000.

McEachren's Point—wharf extension, $9,000.

Miscou—wharf repairs and extension, $13,000.

Neguac Church—wharf (revote $5,000), $26,000.

Richibucto Cape—repairs and improvements to harbour works, $20,800.

Welchpool—towards wharf replacement, $75,000.

Total, $635,400.

[Mr. McLure.]

Mr. HAZEN: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to a letter which I received a short time ago. It was written by a clergyman who lives at Lorneville, New Brunswick, and reads as follows:

> I have been asked by the Lorneville community club to inquire of you about a new breakwater.
> The local fishermen are working under great difficulties at the present time, with no protection whatever. Wreckage of the old breakwater is still strewn about, and the lightkeeper is obliged to hang the light at the very end of the remnant. This duty he cannot carry out at high water. These few facts will give you some idea of the seriousness of the situation and the real need of a new breakwater at the earliest possible date.
> Could you tell us if any steps have been taken to meet this need? We earnestly solicit your assistance in the matter.

I was pleased to be able to inform the gentleman who wrote me that the estimates provided for a sum of money to be used for the replacement of the wharf at Lorneville. Will the minister have this work undertaken as soon as he possibly can? As the letter points out, the situation is a serious one, because the fishermen there have no protection whatever.

I should also like to say to the minister that the people of Dipper Harbour will appreciate the fact that in this vote there is an amount to improve the breakwater or the wharf at that place. In connection with these wharves may I say that I have been along the shore there and have seen the fishermen unloading their catch in the late autumn. There is no lighting whatever on the wharf or on the breakwater, except the light which is put up at the end of the wharf by the lightkeeper when darkness falls. Perhaps the Minister of Public Works or the Minister of Fisheries might give some consideration to providing lighting for these wharves. They would be of great assistance to the fishermen when they bring in their catch and start to unload, particularly in the late autumn and winter months.

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer. In this vote I do not see any amount set aside for work on the Chance Harbour breakwater. I brought this matter to the attention of the minister a few nights ago when the bill to provide for $300,000 a year and an expenditure of $3 million to beautify and improve Ottawa was before the house. Is the minister in a position to tell the committee whether any work is to be done at Chance Harbour to maintain the wharves, or for new works in the harbour? Out of the amount to be voted, is any money to be spent at Chance Harbour? The breakwater there is in a bad state of repair. I have had some correspondence with the minister about it at different times. I understand that last year a petition was sent to the Minister of Fisheries, or to the Minister of Public Works, I do not know which, by the residents of Chance Harbour about this breakwater. It is imperative that some work be done there. Can the minister tell me whether it is proposed to do any work there under this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): With regard to the Lorneville wharf constructions, I understand that plans and specifications were prepared, and we have called for tenders. I do not think that we have received any tenders as yet, but we are to proceed with the Lorneville project. It will amount to about $100,000. Part of that amount is in the estimates here.

As to the second question of the hon. member concerning Chance Harbour, we are looking into that. I cannot give a definite commitment at the moment, but we expect a report from the engineer down there in the very near future, and that will be taken care of.

317. Quebec—

Bagotville—wharf reconstruction (revote $25,000), $245,000.
Beauharnois—wharf reconstruction, $15,000.
Bonaventure, wharf extension, $10,000.
Grande Riviere—wharf reconstruction (revote $25,000), $195,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $345,000.
Isle aux Coudres—improvements to wharves, $137,000.
Isle Verte—wharf repairs, $17,100.
Kamouraska—wharf reconstruction, $40,400.
L'Anse St. Jean—wharf repairs, $25,000.
Matane—reconstruction of west breakwater (revote $25,000), $235,000.
Mechins—wharf repairs and reconstruction, $50,300.
Miguasha—wharf improvements and breakwater (revote $10,000), $52,000.
Quebec—completion of the reconstruction of the intercepting sewer—to implement the agreement entered into in 1939, $1,140,000.
Rimouski—towards reconstruction of old wharf, $200,000.
Riviere du Loup—towards wharf reconstruction, $125,000.
Ste. Felicite—wharf repairs (revote $5,000), $47,000.
St. Simeon—wharf reconstruction (revote $40,000), $190,000.
Sept Iles—rectification work, $15,000.
Sorel—harbour repairs and improvements, $61,000.
Total, $3,144,800.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have just one observation, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the very first item. I am glad to see this item for the improvement of the dock and wharf at Bagotville. I doubt whether anyone could see a more beautiful sight anywhere than is to be seen at night time when going up Ha Ha bay and approaching the dock at Bagotville. I would say that with the proper development it should be one of the finest tourist routes in the world. Anything that will tend to improve the lighting of the Bagotville docks—they are beautiful now—and therefore make them more beautiful, will be all to the good.

Midland—harbour improvements (revote $80,000), $165,000.
Oakville—reconstruction of east pier, $123,000.
Oshawa—breakwater reconstruction (revote $10,000), $33,000.
Ottawa—(Rideau river)—repairs to walls, $18,500.
Parry Sound—wharf (revote $5,500), $8,500.
Pelee Island—wharf improvements, $20,000.
Port Bruce—reconstruction of pier, $25,000.
Port Hope—harbour repairs (revote $20,000), $110,000.
Port Arthur—dredging, $26,000.
Port Arthur—repairs to breakwater, $200,000.
Rainy river—wharf reconstruction, $17,100.
Sault Ste. Marie—wharf reconstruction (revote $10,000), $35,000.
South Baymouth—wharf reconstruction and extension, $34,200.
Thames river—redredging, $60,000.
Tobermory—wharf and dredging, $91,000.
Total, $2,028,100.

Mr. SENN: Under harbours and rivers generally, is any part of the $275,000 earmarked for the harbour and port of Maitland and the extension of the retaining wall or other works?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not the report here, but I can get an answer for the hon. gentleman very shortly, and I shall let him know personally, by letter.

Mr. FRASER: This item includes an amount for repairs to the walls of the Rideau river here in Ottawa. Where is that? Is that within the city limits, on the canal? I ask that question because for the last two years I have noticed, coming in on the train, that the wall of the canal, which is surmounted by an ornamental railing, is gradually bulging out, and in another six months I am afraid it is all going to drop into the canal.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This item of $18,500 is to provide for the reconstruction of the walls on the east and west side of the outlet of the Rideau river where it empties into the Ottawa river, which are in a bad state of disintegration. That would be closer down to the Ottawa river, where the Rideau flows into it.

Mr. FRASER: But not on the canal itself?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No. That would not come under my department; that would be Transport.

Mr. MacNICOL: On Saturday in Chatham I met an engineer with whom I discussed the trouble they recently had in connection with the Thames river overflowing between Chatham and its mouth. He suggested, and in drawing up the estimates, I imagine the minister must have expected such a suggestion, that the river be thoroughly dredged out so the water would have a rapid flow into lake St. Clair; and in addition, that where the river enters lake St. Clair the sand bar be taken out in order to permit the water to run rapidly into the lake.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That will be under harbours and rivers generally.

Mr. MacNICOL: I notice the second last item in this vote is $60,000 for redredging the Thames river. I believe that is important, and should be commended.

Item agreed to.

319. Manitoba—

Gimli—wharf reconstruction (revote $10,000), $85,000.

Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $40,000.

Hecla—wharf reconstruction, $50,000.

Hnausa—wharf reconstruction (revote $25,000), $100,00.

Selkirk—Towards wharf reconstruction (revote $10,000), $100,000.

St. Andrews—river breakwater (revote $5,000), $7,500.

St. Andrews lock and dam—straightening west approach, $65,000.

Total, $447,500.

Mr. BRYCE: I am in a rather peculiar position this time; I want to thank the minister for what he has done. I have certainly parked on his doorstep for a considerable time; I got better acquainted with the genial minister, and I am certainly pleased that he has looked into the situation at Selkirk constituency and decided to undertake this work at Gimli, Hecla, Hnausa, Selkirk and the St. Andrews lock and dam approach. Of course I do not want any hon. member to think Selkirk is getting something it is not entitled to. We were prepared to wait until the war was over before having these things attended to, and again I want to say to the minister, many thanks for what he has arranged to give us. I should like him to let me have a letter setting out the position in regard to these works; those on which tenders have been received, those on which tenders have not been received, how much of the work he expects to finish this season, and so on. If the minister could get his department to do that I shall be pleased to show it to my constituents when I go back and tell them what a fine fellow he is.

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We will send you a letter.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am happy for my hon. friend from Selkirk, who seems to have something the rest of us in Manitoba do not have. Practically all the money being spent in that province is being spent in the constituency of Selkirk. No doubt the work needs to be done, and I congratulate the hon. member on his good luck. I should like to ask the minister if he is contemplating any work on the government pier at Winnipegosis, and also on the pier at Dauphin lake. The situation at Winnipegosis was brought to the minister's attention earlier this year; the pier is in a very bad state of repair, and I believe some representations have been made by the board of trade. With regard to the pier at Dauphin beach, a request has been made by the local council of women that it be removed because of the danger. I believe it is beyond repair, and I do not think it is needed any longer. Since that time I have not heard what has been done, except that an engineer was to look over the situation. Perhaps the minister could give me any further information he has.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My information is that when the representations were received we gave instructions to our resident engineer in Manitoba to visit the locations and make a report on what should be done, whether we should tear down the pier at Dauphin and what repairs are required on the other pier, and I am expecting that report in the near future.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: It has not been received yet?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Not yet.

Mr. SINNOTT: There is quite an item here which comes in between the hon. member for Selkirk and myself; that is the straightening of a bridge at a cost of $65,000. I should like the minister to say when he expects that work to be started. The situation there is a very dangerous one; several people have been killed at that bridge, and I should like some idea as to when the work will be commenced.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The contract was let last week, and I expect the work will be started immediately.

Item agreed to.

320. Saskatchewan, Alberta and Northwest Territories—
Great Bear river road, N.W.T.—completion of extension, rebuilding old section and purchase of maintenance machinery, $425,000.
Harbours and rivers generally—for maintenance of services, no new works to be undertaken, $25,000.
Waterways—wharf (revote $10,000), $15,000.
Yellowknife—improvements to navigation (revote), $7,200.
Yellowknife—wharf, $41,000.
Total, $513,200.

Mr. MacNICOL: The first item here pertains to the northwest territories, and provides $425,000 for the Great Bear river road. I am strongly in favour of anything that can be done for transportation up in that country. Just where is this road?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): A road extension thirty-five miles in length is being built by the Northern Transportation company, who are to be reimbursed for the amount actually expended. The old section of the road, approximately ten miles and a half in length, requires reconditioning and reconstruction of bridges and culverts thereon. This work was started in 1945; there was an item in the estimates of 1945-46. In 1946-47 we are repairing the old section of the road at a cost of $20,000, and are spending $18,000 for the purchase of maintenance machinery. The balance is for the completion of the forty miles of the road.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to know where that road is. Is it along the Bear river between the Mackenzie river and Great Bear lake?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Right.

Mr. MacNICOL: It was primarily constructed around a rapids, was it not?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does it run the whole distance from the Mackenzie river to Great Bear lake?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand they are rebuilding forty miles at the rapids section.

Mr. MacNICOL: But the rapids are quite short—nothing like that in length. The whole distance would not be much over forty miles.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is the description of the road they are building there.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not opposing it; I am strongly in favour of anything that can be done to improve transportation in that country. The way it is now, the boats ascend the Bear river until they come to the St. Charles rapids.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is said that it extends from the easterly end of the old road, past St. Charles rapids, to the source of the Great Bear river at Great Bear lake.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes. Well, then, they are running the road now from the west end of St. Charles rapids, where the present portage is. At the present time when the boats ascend to that point they unload on to trucks, to continue by truck up to Great Bear. That would help the transportation, and I am in agreement with it. Why does it cost so much money? Will it be a concrete road?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Forty miles of new road is being put in there at about $10,000 a mile.

Mr. MacNICOL: I would favour anything that would help that country.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to ask a question on this item, covering as it does Saskatchewan, Alberta and the northwest territories. While I am not in the habit of asking for expenditures, I believe that every attention should be given to expenditures on self-liquidating works. On previous occasions I have referred to the necessity of having something done to preserve Long lake in Saskatchewan, and I have referred also to the projected diversion of part of the waters of the Saskatchewan river at Elbow, Saskatchewan. While some preliminary work has been done, and this is appreciated, I would ask for a report from the minister. I believe it is placed under either the Department of Reconstruction and Supply or the Department of Agriculture, through prairie farm rehabilitation. But once the work is proceeded with, will it be the responsibility of the Department of Public Works, and will the construction work be done by that department?

By way of an aside I should like to say something with which I know the minister will be in agreement, particularly after listening again to the hon. member for Davenport display his great knowledge of Canada. We in Saskatchewan, and in western Canada generally, appreciate highly what he has done to develop in all parts of Canada an interest in irrigation and prairie development. When or if it becomes the responsibility of the Minister of Public Works to name the project, concerning which the preliminary work of surveying and diversion of water is now under way, I suggest that no better name could be given to that project in Saskatchewan than the John R. MacNicol dam. No man has done more for the cause of water conservation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The applause from all parts of the house indicates that, without regard to party, his contribution is recognized throughout the western provinces.

Are the preliminary operations and survey parties under the direction of the Department of Public Works? If not, once the work begins will it be the responsibility of that department?

There is some unemployment in the west to-day, and it has been increasing of late. It appears to me that this is a time when self-liquidating public works—not wasted public works—should be proceeded with.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Last year the hon. member for Lake Centre mentioned this project, and I was not sure whether it came under my department. Upon inquiry I found that it came under the departments of Reconstruction and Supply, and Mines and Resources. I cannot say to the hon. member whether, when the work is proceeded with, it will be done by the Department of Public Works, because so far I have not received any request from other departments.

As to the choosing of a name, nothing would please me more than to have Mr. MacNicol's name identified with this project. Everyone admires his knowledge of the whole country. I have a further reason for wanting to see his name perpetuated, and that is that we were elected on the same date to the House of Commons and have been close friends ever since.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have one further word, because I know the minister is sincere in what he wishes to do, and I should like to help him. I note that there is an item here for a wharf at Yellowknife. The difficulty at that point is in connection with the unloading of heavy machinery off the boats. I suggest that the department consider equipping the docks at Fort Smith, Fort Fitzgerald, Waterways, and Yellowknife with cranes. The United States government had that type of equipment on those docks during the war, but I believe it has been removed. The equipping of those docks with cranes capable of lifting giant pieces of machinery from the boats on to the docks would be useful.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In view of the fact that works in that district are increasing, recently we opened a new office in Edmonton, with a resident engineer who is looking into these matters, and reporting regularly. As to the cranes the hon. member would like to see at these points, let me say that I shall take the matter up with my officials to see if it is practicable. I would be in sympathy with the suggestion.

Item agreed to.

321. British Columbia and Yukon—

Total, $1,825,400.

Mr. STIRLING: Has provision been made for the control works at the south end of Okanagan lake, both in connection with repairs, if such are needed, and the keeping open of the channel of Okanagan river to take away the flood waters from the lake?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am informed by my deputy that these works are taken care of under the general vote for harbours and rivers.

Mr. STIRLING: Does that apply also to the renewing of the timbers on the protection breastwork at Penticton? That is a small breakwater erected for the purpose of providing shelter for boats on the lake.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am not sure about that item.

Mr. STIRLING: I took the matter up with the minister earlier in the session, and I understood from a note I received that this was being taken care of. I presume it will be done out of the general vote.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am told that if the hon. member received a letter from my department stating that we would proceed with it, we will do so.

Mr. STIRLING: Two other small breakwaters have been asked for at Peachland and Summerland. Okanagan lake, like all mountain lakes, is subject to sharp squalls coming on without notice, and the rough water created by such squalls makes it hazardous for boats. There has been a most interesting development in recent years, both for tourists and for residents, when they have been running a competition called the Okanagan fish derby in connection with which prizes are given for the biggest fish taken. It so happens that many of those large fish are taken on the west side of the lake in the vicinity of Peachland and Summerland. The consequence is that if boats are fishing along that piece of exposed shore, and a sharp squall springs up, there is no place to which they can run for safety. This is a matter of great interest to all the inhabitants of the interior, because they come from there and from the south as well. Since the war the tourist business has increased and there are many boats on Okanagan lake. I am afraid we are going to have trouble if some assistance is not provided when these squalls come up. Furthermore, boats which are too large to be taken out of the water in the fall and are placed on chocks require some kind of breastwork to protect them from the winds which surge down the lake from the north. Something should be done in this case similar to what was done some years ago at Penticton.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Would this be a new work?

Mr. STIRLING: I think it would be.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not think we could use this vote for that purpose; it would require a special estimate. I am trying to recall if I have received any requests for these two projects.

Mr. STIRLING: I passed them on to the minister, and received the usual acknowledgment that consideration would be given. I do not see the names on this list.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have not received the report from the engineer, but we will look into these two projects.

Mr. STIRLING: I hope the minister will give due consideration to them, because they are well warranted.

Mr. IRVINE: I should like to direct the attention of the minister to the need of reconditioning the wharf at Seaton lake. I approached the department last April and was told that the district engineer had been instructed to examine the wharf and submit a report. Has the minister received the report of the engineer, and could some of this vote be devoted to reconditioning that wharf? I notice it is not mentioned specifically, and I wanted to be sure that some provision was made for it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If it is an existing construction and the report received from the engineer warrants immediate repair, it will be undertaken under the general vote. I do not believe the report has been received concerning this project, but I shall look into it.

Mr. IRVINE: There is money for that purpose, provided that the engineer's report is favourable?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have $325,000 to cover repair and maintenance projects.

Mr. IRVINE: That will be enough.

Mr. FULTON: Has the minister received a report on the project at Revelstoke which the department was looking into? This concerns the construction of a wing dam on the Columbia river to prevent the erosion of the bank some half a mile below Revelstoke. When I was last in touch with the department I was informed that they were awaiting the report of the engineer. In this connection I think it is appropriate for some member from British Columbia to pay a tribute to the work of Mr. Morton, the departmental engineer. I have heard nothing but the highest praise of that gentleman. I think he has far too much work to look after, with the staff at his disposal, and the result is that when we bring matters to the attention of the minister it takes too long for a report to be made. That is not Mr. Morton's fault, because there is more than he and his staff can do. I asked that the work on the dam at Revelstoke be undertaken before high water in order to prevent erosion, but as I understand it the investigation did not get under way until the high water stage had been reached. I hope this work can be done before the next high water period. I hope also that the minister will consider giving his office in British Columbia the necessary staff to enable it to do the good work of which it is capable.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We lack staff in the engineers' branch, and I doubt if there is one of our offices which has not had men leave the service or go on superannuation. We are trying to replace these losses, but there seems to be a lack of engineering talent wishing to come into the government employ. We have made applications to the civil service commission to increase the staff.

Mr. FULTON: Can the minister say anything about the work at Revelstoke? While I am on this subject I should like to support the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West in connection with the dredging of the Arrow lake system, and to repeat my request for the replacement of the dredge on Shuswap lake. This is needed to do the work there and on the Thompson river. The dredge that is there now is some thirty years old, and is constantly in need of repair. This is quite a water system and there is an increasing amount of logging being done. Will the minister consider placing a new dredge there and getting the work under way as soon as possible, so that it may be completed before the next high water?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I nearly committed myself on Saturday to a new dredge on the Fraser river and on another river, and I do not know if I could commit myself to-day to another dredge on the Thompson river and one on the Columbia river. I understand that the life of a dredge is over forty years, and so if this one is only thirty years old, it should be good for another ten years.

Mr. FULTON: It seems to need extensive repairs.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If it needs repairs, we will attend to them. As at Revelstoke, we are proceeding to have surveys made before the next high water period.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Is the vote for Bella Coola to cover the extension and repairs of the existing wharf?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is to cover repairs and improvements to the actual wharf, the moving of the existing approach and float, the addition of a 100 by 200 feet wharf-head, and the construction of floats.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I have spoken to several of the oldest residents in this area about the condition of the existing wharf and its relationship to the river, which goes on the rampage quite often. The mouth is silting up, thus necessitating an extension to the wharf. I have been told that if the wharf were moved further out along the point, or even in the lee of the point it would provide shelter for the large fishing fleet which winters there. This would be better than to continue to extend the existing wharf and dabble with the river, because the whole mouth is filling up. When the tide goes out the whole fleet is left on the beach; the boats pile up on each other, and a lot of damage is done. I should like the minister to consider moving the wharf out farther. I think this could be worked out between his engineers and the people in the locality.

An interesting development has taken place in recent years in the movement of cattle from the Williams lake country down the Bella Coola valley and thence on to Vancouver. However, the cattle men up in that country can do it at a more costly rate by taking them into Williams lake and shipping over the Pacific-Great Eastern when they land down in the Bella Coola valley they get their cattle all caught up in this mud flat where the silting takes place, and if a barge wharf were put in there they could load without any difficulty. The cattle coming in through the up-country via Bella Coola have plenty of natural feeding, and there is no cost to the cattlemen, whereas they have to buy feed when they ship out the other way. Several ranchers are actively interested in this, and if this facility were provided I am sure there would be more interest in shipping out by that route. At the same time this work going on in Bella Coola also affects Ocean Falls. As you know, that is a growing pulp and paper centre, and the people there suffer climate handicaps. It rains practically all the time.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Up British Columbia!

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Well, I have to tell the truth once in a while, so help me. The only place where these people can have a real holiday and get out of the rain belt is Bella Coola, forty miles away. Yet when they go there to spend a holiday they run against this business of tying up their boats, and if there is a wind blowing the boat gets all smashed up. That is why it would be a benefit to the workers of Ocean Falls as well as to the people of Bella Coola.

I have to bring to the minister's attention the extent to which these communities are dependent upon these wharves. Very often their whole livelihood depends on a decent float. Further to that, at one time $3,500 was voted for a float at Hunts Inlet; I do not see it there now. The float was condemned a couple of years ago. There again is a fishing village which is completely isolated as regards getting to it or out of it, except for that float, and yet it is in such a condition that they cannot depend on it. Oona River is in the same position, and also Skidegate. The float at Skidegate is half sunk. As to getting lumber to build a float, I know I could scrounge enough off the beach to build one. So the material is right in the bay as far as building a float at Skidegate is concerned.

Speaking of the interior, there are quite a few independent loggers working along Babine Lake, and they have no wharf facilities. It would be in the interests of producing lumber if the department would heed the representations of the board of trade of Burns Lake and install that much-needed facility at the point.

I bring these various items to the attention of the minister not as a means of having money spent in the district, but rather to impress upon him the fact that these facilities, especially on the coast, are the only means of getting in and out of that area, and the fishermen whose whole capital is often tied up in one boat, are absolutely dependent upon decent facilities for tying up and landing. It is not a case of waiting until future years; the work should be done now, or there will be a menace and a serious handicap to the production of fish and the much-needed food which the world is demanding at the present time.

I leave these various matters in the hands of the minister, except that I should like to ask him one question: has the department considered the objections of the people of Port Essington to moving the float from Haysport to Tyee?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sorry that I could not get the information this afternoon, but the question will be noted and I will have the officials give that information to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: When I was home last winter they were complaining of the plans to move the float from Haysport to Tyee. The people of Port Essington did not want it moved, and a majority of the citizens signed a petition to that effect.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I want to compliment the minister on his staff in British Columbia, and particularly those who have worked in the Kootenay district, some of whom I have known for thirty years or more. They are efficient, hard-working and courteous, and the service they give is generally recognized by all people in the district regardless of political beliefs. I say this because I think that very often the services rendered by civil servants distant from Ottawa are not given sufficient recognition in Ottawa.

The people of my riding are pleased at the expenditures proposed in connection with the Arrow and Kootenay lakes; but I want to bring to the attention of the minister one or two matters connected with this vote. I speak for a riding which last year produced one hundred million dollars' worth of minerals, lumber and agricultural products, so it is a riding of some importance. I am not suggesting that the things which are desired by the people of the district can be done immediately, having regard to the shortage of material and of labour. But I do ask the minister and his department to give consideration to the provision of a very necessary float at Trail, in view of the increased navigation on the Columbia river. I am informed that during the last month or so we had more than forty boats come from Boulder dam and Spokane to the head of the lakes. There should also be extension and improvement to the present accommodation at Nakusp, Lardo and Nelson and when the time is ripe a float built for St. Leon Hot Springs.

I do ask the minister to give some consideration to these matters. Although we do not expect the work to be done while labour and materials are in short supply, we hope these projects will be set on foot as soon as possible.

Mr. MAYHEW: I should like to ask the minister when he is going to call for tenders for the fishermen's float in Victoria. That was, I think, promised in June last. We have been waiting for definite word for some time. I might tell him that in a letter I received this morning it is stated that at the present time there are 344 fishing boats and packers operating out of Victoria and they have no place to tie up satisfactorily. These boats last year brought in to Victoria over 22,000,000 pounds of fish; therefore the industry is a pretty substantial one. A good many of them go out into the halibut and tuna beds. The boats they are using are fairly expensive, and a proper place is needed to moor them. We are particularly anxious that this work be proceeded without any further delay. As a matter of fact it will not do much good this season, but a good many boats will want to winter there this coming winter.

The other item here is $100,000 towards the dredging of the harbour. I am glad to notice the words "towards" the dredging of the harbour. That sum will take care of some of the loose dirt from the inner harbour, but it will not take care of the outer harbour, where the work will run into a considerable amount of money. In addition to the dredging of both the inner and the outer harbour we have also to look after proper dockage to have it ready for the time when the large boats get back on the run. Prior to the war the Empress boats, running between the orient and Victoria and Vancouver, used to make Victoria a regular port of call. They went away during the war and they have not been able to get them back. I understand the Canadian Pacific are preparing other boats to take their place, but they will not be able to dock at Victoria unless a proper wharf is available. I am not afraid that we shall not make progress in getting this settled. I have spent a good deal of my time in the last four or five years discussing it with the minister's predecessor and also with his present deputy, and I am quite satisfied that the negotiations that are going on at the present time will eventually lead us into a satisfactory position. Therefore I am not asking the minister to make any specific promises in this regard, but I do ask him to let us know when he will go ahead with the building of the floats for the fishermen.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We received the plans this morning, and we shall be asking for tenders this week for fishermen's floats.

Mr. MAYHEW: Will the minister be calling for tenders for the dredging at the same time?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know whether we shall be calling for tenders right now. The hon. gentleman knows the extent of this project for dredging Victoria harbour.

Mr. MAYHEW: Yes, I know it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is not a $100,000 job.

Mr. MAYHEW: I understand that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is quite a large amount. We thought of starting the work this year and proceeding next year. I could not get enough money this year to do that work.

Mr. REID: I hope you will not take away the old dredges from the river for the purpose.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It will be contract work.

[Mr. Mayhew.]

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I am sorry I was not here on Saturday when the discussion took place with regard to Ripple Rock. I do not propose to go over the ground covered then, because according to Hansard there was a rather acrimonious debate.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Quite a ripple.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): I believe the minister was under criticism in that regard. Usually we British Columbia members agree with one another, but in this case I commend the minister for closing down that work. He used excellent judgment when he closed it down. As it is in my riding, I may say that I was a little nervous about going around that country because the people seemed to think I was the Minister of Public Works and was responsible for the work going on there. We have spent $800,000 there and have learned that the system that was being tried was entirely wrong. Ripple Rock will always be a great hazard. As a matter of fact, there are a great many marine hazards in British Columbia—Ripple Rock is not the only one—and it is interesting to note that during the war many thousands of ships, Russian, American and others, all strangers, went through there without one being wrecked on Ripple Rock. The only one that was wrecked was our own government ship, and I think the captain or whoever was in charge would be the first to say that he committed an error in judgment when he got tangled up with the rock. The minister said that he had $1,900,000 available for its removal. I would like his assurance that he will start making that money available if someone comes along and offers a no-cure, no-pay proposition. Will he undertake that?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I would do a lot for my hon. friend, but I would not mingle in the Ripple Rock discussion. I see that my hon. friends are not all of one mind on the project.

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): We are all of one mind on the necessity for the work.

Mr. REID: We all want it removed.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I hear one partisan saying that it cannot be done, and another that it should not be done. I do not think I should repeat what I said on Saturday; it would only start another long discussion. What I said then was that the last estimate we received from the contractor was $1,900,000, and we tried to find out whether we could get a guarantee that he would execute the project for that price and give us an assurance that the work would be done.

But that is what we could not get from any contractor, and we therefore decided not to proceed on that basis. As I explained on Saturday, we were sorry that we could not do the work under the present methods known to the department. I repeat, however, that we will continue to study the project and if any other method is found I think the government will be disposed to undertake these works. I do not say they will be done this year, or even next year. We do not want anybody to say that the officials of the department do not wish to go ahead with the work. There is nothing to that. We are ready to undertake it; it is a danger to navigation. Before we undertake the work, however, we want to have something definite as to price and completion of the work.

Mr. PEARKES: It is not only a menace but a very serious hindrance to navigation, in that vessels have to tie up and wait for hours until the tide is favourable so that they can go by. The vessels that tie up, waiting for hours, losing valuable sailing time, need the removal just as much as the smaller vessels to which it is a danger.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance—

325. Land and cable telegraph lines—Lower St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels for cable work, $170,000.

Mr. LANGLOIS: The Department of Public Works owns and operates a telephone service on the Magdalen islands, which form part of my constituency. Besides the various improvements which I recommended to the department and which are most urgent, since this service is frequently out of order, I wish also to draw the attention of the minister to the necessity of having the central manned twenty-four hours a day. This will entail an expense which will not burden the treasury unduly since it will require only two additional operators. As the minister knows, this service links the islands together, and is very essential, especially so when medical attention is required during the night. There are only two islands on which there is a resident doctor, and many pathetic cases have been brought to my attention in which, owing to delay in getting medical assistance to the sick, there have been very unfortunate consequences. I should like to have from the minister the assurance that the department will take immediate action to obtain the necessary equipment to give telephone service to residents who have made application and urgently need it. I am of the opinion that such equipment could be obtained from surpluses declared by the various departments through War Assets Corporation. Vote 331 covers construction, repairs and improvements, and I would ask the minister to include a telephone service for the Magdalen islands.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance—

327. Alberta and Saskatchewan, $120,500.

Mr. PROBE: As a member for Saskatchewan I find it a little difficult to sink my teeth into any specific item in the estimates of the Minister of Public Works. Out of a total appropriation of some $36,000,000 expected to be spent in the current fiscal year by the Department of Public Works I find that in connection with public buildings my province has an amount of $46,500 assigned to it. There are various other smaller items, and then there is one we are now discussing which is linked with Alberta under telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance. This item amounts to $120,500.

When the estimates of the Minister of Fisheries were before the committee last year the hon. member for Saskatoon City drew attention to the fact that out of $3 million to be expended across the country some $13 or $14 was allotted to my province. I do not know whether we should get the scientific instrument called radar working to find out where the moneys of the country are being spent in our province. I am not asking for anything specific for my province, but I feel that the Minister of Public Works is operating on a pattern which is common throughout all the departments with respect to placing necessary services within Saskatchewan.

Dealing with the item we are now discussing, I should like the minister to give a comprehensive statement as to what telephone and telegraph services are being conducted in Saskatchewan, in what areas and for what purpose. Is it something which is beyond the capacity of the local provincial department of telephones to handle, or is it a supplementary service, or is it in some area in which the provincial government system does not function? I should like to have a statement on this item because it is the only one of any size in Saskatchewan. Would the minister be good enough to give us a statement at this time?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): These are telephone lines operated by the federal government in outlying districts where the ordinary telephone company does not operate or, as in Saskatchewan, where the province would not undertake to put up lines because there is always a deficit in the operation. This amount is provided to try to help these people who are out of the way and to give them communication with the larger centres.

In Saskatchewan there is the Meadow Lake to Pegasus, a four-mile line between these two places; Pegasus to Barnes Crossing, fourteen miles; Island Hill loop, one mile; Buffalo Narrows to Peter Pond lake, thirty-five miles. We have fifty-four miles of telephone lines which we operate and which are provided for in this vote. The hon. member's province is better organized with a telephone system than others, I presume.

Mr. PROBE: I am not complaining about the outlay. I want to know where the moneys are being expended, the amount expended for the telephone and telegraph services, the number of persons employed on this work in my province.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have given the mileage for the telephone lines. In Saskatchewan we also have 291 miles of telegraph lines from Lloydminster to Onion Lake to Meadow Lake and Ile à la Crosse. I am sorry that I have not the breakdown of the whole for the two provinces. This system applies to the two provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. The total vote is $120,500. This amount is to provide for the working expenses of the telegraph and telephone lines of the Alberta-Saskatchewan division and consists of $84,616 for salaries, $11,200 for cost of living bonus, $6,000 overtime for operators, $6,000 for repairs and $12,684 for supplies and sundries. I believe that makes up a total of $120,500. The lines of the Alberta-Saskatchewan division consist of 1,934¾ miles of land lines and ninety offices for operating purposes, of which twenty-seven are on a salary basis and sixty-three on a commission basis.

Mr. PROBE: The minister cannot break that down?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I can give the names.

Mr. PROBE: I do not want that. I wanted to know what the approximate amount was and the number of employees we have in our own province.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): As I understand it, this system is operated in one place; it is a division. I would have to take name after name and give the salaries out of the $84,616 paid for salaries; then the cost of living bonus, and so on. It is not divided between provinces. It is one division comprising all these lines.

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

Mr. PROBE: The headquarters of that division is where?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Edmonton, I understand.

Item agreed to.

Telegraph and telephone services, operation and maintenance—

328. British Columbia—Northern and Yukon districts, $171,000.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I have two or three points to bring up under this item. First of all, I should like to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that the telephone line between Massett and Port Clements does not work at high tide. Therefore, in a crisis or any thing like that, the thing would be a complete washout. During the war there was a D.O.T. station operated out of Massett. Has the government or the department considered taking over that installation and operating a radio telephone up there?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am informed that we have put in the best system known. The hon. gentleman says it does not operate?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: That is the information I received from a reliable source. They say it does not work at high tide.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am informed that we cannot understand why it would not operate at high tide. I am no expert—

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I suggest that the minister check with the residents of Massett, because the latest word I received is that it does not work at high tide. They are vitally interested in radio telephones, and I shall give the reasons. There is now an aeroplane service—

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I know there is a radio telephone service up there.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: If the minister has a radio telephone service there he must have installed it since I came down.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member has been here a long time.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I do not think you have a radio telephone service.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps not; I shall have to inquire and I shall let my hon. friend know.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I should like to inform the minister that they now have an aeroplane service. If they had a radio telephone service in the event of a crisis they could get in touch with the plane at Rupert or Massett or at Queen Charlotte city, as the case may be.

They have no doctor there; therefore it is vital to have this service. Inasmuch as the machinery is there, we cannot see why the government cannot operate the service in the interests of the people.

There is one other question. Down at Skidegate and Queen Charlotte city there is a line from the old R.C.A.F. station which was situated at Alfred Bay across from the village of Skidegate. This plane service lands at Alfred Bay, yet the telephone has been disconnected on the Skidegate side of the bay, and they do not know when the planes are landing or anything about them. They have missed planes there because the planes left before the people knew anything about it. Would the department consider hooking up that existing line so that they could telephone? There would be no great cost; I imagine one of these old jangle phones would work.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Certainly we shall consider it, if we can help the people in the outlying parts of your province. The object of these votes for telephones and telegraphs is to help these people who have no other means of communication. No one else will undertake to give them these facilities, and certainly we shall consider what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: There is another point I want to bring up in connection with the telephone service running from the Yukon down through Hazelton. The people of the Kispiox valley, which runs forty miles out of Hazelton, are hooked up with that system. They have been paying $2.50 a month or $30 a year for that service; that is the charge for each individual phone. As I understand it, only five families live up in that valley, and you are going to charge them anywhere from 10 cents to 20 cents a call in addition to the $2.50 a month. This is in a frontier area, but you are going to put the whole load on them. Quite often when the service breaks down those people go out and spend days working on the line, but they have never charged the department for fixing it. The line is practically hanging on the branches of the trees at the present time, as I get the picture, and they would like to be allowed to call through the exchange at Hazelton to their local store without being soaked that additional 10 to 25 cents per call.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Who gave you that information?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I do not want to give the source of my information in public, but I am getting it straight and I can assure you it is reliable.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have not that information.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: That is what I get, that they are being charged for each call, and I have it from absolutely reliable sources which I shall give the minister later. There is an Indian mission up in that valley in addition to these ranches, and this telephone line is their only way of communications with the outside. Part of the year they are absolutely sewn up because of muddy roads, and must depend upon this telephone service. Then up in Hazelton you have two telephone operators in the office who are paid $720 per annum or about $60 per month. They cannot make a go of it at that rate, with the present cost of living.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): They are appointed by the civil service commission.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: They are hired by you, are they not?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We make a request to the civil service commission and they find the employees. That is the system under which the government works.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Then through you, Mr. Chairman, may I ask whom that comes under?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The Secretary of State.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Also in connection with this rural telephone set-up, in the town of Burns Lake the switchboard is not operated twenty-four hours a day. That is a divisional point as it were, for a wide area with a scattered population, and they would like a telephone operator on duty twenty-four hours a day. I understand it is hooked up with the police station, and has not been found reliable in case of emergency.

Telegraph branch—Reconstruction, repairs and improvements—

331. Maritime provinces and lower St. Lawrence, $12,000.

Mr. WINTERS: There are two islands off the coast of my constituency, La Have island and Tancook island. The department has been good enough to make a survey with a view to improving telephone facilities there. Are any improvements at those points included in this item?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is the general vote, and those two islands would not be included here. This is required for general repairs and improvements to telegraph and telephone lines on Cape Breton Island, New Brunswick, north shore lower St. Lawrence river and gulf and the larger islands situated therein; also repairs and replacements to the telegraph and telephone cables located in the bay of Fundy, Northumberland strait and in the coastal waters around the province of Nova Scotia. I shall look into the matter mentioned by my hon. friend.

Item agreed to.

General—

339. National Gallery of Canada, $80,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to say a word about this item. Perhaps it is a delicate position for one who has talked about economy as much as I have now to question economy, and I am not so sure I am questioning it, but I should like a little information as to policy in connection with the national gallery. I see there is a decrease in this item of $22,000, and I feel this is just one of the places where we should be cautious before we practise retrenchment. It seems to me that in these days, which are so difficult, when we have so many things to disagree about, we should not disregard the things we can all agree are worth while. Therefore without giving a song about it I should like very much to have a brief statement as to general policy. Perhaps I should know more about it myself, but I am ignorant and I should like to know those who are in charge, just what plans are afoot and what is the policy that is to be followed.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The members of the board of trustees to-day are Mr. Harry S. Southam, of Ottawa, chairman; Mr. E. B. Hosmer, of Montreal, and Right Hon. Vincent Massey of Toronto. The board may be composed of from three to five members, and at the present time we are considering the appointment of one or two additional members. As to the decrease, last year we had $50,000 in the vote for the purchase of works of art. This year that amount was brought down to $25,000, but I think there will be a supplementary estimate to reestablish it at $50,000. Sometimes it is difficult to have people understand that a vote of this kind should be increased. During the war years, of course, it was brought down to provide simply for maintenance and staff, without making any outside expenditure. If I personally were to decide on the amount I would increase it, because I think following the war would be a good time to purchase some works of art. But it is always the same thing; when we request increased amounts we are told to try to economize, so this year the officials said they would try to get along with the $25,000. I do not think I can get along with that this year, and I hope to be back with a supplementary estimate to restore the original amount. There is no doubt the national gallery is doing a wonderful work in the country, and it is one of the places always visited by those who come to Ottawa. There was even a suggestion during the discussion of the federal district commission bill that we should have a real national gallery in Ottawa instead of using the museum, which is an imposing building, but does not meet all the needs. This year we are putting up a building, not at very great cost, as a storeroom for some of the works we have, and I am not losing faith that as the years go on we may increase the estimates for the national gallery.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Just one more thing. Do we not get an annual report of any kind from the trustees?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, yes; that report has been tabled in the house, in English and in French.

Mr. BOUCHER: There is a matter about which I have spoken to the minister once or twice, and as to which I believe he has some sympathy. I have not the full details before me just now, but I should like to bring it to the attention of the committee. As we enter the main hall of the House of Commons and proceed toward the library, hanging both to the right and left are two excellent pictures depicting the last war. On many occasions I have heard guides extol to guests visiting the house the beauties of these two pictures.

I understand that they were painted shortly after the last war by a lady now living in Ottawa and have been lent to the government by her. She is now in a position where she would like to dispose of them, and I believe they could be purchased by the government at a reasonable cost. I feel that if the pictures are worthy of hanging in the main hall of this building for such a long time, on loan, it ill befits the government to continue their use without purchasing them. I would urge that the lady be approached and the pictures purchased by the government. I believe there is a history behind them which no doubt the minister knows. If he does not he would have no difficulty in finding it out.

I believe they were painted at the suggestion of Sir Arthur Currie during the last war. This arrangement was agreed to by Sir Robert Borden, the then prime minister. The work was done at high cost by a skilful artist. I believe there are some reasons why the national art gallery have not purchased them. However, I feel that as a member of the House of Commons I ought to bow my head in shame each time guests are shown these pictures, which are pointed out as one of the great things in our parliament buildings, realizing all the while that they are there only on loan, and that she who painted them at great cost, and at great pains and effort, has not been compensated for her work.

Time is rolling by. I suggest it is not fitting that the works of an artist should appear in the central hallway of the houses of parliament at Ottawa so long as these have been, without the government's offering to make a purchase, particularly when the pictures have such artistic value and attraction.

I am sorry I am not sufficiently well trained in art to describe the beauties of these pictures, nor do I know their value. But I do know that anyone who looks at them must appreciate that they are fine pictures, and must have required great effort on the part of the artist who painted them.

I am sure that if the minister inquires into the circumstances he will realize that there is much more could be said, and that I have made but a poor fist of presenting the whole case. I would ask him, however, to give his attention to the matter to see if something can be done.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am sure that the hon. member knows the government makes no purchases of pictures. We vote a certain amount of money which is handed over to the national gallery board, and the board in turn makes the choice of the pictures it will purchase. The names of the commissioners would indicate that they are persons keenly interested in art, and with experience in these matters. We rely upon their judgment. I should think the good lady in question would be well advised to see these gentlemen, instead of the minister. I shall be ready to follow the advice given by the national gallery in the matter.

Mr. BOUCHER: Although the House of Commons does not purchase them directly, I would point out that there is an appropriation for the House of Commons. The trustees at the national art gallery could be asked to purchase the pictures.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The request will be considered.

Mr. BOUCHER: I suggest that the minister as a member of the government should ask the national art gallery to purchase these two pictures. If they are good enough to hang in these halls for such a long time, and to be the pride of those of us who have seen them hanging there, surely they are good enough to merit purchase from the artist who painted them.

Mr. PROBE: Would the minister state how the works contained in the national art gallery or those owned by the gallery are made available to citizens of Canada who are not fortunate enough to come to Ottawa to visit, and to admire those works? Have we a system of travelling libraries of prints of masterpieces which would be available to clubs? If so, what statistical information has the minister respecting those facilities?

I regret that the item is being cut, but I appreciate the minister's statement that there is likely to be a generous supplementary allotment.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have here a report from the chairman of the board of directors of the national gallery. It states that in the home field the national gallery has had the most active year in its history. Six major channels of art education were vigorously employed with highly satisfactory results. In Ottawa special and regular exhibitions were held and these were attended by nearly 150,000 visitors; thirty lectures, attended by a total of more than 3,000 students and interested listeners were given.

The trustees continue to regard their work for other parts of Canada as of major importance. Loan exhibitions to points outside Ottawa were in greater demand than ever before and were sent out in larger numbers. The cumulative effect of these exhibitions is apparent in the steadily growing interest in art centres and increased attendance at individual galleries.

The distribution of good colour reproductions of Canadian paintings, whereby some of the benefits of the national gallery are carried to the remotest settlements has grown beyond the capacity of the present staff to cope with satisfactorily. Extra space and assistance must be provided if this useful work is not to be handicapped. During the year 163,210 prints were sent out, which is quadruple the number distributed last year, which in turn was double the total of the year before. The reproductions include the well-known silk-screen prints which are proving of inestimable value for school use.

The national gallery has originated a new plan to make the gallery more widely effective as an educational institution. With the cooperation of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a series of broadcasts to schools on outstanding Canadian artists was commenced last year. The broadcasts make use of the small colour prints issued by the national gallery, which are sent out in sets at a nominal price. Thus the school pupil or interested individual in any part of Canada can have before him a facsimile of the picture being discussed as he listens to the broadcast. Approximately 120,000 prints were requested last year and the demand for the coming year may reach half a million. The notebooks of pupils and reports submitted by schools have been excellent and indicate the far-reaching effects these broadcasts are having on pupil and parent alike. It is one of the most effective devices for making known to Canadians everywhere the work of our own artists and developing in them an intelligent appreciation of art. As the technique of this method develops, the scheme can be extended to include other schools of art and other periods.

The total number of lectures and film showings given during the year in all parts of Canada was 267, an increase of 100 per cent over last year.

That the demand for what the art gallery can provide does not arise only from a limited number of interested enthusiasts but has its roots in all parts of the dominion and in all levels of society, is indicative of an ever-increasing standard of education in Canada.

Under the direction of the national gallery, an exhibition called "What the art centre can do for your community" was developed and ten identical collections were prepared. These ten exhibitions are in continuous circulation throughout the country, even to the smaller and more remote towns, showing what can be done to make use of the facilities of the national gallery and other government sources. In addition to these collections, 138 loan exhibitions were circulated in all parts of Canada.

General—

340. Miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for, not more than $5,000 to be expended upon any one work, $75,000.

Mr. REID: I should like to draw the attention of the minister to something which I think should be rectified, but first I wish to ask whether any consideration has been given to the completion of the carving of the blank stone in this building. I do not know whether hon. members have noticed this or not, but as you come in the main entrance from the east you will see a stone bearing these words:

This stone was laid by Edward Prince of Wales, September 1., in this year of victory Finis Coronat OPVS.

Those Latin words mean, "the end crowns the work". Not long ago a visitor asked me what was the year of victory.

Mr. MacNICOL: 1918.

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

Mr. REID: The hon. member is wrong, it is 1919. I challenge any hon. member to go there and try to figure out the little dots under the various letters. I took these down and tried to find out the key, but I could not. Finally I took the matter up with the Clerk of the house and I found that he had the key, I suppose having been here for such a long time. He told me that the first line was 552, the second, 1151; the third, 1; the fourth, 108, and the fifth, 107. If you add them all up together you get 1919. I suppose the architect simply left this riddle to be worked out by future generations. I am going to suggest to the minister that he should have "1919" carved on that stone.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why not 1918?

Mr. REID: The war ended officially in 1919. As I point out, no one would know what it means unless he added up all the dots under the letters and knew what they meant.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I shall tell my officials to read carefully what the hon. gentleman has said and, if there is no reason why this work should not be done, then I will give instructions that it be done.

Item agreed to.

General—

342. To provide for balances required to complete any projects undertaken in previous fiscal years and for which no specific provision is made in the fiscal year 1946-47, $20,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to refer particularly to the item in connection with the Great Bear river road. The supplementaries last year, item 678, called for $371,000 for the extension of this road, and I should like to know if that amount was all spent.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that from $180,000 to $190,000 was spent out of the supplementaries last year. This year we are asking for $425,000 to complete the work, which makes a total of about $580,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understand that something like $35,000 was to go to the Northern Transportation Company.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have a contract with the Northern Transportation Company to complete the extension commenced in 1945, which is approximately fifty per cent completed. This contract was for $387,000. Then there are repairs to the old section of the road, $20,000; purchase of maintenance machinery, $18,000, making a total of $425,000. There was an estimated $370,536.87 expended in 1945-46 and the amount asked for 1946-47 is $387,000, making a total expenditure of $758,000 to complete the whole work.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Northern Transportation Company is a crown company?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: Any work we are doing to complete this road we would really be paying the cost to ourselves?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is the cost.

Mr. MacNICOL: The government is doing it itself, since it is a crown company?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—chief architect's branch —

598. Repairs, alterations, operation and maintenance of buildings, $2,000,000.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Could the minister give a breakdown of this large item, showing the various amounts that it is anticipated will be spent in each province during the coming year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This is to provide for caretaking, heating, repairing, elevator service, lighting, et cetera, in connection with the buildings occupied by what are considered continuing war departments, boards, corporations, branches, et cetera. A ruling made by treasury board on January 4, 1946, designating continuing war departments for estimate purposes for 1946-47 in connection with telephones, is being applied to all maintenance items for 1946-1947. These departments are as follows:

Reconstruction and Supply.
National Defence (army).
National Defence (air).
National Defence (navy).
National War Services.
Wartime prices and trade board.
Purely wartime divisions and functions of other departments.

The estimates for 1946-47 are as follows:

Salaries and wages	$1,150,000
Cost of living bonus	150,000
Alterations	210,000
Light and power	200,000
Water and water rates	40,000
Fuel	200,000
Supplies for caretakers	45,000
Sundries	5,000
	$2,000,000

Mr. PEARKES: Would the item for national defence (army) include the building of drill halls?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. FULTON: I notice that the amount of this item is $2,000,000 as against $4,280,000 for last year. Would that indicate that the money was not spent last year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The estimates for wartime activities have decreased. There are fewer buildings occupied by the war-time departments and agencies and we need less money than we did last year for repairs, maintenance and staff. It has gone down $280,000.

Mr. FAIR: When the regular items were going through the other night I was out for a short time, and when I came back I found that the item of which I wish to speak had been carried. Perhaps I might have a chance to discuss it under this item. It is in connection with the char staff of the building here.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand that the char staff of this building is under the House of Commons item.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: This seems to me to be a very large item for the coming year, covering as it does expenditures in connection with departments of war carried on in the past. I think we are entitled to further information.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Is that on item 599, rental of premises?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On item 598, upon which I was asking questions a moment ago. The minister says that this year, while there have been a number of reductions in departments, there will be an expenditure of $200,000 in repairs and alterations. That is a pretty heavy expenditure in connection with the surviving war departments. I should like to secure from the minister, first, a statement showing how much of this $2,000,000 will be appropriated by national defence, how much by reconstruction, how much by wartime prices and trade board, and the nature of the alterations which are anticipated. These boards have the necessary buildings, and those buildings were well equipped during the period of the war. As I look down the list of expenditures under the chief architect's branch I ask myself whether everything has been done by the department of the minister to cut to the bone these expenditures. After he has given me the information I have asked for, I may have some further questions on it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): This estimate is based on requests from all the departments I have mentioned. We act only as agents of these departments. We receive requests from the wartime prices and trade board for office supplies or for the maintenance of buildings and the supplies they need there. These requests are submitted to our resident architects and they make an estimate. Probably this estimate is not the exact figure which will be needed; it may be less or more, but it is an estimate for the fiscal year 1946-47. I have to rely on the reports and estimates which are given me from all over the country by our resident architects.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What do the wartime prices and trade board want this year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is one of the largest organisms we have in the government and all over the country from Halifax to Victoria.

Mr. BOUCHER: "Organism" is a good word.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I have to take in the demands they make to public works, but I would rather see the hon. gentleman discuss this on some other estimate, because he needs more expert advice than I have.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Would the minister give what information he has as to what the wartime prices and trade board want in each province, the expenditures they have asked the department to ratify, the particulars covering the Department of Reconstruction and the Department of National Defence, and in what provinces are these various departments asking for expenditures, the amount in each, and so forth?

Mr FOURNIER (Hull): In every province and, especially, in Ottawa we have offices and buildings occupied by these departments of reconstruction and of national defence—the three branches—the wartime prices and trade board, and all other wartime divisions. These buildings we have under our control have to be maintained; their value is considerable. As time goes on, repairs must be done to them and they require painting. Take the case of these temporary buildings, on which most of the $200,000 mentioned by the hon. member will be spent this year. Every building we occupy we keep in a good state of repair. But I cannot tell the hon. member the amount which will be spent if we have an office in Prince Albert—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: You will not expend anything in Prince Albert any more.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member does not want me to spend money there? He is one of the rare members, one of the odd members who are not requesting any expenditure: that is good news to public works. But wherever we have offices, as time goes on, we get requests for expenditures, and this money is provided for that purpose. That does not mean that if it is not needed we shall try to expend it.

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

That is about all I can tell the hon. member, except that salaries and wages take $1,150,000; the cost of living bonus, which is not under my control, $150,000; alterations, $210,000.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But where are these alterations?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In every one of these buildings, when a request comes in. If the hon. member wants a list of every demand to date, I may have it, and can produce it to the hon. member. But every week of every month I receive requests from all over the country to repair this or that; and this is the estimate which we have been given for the year. I could not give the hon. member the definite amount of what will be spent, say at Saskatoon, on the public building which is occupied there by the wartime prices and trade board or any other wartime agency. However, the breakdown of estimates is quite complete. Take the fuel for the heating of these buildings, $200,000; we are actually purchasing the fuel for this purpose all over the country. I cannot avoid expenditures on light and power; we have contracts probably with most of the companies all over the country. As for salaries and cost of living bonus, I cannot do much about that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What about the $200,000?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am trying to explain that it is an estimate of what repairs will be needed to these buildings during the year. If you ask me to-day for a list of all the requests from all over the country, probably with my staff I can provide it, but I cannot repeat it here from memory. Probably I could give the hon. member an idea of what has been expended since the first of April of this year. But these requests come into the office every day. Then we have our architects go over them and provide for these repairs either by day work or by contract. I should like to satisfy my hon. friend's mind, but when I put the same question to my officials that is the answer they give me, that it is estimated that upon the buildings under our control we shall spend that amount this year. That does not mean that all of it will be expended, but it is the closest we can get.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—chief architect's branch—

600. Furniture, et cetera, $300,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Surely we do not need to buy any furniture now, with all the furniture we had around during the war. Here we are asked to vote $300,000 for furniture.

What are we doing with all we have bought during the war years—selling it, getting rid of it for nothing? Perhaps the minister can give us some explanation.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is asking me what I ask myself when he inquires about furniture for all these offices. But he would be surprised to know that every morning this department receives requests which have been passed by the director of economies whom we put up there some years ago, and got into the rug business. I make no decision on these requests which come in; they are all decided by the director of economies.

Mr. BOUCHER: We had better wrap another director up in that rug, eh?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): When these requests come to my office the only thing I do is to act as agent and ask for tenders for the purchase of this furniture which is requested. The government has this system. A department makes a request. It goes through the director of economies' office. He is an expert in these matters and, if he refuses it, it does not reach my office. If he approves the purchase, the work we do as purchasing agent is to try to get the furniture. I am not buying for public works but for every agency of the government.

Mr. STIRLING: Who is the director of economies?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Murphy, who was purchasing officer for the post office department years ago. He replaced Colonel Thompson.

Mr. FULTON: What is his relationship to the treasury board? Does it go there?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, and it is far worse when it gets there.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): That does not answer the question. Where is the furniture we purchased during the war for all these buildings we have all over the place?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is still in the buildings.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): In spite of the fact that we have all that furniture which we purchased for these offices during the war, we now need $300,000?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is the estimate.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I hardly understand it myself, but I get requests just the same.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I think something should be done about the matter. This is one item that should be looked into. Are we still piling up furniture, getting more all the time? I do not know how we can get information except through the minister. It is under his control.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Let me give one instance that may surprise hon. members. Every week I receive requests for filing cabinets. I tell my officials, "We have been buying so many of these cabinets that I do not see why they have not space enough for all their papers." I am told, however, that there is a continuous accumulation of records that have to be taken care of.

Mr. GRAYDON: Are they for orders in council?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Probably some, but not to the extent my hon. friend thinks. All these departments keep their records, and I am buying filing cabinets every week. Hon. members would be surprised how many I have bought, and none are empty.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): In ordinary business you do not keep all these things in filing cabinets all the time. They are put away and can be brought out when required. I do not understand it. That we should need so much more furniture is something I cannot understand. There must be something wrong with the other departments—I do not say with the department of the Minister of Public Works. Something should be done about the matter.

Mr. PEARKES: How much, if any, of this furniture has been obtained through War Assets Corporation? There must be a great deal turned in by the services as surplus.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The first thing the department does when there is a request for furniture is to send a letter to War Assets Corporation to see whether they have at their disposal what is needed, and then in some instances we purchase from them. When they have not in stock what we need we have to buy from outsiders.

Mr. FULTON: Does it mean that if, say the Department of National Defence has furniture in various temporary buildings, surplus as a result of the cutting down of services, that furniture has to be turned over to War Assets Corporation and resold to you?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Absolutely.

Mr. FULTON: And does the director of economies approve that? We have paid for that furniture once through national defence; do we have to pay for it again through this department?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Since the passing of the statute with respect to War Assets Corporation, they have disposed of any surplus in any department. Even the old salvage department under finance has been brought under that. Any surplus of any department is sent to War Assets corporation and is resold to public works if we need it, and we pay War Assets Corporation. We actually pay that corporation. For any goods they have sold they have to account, but we pay out of these votes.

Mr. GRAYDON: The minister must be misinformed on that point, because during the discussion on War Assets Corporation at the previous session, or perhaps it was earlier this session, the same point was raised by some hon. member, and there was a special exception, which the government indicated was always evident, when one department of government was buying from another. I understood at that time, and I believe the house understood, that such material did not go to War Assets Corporation to be bought back by another department. I am quite sure we were so informed, but it might be a good time now to have the matter clarified in the interests of the position of War Assets Corporation as a distributor between departments.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I understand from my officials that we do purchase from War Assets corporation what they have on hand and what we need for different departments. Whether the actual transfer of funds is made or whether it is a matter of bookkeeping, I do not know. I cannot say.

Mr. GRAYDON: I think the minister had better utilize the advice given him in this committee with respect to the purchase of new furniture to see that the policy of the governmen in future is so orientated as to meet conditions as they should be met. We should not be buying new furniture at this time, with the tremendous amount of furniture bought by the various departments—and high-class furniture, too, according to the evidence brought before the committee and the house from time to time. If you buy through War Assets Corporation, this is what happens. Many of the departments are holding back lists of what they should disclose as surplus. In the meantime, while they are held back, we are buying new furniture out of current revenue or from the consolidated revenue fund. Later on, this will be sent to War Assets Corporation; we shall have purchased new stuff in the meantime, and the other will go at second-hand prices to the public. The government, in exercising the kind of economy it should, ought to make a special survey of what there is in all the war departments, which were in some way integrated by a war economy system. We would not have to be buying furniture for ten or fifteen years if a proper survey were made to see what we have on hand. The minister knows there is a disposition in the departments to hold on to their furniture and other surplus assets until pressure is brought to bear. It is the old story again, that the government is not realizing that the war is over and that we are in an entirely different set of circumstances. These departments ought to be wound up, and such supplies should be used for the ordinary civil work of the government. I do not wish to be unduly critical of the minister, because he himself is not too sure of the propriety of the whole business and I am far less sure than he is.

If there is one thing more than another that the discussion of these estimates brings out, it is that the minister can say to his department and to all these wartime mushrooms—essential ones too—which have grown up: "After all, these things are not needed now". If he does not do something about the matter the opposition will swoop down on him again, and I suggest that he use this to see that economies are effected. He can use the opposition in having economies effected, because that is one of the jobs we are here for.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Taking $40,000,000 out of a total of $3,500,000,000, there is not much in the way of economies that can be effected in my department. You are looking at small things in my department. Public works, acting as agents for other departments, goes first to War Assets Corporation and if they have on hand what we need we purchase from them. If they have not what we request, or what is asked for we go outside. If a survey is to be made I do not think it will be made by public works, and I do not know what interference I can have with all these government departments. When they request a desk and a chair for a new office we have our man look into the matter, and the director of economy sees that it is needed, because the person who is coming in is not going to work standing up. When that is done I have to go ahead.

Mr. GRAYDON: There may not be much standing done in some departments.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps not. We have to try to find a desk and chair. The Department of National Health and Welfare has doubled or trebled in the last two years. The Department of Veterans Affair is another department which has increased its work. When these departments ask for all this furniture I look around to War Assets Corporation and then to private enterprise to get it. It is all bought after tendering by well-known firms or by agreement. We cannot always get what we are looking for. I do not think I can bring about much economy under this item, because when a request comes in from a department it is approved by the official, a report is made and sent to the director who is appointed specially to scrutinize these requests. It then comes back with approval and is later sent to the treasury board after we have accepted it. I do not know how I can change the procedure; it is the regular procedure.

Mr. GRAYDON: I would be content not to view this as a special criticism of the minister but rather as an indication to him of how the committee feels. If he will do his part in conveying to the proper quarters the remarks that he has heard to-day, and indicate to them that if this kind of thing is to continue these items will meet a forest fire of criticism at the next session, then I think we shall have done a job.

Mr. BOUCHER: Perhaps the minister will accept a suggestion with a little humour and a lot of common sense. If the minister knows that furniture is required in one department, and that another department which is closing up has a surplus, and if he will transfer the furniture from one department to the other we would have economy in the assisting of the one and the closing down of the other.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: All the information that we have received has not as yet cleared up anything. The Minister of Public Works is in the unfortunate position of having other departments make requests of him. He indicates that he does not know whether they are justified. He does not understand the circumstances; he does not know how much is purchased from War Assets Corporation. He has not the information, and it is not his fault because he essentially is in the position of representing a department which is the cats-paw of all the others. In order to bring this matter to the attention of these people, and having regard to what the hon. member for Peel has said with respect to the surplus of furniture which one sees on every hand, and also with a view of showing the attitude of the committee with respect to a policy whereby one department of government sends back this surplus furniture to War Assets Corporation, and another department of government purchases it from that corporation, a most uneconomical system, I am going to move that item 600, amounting to $300,000 in the estimates for the year 1946-47, be reduced to $10. I do that because nothing has been indicated to support the necessity of it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not know that I would admit everything which has been said by the hon. member for Lake Centre. If hon. members wish to be fair to my department they could not reduce this amount to one dollar because up to date they have voted at least five-twelfths of it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am reducing this item.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Five-twelfths of the item has been voted.

Mr. GRAYDON: I take issue with the minister on that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Does the hon. member think that amount was not voted in interim supply?

Mr. GRAYDON: No. I would say to the minister that when the interim supply bills were before the house and were passed the definite undertaking was given by the Minister of Finance that nothing that was done with respect to that vote would in any way place us in a worse position than we were before the supply bills were passed in connection with the individual items. That undertaking stands. May I say to the minister that he is quite wrong in his assumption that the five-twelfths item applies to any one individual item, all of which are left to the discretion and the decision of the committee itself. I think everybody will understand that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Perhaps my hon. friend is right. When we voted interim supply it was understood that it took away no rights that the committee possess to decrease the vote; but on the other hand we have to face this situation. Having had at my disposal five-twelfths of this amount to buy furniture requested by other departments, I have proceeded on that assumption and have purchased furniture. I do not know who will be held responsible for the meeting of those payments. I am giving the real facts, because on that assumption my officials assumed that we could dispose of the five-twelfths at least; and when requests came in in the ordinary course of business they probably proceeded and asked for tenders or bought from War Assets Corporation.

If I have no estimate at all to pay for the furniture the committee will realize that I am in one of those positions where the public service will not be efficiently carried on. If I am requested to buy furniture for veterans affairs or any other department I cannot buy it.

Mr. BOUCHER: Borrow, beg or steal from your neighbours.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I am trying to show what position I shall be in. I do not suppose the committee would accept the amendment, but if it did, on this item I would be in a quandary. I do not know whether I would be back in the house or whether I would be in the department looking to see where I could get the money, because I am sure I have expended part of it. Probably the department has paid out that amount of money.

The hon. gentleman says that I have not proven that it is needed. Unless we change the whole set-up, how can I give any more information except to bring every file to the committee or answer any question which may be placed on the order paper or produce everything which we have done since March 31 of this year. That can be easily done because all the records are kept. I do not think it is quite fair to say that I have not justified this amount. I have explained to the hon. member that the government has this director of economies who goes over the whole thing. I cannot purchase anything before the Department of Finance or the comptroller of the treasury encumbers the amount out of the general vote. When it is encumbered and we decide to purchase, it has to go to the treasury board and be approved.

If the hon. member wishes me to bring down every purchase we have made under this vote I can do so. But in all fairness to my department I do not think the amendment to bring it down to one dollar would meet the case. What the hon. member for Lake Centre has said, if he is trying to impress these departments as to the purchase of furniture, will reach the proper authorities. With this explanation I might ask the hon. member for Lake Centre to withdraw his amendment. It applies not only to the Department of Public Works, but to every other department of government, since the money is expended for all departments. In all fairness to those who have made these requests, which are justified, they cannot be deprived of the things they require to do the work given to them under the law.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I have probably the keenest admiration for the hon. member for Lake Centre of anyone in this house. I have never been so amazed and astounded, so bemused and bewildered in my life as by the silliness of this amendment. The personnel of the Department of Veterans Affairs has inreased from some 2,000 to 15,000 or 16,000. We are establishing new offices across Canada to render service to those who rendered the finest service in the world to us. It is not the Minister of Public Works who is asking for this money. He is the agent, principally of my department, in asking for new furniture to be used by those looking after those service men who gave us the best service in the world. My hon. friend, a veteran himself and a splendid one, in moving to reduce this vote to $1, is insulting the intelligence of this House of Commons.

An hon. MEMBER: That brings the hon. member for Rosedale to his feet.

Mr. MACKENZIE: He never talks sense anyway, so it does not matter.

Mr. JACKMAN: I am not going to bother to ask the minister to withdraw that remark, but he mentioned the thousands of additional employees of his department. What happened to the dozens upon dozens of brass hats and junior officers all down the line? Why not use their desks and chairs?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Is that what the hon. gentleman thinks of those who have saved Canada for freedom? Is that what he thinks of the service we are rendering to these men right across Canada?

Mr. JACKMAN: What are you speaking of, anyway?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am speaking of the service we are rendering the veterans of Canada. Will my hon. friend sit down? I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Hon. members must address the Chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member for Lake Centre does not really mean this at all in his heart; I am sure it is purely a gesture. We need this furniture for our offices throughout Canada, for servicing the amenities and facilities for our returned soldiers throughout the land, not only in Ottawa but in every single village of this country. This money is not requested by the Minister of Public Works for his own department; it is asked by him for other departments of government, mainly for the Department of Veterans Affairs which has grown so greatly in the last year and will grow even more in the next twelve months. On reflection, I am sure my hon. friend will withdraw his amendment so that we may go ahead and do some work.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): May I ask the leader of the government what has become of all the surplus furniture in the many wartime departments, and if there is any arrangement under which the Department of Veterans Affairs can obtain the surplus furniture of these other departments instead of purchasing new furniture for these offices?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes; we are getting some of it every single day of every week of the year.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Is it true that the surplus furniture does not have to be declared surplus through War Assets Corporation and then obtained from that corporation by the Department of Veterans Affairs? You do not have to go through that procedure?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, in some cases we do.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Not in all cases?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Has a survey been made by your government—?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): —to ascertain what surplus furniture is available in these other departments, which might be transferred to the Department of Veterans Affairs?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, definitely, by our department.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): In every case?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Veterans Affairs never ceases to interest me by the utterances to which he gives expression from day to day. On Saturday he was as critical of one of his brother ministers and that minister's department as he is of me. I sat here and never went to the defence of that minister, and neither did anybody else. My hon. friend now raises the sentimental appeal, and naturally that is something which appeals to me. Therefore I am going to ask the minister a very simple question. How much of the furniture referred to in item 600 is going to the Department of Veterans Affairs? Let us have all the requests, by departments.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Quite a lot; I can tell you that.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I could not give you that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Wait a minute; this is an estimate. If the hon. gentleman was interested in past expenditures; if he had asked where money had been spent, that would be all right, but he is asking me how much of an estimate will be requested by one department or another. Only four months of this fiscal year have gone by. I could probably get the information with respect to those four months, but I cannot say what the requests will be from these departments during the next eight months. This is the estimated amount. You are talking of estimates; you are not perusing expenditures that have been made by the department. There is all the difference in the world between an estimate, what we think these departments will request during the year, and the expenditures that were made. They are not the same thing at all.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I was just going to suggest that this item might be allowed to stand, because we are not getting a very clear story of the situation. With respect to what was said by the Minister of Public Works, the last time interim supply was voted, which was on July 25, at page 3842 of Hansard, the Acting Minister of Finance said:

> I think there is a proportionate amount to each department, yes, but it is not tied to a particular item.

I do not know whether the acting minister was sure of that at the time, but those were his words.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): As I understand the procedure, the interim supply bill mentions a global amount, made up of one-sixth or one-twelfth of every item appearing in the estimates. As I understand it that is the procedure followed; they take one-sixth or one-twelfth of the total, and that amount is allotted to the departments under the titles and items shown in the estimates. If I am asked questions about specific projects under my department I can give all the details, but here we are estimating that during the year requests from these government agencies will amount to around $300,000. I cannot stand up here and say: well, the wartime prices and trade board is going to ask me for just this amount during the year. That is in the future, and until those requests are made I cannot give the amounts they will want during the year. I am estimating, and my officials are estimating, that during the year requests will amount to this total, and if they do not, the money will, of course, not be expended.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Then how much has the Department of Veterans Affairs requested for furniture so far this year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): There is more than one vote for furniture in these estimates, and I would have to ask the officials to look up all the requests from veterans affairs from April 1 to date and bring that information.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: And the various other departments, in the matter of furniture?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I can get that report. It will take quite a while, but I can send it to my hon. friend if he wishes it and then he can use it in the house.

Mr. FULTON: No. The Minister of Veterans Affairs made a sentimental appeal on behalf of his department, which he said is looking after the veterans and which needs furniture.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): For public works this is a business proposition. I have to provide the moneys to buy this furniture. I ask the officials to make an estimate, for which I will ask the approval of the house during the session. They give me the closest estimate they can find for these different departments, and in the present instance that is $300,000.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: "Find" is good.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): If hon. members want some specific information respecting some item in some department, then I am at the disposal of the committee to have that information prepared and to send it to the committee or to the hon. member. If more than that is asked, I do not know how anyone could give the answer.

Mr. BOUCHER: Break down the estimates of the department.

Mr. COCKERAM: Has the Department of National Defence requisitioned for any furniture?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I cannot say that, without having a report from the officials. If the hon. member will give me a detailed item I will ask the officials if they are prepared to answer.

Mr. HANSELL: I have been waiting for the minister to come to the end of this discussion, before bringing to his attention another matter.

[Mr. A. Fournier.]

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Shall we complete the discussion on this item 600 before the hon. member makes his remarks? There are three more items to be passed.

Mr. HANSELL: It does not matter, so long as I have an opportunity to say something before these estimates are passed.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The information we have obtained thus far is worthless. As a matter of fact the minister quite frankly admits he does not know how the $300,000 is made up, and he does not know how much the various departments have asked. He says that if it were expenditures made in the past he could give the information. So I will ask him about the $600,000, which was the expenditure for furniture last year by his department. Will the minister apportion that money among the various departments?

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Is the opposition—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Matapedia-Matane.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Is the opposition simply asking for a page from the public accounts? Why should we lose the time of the committee and the money of the people to read over the public accounts of this country?

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Where have you been all this time?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Question.

The CHAIRMAN: Is the committee ready for the amendment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Before we vote on the amendment—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Question.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It has been said that these expenditures will be found in the public accounts. I can have the whole volume showing the expenditure of the $600,000 laid on the table, because if the committee asks me to give the amount for every item, from $10 up—

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: How much for each department?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): —which was comprised in that $600,000, it would take a staff of I do not know how many people a considerable length of time to compile those expenditures. But they are all in the public accounts, and will be seen when the auditor general lays his report on the table. They would form a large part of the public accounts I would lay on the table. I have been here for sixteen years, and I cannot recall one occasion when the Minister of Public Works has been asked to give the details of expenditures for furniture. But if any hon. member wishes any specific case, all he has to do is ask and we will answer.

Mr. FULTON: He has just asked.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The public accounts are laid on the table in the regular way, according to law. I could stand here and read them, or ask my officials to prepare a list of them during the week, showing the amounts and names. I would do so, and with pleasure, but it would take a long time to get it ready. It would take some considerable time to get every item for furniture. But I am ready to give the information on any particular item which would be requested, and I am ready to have the whole thing tabled. But to read it in the house—why, it is a volume of several hundred pages.

Mr. MacINNIS: The committee is not asking the Minister of Public Works to give a detailed statement of every item in the $300,000. The hon. member for Lake Centre asked for the division among the various departments of government.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Correct.

Mr. MacINNIS: In my experience in the house no minister has refused to give a breakdown of the items in his estimates. Hon. members are entitled to that information. We do not want every item—every screw, and nail and hook.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I think the hon. member is right, and in that connection I am trying to recall one item. Not long ago I bought about $19,000 or $20,000 worth of filing cabinets. These are kept in the stockroom of the Department of Public Works. We buy certain things in lots. I can hardly tell hon. members how many of these filing cabinets will go out in the next week or the next two weeks to this department or to that one. When the year is over and the accounts are made up, the information is in the public accounts.

Mr. MacINNIS: And that is what we are asking for, for the last year.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What about 1945-46?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I do not think that at this time the compilation of public accounts for last year will be ready. When the auditor general makes his report, it will be tabled.

If we buy fifty or sixty desks they are put into the stockroom. When a department requests to have a desk of one type, we send it. We think we are operating on good business principles when we buy in quantities rather than singly, because in this way we buy for better prices.

How could we divide up those desks, and say what would be asked for, from month to month, to March 31? I am ready to answer any question, if it is at all possible to answer them. I shall try to explain how this is done, but I do not know how I can explain that these filing cabinets will be requested by one department or another.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I grow more and more surprised that the minister is not prepared to give these figures. I wish to remind the committee that I think it is only fair to say it was the minister's own statement which first of all made us feel queer. In effect he said that these things were put up to him, but he could not do much about the matter. Then he went on to mention this committee of economy which, I am bound to say, seems a most extraordinary committee of economy, because apparently any evidence which is not very great, but any we have up to the present would indicate that it prevents the ordinary routine of common sense from taking place. That is to say, those who have shall give to those who have not.

Next we had an appeal from the Minister of Veterans Affairs, in true highland style, in which he asked the hon. member for Lake Centre to withdraw his amendment on the ground that to a great extent this furniture had gone to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

I submit it is a most reasonable request for us to ask for a breakdown, and I wish to say again that all of this really traces back to the minister's own obvious discomfort with the situation in which he found himself. That is the way I understood the import of the minister's remarks, and that is the way I think it is.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. FRASER: Is any of this money going to refurnish the new theatre the film board is putting up? They have two theatres. They are tearing down one and rebuilding one.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That is an outside corporation. I am not purchasing for the film board.

Mr. FRASER: You are purchasing for the different departments.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Yes, but not for the film board.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. FULTON: The minister said if we would make a reasonable request he would try to comply with it. He has been asked, if he could not give us the information for this year, to let us have it for last year. He was asked to state the value of the furniture supplied last year to the Department of Veterans Affairs, and the value of the furniture supplied to the Department of National Defence. Surely there are files from which that information can be obtained.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): My officials tell me that it would take some time to work out the whole breakdown. It is not done in that way in the department, but we can do it to please hon. members and I could give the answer as soon as I get it from the officials.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: This shows—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not worrying about interruptions. Some hon. members have been out of the Chamber all afternoon, but they are back now that there is a possibility of a vote. I am simply trying to find out the basis of this item, and the minister says that he cannot give me that information but that he can give me any information he has with respect to expenditure. Last year the amount expended for furniture was $600,000 and I want to know how that was divided among the departments. Two years ago there was a director of economy, but when he started to direct economy he found he had to leave his job. We now have Mr. Murphy as director of economy. I should like to know exactly how the system works. Apparently the minister receives chits from various departments, but he keeps no record because it is impossible to give that information.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Oh, yes, we do; that is not fair.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: All we are asking for is how much was spent for the Department of Veterans Affairs. I was greatly moved by the address of the minister, and I began to think that all the $300,000 worth of furniture was going to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Oh, no.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That was the purport of my hon. friend's most eloquent speech. I am trying to find out how much goes to these various departments, and I can make it even more simple. Up to date we have voted five-twelfths of supply, and I should like to know how much has been expended during the present year on furniture for veterans affairs, national defence and reconstruction. Surely we are entitled to that information. The minister says it is only a matter of a few hundred thousand dollars. That is the philosophy and psychology against which we protest. We say, "carried, carried"; then we finally come to an item where we ask for some information and the answer we receive is that there is no information for us. Surely that is not good enough. We do not want particulars as to the number of desks, the number of chairs or anything of that sort; we just want the total amount for each department, and when we have that this item will be carried as usual. Surely we are entitled to that much information; otherwise we can only conclude that tremendous expenditures are being asked for by the Department of Public Works when there is no information with regard to the necessity of those expenditures or no information as to how they are going to be disbursed.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The minister said that $600,000 was expended last year.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): I did not say expended.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Where is that vote of $600,000 in the estimates of last year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): It is right in the book. Six hundred thousand dollars was the amount voted last year for that same item.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Where did we vote that money last year?

Mr. SINNOTT: That can be found in the public accounts. This year they are asking for $300,000. This $300,000 worth of furniture may be purchased from War Assets corporation or any other company. It is all in the budget and I do not see any sense in asking useless questions.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Can the minister tell me where we voted the money last year?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In the war appropriation vote.

Amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) negatived.

Item agreed to.

General—

603. Contingencies, $10,000.

Mr. HANSELL: I should like to ask the minister a question that has been bothering me a long time and I am sure it has been bothering a lot of other people. Some months ago I asked if anything could be done to improve the acoustics in this chamber and I understand some engineers were brought in to look over the situation. I wish to know what they reported and when we can expect that something will be done about the matter.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): We have had experts in to see if loud speakers can be installed in the chamber or if the acoustics can be improved. We have sent their report to the Speaker with our recommendation that loud speakers should be installed. We are waiting now to get in touch with Mr. Speaker and expect to proceed in the near future to experiment at all events.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

350. Marine services—arising out of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, enforcement of federal statutes generally, and other incidental expenses, $1,402,953.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps I should have asked this question under item 348. The minister has been good enough to show me a report which I have not yet had time to read in full. Would he be kind enough to say something about this marine branch of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Before the war the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had a marine branch which was active in guarding the coasts and preventing smuggling in that manner. At the outbreak of war the members of this marine branch were incorporated in the naval services. With the surrender of the enemies and the diminution of naval war services, the necessity for resuming coast protection work reappeared, and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police acquired certain units from the surplus naval equipment and took over as they were demobilized the personnel of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police which during the war had been serving with the navy. The amount of this vote is detailed at page 208 of the book of estimates: pay, $376,951; housing and quarters, $76,700; clothing and equipment, $39,900; medical services, $7,000, et cetera.

With respect to medical services, the situation is that these services used to be provided to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police by the Department of National Health and Welfare, and are now being provided by the Department of Veterans Affairs; but for the purpose of having the appropriations made to the departments that get the services the practice is being instituted of each department asking parliament for the amount it expects to require for the service, even though that amount is paid by it for the service to another department. It is thus that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police do certain work for other departments and are reimbursed, because the cost of the service is provided for in the estimates of the other departments. We do likewise in connection with this item of medical services. There is also a substantial item which is in the demobilization and reconversion portion of the estimates and which provides for the cost of the equipment acquired directly from War Assets Corporation, but indirectly from surplus naval equipment. We were allowed to specify such things as we required and which were surplus to the requirements of the navy; for the purposes of accounting they were put through War Assets Corporation books, and we are asking parliament for an appropriation to pay the cost thereof to War Assets Corporation. The amount paid is really a bookkeeping transaction; it will go back to consolidated revenue. But the practice is being established of having each department ask parliament for the appropriation of the moneys required to perform the services for which it is responsible, even though it may apply to some other department for a part of those services.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Are the conditions of service, specifically pay and allowances, mutatis mutandis the same for the police who are on the marine section as in the others?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They are the same. They are classed by the officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the proper categories, but pay and allowances are the same for all the classes, whether the work is being done on land or on sea.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I see the commissioner sitting over there advising the minister, and I hope that the few words I have to say will not make him blush so hotly as to make this chamber unbearable in the next few minutes. I do not know anybody who has given better service to his country than the commissioner. I know of no one who has been more sympathetic throughout the course of his official life; I do not know of anybody who has gained more respect for his conduct and achievements than the commissioner has. I rose for the definite purpose of saying these things. The commissioner has charge of a great force. In this country the redcoats still represent law and order and enjoy the respect of everybody. When people from the United States come to visit us the first people they look for are the redcoats. If anyone comes and needs assistance he can confidently rely on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I do not know how well they are paid, but I am sure that all of us hope their pay corresponds to their work. They are members of a great service with a wonderful tradition. The other evening, when the Minister of Veterans Affairs was telling us something of the history of our country, this is one force he forgot to tell us about. Their record is one of the greatest in Canadian history; but for them we never would have had the Canada which is ours to-day, with its high standards of law and order. Whenever new mining and other settlements were set up in this country the redcoats were to be found there. In this connection may I point out that Commissioner Wood is a graduate of the Royal Military College of Canada, a fact which indicates the sort of training given by that great institution.

Mr. GRAYDON: So is the hon. member for St. Paul's.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Why bring that up? There is one more thing I wish to say. Commissioner Wood has to handle not merely people of one language or extraction but a varied humanity, and the manner in which he has dealt with people of foreign extraction during the war has made them all love him and has been of the greatest assistance to Canada in preventing sabotage. During the war we were all worried about sabotage, but the commissioner and his entire force are together responsible for our record in that respect. It is they whom we have to thank for the absence of sabotage during the war. I could not allow this opportunity to pass without saying how proud we as Canadian citizens are of our great northwest mounted police and of all its officers.

Mr. FRASER: How does the marine service compare now with what it was before the war? This year the estimates of the R.C.M.P. are nearly $4,000,000 more, and I wondered how that service compared with what it was before and the reason for the big jump.

There is one more question. Before the war, did the R.C.M.P. have an officer in each public building as at the present time?

An hon. MEMBER: That is not marine service.

The CHAIRMAN: I would remind the committee that we are considering vote 350, marine services arising out of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, enforcement of federal statutes generally, and other incidental expenses.

Mr. FRASER: You are quite right, Mr. Chairman, but owing to the fact that you called the item "carried" so quickly we did not have a chance to get up on it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The hon. member wishes to know how the marine section compares with what it was prior to the war. The establishment prior to the war was 236. The establishment that has been authorized, though we have not yet got the full complement, is 280. Before the war the branch operated 32 comparatively small ships. It has acquired new ships, some being of the Bangor and Fairmile type which are much safer and can operate on high seas much more effectively than the smaller units which were in operation before the war.

Mr. FRASER: In consequence of having these more efficient ships, which can cope with rougher seas, is the R.C.M.P. covering a more extended coast line?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes. It is covering more ground, and it is intended to have R.C.M.P. patrols on the great lakes for the protection of the revenue along that portion of the Canadian frontier.

Mr. FRASER: That will be on lake Ontario, lake Erie, lake Huron, Georgian bay and right through lake Superior? Will there be one ship on each lake, or will one ship cover all the great lakes?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I understand that there will be six posts. It is intended that the force shall be quite mobile, moving wherever requirements for the protection of revenue make it necessary.

Mr. FRASER: Are they Fairmiles or faster ships?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: These are three-man crew harbour craft on the lakes.

Mr. FRASER: Where would the ports be?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Cornwall, Kingston, Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie, Windsor—

Mr. McIVOR: Fort William?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Not yet—

Mr. FRASER: No villages.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: —and we trust that the people of that region will continue to be so well behaved that it will not be necessary to patrol it.

Mr. McIVOR: I thank the minister for his courtesy. We have mounted police at the head of the lakes, and the only word I have to say with regard to their uniform is that their red coats should be trimmed with green, or they should have green coats trimmed with red. The mounted police there are held in high esteem.

Mr. SENN: Have these boats which are to be put on the lakes anything to do with policing the fisheries on the great lakes as between the two countries?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. I understand that normally they will not be concerned with patrol for fishery purposes. It would be only on special request from the Department of Fisheries that they might be expected to give assistance.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Will the representatives of the R.C.M.P. in the various embassy offices wear that uniform?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They are represented only in London and Washington.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Are these figures of expenditures net or gross? The force does policing jobs for various bodies for which payments are made. Are these net figures, or would the payments made be deductible from these amounts?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: These are gross figures and all payments received go into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not wish to magnify the point; but would it not be of interest, and give a better understanding of the position, if we knew what the net figure is? This expense is greater than the actual amount.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It would hardly be relevant to this item, but I may tell the hon. member that the R.C.M.P. under contract with certain provincial governments, do the work of provincial police in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta and, in addition to that, have undertaken in the western provinces the policing of fifty-five of the smaller towns. The reason for that is not to centralize police work; but it so happened that the R.C.M.P. had to be represented in those districts and, by adding a relatively small number of personnel to that which it maintained to carry out its responsibilities generally, could take on the additional responsibility of performing provincial police work. The reason for the accounting being in that form is to follow the general practice. All receipts go into the consolidated revenue and all expenditure that passes through the department has to be voted by parliament.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I assume that is the reason. May I venture to suggest to the minister that it would be illuminating in future years, if the government accounting will not let us get what I regard as the real figures, to have a footnote appended so that we should at least know what the actual amount is.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I shall be glad to get that for the hon. member. The general form of contract is $1,000 per man. That, of course, does not cover what each man costs, but because it is only a relatively small number of men who have to be added to what we would have to maintain anyway, the amount of $1,000 per man charged to a provincial or a municipal government for the additional service is regarded as fair.

Mr. FRASER: I asked the minister a question regarding the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the different buildings, and he was going to answer when I was interrupted.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Though it is not relative to this item, I appreciate that the hon. member would like to have the information. It was in 1920 that the police force took over the dominion police force which, prior thereto, had had responsibility for guarding the buildings. The R.C.M.P. still has that responsibility; but, as I said on a previous occasion, there has been entered into recently with the corps of commissioners a contract whereby that work will be performed by the corps of commissioners under the direction and on the responsibility of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, because it was realized that it was not encouraging to the development of the qualities required from the active men of the police force to have this guard duty to perform. An effort is being made to have that part of the work done by the corps of commissioners which, I understand, has as its operatives veterans of our services who are glad to get work of a rather sedentary kind.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In view of the fact that under this section there is generally the enforcing of federal statutes, I was wondering whether or not, in the light of the statements in the press during the past few days relative to the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police against espionage, the minister would make a statement on the men. The hon. member for St. Paul's mentioned the magnificent record of the men during the period of the war. To-day the same work is being carried on to prevent espionage in our midst, and has been carried on ever since the end of the war and before that time. A day or so ago the Canadian Press dealt with one phase of the matter. They quote an unimpeachable source which points out that there was quite a racket in regard to hockey players crossing the frontier. In particular, they mention that the preliminary stages of the probe had disclosed that some of the fake passports were made out in the names of players supposedly going to England, in spite of the fact that hockey teams were not operating in that country during the war. The article also points out that in cooperation with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police a similar investigation is continuing in the United States through the means of the bureau of investigation. Is the minister in a position to give a report on what the mounted police are doing in this connection; the extent, if any, of the ramifications of a racket in the matter of false passports and, generally, what measures are being taken by the minister's department to assure that this country shall be protected from the activities of communistic agitators?

Mr. LESAGE: What has this to do with marine services?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Generally it refers to it, if the hon. gentleman will read the item.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Since that question arose, and before that, it was carefully, completely and diligently gone into, and I am happy to be able to state that to the credit of the sporting fraternity of Canada there is nothing whatsoever in any of the false passports which could be linked up with the travelling of our sporting enthusiasts. I was informed this morning, though the question had not come up, but because I was personally interested in it, that the police had completed their investigation and they could assure me that the skirts of all the hockey and other sporting organizations were quite clean and that they had not been used in any way to facilitate the obtaining of false passports.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am glad to hear that.

Item agreed to.

352. Grant to the chief constables' association of Canada, $500.

Mr. GRAYDON: Some time ago I asked the minister a question with respect to a resolution passed by the chief constables' association of Canada regarding repeater criminals. The minister must find the resolutions passed by this association of considerable help in his administration, because of the experience they have had of the problems which come before the department. Has the minister anything further to add to the statement which he made at that time when he mentioned that this matter was being dealt with by the new penal commission? Is there anything further to report to the committee at this time?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have only a provisional report which I can make. The penitentiary commissioner has been travelling about visiting the penal institutions and profiting by his travels to communicate with the officials of the attorneys general of the provinces. After each trip he has made a verbal report to me. As one would naturally expect, he has met with the most cordial reception everywhere and with the expressly stated desire to bring about closer cooperation among the enforcement officers of the country, whether federal or provincial, to deal with that aspect of the situation. He has not yet had an opportunity of visiting all Canadian centres, but he is, I think, fulfilling the hopes which had been placed in him as to the efficiency of his work in that direction.

Mr. MERRITT: Would the minister permit me to ask a question about item 351 which went through so quickly that I missed it? I note that there is an item of $295,000 for acquisition of aircraft. Would the minister say how many aircraft the R.C.M.P. are to have and generally give us the purpose of this air service? Will these aircraft be bought from the R.C.A.F. and therefore will not cost the country additional money, or are they to be bought new from private sources?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: As the hon. member knows, the mounted police had a small air arm before the war, which was turned over to the department of defence for air when war broke out. That branch of the service is being reestablished, and the force has now five aircraft. It has not yet acquired any large craft that would be available to transport a group of constables who might be required for special service at any point, but has an arrangement with the R.C.A.F. to provide it, naturally at the cost of the R.C.M.P., with transport planes when occasion may require. There are two Beechcraft, one Drummond Goose, and two Norsemen. The commissioner returned on Saturday from an extended trip which took him away up into the arctic region. In a period of not more than two weeks he was able to visit all the posts of the northwest, away up in the arctic circle, and I am convinced that a visit from the commissioner to these posts is of considerable value to the morale of the men who serve in those outlying districts.

Mr. MERRITT: I have no doubt of that. I wondered, though, if this item provides for the acquisition of new aircraft, in addition to the five the minister has mentioned or whether it is to pay for those five, or what expansion is proposed.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There is $45,000 for one Norseman, and $250,000 for two Douglas Dakota C-47's, at $125,000 each.

Mr. COCKERAM: I should like an explanation of the item for allowances, including billeting, messing and provisions. In the three branches of the service there is for this purpose a total of something like $361,000. Why is that amount spent on messing in addition to pay and allowances?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: That is the general living allowance at the normal rate for men living out of barracks.

Mr. COCKERAM: Do they run any messes with that?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Not in the aviation branch. I do not know why it is described in this way, but I am informed that this is paid at the established rate for men living out of barracks.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

353. To compensate members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for injuries received in the performance of duty, $12,750.

Mr. LENNARD: It is my understanding that when, after years of service, a member of the mounted police is pensioned, after his death none of that pension is continued to his widow during the remainder of her lifetime. When a member of the permanent force is retired on allowances, after he dies his widow gets fifty per cent of the pension for the remainder of her lifetime. It seems to me that this is very unfair, and I would certainly like a complete explanation as to the reason for this difference.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There was established in 1934 by chapter 40 of the statutes of that year a scheme for the pension of widows and dependents. That is part VI of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act, and it has been in operation since that year.

Mr. LENNARD: Then my information was wrong, was it?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Well, I would have to qualify my acquiescence in that remark; it was partly wrong. There are those who since 1934 have chosen to come under part VI of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act and make contributions to a fund set up under that part. Quite a large number of the older members did not choose to come under that part and make the contributions required in order to get the benefit of it.

Mr. LENNARD: How would those contributions compare with those made by men in the permanent force?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The contribution is five per cent, as it is under the Civil Service Act, and schedules were set up showing the back payments which would be required for those who did not commence to contribute when they entered the service.

Mr. LENNARD: It is the same, then, for one who takes advantage of it, as the civil service superannuation?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am informed that it is, that it is modeled on the civil service superannuation scheme.

Mr. McKAY: We are discussing item 353, I believe?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. McKAY: It has nothing to do with pensions, as I understand it.

Mr. LENNARD: Then where would you bring up any question concerning pensions?

Mr. McKAY: Under the next item.

Mr. LENNARD: Read that one.

Mr. McKAY: I am going to. Upon what basis are the Royal Canadian Mounted Police compensated for injuries? I think that properly comes under this item. It seems to me that this appropriation is very small. Is this in the nature of a workmen's compensation, or is it straight pension, and who determines the amounts?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The amount is determined by the officers of the force, but they submit the claims for recommendation to the pension board of the Department of Veterans Affairs. They submit a statement of the facts and get a recommendation as to what would be the assessment made by the pension board if it came under the Pension Act.

Mr. McKAY: The same as for a military pension?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. HARKNESS: When we were discussing the mounted police several days ago only one of the several questions I asked was not cleared up fairly satisfactorily by the minister. That was in connection with the position of men who, their time in the mounted police having expired, preferred to join the services rather than reenlist with the mounted police. I should like the minister now to tell the committee whether these men will be taken back into the service more or less automatically, or what is to be their position.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I cannot say anything more than I said the other day. They are being treated just as sympathetically as can be done without breaking the promises that were made to those who stayed with us. Everyone who has wanted to come back has come back, in the rank he held when he left. There are seven who have not been granted seniority over those who stayed and served us as we requested them to do.

Mr. HARKNESS: If I understand the minister correctly, of the men who joined the services and who have indicated their willingness to come back, only seven have not been taken back?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They have been taken back in the rank they held when they left; but they have not been given seniority over those who did not go.

Mr. HARKNESS: Do I understand correctly that only seven men of those who have applied to rejoin the force have been refused?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. What I am saying is that there are only seven who, when their contracts expired, left the force and who have applied to come back and who, being fit to serve, were reengaged and have not been granted seniority over those who did not leave. They were all non-commissioned officers. They have been given back their rank, but not the seniority they would have earned if they had complied with the request made to them to continue in service here. The case of each one has been carefully considered by the commission, and I think the discipline in the force testifies to the fact that the commissioner gives his men a fair deal. I have never tried to overrule his decisions in that matter, and I think it would be harmful to the discipline of the force if the men felt that it was not the commissioner but rather the minister who was making final decisions.

Mr. HARKNESS: I understand that there are probably seven special cases of men who did not get the seniority they might have, if they had stayed on the force. We will leave them aside because, after a considerable number of years in the army, I can readily imagine that cases such as that arise, and there may be very good reasons for them. However, my question actually concerns the number of men who joined the forces rather than reengage in the mounted police force, who have not been accepted for reengagement, now that the war is over. How many men are there of that kind, and what is their fate?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: All those, with the exception of a few whose records did not recommend them to the judgment of the commissioner, have been reengaged. No one has been refused because he went into the armed forces instead of renewing his contract. There have been no refusals on that ground. There have been a few whom, having left the force, whatever their reasons for leaving may have been, the officers of the force did not feel that they wished to reengage.

Mr. HARKNESS: My information is that a certain number of men who joined the services when their time expired in the mounted police have been refused readmission to the mounted police, so far as I know without any proper cause.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: If the hon. member would give me the names of those who have been refused I shall confidentially communicate to him or, if he wishes, I shall put on the records of the house the reasons for which they were refused.

Mr. HARKNESS: I shall be glad to give a few names. But my question was this: How many people have been refused readmission to the service after having served in the navy, the army or the air force?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: None has been refused because of having served in the navy, the army or the air force.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am afraid the Minister of Justice is begging the question. My question is simply this: How many people who did serve in the navy, the army or the air force and who have subsequently applied for further attestation or admittance to the mounted police have not been taken on strength?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The commissioner informs me that he recalls only two who have been turned down.

Mr. KIDD: I would bring to the attention of the minister that there would appear to be a condition in the mounted police something similar to that which was found in the penitentiaries service. Both these services come under the minister's jurisdiction. I bring this matter to the minister's attention because he will recall a time before 1939, as far back as 1937, when the air force was asking for men.

Those were trying times. Men left the police service and went to serve in the air force. Some of them were veterans of the last war, and they lost their rights to pension. I appeal to the minister, as I did in connection with those in the penitentiaries service, to see that when these men come back under his jurisdiction they receive justice. They should be put back and every consideration should be given to them for the services they have rendered.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Under the present state of the law we are not allowed to count the war service for pension purposes, unless a man obtained leave and was still nominally on our books. But there was a provision made after the last war to enable that period to be included. It is my hope that when the military pension scheme has been disposed of it will be possible for me to bring forward a bill to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Act. I should think it might be agreeable to the house to do on this occasion what was done after the last war, and for the same reasons.

Mr. KIDD: That is what I want. There seems to be a feeling in the various departments that the men who left in the early days of the war and before the war to join the armed services did not receive very much encouragement from the senior men in their departments. They said, "We want to keep you in the mounted police service", or in the penitentiaries service, as the case may be. However, these men left to fulfil what they believed was their obligation to His Majesty. They proceeded overseas, and came back. I appeal to the minister to see that any men under his supervision get a square deal. I believe most of them are prepared to pay to the pension fund, if accepted. I will not say there is an effort to draw a red herring across the trail, but they are not receiving the consideration they should receive.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They have been told that, under the law as it is, that period cannot be included. The only reason I did not have a bill at this session was that I understood there was to be a bill dealing with the military pensions, and I thought it would be preferable not to have the two bills at the same time, in view of the differences between them. I feel it is better that they be dealt with separately. There are things required in the military Pension Act which are not required in our act, and conversely there are things we think are necessary in our act which are not required in the military Pension Act. There will have to be a bill—I hope at the next session—to amend the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act. When there was a bill brought in after the last war to amend that act there was a provision that the period of service, even for those who had not previously been connected with the force, would be counted for pension purposes in the force.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister should be commended for his intention to have a bill such as he has indicated brought in at the next session. That is a change which will be most gratifying to the men in the mounted police who have had a certain feeling of annoyance at the law as it now stands.

I would add one other suggestion to the minister. Reference has been made to the men who, serving in the mounted police and coming to their period of retirement during the war, were requested to stay on in the mounted police force, but chose to join the army and go overseas to serve. While they were overseas, quite a number of these mounted police married. They came back from overseas and, when reinstated or accepted for reattestation, they were, as I understand the situation, taken in as single men. Having regard to the fact that they did serve and that, had they stayed in Canada in the mounted police, their time would have counted toward the period after which they could be married, I think these men should be permitted to count the time spent overseas in arriving at the period within which they are permitted to marry and receive the necessary allowances. I know the attitude of the minister toward the mounted police has been reasonable; I know that fairness appeals to him as it does to the commissioner, but this is one of those things that cause a degree of ill-feeling which cannot but interfere with morale. With the greatest of sincerity, I suggest that it is not a large matter and that these men who got married overseas should be permitted to count their time in the armed forces in the determination of the period within which the necessary allowances would be made to their wives.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am sure that the suggestion made by the hon. member appeals to all hon. members. The commissioner, as well as ourselves, realizes that in that respect the morale of the whole service must be taken into account, and the commissioner makes the kind of recommendation that is proper for the morale of the whole service. A substantial proportion of the R.C.M.P. must remain single for a certain period because there is much of the service that has to be performed by single men, and these men must be made to feel that the regulations are being applied justly to the whole force.

From my discussions with the commissioner, I know it is his desire to leave in the regulations no more than is essential for the performance of the work, and to apply them in such a manner that no individual will feel that discrimination is being exercised in favour of any other individual of his class or category. There has been some relaxing of the marriage regulations, and that relaxation is being carried to the greatest possible extent compatible with the services that the force is required to render. They are being applied as uniformly throughout the force as it is possible to do.

Mr. McLURE: I understand that the compensation paid to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for injuries received in the performance of their duties is set by the mounted police act, and the compensation is quite small indeed. I have in mind the case of a man in my province who joined the force some forty-six or more years ago. After having been in the service for some time, he lost his arm at the shoulder while on duty. For a few years afterward he received the small pension he was entitled to under the act. This man has been trying to farm all his life and has made a fairly good attempt at it. Last year we applied to the commissioner on behalf of this man and through the kindness of the commissioner a full pension was granted, but this amounts to only $365 a year. The man is now about sixty-five years of age. The minister has indicated that there is to be a revision of the act, and I hope he will keep in mind those men who have suffered serious injuries while on duty and see that they get pensions in accordance with those paid to other persons.

Item agreed to.

354. Pensions to families of members of the Mounted Police who have lost their lives while on duty—

Mrs. Mary Emma Bossange, $456.25.
Mrs. Margaret Johnson Brooke, $821.25.
Mrs. Margert Cox, $410.63.
Mrs. Victoria Desjardins, $411.
Mrs. Georgina Harrison, $676.50.
Mrs. Letitia Kennedy, $423.50.
Mrs. Nora Jean Massan, $300.
Mrs. Margaret Nicholson, $547.50.
Mrs. Catherine Mildred Ralls, $675.25.
Mrs. Vera M. Ryder, $907.50.
Mrs. Doris Freda Sampson, $816.
Mrs. Amy Lillian Searle, $406.98.
Mrs. Madelaine Mary Shoebotham, $810.
Mrs. Eunice Wainwright, $602.50.

Mr. McKAY: I notice that one of the items in this vote covering pensions to widows of men killed while in the service of the mounted police is for only $300. A pension of $25 a month to a widow is quite small.

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Mr. ST. LAURENT: These are recurring votes that are made from year to year. The pension granted is one-half the pension the husband would have received had he retired at that time. Some are quite small; but, as the hon. member knows, there has been no increase in the superannuation rates to civil servants or their dependents, and we do not feel that we could ask for an increase for dependents of R.C.M.P. men unless an increase were made in all superannuation payments.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—

613. To provide for increased activities of the force, $2,599,728.

Mr. FRASER: What is the strength of the force at the present time, and what was it in 1939?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The whole of this amount will not by any means be expended this year. When the estimates were prepared we had hoped for an establishment of 690 additional constables, but we have not yet been able to get more than 100 to 120. We want to build up the force to the authorized establishment, but we want to build it up out of the proper material. Four months of the year have gone and we have succeeded in getting fewer than 120 additional men.

Mr. FRASER: How many men are there at the present time?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: There are 2,464.

Mr. FRASER: What was the strength in 1939?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The authorized establishment was 2,500.

Mr. COCKERAM: How many men were taken on by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police during the course of the war, and how many have failed to reengage now that their term of service is up?

An hon. MEMBER: All those who have died.

Mr. COCKERAM: More than that, if you look into it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am sorry I have not the figures here, but the commissioner informs me that only a small percentage have not reengaged at the expiry of their period of engagement.

Mr. COCKERAM: What I was getting at was this, that a number of men enlisted in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police during the war who would have been called up for military service, and I want to know how many of these men, now that the war is over, are out of the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not think the facts would justify the impression the hon. member has. During the war we conscripted men for service in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, but we did not take men who were fit for military service. If men volunteered for service in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police they were not taken on unless they were considered fit for our service and were not fit for ordinary military service.

Mr. COCKERAM: I should like to ask the minister if, as a result of engaging men in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police during the war, he lowered the standard of physical fitness?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No. Hon. members will realize that there was a pretty arbitrary system of determining military fitness for the armed services, and that system has not been adopted for the determination of the fitness of men to join the Royal Canadian Mounted Police; but I think their appearance justifies the feeling that generally the medical fitness of the R.C.M.P. is good.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Is there anything in this amount pertaining to the increase of our forces in regard to counter-espionage?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The whole of the force is available for any of the operations which have to be performed by it, and we are aiming at an increase of 690 in the establishment.

Mr. JACKMAN: What is the marriage limitation in the case of new recruits to the mounted police?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: New recruits are not allowed to get married status in the force during the first five years.

Mr. JACKMAN: Am I to understand, from what the minister said, that men who were formerly in the force, and had leave of absence to enlist in war service, found, when they returned, that their service years—four, five, or even six—would not count against the marriage limitation?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Those who got leave of absence were still carried as on the strength of the force and the war period would count in their favour for all purposes.

Mr. JACKMAN: The question we were discussing then was with regard to men whose term of enlistment with the force had expired.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: And who then, on their own, enlisted in the war services and now have reentered the force and find that the marriage term does not run during their war service. I may just add that, while there may be some strict legal rule in connection with the administration of the force to permit that proceeding, it does seem to me a grave hardship on a man who, first of all, must serve five years before he is allowed to be married, then serves the country in an equally dangerous, if not more dangerous form of service, and finds, having spent five or six years in war service, that still he cannot marry. I hope, the minister or the chief of the force will realize that there are many of us, and I think the great majority of the people of Canada, who feel that these men should not be unduly delayed, as far as the marriage restriction is concerned, because of their war service.

Mr. LENNARD: Item 613 covers clothing allowances, and I would suggest—though some may think it a foolish suggestion—that service ribbons be supplied as part of the clothing allowance, because these men in the R.C.M.P. who have to put up many service ribbons need to renew them every three months, and in some case the cost amounts to $15 or $20 a year, which is quite an item in the pay of mounted policemen.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I do not know whether the hon. member is aware that we do issue our own service ribbons. We do not supply the ribbons for decorations won in other services than our own.

Mr. LENNARD: You mean, other than the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Yes.

Mr. LENNARD: That issue amounts to probably no more than one decoration.

Mr. COCKERAM: A few minutes ago, in reply to a question of the hon. member for Calgary East, the minister stated that there were seven members of the forces who had returned and been reengaged but were not given their seniority, and I wondered why there should be a difference in the practice in the government service, because in industry when a man comes back we are compelled to give him his seniority in the industrial organization.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The reason is that a circular was issued at the beginning of the war explaining to all the men that this service of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was essential to the safety of the state, and stating to them that as many as could be spared would be given leave of absence, but as to the others they were requested to continue in the service of their country in the R.C.M.P. force. They were told at the time that those who did not get leave would forfeit their seniority if they left, and the others who remained were told that those who left would be forfeiting their seniority and that it would go to those who remained. It is that promise that I feel I cannot interfere with and that it would be improper to break to those who did stay and whose services to the country at least coincided with the satisfactory situation which was maintained here.

Mr. COCKERAM: The minister has explained that situation, but could he tell the committee whether or not that circular to which he referred was issued prior to the government regulation with regard to reestablishment in civil employment?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I am told that it was. I do not know personally; I was not here then.

Mr. COCKERAM: Then it seems to me, if that circular was issued prior to that, that the government in regard to reinstating their own employees should obey the law which was subsequently made.

Mr. HARKNESS: A few minutes ago, when I was asking the minister a few questions about this matter, he told me that there were only seven cases of men who had not been given the seniority they had in the force before enlistment in the armed services; that these were more or less, as I understood it, disciplinary matters, and that the commissioner or the officers did not think too well of these particular chaps. With that I was quite satisfied, because undoubtedly disciplinary cases do arise. But if it is a matter, as the minister has just explained to the hon. member for York South, that the authorities put out a pamphlet or something along that line and that now they are saying, "Because we put out that pamphlet we will not restore anyone we do not feel like restoring", I am far from satisfied. As the matter stood before, I was satisfied with the explanation, but I am certainly not satisfied to be told that the government put out a pamphlet at the start of the war and that now they will cut off men who served in the forces because of that piece of red tape.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask the minister whether the general law on the statute books in regard to reinstatement in civil employment does not override the departmental regulations?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: In my opinion it does not.

Mr. HARKNESS: Could we find out from the minister whether this particular—

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. HARKNESS: I can wait for a long time if you want to yell. May I ask whether these men are now being cut off from reinstatement in pension rights and so on because they contravened some desire on the part of the force, expressed in a pamphlet, and which should not exist in the force, or whether, as I understood from the minister a short time ago, it is on account of the fact that there is a small number of men who were not desired back in the force because it was not thought that their services would be useful in the particular rank which they held when they enlisted.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I thought I made it quite clear. As far as the commissioner can remember, there were two who were refused because he did not want them back on the force. As to all the others, they were taken back in the ranks they occupied at the time their contract expired, but they were not members of the R.C.M.P. when they enlisted. They had served the period for which they had contracted with the R.C.M.P. They left, their contract being at an end, and they now come back and say, "After we left you, we joined the forces and we would like to be taken on again in the R.C.M.P." With the exception of two, according to the information given me by the commissioner, they were taken back again. They were taken back with non-commissioned officer ranks they had before their contracts with the R.C.M.P. had expired, but they were not placed over the heads of those who had continued and renewed their contracts with the force. That is the whole situation.

Mr. HARKNESS: As I understood the situation, there were seven of these men who were taken back but not given the time they were away, as far as right with respect to seniority was concerned, and so on. My question was simply this: Were these men discriminated again, because it was not considered by the commissioner and officers that they should be back on the force? The minister gave an explanation with which I was quite satisfied, and my question now is, were these men denied seniority rights which other men were given, because it was considered that they were not sufficiently valuable to the police to fill these other ranks, or was it because, as the minister said to the hon. member for York South, a pamphlet had been issued and these men had not accepted what was set out in the pamphlet, and, therefore, would now be made to pay for it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Those seven were not given back seniority which had been acquired by others who had remained, and they could not be given back such seniority without its being taken from others who had earned it in accordance with the terms of their engagement.

Mr. HARKNESS: We have now a third explanation. I am really getting more confused all the time. I think everyone would have been happy with the original explanation given by the minister, but now we have a third explanation and I still do not know what the position is with regard to these men. I do not know how many there were. I know there were some.

Mr. COCKERAM: Are these men given pension rights for the years they served in the army, the navy or the air force?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: They cannot be given pension rights under the law as it stands.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask the minister whether, when the term of enlistment of certain men in the R.C.M.P. expired during the war years, which was five years, if they had reenlisted with the R.C.M.P., they would have been free to join one of His Majesty's services.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: No.

Mr. JACKMAN: Then all I can say is this. Some of these men of the highest spirit in the R.C.M.P. saw fit to serve their country in a field which was at least equal to that in which they had been, and to many of us, it seemed, a higher field since they risked their lives in the service. Had they enlisted in the R.C.M.P., they would not have been allowed to perform this higher service; but, having rendered that service they have infringed the desire, the discipline and the iron spirit of the R.C.M.P. administration and are prejudiced now when it comes to their present term of service. I think the matter is one in regard to which those of us who represent the people of the country should have a word to say; and if it differs from the views of those who happen to have the command of the R.C.M.P., I think we should at least put on record exactly how we feel. In my opinion these men who showed the higher spirit are discriminated against.

Mr. HARKNESS: Would the minister give an explanation to end all explanations as to why these people are not given seniority?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have given all the explanation I can. If the hon. gentleman has not understood it, I am sorry. But I am unable to put it in any other form.

Mr. HARKNESS: Which of the three explanations am I to accept?

Mr. JACKMAN: No wonder you have not got recruits.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Tory filibuster.

Mr. JACKMAN: Tory fairness.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: In the case of a war veteran who subsequently joins the R.C.M.P. but has not been in the service before, does he receive any credit in the way of seniority or pension accruing from service in the armed forces?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: Not under the law as it is. Those who joined, having had service in the first great war, get credit for that service because that was provided for by amendment made after that war. There has not yet been any amendment with respect to service in this last war.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is it the intention to bring in such an amendment?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I have already stated a couple of times that I expect to have a bill to amend the Pension Act, and I said I thought it would be the desire of the house to do on this occasion what was done after the last war in that regard.

Mr. HAZEN: There were some members of the mounted police who were let out prior to the war for, presume, minor offences. When the war broke out they were taken on the strength again and I presume they are still on the strength. Perhaps the minister cannot say whether they will be kept on the strength, but if they are, when it comes to their getting pensions, will the time they spent prior to the war count towards pension?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The intention is to keep them on the strength as long as their services may prove to be satisfactory, and the whole of the time they will have served will count for pension purposes.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

391. Departmental administration, $494,958.

Mr. MERRITT: I wish to say a few words on this vote with regard to the port of Vancouver. On December 14 last, at page 3538 of Hansard, the hon. member for Vancouver South raised four points of importance to the port. They were, first of all, the refunding of the bonded indebtedness at a lower rate of interest; second, the question of the capitalization and the valuation of the assets of the port which are considered to be very much overvalued; third, the matter of cargo rates on all tonnage passing through the port and what can be done to reduce them, and, fourth, whether or not a local advisory board could be appointed in line with the recommendations of Sir Alexander Gibb, who made a series of recommendations in 1932. To these four questions I should like to add a fifth: What is being done about the establishment of a free port on the Pacific coast? When the matter was brought up last session the minister replied that with regard to the reduction of interest, it was under consideration. Since that date I understand that one-fifth of the bonded indebtedness has been refunded at a rate of interest of 3½ per cent instead of five per cent, but that $22,687,000 worth of debentures are still out, bearing an interest rate of five per cent.

With regard to the question of overvaluation of assets, it is the considered opinion of many people in Vancouver conversant with these matters that the valuation of $25 million should rather be some $16 million, and that the combination of a reduction of the debt now borne by the port by a proper valuation of the assets and the refunding at a lower rate of interest would save the port a large sum of money every year. The amount estimated is $750,000. I also find that in the past ten years, despite the traffic going through the port, because of its overvaluation and the high rate of interest, the port has lost a sum in excess of $3 million.

With regard to the question of cargo rates, last December the minister again stated that it was under consideration, but nothing has been done since that time. His answer with respect to the local advisory board was to the same effect, namely, that the matter was under consideration but that the policy had not then been decided. It appears that consideration has been given to the problem of free ports by a federal committee headed by the vice-chairman of the national harbours board. I should like the minister to give the committee a statement on the whole question of Vancouver harbour. I wish also to compliment him on having carried out one of the requests made by the hon. member for Vancouver South last December, namely, to come out to Vancouver and see for himself. He did that last January. We were all pleased to see him, and I am quite sure that he got some useful personal knowledge of this matter from his visit. However, I wish to say to him that when he answers me I hope he will not say that any of these matters are still under consideration, because, after the minister's statement last December, and after his visit, there has grown up in Vancouver great impatience on these matters which have been before the government for a long time and which should now be resolved. It is felt out there—and I certainly agree with that feeling—that none of these matters is such that it should require an investigation longer than six months if, indeed, they need that length of time. If he cannot tell me now that all the things desired by the people conversant with the situation in the port are in his power to grant immediately, I hope he will be able to indicate that a decision will be come to soon.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has raised five questions. I think I can deal with the five because I dealt with them when I was privileged to visit Vancouver where, I may tell him, I was so well received that I propose going back again.

The five questions to which he has directed my attention I shall deal with in reverse. I shall take the last one first, the question of free ports. This question is not a new one; it has been debated in this house before. Legislation seeking establishment of free ports came before the senate in 1936 or 1937, if my memory serves me correctly, and received the approval of that body. Later it came to this house and was turned down. The then minister of national revenue gave four reasons why free ports should not then be established in this country. I do not want to go into all of them, but perhaps I can say generally that one of them was that conditions in this country and in the United States were not at all related to those in Europe where there were some twenty-six or thirty countries from which imports and exports could be derived.

Another reason was that this country had already bonded warehouses and drawbacks under the Customs Act which gave practically the same privileges as a free port would give. The third reason was that it would mean an additional amount of work for customs officers which would interfere greatly with their duties. The last reason which the then minister of national revenue gave was the fact that the passing of legislation facilitating the establishment of these ports would enable facilities to compete with those of the federal government. In other words, the federal government had spent tremendous sums of money in the national ports of Canada, and if it were possible for others to come along and spend similar sums on similar facilities such as docks, warehouses and wharves, these would compete with the federal facilities already erected

I do not wish to deal too long with them. I simply wish to say that conditions may well have changed since 1936 when the statement was made by the then minister of national revenue. In order to make sure that they had not, the government decided to set up an interdepartmental committee composed of members of the Department of Transport, national revenue, trade and commerce, reconstruction and finance. This committee has been receiving briefs and submissions from ports all across Canada. I think it is the board of trade of Vancouver that have asked the committee to delay its report until such time as it is able to submit its brief. Therefore, on that question I say to the hon. gentleman that until the interdepartmental committee on free ports has made a report, there is nothing more I can add.

Dealing next with the question of the refunding of bonded indebtedness so far as the port of Vancouver is concerned and the apparent delay in coming to a conclusion on that question, let me say to the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard that the government has decided to refund $5,000,000 of the indebtedness of the harbour, and the interest has been reduced from five per cent to 3½ per cent as that issue matures. I made that statement to those who interviewed me while I was in Vancouver. Immediately upon my return I discussed the matter with the members of the national harbours board; and since this is a matter which concerns finance as much as, if not far more than, it does transport, I asked the Minister of Finance to set up a committee to deal with this question. This matter, like that of free ports, is not one which has to do with the city of Vancouver alone. It has to do with all national harbours, and the refunding of the debt, if that should be found wise or necessary, of all national ports. So, if my hon. friend feels that there is a delay I can assure him it is not due to any of the members of the committee but to the importance of this question. I am afraid I must tell him, notwithstanding that it will meet with the disapproval of a section of the press in his city, that it will take an even longer time because, as we go along in this study, we find that costs of administration are mounting, and the greater the costs become, then the question really is whether or not it will be found possible to reduce charges. Should we find—I am not saying what we shall find—it is not possible, there would be nothing abnormal about that. If you look at the history of the great port of London you will find maturing obligations at five per cent. I have before me the 36th annual report of the port of London authority, and the hon. gentleman may be interested to learn that in that great port there is no less than £6,975,000 of debt outstanding bearing interest at five per cent, and no less than £1,977,000 bearing interest at four per cent, and I am informed by the national harbours board that there is no intention of refunding the debt of the port of London at this time so as to reduce interest.

I should also like to inform the hon. gentleman that the harbour of Vancouver, as it now stands, has in fact been paying and saving annually slightly in excess of three per cent interest. There are several reasons for saying that. I do not want to go into them at great length; but one is that the Lapointe pier, with which my hon. friend is unquestionably familiar, cost the country $2,600,000. That expenditure was incurred by the Department of Public Works, and the pier was transferred to the Vancouver harbour commissioners without capital liability and has not been charged up against the debt. The annual interest on this amount alone at five per cent would be $130,000, and at three per cent it would be $78,000. This is an advantage for which the city of Vancouver does not have to pay, and which is not disclosed in harbour accounts.

Then, dealing with the question of cargo rates, when I was out there I found that to be a matter which caused certain interests in Vancouver some concern. I dealt with it as best I could at the time. Since then I have suggested to the national harbours board that they set up a committee to deal with the question of cargo rates in all our ports. The matter of rates is difficult and complicated, and one in which a number of items come up that are difficult of explanation. On the whole, the totality of charges for the port of Vancouver are not higher than those in any other port; and as nearly as can be compared there is little difference between Vancouver and Montreal and other eastern ports. Perhaps that is not the right way to put it. Let me put it in this way, that in the port of Vancouver there are no dockage dues such as are paid at Montreal, Quebec, Halifax and Saint John. The dockage dues in those four cities have netted the dominion government $1,100,000. Montreal has paid to the dominion government $395,000; Halifax has paid $310,000 and Saint John has paid $315,000. There is no dockage charge in the city of Vancouver. The other day I made a statement dealing with the whole position in detail, which went to show that, as far as Vancouver was concerned, the rate structure was as low, if not lower than in most of the Pacific coast ports south of the line, such as San Francisco.

Then my hon. friend raised the question of local advisory boards. I was asked about that when I was in Vancouver, and I have been asked about it since. At the time I think I said I would be glad to give consideration to the matter, and since then I have done so. I find that it might well be a mistake to set up local advisory boards under the supervision of the national harbours board. I do not see that there would be any objection to a board of trade setting up its own advisory board and discussing with the port manager the changes they felt should be brought about in the community. Some of the recommendations of Sir Alexander Gibb the government saw fit to put into effect, but I fear this is not one which would materially assist the administration of the national ports, unless it be a committee such as has been set up, for instance, in Halifax.

I think those are the questions with which my hon. friend dealt.

Mr. MERRITT: With regard to the last point, concerning the local advisory board, I want to impress upon the minister a fact often mentioned in this house, namely, that out on the west coast we feel a very long way from Ottawa. What might apply to the other ports under the national harbours board does not apply to the situation in which we find ourselves, because we are so detached and on our own in that respect. Even though it might be felt that local advisory boards are not necessary in eastern ports, I want to urge the minister to give the question further consideration in regard to the port of Vancouver.

Just to illustrate that point, the minister mentioned that in other ports dockage rates were charged rather than cargo rates. It is a fact, I understand, that the port of Vancouver is the only port at which cargo rates are charged.

Mr. LANGLOIS: When you say cargo rates do you mean dockage or top wharfage?

Mr. MERRITT: I understand it to be a rate on cargo by tonnage, passing through the port, whereas in all other ports payment is made as a dockage charge, which I understand to be a payment for the use of the facilities of the port.

Mr. LANGLOIS: We have that in Montreal, too.

Mr. REID: We have cargo rates at New Westminster.

Mr. MERRITT: I have some figures here of cargo rates in Vancouver, unfortunately only for 1944. Cargo rates for that year were $470,000 as against the 1945 figure for Montreal—I have not the comparable 1944 figure—of $394,000, and, for Halifax, of $310,000.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The average cargo rate for Vancouver per year is $442,000.

Mr. MERRITT: I would point out that by charging these cargo rates apparently one arrives at a greater amount than by charging dockage rates in other ports.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, if you compare dockage with cargo. But that is not the only thing which enters into the structure of cargo rates. It is a complicated matter which would take some time to explain. However, there are a number of items which enter into the picture, and by comparison, when the totality of the changes is studied I do not think it can be said that the rates for one port are greater than those of another.

Mr. MERRITT: While that may or may not be so—and I have no personal knowledge of it, so that I shall accept the minister's word—when we compare totals paid, the amount paid by vessels using the port of Vancouver, or by people bringing cargoes into or taking them out of that port, seems to be much higher than that paid in Montreal which, I will admit, is at least an equal port.

Then, it seems to me that this question of capitalization and refunding would be handled much more to the satisfaction of the people of Vancouver if the local advisory board were set up. If in Vancouver we knew that these matters were being handled for us by an advisory board which would have more influence than a port manager might ever have, then I am sure the minister would find his task much easier when he deals with complaints about conditions which exist out there.

The last thing I wish to say is that, although the new Lapointe pier may have been given as a present to the harbour commissioners of Vancouver, the material I have seems to suggest that the valuation of the other large pier, namely the Ballantyne pier, is so high one authority has estimated that if its sheds were filled for 365 days in the year it would not derive a revenue sufficient to provide a decent return on the capital invested in it.

I feel sure that if we did not have this feeling of remote control, and which we consider has worked against our interests, not only in this but in many other matters, the people would be much more satisfied with the port situation as they find it at the present time.

Mr. LANGLOIS: I should like to keep the record straight in connection with harbour dues. I do not know what the hon. member who just took his seat had in mind, because it would seem that he was using different terms from what we use in eastern Canada. But let me say that we pay harbour dues for the harbours of Quebec and Montreal—and the hon. member can call them dockage, or anything he likes. However, we pay dues for any ship coming into the harbour, for docking it and tying it alongside. In addition to that, we pay twenty-five cents for each ton of cargo landed from or loaded on a ship at the jetty. I believe the same applies to most ports in eastern Canada. One exception, however, is that section of the harbour of Montreal, including the Lachine canal, which comes under the Quebec canal administration, where the wharfage of twenty-five cents a ton is reduced to eight cents.

Before we proceed with the various items of the estimates of the Minister of Transport, I wish to bring to his attention a problem which is of particular interest to my constituency. For a good many years public bodies as well as prominent individuals of the Gaspé peninsula made representations to former ministers of transport regarding the urgent need for adequate communications for that section of the country. I do not intend to repeat here the various suggestions made thus far, with the many arguments presented in this respect. My aim this evening is simply to direct the attention of the minister and of the committee to the fact that the part of the country which I have the honour to represent has been, in my opinion, too long forgotten, and more particularly in respect of its transportation problems.

As I told the house upon the occasion of my seconding the address in reply to the speech from the throne at the beginning of last session, and again on Saturday when speaking on the estimates of the Department of Public Works, the only means of transportation available to our trade are those supplied by transportation by water, by a second-grade highway and belt-road around the peninsula, thus rendering the economical development nearly impossible.

One of the suggestions made previously to the Department of Transport was that in order to remedy this lack of communication the government of Canada should acquire the railroad line running from Mont Joli to Matane, and extend this line at least for the time being as far as Ste. Anne des Monts, a distance from Matane of approximately fifty miles. This line between Mont Joli and Matane, which covers a distance of some forty miles, is now owned and operated by a private enterprise operating under the name of the Canada & Gulf Terminal Railway. This line connects at Mont Joli with the Canadian National Railways line running from Montreal to Halifax.

I have perused the representations previously made to the government by public bodies, more specifically those included in a report made to the government some years ago by la Chambre de Commerce de Matane; and if the minister refers to these suggestions, he will surely realize and appreciate not only the urgency of complying with these representations but also the importance of these proposals for the future economical development of that section of Canada.

The other day I was much impressed by the speech made in the house by the Minister of Transport in support of the bill seeking authorization for the building of a railway line in the Abitibi district, running northeast for a distance of about forty-five miles from Barraute. The minister then asked the house to authorize him to spend $3 million for the building of that railway, and in support of his bill he quoted a report made by experts of the Canadian National Railways in this respect. I noted more particularly that this report was based on hypothetical but very likely developments, more than on actual facts. I am convinced that the minister has reasonable assurances of these developments.

Moreover, the conclusions of this report were based upon another report made by the government of Quebec in which it was said that the provincial department of colonization of that province expected quite a substantial increase in the population of the region concerned owing to the high agricultural qualities of the soil. I do not want to criticize the minister for having accepted these possibilities of future development to support his request to the house; on the contrary, I wish to congratulate him upon having such high hopes of the future development of this country and upon having asked this parliament to spend money in order to facilitate and expedite such development.

It is not what we did when we built the Canadian Pacific through an almost deserted western Canada and when we built the transcontinental through an equally deserted Abitibi? What would this country be to-day without those two important communication links between these most important centres of wealth in this country? It is for this reason that I must regret that the same kind of forethought was not applied to the region which I represent in this house, and that is why I must strongly impress upon the minister the urgency of having this remedied without further delay. I am not asking the minister to recommend the building of a railroad through a sparsely populated area, because the territory through which the railroad would pass has an actual population to-day of over 31,000, with a prospective population of three times as much. There are close to another 30,000 people in the areas immediately surrounding this one who are awaiting the benefits of this development.

There is no natural obstruction to the extension of the Mont Joli-Matane railroad to Ste. Anne des Monts, and the cost of building this extension would be relatively low. The necessity and urgency of expropriating, if needs be, the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway line and extending it to Ste. Anne des Monts have been previously established. If the department still entertains any doubts as to the possibilities of the area concerned I would ask the officials of the department to refer to an inventory made in 1937 by the Quebec department of trade and commerce entitled, "Inventaire des Ressources Naturelles 1937, Gaspé," and to a private inventory made by Mr. Robert Rumilly under the auspices of the Quebec newspaper Le Soleil in 1943-44.

The minister will be able to find out from these publications the economic possibilities of the Gaspe peninsula and more particularly the possibilities of the future development of its forests, agriculture, mines and fisheries. With reference to mines in the Gaspe peninsula and their possibilities, I would refer the minister to a publication entitled, "Possible future oil provinces of the United States and Canada", published in 1940 by the American association of geologists, in which it is said that the Gaspe peninsula is one of the richest regions of Canada and perhaps of America in petroleum fields.

There is no need for me to add anything more at this stage to the information given already in the official inventory and the publications referred to. In conclusion, I strongly urge the minister to ask his department to supplement the information already obtained by asking the Canadian National Railways to make a thorough and immediate study of this project. Speaking on behalf of those whom I represent in this house, I must say to the minister that we sincerely hope that at the next session of parliament he will introduce a bill which will at long last give justice to the Gaspe peninsula by seeking authorization to buy and extend the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway line as suggested.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I have here a clipping from the Vancouver Sun of Tuesday, June 25, 1946, which reads:

> Ship strike looms along B.C. coast
> Possibility of a coastal seamen's strike, involving 700 to 800 crew members of 25 B.C. passenger-freight vessels, loomed to-day as seafarers' international union (AFL) hotly protested a national war labour board ruling on demands of the union.

[Mr. Langlois.]

In a letter dealing with that clipping which I received from the union, they pointed out that they are going to protest to the national war labour board for better terms than those which were given to them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What is the date of the article?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: The Vancouver Sun of Tuesday, June 25. I have been sitting on the industrial relations committee, and from what one can make out the unions appearing there want a basic law so that they can get general treatment from the bosses on a definite basis. In the case of the Minister of Transport that power lies in the Canada Shipping Act. By overhauling this act, he would be able to bring relative stability and improve considerably the conditions under which the seamen of this country work.

We have just come through a war during which the merchant seamen of Canada showed more bravery and greater endurance without recognition than any other group that served during the war. It is about time the government recognized the fact that these men serve under the most antiquated shipping laws of perhaps any modern country, even those countries which we are feeding to-day. I am not going to present proposals that could be called fantastic or idealistic; I am merely going to compare the act under which our seamen serve with the act under which the seamen of the United States serve. It is repugnant to me as a Canadian to have to expose the conditions under which Canadian seamen work and compare them with the conditions under which those who serve under the stars and stripes work, but it is necessary to do this in order to bring these conditions to the attention of the people.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman and I have no objection to his dealing with matters affecting the Canada Shipping Act, but if he is going to deal with matters affecting labour and labour relations I think he should do so under the estimates of the Department of Labour. Everything he has said so far has had to do with the national war labour board and working conditions. Unless he deals with some other matter, I am afraid I shall have to ask the Chairman for a ruling.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I can assure the minister that when I get through with the short introduction I shall deal with the matter point by point and read certain sections from the Canada Shipping Act. It is not so much labour conditions that I intend to deal with as the conditions laid down by the Canada Shipping Act as compared with the conditions laid down by the navigation laws of the United States. They are comparable in that they both deal with conditions under which seamen work. This has nothing to do with the Department of Labour.

Unless such acts as the Canada Shipping Act are revised completely, it is a complete waste of time to deal with such bills as the Canadian citizenship bill. You must provide proper conditions for the men otherwise you will not build up that necessary esprit de corps which goes for good citizenship. I am not going to deal with all the points in the Canada Shipping Act; I shall merely deal with a few which go to show the necessity of revising this act and which also show why there is discontent in the ranks of the seamen of Canada.

First of all, I should like to deal with article 191, sections 1, 2, 3 and 4, dealing with advances and allotment of wages, and compare that with section 11, page 236 of the navigation laws of the United States, dealing with slop chests. The pertinent section in the Canada Shipping Act is 191, subsection 1:

Where an agreement with the crew is required to be made in a form approved by the minister, the agreement may contain a stipulation for payment to or on behalf of the seaman, conditionally on his going to sea in pursuance of the agreement, of a sum not exceeding the amount of one month's wages payable to the seaman under the agreement.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, or to give him the idea that I object to his dealing with this matter, but section 191 deals exclusively with advances and allotment of wages. The Department of Transport has nothing to do with wages; it is a matter which concerns labour. I do not want to be unfair to him, but I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is a matter which does not concern us.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: The administration of this act comes under the Department of Transport, and when the bill came down the other day for compensation it was introduced through the minister's department.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I agree, because workmen's compensation is a matter which comes directly under the Department of Transport, but not the allotment and payment of wages.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Then I will deal with just this one section and then continue with the others.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If the hon. gentleman wants to deal with compensation I certainly will not stop him.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I want to thank the department for bringing in that law covering seamen with regard to compensation.

The CHAIRMAN: May I ask the hon. gentleman to deal only with matters which come within the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, not the Department of Labour.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I will continue then, and bring up a provision from the navigation laws of the United States which should be inserted in the Canada Shipping Act. The clause is headed "slop chest"; this has nothing to do with wages, and I should like to see this section incorporated in the Canada Shipping Act, and section 191 removed:

Every vessel mentioned in section forty-five hundred and sixty-nine of the revised statutes shall also be provided with a slop chest, which shall contain a complement of clothing for the intended voyage for each seaman employed, including boots or shoes, hats or caps, under clothing and outer clothing, oiled clothing, and everything necessary for the wear of a seaman; also a full supply of tobacco and blankets. Any of the contents of the slop chest shall be sold, from time to time, to any or every seaman applying therefor, for his own use, at a profit not exceeding 10 per centum of the reasonable wholesale value of the same at the port at which the voyage commenced. And if any such vessel is not provided, before sailing, as herein required, the owner shall be liable to a penalty of not more than $500. The provisions of this section shall not apply to vessels plying between the United States and the Dominion of Canada, Newfoundland, the Bermuda islands, the Bahama islands, the West Indies, Mexico, and Central America.

As I have said, the seamen would like to have this section incorporated into the Canada Shipping Act and section 191 deleted altogether, because the main portion of section 191 deals with the action regarding those, say, who jump ship when they are advanced wages, and they would like to have that wiped right out and no advancement of wages given, but the proper facilities put on the boat so that they could buy their stuff right on the boat rather than be stuck with bills that are liable to discount in beer parlours and so on, when they want to get ready cash for advancement and are handed a slip. I think the minister will see that in dealing with this matter I am not dealing with wages, but it is a combination which fits into conditions on the boat rather than wages.

The section which I am about to read is R.S. 4530, page 213 of the navigation laws of the United States, known as "advances, amount, time, penalty for failure of master to comply". This section is in connection with cash draws when the vessel is in any port. And now again you could, if you liked, object that it is a question of wages; yet it is more a question of conditions when they are outside Canada in some foreign port. There is no such section in the Canada Shipping Act covering this question, but seemingly the question of drawing wages especially in a foreign port is left to the discretion of the skipper. British seamen can claim only one pound a week when in port as a sub on wages.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I do not think this can be discussed by the hon. member under the present item.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Mr. Chairman, this is not a case of wages as such, it is a matter of the conditions of work which exist when they find themselves in a foreign port. It is not, I say, a case of more wages or less wages; but when they are in a foreign port it is left to the discretion of the skipper whether they can draw any money at all, and there is no section of the Canada Shipping Act covering that matter, but there is in the navigation laws of the United States. It is not the wages, it is working conditions. My own brother—

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member is in order when he is discussing the Canada Shipping Act, but an amendment of the act with respect to working conditions would hardly be in order at this time.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I find it difficult to deal with this matter under the Canada Shipping Act. The only way I can bring out the inadequacies of the act is to relate it to something else. I do not want to get off on a metaphysical pipe dream.

An hon. MEMBER: On what?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Go and look at the dictionary. Therefore I take the navigation laws of the United States as something concrete for the information of the minister, so that he, in bringing forward legislation on this subject, can point out that advanced nations are doing the same thing and that all that he wants to do is to bring Canada from her backward state up to the standard of other nations. As an illustration, I should like to read this section, or a part of it, which appears on page 213 of the United States navigation laws:

R.S. 4530. Every seaman on a vessel of the United States shall be entitled to receive on demand from the master of the vessel to which he belongs one-half part of the balance of his wages earned and remaining unpaid at the time when such demand is made at every port where such vessel, after the voyage has been commenced, shall load or deliver cargo . . .

There is no such law in Canada.

The next section I should like to deal with is headed, "provisions, health and accommodation", sections 224 to 229 inclusive of the Canada Shipping Act.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I tell my hon. friend that questions of health are dealt with by the Department of National Health and Welfare, such as the sick mariners fund.

Mr. MacINNIS: May I ask the Minister of Transport on what particular item can members of the committee discuss matters affecting seamen?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Under the director of merchant seamen; that is the proper item.

Mr. MacINNIS: Well, that is the point that we should get on, if there is an item upon which the hon. member for Skeena can discuss this question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think he should reserve it for that time.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Then, Mr. Chairman, I will skip that item, and now we are getting down to how inadequate this act is. It is scattered "all over the acre." It should be under the jurisdiction of one minister so that it could be properly administered. You will have trouble with the seamen if this keeps on. It is sawing one off against the other at all times and it cannot last forever without an explosion on the labour front. The next section is headed "shipping fees", 155.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Is the hon. member referring to the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Yes. I quote:

Every owner or master of a ship engaging or discharging any seaman in a shipping office, or before a shipping master or a deputy shipping master, shall pay to the shipping master or deputy shipping master the whole of the fees hereby made payable in respect of that engagement or discharge, and may, for the purpose of reimbursing himself in part, deduct and retain . . .

And so on. In other words, the seamen are charged fees for what amounts to hiring and firing. The practice of extorting fees from seamen in connection with articles of agreement is a practice which, in the opinion of the seamen, should be stopped. If such fees are necessary, then they should be carried by the ship owner. No other maritime nation follows this practice.

The next point is with respect to wages, hours of labour and local holidays. The navigation laws of the United States, section 2, page 202, dated March 4, 1915—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Is that in the Canada Shipping Act?

Mr. ARCHIBALD: I will let it go at that. The navigation laws of the United States, in contrast to the Canada Shipping Act, carry a definite eight-hour day to be worked on ships.

The CHAIRMAN: I am under the impression that, in reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East, the minister stated that this question could be discussed under another item, the director of merchant seamen.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is what I said in reply to the hon. gentlemen; but on the question of wages and hours, that is a matter which certainly does not concern this department but the Department of Labour, and seamen went on strike for this reason. We have in the Department of Transport an eight-hour day on our ships and that should be an answer to my hon. friend. So far as transport is concerned, we have instituted an eight-hour day, and therefore I do not know what my hon. friend is referring to.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: A comparable act in the United States carries the definite provision in it that men shall work an eight-hour day, and there is no commitment with regard to hours of work in the Canada Shipping Act. Before I proceed, I would ask whether this comes under the Department of Transport.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I submit with deference that it does not.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Well, we will let that point go.

I now come to manning scale, number of men on boats who carry lifeboat tickets, and so on. Is that under the jurisdiction of this department? I should like to deal with the question of manning scale, that is, the number of men required on a boat, depending upon size and the type of trade dealt in. There is no manning scale called for in the Canada Shipping Act, nor is there any regulation as to the number of qualified seamen who should be carried, nor how the seaman is qualified. In this connection, the navigation laws of the United States again are far more clear, as will be seen by reference to pages 197 and 198 of that act, headed, "requirements, qualifications and regulations as to crews", and directions as to what is required are given. There is also a section, section 13, on the same pages, headed, "certificates of service of seamen". They even make it more clear because there is a section dealing with undermanning, page 192, section 4516 of the navigation laws of the United States. On the British Columbia coast some of the crew might have lifeboat tickets. Men can be in the stokehold or in the steward's department and not necessarily on deck. Without manning laws, the companies can always beat down the demands of the seamen by hiring green crews without any qualifications whatever, and thus keep the seamen forever in an underpaid and overworked condition.

It is needless to point out the danger to life and limb of passengers on the coastal vessels. Granted that the skippers and mates are wonderful seamen—and their accident rate proves this—there are times, nevertheless, when in spite of these men and modern mechanical devices, qualified men are necessary when these other factors fail. Some day there will be serious loss of life on the coast and it could be that government regulations or lack of them may be the cause.

We were discussing to-day and the other evening the situation at Ripple Rock. There will be loss of life there, and yet these same boats, traversing those waters at all times, have no manning scale. There is no certificate of seamen, as it were. I have worked on these boats, and I know that when it comes to manning lifeboats it is more like battle stations than anything else because everybody gets in everybody else's way and some get hurt in the process, even in the experimental stages. The seamen would like to know the government's position in regard to the hiring of men of other nationalities on boats which are really Canadian, but which register in other countries so as to evade Canadian laws, and hire crews where cheap labour is available, even when Canadian seamen are on the beach.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the past have been notable for trickery in this respect. One skipper on a Canadian Pacific boat on one occasion stated that Chinese were superior to white men. This problem will arise in the immediate future. Will the government, then, take the attitude of allowing the situation to be repeated, especially in face of the fact that Canadian merchant seamen sacrificed so much during the war?

Another point that I would bring up if it is under the jurisdiction of the department is the continuous discharge book when seamen are signing articles on any ship. These discharge books contain the record of the seamen's employment and ability, and the book must be produced for the shipmaster's inspection before the seaman can obtain employment.

May I say to the minister that a boat is a very small place, so that hatreds and bitter feelings can flare up, under conditions of confinement in that narrow compass, which would not necessarily occur on land. One small mistake on the part of the seaman, written into his continuous discharge book by the skipper, can follow him the rest of his days and prevent him from obtaining employment and interfere with his way of life. The seamen would like to have that continuous discharge book done away with, and a single unattached certificate of discharge be recognized as sufficient for purposes of employment.

Lastly, if the manning pools come under the jurisdiction of the minister, I should like to say a few words, though at the moment I do not know whether the manning pools are still in operation, but the seamen on the coast claim that through their unions they would like in the future to have the authority to put their own men on the boats. If this were started, no matter what crisis occurred in the future this machinery would be in operation and would work efficiently in the interests of the state.

To sum up, I would say, though many members will not agree with the various points I have brought up, that the seamen are of the opinion that the Canada Shipping Act is antiquated in relationship to the living standards of other Canadian workers and is now definitely a detriment to the welfare of the Canadian seamen.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I intended speaking for a minute or two after the hon. member for Gaspé had finished. I was pleased to see that he was talking about the building of a railroad in his riding. I wish to take a few minutes of the time of the committee first to support his demand; second, to give him a friendly word of warning and, third, to draw the attention of the committee to a practically similar situation which exists in my own riding and of which I believe the Department of Transport is aware. I say that I give him my support because I am fairly well acquainted with the situation which exists in that section to which my hon. friend referred. I am fairly well acquainted with it because I lived near there at one time, and I have travelled there considerably. I believe that if hon. members were acquainted with the situation there, they would admit that the transportation and communication facilities are not in keeping with modern times.

However, I wish to give him a friendly word of warning. He should not insist too much for the Canadian National Railways to take over the already existing part of the railroad in that section, otherwise the people may find themselves in the same situation as they did in a part of my riding. That is, after the Canadian National Railways have taken it over and have operated it for a short time they may come to the conclusion that it is not a financially sound proposition, and then they may ask the board of railway commisioners to stop the operation of the railroad and, a little later, to take away the rails.

This brings me to my particular problem of which, as I said before, the Minister of Transport is aware. He has sympathetically listened to my representations and to the representations of the people from that section. To make the matter a little clearer, I should explain that in the riding of Lotbinière there are forty-six rural municipalities. Out of the forty-six there are fourteen which have railroad facilities. The other thirty-two have no railroads whatsoever. I am not talking about a part of the country which has been recently developed, but of a part which is the oldest and which contains the oldest municipalities in Quebec. I am talking about a part of the country where some of the municipalities are not over thirty and thirty-five miles away from the city of Quebec, which is the main centre of that particular region, and yet to-day these people have to travel from three to five to ten to fifteen and to eighteen miles to take a train to get into Quebec.

Quite a few years ago there used to be a railroad which had been built in 1896 with government subsidies for the purpose of bringing a line to the shores of the St. Lawrence, and which would permit the localities of that region along the shore to get some transport facilities. In 1931 the Canadian National Railways arbitrarily decided, as I said before, that it was not a good financial proposition and they discontinued operating the railroad. At that time the Railroad Act did not oblige the railway company to go before the commissioners and ask for permission to discontinue the operation of a railroad. The companies could do so by themselves. Therefore the Canadian National Railways proceeded to discontinue the operation of the railway. Representations were then made by the people of that particular locality, which is St. Jean Deschaillons, and by all the surrounding localities within the radius which was served by that station. Nothing happened as could be expected at that particular time.

In 1936, after the Railroad Act had been changed, the people went before the railway commissioners and asked that the railroad be reestablished. The railway commission decided that, since there was no legislation in 1931 to permit them to decide whether the Canadian National Railways was right in taking away that railroad, they had no jurisdiction. In 1941 the company decided that they were going to take away the rails. Again representations were made; again we went before the railway commissioners. At this time they decided that, since they had given a decision in 1936 in the way in which I have just indicated, they had no more jurisdiction. There is no question of discussing the value of the judgment of the railway commissioners. I have no doubt that it was legally sound and according to the law of the land, but I say that in the middle of the winter as we have it here, with weather twenty below zero, it is difficult to be satisfied to go fifteen miles in a sleigh or in a snowmobile and to tell ourselves, well, maybe we are doing this in a sleigh or a snowmobile, but we have a sound judgment from the railway commissioners.

I know the minister understands the situation. The people of that locality and I have made representations to him, and he has done everything within his power with the Canadian National Railways to try to solve this problem. I can only ask if he will again give as much consideration as he has given before and try to impress the authorities of that railway with the plight of the people living in that region.

I know the main obstacle brought up by the company was the building of a bridge which would involve the expenditure of a considerable amount of money. This bridge had been burnt shortly after the operation of the railroad was discontinued. But I believe there is a solution to that problem whereby the railroad can be reestablished without the building of the bridge, and which would be satisfactory to the people concerned. I believe that the authorities of the Canadian National Railways are aware of the solution and that representations have been made to them in that regard. I feel quite sure that the minister will again be as kind and sympathetic to the representations which I have made on behalf of these people as he was previously. I want him to understand that I am not doing this from any personal consideration. It is not a problem which has been created by myself or during my time. I inherited the situation and more o less had to adopt the baby after I found it on my doorstep. I am convinced that the representations of these people are justified, and I again ask him to make representations to the authorities of the railway. When he does that, which I am sure he will do, I wonder whether he would also impress them with the fact that the remaining end of the railway has not been maintained for some time. According to the information I have received, the yearly maintenance on that part which still remains has not been done this year. We do not want the railway authorities to again have the opportunity of going before the board of transport commissioners, saying that the railway is in such a condition, as a result of non-maintenance, that the expenditure involved to repair it would be so great that they are sorry but they have to ask that the remainder of the line be abandoned also. If this should happen, the board will, I am sure, understand that this is a public utility which serves the whole community, and will decide accordingly.

Mr. CHEVRIER: If I may have just a brief word to reply to the representations of the hon. member for Gaspé as well as those of the hon. member for Lotbinière—

Mr. KIRK: At the same time would the minister deal with the famous Guysborough railway, which I have discussed with him on several occasions? Perhaps the same explanation will cover it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member for Gaspé made a strong plea for the acquisition by the Canadian National Railways of the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway. I must tell him, as I told the committee of the whole during the discussion of the proposed branch line from Barraute to Kiask Falls, that the policy of the Canadian National Railways as a rule is directed toward three points when it considers the building of a branch line or the acquisition of a railway. The first of these is the natural resources existing in the country where the line is to be purchased or built; the next is the cost of the construction or purchase, and the last is the possible traffic to be derived therefrom. These are three important matters which must be kept in mind at all times. If the railways of this country, particularly the Canadian National Railways, with which I deal now, are to operate profitably—and I am sure that is one of the things the house wants them to do—then they must look at those factors first of all. In 1943 the Canadian National Railways set up a committee to deal with the subject matter discussed by my hon. friend, and I have a list of their conclusions. I do not want to burden the committee by reading all of them, but I think hon. members should note at least one. Here is what the survey says:

> There appears to be little prospect of any future development in the country—

I refer now to the country being served by the Canada and Gulf Terminal railway.

> —which would improve the earning capacity of the road. From experience which the Canadian National has had with other lines that have depended solely on the movement of forest products, the earning capacity will gradually disappear, and abandonment of the line will have to take place.

Then conclusion No. 6 is very much in point. It says:

Having regard to the cost of operation by the Canadian National and rate reductions which would follow acquisition, the earnings valuation to the C.N.R. turns out to be less than nothing, based on the average of the ten-year period from 1933 to 1943 inclusive. In fact, if the line were given to the Canadian National, the system would be worsened by $33,000 per year.

I hope I have not hurt the feelings of the hon. gentleman by quoting this, but he may get some satisfaction when he realizes that this report was made in 1943, and he has made such a good case that I can assure him I shall ask the Canadian National Railways to review the position since the making of this report.

Dealing next with the representations made by the hon. member for Lotbinière in connection with the St.-Jean Deschaillons railway, the position there is somewhat more difficult than that raised by the hon. member for Gaspé. It is more difficult because the circumstances surrounding the abandonment of that line were brought before the board of transport commissioners. According to the Railway Act, when a railway wishes to abandon a line it must get the approval of the board of transport commissioners. As my hon. friend said, the Canadian National did not do that at the time for the simple reason that this section in the act was not mandatory, so that of its own volition the Canadian National decided to abandon the line. At a later date, however, the matter was brought before the board of transport commissioners, who heard large numbers of witnesses from the area represented by my hon. friend; and having regard to all the circumstances they came to the conclusion that a portion of the line should be abandoned.

I say to my hon. friend that he and his constituents are not alone in that predicament. In my own constituency of Stormont the board of transport commissioners granted an application of a railway company for reduction in train service in an area which, with all respect to my hon. friend, was far more populated than the area in which he lives. As a matter of fact it is at the door of the capital city of Ottawa, and the train in question was the New York Central train which operates between the city of Ottawa and the city of Cornwall. I believe it was in 1938 or 1939 that, having regard to the fact that farmers and townsfolk were finding it more convenient to use their motor cars instead of using the train, the board of transport commissioners, having in mind also the financial position of the New York Central in regard to that service, decided in favour of the abandonment of two of those trains. If the board also decided in favour of the abandonment of a portion of the St.-Jean Deschaillons line, I presume that decision was based on somewhat the same grounds. I can assure my hon. friend, however, that I shall ask the Canadian National Railways again to explore the position.

The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough raised a question in reference to the Guysborough railway. That is a matter, I think, which affects the Canso project, in that a relocation of the lines would have to be considered if a causeway or bridge were decided upon. I am not sufficiently conversant with the position at the moment to speak from memory, though my recollection is that the Canadian National Railways have in view some changes in that locality, dependent upon the Canso project. I would not want to go any farther at the moment without having before me the particular details, but I can assure my hon. friend that the representations he has made will be carefully considered.

Mr. KIDD: I want to congratulate the hon. member for Gaspé and the hon. member for Lotbinière on their presentations to the minister, and I hope he will be just as favourable in dealing with my case. I want to say a word about a new station at Kingston. I think the minister is fully aware of the conditions which prevail there. I wish to say to him and to his executive officers that not much progress has been made in the Kingston area since last fall, and I want to ask whether anything further has been done. Has the executive made any appropriation for that new station? Having in mind the locality from which the minister comes, I know he is familiar with the situation in my city. These fast trains are still going through from Montreal to Toronto and on to Chicago, three and four times a day, in one or sometimes two sections. I am sure they pay for themselves; I believe the company gets good dividends from the Kingston area, but conditions there are not as they should be.

As strongly as I can I want to remind the minister that before the war we were promised a new station, after making three concessions to the railway board at that time. I need not repeat what those concessions were; they are on file and I am sure the minister is familiar with them. A person getting off a train at that station at any time from November to April, in the snow and rain, has an uncomfortable time of it, particularly if he gets off at the far end of the train. There is no shelter there, and particularly when trains are late the people have to wait under conditions which are not pleasant. This is particularly true when the trains are travelling in more than one section, and when people are meeting friends. It is not known what section the friends will alight from. One may go to meet one section and be told to wait for the next one, or the first section might be filled up and there would not be sufficient room.

I hope the minister will be considerate and deal as favourably with Kingston as he has with other areas.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Notwithstanding that the hon. member sits on the opposite side of the house, I can say that I agree with everything he has said about the situation at Kingston, because I know it very well. It is just alongside my own city. I visited it since the hon. member spoke about it last year, and I know that the conditions are just as he describes them. In fact I told many of my own constituents who have asked when we are going to get a new station in Cornwall, that the position is such that I was afraid their request would have to wait until the condition at Kingston was rectified.

With reference to the building of stations generally, I do not think the Canadian National Railways will construct any stations in the immediate future, because of the shortage of materials and because of the housing situation. I believe that was made fairly clear by the president of the railways when he gave evidence before the railways and shipping committee. At that time he did say something about the situation at Kingston. I am sure the Canadian National Railways have had it in mind, but in view of the present condition I do not think it is possible for the immediate future.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): I do not wish to add to what has been said by my colleague the hon. member for Gaspé, who referred to the conditions on the Gaspé peninsula, and the railway there. My good friend the Minister of Transport pointed out three questions, and said that the Department of Transport and the Canadian National Railways would be interested in any undertaking of the sort suggested, if natural resources were involved.

In respect of this first question, I would refer the minister to the proceedings of the special committee on reconstruction and reestablishment which sat in 1944. I would refer hon. members to No. 11 in those proceedings, and particularly to page 391. This refers to the Gaspé peninsula, that part of the country we all cherish, the part which was first discovered, and which is the last to be served and helped. We will try to have it rediscovered.

In paragraph 5 on this page I find the following:

5. Mines—petroleum. Minerals are to be found throughout the whole peninsula.

That is for the benefit of not only Gaspé, Matane, Matapedia and Bonaventure, but for the whole of the Dominion of Canada. Among those minerals is gold, something that is useful at times. The paragraph states:

They include gold, silver, lead, zinc and chrome iron. Powerful companies such as Noranda Mines, Federal Zinc and Lead, National Smelting of London, Eng., British Metal, Mining Corporation, own mineralized areas and await means of access and outlet, in a word, proper transportation facilities . . . Gaspé is composed of sedimentary, very plicated strata—

What that means, I do not know.

—that are very indicative of the presence of petroleum. The American association of geologists published in 1940, following a serious investigation, a book on the petroliferous resources of the various regions of America. The work is captioned "possible future oil provinces of the United States and Canada." Gaspé occupies a very good standing in the list of oil potentialities. Generally speaking, geologists believe that Gaspé, by reason of its twenty thousand feet or more of sedimentary rocks, is one of the best regions in Canada, and perhaps in America, from the standpoint of oil-bearing possibilities. Powerful companies, such as Imperial Oil, have acquired rights to more or less extensive territories. They have awaited the results of borings carried out by one of the companies, Continental Petroleums Limited. The results of these borings may now be considered very favourable. But the companies are awaiting proper transportation facilities before launching operations.

The minister has referred to the cost of construction. I shall not answer him on that point, but I will say, as did the hon. member for Gaspé, that if this railroad were continued to Ste. Anne des Monts on the same basis as the Canada Gulf and Terminal railway was continued from Mont Joli, it would not be satisfactory. One has only to look at the record of this railway to see that it is the greatest scandal in the whole transportation system of the country.

I must say, however, that I can see no reason why the Canadian National Railways could not build this line from Matane to Ste. Anne des Monts, and from Ste. Anne des Monts to run up the Gaspé peninsula, thereby creating an opening for that railway system in the Matapedia valley.

When this stretch of railway was built, a stretch running thirty-six miles, it was built at a cost of $800,000. It was given a grant of certain timber and bush limits which were sold to the Hammermill company at $1,100,000.

I am answering the minister's third point when I say that the company lately reduced its rates for carload traffic to the level of the Canadian National Railways. I thought it was a good decision, because it was an indication of an ounce of prevention being worth a pound of cure. The figures appearing in their books set out the costs, which were amply revealed by the Hammermill corporation. According to one of the greatest experts in this country —and this is the third point which I wish the minister would take into consideration seriously—the railway made $218,000 in profits. Their investments, presumably in government bonds, increased from $70,000 to $135,000, or an increase of $65,000. Their cash position rose from $12,700 to $25,500, or an increase of about $12,000. Their accrued depreciation increased from $375,000 to $426,000, or another increase of about $50,000. Their profit and loss, debit, decreased from $1,339,000 to $1,305,000. On top of that, the company was able to pay in 1943 and 1944 an interest of $57,000 on bonds outstanding.

The reconstruction committee has found that part of the country to be of national importance, but it cannot be developed with the present condition of transportation facilities. It is an imperative duty of the government to see that this wealth is brought out of the Gaspé peninsula. I do not care whether that is done by the Canadian National Railways or by a private corporation as long as it is supervised by the government and is done in the immediate future. With present conditions of transportation, there is no possibility whatsoever of getting out the wealth that is in the Gaspé peninsula. I am not a cost expert on transportation, and such things are up to the government and their officials, but one thing must be done. No government can last any time if it does not deal with the population living in that district. Millions of dollars have been spent on Churchill and the railroad is to be built up in northern Ontario and Quebec. I am all for that, but I want to know why it is that from 1534 to 1946 nothing has been done to help bring the wealth of the Gaspé to British Columbia.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I want to say a word about our merchant marine, but I shall defer doing so until to-morrow. In so far as railroads are concerned, British Columbia is going to ask that it receive the same consideration as any other province. We intend to have our share of anything that is done in connection with the railroads of Canada.

(Translation):

I wish to say a few words about the railways. If the C.N.R. is to take over the Gaspé line, why would it not assume the operation of the Peace river line?

[Mr. A. P. Coté.]

(Text):

Mr. CHEVRIER: That makes my task very much easier.

Mr. FULTON: Under this general item, I wish to say something about highway transportation and federal assistance to the Trans-Canada highway. My precedent for bringing up this matter under the estimates of the Department of Transport is the fact that in 1912 and again in 1913 a bill was sponsored by the then Minister of Railways and Canals to provide for federal assistance to the provinces for a programme of road construction. I realize that there is no other precedent, but that precedent was accepted at that time on all sides of the house. Inasmuch as roads are definitely one means of transport in the country, I think this would be an appropriate time to discuss this matter.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The Department of Transport has nothing to do with the Trans-Canada highway. I am informed by my officials that in 1917 grants were made to the provinces to assist in its construction.

Mr. FULTON: It was recommended in 1912 or 1913. I am simply suggesting that this would be an appropriate time to make a short statement.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I could not enlighten my hon. friend at all because it is not a matter that comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, nor could I reply to his statement.

Mr. FULTON: I think the minister may change his view on the matter as I proceed with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN: The Trans-Canada highway does not come within the limits of the Department of Transport, and I do not think it would be in order for the hon. member for Kamloops to discuss it at this time.

Mr. FULTON: I was not going to discuss the Trans-Canada highway; I was going to discuss highway transportation in general and make certain recommendations, and it seemed to me that this general item of the Department of Transport was the proper place to do so.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I understand that the hon. member intends to discuss highway transportation, but again that is a matter which does not fall within the jurisdiction of the department; it is a provincial matter.

Mr. FULTON: There is no department of dominion-provincial problems, and these problems of dominion-provincial relations must be discussed under one department or another.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not want to interrupt unduly, but there is no estimate in my department which would have to do with that in any way, and I do not see how my hon. friend could take it up on these estimates.

Mr. FULTON: May I call it eleven o'clock so that we can both think over the matter?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again. I understand there is a report by a committee which should be tabled before eleven o'clock.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVILEGE—MR. COTE (MATAPEDIA-MATANE)—SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL NO. 8, RESPECTING CANADA DAY

Mr. A. P. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is after eleven o'clock.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): I see that the order of precedence says that on Monday senate amendments to public bills should be considered. I have been sitting here for three sessions to-day; as a matter of fact I rushed six hundred miles to be here on time, at eleven o'clock this morning, expecting that bill No. 8, respecting Canada Day, would be called to-day. It was not. I should like to know from the government leader whether such a bill, after being passed in this house, and having received the sanction of the senate, even with amendment, is not as important as, for instance, bill T-11, an act for the relief of Fania Pustopedskaites Sobolevicius, otherwise known as Fanny Pustopedsky Sobolevicius. Now the day has passed, and the bill was not called. I understand it may not be called until Monday next, and I have read in the paper that we may adjourn on Saturday. Therefore it is a first-class funeral of a bill which must be in the minds of some people as important as this other one.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I have given some latitude to the hon. member, in spite of the fact that it is after eleven o'clock. If he has any question of privilege I would ask him to state it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: It is already after eleven o'clock, but I should like to point out to the hon. member that it is not the importance of the legislation which determines the position it occupies on the orders of the day; that is determined according to the standing orders and resolutions of the house. To my amazement we have put ourselves in the position that since the 15th of April there has been no time for consideration of amendments made by the senate to a public bill introduced by a private member. The standing orders provide for consideration of such matters only on Monday, after private bills. On the 9th of April there was adopted by this house a resolution that on Mondays government orders would have precedence over everything except questions and notices of motions. I do not think it was intended at that time to shut out the consideration of amendments made by the senate to public bills presented by private members, but that has been the result. Until government orders are exhausted, such amendments cannot be called for consideration, and government orders are never exhausted until we arrive at the time of prorogation. The combined effect of the standing order and the resolution of the 9th of April is that there is no time now at which this item of business could be called for consideration without the unanimous consent of the house. It happens to be a matter about which there is considerable division of opinion, and I would not anticipate that the house would wish to give unanimous consent to its taking a position that, under the orders and resolutions, it is not entitled to.

I am afraid that, as a consequence of what was done on the 9th of April, not intentionally but nevertheless as a decision of the house, there is no room for the consideration of these amendments at this session, and the hon. member will have to trust that the house, the country and the government will consider as to whether the matter should not be reintroduced as a measure having other precedence at the next session of parliament.

Mr. GRAYDON: Mr. Speaker, may I just suggest to the minister that I have never heard a more polite burial service in my life.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 11.08 p.m.

Tuesday, August 13, 1946.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PASSPORTS

REFERENCE TO ARTICLES IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE" OF AUGUST 12 AND 13

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I have before me the morning Gazette. In view of the fact that chapter, verse and line are given respecting the alleged application for passport and naturalization, possibly the minister is now in a position, with that information, to make a statement.

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): I intended making a statement about this affair to-day, but I have not yet the latest word regarding it. I shall have it in a few minutes, and with the permission of the house I will then make a statement.

[Later:]

PRIVILEGE—MR. BERTRAND (LAURIER)

Hon. ERNEST BERTRAND (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a short statement on a question of privilege.

Yesterday morning in the Montreal Gazette, page 13, and in this morning's, page 9, appeared reports signed by Lawrence W. Conroy and entitled respectively "Suspicion in false passport ring points to federal cabinet member," and "Spy aided by false credentials was known as William Brandis".

In February, 1938, Corporal Noel of the R.C.M.P. came to my office and asked me if I did remember recommending one Willy Brandes, who had asked for his naturalization in September, 1936. At first I did not remember, but after the officer had described the applicant I said that I did remember a man, corresponding to the description, who had come to me accompanied by two persons, one of whom I knew well. On was Aaron Marcovitch, and the other was a gentleman whose name I gave to the police, but I do not need to give it here because he had nothing to do with what happened after that. At the time I was not sure which one of the two had been in my office with Brandes to whom I had given the letter shown to me by the R.C.M.P.

Why did I give this letter? During the election period of 1935 Aaron Marcovitch had presented himself to me as a brother of one Marcovitch whom I knew as a perfect gentleman, and who was in charge of Sam Jacobs' central committee in Cartier division. Aaron told me that he knew the Hebrew element of my district very well, that he was agent for the Hebrew Sick Benefit Association, which I found to be correct. He succeeded in convincing me of his usefulness. He worked in my committee all through the elections under the supervision of my campaign manager.

The R.C.M.P. officers went to Aaron Marcovitch's house and the latter admitted that the photo of Brandes was somewhat familiar but that he could not place the man. He denied having had anything to do with the naturalization papers, and to convince the officers he offered them to go through his records with them. They accepted immediately, and found out the name of Brandes, his certificate number 22970 and the certificate number of one Schulem Brandes, number 10164, a man who had been naturalized in 1913 and who had been given as Willy Brandes' father in the papers shown to me and later presented to the authorities.

Later on Marcovitch admitted that Mrs. Schulem Brandes was an aunt of his own wife, Mrs. Marcovitch.

Willy Brandes' profession was given as Hebrew teacher in the Montreal Hebrew school. I remember that he was a gentleman who was well dressed, spoke very good English and very good French.

The officers found that a marriage appeared to have been celebrated between Willy Brandes and Mary Stern by a certain rabbi—I do not need to give his name—before two witnesses whose names appeared but both of them denied having ever witnessed such a marriage.

When I was told of the details of the R.C.M.P.'s inquiry it helped my memory to reconstruct this affair.

The application forms for naturalization were signed as of the 10th of September, and explained the terms of my letter of the 15th, which is as follows:

Officer in charge of naturalization,
Parliament building,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Sir,

I hereby recommend to you Mr. William Brandes, who is filing his papers to obtain Canadian naturalization. Mr. Brandes has been living in Montreal since he entered Canada at the age of eight years old. He is employed as professor by the Hebrew school of Montreal and is absolutely recommendable from all angles.

Yours very truly,

These details of my letter, relating to Brandes' stay in Montreal and his profession of school teacher, had been furnished to me by Marcovitch and Brandes himself who accompanied his supposed cousin to my office. These forms showed the number of Brandes' father's naturalization paper obtained in 1913. I had no reason to doubt Marcovitch's words, as he had always acted properly during the time I had known him.

Marcovitch was a very sick man in 1938, when the mounted police made the inquiry, and was restricted in his movements by the said police orders. He died on November 11, 1944.

I never signed anything else but the letter just quoted. Fred Rose's name does not appear in the file. I did not know him until long after September 1936, and to say "that the first signature was that of Rose", which it was necessary to cover by "another signature who would be like Caesar's wife, above suspicion" with all the implications that follow, is malicious and untrue.

I am sorry to have been deceived by Marcovitch and Brandes, whose story was plausible, but there was nothing but absolute good faith in my behaviour. I say again that I have never heard of Fred Rose in this affair.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of bill No. 368, to amend the Income War Tax Act.

Mr. RODNEY ADAMSON (York West): I am making this speech at the present time because I consider the income tax bill the most appropriate of the measures going through the house in relation to which to make the present submissions. Part of what I have to say would probably have been more appropriate under the foreign exchange control bill; possibly part of it would come appropriately under justice estimates, and part of it under the department of mines. However, in order to save the time of the house I have endeavoured to condense in one speech what I have to say at the moment and to make that speech at this point. I trust, Mr. Speaker, you will allow me a certain latitude in my remarks if in part the material I give to the house is not strictly relevant to the Income War Tax Act. As I have said, I am endeavouring, for the purpose of saving time, to make three speeches in one.

The first part of my remarks deals with the effect on the Canadian economy; of parity of the Canadian dollar; the second deals with the measures taken by the government to overcome the loss sustained by the mining industry, while the third offers some recommendations concerning the gold mining industry and the free gold market generally.

When this government, in the wisdom of the experts of the Department of Finance, decided to put the Canadian dollar at parity, certain definite things happened. The first, and probably from the long-time point of view the most serious, was the restriction placed upon our exports. We have recently heard at great length the comparison of Canadian costs with costs elsewhere, particularly in the United States, and it has been strongly impressed upon this country and upon this parliament that Canada must export to live. Canadian manufacturing costs are higher than those in the United States, despite the fact that wages are lower in Canada. The selling price of the finished product is higher in Canada. Therefore Canadian sales abroad will have to overcome two very serious handicaps imposed upon them by the economy of the country.

The ten per cent discount on Canadian currency was a help to Canadian producers, and to remove it at this critical time was a blow to all industry. I mention in particular at this time the Canadian lumber industry, and I should like to quote one paragraph from United States News of July 26 with reference to that industry. The article deals with what is called currency tinkering. I quote:

> A hazard is involved in currency tinkering. Widespread upward valuations of currencies may promise a temporary buying advantage in the United States markets, but eventually when foreign business men must sell in United States markets those countries might be left high and dry. Right now, by raising currency values, foreign countries can buy more cheaply and sell more dearly in United States markets; but the time may come when they would like to reverse the situation. Canada can now sell lumber to this country at almost any price, but when the present abnormal demand subsides Canadian timber may cost too much for United States buyers simply because United States dollars cost too much.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the condition of one of our primary industries and I suggest that it is not uncommon in many other primary industries. Certain industries have been able to raise their selling prices in the United States but many of them find it difficult to do so for reasons of our internal economy and for reasons that are basic because of our higher unit costs.

If the pattern of the industrial market is at all similar to the pattern of the previous cycles, we are approaching the end of a boom market. There is a distinct possibility that we may be going into a period of declining markets and production, with the usual dis-location of employment and the troubles that it always brings. I say this because of the study I have recently made of the world markets, and particularly the markets on this continent. The graph shows an unmistakably similar pattern to that of both the 1929 crash and the one subsequent to that, just prior to the war. Therefore I say to the government that it is vitally important that they should not throw away at this time any possibility of strengthening our trading position.

There is one thing more I should like to say on parity of the Canadian dollar with the United States dollar. It is but a dream; it is not in fact in existence. There may be an official quotation of the foreign exchange control board, but in actual fact Canadian funds are selling at anywhere from 3½ per cent to 4½ per cent discount at this hour. That is not in a small way; it is not in the small banks. I wish to quote the middle of the market as quoted to me by the Chase National bank, the National City bank and the Bankers Trust, three of the largest banks certainly in New York, and probably in the entire United States, if not in the world. These are the quotations of the middle market in recent United States dollar terms: August 5, ·9619—that is what they would pay for a Canadian dollar; August 6, ·9637; August 7, ·9662; August 8, ·9650; August 9, ·9656, and August 11, yesterday, the quoting is the other way. Our currency was selling at a discount of over 3½ per cent.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from Chicago the other day which showed that a man whom I knew slightly was able to buy a very large sum of Canadian currency from one of the Canadian banks at over a three per cent discount rate. Therefore parity does not in fact exist, and the government will have to take recognition of it, because from time to time the pressure on the Canadian dollar will be greater and greater owing to the fact that normal trade between the countries is no longer in existence. I mention this particularly because, except in the tourist season, our normal trade with United States, which is largely agricultural, has been considerably curtailed since the period of the war. That has been brought about because we are sending most of our agricultural produce to the countries of Europe and the United Kingdom. Therefore it is reasonable to expect that even after the 3½ per cent discount the Canadian currency will only be—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but I have given him some latitude, thinking that he was about to close his remarks. I should like to remind him that the remarks he is making are not relevant to the bill before the house. If I give this latitude to the hon. member I shall be obliged to do the same for other hon. members. Therefore I would ask him to be kind enough to confine his remarks to the bill under discussion.

Mr. ADAMSON: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am endeavouring to do that. I want to point out why I consider that the taxation proposed by this measure is a severe blow on the mining companies, and that the relief suggested by this government is in fact of little value. I want to show the house, and I hope the country, that the blow suffered not only by mining but by the whole Canadian economy is brought about by the move which the government has taken and that parity is in itself a taxation of Canadian production.

At the beginning of my remarks I said that I was doing this in order to save the time of the house. I could have made this speech on the Foreign Exchange Control Act, but I refrained from doing it because I spoke to the minister about it and he suggested that I make one speech at this time. However, I shall endeavour to obey your ruling.

I have just one more word on this business of parity. Canadian currency is selling at widely separated points in the United States to-day at as much as seventeen and twenty per cent discount. I understand that even the Trans-Canada Air Lines agents are charging as much as six per cent discount. I refer to the agents to whom Trans-Canada Air Lines sends people in New York.

So much for parity; now let us see what this has meant to the rest of the Canadian economy, particularly mining. In Canada we were the first to boost our currency. Several other countries followed suit, Sweden and Brazil being the last. We did that along with Sweden, Brazil and other countries because we wished to buy in the only market where goods were plentiful and at as cheap a rate as possible. In other words we tried to put our buying position high and paid little attention to our selling position; but we shall have to take recognition of that, and very soon.

Now I come to the question of taxation. Putting the currency at par has meant a loss to the Canadian gold producer and the Canadian producer of base metals with a large gold content, of ten per cent of the gross value of his product. In other words he did not lose ten per cent of his profit; he lost far more than that. He lost ten per cent of the gross value, and in some cases that means the entire profit. That should be very clearly understood by this house. It was a percentage of the gross value that was taken away, not the net value. The government has brought in some small measure of relief, and in a moment or two I am going to give figures to show how extremely negligible that relief is, but first I want to speak briefly about the situation in South Africa and Australia.

In South Africa the Union government under the minister of finance, Mr. Hofmeyr, realized the importance of producing every ounce of gold they could. So they arranged a method of differential taxation for low grade ore. In other words, if I can explain it to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house, this is what they do. There is a rate of taxation on the mine; but for the low grade ore the depletion allowance is increased as the grade decreases. In other words the depletion allowance goes up in inverse ratio to the grade of the ore. That means that as your grade goes down, so does your taxation go down, so eventually on ore which is definitely marginal and where the cost of milling and mining is very little less than the gold recovered is worth, the depletion allowance approaches one hundred per cent. I have not seen the most recent figures, but I understand that the rate goes very high, and I have heard that in some cases there is actually a bonus on the production of low-grade ore.

What does this do? It assists a mine with a large body of low grade ore to take out that ore body almost without taxation, and that is a tremendous gain to the economy of any country; for it means that instead of so many thousand tons of rock lying under the ground you have so many hundred ounces of gold. For years the mining industry have pledged with this government and with the Department of Finance to increase the depletion allowance to fifty per cent for both shareholder and mining corporation, but nothing has been done. I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that careful study should be given by this government, if they are sincere in wanting to help the mines, to the South African method of taxation as I have endeavoured to explain it.

In Australia a situation existed similar to that which exists in Canada to-day. A government not particularly helpful to the mines was in power—I think it was during the Lang regime—and a heavy taxation was put on Australian gold mining. This effectively killed all the mines in eastern Australia, that is in New South Wales and Victoria, and those mines have never reopened. They were small producers, but they were very helpful in the development of the country in that agriculture followed the mines into the hinterland of those two states, where now a thriving agricultural economy exists. We have a close parallel to that right here in Quebec, where we have low grade mines just getting by, making profits of a few cents a ton. For 1944 the average profit of all western Quebec gold producers was 62 cents a ton. Those mines will do everything they can to keep in production, but if they are forced to close it will be found impossible to continue agricultural development along that northern Quebec clay belt, because the mines provide the market in that area. If that market is taken away from agriculture it will find itself badly off, because other markets are too far away. So to have the mines close would be a definite hindrance to colonization in that part of Quebec. Just the other day, in connection with a railway bill, we saw the difficulties that exist in connection with colonization and the important part played by the mines.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to what the government's proposals mean to a group of individual mines. Putting the Canadian dollar at parity reduced the gross value of the product of our gold mines by ten per cent. Now let us see what the proposals of the Department of Finance mean to a group of low grade mines; and I have the figures here for twelve low grade mines in Ontario. With the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, I should like to put this table on the record. If I have that permission I need only read the name of the mine, the grade in ounces per ton, the net profit per ton and what the new proposals of the Department of Finance mean per ton to each of these producers

Mr. ABBOTT: Who prepared the table?

Mr. ADAMSON: The Ontario Department of Mines. If I could have the permission of the house I should like to place the entire table on record.

Mr. SPEAKER: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to place the table on the record?

Mr. IRVINE: We do not know what the hon. member is talking about, because we cannot hear him.

Mr. ABBOTT: Did I understand the hon. member to say that the table he proposes to put on record was prepared by the Ontario Department of Mines?

Mr. ADAMSON: The Ontario Mining Association. The table is as follows:

Effect of Depletion Allowance at $2 per oz. and Decrease in Mint Charges from 35 cents to 20 cents per oz. on 12 Ontario Gold Mines whose Net Profits was less than $2 per ton

Mine	Year	Grade oz. per ton	Net Profit per ton $	Depletion at 33⅓ per cent $	Depletion at $2 per oz.	Additional Income due to decrease in Mint charges $	Estimated Net Profits per ton after applying new depletion allowance and decreased Mint charges $	Estimated Increase in Net Profits per ton $

* 33⅓ per cent Depletion allowance will apply instead of $2 per oz.

Of the 38 producing Gold Mines—

17 made Net Profit of over $2 per ton and were unaffected by Depletion allowance change
9 made a Loss
12 Mines listed above made Net Profit of less than $2 per ton.

Now, let us look at the figures for two mines in Quebec, namely Canadian Malartic and East Malartic. The figures in the daily press for Canadian Malartic show the grade at about $3.80 a ton; and therefore on parity Canadian Malartic will lose at the rate of 38 cents per ton. The proposals by the minister have been worked out by the mines to show a magnificent saving of $800 a year in this mine. The 1945 figures for East Malartic show a saving of precisely nothing. We have heard these figures brought into the house and the statement that they give assistance to the Canadian mining economy. The figures I have just read for two provinces show that they mean nothing. In fact, I wondered at the minister, who is a sensible man, reading them into the record. Surely the department must have been putting one over on him on that score.

One more quotation about mining costs. Mr. Drummond-Hay of Winnipeg who, I believe, is the managing director of San Antonio and God's Lake, speaking recently in Winnipeg said that the concessions are of infinitesimal value.

I say this situation is extremely critical for the mining industry, because once a mine closes, particularly a low-grade mine, it does not open again. Once a mine closes—and hundreds of mines have closed across Canada—

Mr. ABBOTT: Hundreds which should never have been opened, perhaps, too.

Mr. ADAMSON: Oh, no.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not referring to producing mines.

Mr. ADAMSON: And there are hundreds of producing mines which have closed. The figures given the house a few weeks ago by the hon. member for York South showed twenty or thirty mines which opened, produced and closed without paying anything to their shareholders. But those mines paid a considerable amount in taxation to the economy of this country, to say nothing about the gold they produced. I believe it was in the neighbourhood of $30 million or $40 million in gold they produced, and yet not one cent was returned to the shareholders.

The government's proposals are negligible. Now we are faced with two things, the first of which is that Canadian currency is selling at a discount to-day in New York. If the government are adamant in maintaining parity —and I do not know whether they can change their minds again—the Canadian gold producers must be given the benefit of the open market buying rate in the principal American banks.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member said he did not know whether the government would change its mind. Is he in favour of putting the Canadian dollar back to a discount?

Mr. ADAMSON: Not at the present time, because you cannot continuously juggle currency.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was wondering about that, because the hon. member implied that the government might change its mind again to help the gold miners.

Mr. ADAMSON: I see no reason for the government's having taken this action, namely, that of putting the dollar at parity. But once it is done, it cannot continuously play around with currency. The government in its wisdom has followed a course which I consider a wrong one. It has taken a step which will seriously affect the entire Canadian economy, an effect which the government cannot make stick. The government cannot maintain Canadian currency at par with the United States dollar. The fact that the buying rate to-day is 3½ per cent discount and is increasing, shows that it cannot do so. Therefore the first thing I ask the government to do to assist the mines is to see to it that they get the benefit of the discount on Canadian currency. At the present time it amounts to 3½ per cent, or over a dollar per ounce of gold.

The second thing I ask the government to do is to increase the depletion allowance, particularly on low-grade mines. What they have done amounts to nothing. I suggest the system which originated in Africa, whereby depletion allowance could be worked out as an inverse ratio with the value of the ore treated.

The next thing—and I have no time to discuss it in detail now—is that the mining companies should be allowed to sell on an established free market for gold in Canada, or do their own marketing of their own bullion in markets elsewhere. I say this because there is no doubt that the market is able to absorb our production. Since 1939, according to the American bureau of metal statistics—and this is the last quotation I want to make —the world production of gold has been 240,019,000 fine ounces. This figure includes estimates of 29,000,000 for Russia and Siberia, and 12,700,000 for Korea and Japan. All other figures are from official sources. Presumably, figures for the seven year period from September 1, 1939 to September 1, 1946 would be comparable in amount. In other words, since the outbreak of war the world has produced $8,400,000,000 worth of gold at $35 per ounce, and at the same time gold holdings of the United States government have been reduced, according to official reports by some $2,500,000,000. It is evident, therefore, that the world ex-United States has absorbed some $11,000,000,000 worth of gold since September 1, 1939. It seems reasonable to suppose that many of the present owners of this metal paid a premium for it in terms of currencies including United States dollars. If they had thought that gold was not worth more than $35 United States dollars per ounce, many of them would have bought dollars instead of the metal. The United States government has made it impossible for their citizens to acquire gold as a means of preserving value in the face of a depreciating dollar, which the rest of the world has recognized by outbidding the United States government for some 300,000,000 ounces.

Now, Mr. Speaker, our maximum production of gold is in the neighbourhood of $200,000,000 a year. Since the war the United States alone have lost more gold than our total production. For anybody to say that we could not market our total gold production is, in view of these figures, nonsense. Therefore I say, if you are serious in seeking to maintain the gold industry in Canada, provide an opportunity for the operating mines to market their bullion how and where they wish, increase the depletion allowance to at least fifty per cent and possibly more on marginal producers, and immediately allow the Canadian producer to obtain the benefit of the discount already in existence on Canadian currency in the United States.

Mr. JOSEPH A. BRADETTE (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry in a way to have to take the time of the house at this stage of the session, but I believe it is my implicit duty to present the situation as I see it of the gold mining industry. I happen to represent a constituency where for the past thirty-five years there has been the greatest development in gold mining, and as this bill deals with and may bring some relief to the industry, I believe it is my duty to say a few words.

I am voicing the sentiments of every one of my constituents when I state that we were not merely satisfied but proud when the government brought the Canadian dollar on a parity with the United States dollar. We produce gold, pulpwood, wood pulp, sulphite and newsprint in northern Ontario. At least ninety per cent of our production goes to the United States, and so we were benefiting when the United States dollar was at a ten per cent premium over the Canadian dollar. But we always thought in terms of the national economy, of what was good for Canada as a whole. We are proud of the fact that the Canadian dollar to-day is the soundest monetary unit in the world, and I say that without fear of contradiction.

But one industry, gold mining was hit when the Canadian dollar was placed on a parity with the United States dollar. This industry was hit an unexpected blow; it was a bolt from the blue. For the last four or five years our gold mining industry has been getting a price of $38.50 an ounce for gold, not $35,00, and we must never lose sight of that fact in discussing this important question. But because of the ten per cent premium on the United States dollar our gold mining industry has been able to build up and expand on that price for gold. They have been developing new mines and putting them into operation. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) so well realized the position of the gold mining industry that when he made his announcement in the House of Commons that the Canadian dollar was on a parity with the United States dollar he singled out the gold mining industry as one that would be hit by that policy. The very night he made his announcement I received telegrams from some of the industrialists of Kapuskasing, Smooth Rock Falls, and Iroquois Falls. They were worried over what it meant to the industry. However, the price for newsprint, lumber and pulpwood is not set by Washington; it is not a standard price, and I told these industrialists that I was positive that the price situation was so resilient that they would get an increased price for their production. A few days later the price of newsprint was raised to $6.50 per ton, and the wartime prices and trade board also raised the price of lumber for export to the United States.

I want to deal with an industry that has played a great role in our Canadian national economy. Under war conditions the gold mining industry is one of the first victims, because immediately there is a shortage of man-power and of the necessary materials for continuing their operations as in peace time. This applied just as forcibly in world war II as in world war I, if not more so. Very soon after the outbreak of war in 1939, and more particularly in 1940, the gold mining industry felt a great shortage of man-power because a large number of the men engaged in the industry enlisted voluntarily in world war II just as they did in world war I, and in a very short time there was also a great shortage of the materials required in the industry. Under those conditions the production of gold decreased to some extent.

In 1941, if I remember right, the Minister of Finance appealed to the gold mining industry for intensive production so as to help our Canadian credit position, more particularly in the United States market. There was an immediate response to that appeal from the gold mining industry. They delved deeply into their ore reserves, so that to-day many of the big producers find their ore reserves greatly depleted—and if there is one thing that causes the management of a mine to worry it is the depletion of their ore reserve. No matter what some members of parliament may think, no one is more concerned in lengthening the life of a mine than the mine owners themselves. It is true that mining is a wasting process, that eventually you are left with a hole in the ground with no more ore or work to be done. At present in Canada there are many abandoned towns which in the past were thriving communities. But that does not mean that there has been waste in the development of these mines. I hold no brief for the mine owners, but I have seen the mines in operation and I know that the mine owners have spent all their energies in producing all the gold they could possibly find.

There was great rejoicing when a few years ago the price of gold was increased to $35 an ounce. The reason for that rejoicing was that it meant that a mine like Hollinger, in the town of Timmins, had its life lengthened by at least thirty years. I want the house to be seized of this fact, that no mine operators and no mine owners that I know of are deliberately wasting the resources and natural assets of their mines.

Having established that point I would like hon. members to realize what the gold mining industry means to our section of the country. I am divulging no secret when I say that only a few days ago the leader of the Social Credit party, after visiting northern Quebec, said that he was astonished to find what the gold mining industry of northern Quebec and northern Ontario meant to those sections of the country and also to the whole of Canada. Around these gold mines have grown up centres of population such as Kirkland Lake, Timmins, Schumacher, South Porcupine and many others, which enjoy public utility services and social services which have been permanently established because the people expect to remain there for a long period of time, in fact all their life. Again I repeat that management and labour are working together in the closest co-operation possible to produce every ton of ore and by that process to extend the life of the mines, and that not a single ton of it is being wasted. I would not fight for one moment for any so-called gold mine in which the grades of ore were so low that it would not be economical to exploit them. Yesterday I was speaking to a young member of parliament from Amos, Quebec. He spoke of a particular mine in that section in which the cost of operations is $40 an ounce, and I told him that he could not expect anyone to fight for such a mine, because after all we cannot afford to bonus mines that are not self-supporting on the basis of the prices that are being received at the present time.

Owing to the increased price we were getting, by reason of the difference between United States and Canadian currency, we have permitted the construction and operation of a large number of low-grade mines, operating on the basis of a price of $38.50 an ounce, and these mines were barely existing, making very little profit. Those are the mines now in operation which we want to see maintained. We do not want to see hundreds if not thousands of men who are at present gainfully employed thrown out of employment.

There is more involved in gold mining than the bare extraction of the gold. In the clay belt of northern Ontario gold mining has made a considerable difference to the Canadian economy from the point of view of agriculture. Without gold mining we would not have gone ahead to the extent that we have done in colonization and agriculture, and it might be a revelation to members of parliament to learn that in the last thirty-two years in northern Ontario, in that part of the country I represent, there has been a greater advance and a greater influx of new population engaging in agricultural activities than in any other section of Canada, including the west. Not only do these conditions give employment to farmers in providing them with a local market for all their production, but there has also been a remarkable development in our forest industries as well. These factors alone will cause everyone to realize how necessary it is to maintain at capacity the gold mining industry of Canada. The industry means so much to our national economy. In my opinion the situation that has been created by the parity of the Canadian dollar is in one way a good thing, because it will make members of parliament more conscious of our gold mining industry and of some of its problems.

I remember in 1934 when the prime minister of that day, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, in his budget speech, made the announcement of the bullion taxation on gold, and I was the only member to rise immediately and assure him that, knowing the situation as I did, it would be impossible to apply that tax. But I got little applause at the time. I have no wish to be critical, but I suggest that there are very few members of parliament who know the exact situation and fully realize what it means to our national life to have a prosperous gold mining industry.

I would not, of course, say that the proposals brought forward by the government are entirely satisfactory.

Mr. ADAMSON: The same officials were in the Department of Finance then as now, and I am afraid they are responsible for both these bad things.

Mr. BRADETTE: Even if they are, I must say to the hon. member—

Mr. ADAMSON: I fought against the bullion tax too.

Mr. BRADETTE: I am sure that those same gentlemen, knowing the situation as well as they do, were the first to realize that a mistake had been made. We must realize that we are dealing with people who are completely open-minded. I for one do not believe that an official of the government, with the wide experience that these men have had and the admirable work they have done since the beginning of the war—work that has been a revelation to the entire world—would deliberately do anything that would hamper the gold mining industry, or for that matter any other industry.

There is another important thing about gold mining which I would draw to the attention of the house. I would point out, by the way, how important it is that the men at the head of the industry have been so practical. I deplore some of the criticism that has appeared in the press, and I have in mind one newspaper in particular. I will not mention its name, but I will say that most of its arguments are far-fetched, and it goes too far. I say that because gold mining, I believe, has a good case, and for that reason we do not need to overdo it in its presentation. I know that the big mining men will not be severely critical but will be constructive in this instance as they have been in the past. I should like to quote one or two statements that have appeared in the press, and I do so to corroborate what I have been saying. Let me first quote something that was said in Winnipeg, as taken from the Ottawa Journal:

> Winnipeg, July 29—(CP). The proposed dominion relief to gold mines to compensate for the loss suffered when Canadian dollars were brought to parity with the United States has been approved by mining men and Manitoba mines department officials, but it is not enough.

[Mr. Bradette.]

This is fair criticism, and at the same time it is constructive. It shows a realization that the government has been taking a step in the right direction. I quote again:

> J. P. de Wet, secretary of the Manitoba chamber of mines, said any relief would be welcome but present relief does not come up to expectations. Provincial director of mines Doctor G. M. Furnival said although no Manitoba mine was in danger of having to shut down due to exchange loss, the relief would encourage some prospective mining operations.

This again is constructive. May I now quote one paragraph from an article that appeared in Saturday Night of August 10. This is just a few lines to give hon. members an idea of the situation:

> One of the much talked of recessions in the recent mining market which suffered devastating losses following the placing of the Canadian dollar on par with the U.S. dollar, was that in the shares of Giant Yellowknife Gold Mines. It was a market in which for weeks a terrific beating was taken, particularly in the shares of prospects, the newer mines, or those where production could be visualized and Giant—one of Canada's potentially big gold mines—declined close to the $5 mark, less than half of the high attained by the shares in 1945.

When the announcement was made in the house by the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) a few days ago, the Globe and Mail made a statement that suggests that there must have been a leak somewhere, because mining stocks sky-rocketed. I do not know what figure they received, but the first information I had was that there was a bonus of $2 an ounce on all our gold production. I was wrong on that point. I have no sympathy with the stock market, because if inquiry is made under certain conditions, when it becomes bearish, it is evident that somebody is holding the bag for the speculators, and I have no sympathy with speculators. My sympathy is for the producers, the promoters, the prospectors and those who do the actual work, but I have none for those who try to make money without taking any of the risks. I quote again:

> The price of the shares at time of writing had improved and this was partly due to the federal government's new ruling authorizing exemption from taxation for new mines for a three-year period.

There is a mine that is developing low-grade ore, and these people are satisfied that the government has tried to help them.

I wish now to say a few words about a world market for gold. Personally I do not believe in it, because under present conditions I do not think it is practical. I will go further than that. If the mining industry as a body will come to the federal government and say, "We are willing to take all the risks of selling in the open market. We are paid by the federal treasury at the standard price set by Washington, but to-day we believe there are other markets where we can get more for our gold, and we want to take the risks involved in that market", then I suggest that the government might act. But unless those engaged in the industry are organized and willing and ready to do this, I do not support that principle.

We talk about prices being paid by Mexico. I wish to tell hon. members that the price which the producer would get from Mexico would be less than $35 an ounce. I know whereof I speak. The same thing applies to Argentina. There again, although the price seems to be a big one from here, when you study the situation and get the proper information you will realize that the producer would get less than $34 for an ounce for gold.

We talk about outside markets like India or Egypt, which are in the sterling area. Should our producers take a chance of disturbing their markets by entering the sterling area? I just leave these thoughts for the consideration of hon. members. I do not know of any big producers who are in favour of that. I did not hear Mr. Bickell or Mr. Longmoire or the men who are well versed in gold mining and in the marketing of gold come out very strongly for an open market for our production. If they were asking for a guarantee, or rather governmental protection, to have access to the world market, then its effect would be destroyed by this demand. At the moment there are guarantees of a standard price for gold on which we can implicitly rely, and that is an important factor in any kind of an industry and in any kind of a mine. Again I leave that to the consideration of the House of Commons.

So far as I am personally concerned I am not convinced that an open market for our gold would be the proper thing to have. Are we going to try to bootleg or black-market one of the things which has set the monetary standard of the world? Are we to take the risk with Washington, for instance, after finding out that we were able to improve our production? The attitude of Washington has been a stabilizing factor for the past four or five years, in fact for a long period of time; and at times we have got a premium of $3.50 an ounce on the gold produced. Are we going to throw that overboard, practically destroy that security of marketing, and try out what appears green from a distance but on close examination proves to be nothing but shallows so far as our production is concerned?

I shall now say a word about depletion allowance. A lot could be said on this subject, but I know that hon. members have read the fine report and the recommendations made by the senate committee on natural resources. Depletion allowance has been the bone of contention for a number of years, and even if it were increased to fifty per cent it would not be the solution of all these problems. But no matter what may be said, the offer of the government to allow the option of accepting as depletion either 33⅓ per cent of net profits or $2 per ounce of gold produced is a step in the right direction, and it is going to help a lot of low grade ore mines. However, I wish to make a special request of the government. I do not believe that $2 an ounce as an option is sufficient. I believe that the amount should be $2.50 at least. In placing the amount at $2.50 you are not going to help the big producers; generally speaking they look after themselves. They have shown in the past that they can do it, and they are showing it at the present time. It is the marginal producer, the one on the borderline, that I am worrying about—the one I mentioned a few moments ago. These mines exist to a great extent in northern Ontario and more particularly in northern Quebec.

I repeat that the option of $2 an ounce is helping at the present time, regardless of what the previous speaker may have said. I could quote all kinds of statistics to corroborate my statement, but I make this sincere appeal to the treasury and to the Minister of Finance. The amount should be $2.50 instead of $2. I speak with experience, and I believe that my word should be listened to. I am speaking not in the name of the gold mining industry only; they do not want self-pity. They have always come back on their feet and they will do it in the present crisis; at all times they showed a great deal of self reliance. But this is almost a crisis for them. Let us place ourselves in the position of the gold mining industry so far as parity of the Canadian dollar is concerned, and we shall see the reasons for their uneasiness and why they are not feeling so happy, why they are afraid that the expansion which they have in mind during the rehabilitation and post-war era will be stultified.

I do not wish to enlarge on this subject because I realize the impatience of the house after so many months of arduous work; however, I am speaking with all the sincerity I possess. I should be the last one to fight for any organization which did not deserve it, but I have seen with my own eyes and I know what it means, not only regionally but also nationally, to maintain in its integrity the gold mining institutions of our country. It was a marvellous thing for me during the depression years when everyone of us suffered so grievously. There is not a member of parliament, or a Canadian worthy of the name, who did not try to help during those five or six horrible years when we had so many people come to us with their tale of woe. Even in the agricultural centres there were depressions. But when you went to the gold mining centres you found the people fully employed. People came there from every section of Canada. To the credit of the gold mining industry of this country there was no decrease in wages, although there was an oversaturated labour supply and thousands of men who wanted to work in the mines. But more than that, during those years the companies found it possible to improve the working conditions of their workers and to some extent to increase their wages.

It is my good privilege to know a number of mine owners, and I have seen them in action. There is one thing I have against the mine management and the mine owners, namely, that they have not told their fine records, achievements and story to the Canadian people. For instance, they have not told what they have done for the treatment and the cure of silicosis. Owing to the work carried on by the mine owners, in a few short years silicosis will be non-existent in this country. The mine owners have improved the working conditions, and have done all they possibly could for the workers generally. There is not a mine manager or a superintendent in my section of the country that a man when he leaves his shift or the level on which he works could not go and speak to. I am not saying that everything has been perfect but I am asking that due consideration be given to an industry which means so much to all walks of life—to agriculture, to manufacturers, to our labourers and also to our national economy. They have always played the game. They do not ask anything that is unfair or unpracticable. I know that the department is fully seized of the situation. The remedies which have been brought forward will help, and no doubt something more can and will be done. If that help is given I can assure the house that the districts for whom I speak and the fine population that is involved will highly appreciate it, as will every other section of our country.

Mr. T. J. BENTLEY (Swift Current): Speaking for this group at this particular time, on second reading of the bill, I shall be just as brief as possible. We do not agree with the principle of this bill. Of course the minister did not expect us to agree with it, and he knows the sections with which we disagree. I hope that he can understand some of the provisions with which we disagree. I do not think there is a lawyer in this chamber to-day who can interpret what the government means by some of them.

The minister told me at one time that I had no legal training. I have none, but I am sure I could put down what I meant in better words than are contained in the bill, even if I wanted to cover up my meaning. They have successfully covered up everything that they intended to mean. They have made it possible to interpret this bill in any way they wish. In my opinion this bill is for no other purpose than to liquidate and prevent the development of this working class organization, the cooperative movement, the best free enterprise organization in Canada to-day. I have set out emphatically our opinions and what we think of this bill. I do not suppose there is the slightest hope of convincing the acting minister, the minister himself or their sharp advisers in the department about these things, but I want to try to convince the house, and I am sorry that the two hon. members who gave the particular illustration that I am going to use are not in their places.

The hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) is over in the industrial relations committee; the hon. member for Halifax was in the chamber but went out. I am going to use the illustration given by the hon. member for Calgary West to indicate what we mean when we say there is no profit in a cooperative enterprise.

The illustration given by the hon. gentleman was that of a stranger driving along a road, who decides he needs some supplies. He comes to a little settlement on the road, and stops. There is a store over here belonging, we will say, to Mr. A, and a store on the other side of the road belonging to the local cooperative association. He looks at both stores. They appear exactly the same; to the stranger there is no apparent difference. Both sell the same goods, and both have the same window display. But bear this in mind: those stores were not put there for the benefit of that stranger. They were put there by Mr. A and the cooperative association primarily to serve the people of that community. The stranger travelling over the road is only a casual customer, who may never come that way again, while those stores were put there to give service to the community.

When Mr. A runs his store, everything he has left over and above the cost is profit for his pocket, and he uses that profit for his living. That is quite legitimate; there is nothing wrong with it.

Mr. ABBOTT: Except the taxes he has to pay.

Mr. BENTLEY: All right; I shall get to that. He is an individual; so am I as a member of the cooperative. Do not forget that members of cooperative associations as individuals will pay taxes with just as good or bad grace as anyone else, according to their nature. I do not like paying my taxes. I pay them with a kind of brassy smile, as when I lose at poker, but I pay them.

Mr. ABBOTT: Poker? You mean cribbage.

Mr. BENTLEY: Right. Now I want to point out that this individual, Mr. A, to supply his own household, buys his groceries or clothing or hardware from his store, but he does not put money in the till for that. Neither do his clerks, if he has any. They take what stuff they buy at the wholesale price, as a general practice, or with a very little added to cover the cost of moving it over the counter, but without paying any profit. So Mr. A makes no profit on Mr. A's personal business. Get that point, please. Over on the other side of the road is the store owned by the cooperative association of which I am a member. A hundred other people in that community, farmers and workers of one kind or another, are my partners. We felt we could save ourselves some money; our incomes were not large and we wanted to make them go as far as possible in the purchase of supplies. So we decided that while no one of us could build a store of his own, all of us together could build one which would belong to all of us, and that we did. To that extent the one hundred partners in this cooperative association became one entity as far as the ownership of the store was concerned. When we go in to buy our stuff we are in exactly the same position as Mr. A. We can make no profit on our own business.

I want to make that point clear, because we are distinctly dissatisfied with this bill on that account. No distinction is made in the bill between a cooperative association and a private concern. There is no place in the bill under which a cooperative association can feel safe in going ahead with the particular kind of enterprise or industry in which it is engaged. The whole thing is an endeavour to put the cooperative association in exactly the same position as everybody else. Do not forget the illustration. No man can make profit from his own purchases in his own place of business, whether he be a gold miner —and we heard a good deal of talk about gold this morning—or a storekeeper or an elevator operator or anything else. He cannot make money supplying himself from his own stocks. He makes his profit when he supplies other people who pay him more than he has had to pay for the goods or services he supplies. That is his income. It is a legitimate income, and I am not complaining about it. I am pointing out that as far as we in a cooperative are concerned, we make no profit for ourselves.

When I rose I said I would not take any more of the time of the house than was necessary. We are not going to let this bill pass in committee without questioning a number of sections, but as far as this particular stage is concerned all I have tried to make clear is that we do not agree with this legislation.

Mr. ALAN COCKERAM (York South): Speaking on the foreign exchange bill on Friday last the acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) had this to say, at page 4530 of Hansard:

> If we were part of the United States, of course we would not be faced with all these difficulties; we would all have the same currency. But on balance we are a debtor nation, and to a very considerable extent. If we are to retain our national integrity and the integrity of our dollar, we have to adopt appropriate measures to see that our exchange position is protected.

I can think of nothing that will protect our exchange position and protect the Canadian economy more than the encouragement of the gold mining industry of this country. During the last few days the minister may have noticed in the press that in spite of the urgency of the situation and the desire for gold on the part of the government, there has been a decrease in the production, which decrease is rapidly becoming more pronounced because of high costs of production. Since 1910, Canada has developed perhaps the most efficient mining industry in the world, with the result that much ore which ordinarily would be waste rock has become of economic value and can be treated at a profit, even though the profit be small. If this industry is to continue to play a part in the economic life of the country, the government must give some encouragement to keep Canadian gold mines in production. The acting minister and his departmental officials must know that once it is necessary to close a mine down because of the grade of the ore or because conditions do not warrant carrying on, the cost of reopening that mine is so great that few mines ever reopen.

During the depression the mining industry, as I have stated before in this house, was the one industry able to carry the country through. Again in the early days of the war, when the government wanted United States exchange rather than to go on lend-lease, they appealed to the mining companies to increase production, which the mining companies were only too glad to do in spite of the fact that they had to pay much heavier taxes. During the last two years there has been intense activity in this country in connection with gold mining. There has been a great deal of diamond drilling, and many new prospects have been lined up for development in the days to come. A great many of these prospects are in the province of Quebec and in the northern part of Ontario. I am afraid the policy which has been announced by the minister is going to have the result that many of these prospects, because of their location, and the grade of their ore, will not be brought into production—not because the mining people have no faith in their industry, but because the expense of bringing a mine into production is so great that there must be some assurance there will be a return of the capital so invested.

The hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson) pointed out that since the government placed our money on a parity with the United States dollar there has been fluctuation in exchange of about four per cent. It seems to me the minister and his officials are not giving the gold producers even the world price for the gold they produce. They say to the mining industry: We will be very generous with you and give you back this twenty cents an ounce which we have been overcharging you in refining charges for the last few years, but we will refrain from giving you the world price for your product.

I suggest the minister should do what his department did before the war. At that time when a mine sent its bullion to the mint it received the mean of exchange for the day on which the bullion was received at the mint, the day before and the day after. This would result in a mine receiving at least a portion of the $3.50 which was taken away from it when the government decided to place our money on a parity with that of the United States. If departmental officials have checked thoroughly into the relief they are giving, by way of either the 33⅓ per cent depletion or the $2 an ounce, they will have realized that very few mines in Canada benefit to any extent.

I would make particular reference to one mine with which I am connected, where we received back $400 a month or about $5,000 a year on account of the reduction in handling charges. The production of the mine is approximately 40,000 ounces of gold a year. This means that $140,000 is taken away from the mine at $3.50 per ounce and $5,000 is returned by way of mint charges.

I suggest to the minister that the manner in which he explained this question of relief to the people of Canada gave the impression that the government was giving relief to extent of $2 an ounce on gold produced. The feeling has got around that the mines are being penalized only to the extent of $1.50 an ounce, whereas actually the mines are being penalized to the extent of the whole of the $3 50.

I suggest to the minister that in a near marginal mine, where costs equalled $35 per ounce prior to the reduction of $3.50 per ounce of gold, the operations now become marginal, the net profit is nil, and as a result no depletion of any kind applies. Hence the $2 an ounce alternative depletion is an empty gesture. As the hon. member for York West pointed out, in some cases it amounts only to one cent per ton of ore passing through the mill. I think it would be a tragic thing for this country, and I am sure the minister and his officials agree with me, if the industry which has meant so much to Canada in the past, and which will mean just as much in the future, is allowed to deteriorate to the point where many mines have to close up. Because as sure as we sit in this House of Commons to-day, the cycle of trade and commerce moves. Days of depression will, unfortunately arise; and when those days come the government of Canada once again will want every ounce of gold produced that the industry can possibly produce.

I believe the government should allow the base metal mines to market all their products at the world price. I see no reason why Canadian mines should be penalized as they are now. I would point out that in the early days of the war, Canadian metal mines made contracts with the British and Canadian governments to sell their total production at the price level which then existed. Those contracts the mines faithfully carried out, with the result that the British and Canadian governments saved vast sums of money at the expense of the metal mines of Canada. These prices were maintained in spite of the fact that there were tremendous increases in costs. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette) say that the mining industry was determined to carry on, because I am positive that that is a fact. But in spite of that determination I feel sure there will be many casualties along the road, and that many mines will have to close down if the present intention of the government is carired through.

That is not the only factor. I feel that many operations will never come into existence. I know of two properties where decisions have been made to hold the development over for another year. One has to remember that the mining industry employs many men behind the lines to keep the mines in operation. If the minister and his officials cannot see their way clear to remedy this situation to-day, then I fear that many men employed in industry throughout Canada will be put out of employment.

I appeal to the acting minister and his officials to do something forthwith to remedy this situation. Only the other day I was speaking to the president of some low-grade mines in Quebec, and he told me that he was going to attempt to carry on, but just how long he could do so under existing circumstances he did not know, because his profit, which stood around forty cents before the government decided on parity, had disappeared. Only one of his mines makes any profit to-day.

I appeal to the minister to study this whole question, and to give relief. I suggest he do what has been requested by mining associations throughout Canada—give back to the mines that fifty per cent depletion allowance, both to the operating companies and to the shareholders.

The dominion government takes tremendous taxation from the mines, and puts nothing into them. In one district of which I have knowledge, the Pickle Crow area, the dominion government has taken almost $4 million in taxes and has put nothing into the area, despite the fact that requests have been made for assistance in transportation and in other ways.

I suggest that the acting minister or his officials should have a talk with Mr. Justice Davis, the High Commissioner for Australia. In Australia they believe that gold mines should be encouraged one hundred per cent. If my information is correct, they do not tax them, although I am not making that suggestion here. I do suggest however that some assistance be given.

I should like to say something about the apparent leak to which reference was made by the hon. member for Cochrane. If one studies the graphs of the Toronto stock exchange and the Montreal stock exchange for five days prior to the minister's announcement, he will notice that on the Monday prior to the minister's statement, selling started and continued during the whole week. On the afternoon prior to the announcement, which was made at eight o'clock at night, an avalanche of selling came in. I suggest that there must have been some leak in the information. The acting minister should make an investigation to see if such was the case, and if so, disciplinary action should be taken. It would be taken anywhere else.

Mr. G. H. CASTLEDEN (Yorkton): Speaking in opposition to this bill, because of the fact that it taxes cooperatives, removing, by the repeal of section 4(p), the protection previously enjoyed by cooperatives across Canada, I want to say first that I think this is a distinct departure from Liberal policy. Ever since 1930 cooperative organizations have enjoyed that protection. The legislation which provided it was placed there, I believe, because the government at that time recognized that true cooperatives are not profit making institutions; and by subjecting them to taxation the government is attacking the basic principles upon which cooperatives are built, and the Liberal party is ranging itself alongside those who have found that their privileged position, their rights to exploit the people, are being attacked by the growth of the cooperative movement in this country.

In 1930 the cooperative movement had not become a very serious menace to monopolistic organizations. To-day, I think, cooperatives stand on the threshold of taking their proper place in the economy of the country. Wherever capitalism operates and controls an economy, big business comes to the fore and restricts supply, with the natural consequence that prices go up, profits increase, and the people who cannot afford to purchase have to go without. This is particularly true when the commodity they control is an absolute necessity, such as food, clothing, housing, medicine, health supplies, and, in the case of the farmer, machinery and oil and the other things he requires with which to make his living. Those who support the present system say, "Oh, competition will take care of that", but if you make a study of the situation you will find that the last thing that big business wants or will tolerate is competition. If a little fellow starts in business, big business will soon cut his throat, and any means that they can use will certainly go. The result has been that in self-protection the people have banded themselves into organizations which can carry on their business not to make profit for themselves but to supply their members with the services they require, about the only resource left to the common man to-day to protect himself against that exploitation is—

Mr. JACKMAN: Politics.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: —to get busy and form himself into cooperatives. The hon. member can talk about his gold; he is very well versed in that, I think, but let him leave this to me and make his speech about gold afterwards. My life has been spent out on the western prairies. Throughout the years I have seen the farmer bring his produce into the market to sell it. At one time he used to be able to sell his cattle and hogs privately to butchers, but now he sells them to the packers. At one time, too, he brought his loads of grain to the local elevators where he had the advantage of a certain amount of competition. But gradually the control of these elevators got into the hands of fewer and fewer companies, until finally there was only one market in which the farmer could sell his produce. The big boys got control, and could charge the farmer anything they liked for handling his grain. In those days, as I well remember, the farmer might come to town and go from one elevator to the other, only to find that they were all together on the price, and he had to take whatever price they told him. Their costs of taking in grain and loading it they kept to themselves, but they charged six cents or eight cents a bushel, or whatever they wanted to charge. The farmer found it impossible to break into that market alone, and at last a few of them said, "How about a bunch of us getting together and building a loading platform at the side of the railroad?" You remember the fight these people had years ago to get the right to build loading platforms where they could load their own grain on their own cars—a course to which they were forced because the costs of handling were so tremendously high. Gradually out of these activities there grew the grain growers' organization and the wheat pools. To-day the farmers own their own elevators; they can set their own handling charges; they own their own output; they can sell their grain. Handling charges have gone down, and dockage can be better controlled. They have some say about the price; and the pool has gradually attained to a position where, as far as Saskatchewan is concerned, it handles fifty per cent of the grain grown in the province. To-day we see a fight between these cooperative organizations and the grain exchange monopolies which are opposed to the growth of these people's movements. But because of the growth of the pools the farmer has received a larger income, he has some control of his own economic destiny, he has acquired a certain measure of freedom, and the people resent very seriously anything which would curtail or destroy their opportunities to fight for their rights in a democratic way.

Some years ago I visited parts of Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, and talked with the lobster fishermen. They had had much the same experience. When they brought in their lobsters for sale they were told, "This is the price you are going to get." Gradually the lobster fishermen got together, subscribed a little capital, and agreed to sell and handle their own products, with the result that the price return to them increased three or four hundred per cent. That is the story of cooperation: where the people themselves have taken hold they have been able to improve their means of livelihood and raise their standards of living. In my own province the farmers built a big cooperative refinery because they objected to the prices the big boys were charging for oil. Now we see a two million dollar concern owned by the farmers and engaged in oil refining, and the price at which they are able to produce and sell to their customers and to themselves is a revelation to those who remember what they had to pay for their tractor gasoline in the days before the operation of that organization. More recently we have seen an effort made by the people to establish a factory wherein they can produce their own farm machinery and reveal the actual cost of production, since the selling price of this machinery seemed to bear no relation to the cost price, the costs of repairs and handling were exorbitant, competition was wiped out, and there was nothing they could do about it. Exactly the same principle operates when men have nothing to sell but the sweat of their brow. They cannot go individually and talk to the boss; they cannot sell to him, so they band together and form a union. What the cooperative is to the farmer the trade union is to the worker and the labouring man: it is a grouping together of the people to protect themselves and put up a fight for their rights as citizens to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.

There are those who try to drive a wedge between labour and the farmer and who blame labour for everything that happens. But actually the people who produce the food and the people who produce the goods, the real wealth of the country, are in principle the same. It is interesting to note that the people who fight the cooperatives are the same people who fight and oppose the trade unions, democratically operated and democratically controlled. The unions and the cooperatives give men an opportunity to have some say in the running of their own affairs. They may make mistakes. That is quite natural, because they are only human. Nevertheless they represent the effort of the common people to advance themselves and overcome obstacles that appear almost insurmountable. After years of toil they have built up these organizations, and now the government says to the cooperatives: You are to declare three per cent of your capital investment on which you are liable for taxation. It is on that principle that we oppose the whole bill, because of what it contains with regard to the cooperatives, and we are opposed to it all the way through.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there was a point made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Castleden) on which I should like to say a few words. The suggestion was made that the Liberal party is aligning itself on the side of those who are in favour of big business, capitalism and so on, as opposed to the interests of the great masses of the people, and particularly the farmer. This bald statement was followed by the suggestion that some body formed the cooperatives without indicating in any way whatsoever just who was responsible for the formation of the cooperatives which have been spoken of during the last few moments.

There is some advantage in being young. Some of us realize that. But when one who is much younger speaks from memory perhaps he may be excused for his memory not being quite long enough. It is true that we have the largest cooperatives in the dominion operating in the province of Saskatchewan and handling more than fifty per cent of the grain produced in that province. But when my hon. friend gets up and tries to give credit to anyone other than the Liberal party for the establishment and development of the cooperatives, he is assuming something which history does not bear out.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GARDINER: You have made your speech. Let me make mine. It is nearly one o'clock.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did not imply anything about the Liberal party. It was the people themselves that built up these cooperatives.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no point of privilege in that. I will indicate who was responsible for the development.

Back in 1906 the first cooperative branch of any department of government in Canada, so far as I am aware, was established in Saskatchewan, and one has only to look at the record to know which government was in power at that time. The minister who established that branch to deal with cooperatives in the Department of Agriculture in the province of Saskatchewan afterwards became minister of agriculture in the federal government, but while he was minister of agriculture in Saskatchewan he appointed Mr. Booth as the head of the cooperative organization in Saskatchewan. Mr. Booth was afterwards taken to Washington by the United States government to take part in the development of cooperatives there. Then when Mr. Motherwell became minister of agriculture at Ottawa he brought Mr. Booth back and placed him at the head of the agricultural economics division of the Department of Agriculture for the dominion to deal with cooperatives.

Back in the early days there were other advocates of state socialism besides those who now call themselves the C.C.F. party. The grain growers of Saskatchewan and Manitoba in 1908 advocated government ownership of elevators. The Conservative party in the province of Manitoba advocated government ownership of elevators. The Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan said that both the Conservative party and the farm organizations were wrong. They said that the proper way to meet the situation described by the member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden), presented by the big organization of elevator companies, was for the farmers themselves to organize their own cooperatives. That question was battled out on the floor of the grain growers' association as far back as 1908, 1909 and 1910, and in 1911 the Saskatchewan legislature passed an act establishing cooperative elevators. That was done by a Liberal government in Saskatchewan. It was not the farmers who advocated establishment of the cooperatives in Saskatchewan. It was the Liberal party, in battle with the farm organization.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Why do you try to kill them now?

Mr. GARDINER: My hon. friend says, why do we try to kill them? We are not trying to kill them. The Liberal party in the province of Saskatchewan at that time established those cooperatives. Those cooperatives were afterwards turned into what to-day is known as the pool elevator company. I myself was premier of Saskatchewan at the time this took place, and as my hon. friend knows, I went out into the province at the time and supported the organization of the pool. I not only did that, but opposed those previously connected with the old organization selling the shares of the farmers to their own advantage. As a result of that I met with considerable opposition from some of those who had been previously in that organization. All that is a matter of history.

In Saskatchewan to-day we have great cooperatives, not because anyone else took the initiative but because the Liberal party of that day in Saskatchewan took the initiative and established the cooperatives there.

Now I come to the question of taxation. My hon. friend has said there was something done back in 1930. Who was here in 1930 when that was done?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Mr. Dunning.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and something was also done in the late thirties. Who was here at that time? Again Mr. Dunning. Mr. Dunning was a Liberal. He was a past premier of Saskatchewan, in which these cooperatives had been established. He was the first manager of the Cooperative Elevator company in Saskatchewan. The whole history of cooperatives is written around Liberalism and members of the Liberal party.

The suggestion is made that there is something wrong with the present legislation. That goes back to the fact that a commission was established to inquire into the cooperatives, and one of the most important members of that commission was the deputy minister who is in charge of cooperatives in Saskatchewan to-day under the C.C.F. government there. The matters complained of by some members of the house were unanimously recommended by that commission. On some of the points raised here there was a unanimous report by the commission, which included the support of the gentleman who is deputy minister in charge of cooperatives in Saskatchewan now, and who I admit was trained under the Liberals during the time they were in power in Saskatchewan. But he was still retained by the C.C.F. government as one of the best informed and most active promoters of cooperatives in the Dominion of Canada. On that commission he recommended some of the very things that are being opposed by the members of the C.C.F. here to-day. The recommendations of that commission were taken largely as they were presented to the government, and presented to the house. But the house is not being asked to accept them holus-bolus as presented. Changes have been made as a result of the discussions that have taken place here and throughout the country.

All I wish to say now is that the whole record indicates that the real founders of the cooperative movement in the Dominion of Canada were the members of the Liberal party. Their policies have been behind the cooperative movement; they are still behind it, and when this legislation gets through it will have the support of the very people who my friends of the C.C.F. party are trying to lead us to believe are opposed to it in the province of Saskatchewan.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. WILLIAM IRVINE (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I recognize we are all anxious to further the business of the house and bring the session to an end as speedily as possible; nevertheless I feel it is important for me to follow up the remarks of the member for Swift Current (Mr. Bentley) and the member for Yorkton (Mr. Castleden) in their protests against the provisions of the bill now before parliament for the taxation of cooperatives.

I do not believe that the government can feel happy about the sections of the bill providing for taxation of cooperatives, but however much we may censure it for having brought this legislation in, I want to express gratitude for the modifications of the original intentions as they were expressed in the budget resolutions. Still, these modifications are not enough. The fact is that cooperatives are still being taxed.

Just before the house rose, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) endeavoured to persuade parliament that the cooperative movement in Canada had been built by the Liberal party. I do not feel like arguing that point at present, because there are other things more important to talk about, but I would say that perhaps no movement in the history of this country has been so free from any source of political partisanship as the cooperative movement. The cooperative movement, in Canada as in other countries, was born out of the economic necessity of the common people. It was an effort to supplement their meagre incomes or at least to extend them so that they could buy more goods. That was the primary moving force of the cooperative movement, and if the Liberal party can claim any credit for the building of the cooperatives in Canada it must be because that economic need which forced the common people to work together for ameliorative action was more intense under the Liberal government than under any other. If that is the reasoning of the Minister of Agriculture, then of course there is no argument about it; we will allow him to go off with the prize in that connection. But if the Liberal party is the father of the cooperative movement, it is hard for us to understand why it should now wish to kill the child which so far is has nurtured. This legislation, harmless as it may appear to some, and almost insignificant in its understandable declaration, definitely points in the direction of the destruction of the cooperative movement.

I wish to register my objections to the sections of this bill which provide for the taxation of cooperatives, and I shall mention each particular feature and make a brief comment upon it.

I object to this measure in the first place because it does not define a cooperative, and, failing to define a cooperative, the legislation proceeds to twist the cooperative movement into the distinctive features of a capitalist and profit-seeking movement in order that it may be taxable. That is the actual situation as I see it; for the bill under discussion provides for the taxation of income and profits; since there are no profits in a cooperative it cannot be taxed, and if "cooperative" had been properly defined, that definition would have brought the cooperatives outside the bounds of the taxation scheme of the budget. This being the situation, no attempt is made to define cooperatives at all, but an attempt is made to compel cooperatives to adopt certain definite characteristics of a private profit-making institution in order to bring the movement within the ambit of the taxation scheme. That is the first thing I object to.

The second objection is that the twelve months within which all patronage devidends which have not been paid out to the customers will become taxable is not a great improvement on six months; for it is obvious that any cooperative might very well desire to have much longer use of its unpaid patronage dividends than that, and the necessity might be so great, in the development of the movement and even for the protection of the institution itself, that the use of such patronage dividends might be imperative. But if this legislation passes it will have to be paid out within the twelve months or else become taxable, and that is equivalent of course to taxing the capital of the organization and not income at all.

All the tax which may be imposed under this measure is in my view a tax on capital, because all the so-called income of cooperatives which may be taxable is composed of patronage dividends which in the first place have come out of the pockets of the people in whose name those patronage dividends stand and are therefore not taxable in the real sense of the word. But if they are left in and used in the operations of the business they become capital, and if they are left in for over twelve months they become taxable. Therefore this is taxation of capital and not taxation of profits of any cooperative.

I object to the measure also because, while it provides that new cooperatives shall not be taxed for three years, it makes no provision for cooperatives which may have been organized six months ago, one year ago, eighteen months ago or two years ago. They will be immediately taxable when this bill becomes law; therefore they do not get the three years, and the taxation of such small cooperatives might be crushing to them at this stage of their development.

I object to the retaining or the compulsion to retain an amount equal to three per cent of the working capital. This is the basis of the taxation scheme. This is the principle by which cooperatives are compelled to assume the characteristics of an ordinary private enterprise seeking profit as an objective. This is the means by which cooperatives are being forced to assume the characteristics of a capitalist institution in order that the government may be justified in imposing taxes upon them. These are the main points which I and my associates object to in this legislation.

I should like to say that I appreciate the fact that the government has been under tremendous pressure from the private interests of the country which feel that they cannot do business as economically and give the same service to the public as the cooperatives. They are not prepared to meet the competition of cooperatives. They feel that if cooperation keeps on developing and becomes federated to carry on the business of the people on a non-profit basis, ultimately it will be a decided challenge to some of the greatest industries or the greatest businesses of Canada. That is a possibility. The private interests have seen that possibility, and perhaps never before has there been so extensive and expensive campaigning to influence the government and parliament to interfere with the development of cooperatives and to lay hands upon it in such a way as to retard its growth. I have never seen such a campaign in my memory.

I understand that the government has been under great pressure, and as I said at the beginning, I feel that the government is not happy about the legislation. It has tried to tax cooperatives without taxing them; it has tried to please the other side by imposing taxation on cooperatives, and therefore there is a dilemma. In the last analysis it has turned out that the government apparently could not draw all the sections without some teeth in them, and there are teeth in them. Such teeth as are there will tend to bite off the head of the cooperatives. If it is not enough this year, they will add a little more next year, and the year following a little more still, until eventually they will limit the operation of the cooperatives and ultimately destroy the movement.

Therefore I would appeal first of all to the hon. gentleman who claims that his party is the father of the cooperative movement in Canada, the Minister of Agriculture. I do not believe he is happy about this. His defence of the Liberal party in this connection indicated that he knew that the government was being censured by the cooperatives for this action, and that he did not like it. Perhaps he was not in a position to stand up and tell the government of which he is a member that he opposes this legislation. I hope that in his heart he does oppose it. I hope he will use his influence with the government, even at this late hour, to have these sections which attack the cooperatives deleted from the bill.

Once more I appeal to the Acting Minister of Finance to hear the plea of those on all sides of the house who object to interfering with the development of the cooperative movement. I hope that before the bill leaves the committee the sections will be voluntarily deleted by the minister himself.

Mr. VICTOR QUELCH (Acadia): Mr. Speaker I just wish to say that the members of this group are opposed to the principle of the bill because we regard the underlying principle as being that governments must be dependent upon taxation for their revenue. We have always maintained that the real purpose of taxation should be to remove redundant purchasing power from circulation —that is, that portion of the purchasing power of the people which may create an effective demand against production in excess of the ability of industry to satisfy it. Furthermore, we feel that the purpose of taxation should be to bring about a fairer distribution of the production of the country until such time as production has expanded to meet the needs of the people. To the extent that that type of taxation fails to meet government expenditures, we believe that the government should use national money. Until we do that, we can take it for granted that in the future the national debt will continue to expand as it has in the past, and also that our debt charges will expand, thereby requiring an increase in taxation to meet them, resulting of course in still greater discontent amongst the workers of the country, thereby bringing about a reduction in or a retarding of production.

Hon. members on the government side and in other parts of the house are continually warning of the danger of socialism, communism and every other form of "ism." But I should like to point out that so long as the government continues in the future as they have in the past to use a deflationary policy we are breeding a condition that brings about communism and socialism.

I should also like to suggest to the government that they might very well take heed of the suggestion of the national resources planning board of the United States. I quote from page 105 of a book entitled "Where's the Money Coming From?" by Mr. Stuart Chase, who has this to say:

> If the government borrowed solely from its own central bank without interest, there need be no interest burden at all. There would be amortization of the principal, and the fundamental prohibition not to pump too many new dollars into the system would still stand. The national resources planning board has said: "Should the day arrive when the carrying charge on the federal debt becomes oppressive, serious thought should be given to the creation by our modern banking and treasury institutions of non-interest-bearing debt.

I hope the government will not wait until the situation becomes so chronic that our production will have already started to fall and unemployment will have started to increase. The war is over, and no longer is it necessary for fifty per cent of our production to go for the purposes of war. Therefore it is only natural that the people of the country should have expected to find in the budget a substantial reduction in income tax of people in the low income brackets. They also expected that exemptions for the people in the low income brackets would be raised in the year 1946. Unfortunately, as we now know, that is not the case; there will be no alleviation until 1947, and then it will be far less than the people had anticipated.

On this question of cooperatives I should like to say that I agree entirely with the comment of the hon. member for Swift Current, that the wording of various clauses is vague and ambiguous. Certainly I am not going to insult the intelligence of those responsible for drafting these measures by suggesting that they could not clarify them. I believe the confusion which exists in this bill is deliberate, because it makes it so much easier for a number of different interpretations to be made.

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, it is not deliberate.

Mr. QUELCH: Well, I certainly cannot believe that the Department of Finance is so lacking in men of ability that they could not draft something a great deal clearer than we find in this bill. Even lawyers disagree as to what it really means.

Mr. ABBOTT: This was drafted by the Department of Justice, the Department of Finance, the Department of National Revenue and to some extent by your humble servant.

Mr. QUELCH: And the result is confusion. As I say, I am not going to insult the various departments by suggesting that they could not have clarified the situation to a greater extent than they have done. So naturally we feel that the intent is to curtail the growth of cooperatives in this country.

Mr. ABBOTT: Just the reverse.

Mr. QUELCH: The hon. member for Swift Current reminds me that the acting minister said the department was not run by experts, but I think even a layman could have drafted something with a great deal more clarity than we find in these clauses.

I should like to place before this house the definite stand of this group in regard to co-operatives. Our definite stand is that there should be no taxation on cooperatives except on patronage dividends of non-members that are not distributed; and provided that patronage dividends are only withheld by cooperatives with the consent of their members. I cannot see any possible justification for the provision in this bill which places a tax upon an amount of capital equivalent to three per cent. I am not going to deal further with that point now; I shall wait until the bill reaches the committee stage.

This morning several hon. members commented upon the need for expansion of production by the gold mines of this country. During the war the members of this group consistently attacked the production of gold in war time, because we felt that production of that sort was bound to impede our war effort. We needed production elsewhere, and we required all the labour and all the materials that could be made available. Therefore we felt that using labour and materials for the production of gold was not helping the war effort at all. To-day of course the situation is somewhat different, but nevertheless throughout the world there is a great shortage of food, clothing, and housing, and I fail to see how the production of gold can help in any shape or form to alleviate that sort of want. However, I would agree that so long as other nations are willing and perhaps anxious to give us $35 worth of goods for an ounce of gold there is a good argument for continuing the production of gold; but on the other hand I do not think there is any justification whatsoever for subsidizing the production of gold for export by low grade ore mines, any more than there would be justification for subsidizing other kinds of production that was uneconomic. As long as our labour and capital can be utilized for production that will bring more wealth to the country, low grade mines should not be subsidized.

I am not going to say more at this stage, but we shall have a few words to say on various sections of the bill when we get into committee.

Mr. J. M. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very few observations on the topic discussed this morning by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Adamson), the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Cockeram); that is, the gold industry.

Notwithstanding the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat (Mr. Quelch)—and indeed to some extent he conceded this—I think there is general agreement in the house as to the importance of the industry. As the last speaker said, whether or not you approve the whole underlying principle, nevertheless at the present time we do get valuable goods and services from other people for every ounce of gold we produce. Belief in gold is deep rooted in human nature, and has been for many centuries. It is not going to disappear overnight. I think everyone in the house will agree that in the last few years the gold industry has been, you might almost say, a cornerstone of our economy, and has come to the assistance of that economy in times when it was very greatly in need of that assistance.

The next point I want to make is that I think we will all agree, as I believe the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) himself agreed when he made the statement, that the change to parity did in fact greatly embarrass the gold industry. I am not going to make any comment on that, other than to indicate the fact, on which every one agrees; and the best proof of that lies in the action of the government itself coming along and endeavouring to give assistance to the industry so that it could continue to provide employment, continue to bring to this country valuable goods and services in return for the export of the gold. As I say, the government came forward with this measure. I think there will be wide agreement that it was a wise step to take; but the question which now arises and which I think is in the minds of everyone is whether or not that relief was well conceived. When I heard the figures read in this house by the Acting Minister of Finance I was not sufficiently familiar with the situation to appreciate whether or not the assistance was practical; but as I listened this morning to the figures given by the hon. member for York West, prepared by the Ontario Mining association, if I remember aright, a serious body, figures which have not been questioned in any way, they seemed to me in the highest degree trivial. I thought the hon. member was fully warranted in asking whether or not they indicated a really serious desire on the part of the government to assist the industry. The hon. member for York West said it was a gesture. Well, Mr. Speaker it seems to me I would be well within the limits of the truth in saying that if it was a gesture it was not even a polite gesture; and I am sure if I attempted to illustrate the kind of gesture I think it really was you would rebuke me sharply and say I was insulting the dignity and decorum of this house.

Finally, it seemed to me the hon. member for York West did indicate a reasonable, practical and proved method of increasing this assistance, and I see no reason why assistance on the lines he recommended would not be reasonable. As I say, it has been tested by practice and experience. There is only one thing further I want to say. I am sure we all realize that this is a serious matter. I realized it more than ever the other day, when I heard a man from the north country, a man who I think knew fully what he was talking about, remark to another man in the mining industry that if things continue as they are now that northern mining country, which depends on gold, will be a desert within ten years. I am not asking the house to accept that statement. Predictions are often made which are exaggerated, and there may be other adjustments that can be made under which the industry will be able to continue. Nevertheless I think there is a measure of agreement on this, that it is an important matter, and the government has given an indication that it regards it as an important matter by actually proffering a measure of assistance, though if the figures which have been given are corect, and they have not been challenged, that assistance is of a trivial nature. So I am suggesting to the minister that the government might very well review its decision to see whether, instead of this trivial gesture, it cannot come forward with a really substantial measure of help.

Mr. SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion? Carried. Second reading of this bill.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. FAIR: Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair, this motion was not carried. There are a number of us here who were not satisfied with it. We protest against it, and want the question for and against placed before the house. The question was not put.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not understand what the hon. member has said.

Mr. FAIR: I just wish to have the question put, whether or not it is carried—those in favour, and those against. That has not been done.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. SPEAKER: I must say to the hon. member that I put the question as usual, and as no hon. member rose I said that it carried.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I was on my feet at the time, objecting to it.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried on division.

Mr. FAIR: No; question.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. FAIR: You asked for those in favour, but not against. There are plenty of us on this side of the house who oppose it. We want to make that clear.

Mr. SPEAKER: I put the motion before the house and asked if it was the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion.

Mr. FAIR: And we said, no.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must repeat what I have said to the hon. member, that I did ask if it was the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion.

An hon. MEMBER: And we said, no.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not see any member on his feet, and I did not hear any member asking to speak, so I said, "Adopté, carried." That is the proper procedure. Now the other motion before the house is that the speaker do leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole. That motion is not yet carried.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: With all due deference, Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that when Your Honour said, "Is the motion carried", at least two members in this corner were on their feet, and said, no.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Two is not enough.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: They were on their feet. We wish to voice our objection to second reading, but no notice has been taken of the fact that we are objecting to it. Your Honour did not look in this corner to see whether we objected. You just said, "Those in favour; carried; adopté", and it was passed that way.

Mr. SPEAKER: I cannot permit any more discussion on it.

Mr. QUELCH: You never called for the yeas and nays. If you had called for the yeas and nays we would then have stood. We have a right to have the yeas and nays called.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I will not permit any confusion in the house.

Mr. QUELCH: There is confusion.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not necessary to call for the yeas and nays unless some member says, no.

Mr. QUELCH: We said, no.

Mr. SPEAKER: When I put the motion before the house I heard no protest.

An hon. MEMBER: Many of us said, no.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. Abbott moves, seconded by Mr. McCann, that I do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Abbott) which was agreed to on the following division:

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Superannuation or pension fund payments.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will section 2, paragraph (a) of (4) mean that the extra $2,000 paid to members of the senate will not be considered as taxable income? As it is worded, and apparently this was drafted by the law officers of the crown, by Justice and Finance, with the Acting Minister of Finance participating in the drafting—

Mr. ABBOTT: Only to a very minor extent.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Nevertheless, only to a minor extent would be most material. As this is worded I submit that it would have the effect of actually repealing the legislation passed at the last session.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am informed that the legislation which we passed last session—I have not the act before me—stated in express terms that the amount received by members of the senate would be considered as income and therefore would be subject to tax. This section will not have the effect of making it tax exempt.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to think that that actually is the effect. Lawyers disagree on occasions.

Mr. ABBOTT: This is not new law. It is just reenacting paragraph (a). The new part is paragraph (b).

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I appreciate that. Nevertheless this is being reenacted and will become the law as of this date.

Mr. ABBOTT: Will continue to be the law. We are reenacting the whole section. We could have left it alone and simply enacted paragraph (b).

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The fact remains that, from this date on, this section will be an amendment as of 1946. If it were being enacted now for the first time I submit that the effect would be, regardless of anything appearing in the act passed in 1945 at the time of the increase in indemnities, that the amount of $2,000 would be free from tax. Subsection 9 on page 2 of the bill says:

> Where an elected member of a provincial legislative assembly is, under an act of the provincial legislature, paid an allowance for expenses incidental to the discharge of his duties as a member—

We are going to have a very strange position of affairs in this country under these two sections. I am not at the moment a protagonist of the senate, if I may refer to it as such, but I am advancing the argument that we are placing its members in a very invidious position. They to-day are discharging responsibilities with unusual ability.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is quite true.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Some of my hon. friends to my left laugh. The members of the senate did a great job for Canada with its committee on taxation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: In several other directions too. The hon. gentleman's statement is quite true.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: They are staying here long periods of time now and are denied any expenses, and they are the only legislative body in Canada that will be placed in that position. I simply want to know whether, by the provisions of 4 (a) the effect is in fact that the extra $2,000 is not subject to taxation.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am advised that the effect of reenacting this section, which is as it now stands in the law, will not be to exempt from taxation the additional $2,000 paid to members of the senate in virtue of the legislation passed last year. I have sent for the statute, and in the meanwhile that is my advice.

Mr. MacNICOL: Will the indemnities of members of the legislative council of Quebec be exempt from taxation?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend will notice that the word is "elected", an elected member of a provincial legislature. They will not be exempt.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is this section based on resolution No. 27?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is based on several resolutions.

Mr. JACKMAN: Was there not in the resolution an alternative that a person who left employment and received a lump sum could have that lump sum taxed at the rate of taxation for the last year?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. There are several sections in the bill which relate to that resolution covering lump sum payments. They are included here in the order in which the different sections appear in the bill, and the hon. member will see, as we go through the bill clause by clause, that all the various cases are covered. In this section the proviso to paragraph (c) of subsection 1 is incidental to one of these amendments respecting lump sum payments.

Mr. JACKMAN: So that in some subsequent section I shall find that part of the resolution which provided that a man receiving money could elect to be taxed at the rate of taxation of the last year.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is correct.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: With reference to subsection 6 of section 3 being repealed and the following being substituted therefor: "Where the minister is satisfied that a single payment" and so on, and again with reference to subsection 8 of section 3, am I correct in saying that there can be no reversal by the appeal board of any decision made by the minister to whom the application is made under these sections? If I am correct in that, and I think I am, having regard to section 69(e) I wish to raise this point. One of the recommendations of the senate committee was that decisions made by the minister, in other words discretionary decisions, should be subject to appeal. I am going to deal with that when I come to the section in question. I feel that even at this stage some mention should be made of the power that rests in the minister under a provision such as this. I will not refer to the evidence that was taken or to the recommendations of the senate, but this and other sections run counter to the recommendation of the senate committee, which was that there should be a board of taxation appeals with power to review all matters of assessment and all matters of fact and of law. The evidence taken before that committee was representative of more than twenty organizations across the country, and there was no objection. I know that in my own province of Saskatchewan farmers are approached by inspectors. The farmers have not kept books, and an arbitrary fixation is made against which they have no appeal—a decision of some office holder, made without regard to law or fact. When this matter was before the senate committee there was only one person who objected, and that was Mr. Fraser Elliott, who said that there should be no appeal on discretionary matters. In the senate report the statement is made that Mr. Elliott made a recommendation that there be no appeal, and that was contrary to every other recommendation that had been made.

In my opinion the granting of discretionary powers to the minister, and allowing him to determine, without regard to law or fact, but relying on his own conception of justice, what persons shall come within the purview of subsection 6 of section 3 or subsection 8 of section 3, is a dangerous principle for parliament to reenact. I should like to hear from the minister what justification there is for taking away from the courts or from the board of appeals the right to decide this matter on the law and the facts, on appeal from a decision made by some office holder or the discretionary order of the minister, which after all is the order of the officials. This is just one more example of a trend which is greatly accelerating. After all, the senate is an integral part of parliament, representing all parts of Canada. They heard the evidence of many groups across the country and decided to recommend a certain course of action. That course was not followed because of the fact that what can almost be said to be a hierarchy of civil servants outside are able to determine what is good for the people, regardless of the views of parliament.

Some may say that that is not the position. While I may not refer to another debate of the present session, I may say that when veterans affairs were under discussion, as is reported at page 4483 of Hansard of August 8, the parliamentary assistant to the minister, explaining why the unanimous recommendation of the committee on veterans affairs had not been followed, said that two officials of his department thought that they knew more than a committee of parliament, and the government followed the recommendation of the two civil servants rather than the unanimous recommendation of the committee.

Mr. JACKMAN: Shocking.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: At this stage I should like to hear from the minister what is the view of the government with regard to the recommendation that there should be a right of appeal in respect of ministerial decisions. Why is this great power still to be vested in the minister, subject to no appeal even to the board of tax appeals? After all, while on the face of it the right of appeal is being granted, it means very little, because approximately eighty per cent of all the decisions made by the income tax department will be and are construed as discretionary matters. Fearing that someone may consider that in taking this view I am partisan I need only refer the minister to an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press of August 9, where the whole question of discretionary powers is reviewed under the heading "Discretion Unlimited." The editorial goes on to say:

> After the approval of its budget in parliament the Canadian government presumably will proceed without delay to set up two new taxing boards which are designed to assure a larger measure of justice for the taxpayer. These boards should improve our existing taxation system but, on analysis, their powers fall far short of what our taxpayer deserves. Though they are based on the recent studies of a senate committee they fail to carry out the committee's report at its most vital point.

Then further on:

> The most important principle of the senate report—the power of the appeal board to consider how tax officials use their discretion and to revoke their discretionary decisions—is thus destroyed by the government's plan.

No matter what the walk of life may be, taxpayers in every section of this dominion have found themselves subject to orders based on the discretionary principle and denied the right of appeal. I suggest to the minister that if we are to remake the War Income Tax Act, which apparently is the intention, having regard to the number of amendments that are brought down, something more than a brief explanation is due to the committee as to why these discretionary powers are to be perpetuated. In excepting some twenty per cent of the cases, the decision of office holders in the civil service or of the minister by way of final appeal in all discretionary matters will still continue to be supreme.

I would ask the minister to make a statement in the matter, because it is one which deserves the serious attention of the committee and is of interest to people all over the country.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be very glad to do that. I had assumed that we should have a considerable discussion on the matter of the exercise of discretionary powers when we were dealing with the sections relating to the appellate board and the advisory board. I really think it might be more convenient to the committee if we did it then.

As my hon. friend appreciates as well as or better than most other hon. members of the committee, these numerous discretionary powers fall under various heads. Some are the exercise of powers with respect to the refusal to grant exemptions or allowances, as was pointed out in the senate committee report. Others involve administrative or punitive powers. Some involve constituting the minister a judge of reasonableness or equity, and so on. When we reach these sections I shall be prepared to discuss the various categories in some detail and give the reasons why it was felt that most of these discretions should be reviewed by the advisory board rather than the appeal board.

As my hon. friend appreciates, this section is in effect the reenactment of an existing section with the following words added: "between the first day of January and the 27th day of June." The discretion which is contained in this section is not a new one conferred by this amending bill. The subsection is the reenacting of an existing one with the addition of certain words. Therefore unless my hon. friend insists, I should prefer to deal with them when we are dealing with the sections relating to the appeal board and the advisory board.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I bring it up now because all the way along until we get to section 69 we shall be enacting discretionary powers. Finally when we come to section 69 we shall have established all these matters, and then we shall discuss the why and the wherefore.

Mr. ABBOTT: So far as I know we are not establishing by this bill many new discretionary powers. We are reenacting sections. There may be one or two which are necessary, but I think I am safe in saying there are not many more than that. The new powers which we would have to consider are the ones which have been in the act or added to the act over a period of years. I should prefer to discuss them when we are discussing the details of these provisions.

Mr. McMASTER: Is the minister willing to add a clause to the effect that the discretion of the minister is appealable? As I understand it, in the past the discretion has been a little broader, and the exchequer court has refused to interfere with it. We are setting up two appellate divisions, and if there were an appeal from the minister's discretion I think we would all be satisfied.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sure some people would be satisfied, but that strikes at the principle of ministerial discretion and responsibility. In Great Britain, where the same principle of conferring ministerial discretion is followed, there is an appeal to the courts, but the courts have always dealt with it in this way, that if the discretion, as I have said several times before in the house, has been exercised in a bona fide way they do not review the exercise of that discretion. In its very nature it implies the exercise of judgment on the part of someone; that is what discretion means. It is an opinion. I shall discuss some of these reasons a little more fully when we get to the advisory board sections, but my hon. friend's suggestion strikes at the very root of the granting of ministerial discretion. It is easy to talk in broad general terms about the undesirability of conferring discretionary powers under an act of this kind, but I say to this committee that from a practical point of view it is impossible to draft a workable income tax act of this kind without putting in such discretions, and that it is impracticable to give an appeal to the courts from the exercise of such discretion. That responsibility must be assumed by the minister of the crown upon whom parliament confers it, and for the life of me I do not see how we could properly ask the courts to review a discretion properly exercised by a responsible minister of the crown. It is all very well to say that it is exercised by bureaucrats and civil servants and so on, but the final responsibility is upon the minister, and under the new procedure we are providing under this act there is a very real opportunity for review and consideration by the minister himself. However, I shall discuss that when we come to the section in question.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The minister has made the categorical statement that it would be impracticable to give an appeal on discretionary matters. He said there was an appeal to the exchequer court in the event that the discretion had not really been exercised, or had not been exercised honestly or fairly, or that the person exercising the discretion was influenced by extraneous and irrelevant facts; that is the law to-day. Hemmed in by those considerations, there is really no appeal; but my hon. friend makes the categorical statement that an appeal on questions of judgment, as he says, or discretion, would be impracticable.

Let me tell my hon. friend that before this senate committee, composed of outstanding members of that body, appeared representatives of the Canadian federation of agriculture, the trades and labour congress of Canada, life insurance companies, the income tax payers' association, the Canadian federation of labour, the Edmonton and Regina chambers of commerce, the dominion association of chartered accountants, the Canadian bar association, stock exchanges, the Toronto board of trade, the Canadian electrical association, the Federation Canadienne et Catholique du Travail and the Montreal chamber of commerce. All these bodies, representative of agriculture and business, came before this committee and were all of the opinion that an appeal was proper. The only one who took the opposite view was Mr. Elliott. The report of the special committee states:

> Mr. Elliott indicated, however, that the findings of the board or committee should in essence be advisory only and that should the Minister of National Revenue desire to adhere to a conclusion differing with the findings of the board, no further review or appeal should be provided but that, as is the case under the presently enacted legislation, the decision of the minister in respect thereto should be final and conclusive.

That is the same argument made by the minister to-day, but this is what the committee of the senate unanimously report:

> Your committee has given consideration to these submissions of the deputy minister and has concluded that they represent a direct conflict of opinion with the suggestion advanced by other witnesses in briefs and examinations, with which suggestions your committee agrees in principle as will be hereafter shown.

I point out that while the minister gives a categorical answer that the right of appeal from a decision of the minister on matters of discretion is impracticable except within the limited purview of the authorities, one of the most recent of which is Nicholson v Minister of National Revenue, on the other hand practically all business organizations and bodies representing agriculture in this country stated that it was practicable, and that there should be a right of appeal. While I accept the minister's suggestion that further discussion take place later, I do want to point out that while he takes one view, the only person supporting that view is Mr. Elliott, and against that view is the view of all these other organizations representing all the provinces.

Mr. ABBOTT: I thank my hon. friend for deferring further discussion until we reach the sections dealing with the tax boards. I point out, of course, that these various organizations he listed made other submissions to the senate committee than those relating to these discretionary powers. I read a good many of their briefs, which I remember covered many points; in fact some did not make much reference to discretionary powers. However, I think the issues at this preliminary stage have been made fairly clear as between the view put forward by my hon. friend and the view I have voiced, and perhaps that should suffice for the question of principle when we consider the various discretionary powers in the subsequent sections.

Section 2 agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN: The suggestion has been made that section 3 should be considered paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe that would be wise. I think it would make for more orderly discussion.

The CHAIRMAN: Then I shall call section 3.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have an amendment here which I am going to ask one of my colleagues to move, but it relates to paragraph (3), so I shall take it up when we come to that paragraph.

On section 3, subsection 1—Mutual corporation.

Mr. BREITHAUPT: I should like to make a few remarks on this section, as it affects a good many cash mutual companies in my part of the country, North Waterloo, Perth and South Waterloo. These cash mutuals, as I interpret this section of the act, are very adversely affected. In the past they have been paying three per cent tax on premiums, and now are also to be taxed on income. Originally the companies I refer to carried on the fire insurance business only, but while the bulk of their business continues to be fire insurance, some of the companies write automobile and casualty lines. A large proportion of their business is in Ontario, Quebec and the western provinces.

The cash mutuals began as premium note mutuals insuring farms, village and local risks in southwestern Ontario in the same manner as the many farm mutuals which have served the farming community in the absence, until recently and now only to a limited extent, of any general farm insurance service from the stock companies. It is estimated that over $500,000,000 in farm fire insurance in Ontario, aside from Quebec, which is over eighty per cent of the total, is carried in mutual companies such as the ones I have described, and that over 197,000 Ontario farmers are insured in mutuals. The cash mutuals insure at least 16,000 farm risks, as well as a large number of village, town and other risks which are not protected by municipal or other fire fighting organizations. Many of the stock companies will not insure these unprotected risks, and if they do they are usually at higher rates.

The cash mutuals operate on a cash premium system as well as on the premium note basis. This development of the cash premium is a departure from the original scheme, which relied on the premium note for the large part of the policyholder's premium. Mutuals always demanded some payment in advance, as was required under the terms of the earliest legislation. It has been required in legislation since. As early as 1868 the legislature recognized the need of permitting business on a cash-mutual basis and authorized assessments for purposes of establishing reserves.

This brings me to my point, that under the new plan, as I understand it—and probably the minister will clear up this point—the premiums are taxed and the profits are taxed. No one objects to paying taxes, because what is fair for one is fair for another. But in cases such as this, where double taxation is now proposed, it places in a very unfavourable position these companies whose policy in the past has been to create reserves to protect the insured. Either one tax or the other should be eliminated.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am aware of the situation my hon. friend has outlined with respect to mutual insurance companies. As he knows, they were dealt with by the McDougall report, and the proposed section in large measure implements the recommendations contained in that report. It is true that up to the present time mutual insurance companies have been completely exempt from any form of income tax. The McDougall commission recommended that that should not continue. The principal tax on the mutual insurance companies is the premium tax, to which my hon. friend made reference. Under the Special War Revenue Act, which was passed yesterday, the rate has been reduced from three per cent to two per cent for the deposit premium mutuals.

It is true that for the future mutual insurance companies will not be permitted to build up reserves out of undistributed taxable income. But any refunds which they make to policyholders, which are the equivalent of patronage dividends by cooperatives, are deductible from the gross income for purposes of taxation. So that I do not feel the new provision will be a serious interference with the operations of the mutual insurance companies. They will in fact be on exactly the same basis as the cooperatives, and on the basis recommended by the McDougall commission.

Mr. McMASTER: I spoke on this matter when we were discussing the resolutions, and since that time I have been able to obtain certain figures, which are too lengthy to place on Hansard. There are sixty-seven small farmers' mutuals in Ontario. I believe there are only one or two of them with reserves of more than $100,000. Many of them have reserves of $10,000, $15,000, or $16,000. I have been told by so many people that I believe it is true, without looking it up, that the Ontario government has insisted these mutuals have a reserve equal to two per cent of their insurance in force. It would seem that the smaller companies have from $8 million to $10 million of insurance in force, and therefore eventually they must build up to a reserve of around $100,000. That would apply to even the smallest of them.

This mutual fire insurance business is entirely different from the business of the cooperatives. A cooperative is an organization which buys something and sells it. At the end of the year it has certain moneys on hand which can be distributed as patronage dividends, if so desired. But the mutual fire insurance companies, which are operating in a comparatively small area and are able to protect themselves only by re-insurance, must build up good reserves. I have picked at random a small company operating in West Middlesex, the Caradoc mutual, which had losses in a particular year which left them no profits, or at least profits which were less than $1,000. But in nearly every case they have to build up reserves for bad years. Let us suppose that they build up $4,000 or $5,000 of profits in one year. As I understand it, they will come under the corporation tax of 30 per cent.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is correct. In common with other organizations they cannot build up reserves out of taxable income. They can build up reserves up after the tax has been paid.

Mr. McMASTER: But everything is not the same. I am speaking about the small farmers' mutuals. I say these farmers' mutual fire insurance companies are different from cooperatives. There is no use in saying they are the same. There are always exceptions; indeed if there were no exceptions there would not be the discretion vested in the minister, to which we are objecting, and the possibility that a different discretion would be exercised in respect of some other organization.

Let me follow this through to its logical conclusion. I have in mind a small farmers' mutual which may have an income in one year of $10,000. I am thinking of many of them in that position. Perhaps they will pay out for management and losses the sum of $7,000, and they would have only $3,000 left to meet any future losses. The government will take $900 of that. Perhaps next year that company will have many losses and no income. I do not suppose the government will come along and give the $900 back to them. I suggest we should understand fully the work that these farmers' mutuals do. It is entirely different from buying and selling. They must protect one another against large losses which may be suffered by their members, and in that way give reimbursement which arises from that unfortunate position. They are doing the work that larger companies do not want. I am not in the insurance business, but I know enough about insurance to know that the large companies do not want to insure isolated farm houses or barns, because they have no fire protection. No one is near them. They are bound to suffer loss. Some of the insurance these mutuals carry would be in the form of risks in connection with lightning striking farm animals. I was astonished when I learned the amount of damage done to horses and cattle by lightning.

Mr. GRAYDON: And wind damage, too.

Mr. McMASTER: Yes, there is also weather damage. It would be a tremendous tax, and one which we could very well do without.

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree that farm mutuals do perform a service and have a type of insurance which most of the stock and other companies are not anxious to take. But there is no real difference in principle or practice between the service they are rendering to their members and that found in a cooperative organization. I do not agree with the hon. member when he says that the tax here is a serious matter. The heavy and the important tax in connection with all these mutuals is the premium tax; there is no doubt about that. If these mutuals have already built up a reserve, then of course it is there, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. GRAYDON: There to-day but gone to-morrow.

Mr. ABBOTT: But that is true of any other capital. No other group or organization can replace its capital out of current earnings, if it is lost, except out of earnings after tax. I should have pointed out that their losses are carried forward. They have all the privileges that other taxpayers have.

Mr. McMASTER: I did not realize that these mutual companies had the opportunity of distribution over several years. Have they? If they have a fortunate year, where they have no loss in ordinary income they will pay the tax on the large amount of surplus, and the next year if they have a heavy loss they will pay nothing, because they will not be in a position to pay anything.

Mr. ABBOTT: The hon. member will recall that under the act passed a year ago losses can be carried one year back and three years forward.

Mr. McMASTER: For mutual companies?

Mr. ABBOTT: For any companies, any businesses.

Mr. BRADSHAW: The minister has said that this was recommended by the McDougall commission. In the recommendations at page 65 of the report we find this:

> We are of the opinion that mutuals can and do have income which is subject to tax. This income results from investments and operating gains which are free from claims of policyholders. At the same time we consider that mutuals in certain specialized fields are rendering a service which is not provided by other organizations, notably, in insuring farm and other unprotected rural risks. These mutuals tend to keep their rates as low as is consistent with the risk involved. We consider that it would not be in the public interest to impose income tax upon those insurers whose activities are primarily in these fields.
> Considering the situation as a whole, we are of the opinion that the income tax should not be imposed on mutuals without a review of the varying rates of existing premium tax under the Special War Revenue Act.

Then in the summary of recommendations, under section 5:

> That the income of any insurer, mutual or otherwise, shall not be liable to taxation when in any year the net premium income in Canada is derived, to the extent of not less than 50 per cent thereof, from the insurance of farm property and other property not protected by municipal or other fire fighting organizations.

As the president of a mutual insurance company in my own riding, I would ask the minister to explain that.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said a moment ago that the legislation was largely implementing the provisions of the McDougall commission report. It is quite true, as my hon. friend points out, that in the case of mutual insurance companies doing more than fifty per cent of their business on farm property on the conditions mentioned, it was recommended that they should be exempted. That recommendation was considered by the minister and officials of this department, and it was felt that it was not desirable to set up a special class of mutual insurance company which would be completely exempt from tax. That is the reason why it was not felt that that particular recommendation could be implemented. Perhaps I should have pointed out that this class of mutual does enjoy complete exemption from payment of the premium tax if more than fifty per cent of their business is derived from insurance of farm property. I pointed that out in answer to the hon. member for Haldimand the other day. They have now a special exemption from premium tax.

Mr. BRADSHAW: If I may be permitted to cite my own case, we have an insurance company with $5,000,000 worth of insurance policies. We are running at the rate of twenty cents per $100, from which we derive premiums of some $10,000. Our losses last year were $6,000; our expenses were $2,000, or a total of $8,000. Our earned surplus would then be around $2,000. Is the tax on that surplus?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; there would be $60 tax there if it is not distributed. Of course, if it is distributed to policy holders, there would be no tax.

Mr. BRADSHAW: Since we are compelled by the provincial act to keep a surplus we have $45,000 of a surplus on hand, and we are required to keep that up to a certain limit.

Mr. ABBOTT: If you have the $45,000, and it did not need the $2,000 that my hon. friend has mentioned in order to hold the $45,000 at $45,000, it could be turned back to the policy holders and, of course, would not be subject to tax.

Mr. BRADSHAW: As refund of premiums?

Mr. ABBOTT: As refund of premiums, and then it is deductible and would not be subject to tax. I think the mutuals will find in practice that there is very little, if any, tax involved to them in this provision.

Mr. BRADSHAW: I think there is a tendency for the farm mutuals to lower their rate to get away from the income tax and then place themselves in a hazardous position if they incur a heavy loss.

Mr. ABBOTT: They must exercise proper business judgment. Their managers and directors must follow the principles of ordinary business prudence.

Mr. CARDIFF: Mutual fire insurance companies that carry risks on live stock are in a different position from that of the other companies. They have no control over the weather man, and when a storm comes up, which often happens—sometimes two or three times a year—they lose considerable numbers of cattle. Those cattle have to be paid for at their full value. I myself lost one the other day. I have been paying farm insurance all my life, and this is the first time I have been paid for anything; I lost a $150 steer. But losses very often happen. I have been fortunate, but many lose large numbers of stock, sometimes depending on their location; probably they are stranded under trees or are alongside a wire fence. But I think in this class of case there should be exemption from taxation, because their risk and their dependence are to a great extent on the weather man, and they have no idea what their losses will be one year with another.

Mr. GRAYDON: I suppose that all of us from rural sections are interested in farm mutual insurance. I know that our own buildings years ago were insured in two different mutual companies; and on one occasion, some twenty or twenty-five years ago, the premium note with one company, which always forms part of the policy agreement, had to be paid in part by all those who had a policy with that particular mutual insurance company. I hope the minister is not forgetting that this is in an entirely different position from the ordinary premium paid to the ordinary insurance company, because, once you pay your premium to the ordinary commercial company, tariff or non-tariff, that is the end of it; but when you pay your premium to a mutual that is not necessarily the end of it, because, if a big storm comes, inflicting a tremendous amount of damage, be it by fire or whatever other cause, if that damage is concentrated in one particular area every farmer who is insured knows that he may have to put up some part or all of the premium note which he has signed at the time he took the policy. That seems to me to put the mutual companies in a very different position from that of the others. When the hon. member for Perth speaks of $2,000 being left as a surplus on one year's business, to my mind that is the type of thing which shows good management and a desire to provide against loss in the future, and, more than that, to alleviate the possibility of some farmers having to put up money on the premium note in the future. This matter of the premium note, which is a liability existing on paper against every farmer holding a policy in a mutual company—at least, in the one we deal with—indicates an important and complete distinction affecting the question of taxation of these mutual companies. It may be that the minister is right when he says that not a great deal of taxation is likely to be levied against the company. But I think that if the principle is bad for $100 it is bad for $1,000 and it is bad for $100,000. I think the principle is an important one, and I should like the minister to reconsider this matter and see to it that these mutual companies do not have to pay this tax. I do not think it is a fair tax; it is one for which the farmers are going to have to foot the bill, and I think the farmers have already footed about enough bills in all the agricultural communities that I know of.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Before the minister replies, may I make one observation? Under the old act, by paragraph (g) the mutuals were exempted. We now have this section, which I must say I find difficulty in reading because there are two negatives, and I agree with the hon. member who said he found the drafting anything but clear, although it may have been difficult to do it in any other way. But what we find now is that the only mutuals that will get exemptions are those which deal wholly, apparently, with charitable institutions; but you go on and still have the exemption as it was on life insurance companies except such as is credited to shareholders' account. The point I want to make is one with regard to which, it seemed to me, the minister gave a very by-and-large interpretation of the McDougall report, because in reading the section it seemed to me that the McDougall report goes completely in the face of what is now being done. "We consider", they say "it would not be in the public interest to impose income tax upon those insurers whose activities are primarily in these fields."

Mr. ABBOTT: What section is my hon. friend reading?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am reading now from page 65 of the report. I suggest that in changing the act you have made it worse than it was before, and in so doing, have gone flatly in the face of the recommendations of the commission.

Mr. ABBOTT: The McDougall commission reported that these mutuals should be put on the same basis as other cooperatives. They did suggest, in the case of farm mutuals more than fifty per cent of whose business was insuring farm property, exemption from taxation. The commission says on page 65:

> We are of the opinion that mutuals can and do have income which is subject to tax. This income results from investments and operating gains which are free from claims of policy holders. At the same time we consider that mutuals in certain specialized fields are rendering a service which is not provided by other organizations, notably, in insuring farm and other unprotected rural risks. These mutuals tend to keep their rates as low as is consistent with the risk involved. We consider that it would not be in the public interest to impose income tax upon those insurers whose activities are primarily in these fields.

They recommended that if more than fifty per cent of the business was in insuring farm property they should be exempt. That was considered by the minister and his advisers, and it was felt that we should not single out a special class of insurance company for complete exemption. This particular class already receives special treatment by exemption from the premium tax, which is the important tax in this field. That is the tax on the fellow who pays the insurance premiums, for in the final analysis that is where the tax has to go.

The hon. member for Peel said that there should not be any difference between $1,000 and $1,000,000.

Mr. GRAYDON: I said the principle was the same.

Mr. ABBOTT: I turn his statement around and say that the principle is exactly the same whether it is small or big. That was the reasoning which prompted the decision to treat all mutual corporations as being the same type of enterprise, but giving special consideration to the farm mutuals in connection with the premium tax which is imposed under the Special War Revenue Act.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I suggest that when you exempt the income of life insurance companies except such amount as is credited to shareholders' account you are in effect exempting life insurance business to the extent that the mutual feature is present in their enterprise, and therefore an inconsistency arises there.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, but my hon. friend knows that the principles which govern life insurance underwriting are completely different from those which govern the underwriting of property and that the portion of the premium which goes into life insurance represents the savings of the people less certain amounts for the actuarial risks involved. That has been in the act for years and I think is sound. But the mutual fire insurance companys are providing a community service through cooperative effort. They are not accumulating savings or buying protection against death. They are operating a mutual organization for mutual protection against certain risks, and average the costs of these risks. The principles which underlie that type of risk are completely different from those underlying life insurance. The principle which has been adopted in connection with the life insurance companies is that the shareholders' portion is, of course, taxed; the other part is not. Again, in the case of the life insurance companies there is a premium tax.

Mr. McMASTER: The worst feature is that these companies can avoid taxation simply by sending cheques back at the end of the year to the people who are insured.

Mr. ABBOTT: So can any other cooperative.

Mr. McMASTER: That is starting them on the downward path of trying to evade taxation, which should be fixed and fair. Cheques will be sent back at the end of the year to the policy holders in order to avoid taxation. So that the government will not be any further ahead and a great deal of bother will be given to these mutual companies. That will be the only result.

Mr. McLURE: We have in our province the Prince Edward Island Mutual Fire Insurance Company. It does business only with farm property. Ninety-five per cent of its insurance business is with farmers, the remainder with schools and churches. As I understand the McDougall report, a company of that kind would be exempt because practically all its premiums come from farm insurance. Is that type of company exempt?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is what the McDougall report recommended.

Mr. McLURE: And that is what is in the act?

Mr. ABBOTT: No, that is not what is in the act.

Mr. McLURE: That is what we want in the act. This is purely a farmers' mutual insurance company. It differs from most mutuals in that it has just a set rate. The farmers do not sign a note when they pay a premium for any liability that may occur. The company carries the entire risk, and the premium is very small, about one-third of what the tariff premium is. In this case—and there may be similar companies in the other provinces—I think the McDougall recommendation must apply. Surely the minister will make it apply in this case.

Mr. ABBOTT: Does my hon. friend know whether the company refunds premiums to its policy holders at the end of the year? I presume it does.

Subsection agreed to.

Subsection 2 agreed to.

On section 3, subsection 3—Cooperative companies and associations.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have a minor amendment which I will ask one of my colleagues to move to correct a flaw in the drafting.

Paragraph (i) reads:

The statute under which the corporation is incorporated or its charter or its contracts . . .

And so forth. I wish to insert after the word "charter" the words "articles of association or by-laws." Then in (iii) delete the words "and customers," so that it will read, "all its members are individuals." These are technical amendments.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move accordingly, Mr. Chairman.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. ABBOTT: The committee may recall that when we were discussing the resolution I indicated that I would give sympathetic consideration to the suggestions put forward that the section we are now considering should be made to apply not only to new cooperatives which started off without any previously acquired assets but to cooperatives which acquired an existing business. The Minister of Finance in his budget speech had indicated that it was the intention to restrict the operation of the section to a newly formed cooperative which had not acquired an already existing business. That was prompted by the fear that the provision might be utilized to operate what was really a private business under the cloak of a cooperative organization. But after the matter was considered it was felt that provisions could be inserted in the law to guard against that, and that has been done. Hon. members will see that there is a provision that there must be at least twenty members in the cooperative and that each member must have an equal share. Members will see that paragraph (vii) provides that the business must not be a continuation of a previous business in which, in the opinion of the minister, a substantial number of members of the corporation had a substantial interest, either as shareholders of a corporation carrying on the previous business or otherwise. So that with these protective clauses it is felt that the contingency of fraud is guarded against, and therefore the section is of general application to both a brand new business and one already existing.

Mr. BENTLEY: I appreciate what the minister has said, and I am glad that, on appropriate advice, he has made these changes, which are important. There is, however, one other change which he has not yet seen the need of. I honestly believe that the minister wishes to do the right thing as far as possible, and I have not said any harsh things in this connection; but if he could see the point which I shall endeavour to make, I believe he would be willing to make the necessary changes. What I have to say comes under paragraph (p). That is the provision to which I wish particularly to speak. I have advised the minister why we feel it is necessary to strike out the date line there so as to allow this to apply to a cooperative that may have started in the last two years or two years and eleven months.

Let me give one illustration that will have application to many other situations. When I spoke before, I used this illustration in connection with the cooperative horse-marketing association. It may be funny to talk about horse meat here, but I can assure the committee that it is not funny to those people who eat horse meat, nor is it by any means funny to those who own horses that are running at large, consuming grass that should be eaten by cattle and sheep at a time when we need such meat. I am going to tell a brief story and if I leave the track, Mr. Chairman, or if you think I am leaving the track, I will come back to it at once. I can assure you I will not be riding horseback or bullback while telling this story.

The minister, I am sure, wishes to remedy the situation that exists at the moment, because he told us frankly one day that the country was not being run by experts, and I was glad to hear that, because experts make expert mistakes. Experts make expert mistakes, whereas simple people make simple mistakes that require only simple correction in order to bring matters back to where they were before. It is for that reason I am telling this story.

For many years, as hon. members no doubt know, horses were our main source of power, and therefore the raising of horses was a business indulged in by a great many people and to a large extent by those who had ranges which could accommodate horses. In the last number of years, and particularly in the period of the depression, when costs of production had to be lowered, and during the war years when man-power was at a premium and machine power had to be introduced, it developed that horse owners, large anl small, found that they had unwanted horses. They discovered that only a few types were required. Light horses, general-purpose horses and some of the big types were no longer required, for the reasons I have mentioned. The result is that numbers of these horses are running over the country, eating grass that is needed now for cattle and sheep to produce beef and mutton. Everyone here knows how sorely we need beef and mutton in this country, and indeed how sorely the world at large needs such meat. It is therefore foolish to have horses grazing where you can raise cattle and sheep and produce beef and mutton.

The stockmen were faced with two alternatives. They could hunt down and destroy the horses or make them available either as feed for the fur farmers or as food for human consumption. Let us consider for a moment the first suggestion. If you hunt down and destroy the horses there is an expense involved in the process, while the only return you could get would be the hides and bones, and that would not pay. So far as making the horses available to the fur farmers was concerned, there was no possible chance of the fur farms in this country ever using up the supply. The next thing, therefore, was to find some market for the horses, to sell them to those who would use them as human food. That was done. A survey was made, and hon. members will appreciate that it takes quite a while to do all these things. Even the Department of Agriculture here was called in to assist, and after the survey was made it was found that the Belgians would use horses as food. They are fed on short grass, and there is no better meat if you can make up your mind to eat it. I have not tried it, but it is used to a large extent.

Here was an opportunity to get rid of the horses, replace them on these ranges by cattle and sheep, and still obtain something in return for the horses. Is that not good business? Is not every private enterprise man here willing to admit that it is only the part of wisdom for men who have produced horses for some time, and gone to the expense involved in their production, to seek to get some return for them? Well, money was required for the necessary processing of the meat. No one man could afford the cost of equipment, processing and so on. No one man could finance the whole undertaking from this country to Belgium. The result was that these people organized a cooperative, and that requires a good deal of work.

These horses were scattered all over western Saskatchewan and a great part of Alberta. The producers had to procure the necessary plant and equipment. The first thing they did was to interview the various horse owners and inquire what they thought of the idea, whether they would like to be members of the cooperative, and then get them to join and to supply capital and ship the horses to the plant. I think hon. members will appreciate how much organizational work would be called for there, the expense involved and the time necessary to make all the preparations. Of course much of the work was not paid for but some had to be paid for. I do not wish to labour the point as regards the work that was done, but my hon. friends who come from Ontario or Quebec can well imagine the amount of travelling that would be necessary in order to interview everyone who might possibly be interested in a similar project in either of those provinces.

They did it. That is the point. They did it and finally they got things going. The plant was set up, and the government of Saskatchewan underwrote the original debt to the extent of $50,000 and gave another guarantee on top of that. The buying commission acting on behalf of the Belgian people made arrangements with the Department of Trade and Commerce and made an advance, but the great bulk of the money was subscribed by the producers in actual cash or in the form of promissory notes. Actual cash, however, was necessary to pay wages and procure machinery. That has been done through the bank, and the amount involved has to be paid back either from earnings of the plant, from the proceeds, or from the pockets of these men.

That has all been taken care of and the plant is still going. Deliveries are being made. The Belgian government takes what it requires as long as the product is packaged as the people there want it. Small cuts are put into cans and sent to UNRRA, and a great deal goes to Poland.

I suggest that it is only just not to tax that cooperative but to treat it as one coming under the provisions set out here, except for the date line to which I have referred. Whenever it suits the purpose of the minister, and he wishes to support an argument he is making, he has recourse to the McDougall report. I would refer him to page 43 where the following paragraph appears:

It has been pointed out to us on numerous occasions that cooperative associations are difficult to organize—

I have told you how to organize one.

—and that their rate of mortality is high, especially in their earlier years. They are not in a position to attract capital for investment purposes,—

My investing friends will understand that.

—except in small amounts. Moreover, they are apt to find it difficult to finance the employment of the necessary managerial personnel.

That is quite true.

In addition, there is a pronounced tendency to organize cooperatives in times of economic stress. We are, therefore, of the opinion that in the public interest, cooperative associations, upon consent of the minister, should be exempt entirely from income tax during the first few years of their operation.

That is the recommendation by the royal commission, which I think—

Mr. ABBOTT: You notice the words there, "upon consent of the minister"?

Mr. BENTLEY: Exactly, and that is what I am trying to get. I am trying to get the consent of the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: That implies one of these discretionary powers to which so much exception has been taken, and we have eliminated that.

Mr. BENTLEY: I would remind the minister that I did not voice those objections. I am trying to "sell" the minister a bill of goods which I think he will like after he gets it, and which the cooperative associations will appreciate.

Let me come back to my illustration. This is what this horse marketing cooperative association does. First, it helps to feed the hungry people overseas. Everyone who gets some of this horse meat would otherwise go hungry. Whether we like it or not, they like it. It removes horses from range and pasture required by sheep and cattle. That is something every man in this country can understand. We require these things because to-day meat is rationed.

The cooperative was financed and equipped in the face of great difficulty. You need only to ask the people who undertook it and they will tell you of the difficulty. It has provided long-term employment for over a hundred additional people in that place. I believe that 125 people are employed there. It is a well-established plant. It is so well laid out that they have a pretty little nurse to take care of cut fingers and so forth.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENTLEY: The plant is well equipped. I shall not try to sell the nurse to the minister. The employment provided there is to the advantage not only of the city but of the country generally. These men are working; they are building houses for themselves. They are taking advantage of all housing plans. A great many of them are returned men because they get a preference, provided that they will take the job and are in physical condition to do the work, which, of course, requires men who are physically fit.

The cooperative stands to make no profit. It hopes only to reimburse to a limited extent owners of surplus horses whose previous reasonable expectation was to get an average price of $50 to $75 per horse, and who realize not more than an average of $25 a horse. I can tell the committee why that is. The horses are brought into the plant by the owners. They are graded according to the kind of flesh that is on them and to the best of the ability of the men who understand how to grade horses. It is not an extensive proposition but they do a pretty good job. For the best horses they can get only two cents a pound. A reasonably fat horse weighing 1,500 pounds at two cents a pound would bring in $30. Many of them will not bring in that much; the average is around $25. I am being rather generous. From the amount each owner receives is deducted the amount that he had to subscribe to the capital of the outfit, and it is so much per horse. Then, when the accounts are all made up, each one will be reimbursed according to the number of horses and the pounds of meat he has contributed. It will not be a great deal. I doubt whether it will average more than four or five dollars per horse, so that in the final analysis it will amount to $30 a horse. Surely no one will say that the men who own these horses are getting too much for the cost of producing the animal before it went to the plant. If we are to tax the outfit and make it much more difficult for them to go on with their work, then all that they have done in the past will be nullified by that three year clause.

When I was speaking on this matter a few days ago the minister said that he did not know much about it. I am going to prove my assertion by making him a little gift of this can of horse meat, just to prove that we have the plant there and are actually operating it. I give it to him with the compliments of the Swift Current horse marketing association. I use it as an illustration, because this is the one of which I know, but there are countless other illustrations all over the country which are in very much the same position. Therefore it should not be too much to expect the government to remove the provision dealing with 1947 and make it the first day of February, 1944, or something along that line and thereby remove the fears of these people who have been in this business so long.

Mr. ABBOTT: After listening to my hon. friend deal with the problems of the cooperatives, I first want to congratulate the Horse Cooperative Marketing Association Limited of Swift Current for their enterprise and initiative in forming this new association, and I thank my hon. friend for his courtesy in presenting me with his compliments, with this tin of horse meat and gravy.

Mr. FRASER: Are you going to throw a party to-night?

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall try it out on my family and see what the result may be. In a more serious vein may I deal with the question which the hon. member has raised as to making this exemption apply to cooperatives which are already in existence. The position is that a somewhat similar concession, if I may call it that, was given some time ago to the mining industry and is still in existence whereby new mines are exempt from income tax for the first three years after they come into production. At the time that provision was introduced it was urged, as it is urged now, that it should apply pro rata to mines which were already in production; for instance, one started a couple of years before that should get one year more. That was refused because the provision was put into the act as being in the nature of incentive legislation to encourage the opening of new mines. The same principle applies here. It is to encourage the formation of new cooperatives. A similar provision has been inserted which was made applicable to mines whereby new cooperatives would not be subject to income tax for the first three years. It is felt that we should offer the same principle here that we did in the other case. If the cooperative is formed, then the members are already persuaded of the desirability of engaging in that form of enterprise. The capital has been put in, or presumably some of it has been put in, and it is felt that the provision should not be made retroactive but should apply to new cooperatives for the three years after their formation. I may say we gave consideration to ths representations which were made by my hon. friend and also by hon. members on this side of the house that what he is suggesting should be introduced into the law, but it was felt that it could not be done.

Mr. IRVINE: If the cooperative is formed it cannot come under this act, because the act is on the books. The minister says that the purpose of this is to encourage new cooperatives, but if a new cooperative is strangled in six months it is not much encouragement for others to be born. I think the minister should change that.

Mr. ABBOTT: It will not be strangled as a result of income tax; let me assure my hon. friend of that. It may fail because its customers do not patronize it enough or because it cannot get capital, but no new cooperative will go out of business because of the burden of income tax which is imposed; I can assure my hon. friend of that.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I hope the minister will not take that can of meat and throw it in the garbage pail when he gets home. Last winter, when the university of Saskatchewan held their stock show they did not realize until after the date had been set that they had chosen a meatless day. They usually serve a lunch, and when they were about to decide what they were going to use in the sandwiches they discovered it was a meatless day and they could not have meat sandwiches. Somebody then had a bright idea, which was that horse meat was not included in meatless days or was not considered as meat. The superintendent of the institution sent to Moose Jaw and got a piece of horse meat, and I might say that we all had horse meat sandwiches that day. If we had not known it was horse meat we would not have been any the wiser. The texture is a little coarser than beef and the colour is redder. I am sure that if the minister tries that meat he will enjoy it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am looking forward to it unless my hon. friend wants to take it back.

Mr. CAMPBELL: No. May we return to the bill? We might be able to change the minister's mind a little further. When the budget was dropped in our laps and the Minister of Finance left for other parts I thought that possibly the acting minister might take a rigid attitude. I thought that, as a result, it would not be possible to have many changes made in these resolutions. I am pleased, however, to see that the minister has not taken that attitude; that he has relaxed to some extent. In a moment I am going to move an amendment which I hope will receive his favourable consideration, but before doing so I want to support the contention of the hon. member for Swift Current that a cooperative should be exempt for three years. The government has accepted that principle, and it was also recommended by the McDougall commission that a cooperative should be exempt for the first three years. You might take a horse meat packing plant, or you might take a cooperative such as we have in a little town close to where I live.

That cooperative was started last year. Under this section as it stands they are going to be taxed for two years, and we think the government should accept the principle, and support it by legislation, that a cooperative should be exempt from taxation for the first three years. So I am going to move, seconded by the hon. member for Swift Current, that on page 4 of the bill, paragraph (e), line 12, be amended by striking out the words "after commencement of its business" and in lines 13 and 14 by striking out the words "commencing business on or after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and forty-seven".

Mr. ABBOTT: There is an amendment already, so that this will have to be a sub-amendment. I submit, of course, what my hon. friend probably knows, that this amendment is clearly out of order. If adopted it would diminish the revenue, and as such is an amendment which can be moved only by a member of the government with the approval of His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. STIRLING: May I ask a question with regard to paragraph (iii), which is now the subject of the amendment to which the minister has already referred. I understand that this will now read "all its members are individuals". Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. STIRLING: Then what will be the position of a cooperative that receives produce for packing, grading and shipping from a farm which is owned by a partnership, a syndicate or even a company? In these packing houses to which I referred when we were discussing the resolutions the produce of quite a number of farms so owned passes through the hands of the cooperatives. Under this wording, does it mean that in future the new cooperative must not accept produce from a firm which is owned by a company?

Mr. ABBOTT: They could accept the produce of such a firm, of course, but I suppose that would be non-member business, if it were owned by a corporation. I do not know how these things work. I did not know farms were owned by corporations, but perhaps the president might be a member of the cooperative. In any event, for the purposes of this section a corporation cannot be a member of a cooperative if the cooperative is to qualify for this initial three-year tax exemption.

Mr. STIRLING: That is where one great difficulty arises in trying to understand these taxation proposals. As far as I know, those twenty or thirty cooperative shipping houses do not have membership. You ship through them, and in a certain sense a shipper through them is a member of that cooperative outfit. But it does the business of receiving, grading, packing, preparing for shipping and shipping the produce of the orchards and farms all around. The great majority of them are owned by individuals, but certainly there are cases of partnerships. Those are not individuals in the sense of this section.

Mr. ABBOTT: They would be within the meaning of this section. There is no question about that.

Mr. STIRLING: Others are owned by syndicates; I am thinking of one such at the present time.

Mr. ABBOTT: Then all members of the syndicate would be individuals and presumably under those circumstances would be members of the cooperative.

Mr. STIRLING: If they shipped their produce through the cooperative?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. This would exclude corporations from becoming members of the cooperative for the purpose of this initial three-year exemption. It is not contemplated that this special treatment for cooperative organizations should be extended to organizations which are mere holding companies for other companies, if I may so describe it.

Mr. FULTON: I have waited until the bill got into committee, because quite frankly I could not understand the effect of this proposed legislation when it was in the resolution stage. I should now like to ask the minister some questions in order to try to understand the effect of this legislation. First, I want to put the case of what I regard as a true cooperative; that is, a producers' cooperative where the business is carried on much as described by the hon. member for Yale. Take the case of a fruit growers' cooperative. They bring their produce to the cooperative. They do not receive an initial payment but merely a credit slip for so many boxes of apples. The cooperative then markets the apples; when it receives payment therefor it makes a distribution of the total proceeds, and each individual receives his proportionate share less his proportionate share of the expenses. What I do not understand is how that cooperative can be liable to pay any income tax at all, because I do not see that it has any income. Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree with my hon. friend; I do not think it has any taxable income at all under the conditions he has outlined. In substance, it is simply accepting the produce on consignment, marketing it, deducting the expenses and remitting the balance to its members. I quite agree with my hon. friend that under those circumstances there would be no taxable income whatever.

Mr. FULTON: I do not want to appear to be guilty of trying to catch the minister, because this is important, I think, when we come to the three per cent provision a little later on.

Mr. ABBOTT: If you want to cover that now, there would be no three per cent payment either, because there would be no taxable income out of which to make it.

Mr. FULTON: That is what I want to understand. This cooperative may have $40,000 or $50,000 worth of plant, to which the members have subscribed initially. In the case I am thinking of, the cooperative has its packing plant and a box factory as well, so I should like to have that clear. If it carries on its business in that way there is no taxable income in the hands of the cooperative; the income is not taxable until it has reached the hands of the individual members?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is quite correct. On the hypothetical case my hon. friend has put forward the cooperative would have no taxable income and, therefore, there would be no tax. In the same way the three per cent rule could not apply because there would be no income out of which three per cent could be attributed as a return on capital.

Mr. FULTON: But there is capital.

Mr. ABBOTT: I made that point clear in connection with the resolutions, that a cooperative may have employed capital; but its way of doing business may be such, the contracts it makes with its customers may be such that it ends the year without any taxable income, and if it has no taxable income, then it pays no income tax. There are plenty of other organizations which may have employed capital of $100,000 or $200,000 or $500,000 which pay no tax unless they earn taxable income.

Mr. FULTON: That is what I thought, and I am glad to have the minister confirm it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I want to make that perfectly clear. Mind you, it is only in a case such as my hon. friend suggests, where business is done in that way, that this result would follow; but in the case he has cited there would be no taxable income and the section would not apply.

Mr. STIRLING: May I remind the minister of the illustration I gave when this matter was before the committee in the resolution stage? Such a cooperative, for the benefit of its members, sets up a store in which it sells a great variety of things. At the end of the year the members of that cooperative receive a rebate on the amount of their purchases. That may be a first cousin to the patronage dividend which is used here.

But the public also shops at the store, and the amount of rebate paid back to the customers who are not shippers through the cooperative is a form of profit. That being the case, and this concern earning a profit on a fraction of its main business, does it get caught under this three per cent provision? It is an organization which, on a small portion of its business, has made a profit. Surely it cannot be mulcted to the extent of three per cent on its capital.

Mr. ABBOTT: The case which my hon. friend has set out is that of a consumer cooperative. It is a cooperative which provides its members with groceries.

Mr. STIRLING: It is a small subsidiary of a large producer cooperative.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. On that business which it does, if it returns to its customers a portion of its profits—and for want of a better term I shall call them profits—that is in effect a patronage dividend, and it is deductible from gross income under the bill now before the committee. If the same payment is made to non-members, that is deductible, too. Whatever payment is made to non-members is deductible.

But if I understood correctly the facts as my hon. friend recited them, the three per cent rule would apply there to the extent that the cooperative had employed capital. If the small cooperative which my hon. friend mentions had employed capital of $10,000, within the definition, three per cent on $10,000 would be $300, and it might be taxed $90. That is the extent of the tax, before it could distribute patronage dividends.

Mr. FULTON: Would they be allowed to keep those two businesses separate for taxation purposes—their producer cooperative and packing-plant business on the one hand, and the little store on the other?

Mr. ABBOTT: It is somewhat difficult to answer that offhand. I should think they would not have any income in the one case, and in the other case they would have comparatively small income, which would be subject to tax.

Mr. STIRLING: If I followed the minister correctly, I understood him to say that the three per cent would apply only to that portion of the cooperative which is used for that small subsidiary business.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, I do not think so. I think you would have to look at the cooperative as a whole. If it could so arrange its business that it had no income with respect to its producer operations, but could not so arrange it that it had no income with respect to its consumer operations, it might have to pay a small tax under the three per cent rule. But it is most difficult to give a definite answer on a hypothetical case without having all the circumstances before me.

Mr. STIRLING: But does the minister not see in my illustration that the only profit is made on a part of the business of the subsidiary, and the subsidiary itself is but a small part of the far larger cooperative organization. There may be half a million dollars in the cooperative organization—the packing house, cold storage plant and that sort of thing. But perhaps there is only about $10,000 of its capital used in this subsidiary that is selling groceries. Only a fraction of that can be called profit on the produce which is sold to non-shippers.

Have I not made plain to the minister that it is contrary to common sense that this organization of half a million dollars should be mulcted of three per cent of that capital because it has made profits on a small part of the business of its subsidiary.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is mulcted of three per cent of that capital. Three per cent of that capital is considered as taxable income. The whole three per cent is not taken. Three per cent is considered as taxable income, and a tax may be exigible. If the income is not there, there is no tax possible.

We say that three per cent of half a million dollars is $15,000. Let us suppose, on balance, that the little consumer ends up with a net income of $2,000. You could not tax on the $15,000. It would be three per cent on $2,000, which would be subject to tax.

Mr. STIRLING: That is clear enough, but it is not the way it reads in the bill.

Mr. ABBOTT: The section we are now considering is simply the exemption for new companies. But what I have said is a fact.

Mr. HANSELL: I had no desire to interrupt the continuity of the arguments being made, but I wish to rise to a point of order before a ruling is given on the amendment moved by the hon. member for The Battlefords. I notice that the Acting Minister of Finance almost declared the motion out of order himself. I have no objection to the minister's speaking to a point of order, but I object to his taking it out of the Chairman's hands, and declaring it to be out of order.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has not yet been ruled out of order. I just made a comment; that was all.

Mr. HANSELL: I know it has not been ruled out of order, but the way the minister spoke it would have appeared that he was chairman of the committee. I recognize that an amendment which would increase expenditures is out of order, but I say that an amendment which would indicate a decrease in revenue is not the same thing. I wish to protest against the ruling before you make it, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HANSELL: Otherwise your ruling becomes a precedent for future generations.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been a precedent for generations before this one.

Mr. HANSELL: If a ruling of that kind were made, then I do not see how budget resolutions could be amended in any way. An amendment of those resolutions would either increase expenditures or decrease revenue. If a ruling of that kind were given one could not possibly move an amendment to a tariff item, because the revenue of the country would be affected.

I claim there is a distinct difference between a motion for increased expenditures and one to decrease revenue. If the chairman were to give a ruling in this instance he would be acting in the position of an accountant, and in order to rule correctly he would have to bring in all the accountants in the country and say to them, "I want your report on this, as to whether or not it will decrease revenue."

Again I make my protest, before this becomes a precedent for future generations.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Before asking the minister the question I wish to ask, I want to arouse his sympathy for the fruit growers of my district by asking him to note that all those who are speaking in support of the fruit cooperatives are very thin and slender people.

An hon. MEMBER: You do not eat enough horse meat.

Mr. HERRIDGE: My question is this: what the hon. member for Yale and the hon. member for Kamloops said regarding fruit cooperative organizations is correct; but in some cases, in addition—and the organization with which I am acquainted in Kootenay is a case in point—the revolving fund, instead of paying the grower all his crop receipts less expenses at the end of the year, may with his consent deduct $100 or $200 and issue shares. Is that money taxable?

Mr. ABBOTT: I am advised that it is taxable in the hands of a member, of course, but not in the hands of the cooperative. It can be deducted for the purposes of the income of the cooperative.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to say a word in support of the amendment of the hon. member for The Battlefords. I do not think the minister was sound when he said that this is incentive legislation, because, as I understand it, under section 4 (p) of the old act any cooperatives that have been organized under a rule such as is suggested in subsection 3 here would have already been exempted from taxation and would not have paid any tax during the time they had been organized.

Mr. ABBOTT: No, not if the opinion of the Department of Justice is correct.

Mr. WRIGHT: At least, they have attempted to collect taxes in only very few cases.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is true, because it was only in 1942 or 1943 that the opinion was given that patronage dividends were taxable. Up to that point they had been considered as non-taxable; and the minister pointed out in his speech that the proposals that are being made here are based on the good faith principle, that people believed up to that point that they were exempt, and would be treated as such.

Mr. WRIGHT: That is exactly my point, that these cooperatives which have been formed of recent years and in good faith believed they were not taxable, and were given no notification that they were taxable, have not been paying taxes and yet now find themselves taxable. Any cooperative that was organized in 1945 or 1946 will be taxable, in one case for one year and in the other case for two years. I agree with the minister that this taxation is not of such a nature that it will kill any cooperative; but certainly a principle is involved, and it is a matter in which, I think, the minister should be fair, and should consider that these cooperatives formed in 1945 and 1946 should have the three-year exemption the same as a new cooperative, because certainly they have been exempt up to date under section 4 (p), and now the government is proposing to tax them, whereas a cooperative formed in 1944 and which carried on its business in good faith is not taxable, and one that is formed in 1947 will not be taxable. I think it would be only fair to treat them all alike.

Mr. ISNOR: If I understood correctly the answer given by the minister to the hon. member for Kootenay West, it was to the effect that neither a member of a cooperative nor a cooperative would be charged income on an amount of $200—which I think was the figure used—if it were reinvested or left in the business.

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, no; I said that the member would be subject to tax, of course.

Mr. ISNOR: I want to get that clear.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would be taxable income in his hands. I so stated.

Mr. BENTLEY: I did not know that when the Minister of Public Works said he was going to improve the acoustics of the house he was going to do it so well. It is a case of practically perfect timing, for I received the following wire just now:

> Horse cooperative urge that you endeavour to obtain three-year tax exemption from commencement of business for new cooperatives now in operation. Proposal in new section 4 paragraph (p) to exempt cooperatives organized after January 1, 1947, only a severe hardship on horse cooperative which commenced operations last October . . . .
> Horse cooperative marketing association.

Mr. FULTON: I wonder if I could put this further question to the minister along the lines of my previous question, to clear up the point as to whether or not a cooperative receives an income. I used the case where they did not make any initial payment but they gave a credit slip. Supposing they make an initial payment of $1 a box, then market the fruit and find that they can pay $1.25 a box. Is it to be held they have made a profit and therefore must pay income tax, or if they pay the whole $1.25 out will they still be regarded as not earning an income?

Mr. ABBOTT: That would depend on the terms of their contract with the individual member. If the contract mentions an obligation to pay them the dollar or more over and above handling charges, then they would have no income.

Mr. IRVINE: Just before the amendment to the amendment is carried I want to make a comment, Mr. Chairman, on a point of order which I expect you will be deciding. The hon. member for Macleod made, I think, a potent argument in favour of the proper ruling. However, although he argues that it should be in order not to increase a vote but to decrease it, I am afraid that to decrease it is worse for the government than to increase it, because they will be out that much money. But the point I wish to make is that this debate and all other budget debates are a complete and absolute farce as long as we cannot alter this vote or any other vote according to the will of the parliament of Canada. I am going to suggest that in this particular case, while the committee which attends to the rules of the house gets busy and changes this rule, the hon. gentleman who moved this amendment should add to it that we shall increase the tax on International Nickel and the Aluminum Company of Canada in exactly the amount which is deducted through the moving of the amendment, and that will leave the income and outgo exactly in balance. This ought to be in order, and I hope you will consider it, Mr. Chairman, before you give your ruling.

The CHAIRMAN: I have considered the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for The Battlefords. I would point out that the principle of the bill is based on the ways and means resolutions, and it would appear that the amendment would decrease the taxation and disturb the balance of ways and means, and it would accordingly not be possible for a member other than a minister of the crown to move such an amendment. I would draw the attention of members of the committee to May, 14th edition, page 758:

When a bill is based on ways and means resolutions all its provisions, not only those which impose taxation, must be covered by the resolutions on which it is brought in.

On those two grounds I must rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. FAIR: A short time ago the minister told us about two safeguarding clauses. One of them is referred to as paragraph (vii) of subsection 3 of section 3, which is to be found at the bottom of page 4 of the bill, in connnection with a business carried on by a corporation which is not in the opinion of the minister a continuation of a previous business, and so on. I wonder if I understand that correctly? Am I to understand from what the minister stated that a group of people living in a town and farmers surrounding that town cannot form themselves into a cooperative organization and buy out any business which is operating in that town?

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, they can do that. It is intended that they should. The purpose is to prevent the shareholders of a corporation which is operating as a private corporation from converting themselves into a cooperative.

Mr. BENTLEY: Suppose a cooperative which really was a cooperative found that it could not comply in all respects with the law of the province and found it necessary to reorganize. Would this apply to such a cooperative?

Mr. ABBOTT: They could not do so because there is a prohibition preventing a cooperative from reorganizing in order to get the benefit of this exemption. They could reorganize but they cannot get the benefit of the exemption.

Subsection 3 as amended agreed to.

On section 3, subsection 4—Credit unions.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have an amendment which I will ask my colleague to move.

Mr. McCANN: I move:

That subclause 4 of clause 3 of the bill be amended by striking out paragraph (q) and replacing it by the following:

"(q) The income of a corporation or association incorporated or organized as a credit union or cooperative credit society if

(i) the corporation or association derives its revenue primarily from loans made to members residing within the territorial limits within the province to which it is restricted for the carrying on of its business, or

(ii) the members thereof are corporations or associations incorporated or organized as credit unions which derive their revenues primarily from loans made to their members or under provincial cooperative legislation or for religious, educational or charitable purposes or corporations or associations, no part of the income of which enures to the benefit of any member thereof."

The amendment is designed to make the clause less restrictive by adding the words "or cooperative credit society" and by redrafting paragraphs (i) and (ii).

Mr. IRVINE: I notice that emphasis is laid on members being individuals.

Mr. ABBOTT: The amendment strikes that out, and enables other cooperatives to be members of a credit union.

Mr. IRVINE: I appreciate that, but I want to know whether the same restriction is struck out with respect to any other cooperative apart from credit unions.

Mr. ABBOTT: The reason it was struck out was that it was pointed out that a number of these credit unions lend money to fishing cooperatives and other cooperatives, and by their charter or by-laws they are prohibited from lending money to other than members. We do not wish unduly to prevent that type of business.

Mr. IRVINE: I think it is a fine amendment so far as it goes, but I should like to see it carried through, and I should like to press that point with respect to other branches of cooperatives.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no limitation on other cooperatives except with respect to the three-year provision.

Mr. WRIGHT: Will this amendment include a cooperative credit society in Saskatchewan where the cooperative and the credit union belong jointly to a credit society? Will they be included now?

Mr. ABBOTT: Under the clause as amended, yes.

Amendment agreed to.

Subsection 4 as amended agreed to.

On section 3, subsection 5—Service pay and allowances.

Mr. PEARKES: Does this apply to non-permanent personnel as well as to the regular forces?

Mr. ABBOTT: The only effect of this amendment is to exclude permanent force personnel from receiving the new rates of pay from the operation of the wartime tax exemptions other than as indicated in the section.

Subsection agreed to.

Subsections 6 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Section 3 as amended agreed to.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair, and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee on bill No. 368, to amend the Income War Tax Act—Mr. Abbott—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 4, subsection 1—Depletion.

Mr. ADAMSON: The question I have to ask the minister at this stage is based on the last three lines of this section, and that is the power given to the officials of the department. The language is quite specific: "The minister shall have full power to apportion the deduction between them and his determination shall be conclusive." With regard to the exhaustion or depletion of a mine or timber limit, we are by this clause giving, if I may say so, extreme powers to the department, and I suggest to the minister that the appointment of a referee on the question of depletion might be advantageous. I realize, of course, that this is a technical matter, but since, under the wording of the present section, the supreme and absolute verdict is with the minister and his department—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is only as to apportionment.

Mr. ADAMSON: Yes, only as to apportionment.

Mr. ABBOTT: He acts as a referee if they cannot agree among themselves. Where the lessor and lessee disagree the minister comes in. Somebody has to act as referee.

Mr. ADAMSON: I suggest that a referee be appointed where they cannot agree. I realize that this is not a question of the minister disagreeing in a case.

Mr. ABBOTT: This has been in the act for a great many years and there has never been any difficulty. The lessor and lessee, in case of disagreement, have apparently always been willing to accept the minister and so describe him. Somebody gets the full depletion allowance and, where there is a case of lessor and lessee, normally the lessor would get it. But it might be appropriate that it should be divided between the lessor and the lessee. If they can agree as to how the full depletion allowance is to be apportioned, well and good; that disposes of the matter. If they cannot agree the minister is in effect appointed sole arbitrator. That is the effect of this particular section. That is all it is.

Mr. ADAMSON: What machinery does the minister use? I can understand that the minister cannot himself sit on these questions. What in effect happens when there is disagreement?

Mr. ABBOTT: When there is a dispute the deputy minister or an official designated by him hears both parties, as any other arbitrator would do, and then makes a finding. In effect, he is acting as arbitrator. If the parties can agree among themselves there is nothing to do; their agreement makes the law, as it were. But if they cannot agree, then the minister is appointed arbitrator, and in normal circumstances he would act through his deputy minister or some appropriate official. I am advised that it has worked very well on that phase for a great many years. It has been in the law for a good many years, and it is safe to say it is pretty generally accepted by those affected as a reasonable provision.

Mr. ADAMSON: I realize it has worked, I will not say with entire satisfaction. But it has been an old clause in the act.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend will no doubt have noticed that in this section we are taking out the provision which gave the minister discretion to determine the amount which may be fixed as depletion and providing that it shall be determined by the governor in council, that is, by order in council. Of course that will be made public to all concerned.

Mr. ADAMSON: That means the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: It means the cabinet. It means that the governor in council will establish rates of depletion, and we believe that is better than leaving it to a single minister. On reflection, I believe my hon. friend will agree that that is desirable. Someone has to fix the rates. It is not desirable to fix them in the statute, because it might be well to vary them from time to time. They will be fixed in future by order in council, and that will be made available to all interested. It will be public property.

Mr. ADAMSON: But the order in council, once passed, is a final act.

Mr. ABBOTT: It could be varied a month later if that were desirable.

Mr. ADAMSON: But my suggestion is that if the order in council is passed the contestants or disputants have no chance.

Mr. ABBOTT: That just fixes the rate of depletion. Previously the minister fixed the rate. One man fixed the rate, and it has always been urged that it was not fixed by the minister but by the officials. I do not agree with that, but that has been the contention. Under the new procedure the rate will be fixed by the governor in council; then under the discretion clause at the end, if it is a case of lessor and lessee of these mining, oil or timber limits, if the lessor and the lessee cannot agree as to how the twenty or thirty per cent is to be divided, the minister acts as sole arbitrator. That is the effect of the section.

Mr. ADAMSON: In fact what it really boils down to is that the treasury board decides.

Mr. ABBOTT: The treasury board has nothing to do with the matter.

Mr. ADAMSON: The cabinet.

Mr. ABBOTT: The cabinet is not the treasury board.

Mr. ADAMSON: But treasury board—

Mr. ABBOTT: Is a committee of the cabinet for certain purposes; it has nothing to do with this at all.

Mr. ADAMSON: The cabinet decides the rate and passes an order in council instead of the minister deciding on the rate.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a cabinet decision instead of a departmental decision.

Mr. McMASTER: Could you fix a different amount for different mines? Do they vary in each individual case, or is there a general rule?

Mr. ABBOTT: A general rule is laid down; but if, for instance in the case of a coal mine, they could show that there is a definite coal deposit for which they paid a definite price, then that could be dealt with as a special case. After all, as the committee knows, the purpose of depletion is to get back the money which has been invested as capital in a wasting asset.

Mr. McMASTER: That is one of the reasons; the other is for the owner to get as much as he can in depreciation.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is a business argument.

Mr. JACKMAN: This section has to do with base metal mines, and inasmuch as the general reasoning behind the price of gold was made a subject matter in this debate I wonder whether the minister could enlighten the committee—because I am sure as many members are in the dark as I am— as to just why the government does not allow producers of base metals, such as copper, lead and zinc to obtain the world price for these commodities and in that way help not only the old mines but also the new ones.

Mr. ABBOTT: That hardly comes under this section, and I do not know that I have the information available at the moment. I shall take a note of my hon. friend's question.

Mr. JACKMAN: Surely it is as akin because the price of gold was under the various sections we were discussing; in fact, much more so. Obviously I do not want to take up the time of the committee in discussing the matter, but it is strange to many of us that our internal consumption of copper and other base metals is at a much lower price than the world price. We can understand that, because we are endeavouring to maintain a domestic price ceiling, but so far as the export of these commodities is concerned—and we are substantial exporters of copper, lead and zinc—it seems strange to the uninformed at least that the price which our producers get should be so much below the world prices.

Mr. CASE: I have a question or two I should like to ask. We are now dealing with section 4, I understand.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are on subsection 1 of section 4.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 2—Exemptions and deductions.

Mr. LANGLOIS: Though I had not intended to take part in the debate on the bill now before the committee, I wish, however, to make a few remarks on this subsection to-night. Like the great majority of taxpayers of this country, I should have liked to see in the bill greater exemptions to taxpayers in the lower income tax bracket. I, on the other hand, fully understand and realize the need for this government to raise the necessary funds for the administration of the country during these years immediately following a long and arduous war period with still heavy commitments resulting therefrom. I most heartily welcome the substantial reductions made in this bill, and I most particularly appreciate the fact that these reductions are inversely proportionate to the scale of the various incomes affected.

We are told that the total loss of revenue to the treasury can be safely estimated at an annual amount of approximately $150 million. I take pleasure in thanking the government for having been able to realize this substantial reduction in taxation, and I hope that succeeding budgets will gradually increase the rate of this relaxation in the taxation policy of this government. Like other hon. members, I, during the past two months, have received numerous representations asking that all personal income below $3,000 be exempt from taxation. Most of these representations were formulated on the hundreds of post cards of the type which I now hold in my hand, and which every member of the committee easily recognizes. In connection with these postcards, I received last week a letter, the contents of which I consider it my duty to make public at this stage of the discussion. The letter I wish to refer to enclosed one of these cards, and, since the letter was originally written in French, I am giving the committee as close a translation as possible. The letter reads as follows:

Cortéréal, July 24, 1946.

Mr. L. Langlois, M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—Last Sunday two men came to our church meeting with these post cards which they were selling five cents apiece urging us to send these cards to our member of parliament in order to help him obtain the abolition of income tax. They call this organization "L'Union des Electeurs" (Union of Electors). It is supposed to help you to obtain from the government what your electors demand. Is this good or not? Would you be kind enough to let me know as soon as possible, please, as these gentlemen will again be here during the month of August and if it is good I would like to work with them. Hoping to receive your reply at your earliest convenience, I thank you and remain,

Yours very truly,
Armand Lacombe,
St. Majorique, Cortéréal, County of Gaspé.

The contents of this letter are confirmed in the number of June 1, 1946, of the paper

Vers Demain, published at Beauceville-Est, Quebec, by "L'Union Creditiste des Electeurs de la province de Quebec."

In this number of June 1 of the said paper, I read on page 2 the following advertisement.

Pressure Cards.

Your federal member was in receipt of $4,000 a year of which $1,200 was exempt from income tax. He found himself badly paid. In the space of a few minutes he and his colleagues of Ottawa voted a bill to give themselves an increase of $2,000 entirely exempted from income tax. Your federal member, therefore, now receives $6,000 a year, of which $3,200 is free from income tax. Good for him but he should think of his electors. The electors are as much entitled as the member to live. Your member is selfish and has no heart if he does not claim with all the power and strength he possesses the exemption of income tax for every person whose revenue does not exceed $3,000. This is what you must tell him again and again.

Write now to your member to get your small income free from income tax. The office of Vers Demain has postal cards printed to express this demand. The only thing you have to do is to write the name of your member on one side and sign your name on the other. No postage stamp is required. Order these cards in great number and sell them around in your neighbourhood. Urge and have others urge your members with these claims for his electors.

Pressure cards, each $0 05
25 cards for 1 00

Address your order to Union des Electeurs,
C.P. 71 Station Delorimier,
Montreal, P.Q.

This is as nearly as possible a translation of the advertisement published in the said paper, which is the official paper of L'Union des Electeurs. From the letter I read a few moments ago it will be seen that this organization has now placed commercial salesmen on the road to promote the sale of these post cards. In case some hon. members do not know the organization calling itself L'Union des Electeurs, I add that this organization is a cover name for the Social Credit party in the province of Quebec, the head of which is none other than the national vice-president of the Social Credit party, Mr. J. Ernest Gregoire, former mayor of Quebec city. I am informed that the cost of these cards can safely be estimated, if printed in great quantities, at approximately one cent each, including the material. Therefore, if one makes the subtraction from the price at which these cards were sold, one can realize that the net profit made on each card by this organization which is selling them in the province of Quebec to-day, is four cents. I feel it my duty to denounce this scandalous exploitation of the public, and I ask the Minister of National Revenue to tell this committee whether or not the Social Credit party, or L'Union des Electeurs of the province of Quebec, are making income tax returns, since it would appear that this party is running a profit-making enterprise in that province.

Mr. JAQUES: Where do you get your slush funds?

Mr. LANGLOIS: I know that my statement hurts my hon. friend, but he is not through with it yet. Every member of this house can easily see, by the number of cards he has received, how much this party has made by selling these cards to his electors, who in turn address them to him. I must also add that this house and the public in general expect from the leader of the Social Credit party some explanation of such conduct on the part of his followers in Quebec, and, most of all, his national vice-president, Mr. Gregoire. We also expect him to tell this committee whether or not he approves such conduct. As hon. members no doubt have noticed, the last paragraph on the post card to my mind contains a threat to elected members of this house. The paragraph in question reads as follows, and I shall translate. This is addressed to the members of this house:

And please take notice that if you do not proceed with rapidity and tenacity I shall be obliged to refuse to vote for you at the next election.

I beg to refer the committee to paragraph 201, Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, 3rd edition, on page 85, which reads:

In the Commons, on the 12th April, 1733, and on the 1st June, 1780, it was resolved that it was a high infringement of the privilege of the house, a crime and misdemeanour, to assault, insult or menace any member of the house, in his coming or going from the house, or upon the account of his behaviour in parliament; or to endeavour——to compel members of declare themselves in favour of or against any proposition then depending, or expected to be brought before the house.

I underline this.

I might add that the electoral instructions also contain a similar disposition. I submit that L'Union des Electeurs, or the Quebec Social Credit party, are guilty of this infringement on the privileges of members of this house. The leader of the Social Credit party cannot pretend that this was done by members of his party who are not in authority, because it was done by the head of L'Union des Electeurs, who now acts as his righthand man, being vice-president of his party for Canada.

Mr. McMASTER: Paragraph (d) refers to allowances under this act, and provides an exemption of $100 for each child in respect to which an allowance under the Family Allowances Act was or might have been paid in respect of the last month of the taxation year, and so on. Does that mean that anyone receiving the family allowance can receive it for eleven months and still claim an exemption of $300?

Mr. ABBOTT: The rule is that you look at the taxpayer's status, as far as children are concerned, at the end of the taxation year. If he has a child which is eligible for family allowance at the end of the taxation year, then this section applies and he gets the exemption of $100. That will work both ways; it is bound to.

Mr. McMASTER: It cannot work both ways. If the child is born on January 2 he will get one month's family allowance and also the $300.

Mr. ABBOTT: What I meant is that if a child is born in December it becomes eligible for family allowance in that year, and that determines the taxpayer's status for that year. Had the child been born in January he would have had no tax exemption at all for the child in that previous year.

Mr. JACKMAN: Might I ask for an explanation as to why paragraph (d) says if a child is "wholly dependent" upon the taxpayer for support, while in paragraph (e) the words are "dependent upon the taxpayer". What is the meaning of that phrase, "wholly dependent"? If I can understand the English in which the income tax act is drafted I take it to mean that while the parent will get the family allowance—and by the way, I understand the family allowance is not taxable?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: Then we finally have that straight, because I hear a good many contradictory opinions on it.

Mr. ABBOTT: The family allowances are not taxable.

Mr. JACKMAN: The taxpayer is allowed an exemption of $100 for each child. Then in the other case you have the words "wholly dependent".

Mr. ABBOTT: Under paragraph (d) it is a statutory exemption for children wholly dependent upon the taxpayer. Under the following paragraph, (e), it is an amount actually expended up to $100, and there the word "dependent" is more appropriate. Of course this does not only cover a child; it includes parents and grandparents.

Mr. JACKMAN: What is the purpose of paragraphs (d) and (e)?

Mr. ABBOTT: Paragraph (e) covers not only children of the taxpayer; it includes children other than those of the taxpayer and collaterals, brothers and sisters, daughter under twenty-one years of age training as a nurse, and so on.

Mr. JACKMAN: The exemption provisions are the same with different classifications, different definitions?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, except that under paragraph (e) an amount not exceeding $300 must be expended for the support.

Mr. JACKMAN: What happens in the case of a child who under a will is in receipt of a few hundred dollars? First of all, does the child become entitled to family allowances?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes; it is the parent who receives the family allowance.

Mr. JACKMAN: That would happen in any case.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. JACKMAN: Under the ruling as it exists at the present time, I believe that if a child receives an independent income of $400 or more, there is no allowance to the parent.

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe that is correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: With all these changes one only learns how the law operates when changes are made in a subsequent year. It is difficult to keep up with these changes in detail. What is the situation now of a child who has an independent income? How much must it be before the parent loses $100, or does the parent get the $100 exemption.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no change in that respect. The same rule applies, namely that a child with an independent income of, I believe, $400 is not considered as being dependent upon the taxpayer. There is no change in that respect.

Mr. JACKMAN: The dividing line is $400; is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, $400.

Mr. McMASTER: This may work the other way. I have in mind the case of someone who is helping a child that is not his own. If it happens that during the last month of the year this was a child which could have received family allowance, then the adopting parent will receive only $100 exemption, instead of the $300.

Mr. ABBOTT: Correct.

Mr. McMASTER: It will not be adopted then, until after the first of the year.

Mr. ABBOTT: That seems reasonable and businesslike.

Mr. McMASTER: Kind of hard on the child.

Mr. CASE: I understood the minister to use the expression "the amount actually expended," but the word "actually" does not appear here. It does refer to an amount not exceeding $100.

Mr. ABBOTT: That was just my language.

Mr. CASE: But by the use of the word "actually" it would mean that the taxpayer must prove that he has expended this money.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not the case. I should not have used the word "actually," certainly not to be intepreted in that sense.

Subsection 2 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 3—Certain pension payments.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to ask the minister a question on this subsection. I understand it is based on resolution 26.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am having some difficulty in making it hang together grammatically. Could the minister explain it to me?

Mr. ABBOTT: I made an explanation on resolution 26. Has the hon. member a specific question?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Would the minister just read the thing through?

Mr. ABBOTT: While I had thought that the word "proportion" in the first line should be "portion", I am advised by my officials that the word "proportion" is the correct one. The paragraph reads:

(h) that proportion of a payment out of an employees' superannuation or pension fund or plan the investment income of which has been exempt from taxation under this act by reason of an election for such exemption by the trustees or corporation administering the fund or plan

(i) that the aggregate of the amounts paid by the employee into the fund or plan during the period when its income was exempt by reason of such election is of the aggregate of all amounts paid by him into the fund or plan; or

(ii) that the aggregate of the amounts paid by the employee into the fund or plan during the period when its income was exempt by reason of such election together with simple interest on each amount so paid from the end of the year of payment thereof to the commencement of the superannuation allowance or pension at three per centum per annum is of the aggregate of all amounts paid by him into the fund or plan together with simple interest as aforesaid on each amount so paid, whichever is the greater.

That means whichever proportion is greater. I admit is it complicated, and I find some difficulty in following it. But it was carefully drafted by the officials in the Department of Justice, and I am advised that it gives full effect to the resolution.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Perhaps it was the minister's excellent reading which has made me understand it better. I understand that it goes right back to the word "proportion".

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes, that is correct.

Subsection 3 agreed to.

Subsections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 6—Repeal.

Mr. McMASTER: Is there a paragraph (i) still in subsection 5?

Mr. ABBOTT: Paragraph (i) is no longer in the section.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): We thought three discretions had been taken away, and it is only two. Why is there this reversal?

Mr. ABBOTT: Those are spent provisions. They are no longer of consequence, and they are being repealed.

Subsection 6 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 7—Unusual medical expenses.

Mr. CASE: This subsection would appear to be a complete reversal of what we have been accustomed to in the past.

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. CASE: If I am interpreting it correctly, I am certainly in favour of the subsection as it now stands. But it would seem that we are going to allow an individual taxpayer exemption up to a certain ceiling for the cost of medical services he can prove by vouchers.

Mr. ABBOTT: There is no change in the law. We are simply substituting "paragraph (c), (d) or (e) of this subsection" for the words "rule 5 of section 1 of paragraph A of the first schedule to this act". We do that because we are now incorporating into the act provisions which were formerly included in the rules. There is no substantive change in the law.

Mr. CASE: The subsection properly interpreted means that the taxpayer receives an exemption up to $900, if married, and $150 for each dependent child, for medical services, dental services, nursing care, hospitalization and the like. Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: The subsection, so far as exemptions are concerned, is exactly the same as it has been for the last year or two, under section 5 (1) (n). That section states that "income" shall be subject to the following exemptions and deductions; and these are the deductions under (n):

That portion of medical expenses in excess of four per centum of the income of the taxpayer incurred and paid either by the taxpayer or his legal representatives—

Within certain periods. Then there is the provision which we have here, stating that if payment is made to a medical practitioner, dentist or nurse, and so on.

Mr. CASE: That is where they are wrong. I say the taxpayer should receive consideration for the amount of medical expenses he actually expends up to a certain ceiling, in order that he would obtain receipts or vouchers for the amount he might pay his doctor, dentist or hospital. This should be given consideration because, as the subsection now stands, there are very few people who will benefit in any sense of the word.

The small income earner will suffer most, the one who probably has a fair-sized family. He does not expend an amount of money which would bring him within the exemption. I do not know why the department could not consider reversing the provision entirely, so that an individual would receive exemptions for medical and dental care, and for hospitalization, up to a certain ceiling for a married person, with so much for each dependent, and also a certain amount for a single person.

Mr. ABBOTT: I commented on this at some length a year ago when the provision was first inserted. The hon. member will notice that the wording in the statute is "unusual medical expenses". It was never considered appropriate that a man should deduct from his income the amount of his ordinary medical expenses; that is part of the expense of living. But is was felt that in cases where an individual was put to expenditure entirely beyond the ordinary amount of medical expenses, some relief should be given by permitting that excess to be deducted from income; and it was thought that, broadly speaking, four per cent of a man's income was a not unreasonable amount to treat as normal medical and dental expenses to which one would be put. This provision has been in the law for some time, and I think it is based on sound principles.

Mr. CASE: Of course no act is perfect. I do not know that my formula would improve the situation, but I am sure the minister will agree that the present act lends itself to considerable fraud. I am speaking from some knowledge when I say that certain fees are settled for certain amounts if no receipt is given. That is to say that the practitioner who is being paid does not have to show that in his income. I am indicating that if every taxpayer insisted on a receipt, with the thought in mind that he would have consideration up to a certain amount, you would have some method whereby you could verify receipts and expenditures. With this method, as the average person does not expect to reach the allowable amount, he does not get receipts; maybe he should. I am speaking of a means which I think might be employed to the advantage of all and would still result in the same amount of revenue for the government.

Mr. FLEMING: There are two matters to which I should like to draw the attention of the Acting Minister of Finance. I was bold enough to put them before the Minister of Finance last fall; I hope the acting minister will be a little more receptive than the minister was then. My points relate to unusual medical expenses. That expression "unusual medical expenses" means, not unusual in nature but unusual in amount—

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. FLEMING:—because ordinary medical expenses are naturally included in making up the amount in excess of four per cent of income.

The first of the things which I think ought to be included among medical expenses are drugs prescribed by physicians where the prescription is filled by a druggist. As matters stand at the present time, if the physician himself fills the prescription, supplies the drug or medicine and simply adds it to his bill, the department allows the amount along with the medical service as a medical expense. If, however, the physician writes a prescription and the patient takes the prescription to the drugstore and has it filled there, the amount paid the druggist for the drug or medicine is not allowed. I contend that is an anomaly which ought to be corrected. I cannot see any justification for it in principle. As I understand it, the reason given by the department hitherto is that it is difficult to administer, that you might have frauds perpetrated by taxpayers acting in concert with druggists. Surely the danger is no greater than that of taxpayers working in combination with physicians, for that matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: There are a lot more drug stores, though.

Mr. FLEMING: Well, more should be considered than the convenience of the department in administration. Regard should be had to the equities, to giving fair play to the taxpayer, and just because a man happens to reside in a city where a physician does not fill his own prescriptions is no reason why he should be deprived of the benefit given by this section as regards his expenditure on drugs and medicine. It might run to substantial sums; yet he gets no consideration for it at all. If he happens to live in a part of the country where the physician fills his own prescriptions he gets the allowance in full. I submit that is an injustice.

The other point I should like to put before the minister is this. At the present time the section as amended in 1945 permits the inclusion in medical expenses of the salary and wages of an attendant of a person who is an invalid, and—

> . . . an amount expended on an artificial limb, a spinal brace, a brace for a limb or an aid to hearing for the taxpayer, his spouse or any such dependent.

I want to urge on the minister that aids to seeing be included just as are aids to hearing. There is no distinction in principle between them. That would include glasses in all forms, and everybody knows they can be very expensive. Why should aids to hearing be allowed and yet aids to sight be disallowed? In that regard I think the department ought to include artificial eyes. Why in the one case should an artificial limb be allowable, whereas an expenditure, which might be quite substantial, on an artificial eye is not allowed? I submit an injustice is done there and it ought to be corrected.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will take a note of my hon. friend's representations. As he knows, they have been made on a number of occasions by himself and others.

Mr. MacINNIS: I was wondering whether the minister would give an example of what "unusual medical expenses" are as interpreted in the administration of the act. Would he give me a case of what is considered an ordinary medical expense and what would be considered an unusual medical expense?

Mr. ABBOTT: As the hon. member for Eglinton has pointed out, what is meant by "unusual" is, unusual in amount. Four per cent of the income is considered ordinary or usual, normal medical expense; but when the medical attention is of such a nature that the expense is in excess of that amount it is considered as being unusual medical expense, beyond what would ordinarily be expended in the normal course of events.

Mr. HACKETT: Will the minister say if these chairs which are used by paraplegics are included among the equipment for which a deduction is allowed? The minister knows of the work which has been carried on, and how essential this implement is to persons who are afflicted with paralysis below the hips. The use of the chair requires an education of some months, and it really has taken these men from their beds and placed them afoot and enabled them to carry on useful occupations.

At the same time I should like to associate myself with the hon. member for Eglinton in what he has said about an allowance for artificial eyes and aids to sight.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am advised that no claim has ever been made for this particular type of aid. It sounds as though it were really a type which should be included, and I would hope that it would be specifically included here, but my colleague the Minister of National Revenue and the deputy minister tell me that no claim has ever been made.

Mr. HACKETT: I can readily understand that. The minister knows better than I the work which is being carried on by this society in several of the provinces. It is organizing to do work through all the provinces, and what it is achieving in the way of regeneration is truly remarkable. People who are absolutely bedridden and incapable of even dressing themselves have, with training and the aid of this device, become capable of entering active life again. If the minister will take a note of it, it might be possible to do something.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will indeed.

Mr. McKAY: A deduction is allowed from income tax on account of unusual medical expenses paid to a medical practitioner. Does this include expenses for treatment given by chiropractors and osteopaths who are registered under provincial laws? Does it also apply to payments to registered optometrists and opticians?

Mr. ABBOTT: I understand that it has to be a payment to a qualified medical practitioner or dentist and I think that optometrists, chiropractors and osteopaths are not included.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Does it include Christian Science healers?

Mr. ABBOTT: No.

Mr. FLEMING: Referring to the minister's answer regarding optometrists and opticians, as I understand the rulings of the department payment for the services of an optometrist in making an eye examination is allowed as a deduction from income but not the fee paid the optician or optometrist for filling the prescription which follows the examination. That again emphasizes the anomalies that exist as the section now stands and perhaps to some extent in the administration as well. Where do you find a distinction in principle between medical expenses for the services of an optometrist in making an eye examination and expenses for services in filling the prescription which follows to correct some error in refraction? Surely we have to have regard for fair play in matters of this kind. Is that not an anomaly that would shock the common sense of the man on the street? I cannot see any distinction in principle there. It may facilitate administration to eliminate expenses of that kind, but to many taxpayers it adds a considerable burden, and surely there is no distinction in the cases I have cited between the fee which is allowed and the fee which is disallowed.

Mr. ABBOTT: Sometimes it is difficult to draw the line. However, the charges will seldom exceed four per cent of the taxpayer's income. This is to provide relief where a man goes through a long illness or an expensive operation or a long stay in hospital. A man who gets an eye examination by an optometrist, even if it were expensive, could not avail himself of the relief provided under this section.

Mr. FLEMING: Does that not emphasize the reasonableness of including optometrists and opticians? The minister admits that it will apply only in cases where a man's medical expenses exceed four per cent of the income. If, in addition to an expensive illness, a man has to pay for the services of an optometrist or optician he should be allowed these expenses. To include them would afford him relief and correct anomalies that are patent.

Mr. McKAY: Would the minister explain, if he can, why treatment by medical practitioners does not include an osteopath who has had five years' training and is registered under provincial law and a chiropractor who is also registered under the same law?

Mr. ABBOTT: Let me correct what I said before. I am informed that osteopaths and chiropractors are included if they are qualified under the provincial law.

Mr. FRASER: And chiropodists if they are registered?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct, if they are entitled to practice under the law of the province.

Subsection 7 agreed to.

[Mr. Fleming.]

On section 4, subsection 8—Subsistence allowances.

Mr. ABBOTT: The only change here is that in the allowances of permanent Canadian naval, military or air forces receiving the new rates of pay are not exempt under the war-time exemption provisions.

Subsection agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 9—Deferred maintenance and repairs.

Mr. PROBE: There is a situation which should be drawn to the attention of the minister, which perhaps was not intended when it was first decided to give income tax relief on deferred maintenance account. The fact that corporations are now spending large sums of money in improving plant and equipment because of the relief granted to them in the payment of excess profits tax is creating double bidding for construction supplies and personnel engaged in the construction industry. The minister should seriously consider changing the regulation whereby deferred maintenance must be carried on in the period laid down by the act. Can the minister give the committee some indication of the amounts that have been permitted by way of exemption on deferred maintenance account from 1941 to 1946? I think that is tied up closely with the present scarcity of building materials and skilled craftsmen.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have no figures on that. The section is not yet operative, because the period in which this deferred maintenance is being carried out and carried back to a previous year has not yet been designated. The committee will recall that the period within which this work must be done is a period to be designated by the governor in council, and because of the very situation to which the hon. member has referred, namely, a shortage of labour and supplies, it has not yet been felt advisable to designate that period. Whether it will be six months or a year from now it is not possible for me to say. The original thought was that after the war there would be need to stimulate building, the making of repairs and so on, that labour and materials would be available and that the work which was necessarily deferred in 1942, 1943 or 1944 could be carried out in 1946, and then a portion of it charged back to the period in which the work might properly have been carried out. But conditions have not yet been such that it has been thought advisable to designate that period.

Mr. PROBE: Then there is no relationship between this provision and what looks to the casual observer as a large industrial replacement programme?

Mr. ABBOTT: Any industrialist who feels obliged to do maintenance work now will lose the benefit of this section.

Mr. PROBE: My theory would be absolutely wrong on that basis.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend was mistaken as to the fact that it is not yet in operation.

Mr. PROBE: I felt there should be some regulation by which unnecessary deferred maintenance could be further deferred.

Mr. ABBOTT: That has been accomplished by not yet designating the period.

Mr. McMASTER: I opposed this in the resolution stage, and I recall that the hon. member for Stanstead referred to certain corporations which were operating during the war at a loss.

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe that was on double depreciation and not on this section. This is the deferred maintenance section. I am not sure, but my recollection is that the question was put by the hon. member for Stanstead on double depreciation.

Mr. McMASTER: There is another clause dealing with this?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. McMASTER: If it means anything, I should think the minister has certain powers to allow deductions from income excess profits tax. Is that not the case where they go on and do something at the present time and allow deductions?

Mr. ABBOTT: This section cannot operate for any work which is done at the present time. The only benefit which can be obtained from the deferred maintenance and repairs provision here is work done in a period yet to be designated.

Mr. McMASTER: What kind of work? Maybe I can find out what it means and then discuss it.

Mr. ABBOTT: It might be reconstructing a brick wall in a plant; it might be putting in new tubing or boilers, or putting in all kinds of equipment which would be the normal repair and maintenance work during the war years, but which, because of shortage of labour and materials, could not be done at that time.

Mr. McMASTER: The minister will recall that at that time I said there was always a depreciation allowance in their hands in actual cash. The corporation that had no excess profits and no profits would have no depreciation.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have had this same discussion with my hon. friend before. These would have been current operating charges in the year. They were not items which could have been charged to depreciation account. They would have been current maintenance expenses, which are operating charges and are different from replacements and capital expenditure which could have been charged to depreciation account.

Subsection 9 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 10—Provincial taxes on mining or logging.

Mr. ADAMSON: As the minister may or may not remember, on the budget resolutions I moved an amendment to resolution 11, which was accepted by himself and by the house. Subsection 10, paragraph (w), which is new, reads, and I will put it on the record for the purpose of clarification:

> Subsection 1 of the said section 5 is further amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:
> "(w) Such amount as the governor in council may by regulation allow in respect of taxes paid to the government of a province on income derived from mining or logging operations in the province."

I moved an amendment, which was accepted, to include all mining and logging operations whether they were the principal operations of the corporation or not. In other words, my amendment, which was accepted in connection with resolution 11 of the ways and means resolutions, meant that a corporation operating a mine could get a reduction from federal taxation for the taxes paid to the province for the operation of the mine, even though the operation of that mine was not the principal business of the corporation. So far so good. In many provinces mines are operated on a royalty or fee basis. I wish to clarify the act a little bit in my own mind and, I hope, in the mind of the committee by jumping from here to section 5, subsection 2, paragraph (o) on page 17 of the bill. The marginal note is: "Deduction not allowed except tax on mining or logging operations". Let me read paragraph (o):

> Any corporation tax paid to the government of a province except any such tax the deduction of which may be allowed by the minister as a royalty or rental on natural resources in the province.

It seems to me—and I should like to have the minister's opinion on this—that these two clauses conflict. In the clause before us you get the reduction, irrespective of whether it is on a royalty basis or a fee basis, irrespective of what tax is paid to the province. But in paragraph (o) on page 17, you are taxed on royalties. I do not want to jump ahead, but it appears to me, on reading the act, that these two clauses conflict.

Mr. ABBOTT: No; they are not in conflict. Paragraph (w) of subsection 1 of section 5 of the act allows deduction from taxes paid to the government of a province on income derived from mining or logging operations—that is, provincial income tax as such. When we come to paragraph (o) of subsection 1 of section 6 of the act, that relates to corporation tax other than income tax except royalties or rentals on natural resources which are deducted. I assure my hon. friend there is no conflict between the two. Under the first section, provincial income tax on that particular kind of income in the province, which to-day ordinarily is not allowed, will in future be allowed, and royalties and rentals on natural resources which have always been allowed will continue to be allowed under paragraph (w). The new section is paragraph (w), which we are now considering. In the past, provincial income tax was not allowed as a deduction in the case of logging and mining companies. In the future it will be, and royalties and rentals always were. That is preserved.

Mr. ADAMSON: I wanted to get that clarified because I was rather worried lest royalties were not going to be considered as direct taxation paid to the province.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is not the intention to interfere in any way with the revenues derived by provinces from these natural resources. That is the purpose behind these two sections.

Subsection agreed to.

Subsection 11 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 12—Reduction of deduction.

Mr. FRASER: During the last week I have come in contact with a number of people who do not seem to understand this subsection. Just to-day I discovered that a married woman in one of the departments of the government told her chief that she would have to quit, owing to the fact that any money she made would be deducted from her husband's income. I think the minister should explain the subsection. The way I explained it to this woman was that if she had $1,000 income and her husband had $1,500 they would have $2,500 between them and the exemption would be $1,500 altogether. On her income she has a deduction of $750, whereas she had a deduction of only $660 before. Therefore she is better off now.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is quite correct. Each would file a return and each would claim $750. The woman would pay at the rates of $250 and the husband at the rates of $750.

Mr. FRASER: People across the country do not seem to understand that.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is quite correct in the statement he has made.

Mr. JACKMAN: First of all, I should like to say that this section is one of the worst sections in the present budget and one which will materially affect the amount of labour and services which are likely to be provided during the next year. What I wish to point out is that when the wife's income reaches $750 the husband is treated as a single man and gets a straight exemption of $750 instead of the marital exemption of $1,500. If paragraph (a) and not paragraph (b) were carried out, then if the wife earned $750 the husband would have $500 taken from his $1,500, which would give him an exemption of $1,000; whereas under the application of paragraph (b) the husband's exemption drops immediately from $1,000 to $750, when the wife earns $750 and not $749.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: It seems to me that that is an unfair law which makes such a difference. I have calculated the tax as follows: If the wife earns $750 instead of $749 there will be a tax of—

Mr. ABBOTT: It makes a difference in the exemption of $250.

Mr. JACKMAN: Yes. Would the minister explain why paragraph (a) is not carried through instead of paragraph (b), which gives this radical step rather than giving a gradual adjustment which takes place under paragraph (a)?

Mr. ABBOTT: Because it was not practical or desirable to do it dollar by dollar and the $250 unit seemed the appropriate one.

Mr. JACKMAN: I find that if the wife earns $1,000 that reduces the husband's exemption to $750 rather than the $1,500 and the wife is also taxed on the $250 additional, The result of the tax operation on the wife's income and on the husband's exemption is that the tax on that $500, which is the difference between $250 which would be free to the wife and the $750 which she earns, bringing her up to the taxable bracket and the husband into the single exemption bracket, would be $235, or a rate of 31·3 per cent on the $750 which seems to be extraordinarily high and undoubtedly will result in fewer people working than would otherwise be the case.

Mr. ADAMSON: I wish to point out to the minister that one of the serious results which will follow from this clause is that a great number of the most efficient members of the stenographic staff of the house may seek employment elsewhere or do nothing, and I assure him that is a serious matter.

Mr. ABBOTT: That may be. This feature was introduced into our income tax structure as a wartime measure and as a measure to induce women to work in war plants and war activities under the high war-time rates of tax; but now we are going into the peace-time period with reducing rates of tax. It was never intended to be a permanent part of our income tax structure and it is not a permanent part of the income tax structure of other countries. As I pointed out when we were on the resolution stage, if a married man in the United States wants to take the benefit of the married exemptions he must include his wife's income with his own for purposes of filing a return, and that is much less favourable than this provision.

Mr. FLEMING: I should like to put two cases before the minister illustrating the way in which this section is going to work out. Take the case of the husband who earns $1,500 and the wife $749. The husband's deduction would be reduced by $449 out of the $749. He would then pay income on $1,001, as I understand it. But if the wife earned $1 more, namely $750, then the husband will lose the benefit of the full $750 deduction. Surely there is an anomaly there. If you are going to make a difference of $251 in the result as respects deductions from the husband's income when the wife earns that $1 more, being the difference between $749 and $750, it does not seem right.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think the correct interpretation is that the extent to which the wife's income runs over $250 is deducted from the husband's exemption, and that continues to the point where the husband and the wife each have an exemption of $750, or are treated as single persons for income tax purposes.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister has not dealt with my point. Take the case I put. When the wife is earning $749 on this basis the husband is entitled to $251. But when she earns $750 the husband loses the whole deduction. Because the wife earns one more dollar it costs the husband $251 in deductions.

Mr. ABBOTT: In the case that my hon. friend has mentioned the husband's original exemption of $1,500 would be reduced by $499.

Mr. FLEMING: Yes, but if the wife earns one more dollar it is reduced by $750, not $500.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. FLEMING: If the wife earns one more dollar in addition to the $749, it costs the husband $250 in deductions.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. FLEMING: Surely that is an anomaly and an injustice.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I wish to speak briefly on this item, since I feel that it will adversely affect practically every industry in the county I represent. In the canning industry a great portion of the work has always been done by women, to the extent that one-half of the people employed in the canneries to-day are women, and quite a large proportion are married women. This work cannot be done by men. To-day the production of food is one of the major problems confronting the world, and I believe that this regulation will have a tendency to curtail production at a time when every effort should be made to increase it, particularly canned goods, since they can be shipped to any part of the world where people might be faced with starvation or famine.

If this change would result in taking married women out of jobs that could be filled by war veterans and married men seeking employment I would support it 100 per cent, but that is not the case in the three large industries in the county of Charlotte, all of which will be affected by this measure. I speak particularly of the canning industry, which, as I said before, employes hundreds of married women. I would refer also to Canada Cottons at Milltown, Charlotte county, and Ganong Brothers; and there are many smaller industries engaged in the smoking, skinning and so on of herring, particularly on Grand Manan island, where a great many of the girls and women employed are married.

My argument is that from the point of view of revenue I feel confident this regulation will be responsible for a loss rather than any gain to the government. Take, for example, a married woman employed in the canning industry in which, as I have already said, much of the work can be done only by women. Let us say she is able to make $5 a day, which many of these women are earning in the canneries at the present time. I am sure the proposed tax would not be more than $2. Under ordinary conditions this same woman can pack twenty-five cases of sardines a day. The wholesale value of twenty-five cases of sardines would be not less than $150, on which the sales tax would be $12. Suppose this woman refuses to work owing to the increased taxes. This government, by insisting on the collection of $2 in income tax, will lose the $12 in sales tax. I can assure the minister that this condition will exist in Charlotte county when this regulation goes into force, and it would appear to me to be exactly the same circumstances in which the dog found himself when he reached for the shadow and, in doing so, lost the bone.

Since I do not believe in criticizing without suggesting some solution, and while this is perhaps an unusual case, I would suggest that married women engaged in seasonal work or on piecework be exempt from this regulation. My reason for suggesting this exemption is that married women doing this type of work are in a position to regulate their earnings to coincide with the exemptions set out in the regulations, and without doubt it will be responsible for a great reduction in the production of necessary food and other commodities much needed at the present time.

Another matter was brought to my attention only this evening by a gentleman from my own county whose wife is a schoolteacher. She had agreed with the school board in the town of St. Stephen to teach during the coming term, owing to the scarcity of teachers all over that province. When this regulation was announced in the press she went back to the school board and told them she would not teach. I am told that at the present time they are looking everywhere for schoolteachers. I know the same condition existed in New Brunswick during the war, when we had perforce to get married women to go back into the schools, and I feel that this regulation will have an adverse effect in that direction also, for I am sure that many schoolteachers who are also married women will refuse to work under these conditions.

Mr. McMASTER: I would suggest to the minister, as I intended to do on the resolution but did not, that the exempted $250 be applied only to investment income, and that the exempted income from earnings be increased to $500. I believe that would overcome the objections raised by the last speaker and would overcome the objection in the cities where women go out for cleaning and other work which takes only part of their time but which is absolutely essential. I believe there should be a difference in the treatment given investment income and that given income earned by hard work, and I think if the minister would accept this amendment it would overcome many of the objections to this regulation.

Mr. ABBOTT: The $250 is to cover any kind of income, whether investment or earned, but over that figure the exemption of the husband is reduced proportionately. I do not believe we would be justified in making a distinction over $250 between an earned income and investment income.

Mr. McMASTER: There is a great deal of distinction in actual life between the person who gets three per cent on $8,000 and the woman who goes out and slaves at cleaning and other manual work.

Mr. FRASER: Previously the minister said this exemption was introduced during the war in order to encourage women to work. Is the present regulation being put in now to discourage them from working?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. It was an exceptional provision, one which would not normally be part of an income tax structure and one which really cannot be justified on the ground of fairness as between different taxpayers. It was put in as a bit of bait, if I may use a somewhat vulgar phrase, but it is not a fair provision as between all taxpayers in this country, and should not be part of a permanent income tax structure. That is the point I am making.

Mr. FRASER: Under the set-up in 1947 there will be a difference of only $180; that is how much better off they would be if they were each earning incomes of $750, or $660 as it is at the present time. They would gain $180; but when you apply this $250 clause and the married woman earns just $750, in 1947 she will be away in the hole in comparison with her position at the present time. It makes a big difference. There is a difference of $410 between the $250 and the $660.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is true there will not be the same tax incentive; there will be more taxes to pay, but the joint exemption under the act in certain cases could go up almost to $2,500.

Mr. FRASER: How do you get that between the two of them, when the exemption is only $660 each?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, I am sorry; it is $1,860.

Mr. JACKMAN: I just hope the minister will look at the advertisements put out by his colleague the Minister of Labour under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I am sorry I have not a copy of one which I clipped when this item was first announced, showing the number of women who were wanted to fill various positions as compared with the number of men. I think in that small advertisement covering some twelve or fifteen inches there must have been four or five hundred women wanted for various occupations, whereas the number of men wanted was only two or three hundred.

Mr. ABBOTT: We have always advertised for women, but we did not give them tax exemption.

Mr. JACKMAN: I am saying there is a greater shortage of women to fill various positions than there is a shortage of men, and certainly this clause is an example of non-incentive motives in this budget. The minister has not made this change in the regulations so much from the point of view of income, I believe, as to have what he calls his ideal in fairness. I find many people complaining of this dog-in-the-manger attitude. There are many cases where the wife has no obligations, or her children are grown up, or she has no children, and she is quite prepared to work. But under this change which the minister is proposing the minimum tax on the family unit which will result from the wife's earning over $250 is 25 per cent, and from there it goes on up.

Mr. ABBOTT: It is 22 per cent.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is about 25 per cent, if the minister will look into it.

Mr. ABBOTT: The starting rate is 22 per cent.

Mr. JACKMAN: All right, call it 22 per cent, if you wish. It will rise up to almost any figure, even up to 80 per cent, which is unreasonable—as also is the 22 per cent. But what I am saying is that if we are interested—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We cannot hear the hon. member. Is he holding a party conference?

Mr. JACKMAN: Then I shall speak up so that the hon. member for Fraser Valley can hear me. If the government is interested in defeating inflation, surely what it must get is production of more goods and services. This section will eliminate from the labour supply of Canada literally tens of thousands of people who are willing to take either full-time or part-time work. By accepting this section we are therefore more likely to have inflation and to defeat price control than we would if we did not make the change now proposed. I therefore suggest to the minister as strongly as I can that consideration be given to leaving the legislation as it is. It was changed in order to bring about war production, and I have not yet heard that we do not need production in this country.

Subsection 12 agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 13—Interest on borrowed moneys.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have some minor amendments to this subsection.

Mr. McCANN: I move:

That sub-clause 13 of clause 4 be amended:

1. By inserting the words "or within twelve months thereafter" after the word "year" in line 8 of page 14 of the bill, and after the word "year" in line 27 of page 16 of the bill;

2. By inserting a comma and the words "articles of association or by-laws" after the word "charter" in line 46 on page 16 of the bill.

Mr. JAENICKE: I do not think the amendments have much effect on what I was going to say in connection with the new subsection 8, or subsection 13 of the bill. If I interpret the section correctly, I believe I can say that we in this group appreciate the slight concessions made by the government since this piece of legislation was in the resolution stage. However, we do protest that even part of the savings made by a cooperative for its members should be taxable, whether it is paid out or deferred.

I mentioned in my opening sentence that, if I understood the interpretation of this section correctly, we appreciated it. In that connection I may say, however, that while I believe I have a reasonable capacity for the interpretation of a statute, yet I find not only this section but all sections dealing with cooperatives very difficult to interpret. As a matter of fact, I do not know whether I have it right now.

Mr. STIRLING: Nobody does.

Mr. JAENICKE: It is also singular that, although every other subsection has a marginal note, this one has none. It seems to me that the minister is afraid to comment on this section dealing with cooperatives.

Mr. ABBOTT: All we could have said was that the subsection was new. That is the marginal note used for a number of others.

Mr. JAENICKE: Instead of asking the minister questions, I shall read to him my interpretation of the section, in my own language. Following that, he can tell me whether or not I am right. This is the way I interpret it: That there may be deducted the aggregate of the payments made to his customers, or patronage dividends as we call them, in proportion to the patronage (1) if they are made within the taxation year; (2) if they are made within twelve months after the taxation year, and (3) if they are made within the year or, under the new amendment, within twelve months after that year in respect of a previous year which has not been previously deducted, and upon which the association has paid taxes; but if allocation is not made in proportion to patronage in respect of all his customers at the same rate—in other words, allowing a co-operative to discriminate between members and non-members—then the surplus of business done with non-members is taxable. Is that the correct interpretation?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think that is quite correct.

Mr. IRVINE: Why does it not say that, then?

Mr. STIRLING: I would draw to the minister's attention at this stage a statement by the secretary of a group of cooperatives, and ask if it is correct:

Again I believe Mr. Ilsley when he introduced the resolutions said they would apply to all organizations ending their fiscal year in 1946.

Two of our producer cooperatives end their fiscal year on January 31, which means they will be liable to taxation on their business done from February 1, 1945.

Is that correct?

Mr. ABBOTT: Section 4 (p) is not repealed for the 1946 period, and the new section permitting the deduction of patronage dividends comes into effect for the year 1946. If these cooperatives have been acting, as I have no doubt they have, in good faith, on the "good faith" principle enunciated by the minister in his budget speech, they can rely on section 4 (p) as it now stands for the period referred to up to February 1, 1946. From then on they can rely on the new section which permits of patronage dividends distributed in 1946.

Mr. STIRLING: And on the business done in 1945 the present arrangement will not count?

Mr. ABBOTT: The new arrangement will not count. They will be protected by the good faith principle on 4 (p) as it now stands.

Mr. STIRLING: Then may I come to this next question:

The position of consumer cooperatives is rather different—

He has been dealing in his letter with producer cooperatives.

—and I am asked to call to your attention that in their case surplus from trading operations paid or credited to members or non-members is not profit at all, but a saving on cost of the necessities of life and production, which only touches their individual liability to pay income tax in so far as it may in some cases reduce expenses of production and so slightly increase their taxable income. It is very devious thinking which holds that in a saving on purchases purely for consumer use there can be a real profit either to the cooperative or to a member thereof.

What has the minister to say to that?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, that is a point which has been discussed by others in the course of this debate. The McDougall commission did not agree with the view which is expressed in that letter, and I do not know that I can add anything to that statement.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask the minister a question as to what action it is necessary for the cooperatives to take with respect to the allocation of savings to individual accounts before they will be deductible. For instance, if your cooperative have a $10,000 saving during a year, and at their annual meeting at the conclusion of that year they pass a resolution that fifty per cent of that shall be in the form of cash and fifty per cent shall be allocated to the individual in the form of an investment or saving, left there in the revolving door fund to increase the stock or assets of the corporation, will that be considered by the government as sufficient notice?

Mr. ABBOTT: Well, only if it is paid, or constructively paid. They cannot rely on a resolution of the cooperative; that is, they cannot rely on a corporate action to authorize that retention. It must be authorized by the member himself. If the member so authorizes the reduction by the cooperative, that is permitted, because there would be then a payment or constructive payment.

Mr. WRIGHT: A resolution at the annual meeting of the members of the corporation or cooperative would not be considered sufficient?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; a majority resolution of that kind would not be sufficient. I think we discussed this, and I answered some questions on that when we were dealing with the resolution.

Mr. BENTLEY: As to "constructively paid", would that not be allocated but not paid out?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; that would not be a constructive payment. A constructive payment would be if they allocated the money to the member, he was free to take it, and, instead of taking it, he said, "You keep it and use it, as a loan from me"—or whatever it may be—"in the cooperative".

Mr. BENTLEY: To be constructively paid it must be exigible on the member's demand?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We had certain assurances given to us before in connection with the cooperatives. Do these proposals change the situation in any way?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; they do not change it in any way. These in fact implement any assurances I may have given.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Then my small town friends across the way are talking for political purposes only.

Mr. BRYCE: When the resolutions were before the house I told the minister that I objected to this three per cent clause. I still feel the same way about it. I pleaded with the minister to make some concessions in the matter, but evidently I have not a pleading way, because he never listened. I want the minister to know that I do object to that, because you are driving the cooperatives to be a profit-making class, which they are not in. I have said that before, and I know that no one will want me to repeat my arguments, but I have a couple of matters which I want to straighten out. Take a cooperative whose employed capital amounted to $100,000; they would pay three per cent on that, or $3,000; would they be taxed thirty per cent on that $3,000?

Mr. ABBOTT: Only if they had $3,000 of taxable income. They could have $100,000 of employed capital, but if their affairs were so arranged or the cooperative operated in such a way that they did not have taxable income—

Mr. BRYCE: Well, I wish the minister would let me finish, because I am at a disadvantage; when you get a dirt farmer up against a lawyer you pretty well knock him off his thinking. In that instance we will assume that the cooperative had $10,000 of savings, and we divided $8,000 to the members in patronage dividends and had $2,000 left; would that cooperative pay three per cent on the $2,000, or would they pay three per cent on $3,000?

Mr. ABBOTT: If the $10,000 which my hon. friend mentioned were taxable income within the meaning of the act they would pay on $3,000. They could distribute $7,000 as patronage dividends and deduct that in full, but they would be obliged to pay the tax on $3,000 before distributing the balance as patronage dividends.

Mr. BRYCE: I said $8,000 and $2,000 left.

Mr. ABBOTT: They could have distributed the extra $1,000, but they would be liable to pay tax on it.

Mr. BRYCE: Take the next year, with this same turnover of business. We distribute $6,000 in patronage dividends and we have $4,000 left. Will we pay three per cent on $4,000 or on the $3,000?

Mr. ABBOTT: You will pay tax on $4,000 because that would not have been allocated but would have been held in reserve I suppose. The permissible distribution and the deduction which would be allowed on the figures the hon. gentleman has given would be $7,000 distributed as patronage dividends tax free and the $3,000 would be subject to tax.

Mr. BRYCE: That means that if the cooperative made no savings at all, if it suffered a loss, it would still have to pay 3 per cent on its working capital?

Mr. ABBOTT: No. If it suffers a loss there is no tax on the capital employed. That is the point I made this afternoon in answer to the hon. member for Yale. There is no tax on income if there is no income. That is the test. If a cooperative is earning no income at all or suffers a loss, or if it so arranges its affairs that there is no taxable income, the three per cent does not apply, and that will be the case I am certain with a good many cooperatives.

Mr. BRYCE: I still think it is not right. I have been a cooperator all my life. As I said here, I was born in a cooperative home, and I cannot for the life of me see why you drive the cooperatives into the profit-making class where we never had any right to belong.

Mr. FAIR: Is this three per cent a baby of the Department of Finance, or is it an illegitimate child sponsored by the Department of Finance and fathered by Winnipeg and Toronto organizations? In my opinion this has been brought about by pressure from outside from organizations opposed to the wheat pool and cooperative organizations. If the minister and his colleagues will read the newspapers they will find that there is at present in the prairie provinces at least action being prepared that should make the members here sit up and take notice. I have frequently expressed my opposition to this move. I do not think it is in the interest of the country. As I have pointed out time and again, the farmers have been robbed quite enough by the prices they have been forced to take for their produce, without this robbery or confiscation being extended still farther. I want to make it quite clear that I am definitely opposed to this three per cent tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: This provision was not inspired by any outside source.

Mr. MICHAUD: I should like to ask the minister a question. Taking the figures used by the hon. member for Selkirk of a cooperative with $100,000 employed capital, the minister said that the cooperative would not have to pay income tax if it did not have taxable income. If we assume there was a surplus, say of $6,000 in the course of the year's operations, is there any way in which the cooperative could so arrange its business that there would not be any taxable income?

Mr. ABBOTT: I used to charge a lot of money for giving advice, but I doubt if there is any way of doing that if it waited until the end of the year. Possibly it could so arrange its affairs at the beginning of the year that it would not have a taxable surplus, but I do not think it could wait until the end of the year and then decide to make it nontaxable.

Mr. BRACKEN: If a cooperative pays three per cent interest to its members on credits the members may have advanced to it or on money borrowed from the members, is such interest treated as an exemption from the taxable income?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes. It is applied against the three per cent on employed capital which we have been discussing. In other words, in the case that the hon. member for Selkirk gave, if there were employed capital of $100,000 and the members had furnished $100,000 in three per cent debentures, the three per cent paid to the members would be deducted from the earnings of the cooperative, and the three per cent rule referred to in this subsection would not apply.

Mr. BRACKEN: Suppose the money had been advanced not in the form of debentures—

Mr. ABBOTT: It does not matter in what form it was advanced as long as there was an obligation to pay interest on it, except bank loans or credit union loans.

Mr. BRACKEN: I want to ask another question. Let us assume that there are two cooperative organizations the same in every respect save in the way in which they distribute their earnings or savings or profits, or whatever you choose to call them. One of them says: "We propose to distribute all these savings or earnings in the form of patronage dividends." The other one says: "We are going to pay three per cent interest to our members and, after that, we will pay any balance there may be in patronage dividends."

Do these two cooperatives pay different taxes, or do they pay the same amount to the government?

Mr. ABBOTT: If they pay it out as dividends the result is exactly the same. If they paid it as interest on debentures, then it is deducted as an expense from gross income before arriving at net income, if any. The result is exactly the same.

Mr. BRACKEN: Is this correct? The government says to the cooperative which has been paying out its earnings as patronage dividends: "If you pay three per cent of that in the form of interest you will not be taxable but if you pay it all out in the form of patronage dividends you are going to be taxed."

Mr. ABBOTT: As between the two cooperatives, they are put on pretty much the same basis. In the one case, the members of the cooperative are getting in effect interest on their investment in the corporation in the form of a patronage dividend, which would be nontaxable in the event of this rule not being here. In the case of the other cooperative, its interest would be paid to the members. It would be deducted from operations as an expense; the remainder would be paid as patronage dividends, and it would be income in the hands of the members.

Mr. BRACKEN: My question is a perfectly fair one—

Mr. ABBOTT: I am not suggesting it is not.

Mr. BRACKEN: I think it is a very important one, and I think the committee should understand the government's answer to it. Here is one cooperative which says, "We will pay out all our earnings, savings or profits in the form of patronage dividends". And here is another which says, "We will pay three per cent interest to our members first, and if there is anything left we will pay it in patronage dividends". What the government is saying to these cooperatives is this: "If you pay your earnings in the form of patronage dividends you will be taxed, but if you pay them in the form of interest you will not be taxed." That is what I interpret your new law to be, and if that is to be the law, that policy does not deserve to be supported in this house.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am afraid I have not been able to follow the example my hon. friend has given. If they pay it in patronage dividends it is deductible and if partly in patronage dividends and partly in interest it is deductible.

Mr. BRACKEN: But the minister said part of it is not taxable if you pay it all out in patronage dividends. You have to keep enough to pay—

Mr. ABBOTT: You do not have to keep any of it. You have to pay tax on a portion of it. A portion of it is considered as taxable income. It is eminently fair as between the two types of cooperatives. Each has in fact earned a return on capital investment. One has done it by having borrowings on which it has contracted to pay interest; the other has obtained the money in the form of a loan without interest or by the accumulation of reserve capital invested, and in effect the members who receive patronage dividends from the total earnings of the company are receiving part of their patronage dividends as an earning on the investment which they have—not on the business, but on the investment. This, if anything, tends to prevent discrimination as between the two types of cooperatives. A great many do have capital in the form of dividend-paying shares or in the form of interest-bearing securities of one sort or another.

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not get up to argue this point but only to get a straight answer to a straightforward question. Is a cooperative which pays out all its earnings or savings or profits in the form of patronage dividends taxable or not?

Mr. ABBOTT: The law as proposed here is that a cooperative cannot pay out all its earnings in patronage dividends if it has employed capital.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then it is taxable.

Mr. ABBOTT: To the extent of three per cent of employed capital.

Mr. BRACKEN: It does not matter to what extent, it is taxable.

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. BRACKEN: Then here is another cooperative, constructed in the same way, but they say, "We will pay our members three per cent interest and, if there is any more to pay out, we will pay that out in patronage dividends". Will that cooperative pay you taxes?

Mr. ABBOTT: They will not pay us taxes, but they have less to pay in patronage dividends.

Mr. BRACKEN: You say that in the one case they pay taxes and in the other they do not pay taxes. Ordinarily the purpose of a taxing law is to raise revenue, but what is this government doing? It is bringing in a policy which may not raise revenue at all, because it says to the cooperatives, "If you continue to pay out your earnings as patronage dividends you will be taxed", but it says also, "If you pay it out as interest you will not be taxed". What is the government doing? It is accomplishing nothing but this, the driving of people from cooperative methods into something else. It is obviously not a taxation law at all.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am glad the leader of the opposition spoke as he did, because I believe he bears out what we have been trying to say in this corner of the house, and that is that the proposed object of the bill seems to be to drive the cooperative movement into the category of profit-making enterprise. I believe this is the pivot of the whole bill, this three per cent argument, and that is why I propose to say something on it.

In the first place, I was interested in listening to-day, on another item, to what the minister said, that we cannot make a distinction between income that is earned and income that is derived from investment. I thought that sounded a little strange coming from a good Liberal, so I sent for Adam Smith's "Wealth of Nations," published in 1776, upon which I understand much of Liberalism is based, because I have always understood, as anyone who studies any economics at all understands, that there is a difference between income earned and income derived from investment. If we refer to Adam Smith's book we shall find a statement which goes back a long way and shows how far Liberalism has strayed from the actual theory on which it is supposed to rest. I quote the following from page 35:

> Labour, alone, therefore, never varying in its own value, is alone the ultimate and real standard by which the value of all commodities can at all times and places be estimated and compared. It is their real price; money is their nominal price only.

That means that there is only one source of wealth, namely labour. In other words, there is only one source of income in the long run, and that is income which is earned. Income from investment is only secondary and incidental income which is derived from somebody else's labour. That is a fundamental principle that good Liberals should be willing to accept. I am surprised that the acting minister does not accept it, because even one of our good friends of the Progressive Conservative party to-night accepted that theory, when the hon. member for High Park suggested that income derived from work should be treated differently from income derived from investment. I congratulate him on his socialist outlook, and I congratulate also the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, for he, too, is coming our way.

What I wish to refer to particularly is this. The whole three per cent question is based upon capital employed. I have tried on several occasions to find out how we can arrive at what is meant by capital employed and I have not been successful. At the top of page 16 of the bill hon. members will find "capital employed in the business" defined in paragraph (b) as follows:

"capital employed in the business" shall be computed in accordance with the first schedule to the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940.

If we turn to the first schedule of the Excess Profits Tax Act of 1940 and examine it we shall find that there are four categories of capital employed in the business under this definition: (a) cost of assets, and it states what that means; (b) accounts receivable less reserve for bad debts; (c) value of assets acquired otherwise than by purchase; and (d) amount of money and bank deposits. To the last one I should like to direct the attention of the committee—the amount of money or bank deposits actually used by the taxpayer in the business.

It is well known that in most cases cooperatives do not begin with large capital investment. They try to carry on business with as little capital as possible. It could then be construed, if anyone wished to do so, that every dollar which comes across the counter, in the case of a consumer's cooperative, and which is used to carry on business, to buy goods from the wholesale cooperative, or from any wholesale, is capital employed in accordance with paragraph (d) of this definition. If that were the case then the amount of capital employed in the business would be a much greater sum than is generally accepted or expected. I hope the minister will clear that up for us.

A great deal has been said to find out why the government are so adamant in regard to maintaining this three per cent position. They have been willing to withdraw from some of the ground that they have taken before and to acquiesce in some of the amendments presented. The key to the whole thing is to be found in the remarks of the Minister of Finance when he made his budget speech on June 27 of this year and when he said, as reptorted at page 2921 of Hansard:

The principle underlying this rule is that amounts set aside out of taxable income to be distributed in proportion to patronage by a cooperative or company which does not pay at least three per cent on the capital employed in its business contain earnings which arise from the employment of captal and ought not to escape tax entirely.

That brings me back to what I started with, namely, that the government have now come to the position where they are going to make the cooperatives say, or are putting the cooperatives in the position where they will have to admit, that money earns money, something which the cooperatives repudiated from the time they were first organized.

Mr. ABBOTT: Not necessarily that money earns money.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: That is practically what the minister said. He said that this money has come out of the employment of capital and ought not to escape tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: It may be elevators or it may be warehouses.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Yes, but that is not the way it has been explained to us in the discussion. What it means is that the cooperative associations which believe in service at cost are to be forced into the position of having to admit that money is the governing factor in these societies. They will have to admit that money makes money, something incidentally which Adam Smith repudiated in 1776 when he pointed out that money does not earn money; that the only source of wealth is labour applied to natural resources. In this day and age we find that the government which only about a year ago blazoned forth in large letters that they were going to bring in a new social order in Canada, have now repudiated the very basis of their own Liberalism and are not bringing in a new social order. They are going back—I do not know whether they are going backward or forward; they do not know either; they are going somewhere, but far from the basis of Liberalism.

I condemn this with the strongest words at my disposal, because I believe that everything that has been said here points to the fact that there were outside influences at work. The Acting Minister of Finance says there were no influences from outside sources. I have to take his word for it; but I happen to know something about the campaign which has been carried on by the income tax payers' association. I know that the basic thing which they want to accomplish is not the collection of a few piffling dollars for the public treasury, to use the words of the Minister of Veterans Affairs—

Mr. MACKENZIE: In what respect is the government going back?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What they wanted to accomplish was to force the cooperative associations of Canada into the position where they would have to acquiesce in this legislation and agree to or admit or accept the principle that money makes money, something which the cooperatives have been trying to get away from all these years. The government are going to destroy the very basis upon which cooperation is based.

Mr. ISNOR: I should like to say a word on this section. I appreciate that hon. members would like to see this section carried after just one side of the question has been presented.

With respect to the government driving the cooperatives into a profit-making organization, may I say that my interpretation is quite different. If anything, the government is leaning backward to assist the cooperatives by allowing them to enjoy exemption from income tax on their profits for the first three years to establish themselves in business. If there is no profit to be made and if the cooperatives are against the principle of using money to make money there is no need for them to show a profit. If they do not show a profit they will have no income tax to pay. That is as concise a statement of the picture as I can present it. It is purely a matter of principle. If the cooperatives and those who are interested in cooperative business say they do not want to make a profit, and if they do not take a profit they do not have to pay tax.

In regard to the question of capital employed, why should they not pay interest on capital employed? May I correct my hon. friend who referred to assets such as merchandise, bills receivable and cash on hand. No doubt he had reference to loans. That is all capital employed. That is the basis of the term "surplus" or "capital employed" as it applies to income tax. That is the recognized base on which you make up your tax returns and also your balance sheet, which you must present if you are borrowing money from a bank, as many of us have to do. The bank asks for your balance sheet. It looks over your assets and liabilities, and the difference between one and the other gives the surplus or capital employed.

The private enterpriser—and I am one of them—is obliged to pay either directly or indirectly on the amount of capital invested in his business from the day he goes into business. What happens to the cooperatives? There are allowed three years' exemption and do not have to face the same situation as the private enterpriser. Therefore I say it is a distinct advantage which the government is offering to the cooperative as against private enterprise.

My hon. friend also referred to the fact that you may consider capital employed in connection with every dollar which goes over the counter. Again I say he shows his lack of experience. One is a direct exchange, money, the medium of exchange for commodities or goods sold by the merchant whether he is a free enterpriser or a cooperative. That is not capital employed; it is just an exchange medium for the goods. One person is on one side of the counter and the other stands behind the counter. The one behind the counter passes out his goods and the other passes over his money or the medium of exchange, which goes on to the manufacturer. It is not capital employed. My first explanation is the real capital employed, which the cooperative enjoys, while the free enterpriser must pay on the day he goes into business.

I just wished to make these few observations to show that there is a definite difference of opinion in regard to this matter and it is not all one-sided. As a supporter of the government, if I had any criticism to offer, I would say that the government in its offer is leaning too far backwards to satisfy the cooperatives owing to the pressure that has been put on in parliament. It is true that the income tax payers' association have sent out a lot of propaganda, but I do not think the average person took very much stock of it. He did not take any more stock of it than the average person took of the barrage which was put across by the cooperatives. Therefore the benefit derived by either the tax payers' association or those supporting free enterprise or the cooperatives can be discounted. I repeat that the government has gone far in trying to meet the wishes of the cooperatives and has given them an actual handicap with which the free enterpriser has to contend.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I should like to reply to one statement made by the hon. gentleman which I do not think is quite correct. He referred to a barrage by the cooperative associations. In all fairness, I think he should admit that the cooperative associations of this country did not do any lobbying or put any pressure on the members of this house at all—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Before you begin to laugh—

Mr. ISNOR: It was not necessary in your case, perhaps.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: They did not do so until they found it necessary to defend themselves from those who were attacking the very basis of their existence. Then naturally they had to dispel the propaganda being put out against them. Before I sit down, I want to reiterate that I am not criticizing the government for not having leaned far enough backward. The way they lean I am afraid that some time they will go back so far they will end with a catastrophe.

Mr. ABBOTT: No danger.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am not trying to win any more concessions from the government in connection with this bill. I think we have reached a deadlock and there is no use talking about the matter much longer. But I am making a wholesale condemnation of the motives behind the bill itself. For the benefit of the senior hon. member for Halifax, who seems to be trying to persuade me that there is such a thing as earnings on capital, I want to say I repudiate that idea. I go back to Adam Smith again, at page 66. Listen to his words:

> In that original state of things, which precedes both the appropriation of land and the accumulation of stock, the whole produce of labour belongs to the labourer. He has neither landlord nor master to share with him.

That ought to be something for the hon. member to think over. If we were to go back to the original basis of things—

Mr. MACKENZIE: What is that you are reading from?

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The "Wealth of Nations", by Adam Smith; not Adam, but Adam Smith. One of the reasons I enjoy listening to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is that he often makes the statement that we should go back to fundamentals, back to the practical things of life. Certainly here is one place where we should go back to the fundamentals; that is, that the wealth produced by labour belongs to labour in the first place. The only way private enterprise or capitalism or whatever you want to call it could make any claim at all was because they had got themselves into the position where they expect to profit from the labour of others. To-day they are trying to deny to the people who produce the wealth the privilege of retaining that wealth. They say no; three per cent of it must be paid out as earnings on capital, which is a myth and which has no basis in any economics. It is a myth created by capitalism in order to make people feel that money creates wealth, and I repudiate that argument.

Mr. BENTLEY: I should like to follow up the question asked by the leader of the opposition, who brought out in a different way some of the things we have been trying to point out. In the first place, I agree that this is bad law. If I correctly understood the replies of the minister to the leader of the opposition, he told the hon. gentleman that if one cooperative over here pays all its money in patronage dividends, then the last four lines of this subsection would apply. They must first be taxable on three per cent of the capital employed; but if the other cooperative over there were to pay out the money by way of interest, they would not be taxable. That was the answer, was it not?

Mr. ABBOTT: Not all out in the way of interest.

Mr. BENTLEY: That is the way I understood the reply to the question.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps my hon. friend had better finish what he has to say, and then I shall have my say.

Mr. BENTLEY: I shall give an example, taking two cooperatives and bringing them down to plain figures. Each has an employed capital of $1,000. At the end of the year each finds that it has earned three per cent, which means that each has earned $30. The first one says, "We will pay it out in patronage dividends on the basis of the business done with the cooperative during the year." The second one says, "We will pay it out on the basis of three per cent of the capital employed." The first one is not taxable. The second one must first declare three per cent of its employed capital before it can pay out any money. Consequently it cannot pay out anything until it has paid three per cent of that $30.

Mr. ABBOTT: No. In the case of dividends there is no difference between the two companies. They are treated in exactly the same way. A great many cooperatives do have capital in the form of shares, on which they pay dividends, and some have capital in the form of borrowed money on which they pay interest. The leader of the opposition quite properly and perhaps shrewdly took the case of a cooperative which has interest-bearing indebtedness on which it pays interest, and he compared that with the case of a cooperative which had no capital in the form of shares or interest-bearing indebtedness. The hon. gentleman said that in the one case, the case of the company which had part of its capital or all of it in the form of interest-bearing indebtedness, it can deduct that interest from its gross earnings and pay out the balance in patronage dividends, and it will not pay any corporation income tax. The other cooperative, on the other hand, which earns exactly the same amount and which has employed capital of the same amount—the hon. gentleman used the figure of $100,000—but whose employed capital is in the form of neither shares nor borrowed capital, cannot pay out all its earnings in patronage dividends. It must pay corporation income tax of three per cent of its employed capital. That is perfectly true; the leader of the opposition is right in that. The main purpose of this section is to avoid discrimination between various types of cooperatives, some of which finance on the basis of shares and borrowed money and others of which build up revolving funds or reserves or amounts which have been left without interest, and also to introduce some measure of equity in relation to private businesses which have to raise their capital by paying interest or dividends. That is the purpose of this section. It does not involve large sums in revenue, but it does preserve a measure of equity between different cooperatives and it does preserve a measure of equity between cooperative enterprise and private business carrying on the same type of activities.

Mr. IRVINE: Would not the amount equal to three per cent of the working capital which had been retained from the members be regarded as borrowed capital? As a matter of fact it is; it belongs to the memebrs.

Mr. ABBOTT: It would depend on the contract. It might very well be borrowed capital, and the cooperative might enter into an agreement with its members to pay interest on that borrowed capital. That would be quite permissible.

Mr. IRVINE: In which case they would not have to pay the tax?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. IRVINE: And in which case the leader of the opposition is right?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right. In that case the three per cent would be deducted as an expense of doing business. But remember that the cooperative or any other organization that borrows money undertakes to pay interest on it and to repay it, and it can be put out of business if it does not pay its debts. That is the difference between an enterprise which has no fixed indebtedness and one which has, and that is an important point to bear in mind in considering these questions. That is another reason for making this distinction.

Amendment (Mr. McCann) agreed to.

Subsection as amended agreed to.

Subsection 14 agreed to.

On section 5, subsection 1—Depreciation.

Mr. McMASTER: I believe this is the clause I intended to speak to when I rose before. This has to do with the depreciation allowance. I would call to the attention of the committee that the previous clause, namely clause 1, allows the minister to give such extra depreciation as the minister in his discretion may allow in the case of plant or equipment built or acquired to fulfil orders for war purposes. Apparently the present clause is to extend the power of the governor in council to any form of plant or equipment. What I object to in this particular clause is that there is no definition of the different classes. I should think the governor in council could now say on what classes of plant or equipment depreciation would be allowed.

I would point out to the committee that in release No. 14 issued on January 25, 1946, the Department of Reconstruction and Supply state:

> A total of 1,561 applications for "double depreciation" amounting to $244,274,545 have been approved to date by the depreciation committee of the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, Reconstruction Minister Howe said to-day.
> The committee was established to consider applications for the depreciation benefits provided by an order in council, P.C. 8640, which grants depreciation to manufacturing industry at from half to double the normal rates for taxation purposes on capital expenditures undertaken in the period from November 10, 1944 to December 31, 1946. Such applications must first be approved by the committee and by Reconstruction Minister Howe before being passed along to the Department of National Revenue.

I should think that the date, December 31, 1946, should read "1945", because this was issued on January 25, 1946. I would again call attention to the fact that this double depreciation is granted, notwithstanding the fact that ordinary depreciation must have been taken previously.

Possibly I should have spoken about this matter of depreciation when the other section was before the committee. However, that is passed, and I now say that this is the worst form of paternalism. Some hon. members on this side of the house call it bureaucracy; but I call it paternalism, because the governor in council can actually say, and take the power to say what class should receive this extra benefit. I should think the minister would hesitate to take upon himself that power—because there will be lots of askers, plenty of people who will ask that they receive double the rates normally allowed.

It has been said that this is done to keep up employment after the war. At the present time there is no lack of employment. Indeed, there is a great lack of all the materials necessary to keep workers employed in building. I would say that at this time the measure is ill-conceived and should not be allowed to operate.

Mr. ABBOTT: The only change made in the present section is to provide that the classes which are to be eligible will be determined by order in council. That, I think, will meet in part the suggestion of the hon. member for Stanstead, namely that they will be specified in the order in council as they are now under the War Measures Act.

Then, on the point raised by the hon. member for High Park, as to whether this is paternalism, my reply would be that I do not know whether it is or not. It is designed to encourage the construction of wealth-producting facilities. One cannot get depreciation more than once. Depreciation of this or any other kind does no more than permit a man to get his capital back. I think it is desirable legislation.

Mr. HACKETT: Is it quite clear that plant or equipment includes ships?

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been so ruled—

Mr. HACKETT: I know it has been so ruled.

Mr. ABBOTT: —under the present order in council, which is passed under the War Measures Act; and the class or classes will be specified in the new one.

Mr. HACKETT: I was wondering if it might not be wise to insert a word which would include ships because, as the minister knows, there have been a number of orders in council passed which apply to ships. It might just be that a great many people would be embarrassed if a court were to determine that the wording did not include ships. If the minister thinks it wise to put in a word to make it clear, it would be helpful.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has been included in the past; it has been so included in the orders in council. If there is any question of doubt, then I am sure this is a case in which the house would not hesitate to legislate retroactively, if it were thought necessary. But I do not think it is, myself.

Mr. HACKETT: Why not obviate that necessity by adding the word "ships".

Mr. ABBOTT: I do not like to include one special type of plant or equipment. This is something which has been in the statute from the beginning. I feel reasonably certain that the department is now allowing double depreciation on ships. That being so, who will question it?

[Mr. McMaster.]

Mr. HACKETT: I will just add a word about double depreciation. It has been urged by people who were interested in giving employment, and who also appreciated that costs are extremely high at the present time, that it was in the interests of all concerned that this depreciation be granted to encourage the doing now of work which might otherwise be postponed for several years.

Subsection 1 agreed to.

Subsections 2, 3 and 4, agreed to.

Section agreed to.

Sections 6 and 7 agreed to.

Section 8, subsection 1 agreed to.

On section 8, subsection 2—Taxpayers whose chief occupation is farming or fishing.

Mr. BRYCE: The minister promised to give me a definition of "farmer."

Mr. ABBOTT: That comes a little later in the bill.

Mr. BRYCE: This is important and I want to get to the bottom of it.

Mr. ABBOTT: We are coming to it; we shall be there in a minute.

Mr. FLEMING: In the matter of averaging the income over this triennial period, is account to be taken of the out-of-pocket loss of a taxpayer within this class? Are we to consider only his taxable income, or to permit him to carry into the three-year average the deficit incurred in one year? Take a concrete case.

Mr. ABBOTT: There would be no tax in that year, but a deficit. You go into the three-year average.

Mr. FLEMING: Suppose that by reason of losses with his herd he sustained an actual deficit of $2,000. The following year, we will say, he makes a profit of $2,000 and the third year another profit of $2,000.

Mr. ABBOTT: The average income for two years is nil.

Mr. FLEMING: Will his income for the three years be the average of $4,000 over three years, or will it be the average of $2,000 on two years? In other words, are you going to allow him to set off the deficit of the first year?

Mr. ABBOTT: The first year he had a loss; the second year he had a profit of $2,000, and the third year, another profit of $2,000. The income would be $2,000, averaged over the three years.

Mr. FLEMING: I think that is the equitable interpretation, but is that quite what this section says?

Mr. ABBOTT: No question about that.

Mr. FLEMING: The minister spoke about income in the first year. The department would not call that a deficit; they would just say he earned no income that year.

Mr. CARDIFF: I want to know where we start this three-year period. Do you start back and go ahead? Do you start this year and then there is next year and the next year ahead, or do you go back?

Mr. ABBOTT: We start in 1946; that is the first year in which this will apply. The definitive tax payable for 1946, shall I say, will not be ascertained until he knows what his income is for 1948. In 1948 he will average for his three years. If, as a result of that average, he has paid on his actual income in 1946 too much, he has that credit to apply against the tax for 1947 and 1948.

Mr. CARDIFF: I understand that perfectly, but what about the next year after that?

Mr. ABBOTT: He takes 1947, 1948 and 1949 for his average. It is a moving three-year average. We went into this at some length when we were on the resolution.

Mr. CARDIFF: That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. McLURE: I tried to reduce it to a set of figures to see if I could get an explanation. In 1946 a farmer has a loss of $4,000; in 1947 he breaks even; in 1948 he has $2,000 taxable income. Then he pays no taxes for those three years?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. McLURE: Then we go to the next year. In 1947 he breaks even.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. McLURE: In 1948 he has shown $2,000. In 1949 he shows $2,500. Then his taxable income is $1,500?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not followed the income figures.

Mr. McLURE: His income for these three years is $4,500?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. McLURE: His taxable income would be $1,500?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. McLURE: All right. He has not made any money in those three years, though, if you tax him on the $1,500; he had lost $4,000 in 1946. Can he take that loss of the other $2,000, so that his taxable income would be based on $833 instead of $1,500?

Mr. ABBOTT: In that case he would be taking the fourth year back for the purpose of his average.

Mr. McLURE: You cannot carry that loss?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; it is a moving average. You take the taxation year and the two preceding years, beginning in 1946, and then it is a moving average. Once it is established, it keeps moving on forward as long as he is in the business.

Mr. McLURE: That is where the five-year plan would have been better.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I want to come back to the question asked by the hon. member for Eglinton. I have not been able to find in this anything which bears out the explanation which the minister gave. It may be that there is something which makes it applicable, but I am not able to spell it out of the words that any loss would enter in at all.

Mr. ABBOTT: The significant words, I think, are "returns of income during the said two preceding years" in line 33 of the section. It is a technical point, but the interpretation which I have given is, I am assured, correct.

Mr. ISNOR: Does the income tax return show a deficit? Do you send that in?

Mr. ABBOTT: Obviously, if you are going to take advantage of the three year averaging you must file a return showing a loss. That will be one of the factors in this new system.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask the minister what the position will be if in the next year the farmer receives payment on participation certificates for 1944 and 1945; will he have to credit that income to his 1947 income, or will he be allowed to use it in the years in which it was actually earned? The same will apply where he receives participation certificates on wheat over the next four years; those participation certificates would be paid in the year 1950, and if they are worth as much as we hope they may be it might mean a considerable income during that year which would have been earned over the other years. Just what is the position?

Mr. ABBOTT: It goes back to the year of sale. In other words, if the wheat was sold in 1943, and the participation certificate issued is paid in 1945, the payment is taken back into the income of 1943 and the tax adjusted accordingly; and under the section which we shall see a little later there is no interest payable on that additional tax, if any.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask the minister if this section—which I find it awfully hard to read, containing as it does twenty-three lines without a period, in one sentence—means that the farmer will be able to average his taxes, then average his income and then apply the tax? What is the import of the section?

Mr. ABBOTT: Average his income.

Mr. JACKMAN: If he has a loss in one year of $1,000 will that actually apply against the profits of another two years?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct.

Mr. JACKMAN: And he averages the income over the moving three-year period and then applies the tax rate against that?

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. JACKMAN: What is the significance of the first line: "a taxpayer's chief business, occupation, trade or calling"? There are a certain number of people who have other lines of activity.

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it is intended to exclude what I may euphemistically describe as the gentleman farmer who, say, runs a farm as a side-line to his stock or investment brokerage business.

Mr. JACKMAN: He is on the old basis, is he?

Mr. ABBOTT: He is on the old basis.

Mr. BRYCE: I have got my definition of "farmer", from the note here, but there are a couple of questions I want to get clear in my mind. In Selkirk we have a number of farmer-fishermen; they fish in the winter and farm in the summer. Also we have some farmers who run garages. Will these farmers be able to average their farm incomes over three years?

Mr. ABBOTT: The taxpayer's chief business must be farming or fishing. If he happens to be running a garage on the side that would not affect his status as a farmer or fisherman.

Mr. BRYCE: A man may be employed in the city and run a fur ranch outside. We have a lot of them around the Red River Valley.

Mr. ABBOTT: Farming has to be his chief business, occupation or calling to qualify for this special treatment.

Mr. BRYCE: And the gentleman who runs a farm as a hobby?

Mr. ABBOTT: I have just answered that question from the hon. member for Rosedale. He does not come under it.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. BRACKEN: I have one little technical question. I wonder if the answer the minister give a little while ago was correct or what he intended to give. You are going to average the income of the farmer for the preceding three years?

Mr. ABBOTT: No; the current year and the two preceding years.

Mr. BRACKEN: But he does not pay his tax in the current year.

Mr. ABBOTT: We start in 1946. It will first be ascertained what the average is when the operations for 1948 are concluded.

Mr. BRACKEN: That is neither here nor there, because it is the average for the three years that is taken.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is right.

Mr. BRACKEN: The minister said that he paid income tax in the fourth year on the basis of the average of those three years. Are you not going to take into account the income tax he has paid in the past three years and bring that into the calculation?

Mr. ABBOTT: We are going to take into account the tax paid in the two preceding years when he pays in the third year, and adjust the tax at that time on the basis of the average income for the three years.

Mr. BRACKEN: If the minister will look up the answer he gave the hon. member for Rosedale he will find that he left a different impression. He said the average income, not the tax.

Mr. ABBOTT: I said that you average the income for the purpose of ascertaining the tax. Then the tax adjustment is merely a matter of mathematics. The tax in the first year may be $1,000 and, in the second year, $1,500. After the third year, the income is averaged and the tax adjustment made on a simple arithmetical basis.

Mr. BRACKEN: That was not the impression the minister left.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am sorry.

Mr. WRIGHT: What is the position of the farmer who is a member of parliament?

Mr. ABBOTT: I think his principal activity is still that of a farmer. He can average his farm income. Of course his income as a member of parliament is constant.

Mr. BRACKEN: A member of parliament can use his indemnity to pay his losses on his farm.

Mr. FAIR: I asked the minister earlier if he would not extend the three-year average to five years, and he said he would not do that. I would ask him to reconsider, because I have tables here showing the wheat prices from the year 1910 on, and it shows an erratic picture. I have also a chart showing the yields. I believe that if the minister would take these tables into consideration he would further consider making it a five-year period instead of a three-year. I move, Mr. Chairman, that subsection 5 of section 8 be amended by striking out the words "forty-eight" in line 77 thereof and substituting therefor the word "fifty", and by striking out the word "two" where it appears in lines 3, 5, 15 and 21 and substituting therefor the word "four." That would mean taking the year 1950 instead of 1948 and making it a five-year average instead of a three-year average.

Mr. ABBOTT: That, in effect, is the same amendment which my hon. friend moved on the resolution, and I must take the stand I took before that it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN: As I pointed out on an earlier amendment, the principle of the bill is based on the resolution of the committee of ways and means, and the amendment would disturb the balance of ways and means. It would be out of order at the resolution stage and is equally out of order when the bill is before the committee, and I must so rule.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What is meant by "marine animals" in the definition of fishing on page 22?

Mr. ABBOTT: Seals, I suppose, and that sort of thing. I did not draw the definition. It was intended to be as comprehensive as possible to include the fruits of the sea.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I am not so sure that it includes fish. It says:

"Fishing" includes fishing for or catching shell fish, crustaceans and marine animals.

It seems to include everything but fish. It says "fishing for."

Mr. ABBOTT: It is a legal refinement. The definition is intended to expand what might be the ordinary definition of the term "fishing."

Mr. PEARKES: I have a question with reference to a growing industry on Vancouver island. Is a man who harvests seaweed a farmer or a fisherman?

Mr. ABBOTT: He gets the benefit in either case.

Mr. BURTON: We have suddenly got away from farming to fishing. I was waiting to put in one final word with respect to this farming proposition which has been mentioned many times in the house. The definition of "farming" is this:

"farming" includes all tillage of the soil, live stock raising, raising of poultry, fur farming, dairying, fruit growing and the keeping of bees.

May I point out that this is work that in the great majority of cases is carried on by the farm family. Yet, as our income tax laws are drafted, one person is taxed on the income earned by the whole family. A large part of this work is done by the women and children of the farmer.

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

CHANGE IN MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEE

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved:

That the name of Mr. Raymond (Wright) be substituted for that of Mr. Lapalme on the standing committee on industrial relations.

Motion agreed to.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, August 14, 1946

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre) presented the second and final report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Eighth report of standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Cleaver.

WAR ASSETS

ARMY SUPPLIES—STATEMENT AS TO DISCARDING OF SHOES AND SLIPPERS

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): With the indulgence of the house I should like to make a statement concerning the dumping of footwear at the Point St. Charles dump in Montreal.

On Friday, August 9, during the discussion of the foreign exchange control board bill, the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred to the dumping of footwear on the Point St. Charles dump. In particular he referred to a report contained in the Montreal Star of August 8, 1946, as having stated that the Department of National Defence knew but would not tell the names of its officials who were responsible for the destruction of shoes, although such information was known to the department. On his making this statement I replied that I had not yet seen the article but that the department had not refused to name any of its officials; that a thorough investigation had been made; that a complete report was available and that I would make a full statement at the appropriate time, adding that I did not consider that this was during the discussion of the foreign exchange control board bill.

On reading the article I found that the statement was to the effect that the department had refused to reveal the names of the civilian dealers responsible for the dumping of the footwear. So far as I can ascertain, the Department of National Defence has not refused to divulge these names, and my understanding was that the names were furnished to the press by my colleague, the Minister of Reconstruction (Mr. Howe), a week or ten days ago.

When the matter of the alleged dumping of footwear on the Point St. Charles dump in Montreal was first brought to the attention of the military authorities through an article which appeared in the Montreal Daily Star of July 10, a court of inquiry was immediately set up to look into the whole matter. The court assembled on July 12, the president being Lieutenant-Colonel H. E. Vautelet, and the members, Captain A. E. Jenner, Captain S. P. Dunham and Captain J. A. Forget. A number of witnesses were examined and an exhaustive inquiry conducted into the whole matter, as a result of which it was ascertained that the footwear dumped on the Point St. Charles dump was part of approximately twenty tons of scrap leather, mixed with canvas shoes, purchased on April 25, 1946 from War Assets Corporation scrap division, Montreal, by Gorodensky Registered of 101 Ontario street east, Montreal, for a price of some $40, being at the rate of $2 a ton. An official of the purchasing concern testified that the material had been purchased in anticipation of disposing of it as scrap rubber or scrap leather, that upon arrival of the material it had been examined and found that the leather and rubber were mixed together and that the purchaser was unable to sell it without separating the two. As the cost of labour would be more than that which could be recovered from the material, he decided to dispose of it by throwing it out on the Point St. Charles dump.

The court of inquiry clearly established that the military authorities had nothing to do with either the sale or dumping of the footwear in question. It was also ascertained by the court that on a previous occasion, namely, on or about May 2 or 3, another quantity of scrap material, which included scrap leather and canvas shoes purchased by Imperial Metal and Waste Company of Montreal from the J. H. Block Equipment Corporation and by the latter corporation from War Assets, had also been thrown away on the Point St. Charles dump as having been found to be unsaleable and of no commercial value.

The proceedings and the findings of the court of inquiry to which I have referred were immediately forwarded to national defence headquarters here in Ottawa, and as a result of the information contained therein, a joint statement on behalf of the Department of Reconstruction and the Department of National Defence was made at the eveining sitting on July 19 by my colleague, the Minister of Reconstruction.

Subsequently on July 27, as a result of further reports that were brought to our attention, officials of War Assets Corporation, a civilian representative on my own staff and representatives from the army and Royal Canadian Air Force visited the War Assets reclamation depot at Valleyfield, Quebec. At that time various bales, bundles and bags of footwear and other articles of clothing were opened and examined to see if any articles had been mutilated or slashed. Articles which had recently arrived at the depot and which had not yet been examined by War Assets employees were examined, as well as articles which had been examined and sorted by War Assets employees, and no articles were found which had been mutilated or slashed but which were otherwise serviceable.

The service representatives requested War Assets employees at the Valleyfield reclamation depot to segregate any articles which would indicate that they had been slashed or mutilated and to advise the service representatives so that further investigations could be made in an effort to trace down the source of such mutilation. I may say that no such articles have been reported since this request was made.

Concerning the practice of War Assets Corporation, I am not in a position to make a statement, although I have a copy of a statement made to the press on the 7th of August by Mr. J. H. Berry, president of the War Assets Corporation, in which he said in part:

> I must confirm that, prior to conducting this investigation, canvas shoes, which, in the opinion of the officials of the corporation, were not usable or repairable were cut by corporation inspectors at Valleyfield. This was done in accordance with previous and long-established practice. This cutting by the corporation has always been confined to footwear which, as stated, was considered unusable and not repairable and, if it is true, as has been stated, that there were several hundred pairs of new shoes placed on the dump in a cut condition, I can find no trace of this cutting having been done by the corporation inspectors. . . .

We have now stopped cutting all canvas shoes, even when they are categorized as unrepairable and of no value in their present form as a shoe, but exactly how we are going to merchandise them as shoes, we do not yet know as we believe there will be some difficulty in finding a market for them other than as scrap.

The point as to whether it is fair policy for the corporation to sell at scrap prices unrepairable, unusable, and non-disinfected shoes without mutilating them remains to be considered by the corporation.

In conclusion may I say we have not been able to ascertain how or by whom the footwear dumped on the Point St. Charles dump was slashed, as is alleged to be the case, nor is there any clear indication as to how many shoes were allegedly mutilated. It has not been army practice to mutilate footwear since 1941, and no evidence has been adduced to show that there has been such mutilation by military personnel.

I realize the importance of an incident such as this which might appear to indicate a wilful waste in the handling of public property. I appreciate that this is not an appropriate time to discuss this matter in detail. I shall be glad to do so, however, when my estimates are before the house, which I hope will be within the next few days.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If I may be permitted to ask a supplementary question: in view of the difficulties the two departments have experienced in ascertaining the actual circumstances connected with these shoes, will the government give consideration to the appointment of a royal commission to look into this matter?

Mr. HOWE: Is that part of the economy programme?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I could answer my hon. friend in regard to economy, if I were not denied the opportunity at the moment. Certainly the war expenditures committee is not doing it. In the second place, will the minister table the evidence given before the board of inquiry and also the report of the investigation if any made by War Assets Corporation regarding these matters? The people of Canada desire to have these questions finally concluded by a careful, impartial examination.

Mr. ABBOTT: I can answer the question by saying we had better discuss it on my estimates. As to tabling the proceedings of the court of inquiry, I have been over them carefully and they do not contain anything I would not be delighted to table; but it has been the practice, and I think it is a wise one, that proceedings of military courts of inquiry or courts martial are not tabled in the House of Commons, and I should be reluctant to create a precedent by doing so. But I shall have the proceedings of the court of inquiry before me when my estimates are under consideration, and I shall paraphrase from it as may be necessary. I make the statement now on my responsibility as a minister, however, that there is nothing in the proceedings of the court of inquiry I should not be delighted to have this house read.

Mr. GRAYDON: Perhaps that disposes of the question asked by the hon. member for Lake Centre; if the minister wants to bring the proceedings of the court of inquiry before the house I certainly think he should be allowed to do so, and I think we should ask him to bring it in full and present it to the house.

Mr. FULTON: May I ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply or the Minister of National Defence if they can give any reason why these supplies of shoes or shirts which were alleged to have been dumped could not have been sent to Europe for relief over there?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): May I explain that the Department of Reconstruction and Supply has gone to great expense for years to maintain a repair depot at Valleyfield. Any footwear or clothing coming from the army which is capable of being repaired is being repaired by War Assets Corporation and is being sent to Europe. The discussion in the house, which has gone to great length, has to do with material which the inspectors of War Assets Corporation report as not being capable of being repaired. This we sell for junk—and we seem to have done better than the junk dealer who bought it, because at least we made $40 from it, while the junk dealer threw it away. That is the transaction with respect to which it was suggested that a royal commission be appointed. It has nothing to do with usable material, but it has to do with material which the inspectors believe is not repairable.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to ask a question which I believe is in the minds of the Canadian people. If this stuff is not repairable or is not usable, and therefore is no good, why is it slashed?

Mr. HOWE: I do not think anyone in War Assets Corporation would wish to take the responsibility for marketing shoes, or allowing anyone else to market them, which have not been disinfected. My hon. friend must realize that shoes which have been worn do carry disease. Shoes which are regarded as marketable, and which it is intended shall be marketed either here or in Europe, are carefully disinfected. The reason that the shoes are slit is to indicate that they have not been disinfected, and in the opinion of the corporation are not suitable for marketing. That has been the practice in quartermasters' stores for centuries; particularly in respect of shoes which come in and which are not suitable for resale. This was done in the usual course by the inspectors of War Assets Corporation. We have stopped it because, while we believe it is a desirable thing to do, we are not prepared to stand the criticism. As I have said, the reason it is done is that the corporation does not wish to take the responsibility for passing on shoes which are not disinfected.

Mr. ABBOTT: And some unscrupulous dealer might try to sell them as good shoes.

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT RESPECTING DISPOSITION IN HAMILTON AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. E. LENNARD (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply if the investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police into irregularities in the disposal of war assets in the Hamilton area has reached any final stage, and if he can say when a report may be expected?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I received notice of this question just as I came to the house, and I have not refreshed my mind in the matter. However I believe some two or three days ago a report from the Department of Justice was received in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply. I have not seen the report, but I was informed that it states that the facts obtained by the police investigation do not warrant a prosecution.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY AT HARRISON'S HOT SPRINGS, B.C.

Mr. GREEN:

1. Was property situate at Harrison's Hot Springs, British Columbia, taken over by the government during the war?
2. If so, on what date and by what department?
3. Has this property now been returned to the owners?
4. If so, on what date?
5. What is the aggregate of amounts paid and payable to the owners?
6. How much of such amount was (a) for the lease of the property; (b) for furnishings?
7. What additional sum was expended for repairs, alterations and additions to the property?

Mr. LAPOINTE:

1. Yes.
2. 15th May, 1943. Department of National Defence.
3. Yes.
4. 15th May, 1946.
5. $186,000.
6. The terms of the lease did not apportion between premises and furnishings.
7. $25,086.75.

EXPORT PERMITS—GRAIN AND OTHER PRODUCTS

Mr. HATFIELD:

1. How much money was paid by Canadian exporters for export permits on potatoes each year from 1941 to 1946 inclusive?
2. How much money was paid by Canadian exporters for export permits on mill feeds and flour each year from 1941 to 1946 inclusive?
3. How much money was paid by Canadian exporters for export permits on meats each year from 1941 to 1946 inclusive?
4. How much money was paid by Canadian exporters for export permits on grain each year from 1941 to 1946 inclusive?

Mr. MacKINNON: Information is not available as requested. Receipts are recorded by permit number without indicating the commodity involved.

An export permit fee of $2 was charged on all permits covering commodities valued at more than $100 for the period May 5, 1941, to May 8, 1946. On this latter date the export permit fee was abolished. Receipts from export permit fees during this period were as follows:

May 5, 1941—March 31, 1942.....	$ 94,900 00
April 1, 1942—March 31, 1943....	140,056 55
April 1, 1943—March 31, 1944....	174,988 00
April 1, 1944—March 31, 1945....	215,055 00
April 1, 1945—March 31, 1946....	241,529 38
April 1, 1946—July 31, 1946.....	22,169 15

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CUSTOMS OFFICES

Mr. ROBINSON (Bruce):

1. How many customs offices have been (a) closed; (b) opened, in each province of Canada since January 1, 1928?
2. Where was each customs office located that was (a) closed; (b) opened, and what was the date in each case?

Mr. McCANN: Return tabled.

JAPAN

CONTROL AND SUPERVISION—REPORT AS TO PARTICIPATION OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): My attention was drawn this morning to an Associated Press dispatch from Tokyo, Japan, which indicated that General MacArthur had in mind or had proposed that some of the smaller or middle powers, including Canada, would be invited to join the allied war council, which at present consists of Russia, China, Great Britain and the United States, for the supervision and control of Japan. In view of this statement I take it that some preliminary formalities have been carried on between the Canadian and United States governments, or between the Canadian government and General MacArthur, and I should be glad if the acting Secretary of State for External Affairs would make some statement to the house concerning this matter, if he is in a position to do so.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): The hon. member was kind enough to show me this dispatch, which I had not seen until a few minutes ago, and which is dated Tokyo, August 13. The first paragraph indicates that General MacArthur "to-day" which would be August 13, in Tokyo suggested the "informal and unofficial" addition of seven members, including Canada, to the allied council for Japan. No invitation has been received, and probably there would not have been time for any invitation to come in the regular way, since the alleged statement would appear to have been made in Tokyo. I see nothing in the dispatch about there having been preliminary discussions in that regard between the Canadian and United States governments, but I shall make inquiries of the permanent officers of the department as to whether there have been any such preliminary discussions, and inform the hon. gentleman thereafter.

Mr. GRAYDON: I did not intend my remarks to be interpreted as meaning that there had been preliminary discussions, but I took it that in the normal course there would be preliminary discussions before General MacArthur would make any announcement.

HOUSING

VETERANS—ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES—INVESTIGATION BY MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. J. A. ROSS (Souris): Can the Minister of Justice give us any report on the investigation by the R.C.M.P. into the reported waste and irregularities in the construction of a group of houses under the Veterans Land Act at Boucherville, Quebec? Some months ago the Minister of Veterans Affairs informed the house that this investigation by the R.C.M.P. was under way.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): My understanding is that the investigation is still being pursued. A couple of weeks ago there was a request from the Department of Veterans Affairs for the appointment of counsel to institute prosecutions, and I understand counsel was appointed and is consulting with the investigators of the R.C.M.P. as to the proper proceedings to be instituted. The appointment of counsel was made some ten days or two weeks ago.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION—SOUTHAM NEWSPAPERS

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour in reference to the typographical dispute. Has he as yet received a report from Mr. Justice Richards, or is there any statement he can make in connection with this matter?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The answer to both questions is no.

APPOINTMENT OF CONTROLLER FOR BOX FACTORIES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): Has the Minister of Labour any information to give the house in regard to the appointment of a controller for the box factories in the interior of British Columbia?

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): The controller who was placed in charge of both the coast and interior operations was withdrawn on August 10, after settlement of the dispute between the organization and the employers. I shall be glad to discuss with the Acting Minister of Finance the other aspect of the matter which he has in mind, namely, the maintenance of production in the box factories.

BACON

BRITISH CONTRACT WITH DENMARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. CHARLTON (Brant): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, August 8, I directed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with respect to the British-Danish bacon contract. This question was referred to the Acting Minister of Agriculture with the promise that a statement would be made on Saturday. That statement has not been made. I see that the minister is in his seat this morning; may we have an answer?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I understand the house is about to go into the estimates of my department, and these estimates include the bacon contracts. I had intended to make a statement as soon as we got into supply.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Last night I asked that the two items be called, 266 and 57, for the Prime Minister's office and the Department of Finance respectively. This still leaves hon. members another department for purposes of ventilating any grievances which may arise.

Mr. GRAYDON: Do you think there will be some?

Mr. KNOWLES: What is that other department?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Legislation.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

266. Salaries of staff and cost of living bonus and other pay list items, $78,073.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

57. Departmental administration, $803,954.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—DEMOBILIZATION AND RECONVERSION

479. Meat board, $5,168,799.

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, the seven items under demobilization and reconversion, which are placed under the Department of Agriculture, were discussed in a general way during the general discussion on agriculture estimates. I think we covered practically every item, but inadvertently at the end of the discussion of the general items we did not do what was done in some other departments, namely, go directly to demobilization and reconversion and pass those items. For this reason they still stand to be passed by the committee. However, probably it was just as well that that was done, because two or three other matters have come up since that time. I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that one of those subjects—the contracts with regard to meat products, and particularly bacon—can be fully discussed under item 479, which is now before the committee. Another item which hon. members desire to discuss—or one would assume that, from questions which have arisen—is 478, which deals with the dairy products board. This will permit of discussion in connection with milk and other products. I am therefore calling item 479 at this time. It will be followed by 478. Along with those I should like to ask the privilege of calling item 375 in the Department of Trade and Commerce, with which both the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I are concerned. This covers the matter of the wheat contract.

I suggest that if we open our discussion by confining ourselves first to the meat board, second to the dairy products board and third to the wheat contracts, we may be able to satisfy hon. members in connection with some questions that are now in their minds. On the other items under demobilization and reconstruction, some five in number, I should be prepared to answer any questions arising generally in connection with those matters. We would first have a general discussion on the items I have mentioned, proceeding from one to the other. We might confine our discussion to the three important matters embraced by these, and then deal with the general situation under the other items. If that is satisfactory I shall proceed on that plan.

My reason for asking the committee to agree to this procedure is that, as Minister of Agriculture I have been asked to proceed to the food conference to be held in Copenhagen on September 2. In addition I was asked some months ago by His Worship the Mayor of Dieppe to accept membership on a committee having to do with a monument to be erected to the honour of Canadians who served at Dieppe on August 19 four years ago. Within the last two weeks I have had a special invitation from the mayor of Dieppe to be the guest of Dieppe on the occasion of the laying of the cornerstone of that monument on Monday next. Since I was going to Europe anyway to attend the food conference I have planned to leave on Friday and fly to Europe and remain there for the conference. I am suggesting this means of getting right at the items with which I think hon. members are concerned, and with which I am concerned as Minister of Agriculture, in order that we may deal with them to-day and to-morrow morning, if it is necessary to go into to-morrow morning, in order that they may be fully covered while I am still in the house. If it meets with the approval of the committee I shall move down with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and proceed to discuss them in that way.

As to item 479, dealing with the meat board, a question was asked in my absence the other day with regard to the contracts which have been entered into between Britain and Denmark and their relation to the contract which we have with Britain for the delivery of bacon to that country. I do not think it is necessary for me to go into the details of the contract which we have with Britain, other than to say that we have had contracts for the sale of bacon and ham to Great Britain ever since the fall of 1939 when the war began. Under those contracts we have delivered considerable quantities of bacon and ham to Britain.

The contracts started out with quantities much lower than have been provided in recent contracts. The highest amount we undertook to deliver under those contracts was in 1943. Since that time the amounts contained in the contracts have been reduced to 450 million pounds. The contract for the last two years has been a contract calling for the delivery of at least 450 million pounds. In one of those years we delivered more than that amount; in one year I think we delivered almost that amount, and this year we are not hopeful of being able to deliver that amount.

Under the contract entered into we have agreed to a reduction in the quantity that we are required to deliver to at least 350 million pounds. In 1948 we have agreed to attempt to deliver 400 million pounds. In other words we believe that we can increase deliveries in 1948 over the deliveries in 1947 and therefore we have entered into a contract under which we agree to deliver a greater quantity in 1948 than in 1947.

I think it is in order to explain the position which the government took in relation to the discussions which have taken place and the contract which resulted therefrom covering the years 1946, 1947 and 1948. The 1946 price was arranged at $22.50 per hundred pounds. One should distinguish between a hundred pounds in Canadian terms and a hundredweight in British terms, because the failure to make that distinction has resulted in wrong information being published in the press with regard to the difference between the price that is being obtained by Denmark and the price that is obtained by Canada in connection with this contract. Discussions with regard to our contracts have usually been in terms of Canadian hundred pounds, but when Britain is discussing a contract of that kind it is always discussed in terms of the British hundredweight, which is 112 pounds. That has resulted in misunderstanding in discussing the price that is being obtained.

By way of laying a background, I should like to say that we have no official information, other than what has been in the press, with regard to the actual terms of the agreement with Denmark. We have been attempting to get official returns from the British representatives here, and they have been attempting to get them in Britain, but what I am going to give this morning is the closest possible estimate that we could arrive at from the press reports and from the information we have been able to obtain directly from the British officials here as to what is contained in the Danish contract.

Before giving these figures, I should like to point out that in relation to farm products and the prices to be obtained for them we have laid down a definite policy which has been discussed in this house on a number of occasions. We have had two objectives in mind. One is to maintain our marketings of farm food products in Britain at the highest possible levels made possible by the production which we have in Canada. We have attempted to avoid giving wrong information to the British as to what food would be supplied or could be supplied from year to year. Then we have written into the contracts the highest quantities that we felt sure we could deliver to the British.

Taking that into consideration we have not been prepared to agree that Canada ought to accept, even if it were suggested—and I am not saying it has been suggested—a constant reduction in the quantities contained in our contracts, beginning say with the first year after the war and continuing downward through the years following the war. We have taken the position in arranging prices, that we should not agree to ask our people to accept a gradual reduction in price for any product which we are selling to the British. I think it would give an indication to our people, to our producers particularly, if we were to agree to contracts with a gradual reduction in quantity and a gradual reduction in price, that we were being asked by the British or by other countries in which we might be marketing farm products to get back gradually to a position in which we would be marketing lesser quantities at a lower return. In all our discusisons we have attempted to maintain the position that we would have a stabilized price and a stabilized minimum quantity to be delivered into the British market over a period of time.

With these thoughts in mind I should like to make some comparison between the contract between Britain and Denmark as we understand it, and the contract which we ourselves have arranged with the British people for the marketing of bacon and ham in Great Britain. The present arrangement between Great Britain and Canada provides for a price for Canadian bacon f.o.b. Canadian port of $25 per 100 pounds for 1946 and through from January to August of 1947. I use those months because as I understand it the Danish contract begins with September 1 and continues through until August 31, 1947. So taking that full year, beginning in Canada with September and continuing through to August, the Canadian price is $25 in Canada per 100 pounds. That Canadian price does not include the $1 per hundred which is paid by the federal government on A hogs by way of premium and 50 cents per 100 pounds which is paid on B hogs, nor does it include any subsidies that may also be paid by the provincial governments. The $25 per 100 pounds is the price obtained for Canadian bacon and ham at Saint John or Montreal for the product purchased by Great Britain. That price continues down to August 31, 1947.

The Danish price for the same period for 100 pounds—not 112 pounds—f.o.b. Danish port is $26.98, which is $1.98 higher than the Canadian price for the same period. That price of $26.98 continues down to September 1, 1947. Then from September to December, 1947, while the Canadian price is a flat price of $25 right through for all of 1946 and down to August 31, 1947, the price under the Danish contract is $25.19 per one hundred pounds beginning September 1 and continuing until the end of December. In other words, it is 19 cents higher than the price which we obtain in Canada for 100 pounds.

I come now to the year 1948. Remember that in 1947 we are to deliver 350 million pounds to Great Britain at $25 per 100 pounds, and in 1948, 400 million pounds, at a price yet to be determined. We are to determine that price some months in advance of Jaunary 1, 1948. But there is a floor placed under the Canadian price. The British have agreed that we shall not be asked to accept less than we were getting at the time the contract was changed in 1946 from $22.50 to $25. So that the floor for 1948 is $22.50, with the possibility of negotiating for a higher return for the bacon which we provide for Great Britain in 1948.

The price under the Danish contract for 1948 is $21.59 at a Danish port. That is, it is very much lower than ours.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Is that a fixed or floor price?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: That is the price they are selling at. So far as we know, and I do not want to be too definite, those are the prices which have been stated in the press and which have been agreed to by the British officials here to be the price which they think is in the contract with Denmark. That is the information upon which any news items which have been written have been based, and the information is that the Danish price for 1948 will be $21.59. In other words, the Danish price starts out at $26.98 and gradually goes down to $21.59. I might point out that we in our discussions did not desire to enter into a contract which started out at a high level and went down to a lower level, particularly if we could get an average price throughout the period which would net us as much over the entire period as varying prices would have netted us, and we obtained that. The British fully understand our position, and I would judge from the figures here that they have taken into consideration the discussions they had with us when entering into a contract with Denmark, and they have not given Denmark any advantage whatsoever over us. There may be some conditions existing in Denmark which would have made it advisable and perhaps preferable for Denmark to ask for a higher price in the year immediately following the war and to be prepared to take a lower price later on.

Mr. SENN: Are the prices which the minister is quoting for No. 1 bacon, or is there any differential between the different grades that are being shipped from time to time?

Mr. GARDINER: We assume it is the same grade as ours. Our grades, as the hon. member for Haldimand will recall, were built up partly as a result of the experiences they had had in Denmark. Our prices are on our A's and B's. Denmark has a similar system of grading. Britain of course would not pay the same price for inferior bacon as for a higher grade. Any inferior bacon they buy from us they get at a lower rate. But the basic rate in the British contract is for the high-grade bacon.

Mr. HACKETT: Has Denmark granted any credits to Britain for purchases made in the Danish market as Canada has done for purchases to be made in Canadian markets?

Mr. GARDINER: As I said at the beginning, we have not full information with regard to the contract or the negotiations, but I hope to get more information when I am in Great Britain and Denmark. The best information I have I am giving fully to the house.

These prices which I have given are the prices which can be obtained f.o.b. Canadian port and f.o.b. Danish port. Before leaving that subject may I say that Denmark has paid no subsidies to their farmers for the production of hogs in the months that have gone by, but I understand from a report in the press recently that there has been introduced into the house in Denmark a proposal that they pay subsidies or premiums or something of that nature on hog production in Denmark in the months immediately ahead, to get greater production. If that is true, probably it will be found that the Danish premiums or subsidies will just about offset the premiums or subsidies which we pay in Canada. Therefore I think we are quite justified in making a comparison between the $25 price per 100 pounds in Canada and the $26.98 price per 100 pounds in Denmark. That $25 continues to the end of 1947 in Canada as compared with $25.19 to the end of 1947 in Denmark. But the Canadian price cannot drop below the floor of $22.50 in Canada, under the contract we have with Britain.

Mr. HACKETT: This all depends on the accuracy of the minister's information.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, but it is as accurate as the information available to anyone who made criticisms in the house in regard to it, because it is the same information. The one mistake made by those who criticized was that they did not figure it was 112 pounds as against 100 pounds. Taking the relationship of the cost to Britain: Britain has agreed to pay under the Canadian bacon contract a price, plus the cost of getting it across the ocean and laid down in Britain, which costs the British people 147s. 6d.

Mr. COLDWELL: Per hundredweight?

Mr. GARDINER: That is one hundred and twelve pounds—their hundredweight. This price continues through 1946 and all of 1947; and then the guarantee which we have from them for 1948 is 133s. 7d.—that is what it figures out as the cost to them in Britain.

The Danish contract, as it has been reported to us, would make bacon laid down in Britain cost the British, for 1946, 153 shillings and for 1947 153 shillings—that is down to the thirty-first of August; from September to December, 1947, 143 shillings; and for 1948, 123 shillings. That is, the floor which we are guaranteed in Britain for 1948 would still be 10s. 7d. above what the Danish people have agreed to lay bacon down for in Britain during 1948.

Mr. HACKETT: Is that hundredweight 100 or 112 pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: It is 112.

Mr. HACKETT: It is very confusing.

Mr. GARDINER: In both cases the prices of bacon laid down in Britain are expressed in shillings and pence and the hundredweight is 112 pounds; but in dealing with the Canadian price in Canada the hundredweight is 100 pounds.

Mr. HACKETT: The minister uses 112 pounds in one place and 100 pounds in another.

Mr. GARDINER: If you read Hansard afterwards you will see that there is no confusion.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. It would be better to let the minister make his statement.

Mr. HACKETT: It might be better, but it does not help.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Try it.

Mr. GARDINER: Then there is the history of the development under the contract, which I think should be laid before the committee. My understanding is that the contract with the Danish people is for the delivery of 41,000 long tons; that is, 92 million pounds, in order to get it into the figures which we usually deal with. The figures in relation to the supplying of bacon to the British market immediately prior to the war, during the war, and now are, I think, interesting in the light of these contracts. In 1947 we are to deliver 350 million pounds. The Danish people are going to deliver 92 million pounds. We are agreeing to deliver in 1948 400 million pounds, and if we are to deliver that amount of course it will not be necessary gradually to increase the purchases from elsewhere. If we are not able to deliver the 400 million pounds or to keep up our 350 million pounds, I am quite sure that no one in Canada is going to blame the British for going to Denmark or anywhere else to get what they must eat. So if we deliver our product at these prices—and our prices are higher in the last years than their prices—we shall be able to supply the British market.

I should like to place on Hansard the figures in relation to the supplies of Canadian bacon to Britain form 1937 to 1948. I will read them, but I think it would be better to print the table just as I have it here.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has the minister a comparable table regarding the Danish contract?

Mr. GARDINER: I have, yes. It will go right alongside of the other.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Has the minister permission to put it on Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

(The table follows):

United Kingdom Imports of Danish and Canadian Bacon

	Canadian Bacon Volume (1,000,000 lb.)	Danish Bacon Volume (1,000,000 lb.)
1937	192·0	384·0
1938	169·6	379·6
1939	186·5	nil
1940	344·2	nil
1941	460·8	nil
1942	524·9	nil
1943	560·3	nil
1944	692·3	nil
1945	446·1	nil
1946	*325·0	*92·0
1947	*350·0	*120–200

Mr. GARDINER: As to the percentage of total imports to Britain: Canada supplied 20·03 in 1937; 18·57 in 1938; 85 in 1944; 65 in 1945. In 1946 the percentage will be less, but in 1948 we hope to get back to almost 65 per cent, or at least to 60 per cent of the total supplied to the British market.

As to the Danish bacon supplied in the same period: in 1937, 384 million pounds, or 49·5 per cent; in 1938, 379·6 million pounds, or 49·2 per cent. Then the war came on, and from 1939 to 1946 they did not supply any. In the early part of 1946, and possibly the latter part of 1945, they have been supplying some, but while the war was on they were not permitted to supply any to Britain. In 1946 they are agreeing to supply 92 million pounds. In 1947 they are hoping to be able to supply 120 to 200 million pounds, and in 1948 they hope to supply under the agreement between 120 and 200 million pounds, the minimum being 120 and the maximum being 200 million. I have no figures here as to what percentage that would be of the British requirements, either in Canadian or Danish but I will have this table placed on Hansard.

According to the terms of the United Kingdom-Danish agreement, the United Kingdom will receive 92 million pounds and Russia will receive 56 million pounds of the total exportable surplus during 1946. Britain is not the only country involved in the agreements which are being entered into with Denmark. Denmark has agreed to supply 90 per cent of her surplus export to Britain and 10 per cent to Russia. The proportions are not contained in these figures for 1946. This is the arrangement which has been entered into. In 1947 and 1948 Denmark is entitled to sell Russia ten per cent of the total exportable surplus production which will largely depend upon feed supplies in Denmark. It is estimated that the exports may be from a minimum of 135 million pounds to a maximum of 225 million pounds, of which the United Kingdom might receive from 120 to 200 million pounds annually.

That is the full statement with regard to the contracts as it has been given to me and I wish to present it to the committee. If there are any questions I shall be glad to answer.

Mr. COLDWELL: Are there any other factors in the two agreements mentioned between Russia and Denmark regarding the exchange of goods or between Britain and Denmark so far as the payment is concerned?

Mr. GARDINER: We do not know of any.

Mr. COLDWELL: We have no such arrangement ourselves?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. FULTON: In giving the comparison between the Danish price and the Canadian price paid by Britain the minister gave the figures down to August 1947, and then from September to December 1947. He then gave the figures for 1948. I should like to go over them to see if I understand them correctly. The minister said that he was speaking of hundred pound quantities Canadian weight, and that the price down to August 1947 is $25 for a hundred pounds Canadian; is that correct?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. FULTON: Then from September to December 1947 it is $25 for a hundred pounds. In 1948 we contracted to supply 400 million pounds at not less than $22.50 for a hundred pounds Canadian. I think the minister said that at that time the $22.50 was the price which prevailed until the contract was renegotiated and the British began to buy from us at $25 a hundred pounds. Is that correct? This is all based on one hundred pounds Canadian weight. The minister gave figures which show that while we started out at $1.98 a hundred under the Danish price, $25 as compared with $26.98, we would end up with our floor price of $22.50 being 91 cents above their price of $21.59 in 1948, and that we might have it higher. The reason I have asked to check these figures is that this matter came up last December when we were discussing the estimates and I inquired of the minister why it was that when we undertook to sell our bacon to England at 113 shillings a hundredweight the price of hogs on the Canadian market immediately dropped. The minister gave an explanation at that time which seemed to account for it. He said that some Canadians had been paying more in Canada for hogs than the market would warrant. With regard to the Canadian price he said, as reported at page 3171 of Hansard of December 8:

All I can say with regard to the price is that it eventually reached 113 shillings and we took care of it out of mutual aid.

At page 3172 I asked a further question with reference to it, and I said that working it out at 113 shillings a hundredweight it comes to $24.75 a hundredweight, and the minister said:

It is $22.50, to be exact. I was speaking in terms of 112 pounds, which is the British hundredweight, and that makes a difference. The actual figure is $22.50.

The minister assured me last December that that was the price for 112 pounds. He now says that in 1948 we shall be getting a guaranteed price of $22.50 for a hundred pounds. There is a discrepancy there. If $22.50 for 112 pounds was the floor price which we were getting then, how it is that he says—

Mr. GARDINER: I think it is the other way round. I say that from listening to what the hon. member has said. I have not looked up Hansard. The hon. member for Kamloops was figuring out what we would get for 112 pounds, which may work out to $24 and something, but I was figuring on what we would get for 100 pounds, which works out at $22.50. I think that was the point.

Mr. FULTON: It was 113 shillings for a hundredweight and I was figuring at 100 pounds.

Mr. GARDINER: I would have to go back and check Hansard. I will say this, which may give the explanation the hon. member is seeking. There is a difference in the exchange now. The exchange rate will give us a higher return on the present basis.

Mr. FULTON: The minister says that for 1948 we are guaranteed the price which was in effect before the contract was changed, $22.50 a hundred pounds.

Mr. GARDINER: With the present rate of exchange figured in.

Mr. FULTON: The minister did not make that clear. He merely said that it is the same price in dollars as we were then getting, $22.50 a hundred pounds, but as I understood him last year, and as it would appear from Hansard, it was $22.50 for 112 pounds. Will the minister clear up that contradiction? Is it $22.50 for 112 pounds? That makes our price less than the Danish price.

Mr. GARDINER: I am told by the official who drafted the contract and is now sitting in front of me, and who did all the figuring and produced the figures which I am giving to the committee, that the difference is brought about by the difference in exchange. Both sets of figures are correct, the ones given at that time and the ones I am giving now; but I should not like to go into the details of an explanation on the difference in exchange.

Mr. FULTON: What I am trying to get at is this; is it $22.50 Canadian dollars for 100 pounds or $22.50 Canadian dollars for 112 pounds?

Mr. GARDINER: It is $22.50 Canadian funds for 100 pounds.

Mr. FULTON: That is a different price from the one which was before us last year. It was $22.50 for 112 pounds, according to the minister's statement. Therefore, if he says we are going to get the guaranteed price which we had before, it seems to me that some adjustment will have to be made. I should like to refer the minister to page 3172 of Hansard of December 8, 1945.

Mr. GARDINER: We shall have it checked up and see whether we can get the answer.

Mr. BRYCE: There is one thing on which I am not clear, and one of my colleagues tells me that I am wrong. I refer to the 1948 floor price. Did the minister say that it was $22.50 and that it was going to be almost $25?

Mr. GARDINER: No.

Mr. BRYCE: I am wrong, then.

Mr. GARDINER: I said the floor price is $22.50, but the price to be paid is still to be negotiated.

Mr. BRYCE: But it will not be any less than $22.50?

Mr. GARDINER: It will not be any less.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is $21.59 the Danish floor price?

Mr. GARDINER: That is the actual price, as I understand it; we may get other information, but that is the way we understand it.

Mr. BRYCE: I have always been in favour of stabilized prices. You get a stabilized price when you sell to Britain. What arrangement is the board going to make to see that the farmer gets a stabilized price? On occasions the minister has said in the house that the packer has paid too much. The packer has told me that we were getting $1 a hundred too much for our hogs. When we take a drop he uses this argument: "Well, we paid you too much a month ago, when receipts were low." When the government makes an arrangement for a stabilized price to the farmer it should be the obligation of the meat board to see that every farmer gets the same price for twelve months of the year.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps in my statement I should have said that the prices arranged for in the contract have been, ever since 1939, the floor prices in Canada. This is the floor price; it is not the highest price a farmer can get in Canada, but he does not get less than this, and my understanding is that from 1939 up to the present he has never got less than the price which can be properly paid for certain grades of hogs under our grading system than the British contract provided for. The other point raised is that there are times when some person somewhere, or some packer somewhere, has considered it perhaps in his own interest to pay a farmer more than the floor price provided in these contracts, in order to get the hogs during a certain period. We have never taken the position that we should say that higher price may not be paid. Probably if we were going to stick exactly to the idea that we must have a stabilized price which brings the same return on the market at all times, we should do that; but I have always questioned whether it would be in the interests of the farmer to do so.

Mr. BRYCE: I have never worried very much about the farmer getting too much; I have always worried about him getting too little. As the minister knows, when we get a flooded market the packer can pay less, and the farmer has to take less because once he delivers his stock he has to take the price offered or take the stock away again, and he does not act in that way. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is here with the Minister of Agriculture, and I should like to ask what arrangement he is making in connection with bacon to educate the British people that it is not American bacon but Canadian bacon they are eating. I was over there this year, and I am satisfied that Canadian bacon is the finest bacon reaching Britain to-day. It is as good as the bacon Britain herself is producing, but the people there still think they are eating American bacon. We must do a great deal of advertising over there to educate the people to the fact that this good bacon they are getting is Canadian bacon.

Mr. SENN: The first point raised by the hon. member for Selkirk I think is important. I have here a copy of the order in council setting up the meat board, and under paragraph (e) one of their duties is to fix the minimum prices to be paid by packers or other persons for live stock. I should like to know whether the meat board has even gone into the question which was raised by the hon. member for Selkirk, as to the variation in price from time to time. Have they ever made an investigation, when prices were lower than at other times, to see whether those prices were lower than would be warranted by the prices received for the bacon? It seems to me that is important. Then I agree with the other suggestion made by the hon. member for Selkirk, namely that some kind of arrangement should be made in Britain in order to be sure that when the British people eat our class A or class B bacon they know it comes from Canada. There is another point involved in that. If they are bringing in bacon from Denmark and other parts of the world to feed the British people, I have heard it suggested that they keep Canadian bacon in storage too long, until it deteriorates in quality. When that happens there is trouble and our bacon gets a bad name when it should not. I believe these matters should be looked into very carefully. Perhaps they have been, but I should like the minister to state whether from time to time our bacon has been kept in storage over there so long that it has deteriorated, and as a result did not get as good a name with the consuming public as it should.

Mr. GARDINER: In reply to the questions raised by both hon. members I should say that rather than stating the duties of the board, the order in council gives the board certain powers.

Mr. SENN: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: To be candid, we saw to it that the board was given all the powers we expected they would require or might require in order to enforce any regulations that might be brought into operation. The reason for the power which has been just recited to the committee was the fact that we did want to keep check all the way through on packers and others who were buying hogs, to see to it that they did pay prices which bore a proper relationship to the British contract, the floor price; and we did keep that check all the way through. I am told by the meat board that at no time, even when we were shipping the greatest quantities of hogs ever shipped to this market, which was through 1944, was that floor broken by those buying hogs for shipment to Great Britain. I should say, however, that we had two periods during which there were strikes; two, at least and perhaps one other. During those periods, while it was true that the hogs were not bought at prices below the floor, the farmers did have to keep hogs on the market for days and perhaps pay the cost of keeping them there, which meant that the farmer got a lower return than the price should have netted him by the time he was able to sell the hogs, which perhaps had also lost weight. I would not say that during the whole period of the contracts the farmers did not have to take a return that netted them less than the floor provided, but that was only for limited periods while we had difficulties because of strikes, and those periods were as short as we could make them by action taken to bring the strikes to an end.

On the other question, of the British knowing what they are consuming, during the war there was a period when I think we were supplying as high as 85 per cent of the importations, as these figures show. We did try to make it known to everyone during that period of time that most of the bacon on the British market was Canadian bacon. All the bacon is stamped, of course; but as everyone knows the housewife does not see the stamp. Probably the rind is taken off, or if it is left on the bacon is cut in strips, so the word does not appear. We had complaints that bacon supplied to our own armed forces was Canadian bacon and was not up to standard. We had other complaints as well. All those complaints were investigated, and in each case where it was fat bacon it was found that the bacon had been supplied from the United States or elsewhere, where it is customary to produce that kind of bacon. I would not say it is inferior to our bacon, but it is not the type of bacon the British like, and is not the type we produce. On each of those occasions we were able to show that it was United States bacon. Only yesterday I had a letter from one of the leaders of one of the farm organizations in Canada. He has just returned from Britain, where he addressed twelve meetings. He said this question came up at every meeting; at the end of the meeting they started discussing this heavy bacon, and on each occasion he was able to satisfy them that it was American and not Canadian bacon. On the other hand he tells me that the same discussion took place with regard to our beef, with the British saying that the beef they are getting is cow beef. That is perfectly right; most of the beef they have got in Canada is cow beef. The British who are purchasing it know that they are paying a lower price than for red or blue brand beef, and they are taking it in greater quantities. So as long as they themselves know what is going on I do not think there should be any difficulty.

Then there was the other question, as to whether our bacon is stored too long. Immediately after the war stopped the Danish people started to move their mild-cured bacon into Great Britain. Well, of course if you put mild-cured bacon in Great Britain alongside Canadian heavy-cured bacon, in order to meet the situation existing in England, our bacon would be at a disadvantage.

We sent Mr. Pearsall to England more than a year ago to go into that one question with the British people. He pointed out the unreasonableness of their buying our bacon in large quantities and requiring us to put it under heavy cure in order that they might hold it and distribute it over a period of time, to make the quota possible, and not using the Danish bacon in the same way. The result was that the British themselves brought in regulations which made it necessary for the Danish people to supply bacon which would keep as long as the Canadian, with the same cure. So that from that time forward Danish bacon going into Great Britain has had to meet the same conditions as Canadian bacon, and be cured in a manner which will make it possible for it to be carried as long as Canadian bacon can be carried.

Mr. COLDWELL: Are the curing houses which were destroyed during the war being rebuilt on the east coast, opposite Denmark, or are some being built on the west coast? When I was over there several years ago I was told that one of the factors in heavy curing from Canada was that the smoke houses were on the east coast of Great Britain, and it meant a haul across the country by ordinary freight, with additional risks to the bacon.

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. member is referring to the curing houses in Great Britain?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes. In view of this long-term contract with Canada I think some pressure should be brought to bear to get that advantage, which the Danish people have.

Mr. GARDINER: We have no information on that. I believe the hon. member is referring to the places which were destroyed on the Thames, for example.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes.

Mr. GARDINER: They are on the river, as one comes into London. I believe the smokehouses are being reestablished there.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister's statement has been most interesting, and certainly clears up much of the misinformation, if I may so describe it, which has appeared in the press respecting the differential between the Canadian price and the Danish price. I believe there is still a big problem facing us in Canada if we are to meet our obligations or requirements with Great Britain in 1948, and in other years. The figures given by the minister indicate that our production is dropping, while Danish production is going to increase. Eventually if that trend continues we shall find ourselves again in a position of having a smaller portion of the British market. There are certain things which I believe we have to do in Canada if we are to maintain production. In the last year our production has dropped tremendously, and there is not very much indication that it will increase in 1948, to meet our contract. As a matter of fact in July of this year the production of bacon in Saskatchewan was only one-sixth of the amount produced in the same month in 1944, and half the amount in the same month last year. This indicates a tremendous reduction in production, and indicates also that unless there is a change we shall not be able to maintain our exports this year, let alone increase them for 1948.

To a great extent the Danish people produce bacon from feed that is imported. Before the war at least some of that feed, a fair proportion of it, was imported from Canada. Our freight rate structure was such that the export freight rates on coarse grains allowed the Danish feeder to obtain that feed in Denmark cheaper than feeders in Ontario could secure it. During the war we overcame that by subsidizing freight rates on feeds from Port Arthur to eastern Canada.

I suggest the minister should give some indication of what steps the government is going to take to try to increase the production of bacon in Canada to meet the contracts we are entering into. The portion of the country I represent has been one of the greatest hog-producing areas in western Canada; yet I have been alarmed at the complete disappearance of hogs from the farms in that area in the past year, and at least at the present time I can see no indication of the farmers there getting back into hog production. It is a serious situation; it means that we shall have to depend upon one crop in that area, just as they do in southern areas of Saskatchewan. There is no indication at present that this trend has stopped, or that in that area we are going back into hog production. Has the government any policy in connection with increasing hog production in Canada to meet these requirements?

Mr. GARDINER: As I said a few minutes ago, the position is that hog production has been going down. Everyone knows that. There are different contributing factors, the most important of which, of course, is the feed position. Unfortunately I found that out in my own farming operations, which are located somewhat south of those of the hon. member for Melfort, in an area where hogs are not produced so extensively as they are in the Melfort district. Nevertheless we are entirely out of feed, and have been for two or three weeks. With the feed we had, we have attempted to keep our hogs up to the numbers we were carrying in 1933 and 1934. But we just cannot do it. No matter how hard we try we cannot, because we ran out of feed. Of course that can be cured only by having good crops, or by something happening to the crops which would make it difficult to market the grains in the ordinary way. Apart altogether, however, from what happens to the crops, our statistics show that the turn has come in connection with the decrease in the production of hogs, particularly in eastern Canada. Our estimates indicate that the deliveries of hogs in the first quarter of 1947 will be about ten per cent higher than they were in the first quarter of 1946. They suggest that if nothing at all had happened in the west they may have still continued to go down a little, but probably the west generally would pretty well have held its own in the first quarter of 1947 as against the first quarter of 1946.

We are already getting indications that farmers in Saskatchewan are looking for sows. I learned the last time I was home, and the records here show, that those requests are coming from the north and central parts of Saskatchewan, and into Alberta. The reason lies in the frozen crop this year in certain areas. The farmers are now preparing to feed that frozen wheat. Our statisticians figure that that will result in some increase in hog production in the west as well. If this carries on through 1947 and into 1948, as we hope it will, we believe we shall be able to maintain the programme outlined under the contract.

The question has been asked as to what the government is doing to encourage hog production. We are of course continuing the publicity with regard to the necessity for such production, and the advantages farmers are likely to obtain over a long-term period by continuing it. In addition to that we are still proceeding in these estimates to maintain the low freight rates, or to wipe out the freight altogether on grain from Fort William east, to be shipped to farmers who, if we did not do that, would probably find it to their advantage to have their grain shipped to Denmark and elsewhere to be fed to live stock in those countries, such grain being delivered to the farmers in those countries at rates probably as low as or lower than apply to deliveries to eastern Canada farmers. As has been suggested, we have taken care of that during the war, and in these estimates we propose to take care of it in the next fiscal year. Beyond that I am not able to say what will be done about freight rates. I am assuming that so long as we have contracts, some arrangements will have to be made about freight in order to make it impossible for grain to be taken from Canada and fed elsewhere at lower costs to farmers in other places than that at which it can be fed by farmers in this country.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to point out one way in which I believe increased production could be obtained in the west. The price differential obtaining in the markets of eastern and western Canada should be wiped out. In my estimation there is no justification for hogs selling at one and a half to two cents per pound more on the Montreal and Toronto markets than they do on the Calgary, Winnipeg and Edmonton markets. The government is paying the freight on grain from Port Arthur to eastern Canada which is used for the feeding of hogs. If the government are prepared to do that in order to assist the feeders in eastern Canada, they should be prepared to absorb the freight on the finished hog from western to eastern Canada and thus cut out the differential between the eastern and western markets. If the farmers in western Canada were obtaining that extra cent and a half per pound that is received on the eastern market, production in the west would be increased and that would help you to meet your quota.

Mr. FAIR: The question raised by the hon. member for Melfort has been discussed to a considerable extent in my part of the country. The people are using the argument that if the government see fit to pay the freight on feed grain to eastern Canada there is no reason why they should not arrange for a levelling up of the prices as between the eastern and western markets. I think the frost that we recently had in the west will help the production of hogs and cattle. If the grain harvested had been high grade there certainly would have been some decrease in production as compared with 1944 and 1945, but as things now stand, and as has been pointed out by the Minister of Agriculture, hogs will be raised in order to consume the lower grades that will be harvested in the west. Following up what the hon. member for Melfort has said, I should like to ask the minister to consider the levelling up of prices at between eastern and western Canada.

Mr. BURTON: I do not intend to get into a controversy with the hon. member for Melfort as to which district produces the best hogs or live stock. I will concede that they have made quite a business of it, but the district I represent has been in mixed farming ever since it was opened up. As has happened in the Melfort area, there has been a sharp decrease in the production of hogs in the Humboldt area. This is not the result of a lack of feed, which is the cause advanced by the minister in connection with his constituency. Farmer after farmer with considerable quantities of feed on hand has reduced his production of hogs during the past year or two; some of them have gone out of production entirely. In that area at least it is not a question of feed; this decrease in production is due to dissatisfaction among the farmers over the methods that have been used, as have been referred to by the hon. members for Melfort and Battle River.

I urge the minister to give careful consideration to the suggestion made in that respect by the hon. member for Melfort. In case there is any hope that the early frost might bring about an increased production of hogs I would point out that a frost during blossom time, which was when this frost occurred, does not give you pig feed. When a frost occurs at that time that is the end of it as far as grain is concerned. In all probability the wheat would be used for forage purposes in the production of live stock, but it will not produce pig feed.

There is another thing I should like to discuss with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I should like to know just where the Canadian meat board ceases to have control, of our bacon for instance. Just how much follow-through is there? How much control have we over this product so that we can say that this is top-grade Canadian bacon? If we are not able to follow this through to the consumer we may run the risk of having inferior bacon placed on that market. In my opinion the meat board should be able to place this product in the hands of the distributors in Britain and say that it is top grade Canadian bacon. While I am not an expert on this matter, I know that the manufacturers and distributors of automobile tires put out a certain grade of automobile tire which is their top grade. They may even have a second grade tire. These same manufacturers of automobile tires manufacture tires for mail order houses and so on, but they are as jealous as they possibly can be of their trade-marked product. In supplying bacon to the best and largest customer we have we should see that our top grade product is put into the hands of the distributor and kept under control in such a way that no other bacon, even inferior bacon from our own country, can be slipped in to the detriment of our trade.

Mr. GARDINER: In answer to what has been said I would say that we always deal with the government of Britain in making these contracts. The food ministry not only buy all the food that comes into Britain; they control all the food produced there and its distribution. So long as there is a food ministry in Great Britain which is rationing food and distributing it, they will not permit this government or anybody else to advertise anything in Great Britain. They do not permit us to go in and say that our bacon is better than or as good as the bacon produced by anybody else. The British government take all the bacon and ration it out at the rate of so many ounces per week. The people in Great Britain have to take what they get from the government. The British government will not allow us to go in there and say, "You are handing out American bacon to the people and you ought to be giving them ours." That is what advertising really amounts to. That is what you accept when you accept government control of the marketing of any product. I suggest that probably it is not very good socialism for us to go and tell the British government what to do. They are taking all they produce and all they import and are distributing it among their own people, saying: This is your food.

Mr. BURTON: That is just a temporary condition.

Mr. GARDINER: It has been pretty long drawn out, for six years at least, and is likely to go on for three or four years more according to the contracts they have entered into. Some people hope it will go on for ever, but I do not know that I do.

Mr. COLDWELL: New Zealand butter is branded.

Mr. GARDINER: Ours is branded too, and we brand our bacon. It has "Canada" stamped all over it. I doubt whether a pound of butter would get out to householders in Britain in the carton, because so many things are sold by the ounce there, and most of the butter is served in little sections in hotels and restaurants and so on; so that the people know very little about where the article they are eating comes from. That is bound to be the case so long as they regulate the distribution of food, and there is not much that we can do about it. But we have over there four inspectors who inspect everything that arrives in Britain and report back to us whether it is in good shape. We had six inspectors over there prior to the war. We also had men over there recently who have just come back and reported to us. The hon. member for Selkirk reported to me personally what he told the committee a few minutes ago. He and I were both over there last January. He is more of an expert on bacon than I am, and made more investigations than I was able to make. He reported to me there, as he has reported to the committee to-day, that the best bacon he found in Britain was Canadian bacon. As long as we can keep up to that standard we are doing everything possible under the circumstances.

Mr. BRYCE: The people over there do not distinguish between American bacon and Canadian bacon—just as when we were coming over here we used to say: "We are going to America."

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I wish to support the hon. members for Melfort and Battle River in their suggestion that something be done to counterbalance the assistance that is given on feed grain coming east. The present policy does not encourage the production of hogs. I agree that there is some demand for breeding sows in areas where the crop has been frozen, but that is only a temporary condition. In Manitoba there has been a far greater decrease in the hog population in the last two years than in any other area in the west. There is plenty of feed grain in the province, so it is not for lack of that. It is because of a combination of circumstances, possibly because of income tax as much as anything else, and also the price of grain, that people have been driven out of hog production. You can go through my constituency to-day and you will never see a brood sow on a farm where they were producing many hogs all through the war years. I think the department will have to change its policy, and the suggestions made by the hon. members are along the right line to encourage hog production at least in western Canada. It is essential that we should encourage the production of more hogs in that area, and I hope that the minister will consider the suggestions very seriously.

Mr. WHITE (Middlesex East): As to the bacon deal with Denmark, it seems to me that at the end of 1948 Denmark will have been encouraged to produce bacon and will be in position to supply the demand, and the Canadian producer will find himself out on a limb and will be forced to take a much lower price than the contract now calls for. Feed costs enter into the production of hogs. Many farmers in my area are much disappointed over the price of Ontario wheat. Fifty years ago you could hire a man at $1.25 a day, and a bushel of wheat was then selling at $1.25. It is still selling at $1.25 but you have to pay a man $1.25 an hour, and the farmers are getting into a very difficult position.

Mr. WRIGHT: I do not think we have anything to fear in Canada in regard to the production of bacon. I am positive, from my observations, that we can produce bacon as cheaply in western Canada as anywhere. We grow the grain right there, and we have everything that is needed for efficient hog production. Given equal conditions, with farm machinery and the different things we need for hog production selling at a competitive level as our products must, we can produce bacon with any other country in the world and market it in as good condition as theirs. But when all these other factors which enter into our costs are interfered with, the machinery of production is thrown out of kilter and you do not get the production. That is why I am interested in seeing that the price received for bacon in western Canada is made equal to the price on the market in eastern Canada. The people of Canada are going to pay the freight rate on feed grain from western to eastern Canada, and I say that the man who is feeding it in western Canada should be given an equal opportunity and get the same price for his product. That would seem to me to be only fair.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I rise to support the suggestions of the hon. members for Melfort, Battle River and Humboldt, and to take exception to two of the reasons the minister gave for lack of hog production in the west.

Mr. GARDINER: I was going to correct that. I said that the shortage of feed was one of the factors. Then there is the difficulty of getting labour. Some people would rather have what they receive for their grain than what they receive for their hogs. Whether the price of one is higher than the price of the other is not the question. It is more difficult to get it through hogs than through grain.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I still take exception to what the minister said. I come from an area in Saskatchewan where we produce a lot of live stock. Our hog production in that area was high in the early part of the war. One reason for the western farmer going out of hog production is the price, but we have many other reasons. When the government wanted bacon for export, our farmers went into heavy hog production. We built electric fences, put in self-feeders and brooder houses, and altogether went into hog production on a large scale. Then we found that the government came out with its bonus of ten cents on oats and fifteen cents on barley. Labour and other costs of production make hog production no longer feasible, and that is why the western farmer went out of hog production. The time has come when we must have a national live stock programme which will give to the western producer a decent return, and not merely for hogs, comparable with that received in eastern Canada.

One of the chief points the minister brought out was that unless we can keep up hog production in Canada to meet the 400 million pounds which I think is the agreement we have with Britain, Britain will go out and seek food from Denmark. If we want to keep the British market I think we shall have to launch a programme for Canada, and not merely do what the minister apparently has done. It seems to me that mother nature comes to his rescue very often. Now it is doing so again in the form of frost; he says there is going to be a lot of wheat in western Canada which may only be useful for feeding to live stock. I remember that last year, at the end of the agriculture debate in this house, the minister said we had all the live stock in Canada that we could feed with the available feed on hand. I might point out to him that from that time until the present we have been shipping out from western Canada coarse grains suitable for live stock production; up to this time it has not been a matter of feed but one of price. I want to urge so strongly as I can the adoption of the recommendation of the hon. member for Melfort, that the western farmer should get a price comparable to that paid to the eastern farmer.

Mr. GARDINER: I want to correct one statement of the hon. member. There has been an embargo on the shipment of feed grain out of Canada.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I said, out of western Canada.

Mr. GARDINER: Out of any part of Canada. We are talking about producing live stock. The only feed grain that went out of Canada was the grain which was shipped after we were urged from every part of this house and from every part of Canada to let some oats go to Europe to feed people there. We have stopped all grain going out of this country, and all the grain has been fed. You could not feed any more live stock no matter what you did; all the grain has been fed; and to-day I am going to ask you in a few moments to put through estimates for the storage of grain in western Canada to feed the live stock that is there. We paid out hundreds of thousands of dollars last year to store grain in the elevators at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton, to prevent its being shipped out of there at all, to keep it there to feed live stock in that area; and it has all been fed. We cannot find any barley. There is a small quantity of oats that we could ship out, but we cannot find any barley or any feed wheat to ship anywhere, whether outside Canada or inside Canada. The situation is that the grain has been fed. Well, if it has been fed, I do not see how you could feed any more live stock, no matter what you did. If it is a question of thinking that we ought to have more feed grown in Canada, probably we could get more feed grown by following some practices; but again, that would not meet the wishes of a lot of people who just a few months ago were saying that we ought to be growing wheat to the exclusion of other things, in order to feed people somewhere else in the world.

I agree with hon. members who have spoken that we have to pay a little more attention to the people who live in our own country than some of us have been tending to do in the last few months. To say that we should not grow any grain in western Canada to ship to eastern Canada is, I think, going a long way. I do not think it is a bad thing for the farmers in western Canada, when we give them the extra ten or fifteen cents on their oats and barley. Up to that time we were getting 67 per cent of our share of the income of the farmers of Canada as based on experience of 1926-29; and when we put the fifteen cents on barley and the ten cents on oats, and put up the initial price of wheat, we got into the position that we should occupy in relation to other farmers. We are a grain producing area. Grain is the natural thing for us to produce, and we can produce it. We have to have a market for it, and the best market for our feed grains is in western Canada. At the present time the best market would be in the United States, but if the grain went to them you would not be able to feed hogs either in eastern or western Canada. Usually the best market has been in the east, and we have been promoting the shipment of our grain from west to east. As long as we keep our present controls I do not think we can market it, to the advantage of the people generally, anywhere else.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I would just like to answer the minister for one moment, when he said that I said coarse grains had been shipped out of western Canada.. You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. GARDINER: There are no coarse grains shipped out of the area west of the Sault line. We absolutely corralled it there.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Three or four hon. members have said that their areas have been large hog producing areas. My own area is similar, but I can say that farmers in our constituency with oats in their granaries have gone completely out of hogs. If we want to have mixed farming in western Canada, if we want to have what we call a stability in agriculture, and mixed farming, to which many of these areas are adapted, if not perhaps the big grain sections, we must have a policy under which the farmer can have some trust in government policies and will know over a period of years that he is going to be able to get a fair return for the type of farming he undertakes.

Mr. SENN: I believe that the retention of the British market for bacon is very important. During the first great war we did get a fair market over there; we were shipping between 125 and 135 million pounds of bacon. We did not keep that up, and I think it is very important that, since we now have that market again, we should do everything possible to retain it.

I am not finding any fault with the suggestion which has been made by our western friends that there should be some method of equalizing the prices received for hogs by the western farmer and the eastern farmer. If that can be done, well and good. On the other hand I would not like to see the freight rates which have been paid by the government up to the present time on feed grains coming from the west cut off. We cannot afford to pay the freight rates in addition to the prices we have to pay for feed grain and raise hogs at a profit, and I am afraid there would be very little grain coming from the west to the east to feed the hogs unless we had that freight rate consideration. So we must keep that if we are to maintain our hog production in the east.

It is very important that we continue to hold the British market to the extent that we now have it, and I suggest to the western farmers, no matter what they may do, not to try to take away that freight rate subsidy from us in the east.

Mr. FAIR: May I say that there was no thought or desire on the part of western farmers to disturb the freight rate position as regards the eastern farmer; we are just asking that there be an equalization of price. Also I wish the Minister of Agriculture would whisper in the ears of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue that as soon as they get the income tax levy down to where it properly belongs, they will have more hog production and possibly more grain production.

Mr. QUELCH: It has been suggested that the government might bring in measures to persuade farmers to handle their operations in a different way, perhaps to raise more hogs and less grain, or in particular less wheat. Personally I should not like to see that policy adopted, because generally speaking the farmer knows the kind of crops he can raise best. The part of the country from which I come is strictly a grain country. We buy our coarse grains and then raise hogs; generally speaking it does not pay us to grow coarse grains; it pays us better to raise wheat and sell it. The eastern part of my constituency will probably have another crop failure, and they will have to go out of hogs because they have not got the feed.

I believe that the best way to encourage the raising of hogs is a long term policy which will guarantee the farmers a fair price for hogs over a period of time which will enable them to adopt labour-saving methods. They have the most modern labour-saving machinery with which to grow grain, but few farmers have proper facilities for handling hogs, and therefore it means a lot of labour.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: As in other western areas, hog production in my constituency is down. I agree with those who said that they thought the price factor was the main consideration. The low production of pigs in my part of the province has not been brought about by the shortage of feed. It seems to me that if people who are producing hogs are short of feed, apart from the question of crop failure or something of that kind, it indicates poor farm management. But as I have mentioned, the important thing is the price factor. We have a fixed price for bacon, but there is no fixed price for hogs. That also has a bearing on the situation. If in some way we could assure the producer a fixed price for his pigs we might have better results, depending, of course, on whether the fixed price was sufficiently high.

At the present time the price is fixed for Wiltshire sides, f.o.b. Canadian ports, and it does not vary from day to day; but we find that on the market the price for the live product does vary. I should like to quote from the last report of the Live Stock Market Review of August 1, which was placed on my desk some time ago. In that review we find these headings: "Toronto Hogs Gained Twenty-five Cents. Winnipeg Had B1 Hogs Higher at $18.85. Calgary Reached a New High. Edmonton Advanced. Prince Albert Closed Higher. Moose Jaw was Firmer. Vancouver Had B1 Hogs at $19.75 to $20.70." Why these changes? There has not been any change in the basic contract price. Did the freight rates go up? Did insurance go up? Did labour costs go up? I do not think so. Why should there be this variation on the market from hour to hour and day to day?

There is another point I should like to touch on, namely, the drop in price which is contemplated from the present to 1948. This morning the minister told us that $22.50 was to be the floor for 1948 and the price was to be negotiated. Unfortunately my experience has been that the floor has been the price. We do not seem to be able to get a price much higher than the floor when a floor price is fixed. I wish to point out that the drop from the high point of $25 to $22.50 means a drop of $2.50 per hundredweight, which is roughly $3.50 per hog or an average of ten per cent, if the $22.50 happens to be the prevailing price. The packers will prepare for a drop of this kind by paying a lower price for hogs in the fall of 1947. That is the natural thing to do.

Mr. GARDINER: The new price will be negotiated before that.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: I was about to ask the minister when the negotiation would take place. If the farmers in their turn had no information of the price they would have to prepare for a lower price in the breeding season of 1946, which means the winter of this year. Will the price be negotiated by that time?

The raising of pigs is a long term proposition. They are not turned out as material is from a factory bench, a lathe or anything of the kind. It takes time to raise hogs. The minister has already answered what I wanted to know, and what I wanted to have on the record, namely, when these 1948 prices would be negotiated.

I come now to the matter of feed costs. We have an extraordinary situation in the west. We have bonuses given for our oats and barley. Let me give an actual example. In my district a farmer had a bin full of barley. When he hauled it to the elevator he received fifty cents a bushel plus a fifteen-cent bonus, a total of sixty-five cents. Therefore when he fed it to his pigs he was feeding sixty-five cent barley. His neighbour did not grow any barley but had some pigs. He came to the farmer who grew the barley and bought some from him at fifty cents a bushel. The original owner of the barley went to the elevator officials and collected his bonus of fifteen cents, which is the normal procedure; but the second farmer fed his pigs fifty-cent barley in competition with the original grower who fed sixty-five cent barley. We have some of these extraordinary situations and they should be cleared up.

I should also like to join with those who have spoken in an endeavour to get a form of equalization to compare with the free freight which is being paid on feed going to the east. We are in competition with the freight being paid to the eastern feeder, and we feel that similar compensation should be given to the western grower so that when his hogs are shipped they should receive some help in the way of freight assistance. If that were done, the producer would get a little more for the hog carcasses when he produces them. When the eastern grower gets free freight on the feed he also gets a higher price for his pigs, because they are closer to tidewater. There is no long freight charge to be paid on the carcasses, which is the difficulty that the western grower runs into. Some consideration commensurate with the free freight which the eastern feeder now gets should be given to the western grower to help him meet the situation.

Mr. ARGUE: I wish to bring one point to the attention of the minister, but before doing so I should like to say that I agree with my colleague that the man who grows his feed and attempts to raise hogs is being discriminated against in that his feed is worth more and costs more when it is put into the production of hogs than it does to the feeder across the road. One way to get around that is to give the man who raises hogs and feeds his own feed an additional price on that account when he sells his hogs.

The point I wish to raise is in connection with the subsidy payments. If a farmer wants to buy feed from his neighbour, in order to obtain the benefit of the subsidy he has to haul the grain to the elevator. I have had one instance brought to my attention. Last winter cattle in a certain district were almost starving, owing to the severe winter and a short crop the previous year. One farmer had to buy five hundred bushels of oats from his neighbour. In order to get the benefit of the ten-cent subsidy he would have had to haul the oats sixteen miles to town and fourteen miles back to his neighbour's farm. That was impracticable, because the roads were blocked for truck travel and there were no horses available at the time. Could some method not be devised in which perhaps a councillor in the municipality, or some other reliable man, could weigh the feed in such an instance, so that the grower of the feed or the two men concerned might take advantage of the subsidy?

Mr. GARDINER: That has been the case for the last two years. In any area where there is a scale at all if they can get the recommendation of the municipal secretary or the elevator operator in town, or anyone who is satisfactory to the wheat board, they will accept the weights on those scales. That has been the situation.

Mr. ARGUE: There would have to be a large scale, on which a truck could be driven, would there not?

Mr. GARDINER: No, just an ordinary scale, where you can weigh two or three bags of grain, any scale that is reasonably safe.

Mr. ARGUE: In this particular case the farmer applied for the subsidy, which he was paid. After the case was reported he had to refund the subsidy because he had not gone through the proper channel. I just want to bring this to the attention of the minister.

Mr. GARDINER: They could have made an application to have some person appointed as official weighman, someone who has a scale. Any scale would do of the type you find on the farm, with the beam and platform on which you can weigh two or three bags standing up or ten bags piled one on top of another. That kind of weight is accepted.

Mr. ARGUE: I am glad to have that information from the minister, and I hope the farmers are given an opportunity to learn the situation so they will be able to take advantage of this provision.

Mr. SENN: I should like to address one or two questions to the minister before we pass this item, but first I want to know whether this question is relevant; it may not be. When the minister was speaking this morning he mentioned the fact that more of the cheaper grades of beef were going to Great Britain, and that they were paying lower prices accordingly. Recently an order went through permitting higher prices on certain grades of red and blue brand beef. I believe that order was issued by the wartime prices and trade board, though I am not certain of that. I should like to know just what is the relationship between the boards enumerated here and the wartime prices and trade board. Surely the wartime prices and trade board does not set prices on farm products of all kinds without in some way consulting with these other boards which are vitally interested. I understand that the meat board particularly has to do with export prices, but I also notice that in the order in council setting up the meat board it says they are to determine prices to be paid packers or other persons, and as well to establish differentials in prices which will be paid for different grades, selections and weights of various kinds of meats. That may be for export; perhaps that is what was intended, but it does not definitely say so. There is a real grievance at the present time on the part of the smaller slaughterers through the country, who say that because they cannot get official inspection they are not able to obtain the higher prices which are paid for the red and blue brand beef. I should like to ask the minister if this board or any of these boards have anything to do with that, or whether it is entirely a matter for the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. GARDINER: Prior to 1943, I think it was, the wartime prices and trade board provided all the subsidies, that is, producer subsidies as well as consumer subsidies. In 1943 we set up the food board, which is dealt with in these estimates. Under the arrangements then made the food board provides for the subsidies to producers, what are called the producer subsidies designed to increase production, and the prices board deals with any subsidies that are paid having to do with consumers, to keep down costs to consumers. That division was made at that time. As far as the provision of food for the Canadian people is concerned the prices board have the final authority and final responsibility. That is, they are supposed to see to it that sufficient food is left in Canada to properly feed the Canadian people. If it is found necessary, as has been the case in connection with some products, to impose rationing, then the wartime prices and trade board looks after the rationing, and they must have the responsibility for saying whether or not sufficient food is being provided to the food distributors in Canada to make that rationing possible; and to that extent they have control. When it comes to the practical handling of it, any time we find that costs of production are not being met, or any time we feel they are not being met, the board having to do with the product in question negotiates with the prices board in order to have that situation adjusted. There are two ways in which that adjustment can be made, from our point of view. One is to give a subsidy to the producer; the other is to increase the price to the consumer so that higher returns may be obtained. Whenever it is considered necessary to get higher returns by increasing prices, that is discussed with the prices board, which makes the final order in that connection and enforces it.

That is what really happened in connection with beef. About two or three months ago there was widespread discussion as to the reasons for beef not appearing on the market. As a result of those discussions the prices board eventually raised the prices of the higher grades of beef, that is blue and red brand beef. As a result beef again began to move on to the market, in much greater quantities; and the beef has been sold practically at ceiling prices. I am informed that within the last week or two the experience has been that the Canadian people are inclined to eat beef that costs less, rather than to eat the red and blue brand beef. In other words, there is always the possibility of getting your prices so high that the consumer will say, "If I must pay that price I shall eat something else." The consumers have reached that point now, apparently, in regard to red and blue brand beef, and we are being offered beef of these higher grades to send to Britain at prices considerably below ceiling. I just throw that out as a suggestion to those who talk nothing but price. There are limits to what you can do even in connection with price. When we start asking people to pay certain prices for commodities, they may refuse.

Mr. SENN: I was not finding any fault whatever with the price. I was trying to get some information as to the basis on which that price is set.

Mr. GARDINER: Just to make that clear I would add that our boards naturally have the responsibility of seeing to it that the producer gets what is coming to him. The prices board has the responsibility of trying to see that the consumer gets the food at a price within what they consider the cost of living; or, to put it in another way, without too greatly increasing the cost of living and thus bringing about inflation. On the other hand we are urging that the farmer requires a certain thing, just as hon. members in this house are urging me that the farmer requires a certain thing. Our officials and theirs sit down together and thresh that thing out. When they come to a conclusion, it is the prices board that enforces their decision.

Mr. SENN: I think I understand that very well, Mr. Chairman. A short time ago the minister made the statement that there was a tendency on the part of the people to eat cheaper beef. As a matter of fact the people out in the country, who are some distance removed from the abattoirs, have to eat cheaper beef, because the local slaughterers—and there are quite a number of them—cannot buy the red and blue brand beef, for the reason that they cannot charge the extra two cents which the abattoirs are allowed to pay and obtain. As a result all the good beef is being driven into the hands of the abattoirs. I can readily understand that perhaps the abattoirs cannot find a market for it all, because the people in many towns and villages where there are no abattoirs are eating commercial beef and beef of lower grades. I do not think it is altogether fair to the local slaughterers that all this trade should be driven into the hands of the larger packing houses.

The minister said it was the duty of the wartime prices and trade board to see that the people had enough to eat. They have a low quota on hogs which can be slaughtered out in the country. The minister has a contract with Great Britain to provide a certain amount of bacon to go over there. I suppose on the other hand the wartime prices and trade board are trying to see that the people of Canada have enough pork to eat. Who studies that question? Why should the local man out in the country be discriminated against by a very low quota, which is reduced from time to time, of hogs which he can market? It does not seem fair to the man out in the back concessions or the men who slaughter for local consumption in the towns and villages throughout the country.

Mr. GARDINER: I would assume there is a line somewhere between cities and towns, and what might be called back concessions, where what has just been stated is probably true. In other words if you ship cattle to Toronto you have to ship beef back out, if you do it one way. The other way is to buy the cattle where they are produced, slaughter them there, and sell them to the local people. They have far more leeway than the difference in price; they have the cost of freight both ways to work on. There would be some point out of Toronto, for instance—probably ten or fifteen miles, I do not know how far it is—where it would pay better to come in and get beef than to kill it out there. But I do not think it will be found that out in the country, or in those sections which might properly be called the back concessions, they are being denied the right to eat good beef. I think it will be found that to the extent they are allowed to eat beef at all, they are eating just as good beef as is being eaten anywhere else. But there is this about it, that if we are going to ration meat, something which apparently everyone wanted a few months ago, we have to say to those districts which are more or less outlying, as well as to the cities, "You can eat only so much"; and the only way that can be done effectively in outside areas is to say that the butcher cannot kill any more now than he killed at some other time. He is the distributor of beef. Even then it cannot be enforced effectively, because someone will kill his own beef and eat it.

Mr. SENN: There is no quota on the slaughtering of beef, as I understand it.

Mr. GARDINER: There is a quota on meat; meat is rationed. In order to have it distributed, encouragement is offered so that the meat we wish to ship out of the country will come to the central abattoirs, where the plant can be properly inspected, where the meat can be assembled and arranged in carload lots to be taken down to the ships. You cannot pick that meat up outside, but you have to give encouragement to get it in.

Mr. SENN: I was finding fault with the local trade.

Mr. LENNARD: As one who is interested in veterans affairs there is one matter I would bring to the attention of the minister which I believe is not working out fairly. I know of many cases, and I have one in mind particularly, that of a young lad who before the war was a slaughterer for his father. He joined the army at the beginning of the war and was a butcher overseas with the army. Upon returning home he applied for a slaughtering licence, but because he was not slaughtering before 1941 he has been denied the licence. Yet I know of several young lads who did not enter into any of the services who began slaughtering after the war broke out and who are to-day working on quotas. They are allowed to slaughter. This is most unfair. Those lads went overseas and spent three or four years in the armed services, but upon returning home they are denied the privileges which others who remained at home and did not join any of the services are enjoying. This is something the government should consider.

Mr. MENARY: I should like to support what has been said by the hon. member for Wentworth. In my own constituency I have been trying to get a similar permit for about six week—it would be operative in the town of Palmerston—but I have not succeeded. These boys should receive every consideration; anything that can be done to help them should be done.

Mr. GARDINER: This is a matter under the control of the wartime prices and trade board, and it can be discussed when their estimates are before the committee. However my understanding is that each case is considered on its merits, and that most of them have been put through.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. GARDINER: It is all very well for hon. members to shake their heads. I know some of mine have not gone through either. But because two or three members have not received favourable answers there is no reason to suppose that most of them do not go through. I cannot discuss this effectively, because it does not come under my department; but there is some special reason.

Mr. LENNARD: I have a letter here, the last paragraph of which I shall read. It is from F. S. Grisdale, the administrator of meat and meat products, wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. GARDINER: When the board is before the committee that can be discussed.

Mr. LENNARD: The minister has said there was some special reason, and I should like to read this paragraph from the letter:

> It is regretted it is not possible to be more generous in granting slaughtering permits, particularly to returned soldiers, but the necessity of doing our utmost to fulfil our shipments of beef and pork to the United Kingdom does not permit of this.

In my opinion that is a weak argument, because in any part of the country it is a matter of supply and demand. I do not consider it strengthens their position at all to make a statement of that kind, because there is only so much meat to be consumed. If there are more slaughterers there might be less beef for each one to kill, but it is a shame these returned men have been denied this privilege.

The CHAIRMAN: It has been pointed out that this matter of slaughtering does not come within the scope of the item under consideration. I would ask hon. members to discuss it at the proper time.

Mr. FAIR: Has any action been taken by the government to place a floor under the price of live cattle on the market? I am fully aware of the fact that there is a price of which the packer can take advantage. But there is no protection for the farmer or the producer in respect of the price he may receive for live cattle on the market.

Mr. GARDINER: There is exactly the same floor under beef as there is under hogs. Or, to put it another way, there is exactly the same floor under cattle as there is under hogs. The actual floor is under beef in one case, and under bacon, ham and pork in the other. The department has kept a close check on the relationship between the price of cattle and the floor price of beef all the way through the picture; and generally speaking it has been very satisfactory from the point of view of those who were interested in keeping the price of cattle up to its proper level.

I would not say what I said in connection with bacon—because we have not had the same control over it—that there has not been any time, except when the strikes were on, when they have had to take a loss. I probably would not be correct in saying that with regard to beef. Generally speaking, however, I think that statement is true.

Mr. FAIR: It seems to work very well until there is a rush of cattle on the market in the fall. Then the farmer or the rancher has to take a heavy loss for which there is no justification.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I believe the hon. member for Battle River has made a point. Can the minister tell us what percentage of the value of meat marketed goes to the farmer, and what percentage goes to the meat packer?

Mr. GARDINER: The term used was "meat" and I do not know whether what I am going to say will cover all meats.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Hogs in particular.

Mr. GARDINER: The general position is that 83 to 85 per cent of the value of the animal goes to the farmer, that is of the price that is paid eventually. The rest is divided among the transportation company, the commission men, the packers and so on.

I am not in position to say what is the exact amount the packer gets. I assume that could be had, but I have read statements that have been got out continuously and which were checked as closely as they could be and my understanding is that so far as the larger packing plants are concerned a quarter of a cent represents anything that might be called profit, even outside profit, that they obtain on bacon or on hogs. I could not go through the whole range and tell what it is on each item. I just happen to remember that one from the figures given to me on a previous occasion in connection with a discussion in the house. Their argument is that there is not very much room for the farmer to gain in the way of a return out of a quarter of a cent a pound. If the packer handles a sufficient volume he may have a considerable amount of money which appears in the form of profit, but to the individual farmer it would not mean very much. I know that is no argument against the fact that it should be an eighth of a cent instead of a quarter; maybe an eighth of a cent is enough and I could not argue that point at all, but that is the figure that is used as a rule.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: On what is that percentage based? At what point are those figures taken—when it is marketed, or processed, or weighed in?

Mr. GARDINER: The meat board is taking these products and exporting them and 83 to 85 per cent of what they cost laid down at the point from which they are moved to Britain goes back to the farmer.

Mr. CARDIFF: How much has the export trade been speeded up since rationing came into effect?

Mr. GARDINER: It would be impossible to show that there has been an increase in exports since rationing was brought in, because, as has been stated here time after time, production of hogs has been going down. The big export of meat in 1943 and 1944 was bacon. Then we switched over to a large extent from bacon to beef in 1944, and particularly in 1945. The export of beef went up considerably in the latter part of 1944 and all through 1945 and it is still quite high. The export of bacon and ham is down because production is down. The only indication one could take is that the consumption of meat in Canada is lower under rationing than it was before. We can only assume that to the extent it is lower the meat is going out of Canada because it is all being marketed.

Mr. HATFIELD: Were the increased exports to the United Kingdom or to the United States?

Mr. GARDINER: Entirely to the United Kingdom.

Mr. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): Coming back to the question raised by the hon. member for Battle River, can the minister make any statement as to what is being done to prevent a recurrence of what happens when farmers ship live stock to the market and find that prices fluctuate one or two cents per pound because of congestion? I know there is a floor under butcher steers and slaughter cattle, but there is no floor to the farmer. This fall there is a great likelihood that when the heavy run occurs there will be congestion at the Winnipeg market and prices will go down. As a consequence farmers one week will receive perhaps one or two cents per pound less for their cattle, which on a 1,400 pound steer may mean a loss of from $14 to $25. When farmers keep their cattle on the range or on pasture they should be guaranteed against loss when they ship better fed stock to market.

Mr. GARDINER: I could give figures which would indicate there is no variation in the average monthly prices through the years, but that would not answer the question the hon. member has in mind. All I can say is what I said this morning, that never at any time has the price of hogs been below what the buyers would be justified in paying for them under the floor prices that are established by these agreements. The price has always been higher than the floor under hogs. I submit that it would not be in the interests of the farmer to say that if somebody requires hogs with sufficient urgency he should not be allowed to pay a cent or two higher some weeks than someone else, and that the farmer should not be allowed to get that cent or two cents, whatever it may be. It stands to reason that if he is permitted to pay that cent or two cents for a week or two, at the end of that week or two it must come down to the average which has always been above the floor.

All we have ever sought to do is to establish a floor sufficiently high to give reasonable returns and to say that the price must not go below that floor. We have never attempted to stop them from going above. The prices board have the responsibility for seeing that the commodity as sold to the consumer is not sold above a certain price, and that usually takes care of any control that there needs to be at the top. As to whether it goes up or not, we have not attempted to stop that, but our regulations say that there must be a floor. We have let them do that, and of course if we do that we must let it come down again.

With regard to these fluctuations, I would say that that is more in the hands of the farmer and the gentleman who is picking up the live stock around the country. This always occurs in the latter part of September and in October because we are approaching the winter at that time. All other times it can be pretty well taken care of if the farmer is a little careful about when he ships and the buyer who is handling the stock is a little careful about when he takes it in.

I have had the same man handling my stock for the ten years I have been here and I have never found any reason to complain. He calls at my place and gets it when he thinks it ought to go out. I always take his advice because I think he knows more about it than I do. He is at the market every week or so and he knows what the market is. I have never had any complaint to make with regard to his taking the stock, and I must say that I have always been satisfied with the price when I examined the cattle, examined the hogs and examined the market. I think that is true of most of those who have been careful about the matter. I can say without fear of contradiction that there has been less variation in the price of live stock in the last five years, certainly in the last three years, than we have ever before experienced in this country.

Mr. QUELCH: For how many years has there been a floor price?

Mr. GARDINER: We have been in this position now for two and a half years.

Mr. QUELCH: Is there any definite date at which it will expire?

Mr. GARDINER: So long as these contracts continue it will pretty well have to continue.

Mr. WRIGHT: The minister said that from 83 to 85 cents of the dollar obtained for meat exported was returned to the farmer. How does he obtain those figures? Has the board examined the books of the packing houses to ascertain their costs?

Mr. GARDINER: On the product that I am speaking of which is exported overseas, theoretically at least, the packing house is our agent. They buy the hogs, and we know what is paid for the hogs. We know what we allow the packing plant for the bacon. We know what the costs are. We have all those figures on our own books. We know what the farmer obtains for the hogs. So that there is no danger of our just taking figures that have been prepared by the packing houses, although I may say that just this week figures were given to me voluntarily by one packing house which were almost exactly the same as our own figures.

Mr. WRIGHT: The meat board does not put auditors into the packing plants to ascertain the cost of processing?

Mr. GARDINER: They do not put an auditor in, but they get all these costs daily when they are buying, just as any business man would. I follow the markets all the time myself. They are on my desk every morning. When I have noticed variations between Calgary, Winnipeg and Toronto I have had Mr. Pearsall in and asked him, "Why is that?" I have said, "I want to know why it is before I will accept that position." We do that all the time in the department. Not only do I do it, but the deputy minister does it, and the director of marketing; everyone associated with it checks these things every day. It is on that check that I base my statement that hogs have not been below the floor.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I think we are getting away from the question. How does the minister arrive at the figures of the percentage that goes to the farmer and the packer?

Mr. GARDINER: Let me put it simply. A hog is bought in Winnipeg. We know what was paid for it on a certain day. That hog goes to the packing plant and is processed. We know what the product is that comes out as a result, because we take it, and we know what we allow for it. It is moved down to the port because delivery is taken at the port. We know the cost of moving it there. We know all these costs; we do not have to go to anybody for them, because we have them.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The figures we have been given so far refer to the product which is exported. Can the minister give us comparable figures for the product that is put on the domestic market?

Mr. GARDINER: Whether it goes overseas or is consumed in Canada the same price is paid to the farmer for a similar grade. He gets his percentage of that particular output. There may be times when for a short period a packing plant may pay one cent or two cents a pound more than the market permits, but I do not know where they would get any extra return by doing that because there is a ceiling price at which they have to sell, and so any extra price they pay comes off any return which they get. It does not come off the farmer.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: Is the ceiling the same for the domestic market as for the export market?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no ceiling on the export product. It is the floor price that is on the export product.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: How does the domestic ceiling compare with that?

Mr. GARDINER: There is a margin allowed. On blue beef, for example, the margin is one-quarter of one cent. The floor is just one-quarter of one cent below the ceiling, and we undertake to buy all the beef on the market at one-quarter of a cent under the ceiling. Most of the time recently we have not been able to get it. It is selling so close to the ceiling that we cannot buy it at one-quarter of one cent under the ceiling.

Mr. MENARY: Friends of mine coming back from a motor trip in the United States say they were able to buy Canadian bacon over there. If that is so, would the price be higher? Would the farmer receive more for bacon sold here than for bacon going say to the United States?

Mr. GARDINER: There is no bacon exported legally from Canada to the United States. Some bacon may find its way over there through irregular channels. On menus in the United States there sometimes appears what is called Canadian-style bacon. It is produced from hogs similar to the hogs in Canada and cured in a similar way, but it is not Canadian bacon produced in Canada.

478. Dairy products board, $2,029,102.

Mr. BRYCE: I would like the minister to make a statement on the milk situation. He announced in the spring that the winter subsidy would be added to the summer price. The consumer has lost the two cents subsidy. I do not know whether the minister's department has anything to do with that or whether it comes under some other department. The milk situation all over the Dominion of Canada to-day has to be straightened out or we are not going to have sufficient milk for our people. The two cents subsidy on milk was one of the finest investments that any government ever made in the health of this nation, because milk is not only a drink but a food, containing about 800 calories per quart. The milk industry must be protected, because it would be disastrous if the dairymen began to sell off their herds which mean so much to the whole country. I would like the minister to make a statement and tell us what he intends to do with the dairy farmer this winter as far as price is concerned.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: Mr. Chairman, last spring the announcement was made that the two cent consumer subsidy was to be taken off milk. It was a decision reached after discussions which took place between the dairy board, the Department of Agriculture and the prices board, and I believe discussions took place between the prices board and the provincial milk boards who had the authority to adjust prices before the war started, and still have the legal authority under the constitution as soon as our special war regulations are taken off. There had been considerable discussion for, I would say, eighteen months before that, during most of which time the producer organizations were most anxious that the amount they were to obtain for their product should be established in the form of a price rather than that an amount of say ten cents at a certain point should be maintained as the proper price for milk and then a subsidy of two cents paid on top of that to make it possible for them to consume it. It was thought that the increase in earnings had been sufficient to warrant the two cents being taken into the price, and that was done.

In spite of the fact that the total milk production this year is down two or three per cent, total sales of whole milk are up from seven to eight per cent, so that the putting of the consumer subsidy into the price has not resulted in a smaller consumption of milk; milk is being consumed in greater quantities notwithstanding that price increase. The other part of the picture is this, that we are also paying producer subsidies, and as will be remembered, we were paying thirty-five cents per hundred during the summer months and fifty-five cents during the winter months. This spring it was suggested that we should put the summer subsidy up to the same level as the winter subsidy and make it fifty-five cents, with the idea that when we came into the winter again there would be a higher return required. That was examined into very carefully and discussed very fully with producer organizations and others, and eventually we suggested that we were prepared to do a certain thing: we were not prepared to go to fifty-five cents for the summer months but we were willing to make some increase. That was not acceptable, and it was finally said—and I do not think there was much disagreement about it—that at some time these subsidies would have to be taken off and the control would have to go back to the provincial boards. After the discussions had taken place it was finally determined as a matter of government policy that the date at which it should go back to the control of the provincial boards was the first of October, 1946; and so we said that for the five months we would pay fifty-five cents, in the summer months, in order to give those who were interested an opportunity of adjusting the position as between the producer and the consumer. My understanding of what was said in the house and what was said in the discussions was that there was not going to be any great difficulty about taking care of the consumer subsidy plus a sufficient proportion of the producer subsidy to keep the cost to the consumer still within the range of what was thought by the prices board at that time to be a reasonable increase in the cost of living as compared with increases which were being given in earnings; and so it was thought that the matter could be properly turned over to the milk boards as of the 1st of October and that in the meantime they should work out their plans. The provincial boards are meeting in Ottawa this week—as a matter of fact they met me two days ago—and they are discussing that question. I do not know what decision will be reached. Yesterday morning or the day before I spent three-quarters of an hour with them before coming to the house, and I think they went from me to see the prices board people to discuss the whole position, to find out just where we were at the moment, and what effect anything they might do would have upon the general position. All I can say is that the question is being fully considered and discussed between the two authorities which have something to do with the establishing of returns. I have been in negotiation this week; final decisions have not been reached as to what is to be done. Some have suggested that a longer time should be given, and that in order to make that longer time possible some producer subsidy should still be paid—not as much as we were paying before, but that something should be paid—and that some of the extra cost should be taken over by the consumer. These questions are being discussed this week and will be determined, I assume, in sufficient time to make the announcement long enough before the first of October to acquaint people with what the situation is.

Mr. BRYCE: Perhaps I should not discuss this matter when it is under discussion already in the city of Ottawa, but I feel very strongly on it because it has affected the capacity of the worker in any city to buy milk. He cannot purchase the same amount; his living costs have gone up because of the two cent subsidy which was taken off in the spring. From the other point of view, that of the man who produces milk, his cost of production is higher this fall than it was last fall. So I do not see how this board which is going to sit now can give him any less than he is getting; he will need to get a little more.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, that is the question which is under consideration. The agricultural prices control board which we set up two sessions ago is also working on these statistics with regard to the whole problem; and the dairy association—I think that that is the proper term to apply to it—the organization of producers, have put a man to work on it and have already presented to us their idea of what the increased costs are and of what they require in order to produce milk. All these submissions are being considered now by the proper boards; a conclusion will be finally reached and announced, and I hope it will be satisfactory when it is made.

Mr. BRYCE: I hope that the government the minister represents will take into consideration what milk means to this nation. When we examined the boys for this last war, many of them were found wanting, and our medical authorities tell us that had they been able to drink an abundance of milk, or even milk in regular quantities, they would have been better prepared to pass the tests. The subsidy of $20 million which we paid to enable people to buy milk is the finest investment in health this country ever made.

Mr. SENN: Up to the present time this discussion has been largely on fluid milk, its production and consumption. But usually in past years we have had a surplus of milk on our hands, and the one way, usually, in which that milk can be disposed of was in the form of cheese. As with bacon, we have built up a good market for cheese in Great Britain. I hope that we shall be able to maintain as much of that market as possible. Owing to the higher cost of production in the cheese and concentrated milk industry—and there is some of that going to Britain as well—they seem to think they are not making ends meet. In fact I understand that the production of concentrated milk has gone down some eighteen per cent. The production of cheese has also gone down considerably during the past few months.

I understand that a short time ago the concentrated milk producers' association and the Ontario cheese producers' association presented a brief to the minister showing the increased cost of production of milk and the falling off in the production of these two particular commodities, and asking for some relief. Has anything been done, or is it considered that anything will be done to assist these two important branches of the dairy industry, because as far as possible we must keep up our production of cheese which goes to Great Britain. Continuity of supply is one of the important factors in maintaining that market. We have the quality in the cheese and something should be done to protect that market.

Mr. GARDINER: With regard to the figures used, I would call the attention of the hon. member for Haldimand to the fact that from the records the total production of condensed, evaporated and whole milk powder is down 1·8 per cent, not 18 per cent, but cheese is down 21·1 per cent. It is a little early in the season to be too sure about the cheese position. The grass was poor in the early part of the season. It has become better recently and there may be some pick-up, but it will not pick up that much. There will be some decrease in the production of cheese.

However, I wish to say that the delegation which brought figures with regard to whole milk also brought figures with regard to cheese, canned milk and butter. We had a full discussion with regard to the matter, and the figures which were brought have been submitted to the agricultural prices control board. They are working on them at the present time. Again it is a question of a decision being reached on this matter by October 1. What the position ought to be at the moment I cannot go any farther than to say that the whole matter is under consideration. We are just as anxious as any hon. member to keep this production just as high as we can get it.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

Foreign trade services—
375. Wheat and grain division, $28,532.

Mr. FAIR: Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Agriculture anything further to tell the committee about the wheat agreement which was made and announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on July 25, and also in connection with the determining of the policy with regard to the prices that are to be paid to farmers on the four years' crops commencing now? What further information has the minister to give along these lines?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Some weeks ago I, in behalf of the government, made a statement in connection with the United Kingdom wheat agreement and also in connection with the domestic wheat policy of the government.

[Mr. Senn.]

At that time I promised that there would be an opportunity to discuss these matters when the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce were being considered. Heretofore in our estimates we have never had any specific item under which matters relating to wheat contracts or to the wheat board could be discussed, but because of the establishment of a grain division within the department during the past year we are able, on this item, to discuss matters in connection with wheat.

In answer to the question just asked by the hon. member for Battle River, I may say that I do not think I have anything to add to the statement I have already made regarding the British contract and very little to add to the statement regarding the domestic wheat policy. There is one matter in connection with which there has been a certain amount of criticism throughout the country, namely, the domestic policy in relation to participation payments on the 1945 crop. In my statement I said that there would be upwards of sixteen cents a bushel paid in participation certificates on the 1944 wheat crop. Further consideration of the matter leads me to believe that that estimate was based on a wrong premise and that the payment on the 1944 crop will be considerably higher than the amount I suggested, namely sixteen cents a bushel, and the payment on the 1945 crop correspondingly lower.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that still being carried forward to 1950? The statement made by the minister was that the price would be $1.35 and an additional ten cents to apply to the 1945 crop. I am asking if that is still the intention of the government. The criticism is that the government has what amounts to a contract with the farmers of the country to pay a participation certificate on the basis of the proceeds of the crop when the crop was sold, and that this is in effect a breach of the contract. That is the criticism I have heard.

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, will deal more extensively with that point. There is no change in policy to suggest here so far as that is concerned. The initial payment will be made to the wheat producer of $1.35 a bushel f.o.b. Fort William and the other places for the five years, the past year and the next four years.

Mr. FAIR: On behalf of this group I wish to say that we are glad to know that we are to have stabilized prices for the next four crop years and also that an agreement has been made with Britain. I am not going to say whether we are well satisfied with the prices received. We feel that the British government are satisfied that they got a very good deal at the expense of Canada. One of my reasons for saying that is contained in a Canadian press dispatch of July 26, which states:

> The News-Chronicle's streamer headline said: "Strachey explains wheat deal and M.P.'s cheer Canada."

In my opinion they had every right to cheer Canada. The dispatch goes on to say:

> The Mirror headlined the story: "Pact Makes Britain's loaf safe for four years."
> The Daily Graphic said editorially: "Our debt to the empire increases every day . . . thanks, Canada, and thanks again!"

I am glad the people of Britain appreciate that they are getting a good deal from Canada. I might say we have no objection whatever to Canada's supplying the best food in the world to Britain and to other countries, but we object to the farmers bearing the brunt of the expense. On many occasions we have made it clear that the farmers of Canada have not received the price for their products to which they are justly entitled, I still estimate that the same condition continues under the present agreement. Of course we are very well satisfied to have a stabilized price for some time to come, because we all remember what happened after the first great war and we do not want conditions of that kind to arise again; but in view of the losses the farmers accepted from 1930 up to 1942, I feel we are entitled to a much better deal as far as our wheat is concerned. I am not going to deal in particular with the sale to the British government. The cost of that will, of course, be taken care of by the government here, and we in turn will have to bear our share of the loss through taxation.

In connection with our domestic policy, in the first place I do not feel that the initial price is high enough. It is true that the initial price of $1.35 is to last for five years. We appreciate that, particularly in regard to the later years; but because between 1930 and 1942 the farmers of this country received only 16·6 per cent of the national income while comprising 33 per cent of the population, we feel that on our wheat sales alone we have lost no less than $2,200,000,000, and if that amount had been distributed among the wheat growers of Canada it would have made quite a difference in their financial standing. Again we must remember that up to August 1, 1942, we were getting a price of only seventy cents a bushel for our wheat, basis No. 1 northern in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver. We felt that in accepting such a price we would be recompensed when the war was over. In the price that has been announced, however, we do not feel that this compensation is forthcoming. During the 1945 and 1946 crop years we are permitted unlimited deliveries, but in the three years following, if conditions warrant it, we may be cut down to fourteen bushels per authorized acre, which would mean that many farmers could grow much more wheat than they could deliver. I hope there will be no market restrictions to prevent the government from taking all the wheat Canadians can grow during this period.

Again, we are to have a ten cent additional payment on our 1945 crop deliveries, that is, on the wheat delivered from August 1, 1945, to July 1, 1946. That would bring us up to an initial payment of $1.35 for the year just ended, and we are to have no payment on participation certificates issued on our crops delivered between August 1, 1945, and July 31, 1950, until late in 1950. This means that the government will borrow the money of the farmers free of interest during all that time. By the time we pay our income tax, which will amount to perhaps thirty cents a bushel on amounts over and above our exemptions, that is going to cut our wheat price down pretty far. I believe that our initial price should be not less than $1.55 a bushel for the entire five-year period, and that participation certificates should be figured and paid each year. Under the method the government is adopting it is possible that during the later years, if the price of our wheat goes down to $1 a bushel for the last year, our initial payment of $1.35 may be our final payment; because, as has already been pointed out, on many occasions we find that the floor price is the price we receive. So that in my opinion $1.55 should be the initial price rather than $1.35; and by having participation certificates paid each year the farmer would get the benefit of any additional gains made, particularly in the early years of the contract. Otherwise the high price we may get—and I repeat "may"—in the early years may be eaten up by low prices in the later years of the contract.

This policy is being announced in face of the fact that the prices of everything we have to buy are climbing daily. From time to time we receive letters stating that prices of things in the stores are going up, and we see that a number of labour organizations are on strike to-day asking for an increase of approximately fifteen cents an hour. Similar increases have been granted in the past; and we know that the consumer class, which takes in the farmers, will have to bear the brunt of these additional wages for labour which are included in prices. I am not saying labour is not entitled to its due, but since the benefits to labour are being increased there is no reason in the world why the farmer should not also have his prices increased. A little later on we may be told, as we were told a couple of months ago by the Minister of Finance, that prices of farm products have increased by a very large percentage since the beginning of the war. This does not mean, however, that the financial position of the farmer has been improved very much, because at the beginning of the war we were accepting depression prices for our products; and even when you add the percentages that have been announced by the minister to prices which were far below the cost of production it does not place the farmer in an enviable position.

With reference to the programme of supplying wheat to the millers at 77⅞ cents a bushel, of course that is subsidized by the government to the extent of the difference between that price and the domestic price of $1.25. But again, I cannot understand why our domestic price should be $1.25. The farmers should not have to bear this burden. The domestic price should be up to at least $1.55, if not to the average selling price for each year's crop. There is no reason why the farmers should continue to subsidize the consumers of this country.

We are glad to see that the wheat board is to continue in operation. It has given satisfaction to all. Many of us were very glad to see that the services of the grain exchange are not being made use of. On another occasion I asked the minister whether the wheat board is continuing to pay a commission on sales of wheat to the commission merchants and brokers on the exchange, and I hope that to-day the minister will tell us that policy has been discontinued. There is no reason why it should be carried on, and it should have been stopped many months ago.

I do not think I should say very much more, though we may have further comments to make a little later on. The policy of the social crediters and our supporters is that the initial price should be $1.55 a bushel with participation certificates computed and paid annually, and we shall have more to say as the discussion goes on.

Mr. GARDINER: The Minister of Trade and Commerce stated a few minutes ago that I would have something to say with regard to this matter, and perhaps I should make that statement at this stage. My reason for saying anything at all at the moment is largely the fact that last January, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I were in Britain, we opened discussions with the British government looking to the negotiation and signing of a contract on wheat covering a period of time. Later on in the season it became necessary to continue those discussions while the Minister of Trade and Commerce was in Central America, and I represented the government in carrying on those discussions. Therefore I am familiar with some of the discussions which took place during the time the Minister of Trade and Commerce was absent.

He has suggested to me that I might give the committee the benefit of some of the conclusions reached, and the reasons for arriving at them. It will be recalled that on September 19, 1945, the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a statement to the house with regard to future policy in connection with wheat. I think I should place on record at this time three paragraphs from that statement which bear upon some of the questions now being discussed, and which have been referred to by the hon. member for Battle River. In the portion I wish to quote the following is stated:

> In asking Canadian producers to forgo such benefits as might be realized in the short run through higher export prices, the government recognizes the paramount need for relative stability of income to wheat producers. Toward this end, the government undertakes that in the five-year period—

And I wish to emphasize that right in the first announcement what was spoken of was a five-year period.

> —ending July 31, 1950, producers will receive not less than $1 per bushel, basis No. 1 northern, in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver on the authorized deliveries for each crop year. For the balance of the 1945-46 crop year, at least, the Canadian wheat board initial advance will continue at $1.25, where it was set two years ago. By providing a long-term floor price of not less than $1 the government will protect producers against the consequences of any sharp reversal in the world wheat position during the next five-year period.
> The government, in adopting this policy of a maximum price for overseas shipments for the present and a floor price for five years, is asking the producers, in their own interests, to forgo exceptional short-run advantages in favour of a long-run stability of income. In arriving at its decision on this policy, the government had the following fundamental considerations in mind:
> Any further increase in wheat prices now would aggravate the problems of economic and political readjustment of the liberated areas to Canada's detriment in future trade with those areas. There is a moral obligation not to take advantage of our recent allies in their time of compelling need.
> Higher wheat prices would encourage the importing countries in a hurried return to wheat production and pre-war wheat policies very directly to the detriment of the wheat exporting countries, particularly Canada. Moreover, production in a number of exporting countries would be unduly encouraged.

That was the statement of policy contained in the last three or four paragraphs of the statement read to the house on that occasion by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. But what I wish to emphasize particularly is the fact that from the very first statement made in the house it was a five-year period which was discussed.

At a later stage of the discussion in relation to this matter I stated to the house that the period was a five-year period, that the period previously discussed by the government of Canada with the international wheat committee had been a five-year period, but that we had not been able to prevail upon the committee to discuss a period so long, and they had insisted upon the period's being cut down to three years, so far as their discussions were concerned.

But when it came to a matter of discussing prices, we were not able to reach agreement in the international committee as to what the price would be. Canada's submission in that regard was that the minimum price should be $1, and the maximum price should be $1.50, preferably, so far as we are concerned, over the longer period of five years. But the committee was not able to arrive at a decision even with regard to the $1 to $1.50 on a shorter period of three years. When that time was reached, this announcement was made to the house; and it was definitely stated at that time that it was a five-year period which it was desired to arrange for; but that it would be impossible to enter into negotiations immediately, and that when they were entered into it would take some time to carry them through.

So that we were going to put ourselves in a position of safeguarding the farmers for a five-year period by putting the floor of $1 under wheat for that entire period; and we were going to see that for the time being we were prepared to deliver wheat to Great Britain and the other allied countries overseas—it was intended to eliminate the United States and other countries which are exporters of wheat themselves—at $1.55 a bushel.

It was definitely indicated that was only an undertaking given in order to make negotiations possible. As I said a minute ago, negotiations were opened in January, 1946, when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I were in Great Britain. Those negotiations continued until the announcement was made in this house that we had succeeded in agreeing to the contract made a few weeks ago by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I do not think I need go into details regarding the contract, further than to say that under that contract we have already been delivering wheat to Great Britain in considerably higher quantities than we had been accustomed to deliver it to them, and this was done throughout the 1945 crop year which ended on July 31, 1946. Deliveries had been made in very much greater quantities than we had been accustomed to deliver wheat to Great Britain; and we were delivering it at $1.55 a bushel. We were also delivering wheat to other allied countries on a similar rate, and in the meantime carrying on our negotiations.

The contract provides that for the years 1946-47 and 1947-48 the price at which wheat is to be delivered to Great Britain is still to be $1.55. It provides that the quantity for those two years is to be 160 million bushels a year. I think it is important to remember that our average deliveries to Great Britain, for consumption in Great Britain, for a long period prior to the war was 90 million bushels a year.

Mr. COLDWELL: Was not 102 million bushels the highest?

Mr. GARDINER: About that; it averaged 90 million bushels. I have not all the figures here at the present time. But the average was 90 million bushels for a period of years, and in certain years it could have been much shorter or much longer and the figure would not have varied much. Around 90 million bushels was what we sold Great Britain.

I consider it is something of an accomplishment to have 70 million bushels added to that 90 million bushels for a period of four full years. We have delivered more than that to Great Britain during the year we have just come through at the figure of $1.55. So that I say we have this considerable accomplishment for two years of supplying them with 70 million bushels more wheat than we had supplied them in the years preceding the war. We think it is somewhat of an accomplishment to point out that for two years more we are going to be able to supply them with 50 million bushels more than the average amount which Great Britain took from us during the years preceding the war.

In other words, the average for the four years is 60 million bushels more, or 66⅔ per cent more wheat delivered to Great Britain under this contract than we have been accustomed to being able to deliver there for consumption in Great Britain.

There is, of course, the provision in the contract under which Great Britain may sell or dispose of some of this wheat in the form of either wheat or flour to others. We have placed no restriction upon her in that regard. One can only answer the criticism by saying that if Britain is anything like as good a trader as she is accused of being and if she has to pay a higher price for wheat in any other country from which she might purchase at the present time than she is having to pay to Canada, at least during the period when wheat is higher that $1.55 if purchased from other countries Britain is not at all likely to dispose of any considerable part of the 160 or 140 million bushels of wheat to anyone else. In other words, she is buying this wheat in the first instance in order to serve her own people and be assured that food is available for them. If Great Britain finds is necessary to send 10 million bushels to India or even to some country in Europe in order to feed people who would not otherwise be fed, I have no doubt she will probably do that; but as for taking our wheat and selling it in some other country in order to make more out of it than they had paid to Canada, I doubt very much if Britain would even consider doing any such thing at any particular time, no matter what the situation is.

What I want to emphasize is that we have assured Canada a sure market for a period of four more years of at least 150 million bushels of wheat on an average for each year during that period. A question which has arisen as a result of the fact that most of our discussions have been of a four year contract in order to complete a five-year period is as to whether there has been any change in the policy which was discussed with the farm organizations and others as to the participation payment on the 1945 crop. I wish to say that all the discussions that have taken place with Great Britain, with the farm organizations, in the wheat committee of council with the wheat board and others, and in the council have been in connection with a five-year period just as was announced on September 19, 1945.

It was not until about a month ago that there was any discussion whatsoever of separating the payments in relation to the 1945 crop from the payments of the last four years of the period. I am going to indicate how that discussion came about and where it had its origin. It did not have its origin with the farm organizations, and in a moment I shall state the reason for saying that. In all our discussions with the farm organizations we discussed the possibilities of what might be called a five-year pool. We were to put all of the returns from our wheat into a fund and pay out a certain initial payment. Then at the end of the five-year period we would divide up any profits that were made among the farmers in proportion to the amounts that they had delivered to the pool during that period of time. If there were a loss instead of a profit the government undertook to take that loss after having once set the initial payment.

At the time the discussions started, the initial payment was $1.25, and the main criticism of the proposal made by the government in September, 1945, was that we had substituted $1 for $1.25. We made it very plain that that was not intended to be the price to the farmer, that it was only a safeguard to the farmer for the five-year period until such time as we could negotiate a final agreement with the British to take a very considerable proportion of our wheat. The contract we negotiated was for four years with a definite return of $1.55 a bushel in the first two years of that four-year period. A considerable part of the crop for 1945 was sold at $1.55, which meant three years of sales at $1.55. There was a guarantee put under the price of $1.25 for the third year of the contract or the fourth year of the pool and $1 for the fifth year of the pool or the fourth year of the contract. It was then obvious to everyone that more than $1.25 a bushel could be paid as an initial payment.

Then the question under discussion was as to how much could be paid out as an initial payment on that wheat. At the time these discussions began, I put a question directly to the representatives of all the farm organizations which met in the office of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I asked whether I was right in assuming that in all these discussions we were prepared to undertake a five-year pooling of the returns from the crop. I also asked whether I was right in assuming that the highest floor price that had ever been asked for officially by any farm organization up to that time was $1.25 a bushel. I then recited to them the terms of the contract which had not yet been signed and indicated that we were hopeful we would still have the support of the farm organizations in entering into a contract for four years on the understanding that the floor price would not be less than $1.25 a bushel. The answer I got to all those questions was that what I was assuming was the position that had been assumed all through the discussions. What they wanted was security in the form of stability of prices over a period.

Then they said to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and to myself, "We want to discuss with you what we think the advance payment ought to be." We agreed to that and the discussion began as to whether it should be $1.35 or $1.40. I think I am correct in saying that every farmer in western Canada, including all the representatives of the farmers, would have been better pleased to get $1.40 as an initial payment than he would to get $1.35. I am not going to argue that anyone representing the farmers or any individual farmer would not have argued in favour of the $1.40, but I think I am right in saying that, after a complete discussion had taken place, those who represented the farm interests—there were members from Ontario as well as the president and secretary of the farm federation representing people right across Canada—felt justified in believing that the best possible thought would be given to the whole question and, whether or not they could agree on everything that was decided upon, an effort was being made to give that stabilized return to the farmer at as high as possible a level and over as long a period of time as possible. The discussions were then carried on without any further direct negotiations with the farm organizations.

The government gave the fullest possible consideration to the matter. During those considerations the suggestion was made, not by the farm organizations but by an official of the government—this was not a member of the government—that we might consider the possibility of paying out immediately the entire participation payment on the 1945 crop and then, after having done that, determine upon the lower rate of $1.35 a bushel to the farmer for the four-year period. That matter was discussed indirectly with farm organizations, not in a meeting of them all together but indirectly with those who represent farm organizations. I think I would be correct in saying that that would have been preferable to what has been suggested. It was considered preferable on the ground that a very high participation payment was assumed as going to be made for the 1945 crop. That is where the question comes in that was raised a few moments ago by the minister. That very high initial payment was figured on this basis, that if you take all the wheat which was supplied to the Canadian people for consumption at $1.25 a bushel out of the 1944 crop, the participation payment on the 1944 crop would be relatively low and the participation payment on 1945 would be relatively high. When it was known that figures which had been used in the discussion involved that consideration the question naturally suggested itself whether or not that was the just thing to do; and we came to the conclusion, right or wrong, that it was not the just thing to do. That was between the time the announcement was made by the minister of the sixteen cents advance for 1944 and the announcement he made to-day.

The position to-day is this. When the proportion of the wheat that was utilized in 1944 for supplying the mills in Canada is charged up to the pool of 1944 and the proportion that was utilized in 1945 is charged up to the 1945 crop, the participation payment for 1944 will go up and the participation payment for 1945 will go down by a relative figure. The only cost that would have been against the 1945 crop under the previous suggestion would have been the cost of handling, and the handling cost was very low in 1945 because wheat was coming out of the elevators faster than it was going in, because we got rid of all our surplus that had been carried over from other years as well as all the crop for that year. So that there has been very little charged up against that wheat during 1945 and 1946. When that adjustment is made the question is not as important to the farmers as if the payment had been made the other way.

As a result of what we have done, namely, establishing an initial payment of $1.35, the participation payments are immediately being made on the 1943 crop; they are being made now. I think it would be the duty of the wheat board, as soon as possible after that, to pay the additional ten cents a bushel out of the 1945 crop, which would bring the initial payment for that whole five-year period up to $1.35 instead of $1.25. That ten cents will be paid out on the 1945 crop. I say that in order to emphasize the fact that while the different way of figuring it, which I think is the just and proper way, reduces the amount of participation for 1945 at the top by an amount which I do not yet know, it reduces the amount by ten cents at the bottom, and there is not so much in between to be considered at the moment when we are talking about whether participation payments should be immediately paid out on the 1945 crop as separate from the crops of the other four years.

The position then is this, that we have decided that the policy ought to be to make an initial payment for the whole five years of $1.35, and any earnings that are made on the crop should be charged up to participation. If there are any losses taken as we go along through the programme those will be charged up against the same fund, and this year's participation will be paid out at the end of the season.

Some may ask why we should ask the farmers to wait so long? I would submit that the most important reason is that if we are to have long-term contracts that stabilize prices we must be prepared to do what everyone has suggested we should be prepared to do. I agree with those who say that we should not be asked to do more, only to the extent that we are asking some other people to do certain things.

It is not right to say that the people of Canada have never been asked to assume any losses in connection with wheat and thus help the farmer, because in one year in handling wheat under the wheat board we lost $61,000,000, and that was taken out of the treasury of Canada or charged up to all the people of Canada and paid.

Mr. LOW: What year was that?

Mr. GARDINER: On the 1938-39 crop. In some other years we lost a lesser amount. Under the arrangements which we have carried on since 1935, we have always undertaken that the treasury of Canada would take all the losses and that the farmers of Canada who grow the wheat would get all the profits. Perhaps we are being just a little too critical as western farmers when we say that we should be insistent that no part of the advantage which is gained by keeping down the costs of living through keeping down the cost of the loaf of bread should be charged up to the farmer alone. The amount that should be charged up should be limited as much as possible, but I think we shall all agree that there is some justification for our taking some of the chances.

Having said that, may I say that farm organizations generally, the farmers in particular, and most of us who represent wheat-growing constituencies in this house have always questioned the advisability of charging the farmer up with the difference between whatever the price was and the price at which wheat was being supplied to the millers. In other words, it should be emphasized over and over against that every banker, every operator, every railroad, every clerk in a bank or store, every labourer, every farmer has been buying flour, or his bread to put it in other terms, on the basis of 78-cents wheat ever since control came into effect in this country. In other words, we have been supplying that important food product to the people of this country, to the labouring people and consumers generally, at a lower rate than it is supplied anywhere else in the world. I agree with those who say that that whole cost should not be charged up to the farmer, and in discussions in the past I have maintained that too much of that cost has been charged up to the farmer. I still maintain that we should get away from that just as soon as we possibly can.

Having said that, may I revert to what I said a few moments ago. The argument is not all on one side. The treasury has paid the losses on our wheat before; it may have to pay losses again, and those losses if paid will be paid to the same farmers against whom this cost was charged up. That is the position at the moment.

In the discussions that have taken place the question was raised whether the floor price should be for this whole five-year period. You can carry right on through the season and apply any argument you like with regard to it, but these are all the facts which are available in this connection.

Finally, instead of adopting either one or the other alternative, we did adhere to the $1.35 as the initial payment, and we said that the final payment would be made at the end of the five years on that basis. But it is not correct to say that there will be no participation payment from now until the end of the five years. We are just in the midst of making the 1943 payment, and then we must pay out the ten cents a bushel on the 1945 crop, which will take some time. I hope it will not take so long as it took to get around to the 1943 payment, but it will take some time. Then we shall have to pay out on 1944; it will be a substantial payment, and it will have to be refigured in the light of some of the things I have said in the last few moments. In other words, I shall be very much surprised if we are able to complete those payments earlier than the end of 1947; and I would be very much surprised too, in the light of some things I have heard here to-day, if the farmers would want it all paid within that period of time. We hear a lot of things said about income tax; and I am not so sure, if anybody is right in arguing, as many have argued in this house and outside, that we are taking a big risk in the last years of this contract, but that some who are worrying about the contract would rather have the payment made toward the end rather than the beginning. The treasury would like to have it paid out in the beginning and maybe are urging the chairman of the wheat board to pay it out early. But some of the farmers will say, "As long as we know we are going to get it we shall be fairly well satisfied." So that, after all, the only time the farmers have to wait without any participation is, at the outside, two years. They may not have to wait that long; they may be getting annual payments for two years or two and a half years and then have to wait the remainder of the period in order to get their final payments on the five-year pool. I do not think that is an objectionable arrangement in so far as the farmer is concerned. I am going to say this, and to say it after having had one experience of saying a similar thing before and resolving never to say it again. I said I had no complaints about certain things which had been done. Then the next day somebody proceeded to organize complaints and I got a considerable number of them. But I am going to say this: I have just completed a trip in western Canada. I addressed a meeting in Edmonton of eight thousand people, most of them farmers; and about a month earlier I addressed a meeting at Kenosee park, southern Saskatchewan, where I gave them the terms of the agreement. I addressed another meeting at Battleford and did the same thing. I spent the great part of three days in the first week of August at the Regina fair, meeting farmers every day in the barns and around the grounds and elsewhere. Then I attended a Liberal convention—

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They were not satisfied?

Mr. GARDINER: —at which all of the different corners of Saskatchewan were represented.

Mr. COLDWELL: "Corners" is right.

Mr. GARDINER: As a matter of fact the vote was 623 out of a possible 650, or something like that. They were mostly farmers. I would say that some day again most of the farmers in Saskatchewan will be Liberal.

Mr. COLDWELL: What a hope!

An hon. MEMBER: "Hope springs eternal."

Mr. GARDINER: I was at all these gatherings; and I must say this, that not a single person, farmer or otherwise, raised a complaint in regard to this agreement. They did not all mention it; but all who did mention it spoke of it in very glowing terms and said, "It is the thing we have been waiting for in this country ever since we have been here, to know, three or four years in advance, what we are going to get for our crop, and know at the same time that the return is a reasonable one."

This morning I went over the records to satisfy myself on what has been happening in relation to wheat and to compare it with what is proposed under this agreement. I find that the time of highest returns for any five-year period in the history of wheat-growing in western Canada was the five years around the end of the last war, from 1916-17 to 1920-21. The average price over that period for No. 1 northern at Fort William was $2.22 a bushel. That was a period of government control of the marketing of wheat. It was the period when we had our first experiences with the wheat board. It was the period when wheat was being marketed from government to government, and during that time we had an average return of $2.22 a bushel basis No. 1 northern at Fort William for all the wheat marketed. On August 15, 1920, or, in other words, at the beginning of the 1920-21 crop it was decided to throw the market open and discontinue control. Wheat remained above $2 for four months. Hon. members remember that wheat had averaged $2.22 in all the previous five-year period; it was up at around $2.50 or $2.60 when controls were taken off, and it remained above $2 for four months. In the fifth month it went below $2 and continued constantly downward, to ninety-three cents a bushel in December of 1923. Every member of this house from western Canada knows it was as a result of that experience that the pools were organized in western Canada in 1923-24. I remember an experience which I had between that period which I have never forgotten and never will forget. I went down to borrow $600 on a carload of wheat. The banker said to me, "I should not lend you this". I said, "Why not?" He said, "I have got instructions from head office not to lend any money on wheat being held." But he wrote out the note and pushed it across the table; I signed the note, got the $600, and spent it. Well, I was not able to pay back the bank until I sold my next year's crop. I lost just exactly the $600 on the carload of wheat, selling it the next spring after this drop in price which I have just indicated to the committee. Every farmer in western Canada who grew wheat there from 1920 to 1923-24 had that experience. There is no reason why anyone should be surprised in going to western Canada to-day to hear every western farmer say, "I am prepared to see this thing tried out; it is better than anything that has been proposed to us before. We expect more from it; we are going to support it". They all had a similar experience; people sitting on the other side of the house had it; they can remember it just as well as I can.

Mr. BURTON: We made our speeches eighteen years sooner, though.

Mr. GARDINER: No; I made mine and they were heard at that time by more people than heard my hon. friend.

Mr. BRYCE: The same thing will happen again.

Mr. GARDINER: As a matter of fact my hon. friend was chairman of one of our committees at that time and was working hard for the Liberal party.

They formed what were called contract pools. What I want to say with regard to that is that is the only other period of five years during which a higher return was obtained for wheat in western Canada than the present $1.35 initial payment provides the farmer over a five-year period. During the five years of the contract pools, the average return to the farmer was $1.47 a bushel. That was the period from 1924-25 to 1928-29 when over fifty per cent of the farmers of the three provinces signed contracts and delivered their wheat to a farm cooperative organization to be sold by that organization. They received an average return of $1.47 a bushel over these years. I hope that what happened at the end of that period will not be repeated at the end of the period for which we are now arranging. We were always told that it was difficult to get farmers to take their losses as well as their profits. With this experience behind us, perhaps we should have learned a lesson. I am not sure of that, but I should like to be sure. Under this contract we shall probably learn something about it. Some of our political opponents may hope that it goes one way and I may hope that it goes another. The experience was this: having set a high initial payment for wheat, the farm organization met in convention and would not agree to its being lowered, with the result that the pools themselves lost something in the neighbourhood of $30 million.

Mr. BENTLEY: Twenty-two million.

Mr. GARDINER: Twenty-two million in the final result. Before it was settled it was somewhere around $30 million. Some of that amount was picked up afterwards, but the final figure of $22 million and some odd dollars had to be taken care of by other arrangements made by governments. Those of us who were in government were there at the time and had to take part in the negotiations which resulted in the settlement. As a result of that, other kinds of control were tried for a while, and finally the market was thrown open. During the period of thirteen years from the time the contract pools went out to 1943 when government control was again put on, the average price received for wheat was eighty-two cents a bushel. I am not going to say that that was all due to there being open markets. I know it was not. There were world conditions which have been discussed here many times that helped to bring about the result. The fact remains that during those thirteen years the average price was eighty-two cents a bushel; and over the twenty-three years from 1920-21 to 1943, the average price was $1.07 a bushel, even including the average of $1.47 over the five years of the pooling period. All I say to hon. members is that when we are discussing this question we ought to take past experience into consideration. I know of no period except the two periods in which we had some kind of control, the one put on by the government itself and the other by the cooperative farm organizations, when wheat ever remained above the $1.45 a bushel for five years. Therefore, on that basis we concluded that $1.35 was a reasonable position to start from, and that we could start from it only with a contract signed with the British government to take an average of 150 million bushels of wheat over a four-year period at a price which gave us a good sum to begin with. Starting from there, we believe that we can market sufficient wheat in other places at similar returns or higher for the earlier part of the period, and if we necessarily must, at lower returns in the latter part of the period and thus bring it to $1.35 paid to farmers, with little if any loss to Canada.

I must say that the objection taken with regard to flour made in Canada and delivered to our own people is that it may result in some losses to the farmers themselves; but toward the end of this period there may be losses taken on the other side by all the people of Canada who are the consumers of flour, and until we get to the end of the period we cannot be absolutely certain as to whether our criticism is just or not. My understanding is that the $1.25 is intended to be retained only until such time as controls are released in certain directions to such an extent as to make it possible to release this one also. It is not a part of the whole five-year programme. It may be that after three months, six months or a year that may happen. I am not in a position to state how long it will be on, but it is not part of a programme which continues right throughout the whole five-year period.

These are the chief points that I want to bring out in connection with the contract that has been presented. There is only one other point that I should like to make, namely, that we believe that stability of price is more valuable to farmers under present conditions than the opportunity to get a higher return at present, with chances that we are going to have to take a much lower return at a period a little later on. I think I have the agreement of most hon. members on both sides of the committee that it will be a good thing for agriculture, in western Canada particularly, and in all of Canada, if we can establish that stability for farm returns across the country.

Mr. MacNICOL: It would be better for all Canada; we shall all prosper together.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. We have contracts for pork; we have contracts for cheese; we have contracts for butter; we have contracts for milk; and they are all on the same basis for a long period of time at a stabilized price. Wheat and beef are the only two left. While I am discussing the wheat contract which has just been completed, I wish to say that a beef contract is under negotiation. I think the final touches will be put to it while I am over in England during the next week or two. When we have it prepared we shall be able to bring it back here and announce it. We hope to have all farm prices put on a basis where we can try to stabilize the return for farm products over a period of from three to five years.

What I wanted to say is that we are going to have criticism. We are going to have people telling us that we can sell our wheat for a great deal more in certain places. I have heard the argument raised here that wheat can be sold in the United States for $1.87 a bushel. As a matter of fact the illustration put out in advertising across the country was that on the street in Portal, North Dakota, wheat was selling at $1.87 a bushel, and that wheat at the boundary, which is only an imaginary line running between the two towns, on the street in Portal was $1.07 a bushel, Canadian funds. I wish to state that neither of these statements is correct.

Mr. COLDWELL: Did the minister say $1.07?

Mr. GARDINER: At North Portal, and $1.87 at Portal, or a difference of eighty cents between the two. Anyone reading any of these advertisements would come to the conclusion that a Canadian farmer could take a load of wheat from North Portal, cross the boundary to Portal and get $1.87 a bushel for it in Canadian funds, but if he delivered it to an elevator on the north side of the line he would get only $1.07. In the first place, if you could deliver wheat into the United States at all at any price you would have to pay forty-two cents a bushel duty on it in order to get it across the boundary line at any point. So that, now that our money is at par, you can immediately take forty-two cents off the top end of it. That brings you down to a difference of thirty-eight cents, not eighty cents. Then, starting at the other end, $1.07 is not the street price of wheat anywhere in western Canada. The $1.07 a bushel represents the difference of eighteen cents between $1.25 at Fort William and the advance made on wheat at North Portal; and with the ten cents we are going to pay now as a result of this price of $1.35 and anything paid on top of that at the end of the period under this arrangement, as a result of the final participation, deducted from the bottom end of it—and that may turn to be some six or seven cents—well, you would have only four or five cents left as the difference between the American return and the Canadian return, or the return a Canadian can get for wheat delivered in the United States. It is not eighty cents. When anyone takes 200,000,000 bushels of wheat and multiplies it by eighty cents and says the farmers have lost that much money, well, the farmers of western Canada are not foolish enough to believe that. They know it is not true, and of course that kind of figuring does not get anyone anywhere.

I wanted to say that much with respect to that matter, but you cannot sell a bushel of wheat in the United States at any price.

An hon. MEMBER: Nonsense.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, perhaps it is nonsense to say you cannot sell a bushel at any time. Under the arrangement that now exists and that was established by the United States government, not by us, there is an embargo on every bushel of wheat going into that country beyond 800,000 bushels; and that has been the case during almost the entire war period. That is not aimed at anyone but Canada. No other country exports or could export any considerable quantity of wheat to the United States. For milling purposes you cannot send into the United States more than 800,000 bushels of wheat in a year, and that amount goes into that country in the first forty-eight hours of the period, or if not in the first forty-eight hours, certainly within the first week. So that our farmers are not in a position to sell wheat in the United States at all, and why hold up before us this offer of $1.87 a bushel for wheat in that country when we cannot sell wheat there?

It has been said in the newspapers and elsewhere that the American people have been criticizing our agreement with Great Britain. I do not care who may say that, I think I know the American people well enough to know that no considerable number are doing any such thing. They have retained their home market for themselves, and that is their own business. They are paying their own people $1.87 a bushel for wheat, and they are not paying the Canadian farmer that price. Since we cannot market our wheat in the United States, we must find a market for it somewhere else. Since they are retaining their own home market, I do not know of any other place in the world where we can sell 160,000,000 bushels of wheat, except in Great Britain. We sold the United States approximately 160,000,000 bushels of wheat one year during the war, as feed for their live stock, even when they had an embargo against anything beyond 800,000 bushels to be milled into flour for consumption in that country. We sold them that wheat so that they could produce live stock and get more meat for the American people. I do not believe any considerable number of people in the United States, in the government or outside it, have raised any criticism of this government going to Great Britain and making an agreement on this basis. But somebody says, "oh, you have made a bilateral agreement and they do not like that." Well, for the life of me I cannot see why the grain exchange or anyone interested in the grain exchange would prefer to have multilateral agreements instead of bilateral agreements. If a bilateral agreement made by the government will tend to close the grain exchange in Canada, surely a multilateral agreement throughout the world will close all the grain exchanges in the world; so why should anyone associated with the grain trade want that? I do not know why, but the advertisements which have appeared would indicate that what they are really against is bilateral trading. Well, I hope I am not looked upon as an impossible imperialist, but I am enough of an imperialist to believe that there is no place in the world where Canada will be better treated than within the British empire. I am quite satisfied to be partly responsible for entering into an agreement with Britain under which they agree to do a thing which will be beneficial to us, and under which we agree to do a thing which will be beneficial to them. Unless we can negotiate arrangements of that kind, bilateral or multilateral, we shall have difficulties in the world that nothing will solve short of another war such as the one we have just come through.

Mr. BURTON: Why don't you come over here?

Mr. GARDINER: What I should say to my hon. friend is, why didn't you stay where you were? The trouble with those hon. gentlemen over there was that they were just Liberals in a hurry. They were, I think, in a hurry to get into this house more than anything else. They are here now and talking good Liberal doctrine. I am glad to hear them talking it, because it does not in any way hurt the position of Liberalism elsewhere.

Mr. COLDWELL: Some of us could have been here a long time ago had we chosen to come another way.

Mr. GARDINER: Well, that reminds me that the other day my hon. friend said he would not become leader of the Liberal party. I would suggest that he might wait until he is asked.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is exactly it; I said I had not been officially asked.

Mr. GARDINER: That is a very good reason for not discussing it at all.

Mr. COLDWELL: Exactly. I would have been the last one to raise it.

Mr. GARDINER: The best reason I know for anyone not wanting to become the leader of any party is that he has not been asked. That is sufficient, without anything further.

The position with regard to this whole matter is that we are able to sell a sufficient amount of our wheat in a sure market, at sure pay, to warrant us in agreeing to stabilize the initial payment for five years at $1.35 a bushel; then undertaking to attempt in that period of time to make still further earnings for the farmer and pay those out at the end. Again I submit that this policy is one that appeals to farmers in western Canada generally. When we are at the end of the four-year period, if in the last six or twelve months we find ourselves in the position that world markets, so-called, are not offering as much for wheat as we are getting for it, I hope people will still stand behind us to the extent they are standing behind us now. Even if wheat stays above $1.55 during the whole period, I hope people will still feel that it was worth while trying. If we are successful in this experiment, then we can talk to the grain trade people with some assurance. If they are able to show us at the end of the five-year period that we were all wrong, that over that length of time the farmer got less than he ever got before under similar circumstances and that the other system would have brought him more, then we shall be in a position to discuss the matter with them on an even footing. I am sure anyone who has taken this position and finds himself wrong will be quite prepared to discuss it from that point of view. In the meantime we are convinced that this is the best thing for the farmer. As long as we are convinced of that, and having another four years in which to try it out, we can put the policy into effect in a way that will at least help us to determine how this long argument between farmer and grain trade in western Canada ought to be settled in the interests of the great masses of the people.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Chairman, the item before the committee is one in the wheat and grain division of the Department of Trade and Commerce, in which an amount of $28,000 is being asked. At the beginning of the discussion on it the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a brief comment with respect to the United Kingdom wheat agreement, and the government wheat policy which he had formerly outlined to the house. To-day the Minister of Agriculture has given us the background of the discussions leading up to the United Kingdom wheat agreement, and has supported that agreement with such arguments as he was able to bring forward.

I rise at this time to criticize the government's wheat policy. But before doing so, let me say this, with respect to the United Kingdom wheat agreement. Any agreement such as this which tends to level out the inequalities, and the wide fluctuation of prices in the past, is a step in the right direction. Even this agreement is better than no agreement at all; because, as the Minister of Agriculture pointed out, those of us who went through the price depression following the last war know the danger of proceeding without some kind of plan to try to avoid wide fluctuations in price.

Having said this, I wish now to point out some of the weaknesses in the arrangement, as I see them. Briefly, what is the government's wheat policy? It is, first, that the initial payment for wheat for a five-year period, including this year, will be $1.35. In that period of time are four years in the future, and one which has passed.

The second point is that wheat deliveries shall not be restricted for this year, but that in each of the later years they may be restricted. In other words something less than the whole crop may be taken by the government.

Mr. MacKINNON: The minimum is fourteen bushels to the acre.

Mr. BRACKEN: The third point is that the wheat board may sell farmers' wheat in three different ways and at three different prices. It may sell domestic wheat at $1.25; it may sell to the United Kingdom under this agreement for two years at $1.55, and for two years at an undetermined price. The minimum in one of those years is $1.25, and in the last year it is $1. The remainder of any wheat not so sold may be sold at world prices, now in the neighbourhood of $2 a bushel. So far as price is concerned, that is the substance of the arrangement. As the minister has said, in the first two years the United Kingdom will take 160 million bushels instead of 90 million or 100 million, the average amount taken before the war. In the later two years it will take 140 million bushels.

I shall not make the numerous detailed criticisms of this policy one could make. My major criticisms are these: First, that the price of $1.35, the initial payment, is less than a fair price. It is less than a parity price for wheat. A parity price for wheat to-day would be in the neighbourhood of $1.50. It will be noted that $1.35 is ten per cent less than that.

It may be urged that this is an initial payment, but there is no assurance that farmers will receive any more than that. To the extent that there is no such assurance, the wheat growers in this country and other farmers as well will not be assured of a fair relationship of their prices to their costs of production. That is my first criticism of the agreement. At a time when the world price is much higher than parity it does not assure to farmers even parity. I ask the committee this question: If we cannot have parity now, what hope is there for parity when the world market situation is reversed, and the price is low?

In this connection I would point out that in the years 1939, 1940, 1941 and 1942 farmers of Canada sold their wheat at prices thirty to forty cents below parity. It is only in the last two or three years that the price has equalled, or slightly exceeded what has been spoken of as parity, or a figure reached by economists which is supposed to represent a fair relationship between the prices farmers receive and the cost of things they have to buy.

My second criticism is that the guarantee of $1.35 a bushel is in many respects an empty guarantee. After this year, there is no guarantee that the government will allow the full crop to be sold. There is no guarantee that it will allow more than fourteen bushels to the acre to be sold. There is no guarantee that they will take more than fourteen bushels to the acre on more than two-thirds of the acreage sown in 1940.

In those respects, as I said, this guarantee is an empty one. To the extent that it is a guarantee of $1.35 a bushel on fourteen bushels to the acre, on a reduced acreage, it is a guarantee. But it is not a guarantee of $1.35 on all the crop grown on all the acres which may be producing in Canada in the next five years.

The third criticism, one which was advanced earlier by another hon. member, is that the government's policy is to hold back the payment of participation certificates until the end of the five-year period. The Minister of Agriculture has intimated that in the next year or two there will be some participation certificates for back years which will be made. That is true. But it is a new feature of government policy to state that under this so-called five-year plan any money which may be due to farmers will be held back until the plan is completed, instead of being paid as soon as the product of each year is sold, and the costs and receipts computed.

I have sometimes wondered why the government brought forward a policy with the last-mentioned weakness in it. I can see no other reason than their fear that in the later years of the agreement the price will be low and what may be held back by the government now can be used to supplement the price then.

My fourth criticism is this: The guarantee is spoken of as a price guarantee. In so far as it goes it is all right, but a price guarantee is not an income guarantee, nor is a price guarantee a purchasing power guarantee. As I have already said, the price guarantee on a part of the production from each acre and on a reduced acreage is not a price guarantee on all that is produced.

I think it was desirable that there be an approach made to a sale of this kind to the United Kingdom, but I do not think this was a good bargain on Canada's part. I think it was a bad bargain. I think it will create a handicap in the development of future markets in other places. In some respects I think it is an improvident arrangement. I think it will tend to restrict the expansion of Canada's trade rather than to expand Canada's world trade. I think, in making this arrangement, the government has backed away from its commitments of the past with respect to the widening of Canadian trade.

Before I proceed further, let me deal with one or two matters mentioned by the Minister of Agriculture just before he sat down. He referred to the fact that somebody had said that wheat was sold at a Canadian border point for $1.07 and that wheat had been sold for $1.87 in the United States. I do not know what impression the minister sought to leave by making that statement; but, lest there be some question as to what the so-called world price is, I should like to read from a document of Canada's own wheat board, circular No. 23, dated July 30, 1946. I shall not read it all; but section B, clause 2, which refers to a number of countries to which flour shipments may be made, reads as follows:

[Mr. Bracken.]

> The price governing sales to the above countries will be basis our current class 2 price which, at this date, is $2.05 per bushel basis one northern, in store, Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver.

We thus have what is in effect a four-price system in Canada. There is the price of seventy-eight to millers for the production of flour for home use; there is the price of $1.25 on wheat used for certain domestic purposes; there is the price of $1.55 to Britain; and there is the price they can get in other markets, they are trying now to get $2.05. That is the wheat price structure as we have it now in Canada.

Let me refer now to another point made by the Minister of Agriculture. He said that this agreement would bring about something more in the way of stability of prices, and that it was a five-year arrangement. A little later I shall touch upon the five-year feature—show that one year has already passed and that in the last two years of the arrangement the agreement means practically nothing so far as price is concerned, that in its main features this agreement is not much more than a two-year agreement. The minister said that it was made for the purpose of bringing about stability in agriculture. I say that in some respects it is an improvident arrangement. In this connection I should like to read what a newspaper which has always been a great friend of this government has to say about some of the aspects of this arrangement. I shall not read all the editorial which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of August 5, 1946, but I will try to sort out the pertinent parts. The editorial reads:

> The Canadian government is trying to defend the bad bargain it has made in its wheat contract with the United Kingdom by exploiting a prejudice which has no relation to the facts.
> Running right through the statements of those who seek to justify this agreement is the assumption that the only alternative to a contract is the danger that wheat prices, some years from now, will fall to the low levels of the depression.
> Mr. MacKinnon, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, has said, for example, that the contract protects western farmers "from crippling losses should there be a world slump in wheat prices."
>
> Now, nobody should know better than Mr. MacKinnon that it is not necessary to have a wheat contract in order to shield farmers from depression prices. He himself has brought in an alternative policy which tries to do this very thing. All he is doing, in sponsoring the new contract, is repudiating his own previous handiwork.
> Speaking in the House of Commons on September 19, 1945, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. MacKinnon, said—

I do not know whether this is the occasion to which the Minister of Agriculture referred.

Mr. GARDINER: The same occasion.

Mr. BRACKEN: These are the minister's words:

"The government recognizes the paramount need for relative stability of income to wheat producers. Toward this end, the government undertakes that in the five-year period ending July 31, 1950, producers will receive not less than $1 per bushel, basis No. 1 northern, in store Fort William, Port Arthur or Vancouver on the authorized deliveries for each crop year. By providing a long-term floor price of not less than $1, the government will protect producers against the consequences of any sharp reversal in the world wheat position during the next five-year period."

In short, our wheat industry is not faced by any panic conditions. The policy now abandoned by Mr. MacKinnon and the government was, in reality, designed to safeguard the farmer against the "crippling losses" which, it is now claimed, can only be prevented by the United Kingdom contract and similar bilateral arrangements.

Without reading all the editorial, let me quote from another part which reads:

It should be emphasized, above all else, that there really is no guarantee that Canadian farmers will receive not less than $1.25 per bushel of wheat in the third year of this bilateral deal and not less than $1 for the fourth year, as the contract now stipulates. The contract is full of so many obscurities and escape clauses that these prices, in practice, may be made subject to further discussion and negotiation in the light of world conditions as they will exist at that time. They are far from being an irrevocable commitment by the United Kingdom.

The British government is much too good a trader to pay Canada more than the world price.

Yet that is what the government is counting on in the later years of this agreement.

Mr. MacKINNON: Under a contract.

Mr. BRACKEN: The editorial continues:

Of course, it—that is the British Government—is quite agreeable to paying us about 50 cents less per bushel than the world price, if we accept such a policy and fix it in a contract.

And that is what the government has done.

Besides, it will always be within Britain's power to take suitable reprisals against us if we try to enforce the letter of the contract against her wishes or her needs. This is a pretty flimsy sort of guarantee for stability of income to the Canadian wheat producer.

We cannot take refuge in the contract and hope to escape the world price.

What the editorial is trying to say is, how can Britain in the later years of this arrangement, if the price of wheat is low, pay to Canada more than the world price? It goes on:

The contract, in short, simply obliges us to sell Britain more wheat than she normally takes from Canada for her own use, and to do so at a figure far below the current world price. We then give her a contractual right to sell the balance at any price she can get and to keep this profit for herself, even though it is made exclusively out of our wheat.

The editorial ends this way:

This is surely an incompetent way for the Canadian government to try to run the farmers' business.

What we are saying to the greatest wheat importer in the world at a time when the price of wheat is high is this: We will sell our wheat to you at about fifty cents a bushel less than the world price in the hope that some time later on when the price is low you will remember and make up for this generosity on our part. I put the question to this committee, would you if you were members of a British parliament, if the price of wheat should go down to a $1 a bushel, would you ask the workingmen of Britain to pay $1.55 a bushel for wheat? And if you did ask that, would they let you pay it? It is not a question of their wanting to break any contract. It is a question of their not being able to come through. And it will be noticed that they have not agreed to come through. Any practical man will say that there is no prospect that they will pay us more later on than the world price, low as it may be.

I have said this arrangement was a bad bargain, and I want again to refer to this paper—a prominent organ of public opinion—which is sometimes right and which I think on this matter is right. Here is what it has to say on August 1:

The wheat agreement is a bargain. Canada agrees to sell; the United Kingdom agrees to buy. How does the bargain work out?

I shall not take time to have you follow the logic of their reasoning, but I will read the pertinent parts of their argument:

Mr. MacKinnon would leave the matter there. But he fails to note another and considerable advantage which accrues to the United Kingdom. Under the agreement . . . Canada undertakes to provide more wheat, particularly in the first two years—the period of the expected scarcity—than the United Kingdom normally receives from this country.

Britain agrees to take 160 million bushels of our wheat where normally she used to take from 90 to 100 million bushels. The editorial goes on:

Moreover, the agreement contemplates the sale at the contract price of quantities of wheat beyond those stipulated.

What is the United Kingdom going to do with the excess of Canadian wheat thus bought from Canada at a fire-sale price? The point has substance, was foreseen by the two governments, and is specifically covered in the agreement by clause 3, "it is agreed that the United Kingdom government may sell or dispose of the wheat and flour purchased under this agreement in whatsoever manner the United Kingdom government may deem expedient both in regard to destination and price."

Britain in the past has taken only 90 to 100 million bushels of our wheat; she has now agreed to take 160 million bushels a year at fifty cents below the world price, and she can sell the surplus where she pleases at whatever price she can get. The editorial goes on:

In a word, Canada not only undertakes to meet Britain's normal requirements of Canadian wheat at a heavy loss in price. Canada goes further and presents the United Kingdom with quantities of wheat which the United Kingdom is free, under the contract, to sell at the world price, keeping the profit. Canada says: Here is the wheat you normally need from us at 45 cents per bushel less than it is worth. And here is more wheat which, if you care to do so, you can sell at a good profit. We do not want this money. You keep it and remember, two years hence, how generous we have been.

It goes on:

From the standpoint of this country retaining its own place in the wheat trade of the world, the folly of this course is clear. Here, however, we are only concerned with how the bargain will work out. Additional to the advantages of being able to buy her normal supplies of Canadian wheat for much less than it is presently worth, the United Kingdom is being set up as a seller of Canadian wheat. The wheat thus sold will be Canada's wheat. The customers who buy it will be customers of the United Kingdom. The profit which results will be Britain's profit.

It will be observed in all the comment in the United Kingdom on the agreement that while great emphasis is placed on the fact that Canadian wheat is now to be bought for less than it is worth, no mention is made of paying more than it is worth later on.

One comment from London reads: "The Canadian price is lower than the United States' or Argentine prices to-day and if Canada is willing to promise deliveries at that price for the next two years it would be a foolish buyer who would refuse." "Foolish" is the right word. Another comment runs: "For Britain this represents an enormous bargain at 5 shillings and 7 pence per bushel while the current price of Canadian wheat is 8 shillings per bushel." Again, the phrase "an enormous bargain" is strictly accurate.

There is a large question mark against the advantage which Canada hopes to receive. It remains to be seen if the United Kingdom will pay a penny over the market price two years hence. There is nothing binding in the agreement and all experience is against any such assumption.

Therefore, the agreement is one-sided. Canada agrees to make a gift to the consumers of the United Kingdom of 45 cents per bushel on the basis of present prices and, further, to set the United Kingdom up in the wheat business at the expense of our wheat growers. If the world price slumps ,the agreement will not stand, and there is no way in which Canada can make it stand. The disadvantages are real. The advantages are illusory. There is no doubt of the desire of the government to do the right thing, but there is more than doubt of its competence in a business matter of this kind.

I have said that a bilateral policy of this kind is a handicap to our future markets. The minister made light of that description of the arrangement, but, as I shall show later on, that criticism of bilateral arrangements has been a basic policy of the Liberal party with respect to trade policies. The Winnipeg Free Press, in its issue of August 1, has this to say with respect to that handicap to our future trade:

If the wheat agreement were a snug little deal conferring advantages on the United Kingdom and Canada even though to the disadvantage of other countries, it might be possible to plead immediate justification. In the long run it is true it would work against both signatories but in the short run it might well be attractitve.

The present wheat agreement, however, cannot even make as good a showing as this. It is a bad bargain for Canada. By practical everyday standards of business it will not bear scrutiny. And no wizardry in analysis is needed to demonstrate its weaknesses.

Canada's wheat problem is a selling problem. We require all the markets we can find and the largest attainable number of buyers. Therein, lies security for our wheat farmers. And it follows that the most obvious course to avoid is to restrict our markets, to place our eggs largely in one basket.

The editorial ends this way:

The consequence of this will be that at the end of the four years covered by the agreement we will be less able to market our wheat than before the war. We will have lost valuable customers. We will have placed the future of our wheat farmers predominantly in the hands of a single buyer. There could be no greater insecurity than this. And no agreement which involves such risk to this country and its wheat farmers should have been entered into.

I said also in criticism of the government's arrangement that a contract of this kind will restrict Canada's ability to widen her markets in the future. In other words, it will tend to block the expansion of our exports, the very thing that in so many speeches in this house, from all sides, everybody is trying to bring about—an expansion of exports and an expansion at the same time of imports.

This is what the Winnipeg Free Press has to say in this respect:

It has been stated here, in previous discussions of the wheat agreement with the United Kingdom, that if the Canadian government prejudiced world trade prospects, now so hopeful, by such a bilateral deal, it would be little less than treason to our international obligations. That treason has now been committed.

By initiating this deal, Canada has violated the spirit and letter of many obligations which she freely assumed. Canada is pledged, by a series of commitments dating back to the early years of the war, to join in the movement to build a world economy based upon the principles of multilateral trade. That duty is now forgotten. It has been dishonoured by a bilateral deal that will stir up great mischief, and injure the long-term interests of Canada, which cannot prosper except in a world free from arbitrary trade restrictions.

And it goes on:

The effect of this bilateral agreement will be particularly unhappy in the United States. For some time now, the United States has been taking the lead in the campaign to liberate world trade. She has reversed the position she assumed after the first world war. Instead of building high tariff walls, she now seeks to reduce or eliminate all discriminatory practices that stifle the growth of trade. In a world burdened with many problems, this American initiative has brought the hope that international cooperation may prove a reality rather than a dream, and that the basis of prosperity may be laid in the vigorous expansion of world trade.

It is difficult to see how Canada's action in the wheat agreement can be fitted into these larger plans. It is an open secret that the United States regards the wheat deal as a contravention of the proposals to be discussed at the world trade conference, preparations for which are now being made in Washington, London and Ottawa, as well as in the capitals of other leading trading nations . . .

On the narrowest possible ground, it is impossible to solve our wheat problem by any such bargain with the United Kingdom as is now contemplated. Before the war Britain took less than 100 million bushels of wheat from Canada; usually the figure was closer to 90 millions. But we had to find a market in the rest of the world for about 150,000,000 or 160,000,000 bushels each year.

There is no security for the farmer in having the contract promise him the sale of 160 million bushels of wheat annually in the British market for the next two crop years and 140 million bushels in each of the last two years of the contract. Great Britain will simply sell the surplus to other countries, thereby making it all the harder for us to market our wheat . . .

The movement to liberate trade was only beginning when the war came. And undoubtedly one of the most hopeful glints of silver in the dark clouds of war has been the belief that the world had learned its lesson and would seize the opportunity which victory would bring to liberate trade.

Listen to this:

This was the promise of the Atlantic charter, of lend-lease, of the united nations charter, of the monetary fund, the world bank, the foreign loans granted by the United States and Canada, the food and agriculture organization, and of the proposed international trade organization. The rebuilding of trade, next to keeping the peace, of which it is an indispensable buttress, has been the greatest promise of these days . . . There is no security for the Canadian farmer in anything but a multilateral trading world.

And the editorial ends in this way:

Thus, in signing the wheat agreement, Canada, the country above all others which depends for prosperity on foreign trade and therefore should be exerting every effort to attaining the freest possible exchange of all goods, has, instead, given the lead backwards to bilateralism and pre-war protectionism.

That is from the newspaper from which I have been quoting up to now.

Mr. HACKETT: What paper is that?

Mr. BRACKEN: The Winnipeg Free Press.

Mr. HACKETT: I do not want to hurt anybody's feelings.

FISHING OPERATIONS

QUERO BANK AREA OFF NOVA SCOTIA—REPORTED DESTRUCTION OF CANADIAN GEAR—STATEMENT OF MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I understand that the Minister of Fisheries, with the indulgence of the house, wants to make a statement to the house.

Hon. H. F. G. BRIDGES (Minister of Fisheries): With the unanimous consent of the house I should like to make the following statement:

As hon. members know, there have been some complaints in recent weeks that foreign fishing trawlers have destroyed gear set by Canadian schooners in some of the international waters off Nova Scotia, particularly the Quero bank area. Naturally, the matter has been receiving close attention from this department and perhaps it may be well for me to give the house a brief factual outline of the position up to the present time.

The complaints which have been made to the department have come from the Canadian fishermen's union, of which Captain Ben McKenzie is the president, I understand, and Captain Willis Park the secretary-treasurer. The first message I received was from Captain Park, which reached me on May 21. In that telegram Captain Park protested, on behalf of the union headquarters at Lunenburg, against the action of foreign trawlers which, he said, were destroying Canadian gear by operating over grounds where fishermen from Lunenburg vessels had already set their trawl lines. Captain Park charged further that the trawlers disregarded signals and the buoys which marked the trawl lines. A day or so later I received from Mr. H. C. Meade, the union's district representative at Halifax, a message broadly similar to the one which Captain Park had sent.

Immediately on receipt of Captain Park's message we asked the department's chief supervisor at Halifax for a report. Subsequently, on June 1, Chief Supervisor Barry was also instructed to make contact with Captain Park and Mr. Meade and endeavour to obtain detailed statements from the masters of any of our schooners which had reported having gear destroyed or damaged. In this way we hoped to get definite information as to the identity of the trawlers which were alleged to have offended and as to the circumstances attending each incident. I may add, in passing, that at more or less the same time that these steps to gather information were being taken certain flights were made over the banks by planes of the Royal Canadian Air Force in order to observe the situation.

Pursuant to the instructions that he had been given to make contact with the union's representatives, Colonel Barry arranged to meet President McKenzie and Captain Park, and at Lunenburg on June 6 he gave them forms for statutory declarations to be made by the master and the mate of each schooner claiming to have suffered loss. He emphasized the importance of having the information in the declarations as complete and detailed as possible. Captain McKenzie and Captain Park said that a number of sworn declarations would be supplied to the department, but they pointed out that there might be some delay since declarations could be obtained only when the fishermen came in from sea between trips. Some delay was understandable, but I had hoped that it would not be quite so long. At all events, the first declarations given us by the union—ten in all—were not received by our Halifax office until Tuesday of last week, August 6, when they were at once sent on to Ottawa. The chief supervisor's office was given to understand by the union officers that several additional declarations would also be supplied, but so far they have not been received. Those already in the department have been made by the following individuals: Loran Ritcey, master, and Michael Hackett, mate, schooner Dot & Hellie; Bernard Tanner, master, and Warren Selig, mate, schooner Fairmorse; Carmen Knock, master, and Ainsley Hynick, mate, schooner Merilyn Clair; Willett Spindler, master, and John Barns, mate, Schooner Isabel Spindler; Magnus Slater, master and David Flett, mate, dragger Sea Nymph.

As yet we have not received any declaration from Captain Leo Corkum of the schooner Irene Mary who has been quoted in the press as charging deliberate destruction of his gear by a foreign trawler. One reason for the delay in making this statement has been my desire to have his declaration before me in view of the specific assertions attributed to him in the press.

My officials and I have studied the information contained in the declarations so far given the department by the fishermen's union. For the moment I shall not discuss them except to point out that, while the declarations do set out certain destructions as occurring at certain times, they fail completely to give us any definite information as to the identity or nationality of the trawlers alleged to have been involved in the particular incidents to which the statements relate.

In outline, then, these are the facts of the case up to the moment. I should add to them the statement that further detailed investigation of the whole matter is being carried on actively by the department and by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, both at sea and ashore.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie the house adjourned at 6.05 p.m.

Thursday, August 15, 1946

The house met at eleven o'clock.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

Third report of special joint committee of Senate and House of Commons appointed to examine and consider the Indian Act.—Mr. Brown.

MOTOR VEHICLES

RESCINDING OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING DISTRIBUTION

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I desire to table a copy of order in council P.C. 3456, passed on the 14th day of August, rescinding the regulations respecting the distribution of motor vehicles.

As the house will recall, during the period from May 7 to June 30 applications for priority certificates were accepted and processed but, due to the number of certificates outstanding and not honoured, the issue of the certificates was suspended until July 1, when all which had been approved during this period were issued. After the 1st July no applications were accepted, except in very special circumstances. On August 1 the controller's orders were amended to prohibit the sale or delivery by a dealer of a new passenger car or truck to anyone who was not the holder of a priority certificate. Since then new passenger cars and trucks have been delivered only to holders of a priority certificate. It is now felt that the distribution of motor vehicles can best be handled by normal trade channels, and the regulations have accordingly been rescinded.

I should remind the house that price ceilings on motor vehicles are fixed by the wartime prices and trade board, and that the rescinding of these regulations does not remove or affect the price ceilings on motor vehicles.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW METHOD OF DEALING WITH ABSENTEES AND DESERTERS

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Minister of National Defence): I desire to announce that a new method has been adopted of dealing with absentees and deserters from the armed forces. The new method will apply to all service personnel who went absent on or before 1st January, 1946, and who had not been apprehended or had not surrendered themselves before 15th August, 1946. It will not apply to those who deserted or went absent while serving overseas. The order in council authorizing the new method, provides that such persons shall be deemed never to have served in the armed forces of Canada and consequently shall not be entitled to any of the rights, privileges or benefits normally accorded to members of the armed forces.

The new method to be now adopted was approved by the Prime Minister prior to his departure for the Paris peace conference. The order in council authorizing the new method of dealing with absentees and deserters was passed yesterday and the effective date fixed as to-day, August 15.

At the present time there are approximately 14,000 army absentees and deserters still unapprehended of whom approximately 8,200 are N.R.M.A. personnel and 5,800 general service personnel; 155 in the navy and 140 in the R.C.A.F. During the war, and from the end of the war up to the present time, active efforts were made by the services to apprehend absentees and deserters. When apprehended or after surrendering they were tried by service authorities. A period of detention normally followed. This has required the maintenance at a substantial cost of special service establishments such as provost corps, staffs at headquarters and depots, and military detention barracks, to apprehend, discipline and retain in custody the absentees and deserters. Further expenditures are incurred upon the issuance of rations and quarters, medical and dental treatment, clothing and equipment, as well as dependents' allowance for the dependents of those in detention.

When such absentees and deserters have served their sentences they are discharged from the armed forces and at that time they normally receive a clothing allowance of $100, plus other rehabilitation benefits, including in many cases a war service gratuity and rehabilitation grant based on the period of satisfactory service but not including the time spent while absent without leave or in detention. In addition there are other benefits of real value for which they may be eligible, including disability pensions, assistance under the Veterans' Land Act and the like. Such personnel are entitled to dental treatment at the time of discharge as well as free medical treatment for the first year after discharge. This new method will have, therefore, the result of imposing a penalty by the removal of benefits to which such personnel would otherwise be entitled and, at the same time, effecting substantial economies in both manpower and financial outlay.

Numerous requests and representations have been made from time to time during the past year for a general amnesty as was granted on December 20, 1919 after the last war. The method which has been adopted imposes an automatic penalty which deprives absentees and deserters of the benefits which they might otherwise derive as members or former members of the armed forces.

The method which I have outlined applies only to those absent before January 1, 1946 and is not intended to include the casual short-term absentee who continues as a normal problem of the three services. While length of absence is not an infallible guide as to the intention not to return to service, it is a general indication that the absentee does not voluntarily intend to return. It was thought that all absentees who merited any real consideration have had more than a fair opportunity for the past several months to come forward voluntarily.

Absentees and deserters who had been apprehended or who surrendered themselves prior to 15th August 1946 and who are at present serving sentences will have, subject to the usual provisions, the compensating advantages and benefits which I have mentioned. Under existing regulations all sentences of absentees and deserters at present in detention are reviewed regularly and remissions granted where desirable. This policy will continue with more frequent reviews being made.

Absentees and deserters who under the new procedure are deemed never to have served will, of course, not receive any form of discharge certificate from the Canadian services.

I wish to table copy of order in council P.C. 3264 to which I have referred.

Mr. PEARKES: May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of the statement he made? Is the board of review to which he referred the board which was set up under Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay to examine all court martial cases, or is it a board made up of regular officers? Also, is the board under Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay still operating?

Mr. ABBOTT: I did not refer to any board of review. The board under Mr. Justice Keiller Mackay is not operating. I referred to the review which is made periodically, as my hon. friend knows, by the district officers commanding or by the general officers commanding all commands, and which no doubt my hon. friend made when he was occupying that position.

Mr. McMASTER: I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if there is any authority except that which would be given by the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act to make the order that was made this morning?

Mr. ABBOTT: To answer that would require a legal opinion which I do not think I can give offhand. I was advised by the Department of Justice that the order in council was within the power of the governor in council.

NATIONAL REGISTRATION

DISCONTINUANCE AS OF AUGUST 15—REVOCATION OF MOBILIZATION REGULATIONS

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have to inform the house that under order in council P.C. 3449 of August 14, 1946, national registration has been discontinued as from to-day August 15. It is provided by the same order in council that further prosecutions shall not be entered against anyone accused of an infraction under the national registration regulations, 1940, nor shall pending cases be proceeded with.

I should like to briefly review the salient features of the registration when now announcing its termination.

At a time when France had fallen and Great Britain was already being subjected to the most violent action the enemy could put against her, when indeed the shadow of actual invasion over this country appeared to offer some grim prospect of reality, it was agreed that existing data on Canada's human resources was inadequate for total war purposes.

Within two months of the collapse of France all plans had been laid for the national registration of civilian residents of Canada over sixteen years of age, and registration was made during August, 1940.

With the assistance of an army of volunteer registrars, forms were completed by 7,862,920 persons, of whom, 3,979,680 were males and 3,883,240 females.

Made under the National Resources Mobilization Act, the registration was taken for, and kept up to date by the Department of National War Services, until March, 1942, when it was transferred to the Department of Labour to assist toward wartime control of manpower.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Since 1940 keeping the fundamental data of the registration up to date has involved a total of about eight million changes, including new addresses, marriages, deaths, corrections, new registrations, and so forth—about the same number as there were persons registered originally.

The data yielded by the registration was used for a variety of purposes, but chiefly for the following:—

(a) The military call-up for the army.

(b) Procurement of skilled workers for essential industries.

(c) Indexing of technical personnel.

(f) Listing of certain foreign nationals of allied nations, available for military service under those countries.

I should like to express my sincere appreciation to the staff engaged on the registration while in the Department of Labour, and to the postmasters across the country who acted as agents, and without whose assistance the keeping up to date of the registration would have been extremely difficult.

The same order in council, P.C. 3449, revokes the national selective service mobilization regulations, 1944, as from August 15. Earlier this year the thirteen mobilization boards had been dissolved, and the thirteen registrars' offices across Canada had been closed out. The order in council provides that further action will not be instituted in the courts against any offenders under the mobilization regulations, nor will court proceedings now pending be proceeded with.

At this point I should like to explain that the action taken now follows after very strenuous efforts to locate all men of military call-up age who could not be found again after first registering. In addition to using the services of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and other police forces throughout Canada and checking through government contacts with the population, we have used several established tracing agencies for some years. The various methods used did, of course, succeed in locating many outstanding delinquents, but it is our opinion that the 1,563 who failed to respond to our orders, and who have not yet been traced, could hardly be located, even through further efforts.

The total of men not yet located has been reduced to 6,553—this out of a grand total of 1,859,811 men dealt with under mobilization regulations. But this number of 6,553 contains mostly men who have left the country, or who apparently are dead, or who registered more than once under assumed names, or are in other unusual categories. The possible delinquents are represented by the figure of 1,563, to which I have referred already. Thus, at most, men not yet located, and thought to be delinquent under the regulations, represent only one-twelfth of one per cent of the grand total, 1,859,811.

Figures on the military call-up were frequently given to the house in the past, so at this time I think that in addition to the figures I have mentioned already, it is only necessary to mention that somewhat more than 800,000 of the men dealt with under mobilization regulations are recorded as in the armed services at one time or another.

Originally, of course, the military call-up came under the Department of National War Services, but its administration had been transferred to the Department of Labour at December 1, 1942.

To the members of the judiciary and the other gentlemen who served on the mobilization boards, I wish to express my sincere appreciation once again. Their responsibilities were grave, and their duties were onerous. They had to decide between important wartime industries and the urgent need of men for the armed services. I suggest that without exception they discharged their duties in a conscientious and fair manner, and that they deserve our gratitude. Also the registrars and their staffs deserve credit for the manner in which they carried through their responsibilities.

I am happy that we have reached the day when we are able to dispense finally with these registration and mobilization regulations, and I am sure that the hon. members will agree with that sentiment. These measures were vitally necessary for war purposes. They helped Canada over many of our manpower difficulties, but they represented one of the features of wartime administration which a democratic public tolerate and even expect, but which the same public very properly feel is not in accord with the peacetime machinery necessary in the government of a free people.

I now lay on the table a copy of order in council P.C. 3449 of August 14, 1946, as referred to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West):

With reference to order in council P.C. 695 of 21.iii.31, as amended by P.C. 805 of 23.iv.37, P.C. 5024 of 30.vi.44 and P.C. 2071 of 28.v.46—

1. What sum of money is considered to fulfil the condition "sufficient means" mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 of said P.C. 695?

2. What position of affairs is considered to fulfil the condition "in the position to secure and care for" mentioned in paragraphs 3 and 3a of said P.C. 695, and who is the judge in such cases?

3. What sum of money is considered to fulfil the condition "sufficient means to farm in Canada" mentioned in paragraph 4 of P.C. 695?

4. What position or sum of money is considered to meet the condition "in a position to receive, marry and care for" mentioned in paragraph 5 of P.C. 695?

Mr. GLEN:

1. As the minimum requirements must necessarily vary with the conditions of settlement in each case, there is no specific sum of money called for. The immigrant must satisfy the immigration inspector-in-charge that he is in a position to maintain himself until employment is secured.

2. An investigation is conducted by an immigration officer to establish that the applicant for admission to Canada of a dependent or other relative described in the regulations is in a position to receive, house and support his dependent, or in the case of an admissible relative house and maintain such relative until the latter becomes established. The decision is made by the district superintendent of immigration on the facts determined at the investigation.

3. No specific sum of money is called for by the regulations. The amount will necessarily vary in accordance with the type of farming, class of farm required, district to which the immigrant is proceeding, and similar matters.

4. See answer to No. 2 above.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER WATER DIVERSION

Mr. DIEFENBAKER:

1. What work consisting of preliminary plans, survey parties and actual operations, has been done since January 1, 1946, in connection with (a) the projected diversion of part of the waters of the South Saskatchewan river at or near Elbow, Saskatchewan, including the erection of a dam; (b) the providing of a reservoir for waters in the Qu'Appelle valley; (c) the elevation or the raising of the level of Long lake; (d) the conservation and increase of the waters of Watrous lake?

2. What further work is contemplated on each of the said projects for the remainder of the present year?

Mr. GARDINER: May I be permitted to give an oral answer to this question and then ask that it stand as an order for return in order that full details may be obtained? The information must be obtained from Regina and it will take some little time to get it. We may not get it before the end of the session, although I hope that will be possible.

The first question asks what work consisting of preliminary plans, survey parties and actual operations, has been done since January 1, 1946, in connection with (a) the projected diversion of part of the waters of the South Saskatchewan river at or near Elbow, Saskatchewan, including the erection of a dam? While I was in Regina a week or so ago I made inquiries and I found that the work that has been done so far this year consists merely of engineering work for the purpose of trying to locate a site at which a dam can be properly built. The difficulty is to find a foundation upon which to rest the dam, and up to that time a suitable site had not been found.

The next section of the question deals with the providing of a reservoir for waters in the Qu'Appelle valley. I think it will be known to the hon. member that there are several different reservoirs there in the form of dams at the end of lakes which either dry up or go down partly during the dry seasons in order to store some water. I do not know that any additions have been made in 1946 down to the present, although the detailed statement will show whether that is true or not. We are locating dam sites along the north and south side of the Qu'Appelle for the purpose of storing water in order to let it come down gradually during the summer rather than to rush away during the spring of the year.

The next part of the question deals with the elevation or the raising of the level of Long lake. I do not think any work was done there in 1946, although considerable work has been done during the last five or six years in an attempt to restore the levels of that lake. The complete restoration would be associated with whatever answer is given to question (a) having to do with the diversion of water down the Qu'Appelle if that is found necessary.

Section (d) deals with the conservation and increase of the waters of Watrous lake. I do not know that anything has been done in that regard in 1946, but detailed information will be provided. If this question is allowed to be made an order for return, full information will be given.

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS—ADVERTISING AND PUBLICITY STAFFS

Mr. FRASER:

1. What departments of the government, if any, applied to the Civil Service Commission for additional staff to handle advertising and publicity in their respective departments?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

2. What are the details of requirements for each department and salaries covering each position advertised by the Civil Service Commission for these departments?

Mr. GLEN: Return tabled.

USE OF EXHIBITION PROPERTIES FOR WAR PURPOSES —WOODSTOCK AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY

Mr. DANIEL:

1. What has been the cost to the Department of National Defence in policing the grounds of the Woodstock agricultural society since the close of the driving and maintenance school in March, 1946?

2. What has been the cost to the government for policing the grounds of the Woodstock agricultural society since taken over from the Department of National Defence by the War Assets Corporation?

3. What was the estimate of cost made by the Department of National Defence for the restoration of the Woodstock agricultural society's property and buildings?

4. Was there an estimate made by the Woodstock agricultural society to restore their property for fair purposes and, if so, what amount did they agree to accept in cash?

5. What annual rental was paid for the following exhibition grounds (a) the buildings and grounds of the Woodstock agricultural society at Woodstock, Ontario; (b) for buildings and exhibition grounds at Woodstock, New Brunswick?

6. How many exhibition grounds in Canada were leased for defence purposes during the war period?

7. How many of the exhibition grounds and buildings, so leased, have been returned with settled claims as follows: (a) Payment in cash made by the government without the removal of buildings and other equipment constructed by the government; (b) no cash payment, but buildings and grounds restored to the satisfaction of the exhibition authorities?

8. (a) In making settlement for damage or restoration for any exhibition property, has the government removed any buildings or equipment constructed for war purposes; (b) if so, where?

JAPAN

CONTROL AND SUPERVISION—REPORT AS TO PARTICIPATION OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) asked whether the government was in a position to comment on a news dispatch from Tokyo reporting that the supreme commander for the allied powers, General Douglas MacArthur, had suggested that the allied council for Japan be broadened by the informal and unofficial addition of seven members, including Canada. According to this press dispatch these seven would represent the countries having membership on the far eastern commission. I said that as far as I knew, Canada had not received an invitation to join the allied council but that I would ascertain whether there had been any discussion with other governments about the possible extension of an invitation to Canada to join the council.

I find that we have not been approached by any other government on this matter. Membership on the allied council for Japan is at present confined to United States, British, Soviet and Chinese representatives. Its purpose is to consult with and advise the supreme commander for the allied powers concerning enforcing the surrender terms for Japan.

The Canadian government is, of course, represented on the far eastern commission which has its seat in Washington and is charged with the responsibility of formulating the policies, principles and standards required to give full effect to the Japanese instrument of surrender.

TAXATION

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—ARRANGEMENTS WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. CHESTER S. McLURE (Queens): I should like to ask a question of the acting Prime Minister. Has the government of Prince Edward Island completed arrangements with the federal government for the tax relief compensation as per provincial conference claims submitted?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Prime Minister): I shall have to take my hon. friend's question as a notice, as I had not received any previous notice of it. I shall see on Hansard just what are the exact terms of his question and endeavour to have a proper reply prepared for him.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

375. Wheat and grain division, $28,532.

Mr. BRACKEN: Mr. Chairman, when the house rose last evening we were discussing the government's wheat policy for Canada. My remarks this morning will deal with two aspects of that policy, one the United Kingdom wheat agreement, and the other the government's general wheat policy as distinguished from the United Kingdom agreement.

My first point is that the United Kingdom agreement or contract is a complete reversal of traditional Liberal policy, whether you spell that Liberal with a capital "L" or a small "l", whether you use the word in the party political sense or in the wider sense as indicating the type of economy which the word is commonly used to describe. I shall take only a moment to illustrate what I mean by saying that this agreement is a departure from Liberal policy.

In recent years the government has committed itself to certain lines of policy aimed to promote trade and good will. For instance, in August, 1941, it agreed to the Atlantic charter. Clause 4 of that charter expresses the ideal, with due respect to existing obligations—> of furthering the enjoyment by all States, great or small, victor or vanquished, of access, on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity.

"On equal terms," it says. In this agreement we have a one-country arrangement which is not available to other countries. So the government's policy is a departure from that statement of policy laid down in the early years of the war.

Later the government approved the Bretton Woods agreement. In that agreement these words appear:

> The fund has been projected to facilitate the establishment of a system of international payments that will maintain relative stability in exchange rates and will permit a multilateral trade pattern.

But in the United Kingdom agreement we have a bilateral trade pattern, and not a multilateral trade pattern.

In 1942 this government exchanged notes with the United States government along the same line. I will read just one clause from the exchange of notes of November 30, 1942.

> Our two governments are prepared to cooperate in formulating a programme of agreed action, open to participation by all other countries of like mind, directed to the expansion, by appropriate international and domestic measures, of production, employment, and the exchange and consumption of goods, which are the material foundations of the liberty and welfare of all peoples; to the elimination of all forms of discriminatory treatment in international commerce; and to the reduction of tariffs and other trade barriers.

So the government of Canada in this United Kingdom agreement has departed not only from its traditional policy but from its agreements as expressed in these serious and well-considered statements of government policy. I need not take the time of the committee to read from more of these documents or from more statements by members of the government themselves. I shall content myself by referring to only one, the statement of the Minister of Finance on November 12 last when he was dealing with the question of withdrawing the government's tariff proposals. The government had planned some tariff increases and later decided to withdraw them, and on November 12, 1945, the Minister of Finance made this statement to the house:

> The government has repeatedly expressed the view that in the interdependent world of to-day prosperity is indivisible, and that the prosperity of any nation cannot be long maintained without a restoration and expansion of international commerce.
> We welcome every indication of a movement in the direction of reciprocal action to produce trade barriers.

What I have said, Mr. Chairman, is that the government's wheat policy is a wide departure from those statements of what I believe and most of the Canadian people think were statements of wise policy.

Coming now to the agreement itself I said last night that we regard the agreement as a bad agreement. I shall try to summarize very briefly why we think that.

It is a bad agreement because it proposes to sell 160 million bushels of wheat to Britain at 50 cents a bushel below the world price. It is either a gift or it is an improvident trade arrangement. If it is a gift, let us say so. But if it is supposed to be an insurance against low prices in the future—if because we take less for our wheat to-day than it is worth Britain is expected to pay more for our wheat two years from now than the world price when it may be lower, I say that as an insurance that this will be done, it is valueless.

It is a bad bargain also because it will create friction between Britain and Canada. If in two or three years from now the world price of wheat is low and Britain does not come through with a higher price to us than the world price then is, we shall feel that she has reneged on this agreement. On the other hand, if two or three years from now, when the world price of wheat may be low, we press Britain to pay us more than the world price, she will feel that we are unreasonable. So I say that the proposal is altogether likely to create friction between this country and Britain.

The third reason why this is a bad bargain is that it will cause friction with other nations as well. It will invite criticism from the wheat-producing nations, because here we are selling wheat to the greatest wheat importer of the world at 50 cents a bushel below the world price. What are other wheat-producing nations to think of a policy of that kind.

It will also invite friction from the wheat consuming nations. Why? Because we are selling wheat to Britain at $1.55 a bushel when the world price is above $2 a bushel and we do not offer our wheat to other countries at that low price. We are thus putting ourselves in a very unfavourable position to promote good will with the agricultural producing countries of the world on one hand and with the food-consuming countries on the other. This, Mr. Chairman, is the end of the government's policy of selling cheap wheat to the hungry nations of the world other than Britain, and it will be a handicap to us in trying to build up a market in all these other countries which so interpret this arrangement.

And this contract is a bad bargain because Britain can take this wheat at this low price, manufacture it into flour, and sell that flour at a lower price than flour that has been made by nations which have to pay $2 a bushel for their wheat. It is a bad bargain for this reason also—how can Canada expect to sell the remainder of her wheat at $2 a bushel, the world price, if Britain is offering wheat, or flour made from wheat, at a price less than that? The tendency will be for that practice to drive down the world price and make difficult if not impossible the receiving by Canada of the present world price. I predict that in two years time, or a little more, this agreement will blow up, when the advantages to Britain are gone and when her own people will be wanting to get food at the world price, as they have always wanted to, and when the world price will probably be lower than it is now.

Now, with respect to the government's wheat policy generally,—

Mr. TUCKER: May I ask a question on that? I am curious to know what the leader of the opposition means. Does he mean that the British people will not live up to this agreement?

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not say that.

Mr. TUCKER: Well, I wonder just what the hon. member did mean.

Mr. COLDWELL: He said they would renege.

Mr. GARDINER: That is the only thing it could mean.

Mr. BRACKEN: Why does the hon. member want to ask that question? I should like to answer him if I can.

Mr. TUCKER: I am asking for information, because I wondered what the leader of the opposition meant by that.

Mr. BRACKEN: By what?

Mr. TUCKER: By the suggestion that the agreement may blow up if the price of wheat should go down below the price provided in the agreement; that the British people would want to get wheat at the world price. Does he mean that the British people will not live up to this agreement?

Mr. BRACKEN: In this agreement does Britain agree to pay us two years from now a higher price than the world price?

Mr. TUCKER: She agrees to pay—

Mr. BRACKEN: Does she?

Mr. TUCKER: I asked the leader of the opposition a question.

Mr. BRACKEN: You asked me a question: I am Irish; I shall answer yours if you answer mine.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Then give him a chance to answer.

Mr. TUCKER: Let me answer the question by saying this—

Mr. BRACKEN: The hon. member wants to make a speech in the middle of mine.

Mr. TUCKER: If under the agreement wheat is sold to Britain at below the world price now, Great Britain will take that into consideration in the price she is to pay under the agreement later on—in the last two years of the agreement.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. The hon. member should not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BRACKEN: I asked the hon. member if in this agreement Britain undertakes to pay us after two years from now a price higher than the world price.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes. If the world price is below $1.25 a bushel.

Mr. BRACKEN: No "ifs" and "ands".

Mr. GARDINER: There are no "ifs" about it. Yours is all "ifs".

Mr. BRACKEN: There is nothing in this agreement which requires Britain to pay more than the world price,—

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, there is.

Mr. BRACKEN: Unless the world price is less than $1.25.

Mr. GARDINER: The world price could be less.

Mr. BRACKEN: The world price could be less, and if it becomes less, this policy will be dealing unfairly with the farmers of Canada.

Mr. TUCKER: What did the leader of the opposition mean, then, when he said that the agreement would blow up if prices went below the price under the agreement?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I would like to remind hon. members that the hon. member who has the floor must not be interrupted unless with his consent.

Mr. GARDINER: He should not ask questions, then.

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not say that the arrangement would blow up because Britain would not live up to the contract, or because Canada would not, but because they would both find that it could not be carried out.

Mr. GARDINER: Who will break it?

Mr. BRACKEN: I would ask my hon. friend, and he can answer now or later: if three years from now the price of wheat is $1.25, and you were a member of the House of Commons of Great Britain, would you support a policy which would pay Canada $1.55 for wheat?

Mr. TUCKER: My answer is that my attitude would be this: if I got wheat during part of the time at below the world price I would expect to pay more when the world price went below the minimum the agreement called for.

Mr. BRACKEN: Well, if you did, you would be different from what the British people have been any time in the past.

Mr. GARDINER: That is not true.

Mr. BRACKEN: The British people have not agreed to pay $1.55 when the world price of wheat is $1.25.

Mr. GARDINER: They paid under those conditions for bacon in the first year of the war.

Mr. BRACKEN: This agreement has nothing to do with bacon.

Mr. GARDINER: It is the same in principle.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They will hold to their agreement.

Mr. BRACKEN: Hon. members know that in the tough days of the thirties when the price of wheat in Canada was 60 cents a bushel, Britain was asked to pay a little more for it and the chief buyer of British wheat said, "No; so long as we can get wheat in Hungary or Roumania or India or any place in the world at a lower price we are not justified in paying any more for Canadian wheat."

Mr. TUCKER: That is the advantage of this agreement; she agrees to do something in regard to wheat.

Mr. BRACKEN: If my hon. friend thinks that by our making this sacrifice now of 50 cents a bushel the British are going to pay 50 cents a bushel more than the world price two or three years from now, he may keep on thinking that.

Mr. GARDINER: May I ask a question? What establishes the "world price" which is being spoken of?

Mr. BRACKEN: It does not matter what establishes it.

Mr. GARDINER: There is no grain exchange open anywhere in Europe.

Mr. BRACKEN: The question is, is there a world price or is there not? Your board said that there is a world price of over $2; and if our grain exchange is closed, some other grain exchange may not be closed.

Mr. GARDINER: They are all closed for wheat except one.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): They are not all closed.

Mr. BRACKEN: Now with respect to the government's wheat policy generally, I make this criticism: it is not fair to the farmers, it is not fair to a quarter of the Canadian people, it is not fair—particularly—to those who are growing wheat. It is not fair because the price that is offered, $1.35, while there is a possibility that something more will be coming after the end of five years, there is no assurance that there will be. One dollar and thirty-five cents is not a fair price for wheat to-day. It is not a "parity price", if I may use that hackneyed term. "Parity price", is the name given to a price which is supposed to express a fair price in relation to other things. The parity price now would be about $1.53, but $1.35 is all the farmers are assured, at a time when the world price is nearly half as high again as that. If the farmers of Canada cannot be assured of a parity price now, when the world price is high, what prospect is there of their being assured of parity price when the world price is low, as it is sure to be later on?

The government's policy during the last two or three years has been a policy generally of floors and ceilings. That has reduced the wide fluctuations of prices, and to that extent is good; it has raised the floors and lowered the ceilings. Now there is a modification of that policy. The government comes along with this price of $1.35, which as I have said is less than parity. The policy has been one of floors and ceilings, but now it is one even more of a controlled economy; and when the government starts in to control the economy, then when things do not go right, or any inequity is brought about, the government has no one to blame but itself. This policy is not equitable. It does not assure equity to farmers, and this is one time when the government might have given them that assurance.

As I have said, the government's policy is one of no assurance of parity when the world price is high, and even less assurance when the world price is low. The government's policy is one of making agriculture carry the cost of the loss on this sale. It is not the nation that is carrying it. The nation's economy will suffer if it does not get as much for wheat as it might have got. But the price of the loss will be borne by the farmers. The government may say that the farmers are probably getting enough, but the fact is that this is a contribution by the farmers of Canada and not by the Canadian people as a whole. When you stop to think that on this one commodity the crop is sold at four different prices—wheat for flour at 78 cents, the so-called domestic price of $1.25, the British price of $1.55, and now the effort is being made to sell to other countries at over $2—you will realize that is very much of a hodge-podge, something which is most difficult to administer and does not work out equitably to the producers.

In closing I recognize that the wheat agreement is signed, signed by the officials of the United Kingdom and by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Whether it is good or bad, whether it is good in some respects and not as good as it might be in others, the fact remains that it has been signed and I am sure there is a desire on the part of everyone to carry it out. But with respect to the government's wheat price policies, other than those in the wheat agreement—the government, as I have said, has had an opportunity better than it has ever had to assure equity to agriculture. Whatever value $1.35 a bushel may have, it does not assure equity to agriculture at a time when equity could easily have been assured. If this policy, instead of declaring that the price will be $1.35 now for five years, had stipulated that it would be $1.55 now—such a price would for the time being have assured a reasonable degree of equity. But it does not do that. The government might have said that for five years it would agree that if the farmer's cost went up the price would go up and if the farmer's cost went down the price would go down; in other words, that it would adjust the price to the cost of things the farmers have to buy. That has not been done, and the opportunity to take a long step forward towards equity and justice and social and economic progress has been lost.

I suggest this to the government. The agreement has been signed, but the government can still say to the Canadian people: We will approve a price now of $1.55 a bushel and make it for five years, or three years or two years or one year, and if the farmer's cost goes up, as it is likely to go up—because we cannot grant increases in costs to steel and labour; and all these other things without the farmer's cost going up—if the farmer's costs go up the price will be adjusted from year to year on the basis of these costs. Let it go higher if the costs are higher and lower if the costs are lower. If that were done we would have what every farmer has been wanting, and what every reasonable man in every other calling in the country has been wanting—equity, nothing more and nothing less. It might be difficult to assure that accurately in a free economy, but not so difficult in a controlled economy, or a semi-controlled economy as now. That is the only guarantee of real income stability to the farmer, and it has not been given. But it could be given, and I suggest that the government even yet agree to make the price $1.55 instead of $1.35 per bushel.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have listened carefully both to the minister and to the leader of the opposition, and until the concluding sentences of the speech delivered by the latter gentleman I wondered what policy he would suggest. I may say at once that in regard to price I take a somewhat similar view, that at the present time the wheat agreement calls for the payment of $1.55 a bushel for the wheat that is sold to Britain and I believe that is nearer what we sometimes call a parity price. I believe the government would be well advised to consider this suggestion that, in the event of the costs of production rising for the next few years, as they will do largely because of the government's failure to maintain the ceilings, any difference there may be between what the farmer receives for his wheat and the increased cost of production should be made up out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

We have signed an agreement with Great Britain, and I take a view the very opposite to that of the leader of the opposition. I believe that, having signed that agreement, the British will not, to use the word which I believe the hon. gentleman used, renege on the deal. It has been the history of Great Britain, with all her faults and failings in the past, that she has lived up to her obligations, and one thing that has often been said is that the Britisher's word is his bond. I am convinced that this agreement will be fulfilled to the full by any British government which happens to be in power for the next several years.

Mr. GARDINER: Will my hon. friend permit a question? I understood him to say he considered that parity was somewhere around $1.50 or $1.55. I think it was fairly well admitted that prior to the increase in implement prices and labour which has recently taken place, parity would probably be about $1.41 or $1.42—somewhere around there. The point I wanted to raise was this. The situation has again changed materially in relation to, say, implement prices by the fact that the ten per cent exchange adjustment has been made, which will result in implements coming from the United States being sold at ten per cent less. I am given to understand that a combine is selling at $160 less than before that change was made, which means that all implements made in this country will have to come down too. What we call parity, adjusted from day to day, would be a very difficult thing to apply to wheat, and what we are presuming of course is that for a four-year period parity will probably work out at what we figured it at during the last four or five years—$1.41 rather than $1.55—and it is on that basis that the discussion took place, whether the advance should be $1.35 or $1.40. The farmers organization argued that to put it at parity it should be $1.40, and that is parity over a long period, not a week or a month. It will be agreed by most persons that a parity figure that should be finally used in criticism of the agreement as it works out would be rather a four-year parity than a four weeks or a four months parity.

Mr. COLDWELL: What I had in mind was that the cost of living, according to the figures of the bureau of statistics, has increased by five points in the last three months, and I was making the point that if this increase continues, an adjustment should be made. If what the minister says is correct and parity over the period of the agreement should be in the neighbourhood of $1.40 or $1.35, or whatever it may be, of course that would be a different story, but the point I think I made quite clearly was that if costs of production and costs of living continue to rise, a compensatory adjustment should be made out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. We cannot go back to Great Britain and say they will have to pay more, or we would be doing what the leader of the opposition thinks Britain might do under other circumstances, when he suggested they might be inclined to renege on the deal.

Mr. GARDINER: Might I just complete the story—

Mr. BRACKEN: I did not say Britain was reneging on the deal.

Mr. COLDWELL: You used the word "renege".

Mr. BRACKEN: I said she might.

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, I do not think it is a possibility.

Mr. BRACKEN: What I said was that in this agreement there is no assurance that Britain will pay more than the world price later on.

Mr. COLDWELL: If that does not mean that Great Britain will renege on her deal, I do not know what it does mean.

Mr. BRACKEN: No. I said it was not in the contract.

Mr. GARDINER: May I say just one more word on the other point?

Mr. COLDWELL: I hope, Mr. Chairman, you are considering these interruptions in connection with my time, though I do not expect to take forty minutes.

Mr. GARDINER: We shall not insist on the matter of time, and anyway we are in committee. What I want to point out is that under the floor price measure—that is not the proper name, but it will do—we stated to the house that $200,000,000 was being provided for the purpose of taking care of any adjustments in connection with what might be known as parity on other farm products. At the same time we stated to the house that similar arrangements would be made if necessary, through the wheat board, in connection with grain. I just want to point out that provision is made in another way.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to know that provision is made should circumstances arise making it necessary. I was not aware of that, and I doubt very much whether other hon. members were aware that this was the interpretation which might be placed upon the previous statement made by the minister.

I was amazed to hear the leader of the opposition accuse the government of attempting by this agreement to end the policy of selling cheap wheat to countries other than Britain. Surely if the farmers of western Canada have suffered at all they suffered particularly during the years from 1930 to 1939 or later from the policy of selling cheap wheat. Why, we know in western Canada that on one occasion at Fort William wheat went down to 38 cents a bushel for No. 1 northern, which meant at the country points in my own constituency, for example, that No. 1 northern was worth 20 cents a bushel. If that is what this agreement ends, then I am all for this agreement, and I am surprised to hear the leader of the opposition or anyone else in the house suggest that the agreement ends the policy of selling cheap wheat to countries other than Britain. I hope it does end that policy for all time.

Let me comment briefly upon another provision which I regret is in the agreement, because I do think it leads to a tremendous amount of misunderstanding. I refer to the clause which permits Great Britain to sell or otherwise dispose of the wheat. I wish we could get a fuller explanation of what that clause means. But I bear in mind that very recently Britain herself surrendered 200,000,000 tons of foodstuffs to feed the starving people of western Europe, particularly the people of her former enemy, Germany. If you look up the statistics you will find that practically half a billion dollars was spent on food by Britain, not for resale to the distressed nations but in order to relieve starvation on the continent of Europe; half a billion dollars of the money of the British taxpayers was spent for that purpose. I hope this clause in the agreement is an indication of an intention to continue that kind of humanitarian policy.

Now I want to say to the Minister of Agriculture that even if conversion comes late I am glad it does come. I look back over the years before the war and during the war when those of us in this party advocated agreements of this type, and I remember the minister rising in his place and denouncing such agreements, stating that open market trading set a price which was fair and reasonable for the commodity sold. I did not have time to look through all the records, but I recall that in 1939, for example —and I chose a year before the war—in foreshadowing legislation following the Turgeon report, the minister said at page 1037 of Hansard for that year:

> . . . we intend to introduce legislation which will carry out as far as possible the recommendations of the Turgeon commission, which were:
> First, that the government should remain out of the grain trade and our wheat should be marketed by means of the futures market system.

I shall read the other two paragraphs, though they have little bearing:

Second, that the grain exchange should be placed under proper supervision.

Third, that encouragement be given to the creation of cooperative marketing associations or pools.

Then in explanation the minister went on:

We cannot agree that there is likely to be permanency to any system of marketing farm products which is based upon price fixing. We prefer to embark upon a policy which will lead to costs of production and standards of product which will invite a paying market for all our farm products.

I am pleased indeed that the minister has come to the conclusion that another policy is better than the one he outlined at that time. May I also add that I think this policy is in conformity with what is being done by other countries. After all, we have to view realistically the situation in which we find ourselves, and when realism demands a change of policy then that change must be made.

I think the wheat agreement is a very important step in the attempt to achieve stability in the price of wheat to the western grower. I have just come back from western Canada. As the minister indicated, he also came back a day or two ago. We had a national convention, at which I met a good many representative farmers other than the delegates who were there. Being interested in this wheat agreement, and having given some approval to it before to-day, naturally I was interested in finding out what was the reaction on the part of the people whom I have known for a good many years. I found, as the minister found, that while the western farmer thinks, as I indicated earlier, that the price to him now should be higher, none the less he feels that this agreement makes for some stability in the production and marketing of wheat, and that he is now relieved from the dangers from which he suffered during the period immediately following the last war, when he saw the price of wheat drop from nearly $3 a bushel down to slightly over $1 a bushel in approximately twelve months. And he realizes that if he can get a stable market at a stable price which is adequate to maintain a reasonable and decent standard of living, in the long run he will be better off than if he took a high price now and a low price two years from now. And I say that so far as it is designed to achieve stability, it should meet with this parliament's approval. Regardless of what Great Britain may pay in the last two years, it guarantees an initial price of $1.35 a bushel for the period of the agreement. And at the end of that period I believe we shall be able to look back and say that, in all certainty, this agreement did give a measure of stability, and perhaps protected the farmers—as I shall show later on—from some of the dangers inherent in the present world situation. This of course is vitally important to the Canadian farmer, and may be even more important in the later years of the agreement.

But while we are dealing with our overseas customers, the farmer is entitled to expect that the government will set the same price for our millers on the wheat used in the domestic market. I believe that is the universal opinion of western wheat growers, and I suggest the government would be well advised to reconsider that phase of its policy. After all, an increase from approximately 78 cents to $1.35 per bushel, even if it were carried into the price of a loaf of bread, would not mean more than a rise of one cent in the price of that loaf in this country. While bread is a very important commodity, I do not think that under any circumstances our farmers should be called upon as a group in any way to assist in doing something that the whole of Canada should do. Therefore I suggest that that phase of government policy should be reconsidered.

During the war farmers were called upon to produce under great difficulties, and to make great sacrifices. We should not now ask them to continue to make sacrifices. They are entitled now to a price, and a guarantee in price, which will give them a proper return for their labour and enable them to live as well as those who live decently and well in our urban centres. And when I refer to a proper standard of living I am thinking of the standard of those who live decently and well in urban centres.

The price at which our wheat is being sold to Great Britain at the present time is $1.55. Again the criticism is made that this is below the United States price. I believe that yesterday the Minister of Agriculture was clear and also wise in placing before the committee the fact that it was the United States price we were talking about, not what is sometimes called the world price. But whatever the United States price is to-day, it may well be that during the course of this agreement there may be a spectacular fall in world prices, which, without the protection of an agreement of this kind, might prove disastrous to the farmers of Canada. But, as I warned a moment ago, if the cost of production rises there must be some compensatory payment to the farmers of Canada, apart altogether from the British agreement.

What the farmers need, and what we in this party have always urged, is a parity price. I do not know how hon. members would define that expression, because there are a good many definitions of it. But the one I always keep in mind is this, that a parity price is one which bears direct relationship to other costs in the economy—costs of production, costs of living, and the like. I admit immediately that this involves a considerable amount of economic and social planning.

This particular feature of the matter, namely the parity price and a decent standard of living, is important. We must not overlook the fact that while the government guarantees to take all the wheat delivered in the crop year 1946-47, after that time the farmers may be put on a quota of deliveries amounting to fourteen bushels per seeded acre, if and when required.

An hon. MEMBER: Authorized.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, authorized. If that should occur it means of course that the returns from wheat may be lower than would maintain the standard of living to which I have referred. I know that the average production of wheat on our western farms over a period of years is slightly over 15 bushels to the acre—15·7 I think it is. Perhaps if we were to deduct the seed, the amount that is fed, and averaged the remainder over the entire area, the average might be about 14 bushels to the acre.

Mr. GARDINER: It actually is.

Mr. COLDWELL: I want to be fair in my discussion of this particular phase of the matter. Obviously—and the interjection of the Minister of Agriculture when the leader of the opposition was speaking emphasizes it—there is no further use for a Winnipeg grain exchange. To keep it open to play with rye, with coarse grains, or even with a surplus of wheat, would, I think, mean that all we were doing was maintaining an institution which has outlived any usefulness. We know perfectly well that in other countries exchanges of the type of our grain exchange are being closed. One of the greatest in the world, the cotton exchange in Great Britain, was closed permanently not long ago. I believe the Liverpool grain exchange will not reopen.

The success of this agreement will depend upon the grain situation in the world in a few years, and in this respect I think the agreement may be a valuable protection for our western farmers. Canada's exports of machinery alone, as placed on record the other day by the hon. member for Melfort, indicate the extent to which mechanization is going on in countries which were not mechanized before the war.

When I was in Great Britain in the autumn of 1944 I had the privilege of flying from Prestwick to London. Upon arriving there I remarked that, having been born in that country and having lived there until I was about twenty-one years of age, and knowing the rural districts of England rather well—because all my relatives were engaged in agriculture—I had been amazed while flying over that country to see the degree of cultivation which had taken place. I was amazed to see that there were actually combines operating in some of the fields. When on a subsequent occasion I made these observations to a member of the British government he said, "Great Britain is now the most highly mechanized agricultural community in the whole world." One finds it difficult to believe that, but the figures were produced to show that with their tractors and their high-powered farm equipment they had become at least one of the most highly mechanized agricultural countries in the world. In the same autumn we crossed parts of Europe and saw the difference there. For instance, in France we saw farmers cultivating their land with walking-ploughs pulled by a cow and a horse hitched together—using the most primitive methods of cultivation. And yet we know that even under these circumstances, prior to the war France was able to export wheat—and indeed, exported considerable quantities of it in some years. But now, with the feverish attempt to grow cereals in order to feed the starving population of Europe, these countries are mechanizing to an extent undreamed of a few years ago. We know what Russia was able to do in a few years of mechanization. In the semi-arid regions of North Africa—and wheat is a semi-arid plant—they are placing large new acreages under cultivation and using new and high-powered machinery. Australia and the Argentine republic will not in all likelihood suffer from another severe drought in the next few years and we may again see accumulations of wheat pile up. This agreement would then protect our western farmers to an extent that may be very valuable to them in the years to come.

As the minister said yesterday, the records show that this will mean that for the four years we shall be guaranteed a market for sixty per cent more wheat than Great Britain was buying before the war. I have not looked it up, but I think my memory serves me correctly when I say that the banner year before the war in our exports of wheat to the United Kingdom was around 102 million bushels, although I am not quite sure of that figure. But I do know that the statement is correct that this will give our western farmer an assured market for an average of sixty per cent more than we exported to Great Britain before the war. This would be a great advantage to us should surpluses accumulate.

May I remark to the leader of the opposition and to my friends of the Winnipeg Free Press that they are clinging to an outworn philosophy of trade when they follow the principle of laissez faire. There is no question about it that we shall never come back again to the old methods of trade. Governments will not allow their basic supplies to remain in the hands of speculative interests who are concerned not with the welfare of the people of the world but only with the making of profits out of the needs of the community.

In Europe, which is our principal customer, governments of all types are engaged in protecting their people against the fluctuations brought about by speculation. I know that those of us who believe that are often accused of pinning our faith to what is called bilateralism. I do not think this is bilateralism. A bilateral agreement would mean that if we were to sell Great Britain 160 or 150 or 140 million bushels of wheat at a given price, we would undertake to take from Great Britain at the same time an amount of British goods which would substantially cancel the value of the goods we were sending to Britain. That, substantially, would be a bilateral agreement. To my mind an agreement of this kind may actually break open the markets of the world and lead to a new form of multilateral trade. That is what I hope and have always hoped, and that is what I believe will happen. As long as we have socialist governments—and they are going to continue in power and grow in power across the world—they will not allow their people to become the victims of speculation in essential commodities.

I should like to note one feature of the agreement which may be of value to us and to the world. Provision is made for entry into a world wheat agreement if and when it can be reached. I hope that such a world agreement can be reached, because it would be beneficial not only to Canada but to all the world. Our government has been forced by the trend of events to consider and accept an agreement of this kind and I know it will be forced further along this path.

If we want to maintain, not only adequate farm prices but an adequate standard of living for our workers, we shall have to have more and more not of regimentation but of the kind of democratic control that is needed for our economy. This means that we shall have to plan our economy more closely than ever. At the moment these agreements are not sufficiently inclusive of Canadian products. We want to maintain high levels of employment, which depend upon high standards of living on the farm. High standards of living on the farm depend upon high levels of employment. But an over-all plan could do these things, so that an agreement of this sort would not fail.

I do not want to say much more, except that with the qualifications I have given I welcome this agreement. I believe I am speaking for the great majority of my supporters and the supporters of this movement when I say that to the extent to which it will achieve stability in this great commodity which we produce in such vast quantities, to that extent it will be beneficial. No one can foretell the future, but the value or otherwise of this agreement will be known in the course of the next four years.

I am prepared to say that if the government makes the provisions that I have mentioned for necessary adjustments, it will be beneficial. Before I sit down I must say I am certain that the present British government which negotiated it, or any successor to that government will honour the signatures to this agreement.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): If the committee is not ready to pass this item, I should like to suggest that it stand and then we could come back to it after the Minister of Agriculture has had an opportunity to have considered by the committee the few remaining items there are in agriculture.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Are we not going to finish this item, now that we are on it? Several of us have made arrangements to be here when this item was being discussed.

Mr. MacKINNON: The Minister of Agriculture is leaving for England and the continent this afternoon. We have broken into the ordinary business of the house yesterday and to-day in order to enable this particular item in trade and commerce to be discussed while the Minister of Agriculture is here.

Mr. BRACKEN: I think the committee will wish to make it possible for the Minister of Agriculture to get away and also to deal with the remaining items in his department. Could that not be done and still have this item dealt with to-day?

Mr. GARDINER: I have four items left, and I do not think they should take more than five or ten minutes. The minister is suggesting that after he makes a short statement this item be allowed to stand, and then after the other items have been cleaned up we could come back to it.

Mr. BRACKEN: Are we assured that it will be dealt with to-day? That is all we want over here.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Minister of Agriculture has indicated that there will not be a prolonged discussion on the four remaining items in his department. If we have the assurance that following those four items the Minister of Trade and Commerce will come back to this item, that will be satisfactory.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We will do that.

Mr. MacKINNON: Just before this item stands I should like to take this opportunity to answer a question asked by the hon. member for Battle River, and also a suggested question by the leader of the opposition. The hon. member for Battle River asked whether shippers and exporters are being paid commissions by the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. FAIR: I want to set the minister straight. I did not refer to shippers and exporters; I asked about brokers and commission merchants.

Mr. MacKINNON: I think I will cover it in my answer. My understanding was that the inquiry had reference to shippers and exporters. Shippers and exporters have not been paid any commission since the market was closed in 1943. The brokers and exporters were paid commissions on work they did in connection with the wheat board up until a year ago, when these payments were discontinued. Where purchases for export are made through brokers and exporters I am informed that the usual commission is charged the purchaser, but there is no charge on the wheat board and of course no charge directly or indirectly on the wheat producer.

As to the 14-bushel restriction on the authorized acreage, which is between 21 and 22 million acres, there are no restrictions on delivery in 1945-46 and no restrictions on delivery in 1946-47. The 14-bushel limitation as it stands in the government's new programme is designed not to restrict total deliveries over a period of years but rather to meet the problems which might arise if we had an exceptionally large crop, say of 550 million bushels in any one year. In such circumstances the limitation would be useful in securing an equitable delivery as between the 240,000 wheat producers. It would protect the wheat grower who lives five or six miles away from his elevator, who would thus be able to deliver his share of the crop as well as the farmer who lives close to the elevator.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this item be allowed to stand.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

481. Seed export office, $35,688.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the minister any figures on the exports of grass seed, clover seed and other seeds during the past year?

Mr. GARDINER: I am sorry I have not the figures here.

Mr. WRIGHT: Would the minister have them placed on Hansard later on?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, I will have the figures placed on Hansard later.

Mr. SENN: Will the same machinery for handling the export of seeds be in operation this year?

Mr. GARDINER: Approximately the same. There may be some slight changes.

Mr. SENN: Have the prices been set for the export of seed, or will they be set later?

Mr. GARDINER: I am advised by the official who has just come in that it is the intention to discontinue the seed export office. That is contrary to the answer I gave a moment ago.

Mr. SENN: Why is that change being made? Is seed for export not going to be handled in the same way?

Mr. GARDINER: The decision reached was that the time had come for the government to step out of this business and turn it back to the trade where it had been prior to the war, and allow the trade to handle the exports in the same way they did before.

Mr. SENN: We in Ontario from time to time have to depend on western seed, particularly alfalfa. Are measures to be taken to see that enough seed is kept in the country to supply our needs in eastern Canada?

Mr. GARDINER: The permit system is to continue. Permits have to be secured in order to export seed. That would take care of any shortage in Canada should it develop. Reverting to the question asked a few moments ago by the hon. member for Melfort, he will find the figures he asked for on page 18 of the annual report of the Canadian Seed Growers Association for 1945.

Item agreed to.

482. Grosse isle research project, $80,000.

Mr. BRYCE: Will the minister give an outline of this project?

Mr. GARDINER: This is a very special project which was established during the war to investigate and check the spread of disease by microbes and that kind of thing. That work is being continued.

Mr. CHARLTON: It is not often that I congratulate the minister, but I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate him on the work that is being done by the pathological laboratory in Hull on rinderpest which is one of the most serious diseases afflicting cattle and which causes heavy losses particularly among cattle in Asia and Africa. As transport in China is largely carried on by cattle, the loss is of very great importance to them, and I understand that through the work of the research laboratory in Hull thousands of vaccines have been sent to China. The laboratory deserves a great deal of credit, and I wish to congratulate the minister upon the work it has done.

Mr. ARGUE: From the information which the minister has at this time about crop conditions in western Canada, can he say whether the Prairie Farm Assistance Act will be applied this year?

Mr. GARDINER: I am not in a position to say at the moment, because that matter has not been presented to the government. There are areas in western Canada, particularly the area from which the hon. member comes, which have suffered greatly from drought, and the matter will have to be considered. I cannot give any more definite answer now.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

375. Wheat and grain division, $28,532.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There are a few points in connection with the United Kingdom wheat agreement which have not been dealt with. I was interested in the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar that any future increases in production costs should be taken care of out of consolidated revenue. I am sure that he realizes just as well as anybody else from western Canada that production costs are increasing every few days. We have had an implement cost increase; we have other items which are increasing almost daily the cost of production to the farmers, and I am sure these increases will continue for some time.

I was interested also in the remarks of the Minister of Agriculture about parity. I assume when he said that before the increase in the price of implements parity might be $1.41 or $1.42, he meant net to the farmer. The actual price, despite this export price of $1.55, which the farmer will be receiving is on an average $1.17 a bushel.

Mr. GARDINER: I meant $1.41 at Fort William.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): That also has a bearing on the suggestion of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, because twenty cents a bushel is held back now, that being the difference between the export price of $1.55 and the initial payment, which is $1.35. I imagine that when that is held by the government for five years, it is a safeguard to average up the price in case there is a great decline at that time; therefore it will be the producer who will be carrying the added cost.

As has been pointed out, we have a rather difficult set-up from an administrative point of view. It is a complicated dish which the government has handed the farmer in the present wheat bill. The present floor price is $1 a bushel, the domestic price is $1.25, the initial payment is $1.35, the export price is $1.55, and the miller's price is $2.05 a bushel. On flour for domestic consumption in Canada the federal treasury has subsidized the miller for the difference between $1.25 per bushel and 77⅜ cents, which is 47⅝ cents a bushel to the consumer. I think it is understood that in this country we consume in flour the equivalent of sixty million bushels of wheat a year, and the difference between the $1.55 export price and $1.25 is 30 cents a bushel, which means a loss to the producer of some $18 million annually which he must bear over and above his share of the taxation for the 47 and a fraction cents a bushel. Then, the initial payment of $1.35 basis No. 1 Fort William actually means that the average payment the farmer would receive at country elevators is $1.17 per bushel. The difference between that initial payment and the export price of $1.55 to Britain is, as I said, twenty cents a bushel, which the Canadian government propose through the wheat board to keep from the farmer for the period of the next five years. One dollar and seventeen cents has a very low purchasing power under present conditions in Canada, and it is what the proceeds of a bushel of wheat will purchase for the farmer in goods and services that really counts. That is this basis of parity which we try to arrive at. The purchasing power of a bushel of wheat has increased only six per cent since 1913, whereas the hourly wages of Canadian industrial labour now have a purchasing power of 64 per cent more than they had in 1913. That is quite a difference.

As to the export price of wheat to Britain at $1.55 basis Fort William, it has been set out that for the first two years Canada agrees to sell to Britain 160 million bushels of wheat at the price of $1.55; for the third year, 140 million bushels at $1.25; and for the fourth year, 140 million bushels at $1 per bushel; and Britain may resell any quantity of this wheat to any other nation as set forth in the contract. It has been pointed out before that Britain's annual average use of Canadian wheat has been approximately 93 million bushels. Thus, Britain can now resell approximately 60 million bushels of this wheat annually to any other nation at any prevailing open world price. The present United States price is $2.05 per bushel for export. The Argentine price to-day is $3.13 per bushel. British farmers are to-day receiving for this year's crop in the equivalent of Canadian money approximately $2.29 per bushel, and for the next year they are guaranteed by their government approximately $2.47; and these prices are net on their farms.

As has been stated before in this house, London comment is that the Canadian price is much lower than the United States and Argentine prices to-day, and if Canada is willing to promise deliveries at the price fixed for the next two years it would be a very foolish buyer who would refuse. I do not suppose there is any argument about that statement.

Throughout the war years this government prevented the Canadian farmer from exporting at prevailing world prices, while allowing the lumber producer and the manufacturer to do so. They exported at the world prevailing price even the manufacturer of farm implements, which the Canadian farmer is not able to obtain to-day. And this same situation is now being continued for the next few years. The cost of things which the farmers must buy is rising daily, as I pointed out, and I think everyone expects that it will rise for some time to come. Therefore agricultural prosperity has not kept pace with industrial prosperity. The prices of things which farmers have to buy for their living and for production are rising now and will continue to rise in the future, as government controls over prices are being lifted. The only way, therefore, in which the farmer can keep up with this increased cost will be for him to receive higher prices for his wheat and other products which he has to sell. This would enable him to put by cash reserves needed for repairs, take care of depreciation, and purchase modern farm equipment to enable him to meet world competition, which in the future will be very keen.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar referred to difficulty regarding future world markets, and what has been done in the way of mechanization even in the British isles. If this government feels that Canada should make this great contribution—and I am sure we are all of one mind that we should assist the people of Britain—and if it should be done by way of this wheat agreement which is at present before us, why should the entire burden be placed upon the wheat producers alone rather than on all Canadian taxpayers?

Much has been said about the present "satisfaction" of the farmers of western Canada. This was emphasized by the Minister of Agriculture and by the minister for Rosetown-Biggar,—I mean the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. I am not sure whether he is going to be a minister right away, a colleague of the Minister of Agriculture, or not, though I have always had doubts about his being prime minister of the party over there. I have received several resolutions from farm gatherings in my own constituency. May I quote one of them? It is not an official farm organization, but it is a large gathering of farmers in the east end of my riding. I wish to read the portion which has a bearing on this subject:

> We also consider that the 12½ per cent raise in farm implement prices, which with increase of fuel and other costs to farmers is of serious national and even international concern. For fifteen years the agriculturists of the west have, through no fault of their own, seen their equipment deteriorating with replacements difficult to make, and now, at a time when such great appeals are being made to produce more food, the government allows rising production costs with no comparable income increases and no adequate assurance of any. The farmer has never refused to produce at a cost plus 5 per cent basis nor has he gone on strike. Therefore we feel justified in strongly urging the government to either insist on lower production costs to farmers through price control or else to bring produce prices up to at least the level of the United States farmer's returns.
> We also believe that outstanding wheat participation certificates should be settled for on the basis of $1.80 per bushel.

That was before the announcement was made as to the price which will be paid for the 1943 certificates.

> If Canada wishes to sell wheat at a price below that obtained by competitors, then all Canada should meet the difference in price, not force the farmer to make the donation.
> And further that copies of this statement be mailed to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture, and the member for Souris . . .

I will admit that there is a great difference of opinion about this agreement. I am also convinced that very few farmers understand the mechanics of the whole business. They have not realized that this twenty cents is held back over a five-year period, and while I think it is fair to say it is for the purpose of averaging the price if necessary, nevertheless it is held back, and in holding back this money many farmers under these conditions are forced to borrow every year for their operations and to pay interest on the money thus obtained. That is most unfair. With that twenty cents a bushel which is held back for that period of years, many of the producers are forced to borrow money and pay a fair rate of interest on it.

Much has been said about various editorials appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press. There has not been a more consistent supporter of the government throughout the years than the editorial page of that newspaper, and it points out that this is a great selling handicap. It points out that Canada's wheat problem is a selling problem, and has been throughout the years. This editorial of August 1 makes this statement:

> We require all the markets we can find and the largest attainable number of buyers. Therein lies security for our wheat farmers, and it follows that the most obvious course to avoid is to restrict our markets, to place our eggs largely in one basket.
> Consider the wheat agreement in these terms: Our average pre-war exportable wheat surplus was 250 million bushels per year. There is no reason to believe that this figure will be appreciably exceeded in the future.
> Of this total, the United Kingdom, on average, took 90 million bushels, continental Europe, 110 million bushels, the far east 5 million, others 45 million. These figures do not apply at the moment. This is a time of reconstruction after war and, also, a time of acute scarcity.
> It is a sellers' market and, as such, offers a great chance to rebuild our wheat trade on a broad and highly diversified base. Something much better than the pre-war diversity of markets might be achieved in the reconstruction period under freer conditions of trade and with a vigorous selling policy.

We have a concrete example of what is pointed out there in the embargo which this government placed in 1942 upon the shipment of beef cattle from Canada to the United States, and which continues. This was our natural market, and it has been banned for the past four years. In 1943 Mexico shipped to the United States 594,812 head of beef cattle for feeding and slaughter, and during the first five months of 1946 Mexico shipped 274,111 head of beef cattle to the United States. That is an example of what is happening to Canada at this time, and it might be paralleled with the wheat agreement.

Yesterday we discussed the bacon agreement, and in past years we have heard a good deal about the manner in which we were preparing a future market for Canada. But we have heard that Great Britain will take ninety per cent of Denmark's bacon at $5 per hundredweight higher than the Canadian contract. That is the statement that has been made, and there has been some further discussion in the house about the matter. The Minister of Agriculture has argued about weights—100 pounds or 112 pounds—and it is a debatable matter as it now stands.

With respect to the present Canadian-British wheat agreement, I suggest that this export price of $1.55 is at least 50 cents a bushel under the prevailing world price. This morning there was some discussion of what the world price was, but this at any rate is 50 cents below the United States price, and they are a great exporting nation. I am absolutely opposed to it, and I speak as an ordinary dirt farmer who has grown a little bit of wheat for many years. I am opposed to it on the ground that while lumber, farm implements and other manufactured goods are now exported from Canada at prevailing and rising world prices, this added burden on the wheat producer cannot be justified by anyone. I am also absolutely opposed to the government retaining the twenty cents a bushel of the export price for a period of five years, without any interest or without in any other way making good the difference to the farmer for the use of that money over a period of five years, if he ever receives it. Many farmers will find it necessary to pay interest on money they may borrow to carry on their operations throughout these years.

I am of the opinion that, as the Winnipeg Free Press has pointed out, this is a most incompetent way for the government to try to run the farmer's business. Certainly, if this government finds it necessary to assist Britain in this manner, the burden should be borne by all the taxpayers of Canada.

I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether anything is proposed for the purpose of holding down the export price of manufactured goods, lumber and other materials, as was done throughout the war years for the farm producer in the matter of wheat. I am sure that many farmers are misled. The pool officials themselves have been. When they said they wanted a contract of this type over some years they understood that the same deal would apply to the principal manufactured goods which the farmer finds it necessary to procure in this country. But that is not the case, because these other prices are rising daily in Canada and the result will be that the wheat producer will find himself in an impossible position long before the contract is terminated.

If the minister thinks my remarks have not been proper, I would ask him why the government deems it necessary to retain the twenty cents a bushel for a period of five years. I would also ask whether any of the subsidy paid by the government to the millers for domestic flour applies to flour which will be sent over under the contract to Britain. If not, how is the difference arrived at? Will the minister be good enough to answer those questions?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: May I ask a question with regard to paragraph (b) on page 2 of the agreement? It is stated that for the last two years the prices as set are for the 1948-49 crop, not less than $1.25 for the last year, and not less than $1. I quote:

> The actual prices to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government.

Has the minister any formula as a basis for the negotiations?

Mr. GARDINER: It is stated there, if the hon. gentleman will read further.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is stated that the actual price to be paid is to be a matter of negotiation. The prices of wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than December 31, 1948. Then it says:

> In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement—

—And world prices. It simply says that they "will have regard". But is there any formula?

Mr. GARDINER: The hon. gentleman has not read the whole statement:

> In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

That was to give expression to a matter that was fully discussed as between Canada and Great Britain, and we on behalf of the government—that is, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself—suggested that in view of the fact that Great Britain was going to get wheat at some margin below the world price in 1946-47, they should be prepared, no matter whether wheat is below or above $1.25 or even above $1.55, to take into consideration any advantage that they get by obtaining wheat at a low level during these first two years. Without any reservations whatsoever those with whom we were discussing it came right back and said, "That is absolutely fair. We would have no reason for refusing to do it, and we ought to do it." They put that in these words, in order to express fully their intention, and I am in full agreement with the leader of the C.C.F. when he says that our negotiations and dealings with the British, right from the beginning of the war, have been such as to indicate that anything they put in writing in this form will be carried out, either by the present government or by any other government that may be in power. I am quite sure that will be done.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: You admit they will take it into consideration, but no actual basis is set out.

Mr. GARDINER: No; the actual basis will have to be established in the light of the facts as they are at the time. Still I am satisfied that the British would say this: "If we got the wheat at 20 or 30 cents a bushel less than the world price during that period, certainly we are prepared to negotiate a satisfactory basis." I do not think they would say they would consider the difference to the extent of 100 per cent and go on that basis; it would depend on the number of bushels they were buying. One fact has been missed in all these discussions. On an average the British buy 200,000,000 bushels a year. This 160,000,000 bushels does not feed them; they buy 200,000,000 bushels a year to feed themselves, and this year it is proved, and shown by all the records that have been put out by the united nations, that Britain must have 195,000,000 bushels. Britain was insistent on buying 180,000,000 bushels from us. They were quite prepared to put that right in the agreement; but in the early stages of the negotiations we did not know whether we were going to have 180,000,000 bushels to sell them, so we said we did not want to put something into the agreement we might not be able to carry out, so as a result somebody might say we had broken the agreement. We got down to a figure representing the quantity we were certain we could supply. I think it is most difficult to anticipate that Britain, requiring 200,000,000 bushels of wheat and having purchased 160,000,000 bushels, is going to sell some of the 160,000,000 bushels that she has bought for $1.55 and buy some more at $2. I would begin to wonder about this hard trading of the British if they did that. Therefore I do not place very much importance in the argument which has been advanced along those lines. On this other point they have definitely said, "We know we are getting the wheat at a lower price, in the first year in any case. We do not know what is going to happen in the second year." If we were to get a crop of 550,000,000 bushels, as it looked three weeks ago—I would say twenty-five per cent has been cut off since then—there is no doubt in my mind that the price of wheat would have gone down in the second year of this contract, not the third. All these conditions develop as we go along, and the British say that taking into consideration what may happen throughout the period of the agreement, if they get an advantage in the first two years they are going to take that into consideration in whatever price is negotiated for the last two years.

Mr. BRACKEN: May I ask the minister just one question about this 160,000,000 bushels coming from Canada and purchased by Britain? Will the minister say all that wheat will be consumed in Britain?

Mr. GARDINER: Well, I will not say all of it will be consumed in Britain, because I would expect that what was mentioned here this morning may happen again, and provision is written into the contract for it to happen. One of the objections to this contract was that the united nations may come along and say that Britain cannot have this much wheat, in order that someone else may not starve. It has been written right into the contract that if Britain desires to give up some of her wheat in order to feed somebody else, she can give it away if she likes. On the same premise she can sell it at a lower price than $1.55, or she can dispose of it in any way she sees fit in order to help feed the world. But when it comes to the question of Britain disposing of it just as a matter of making money, there is no way in which she can do that unless wheat goes away below what it is to-day.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to repeat the arguments advanced this morning by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Bracken) or the hon. member for Souris (Mr. Ross), both of whom set forth clearly the position of the opposition in respect of this agreement.

May I say at the outset that having regard to the vast extent of the operations of the Canadian wheat board, the time has come for the board to give a full accounting of its transactions between 1937 and 1945. This is of general interest and of general demand throughout western Canada. So far no statement of the kind has been secured from the board.

In 1943 an action was initiated by Arthur Henry Oatway in Manitoba against the Canadian wheat board asking for an accounting in respect of certain years. Application to the courts was made on behalf of the wheat board that the action be set aside on the ground that no action lay as against the wheat board in that it was an emanation of the crown. The application was dismissed by the judge who heard the motion. The wheat board appealed to the court of appeal in Manitoba, and that court, by a majority of one, allowed the appeal and held that proceedings against the Canadian wheat board for an accounting could not be taken. An appeal was carried to the Supreme Court of Canada, at which time the government took an attitude which I think is totally inexcusable. An order in council was passed denying anyone the right to ask for an accounting from the wheat board. In other words that order in council assured silence in regard to what actually took place between 1937 and 1944. I say the time has come when a complete statement should be given—not an ex parte statement such as at the present time—by the wheat board setting forth in detail its conduct, and also subjecting itself and its officials to full examination.

There are various ways in which our wheat may be disposed of. I am surprised to see the change of attitude on the part of the government in adopting a bilateral agreement, because for the past several years the attitude of the government has been that multilateral agreements are the only salvation for world peace. As a matter of fact that was the principle behind the formation of the food and agricultural organization of the united nations. It was one of the main principles in the Atlantic charter, and of the united nations enunciated at San Francisco.

Another means of disposing of our wheat would be to build up in this country a population which will consume much of the Canadian wheat which to-day must be shipped to Europe if it is to find a market. Our position in western Canada is that we have to ship our wheat, bacon and other products four or five thousand miles to get a market among the millions of people in Europe and elsewhere. I believe the time has come when this parliament should face the issue, and that instead of our continuing to find markets abroad a policy of selective immigration should be instituted, thereby bringing a larger market to our own country.

I am not alone in that point of view. For Canada to follow the course which apparently she is following, the country being maintained for Canadians or the descendants of those who originally came here, is to make this country the target for any future aggressor nation. We are not developing the resources we have and we cannot develop them if we follow the present system of simply keeping within Canada the people who are here, subject to the present tremendous exodus of native-born Canadians to the United States. By continuing that policy the government will be making Canada's position such that aggressor-minded countries which have not ample supplies of food and natural resources will look to Canada with envious eyes.

We have the land; we have the resources to be developed. According to the Minister of Agriculture, speaking in February in Regina—and the government has been strangely silent about this matter since the beginning of the session—the solution for many of our problems would be for Canada to have a population sufficiently large to consume at least sixty per cent of our wheat crop. That was his statement in Regina, and he added that western Canada itself needs six million people more than it has to-day if it is to utilize the natural resources available for development.

The present situation in Canada demands an aggressive policy of immigration, strictly selective and controlled to the end that the numbers brought in here shall be able to maintain themselves and not put people in our country out of work. I know there are those who say we cannot have that to-day because of a lack of transportation. Well, sir, none of our ancestors came over on the Queen Mary. They came on whatever ships were available, and people are willing to come to-day, however lowly the ship facilities, from all parts of the world, good citizens, to help us solve a problem which can be solved only if we have a larger population.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not wish to restrict the hon. member too severely, but I must remind him that we are discussing an item in the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce dealing with wheat. I do not think there should be at this time a general discussion on immigration.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: No; I was only offering an alternative suggestion to the agreement, which I must point out, sir, is not receiving the approval of western farmers to the extent we have heard in this debate—if the attitude of the farmers in my constituency is any criterion of the opinion of farmers generally throughout the west. What I have been offering is an alternative to the agreement, an alternative which would have the effect of building up this country on the strong and firm basis of a home market which would consume a large proportion of our production. You have ruled, Mr. Chairman, that I may not discuss this alternative. You are always fair and I shall abide by your ruling and will deal with immigration on another occasion at greater length.

As I said a moment ago, multilateral agreements among the nations of the world was the basis of the food and agriculture organization of the united nations, and yet Canada is the first nation to depart from the principle we accepted at San Francisco, namely, multilateral rather than bilateral agreements so that discrimination, unfairness and potential economic warfare shall not come to the world again.

So far as this agreement is concerned I would repeat the criticisms of the hon. member for Souris set out in the most able and constructive address he gave to-day, and I should like to add to them. The agreement is unfair to the Canadian farmer; it is unfair to the producer. It is said that by selling now for fifty cents per bushel lower, after a period of years we shall have built up a credit in gratitude and as a result the nations favoured will grant higher prices when commodity prices and the wheat prices come down. That is the excuse that is given to-day. Again I should like to quote from the Winnipeg Free Press, which has always had the ear of the government. It gives the reason as follows:

> The Canadian farmers are being denied the going price not in behalf of British consumers but because of domestic price control.

In other words, the excuse is that we are going to help Britain; the reason is that the government is endeavouring to maintain price control here in Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Both are good reasons.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Both are good reasons, says my hon. friend, but the government has not taken both; it has taken only one of them. There was some comment to-day in regard to my leader having in any way suggested that Britain had ever been untrue to her responsibilities or to her pledged word. An attempt was made by the leader of the C.C.F. to castigate the leader of the Progressive Conservative party for taking a stand against Britain. I say to you that this party has not had to make any apologies, since 1939 or before, for its attitude with respect to Great Britain. When my hon. friend castigates the leader of the opposition he seems to forget, and I know many of his own friends did not follow him in this viewpoint, the enunciation of the policy of the C.C.F. party which was made on September 9, 1939.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: By whom?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: My hon. friends do not want me to deal with that, I presume, but I would refer them—

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Just deal properly with it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I will deal properly with it. Perhaps I can put the record straight. I should like to quote from page 55 of Hansard of September 9, 1939, where the policy of the C.C.F. party at that time is set forth. My hon. friend has cast aspersions at the head of this party when he used words to this effect: Where do you stand with reference to Britain? My answer: We stand to-day where we stood in September, 1939. Here is the record, and I quote from page 55:

> In further detail the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation places the following constructive proposals before the house, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) asked hon. members to do when he spoke yesterday. These are:
> 1. Economic assistance: Canada is well fitted to make an important contribution through economic assistance. However, in the interests of Canada's economic future and for the protection of her people, the expansion of war industries must be strictly controlled. Moreover, such economic assistance—

Mr. WRIGHT: On a point of order, has this anything to do with the wheat agreement?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not think the discussion should go too far, but this morning the leader of the C.C.F. group referred to this matter and I think at least one member of the official opposition should have the right to reply.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is all epitomized in four paragraphs, and it will not take long. I quote:

> Moreover, such economic assistance should be conditional upon immediate steps being taken to place the burden upon the shoulders of those best able to bear it.
> 2. Defence of Canada: Reasonable provision should be made for the defence of Canadian shores. Volunteers for home defence should not be required to sign also for overseas service. This practice, now being followed, is unwarranted and should be abandoned.
> 3. No military participation overseas: Any attempt to send a force abroad would rob us of the man-power necessary for the defence of our shores and for home production, would gravely endanger national unity, would threaten our civil liberties and democratic institutions, and would ultimately lead to conscription.

That was the policy of the party. I do not think I will read any more, because—

An hon. MEMBER: Read the rest.

Mr. MacINNIS: Read the rest. You have the floor in order to put in your case. This is not a court of law; this is not a police court.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is a strange thing that when my hon. friends cast aspersions on this side of the house they object to being answered with the truth.

Mr. MacINNIS: We should have all of it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Now that I have clarified that situation, let me proceed.

Mr. MacINNIS: All of it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have no objection to reading more, because it is not very long. There are only three pages. My hon. friends apparently have forgotten it. I have referred them to the pages, and they can look them up. They will find them intensely interesting after the lapse of some years. It will be remembered that this morning the leader of the C.C.F. said that realism demands on occasion a change of viewpoint—and I thought, with what authority he spoke! Having answered his criticism, may I return once more to the agreement.

Mrs. STRUM: We did not change our name, though.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I did not hear the interruption, so I cannot answer it. In the future this agreement may well cause antagonism between the mother country and this country. If prices are higher than $1 or $1.25 at the end of three or four years and negotiation is proceeded with to determine a price and the price is finally concluded at $1 or $1.25, a price below the then world price, then there will be ill feeling among the producers of this country. On the other hand, as my leader pointed out this morning, if world prices are lower than the minimum prices having to be accepted by the United Kingdom, there will be a feeling of resentment by the other party to the agreement.

We must guard against the arousing of international antagonisms through bilateral agreements, and at all costs against potential antagonism between Canada and the United Kingdom. Can we complain that Denmark has taken a large share of our bacon market in the old country through a bilateral agreement with Britain when we ourselves are discriminating against other nations by making this bilateral agreement? Is it any wonder that Mr. Strachey, the British food minister, said in reference to the agreement with Denmark:

> We have had to ask for tolerance and understanding from our dominion suppliers.

Canada gave the lead in bilateral agreements, and now we are starting to reap in this country, in the agreement with Denmark respecting bacon, what we have sown under this agreement.

Can there be any justification for Britain receiving under this agreement some 57,000,000 bushels of wheat more than she ordinarily purchases from Canada, and having it for sale, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Souris, being able to place that wheat in competition with Canadian wheat on the markets of the world? If there is to be a subsidy in favour of the mother country—and I am not raising any objection to that at the moment; if Britain is to be permitted to purchase wheat from us at 50 cents a bushel less than the world price, that subsidy should not be placed on the shoulders of our wheat-producing farmers but on the people of Canada as a whole.

I come to another criticism, and this was referred to by the hon. member for Souris. Is there any excuse whatsoever for the wheat board retaining twenty cents a bushel of the farmer's price this year for a period of five years and holding it undistributed, without interest—just holding it back from the farmer as it has been held back for the last few years? It is in effect a forced loan to the government from the farmers of this country who are producing wheat amounting to approximately $108,000,000. This twenty cents a bushel which is being held back by the government should be placed in a trust account, and out of it should be evolved a system of crop insurance to the end that there will be available to the farmers of this country legislation for which they have asked for so many years.

Finally, the prices in 1948, 1949 and 1950 of $1.25 and $1 a bushel will, if past experience recurs, become the price at which wheat will be sold at that time, even though but for this agreement the price determined by the world price would have been higher. As was pointed out by the leader of the C.C.F. party and my hon. leader, the prices of $1 and $1.25 three or four years hence are just guesswork, with no regard to prices being on the rise for the things the farmer has to buy and no regard for parity prices in a period of two or three years.

The minister may ask, how are we going to look ahead that far? I understand that in the Department of Reconstruction and Supply, and in his own department too, quite a collection of experts have been working for some time, more or less drafting the future and indicating what may be expected by industry, agriculture and the like, so that they will be able to anticipate for a considerable period in advance what prices will be for commodities and what supply of commodities will be available.

Those in the main are my criticisms of this agreement. I am bound to say that our criticism at this time is almost meaningless and futile, because we are handed a completed fact, an agreement that was not the result of cooperation between the government of Canada and the great wheat producers of this country or their representatives, but an agreement that was entered into at the request of the Canadian government and not at the solicitation of the British government. Only the other day I read that Mr. Strachey, I think it was, said that the agreement was not consummated as a result of the request of the British government but that the Canadian government gave the lead.

Let me say this in conclusion with regard to bilateral agreements. The Canadian federation of agriculture has opposed this type of agreement. Bilateral agreements cannot but lead to the arousing of antagonisms amongst other nations. It is in direct conflict not only with the Atlantic charter but with the whole framework of the united nations organization. The Canadian government and the minister, himself a tribune of this house for multilateral agreements, have become the first to return to economic nationalism and to the type of agreements such as this, which culminated in the last war.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Memories of 1932.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Memories of 1932, if they be memories. But they have been forgotten by the government in this legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They have been forgotten by the opposition.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If the experience of the past has been that economic nationalism causes wars, and that it was the economic warfare of the nineteen-thirties that resulted in the breaking down of the entire system throughout the world, surely the government has had sufficient warnings of what will take place if principles such as this again become the means whereby nations endeavour to make themselves economically independent. My hon. friend says 1932. Yes, times change.

Mr. GRANT: I guess so.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I cannot hear these interruptions from Prince Edward Island. We have had another war since 1932, and we are not the only ones who are warning the government at this time, because a great paper such as the Winnipeg Free Press which nearly always gives the closest allegiance to this government, has pointed out the difficulties in an editorial in the August 13 issue. The editorial ends with these words:

But abandoning the struggle—

That is the struggle of multilateral agreements among the nations of the world:

But abandoning the struggle because it is difficult is a confession of failure and a counsel of despair. For there is no lasting solution elsewhere. Bilateralism, in wheat as in everything else, is a mirage.

That is the view of the Canadian federation of agriculture and of other agricultural organizations.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is what we said against the Tory party in 1932.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is before you joined the communists.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, sir.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to refer to the new alliance but I really cannot bring that in in this debate.

Mr. TUCKER: Why stop at that? You have brought in everything else.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is another bilateral deal between the ministers and my hon. friends in 1945.

Mr. TUCKER: You objected when we started putting them in gaol.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But that is not the kind of bilateralism we are dealing with at the present time.

Mr. TUCKER: Why did you defend them so much when we had to put them in gaol?

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. MACKENZIE: "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I always find that my speeches are interlarded with interruptions, made so low that I cannot hear them and therefore cannot answer them. But at the moment I am dealing with this agreement. I suggest that this agreement is unfair internationally to other nations; it has in it the germ of difference and antagonism as between nations. It is unfair as well to the farmers of this country, who are being asked to provide subsidies at their own expense instead of at the expense of the people as a whole.

Mr. ARGUE: I am not following the course set by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. I shall try to talk on the wheat agreement, which I think is the subject before us this afternoon.

The hon. member for Lake Centre made the argument that we shall probably have difficulty in exporting our wheat in the future, and that one of the best ways to find a market for Canadian wheat available for export is to bring immigrants into Canada, and so have a market here. He went on to quote what the Minister of Agriculture said in Regina. According to that quotation, apparently the Minister of Agriculture advocated that we should have six million immigrants. But we need each year to export something like 280 million bushels of wheat: twelve million people in Canada to-day consume 60 million bushels; another six million would consume an additional 30 million bushels; and we could still have 250 million bushels of wheat that we would have to find a market for. If we want to bring to Canada sufficient people to eat all the wheat we can grow here we would need to have at least another fifty-six million immigrants, and I do not believe that even the hon. member for Lake Centre would advocate immigration to the extent of an additional fifty-six million persons.

The hon. member went on to say that this was a bilateral agreement and as such was an impediment to multilateral agreements being consumated in the future. I should like to read part of clause 7 of the agreement, which states:

Having in mind the general purposes which this agreement is designed to serve, the two governments have agreed that its terms and conditions shall be subject to any modification or amendment which may be necessary to bring it into conformity with any international agreements . . .

No one in this house has questioned the integrity of the British government or the Canadian government in making this agreement, and the agreement states that it will be moulded in the future to any multilateral agreements which may be made.

I agree with the leader of this group (Mr. Coldwell) who stated that we in this party welcome the agreement. In my opinion if it is the best possible agreement the government could make under the circumstances, then it is all that any reasonable person can expect. The guaranteed price for wheat in the last year of this agreement is $1 per bushel. I am not going to try to prophesy whether wheat is likely to fall to that amount, but everyone in this house knows that a dollar a bushel is not sufficient for the Canadian farmer, and if in the future we are going to base the Canadian domestic price wholly or mainly on the price we receive for wheat on the markets of the world, I am certain that we shall soon get back to a dollar a bushel. If we are to find and maintain markets for Canadian exports of wheat we must be willing and able at all times to receive sufficient products to give the nations that are buying our wheat enough Canadian currency to pay for it. International agreements for food commodities, even if they cover the available supplies of all commodities for export, are doomed to failure if the exporting countries are not prepared to take imports from the countries which are buying those exports. So, if we are to have international trade as a two-way stream, it is not only necessary that agreements be made as the agreement with Britain has been made, but the government must follow a policy of increasing continuously the well-being of the Canadian people so that we shall always have a standard of living sufficiently high to be able to purchase the imports which other nations wish to send us in exchange for our wheat.

In 1943 the initial price for wheat was set at $1.25 per bushel. Since that time partcipation payments are being made to the extent of twelve cents a bushel, making the price for the 1943 crop $1.37 per bushel. For the 1945 crop farmers received an initial payment of $1.25; they are to be given another ten cents. The price for wheat sold in 1945, apart from any payment which may be made at the end of the 1949 crop year, will be $1.35 per bushel. The price which the farmer is guaranteed for 1945 is two cents a bushel less than the price he received for 1943. The cost of producing wheat in the year 1945 as compared with 1943 had certainly gone up. The Minister of Agriculture told us this morning that this spring, before the increases in costs took place, a parity price was $1.41 or $1.42 a bushel. Since that time the cost of living to the farmer, the costs of things he has to buy which go into his production, have been increasing tremendously. The cost of living index from March to July jumped five points. Gasoline within that time went up two cents a gallon, machinery went up 12½ per cent, a host of other commodities have risen in price, and prices continue to rise. According to the financial experts of the government, who should know, we are still in a period of inflation, and there is going to be more inflation. I say therefore that if the farmer is to be guaranteed stable real income his prices must be adjusted from time to time as the costs of production change. It would seem to me that $1.55 is a reasonable and fair price at this time. I would say, too, that price should be adjusted as costs to farmers change from time to time.

Mr. FLEMING: Does the hon. member mean that if costs of production to the farmer decrease he would advocate a reduction in the present price under the agreement to the farmer for these two years?

Mr. ARGUE: What the Canadian farmer wants is a high level of national income; he wishes, out of that high level of income, his fair share, and if his costs go down to the extent that if he received a previous price he would be getting more than his fair share of the national income, the farmer would agree, and I would agree, that his prices might be adjusted downward as the costs to him decreased.

Mr. FLEMING: That does not answer the question.

Mr. ARGUE: That answers the question, I believe. I want to take a few figures based on what I consider reasonable assumptions. The figure $1.55, in my area, would bring a price of something like $1.35 to the farmer. The average size of farm in my district is 325 cultivated acres; the number of acres of field crops is 204 on the average. The average yield is eleven bushels of wheat, which would give the farmer each year on the average 2,244 bushels. If one takes 244 bushels as a reasonable amount of seed for seeding 204 acres the farmer has 2,000 bushels of wheat to sell. If he gets $1.35 at the elevator he has $2,700 to provide for all the expenses of farming, which include machinery, gasoline, interest and taxes and depreciation, and also the cost of maintaining his family. I say that $2,700 as a gross income is not too high.

Mr. TUSTIN: Do you think that is high enough for 325 acres?

Mr. ARGUE: I am not saying that is necessarily high enough, but surely it is the lowest average that should be tolerated. During this session, in another part of the building, I have heard it said that a worker needs $1,750 a year as a basic minimum. I have not yet heard anyone say that is too high. I say then that if $1,750 is a reasonable basic minimum for workers, below which none should be allowed to go, $2,700 gross income is certainly a very reasonable average income and one which farmers should have as of right, because that figure means, the way averages work out, that most farmers will get even less. That is, the average farmer would get, if the price of wheat were at this time $1.55 a bushel, the gross income I have indicated.

Our national income was running at eleven billions or eleven and three-quarter billions at the peak of wartime production, which on the basis of the 1941 census gave an average income per capita in Canada of about $1,000. The cash income of farmers in 1945—and there were 3·15 million persons engaged in agriculture—the total cash income, I say, was $1,685 million or a per capita cash income for people living on farms of $530. The average income in Canada is $1,000. The average cash income for farming is $530, and out of that $530 the farmers of Canada have to pay all expenses of producing the products they sell. The net income in 1945 of 3·15 million people engaged in agriculture in Canada was just a little over one billion dollars. The average per capita net income was $330 for people engaged in agriculture. Surely any reasonable person, and in this I include most members sitting opposite, will agree that $330 per capita net income for farmers is too low with an average national income, I repeat, of $1,000.

I welcome the wheat agreement. I think it provides a start for the making of international agreements when there is in the agreement a clause which provides that the agreement will be made to conform to international agreements. In view of the costs to farmers, which have increased this year, I, along with the united farmers' organization, Saskatchewan branch, say that $1.55 is the lowest price that should prevail at this time. Further, I say that if costs increase next year, as it appears they will, then next year that price should be adjusted upwards to take care of the increased costs.

Mr. TUCKER: I do not intend to detain the house more than a few minutes, but I think I should say a word in regard to the wheat agreement. I too have been in the west and I was surprised at the apparent unanimity of approval of this agreement among the people to whom I spoke.

There is one thing I should like to say at the very outset, however, before I discuss the agreement itself. I am repeating what I have said on more than one occasion and also the representations I have made to the government from time to time. I think that consideration should be given to raising the price at which the wheat board sells wheat to the domestic millers for domestic consumption from $1.25 to $1.55. I feel I cannot urge the government too strongly to give consideration to that change being made at the very earliest possible date.

I wish also to say a word in regard to the argument that there is inflation at the present time, that there will be more inflation, and therefore there is no use in trying to introduce any element of stability into the situation. That argument carries my mind back to the period after the first great war when there was a time of uncertainty and inflation very much the same as has followed this second great war, the period in which we find ourselves today. At that time prices were rising and the same argument was heard—that wheat prices should be permitted to go almost sky high, and that it was in the interests of the farmers that they should do so. Then we went through that period. Those of us who were interested in farming in western Canada at that time came to believe, and I am sure the committee will agree with me, that the fact that prices to the farmer were permitted to go sky high and out of control actually injured the farmer in the long run more than it helped. It caused the prices of the things he had to buy, land and everything else, also to rise. He went into debt on that basis; then when prices dropped he was left in an almost bankrupt position, because he had been misled by what had happened during the period when prices went out of control. I think if we are not careful we may be in for a somewhat similar period soon, though I hope and think it will not be as bad; but after that movement takes place, if it does, there will be another reversal.

It seems to me what the farmer wants is not that sort of thing, but a certain measure of stability. That is wanted not only by the farmers but by the whole world. My mind goes back to the nineteen thirties, when the prices of primary products the world over, wheat, wool, meat and so on, went down to ruinous levels. Some people thought that would help the consuming countries of Europe, but that was not their experience. The very fact that their customers were getting ruinous prices for the goods they had to sell meant that their markets for manufactured goods were destroyed. For example, I am sure one of the things which greatly contributed to the rise to power of Hitler was the fact that Germany's markets abroad were destroyed, unemployment was created on a large scale, and those unemployed men found themselves in the nazi party.

I had the privilege of attending the international monetary conference at Bretton Woods in 1944, where I had a chance of talking to the representatives of Great Britain, for example, in regard to their attitude toward cheap wheat, cheap wool, cheap meat and so on. Their attitude was that they did not want that situation to occur again; that when the primary producing countries of South America, Australia, New Zealand and North America could not get reasonable prices for their products it had a ruinous effect upon the export manufacturing industries of Great Britain itself. So there was general agreement that what the world needed was international agreement to provide some stability of price levels; and in this wheat agreement we are just recognizing that feeling and trying to fit ourselves into that general world picture.

I should like to read to the committee from article VII of the resolutions of the international monetary conference in regard to that matter, because I think we cannot give too much attention to this trend in world affairs looking to security and stability for the workers and farmers of the world. Here is what it says:

Whereas, in article I of the articles of agreement of the international monetary fund it is stated that one of the principal purposes of the fund is to facilitate the expansion and balanced growth of international trade, and to contribute thereby to the promotion and maintenance of high levels of employment and real income and to the developmennt of the productive resources of all members as primary objectives of economic policy;

Whereas, it is recognized that the complete attainment of this and other purposes and objectives stated in the agreement cannot be achieved through the instrumentality of the fund alone; therefore

The united nations monetary and financial conference recommends:

To the participating governments that, in addition to implementing the specific monetary and financial measures which were the subject of this conference, they seek, with a view to creating in the field of international economic relations conditions necessary for the attainment of the purposes of the fund and of the broader primary objectives of economic policy, to reach agreement as soon as possible on ways and means whereby they may best:

(1) reduce obstacles to international trade and in other ways promote mutually advantageous international commercial relations;

(2) bring about the orderly marketing of staple commodities at prices fair to the producer and consumer alike;

I emphasize that:

. . . bring about the orderly marketing of staple commodities at prices fair to the producer and consumer alike.

The remaining two paragraphs have no relevance to the matter I am discussing, so I shall not read them. I admit that when I see a great Liberal newspaper like the Winnipeg Free Press finding some difficulty in approving this agreement, knowing its devoted attitude toward true Liberal principles I find myself somewhat concerned, and I would cite this agreement of the nations of the world, meeting in international conference, to that newspaper for consideration. I submit the decision of that conference was that one of the primary purposes of the nations of the world should be agreement to bring about the orderly marketing of staple commodities such as wheat, beef, mutton, cotton, wool and other commodities at prices fair to the producer and consumer alike. In other words, Mr. Chairman, there is a spirit abroad in the world to-day, a feeling of live and let live; that if you want to prosper you must let your neighbour prosper; that if the manufacturer is to prosper he must let the farmer prosper as well, in order that the farmer in turn may provide a market for his manufactured products. If Britain is to prosper in her exports of manufactured goods, she must let New Zealand, the countries of South America, Canada and the other primary producing countries prosper in order that they in turn, with a high standard of living, may make use of her manufactured products; and that applies equally to the other manufacturing nations of the world.

I submit that is the basic idea behind this agreement. It is not a bilateral agreement in the old accepted meaning of the term. A bilateral agreement used to mean that if you took from one nation $100,000,000 worth of goods, that nation in turn would take from you $100,000,000 worth of specified goods. That tended to channel the trade of the world between two countries. There is nothing like that about this agreement. This is simply an out-and-out agreement on the part of Great Britain to take so much wheat each year for a period of four years, that there shall be a price of $1.55 for the first two years of the agreement and that for the following two years there shall be a minimum price, but that the actual price shall be negotiated having in mind the relationship which $1.55 had to actual world prices at the time it was being paid. If the English language means anything, that means that if the world price during the first two years of this agreement is higher than $1.55, the British, who are people of their word, will agree to give us a fair price above the world level during the last two years of the agreement. Was that not the basic idea behind the establishment of the great wheat pools of western Canada? At that time the idea was that the pools would take the wheat and get the best average price for the year, and then distribute that price to the farmers. In other words the feeling was that in the fall, when the farmer marketed a great deal of his grain, there was a tendency for the price to fall and that after he had sold his grain there was a tendency for the price to rise. So it was felt that if one organization took the grain, then the farmer could get the average of the prices throughout the year, and he would not have to worry about trying to sell his grain at the highest price.

This, Mr. Chairman, is just an extension of that idea. This is an attempt to bring about stability, not for just one year at a time but for five years at a time. It was argued this morning, and perhaps well argued, that we might get a higher price for wheat this year and that therefore we should try to get that higher price and not worry about the future, because after all what is the use of worrying about the future since you cannot be sure about it? Well, that is a policy of negation and defeatism. It is a belief that we cannot do better in the future than we have done in the past. This agreement is a venture of faith that, by international agreement, we can do better in the future than we did in the past; that we can introduce an element of stability in regard to the position of primary producers throughout the world, including our own. It introduces the idea that if we can make the primary producers prosperous, then the working people also will be prosperous. Surely all the experiences and hopes of the past are not now to be laughed away and frustrated by saying we must go back to the old ideas of the past, based on the belief that we cannot do any better.

As I said, this agreement is a venture of faith that we can go forward to greater stability, greater fairness to the primary producer. And it is not an exclusive agreement. If there should be any possibility of an international agreement, the very last clause of this document makes provision for the modification of this agreement in accordance therewith. All it means is that we have established one more foundation-stone of stability for the next four or five years—in regard to wheat.

Upon that example, Mr. Chairman, let me express the hope that other primary producing countries will make similar deals with other consuming countries which will provide reasonable prices and reasonable stability in respect of primary products; that upon this basis we may establish stability and a high standard of living for primary producers the world over so that in turn we may also establish a high standard of living for the workers throughout the world. On this basis also we may put to work our tremendous producing power and raise the standard of living of the people throughout the world, and thus do away with the hatreds, the jealousies, the attempts of one country to profit unduly at the expense of another, which helped bring about the last war. This agreement, I think, is just one step along the path mankind must follow toward the goal of living and letting live, agreeing together and trying to help one another, and for that reason I support it.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to say a few words in connection with this matter, because for many years in this house I have advocated a proper system of protection for the grain growing industry of this country. Everyone wants to see the farmers on the prairies get a proper price for their wheat. I should like to refer briefly to what I said on this subject in the past. To-day we are facing a very acute situation with regard to this industry. Years ago my friends of the Liberal Progressives, as they were then, now the Liberal party, believed that this was an all-American industry, or a north and south industry, and not Canada's greatest imperial industry. Let me refer to what I said in this house on May 5, 1924. That is a long time ago, but at that time the farmers of the west had given their support to a party that believed in free trade as far as this industry was concerned, whereas in fact it is the most imperialist industry we have in Canada in dealing with our best customer. As I have said, I want to see them get the best price they can, but do not forget that in 1938 I proposed that a system of underground grain storage reservoirs should be built in Britain, so that when I saw the war sure to come we would have most of our exportable surplus over there. I also wanted to get for our farmers the highest price given for our hard wheat and prevent its being bootlegged with America's course grain, and as a result our growers would get the highest price in the world.

What happened? The hon. gentleman who preceded me came into the house a few years ago. He was a great advocate of free trade on the prairies. If the people of Saskatchewan want to do something now for the grain industry, let them give fifty per cent free of the 200,000 bushels of wheat Britain must have to-day as an appreciation of Britain as our best customer. Let them give it to Britain, so that bread rationing there will not be necessary. The Minister of Agriculture is about to go over to the old country, and when he goes there I hope he will forget all about this business of free trade, which never did anything for the man who grows the crops on the prairies, the dirt farmer as he was called by the Drury government in the old days. This is what I said back in 1924:

> The best friend of the western wheat grower is the policy of protection, as that policy has been and should be extended and administered by the founders and soldiers of the national policy, the Conservative party of Canada. The western wheat grower has eaten the sour grapes of free trade. No wonder the western wheat growers' teeth are set on edge. The western wheat grower has taught himself to believe, or has allowed so-called leaders to persuade him, that wheat growing in western Canada is a continental industry, an industry that must prosper by reason of the admission of the product to the United States market or perish because of its exclusion. I submit that wheat growing in western Canada is the most truly national, the most widely imperial of all Canada's great industries. The markets of the British Empire mean more and the markets of the American section of the North American continent mean less to the wheat growers of Canada than to any other class of Canadian producers. . . .

Progressive Liberals or Liberal Progressives profess that they are the best friends of the western wheat grower. They insist that their quack medicine of free trade is a sure cure-all for all the ailments of the western provinces.

I went on to say:

Ontario has not yet recovered from four years of free trade preaching and blue ruin prophecy. . . . Ontario sent the Ontario end of the Progressive party about its business. Ontario has learned that a few months will not suffice to bring back the business opportunities that were driven away. . . .

Then I continued, May 5, 1924:

I wish now to deal with the wheat growing industry showing that its future depends on adequate protection, that it is not a continental but the most imperial of all our industries, and that protection is the best friend of the wheat grower, and the day will come when he will see it . . .

I believe in free trade only to the extent, I repeat, that if I had sat in the last parliament I would have tried to prove myself a free trader, when the hon. member from Marquette (Mr. Crerar) without protest or let or hindrance from the Progressives and the other sort of Liberals, proved himself a protectionist . . .

But the Union government honestly tried to protect the western wheat producer against the big interests. The western wheat producers have fulfilled in their experience with the hon. member for Marquette and his followers in this house the words of scripture, "A man's foes shall be they of his household." The worst enemy of the western wheat growers is the policy of the Progressive party, its leaders and its representatives in this house.

Later I went on to say:

I plead for a departure from this free trade law of supply and demand and acceptance of the principles of the old national policy in our dealings with all provinces from Yukon to Prince Edward Island.

That national policy would benefit farmers and industrial workers alike. The industrial workers are the forgotten men by this house in 1946, and an industrial relations committee has been meeting here for weeks to give them the protection to-day for which I pleaded in those days. I went on to say:

I plead for a departure from the free trade law of supply and demand and an application of the principles of the old national policy to other industries in this country from the manufacturing of agricultural implements up to wheat growing. Leave the wheat growing industry of the west to the workings of the law of supply and demand and that law would not fill the west with wheat growers. If that law did fill the west with wheat growers, wheat would not be worth 50 cents a bushel.

And not long after that it went down to 38 cents a bushel.

The free trade law of supply and demand now costs the wheat grower of the west $25,000,000 per annum. I am advised, and believe, that free trade conditions supported by those free trade organizations, the grain exchanges, keep $25,000,000 per annum out of the pockets of Canadians who raise high quality wheat, and put that $25,000,000 per annum into the pockets of the native and alien exploiters who handle high grade Canadian wheat. The Progressive and non-Progressive sections of the Liberal party support grain exchanges and oppose grain inquiries. That party or those parties would sooner talk about agricultural implements than to try to protect the wheat growers of the west by a departure from free trade conditions. The only cure for these free trade conditions is a return to the ideals of the national policy, the application of the principles of protection. Free trade conditions have failed to maintain the identity of Canada's high grade wheat from the point of production to the ultimate market for that wheat.

At that time the Prime Minister rose in this house and announced the appointment of a royal commission headed by Chief Justice Turgeon. I need not read the report of that commission; it speaks for itself, but it will be found that all the statements I made at that time with regard to the bootlegging of course grains on the Atlantic seaboard in America were founded upon fact.

That great imperial newspaper the Toronto Telegram spent a lot of money in telling the people of the prairie provinces and the people of Ontario that this was really a national industry, that instead of being a north and south industry it was an east and west industry over to Great Britain and our allies and the markets of the world. What has been the result? From the time that commission was appointed they have set up eight or nine or ten different forms of protection during the past eight years or more, and the chickens are coming home to roost.

In conclusion I want to say that I hope that this matter has not been forgotten. Four or five days have been devoted to this but not one day has been devoted to the protection of the industrial worker. The only government that did anything for the white-collared people and the industrial workers was the Bennett government which set up the price spreads inquiry in 1933, 1934 and 1935. We are here to-day to fix the price of wheat and grant all kinds of protection to it in prices, although the actual price is set by world conditions.

Efforts should be made to hold our best customer, Great Britain. When the government saw the war coming in 1936, 1937 and 1938 they should have taken some action and little has been done since then. Hon. members will recall the time when a man with 400 acres was given an acreage bonus not to sow 200 acres. There were all forms of protection. I had a list of them in a return but I shall not read it.

The people of the prairies were responsible for the condition of the grain growing industry in the past; they are responsible for its condition at the present time, and they will be responsible for its future condition if they do not hold on to their best customer along the lines I have indicated, the mother country. We have had a great number of grain inquiries. Instead of taking up four or five days of the time of the house toward the end of the session, I think this was really a function earlier in the session for the agriculture committee. That is a splendid committee. We have many able men in the house from farming communities. I plead with hon. members to do something to restore public confidence in our best customers in the old land, Great Britain, France and our allies in the last two wars. This can be done by adopting reasonable protection for this great industry.

Mr. FAIR: When speaking on this matter yesterday afternoon I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether any commission was paid to brokers or commission merchants, and this morning he made a reply which to me was not very satisfactory. The minister stated that some commission was paid by the purchaser but that it did not affect the farmer directly or indirectly. In my opinion that is not quite correct because I think you will find the purchasers will reduce the price they pay by the amount of commission paid to the brokers.

At the present time 160 million bushels of our wheat are being sold to the British government for the next two years, and 140 million bushels for the succeeding two years. There is no excuse in the world for keeping the commission merchants in Winnipeg or anywhere else on the dole by paying commissions on these deals. This is a deal between departments of governments or boards set up by governments in two different countries. I can see no reason for subsidizing these fellows as has been done in the past at the expense of the grain growers.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is not being done.

Mr. FAIR: No commission whatever is being paid to them.

Mr. MacKINNON: Not by the wheat board or by the government in any way. The purchaser does pay the exporter a commission.

Mr. FAIR: Does he pay anything to the Winnipeg men?

Mr. MacKINNON: Oh, yes, the men he employs in Winnipeg.

Mr. FAIR: I do not think the farmers of this country should be penalized any longer. As hon. members know, on previous occasions I have introduced bills to close the grain exchange altogether. The bill that I introduced this session was sent to the agriculture committee, but because a number of other committees were sitting it was not possible to have the bill dealt with this year. I gave notice that if the bill was not dealt with this year I would introduce it next session, and that is still my intention.

I am not particularly concerned with the percentage of commission that is paid on these deals, but I am concerned over the grain exchange being allowed to operate. The way prices have fluctuated in the past has meant that the farmers were robbed, and I feel satisfied that the same thing will happen in the future. As an illustration I should like to refer to what has happened in connection with rye. On July 30 the price of cash rye in Winnipeg was $3.04 per bushel, but by August 10 the price had dropped down to $1.89½ cents per bushel.

Mr. BRYCE: That is just when the farmer is selling his grain.

Mr. FAIR: As the hon. member for Selkirk says, that is when the farmer is selling his grain. That is a drop of approximately 38 per cent. The farmer is robbed of that difference in price, but of course the fellows on the grain exchange make their commissions regardless of the price at which it is sold. I think it is a crime; it is just a steal from the farmers. If there are any representatives in the house of the grain exchange or the northwest millers association I should like them to convey that message to those organizations. Until this legalized steal is stopped I intend to continue to introduce bills to close the grain exchange in order to make these members get out and go to work.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to ask the minister a question along the lines of that asked by the hon. member who has just spoken. We have a crop in prospect this year of anywhere from 450 to 500 million bushels of wheat. We are providing for a sale of 160 million bushels to Great Britain. If we allow 90 million bushels for home consumption, for feed, seed and flour, that leaves us with probably 200 million bushels still to be sold to other countries. What is the intention of the government with regard to these sales to other countries? Are they to be made direct to individuals in those countries, or to government agencies, or are the facilities of the Winnipeg grain exchange or any other grain exchange to be used? What is the method that is to be used in disposing of the grain that is not covered by this contract?

Mr. MacKINNON: No grain exchange in Winnipeg or anywhere else is going to be used as far as the Canadian government or the wheat board is concerned. I am told that certain buyers in foreign countries are in the habit of buying through shippers or brokers and I do not know to what extent they will continue to do that.

Mr. WRIGHT: Is that for the duration of the contract, or just for this year?

Mr. MacKINNON: As far as I know it is for the duration of the contract. I can answer the hon. member's question by stating that it is the intention to carry on indefinitely in the way I have just stated.

Mr. BENTLEY: I understood from the minister that any exporting firm in this or any other country which makes a deal outside of this contract must place the order with a broker here who will buy direct from the wheat board. Is that correct?

Mr. MacKINNON: Yes.

Mr. QUELCH: This morning the Minister of Agriculture stated that the 12½ per cent in the price of agricultural machinery would be offset through the Canadian dollar being now on a parity with the United States dollar. We all agreed that that should be so, but that is not what is happening, because the last word I had from the west shows that an $1,800 binder is now quoted at over $2,000. Is the government going to take steps to see that the prices of farm machinery are controlled? It seems to me that since the government allowed that increase of 12½ per cent and brought the Canadian dollar on a parity with the United States dollar, the government would be justified in reducing the farm machinery increase from 12½ per cent to 2½ per cent.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is a matter of government policy.

Mr. QUELCH: But farm machinery is being bought in such large quantities prior to the harvest that the question is important now; for our farmers are paying these increased prices. If the government is going to act it will have to act quickly.

Mr. FAIR: In regard to quota deliveries during the second, third and fourth years of this contract, will the quota be applied only during a certain portion of the year until the heavy run of wheat comes, or throughout the whole year?

Mr. MacKINNON: It will be the policy of the wheat board to open up the quotas just as soon as it can.

Mr. FAIR: The farmers will be able to deliver all the wheat they can grow during the life of this contract to July 31, 1950?

Mr. MacKINNON: That is my understanding.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What will be the acreage basis under this agreement?

Mr. MacKINNON: The present authorized acreage is approximately 22,000,000. The original basis was 65 per cent of the 1940 acreage, but since then adjustments have been made and at the present time the authorized acreage is approximately 22,000,000. We are operating on that basis.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Will new acreage be permitted to come under cultivation? Thousands of veterans are returning to agriculture and getting themselves established on new land. There will have to be some adjustment made to take care of them, and I want that clearly understood.

Mr. MacKINNON: The wheat board have been doing that right along.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: With regard to the five-year participation period, one of the great objections is that the farmer will not be able to realize on his participation certificates beyond 10 cents now and 14 to 16 cents on the 1944 crop until July 31, 1950.

Mr. MacKINNON: That is correct. After payments have been made on the 1943 crop, the 1944 crop and 10 cents on the 1945 crop, and that will take some time, the next participation payments will not be made until the profits of the five-year pool are ascertained.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That will probably be in 1951.

Mr. MacKINNON: I should think so.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: At the very earliest. Is there no way in which the government can make a participation payment at the end of the third year instead of the farmer having to wait five years? That is just a bit too long.

A good many farmers have their money in participation certificates, and with rising costs they are going to be in a difficult position. Some will be compelled to go to the banks and borrow money, because even though they have participation certificates the banks do not take them as collateral. I would strongly urge that a partial payment be made at the end of three years instead of five years. That would greatly relieve the position of the grain growers.

Mr. MacKINNON: I do not see how that could be done, but it is a matter that might well be taken into consideration.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I raised that point this morning. I am not able to understand why the twenty cents which would apply on the next two years' crops should not be paid following the end of those two years. The answer given was it was being held to average up the price for the five-year period. Is there any other object which the wheat board has in mind in holding up payment of the participation certificates for five years?

Mr. MacKINNON: The plan provides for a five-year pool, and the participation payments covering the five-year pool will be made on the basis of the profits made by the board in the next five years.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): I asked another question this morning as to the subsidy on flour for domestic use in Canada. The government has been paying a subsidy of 47⅝ cents a bushel. I do not suppose that subsidy will be paid on flour exported?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): How do you adjust the matter between the two lots of flour?

Mr. MacKINNON: The mills make a report to the wheat board every month. Those reports are audited, so there will be no difficulty about that at all.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): One question that bothers me more than anything else is that all manufactured goods are exported on a rising market. Is there anything in mind to bring about parity between farm prices and the prices of the goods the farmer needs in order to produce and for his living?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. WRIGHT: I think we are all agreed that we want stability and that this agreement is a step in that direction. But there is one flaw in it, and I am wondering if this point was discussed with the British representatives when the negotiations were taking place. There is no relationship between the price of our wheat being sold to Britain and the prices of the goods which Britain has to sell to us. We are buying certain of these articles and it seems to me there should be some relationship between the price of wheat we are selling to Britain and the prices of the goods she is selling to us. I know that in negotiating agreements with other parts of the commonwealth that factor was taken into consideration. Was it discussed in the negotiations with the British people in connection with this agreement?

Mr. MacKINNON: There was no discussion of that, and I really do not see how there could be any hope of arriving at agreement on it.

Mr. WRIGHT: In the agreement which Britain reached with New Zealand the matter was discussed and adjustments were made in the agreement to cover that point. I know it is much easier to do that in the case of New Zealand because she buys a lot of goods direct from Britain which we do not. But if this wheat agreement is to be fair to the farmers there must be some relationship between their costs and the prices of what they have to buy. I know it is very difficult for a government which does not believe in planning except from day to day to do that. Nevertheless I am still of the opinion that that is the only permanent solution of our problem, and I was wondering if the government had been far-sighted enough to discuss that aspect of the matter with Britain when negotiating this agreement.

Mr. FAIR: I have given figures showing that the price of rye dropped from $3.04 to $1.89½ from July 30 to August 10 last. In view of this very recent evidence, what action is the government taking to close the exchange as far as the sale of rye is concerned?

Mr. MacKINNON: Very recently in the house I made a statement on rye operations in connection with the exchange, and what is set out there is, I think, a complete outline.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Was not an order in council passed permitting a drop of ten cents a day?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Well then, regulations—?

Mr. MacKINNON: Nothing whatsoever having to do with the wheat board.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In view of the fact that so many things have been said here with regard to this agreement, could we have the unanimous consent of the committee that a copy of this agreement be placed in the record? It would save some trouble in reading it—

Mr. MacKINNON: I should be very glad to have it specially printed and circulated to each member of the House of Commons and the other house.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: A good many people in reading Hansard will wonder what the actual agreement is, and I believe that if a copy were placed on Hansard it would be a great deal of benefit throughout the country in helping people to understand what the agreement is.

Mr. MacKINNON: It is contained in about two or three pages.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Put it in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Those outside this house who read Hansard do not read Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): There is no reason why, with unanimous consent, it cannot be put on Hansard, for the information of anyone in Canada who is interested.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The only point is that the government printing office is very much overworked, and it might delay the publication of Hansard to-morrow.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Is it the unanimous consent of the committee that the report be included in Hansard?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

(The agreement follows):

The government of Canada and the government of the United Kingdom, recognizing that their mutual interest in the maintenance of reasonable prices and adequate supplies of wheat for consumers and of steady and remunerative prices for producers can best be met by international cooperation in the expansion of world trade and employment, have entered into the following arrangements designed to ensure a measure of security in the supply and of stability in the price of wheat supplied by Canada to the United Kingdom:

1. (a) The United Kingdom government undertakes to purchase and the Canadian government undertakes to sell the following quantities of Canadian wheat, which quantities include wheat to be processed into flour for sale to the United Kingdom government:

(i) within the crop year 1946-47, 160,000,000 bushels;
(ii) within the crop year 1947-48, 160,000,000 bushels;
(iii) within the crop eyar 1948-49, 140,000,000 bushels;
(iv) within the crop year 1949-50, 140,000,000 bushels;

A bushel shall be of the weight of 60 pounds avoirdupois.

[Mr. Castleden.]

(b) In the event of the United Kingdom requiring from Canada any additional quantities of wheat that the Canadian government is prepared to make available, such additional quantities which the Canadian government offers and the United Kingdom government accepts shall in all respects be subject to the provisions of this agreement.

(c) Of the total quantity of wheat specified above for each crop year, the United Kingdom government agrees to take the following quantity in long tons in the form of flour:

1946-47—500,000 tons as a minimum, with an additional quantity not exceeding 140,000 tons to be determined by negotiations in the light of the out-turn of the crop.

1947-48—400,000 tons as a minimum, with an additional quantity not exceeding 140,000 tons to be determined by negotiations in the light of the out-turn of the crop.

1948-49—300,000 tons as a minimum, the actual tonnage to be negotiated by the 1st July, 1947.

1949-50—300,000 tons as a minimum, the actual tonnage to be negotiated by the 1st July, 1948.

(d) The rate and place of deliveries of wheat and flour shall be determined from time to time by mutual agreement.

2. (a) The price per bushel to be paid by the United Kingdom government to the Canadian government on the basis number one Manitoba northern, in store Fort William/Port Arthur, Vancouver or Churchill, shall be as follows:

(i) In respect of wheat bought and sold in the crop year 1946-47, $1.55.
(ii) In respect of wheat bought and sold in the crop year 1947-48, $1.55.
(iii) In respect of wheat bought and sold in the crop year 1948-49, not less than $1.25.
(iv) In respect of wheat bought and sold in the crop year 1949-50, not less than $1.

(b) The actual prices to be paid for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1948-49 shall be negotiated and settled between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government not later than the 31st December, 1947, and prices for wheat to be bought and sold within the crop year 1949-50 shall be negotiated and settled not later than the 31st December, 1948. In determining the prices for these two crop years, 1948-49 and 1949-50, the United Kingdom government will have regard to any difference between the prices paid under this agreement in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years and the world prices for wheat in the 1946-47 and 1947-48 crop years.

(c) The prices to be paid for grades other than number one Manitoba northern to be delivered under this agreement shall be determined yearly in consultation between the United Kingdom government and the Canadian government.

(d) In addition to the prices detailed in Section (a) of this article, the United Kingdom government undertakes to pay such carrying and forwarding charges as may be mutually arranged.

(e) Payment shall be made in full in Canadian funds at par Winnipeg by the United Kingdom payments office against presentation of completed statements of claim or otherwise as may be mutually agreed.

3. It is agreed that the United Kingdom government may sell or dispose of the wheat and flour purchased under this agreement in whatsoever manner the United Kingdom government may deem expedient both in regard to destination and price.

4. (a) The Canadian government will use its best endeavours to arrange that the qualities of wheat set out in article 1 (a) shall at all times be available and at the disposal of the United Kingdom government within the stipulated dates and in accordance with the rates and places of delivery determined under section (d) of article 1 of this agreement.

(b) The United Kingdom government will use its best endeavours to arrange for the provision of the required ocean tonnage within the stipulated dates and in accordance with the rates and places of delivery determined under section (d) of article 1 of this agreement.

5. It is agreed that the detailed terms and conditions relating to such matters as carrying and forwarding charges, grades, routing of shipments and all other matters incidental to the fulfilment of this agreement shall be discussed and settled from time to time and incorporated in documents to form annexures to this agreement.

6. It is mutually understood that matters arising from, or incidental to, the operation of this agreement may at the instance of either party become subjects of discussion between the parties to this agreement.

7. Having in mind the general purposes which this agreement is designed to serve, the two governments have agreed that its terms and conditions shall be subject to any modification or amendment which may be necessary to bring it into conformity with any international agreements or arrangements hereafter entered into to which both governments are parties.

Done in duplicate, in Ottawa, on the twenty-fourth day of July, 1946.

For the Government of Canada:
Jas. A. MacKinnon.

For the Government of the United Kingdom:

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have no intention of venturing into the details of this agreement; I should be just a sheep in the midst of wolves and, probably, be torn from all sides. But I do want to make some observations—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I assure the Minister of Veterans Affairs that they will be brief. They have to do with some remarks which were made this morning by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. The hon. member, in hailing this agreement, correctly described it as a great step forward to a controlled economy, and I heard no sign of any demur from the opposite side of the house, so that I am going to take it upon myself to say one or two things about it.

I have noticed that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar takes his cue from the Apostle Paul, in that he tries to be "all things to all men." It is not long ago since I had occasion to quote him in this house to the following effect: "We are not opposed to private enterprise, but we demand that private enterprise should take the risks if it takes the rewards." I said I could agree with that. I can only assume that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar uttered those remarks after having associated with some people engaged in private enterprise, whom he found to be, like himself, quite civilized, and therefore he had difficulty in regarding them as members of "the jungle"—to quote a phrase socialists sometimes use. But this morning, I assume after returning from the meeting of the other apostles in the west, he showed a feeling of enthusiasm about socialism, and it seemed to me that he went a very long way. It is true that he referred to laissez-faire, which I recognize is an extreme form of private enterprise, and a form of private enterprise which has to be curtailed in various ways. Nevertheless he got into a pretty full flood of socialist feeling, as I understood him, when he described this agreement as being the precursor of other agreements, and it seemed to me that before it was through he had floated us well out on the sea of socialism, which I do not think all of us wish to embark on.

It is true—and for this I give him credit—that when he spoke about a controlled economy he said there would be no regimentation. That is something which puzzles me very much. Apparently those who believe in these views think you can have a control which is not a control; it is going to be all very nice; nobody is going to tell anybody else what he must do; everything will be by persuasion.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Does the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario believe in the kind of private enterprise which Mr. Gladstone Murray speaks of as responsible enterprise?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If I understand what Mr. Gladstone Murray has said, as quoted by the hon. member, certainly I mean that. I would go farther and say, while I am on the point, that there must be regulation, and in some cases more regulation than others. But I come back to this point of control and regimentation, because I think it is an important point.

People must try to be realistic about this. To me it is inevitable that regimentation, however pleasant you try to make it, will still be regimentation, and it will still involve a few people giving other people orders. I once read an essay on murder, in which it was apparently argued that even murder could be done in a pleasant way. The essayist remarked, "I once knew a bulldog which murdered another bulldog with pleasing circumstances of good taste." I am prepared to believe that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, who, though I disagree with him, I must say always seems to be very agreeable, might try to make control and even regimentation as palatable as possible, just as the pleasant bulldog did.

But why I really rose in my place was this. I think, regardless of our views and differences, all of us would like to feel that we are realistic. Frankly, I think members of the C.C.F. are often not realistic, and especially they are in grave danger of constantly ignoring the fact that this country is one which lives or dies by export trade. That being so—and this is really my excuse for being on my feet at all —I wish to draw attention to a short extract from the London Economist, dealing with the position of England and with the task facing the British government, the task especially of finding the export trade by which, as the Economist in effect points out, they either live or die. If their export trade is good they will live, and if it is not they will die, or at any rate suffer a grievous reduction of their standard of living.

An hon. MEMBER: What about imports?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I always try to couple imports and exports.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): We are not in England; we are in Canada.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I should like to invite your attention to this quotation, because it is right on the target. I do not think any intelligent man can listen to this without asking himself whether it is true or false, and if it is true, it has searching and far-reaching implications for us. The article, which appears in the issue of July 27, at page 82, begins:

This is a strange task—

The task is that of finding sufficient export trade to enable them to prosper.

This is a strange task for a socialist government to find itself embarking upon. For competition in the world market still has those ugly features that socialists strive to banish from the domestic scene. The foreign purchaser is rarely amenable to "control." The foreign competitor does not submit to "coordination." "Fixed prices" are a rare exception and "orderly marketing" still rarer. Subsidies, the last resort in the domestic field of a government that cannot otherwise make an industry's ends meet, are regarded in the foreign field as almost equivalent to a declaration of war. The foreign customer is obstinate about buying where he can buy cheapest. Price, in fact, is the very essence of exporting. Quality, of course, plays its part; but quality alone, without a competitive price, will be useless.

Wherever else the labour government may be able to escape from the operations of the law of supply and demand—that law of the jungle that socialist orators are so fond of denouncing —they will have to face it in export markets. However much they may succeed in the domestic market, in substituting the welfare of the producer for the service of the consumer as the test of economic efficiency, they cannot do so in exports. . .

They will not find it easy to be coordinators at home and competitors abroad. They will need to be very stern in letting not their right hand know what their left hand doeth. Their chosen right hand is Sir Stafford Cripps; but he has not been able to prevent a little left-handedness creeping into his activities, as when, by some sort of conditioned reflex,—

I do not know exactly what "conditional reflex" means.

—he nationalized the Liverpool cotton market. That sort of instinct will have to be sternly repressed if the government are to perform as well in the role of Doctor Jekyll as in that of Mr. Hyde. They have just about three years—

The reason for the reference to three years is that they reckon that will be the time when the American and Canadian credits will run out.

They have just about three years to prove that their economic policy can meet the brutal test of economic efficiency—that is, whether or not it can produce better goods, at lower prices than other countries. If it can, the world will be at its feet. If it cannot, no amount of appeal to social justice, no "planning" or schemes of social security will save the country from a sharp reduction in its standard of living.

Whether hon. members agree with that statement or not, I believe everyone will agree that it is at least a clear statement of a certain view which I suggest is realism. I am sorry the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar is not here at the moment. I suggest that these words apply to this country just as precisely as they do to Great Britain.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): I would fully agree with the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario (Mr. Macdonnell) if he were sitting in the House of Commons in England. I should like to see him there some day. His great associate, Mr. Bennett, sits in the House of Lords. From the point of view of the British government, there is no doubt whatever that the article from which he has quoted and the argument which he is promoting are right. But unfortunately for the hon. member, we are not in Westminster. We are in the House of Commons of Canada, in Ottawa.

An hon. MEMBER: What has that to do with it?

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): Wait a minute. You will find out.

Mr. BROOKS: Not from you.

Mr. COTE (Matapedia-Matane): You will be surprised, and disappointed. I am not going to say that I am an expert on this question. Far from it. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario knows me better than to suppose that I would pose an as expert, but I hope that I shall be understood by members of all parties when I make the statement I am about to make. When we have to discuss any matter here, why should we introduce into this house the views and the concepts of people with whom we are trading? Exports from England to this country are imports as far as Canada is concerned, and exports from the Canadian soil to England are imports to the English. It is not one and the same problem at all. I suggest that it is about time that we in this House of Commons tried to understand the problem as it really is.

We have given $1,250,000,000 to England, and we have done so after many other grants; and I voted upon it with the greatest satisfaction that I have ever had in my life. Why? I will tell you why. I felt like a man paying the last instalment on a promissory note to the bank, a payment from a debtor who was becoming a creditor. I contend, therefore, that we should deal with this problem now before us as we deal with all problems as between exporters and importers—Canada-United Kingdom—on the basis that we are a nation and that we must analyse the situation instead of taking advice either from Westminster or from hon. members on the other side for whom I have every respect.

Mr. QUELCH: Has there been any recent change in the wheat board's policy in granting permits to a number of brothers farming together, or to father and son? Last year I received several complaints from organizations in my constituency to the effect that the wheat board was attempting to get brothers to sell wheat under one permit instead of, as before, under two or three. The same thing was complained of with regard to father and son. These people fear that if this were carried out they would be told that under the P.F.A. Act they were one unit instead of two or three and thereby the bonus would be cut down. Moreover, it would cause confusion, because if one brother wanted to sell coarse grains and another brother wanted to buy coarse grains, if they were operating under one permit, a transaction of that sort would not be permitted, whereas under separate permits one might sell and the other buy. I cannot understand why, as in the past, brothers should not be allowed to sell under separate permits.

Mr. MacKINNON: The chairman of the wheat board tells me that without knowing more of the circumstances it would be impossible to give an answer.

Mr. QUELCH: Has there been any definite change in policy, or was this a case of individual action to meet certain particular cases where they thought a mistake was being made?

Mr. MacKINNON: I am advised that there is no definite change in policy.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: I was intrigued by the reference of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario to the wolves and sheep, and I confess that by the time he was through I felt it difficult to distinguish between the wolves and the sheep.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I was the sheep.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: What I wish to refer to is the argument that he tried to develop—or so it struck me at any rate—in favour of what might be called unrestricted or uncontrolled trading as opposed to the direct method. I must say at the outset that for my own part I would prefer to have seen a multilateral rather than a bilateral agreement, because that is the direction in which we are attempting to go in these days. On the other hand, I would rather see a bilateral agreement than none at all. I do not need to go into the reasons for that because it has been covered.

I am not altogether happy or contented with the terms of the contract because I feel, as I have said before, that the initial price for wheat could have been higher than the price we have obtained. I have a simple calculation here which shows how I make that contention. For example, the initial price was $1.25, with participation certificates of twelve cents on the 1943 crop, making a total of $1.37. If we were to take the pattern set by the government itself in connection with increasing prices, for example the 12½ per cent increase on farm implements—and that seems to be the pattern right along for manufactured articles—and added 12½ per cent to the $1.37, or eighteen cents, we would bring the price up to $1.55. I think the government could have been bold enough to take that step and to have guaranteed a price of $1.55 for four years, instead of for two years.

On the other hand, however, I cannot bring myself to agree with those ideas which have been expressed by hon. members to my right, and for this reason. I have listened carefully in the last two days to speeches made by hon. members in the Progressive Conservative party, and I have failed thus far in my own mind to crystallize anything in the form of an alternative to this agreement. We have heard considerable by way of denunciation of it, and some of the criticism was good. But I have not heard anything which could be put in the place of this agreement which would merit my support.

The only indication we have had along that line was what we heard to-day, and that amounted to going back to the principle of laissez-faire which was so roundly condemned by the hon. member himself. The process of accusing the leader of this group of welcoming the agreement because it means regimentation, giving orders, and all those terrible things which are supposed to be tied to controls, I cannot accept, because it is not so. We must definitely make up our minds that this is true, as long as we live, in any society, because we have reached the point where somebody is going to do the controlling. The only choice I can see is as to whether we shall have control, in which we as a parliament can participate, or whether we shall have control of our prices from the outside.

Apparently the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario prefers control by people from the outside. Evidently he would think that if we were to have nothing to do with the setting of prices here, everybody would be happy. The result would be that somebody would set the price for us; somebody would set this mythical world price. It might be some monopoly or trust company or bank over which we have no control. I object to that type of control. If we are to have the control or regimentation which is necessary, then let us have such control emanate from a public body which can be controlled in turn by the voters of this country. Then we shall have a say in how much control there will be and in which respects we shall have it. If we do not do that we shall have to accept controls which are imposed upon us by private enterprise, for its own benefit.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I should like to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, who made reference to the leader of this party and to his hailing of this agreement. I heard clearly what my leader said, and I noticed he said that whereas this agreement gave stability, and whereas it gave for a period of years some security to the farmer, he hailed it as a step in the right direction.

Apparently the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is very much afraid that we are leading to regimentation, and that such regimentation will not be to his liking. I think the rank and file of people in Canada who are going to benefit from such control as this will hail this contract. The people who will squeal about it are those who previously operated the grain exchange and the stock exchange, those who speculated to their own advantage and to the detriment of others. We shall have squealing from the monopolies who, to their own advantage, have the power to withhold necessities from the rank and file of the people. So far as I am concerned, and so far as the rank and file of the people in this country are concerned, we are not going to worry about that regimentation, even if it means the elimination of those people who maintain their rackets in that particular field.

Then, the hon. member seemed somewhat concerned about what the ultimate result would be when we approach the international field. When nations throughout the world carry on an exchange of agreements on this basis, through a process of governments arranging with governments rather than with exchanges and people on world exchanges, or with world monopolies, it is to the advantage of the rank and file and for the benefit of people everywhere, rather than for the benefit of just a few who may be in control in the international field. Under this process we have regimentation in the right place, and I do not think the rank and file of people will object to it.

Mr. BURTON: I listened with a good deal of attention, as I usually do, when the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario speaks.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then I wonder why you do not agree with me.

Mr. BURTON: He did admit that we must have some regulation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I always have.

Mr. BURTON: He also says that we must be realistic. I would say to him that I remember only too well that period following the first great war when there was a reopening of trading in wheat on the Winnipeg grain exchange, and when we had an example of people trying to operate the economy of our country along the lines which apparently the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario is advocating: "Be sure you do not have any regimentation. Be sure your regulations will not hurt those who want to go ahead with their system of laissez-faire"—of which the hon. member himself seems now to be somewhat dubious.

There are thousands upon thousands of farmers in western Canada who remember, most realistically, the period of time in the thirties, when the government in power had much the same conception about how the affairs of the country should be run as does the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, when we had the privilege of producing some of the finest wheat we ever produced in our lives, the very best of No. 1 hard. You know, Mr. Chairman, I am so realistic that I remember only too well the days when I hauled that wheat to the elevators and got thirty-eight cents a bushel for it.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Was it worth any more than that in any other country of the world at that time?

Mr. BURTON: I would add that there were regulations then. There was regimentation, not regimentation by government, but regimentation by those who controlled the marketing of grain in our country. When we talk about regimentation we must remember that very often there is regimentation and control exercised by people who are not acting on behalf of the people generally, but rather on behalf of a small group.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. BURTON: Certainly.

Mr. ROSS (Souris): Could the hon. member have obtained any more for a bushel of wheat in any other nation during the thirties than he got in Canada at that time—from any government, including the socialist governments of that time?

Mr. BURTON: I am not excusing the successors of the union government any more than I am excusing others. Had the governments of those days had the vision and foresight following the first great war to have consummated agreements similar to this one, in all probability we would not have had the condition later on which was referred to by the hon. member for Souris.

I should like to say a few words about this agreement. The leader of this group has spoken, as well as other hon. members in the group. I believe—and I am convinced that this goes for many farmers throughout Canada—that while in this agreement there may be certain provisions which are not entirely to our satisfaction, and while there may be some things—some of which have been mentioned—we should like to have improved, by and large the farmers of this country, and especially those who would come under the operations of this policy announced by the government, are going to accept it as a step in the right direction. They are doing that because they consider that, despite its shortcomings, there is much good in it.

Mr. BENTLEY: I am not going to make a lengthy speech, but rise simply to ask a question of the minister.

I would say first of all, however, that I should like to draw one inconsistency to the attention of the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario. The hon. member is always so good-natured, polite and courteous that I know he will not object to my drawing this to his attention. He read from an article in the London Economist, I believe he said it was, and during the course of his reading he came to a point where he made the observation, "I do not quite understand that, myself." But he indicated in his remarks that he agreed with the article, even though there were some parts in it he did not quite understand.

I have a question which I have asked before, but perhaps I did not ask it clearly enough to get the answer I had expected. Therefore it was my own fault that I did not get the right answer. My question is this. The wheat board is going to accept delivery of all wheat for the next four years. It will deliver approximately 160 million bushels this year direct to Britain, according to contract. There will be other amounts left over for outside markets, wherever they may be found. Does the wheat board intend to offer for sale on the pit of the Winnipeg grain exchange the wheat which is not covered by the contract with Great Britain?

Mr. MacKINNON: No.

Mr. STEPHENSON: We have heard a lot about western wheat, so much, in fact, that one would almost conclude that everyone comes from the west. But we have farmers in Ontario who produce Ontario winter wheat. Would the minister explain why there is a difference between the price of Ontario winter wheat and the price of western wheat?

Mr. MacKINNON: At the present time Ontario wheat brings five cents a bushel more than western wheat.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I understand that wheat here was selling at $1.26 recently. I know of one farmer who delivered it at that price, but the western wheat price is $1.35.

Mr. MacKINNON: It is $1.26 plus the 14-cent rise.

Mr. STEPHENSON: But this was just in the last week.

Mr. BENTLEY: We only got ours this year on August 1.

Mr. MacKINNON: The price to-day is $1.40.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

444. Departmental administration, $1,554,712.

Mr. BROOKS: It is refreshing to get away from all this talk about wheat and chaff we have been smothered in for the last three or four days. Coming from the maritime provinces, I find myself in somewhat the same position as the hon. member for Durham, in wondering if there is any other part of Canada except the three prairie provinces.

I believe it has been the practice to permit a general debate when the first item of each department is called. I do not intend to take up much time this afternoon, nor do I fell I would be justified in doing so. Veterans affairs have been discussed not only in the house when the bills respecting veterans were before it but, as every hon. member knows, for weeks and weeks in the veterans affairs committee. I do not think much more could be said either here or anywhere else on the subject. Any attempt at a lengthy discussion must result in repetition. At this stage of the session I would not feel justified in proceeding at length, and I am sure most other hon. members would feel the same way.

However, there is one point I believe I should emphasize, and it is this, that if there should be any lack of criticism in these estimates at the present time it arises from the fact that the subject matter has been discussed on other occasions, and such lack of discussion must not be considered by the government as an indication of entire satisfaction with the results obtained thus far. Many hon. member know that we pressed for things in committee meetings which we did not get. It would take too long this afternoon to mention them in detail.

However, I might say that the Veterans' Land Act has come in for a considerable amount of criticism. Many settlers feel they are not getting what they should get. There is criticism in connection with small holdings, and the building of houses under the Veterans' Land Act.

Then the matter of imperials was discussed, and many hon. members expressed the view that the imperials were not justly treated. Mention has been made of the fire fighters—and I bring these matters to the attention of the committee only to show that, while there may not be extensive criticism of the minister's estimates there are still many things which could and have been criticized in the past.

I have noticed that on occasions hon. members bring to the house letters which they have received from constitutents setting out certain points of criticism. I am satisfied, from the number I have received, that if all hon. members were to bring their personal letters to the house and proceed to read them, practically nothing else would be done.

We have been told by the minister, and to a great extent we agree, that the legislation put through the house has been good. I think he said it was the best to be found in any country in the world. While we do not all agree on that—I have no doubt the United States consider they have some of the best veterans legislation in the world—we do agree that our legislation is good. There can be no doubt about that. As I said a few days ago, there is no reason why Canada should not have good legislation for its veterans, because I do not believe there is any country in the world better fitted than this Canada to look after its veterans.

When one stops to consider the situation in other countries he recalls that most of the countries in Europe were overrun by war and suffered far more than we did. Their cities, towns and public utilities were destroyed and ravaged, and the people are bankrupt. So that I say Canada is in a better position to look after her veterans than is almost any other country. While we may claim great credit for it, and while we may be entitled to credit, yet it would be very much to our discredit if it were not true.

The most serious criticism being made in Canada to-day in connection with veterans affairs is not with the legislation which was dealt with by the veterans affairs committee, and which has been passed in the form of bills, as with the administration. As has been mentioned time after time in this house, the two matters which concern the veterans most to-day are jobs and housing. I know these come under other departments, but they are the two great problems for the veteran. They must be solved by the government and by this country if our veterans are to be properly rehabilitated and receive what we consider is their due for the suffering they have undergone and the sacrifice they made for this country and for civilization.

We have passed many acts. As I said a few moments ago, they are good acts, but the best intentions in the world as far as those acts are concerned will be frustrated unless they are properly administered. The passing of an act is sometimes quite a simple matter, but it is an entirely different matter to carry out the terms of an act. I have pointed out before, and I think it will bear repeating, that at the head of these different departments of the veterans affairs are men who are capable, but there has been some reason for complaint in connection with the men to be found across the country. I suppose that is owing to the fact that the department cannot always get the best men. Sometimes, if these men are not properly checked they do not take the interest in their work they should.

That is not only true in this country; it applies to others as well. I have read articles about what happened in the United States after the last war, particularly with reference to hospitalization. After the last war, the public there began to lose interest in the veterans and there was not as good administration as there should have been. I hope that that will not happen to veterans of this war. I trust that these new acts will be so administered that there will be little fault to be found as far as the veterans are concerned.

I think we all recognize the fact that the soldier finished his job when the war ended. He did a splendid job. During the war there were many organizations which rendered assistance in hospitals and other service organizations. They did much to help those who were carrying the burden of war. It has been the experience in the past that, when a war is over, people turn to their own duties and responsibilities and leave this other responsibility to the government. They more or less wash their hands of it. I hope that that will not be the case after this war.

There are many large hospitals from one end of the country to the other and there are many service men who will have to remain in those hospitals for years to come. There are many social organizations which could lighten their burden and assist them in many other ways. As I say, I hope that, now that the war is over, these matters will not be left entirely to civil service officials or to the Department of Veterans Affairs, but that these social organizations which did such a splendid work during the war will feel that they still have a responsibility to the soldier who has to spend his time in hospital.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): In a word may I thank the hon. member for Royal for the typically co-operative and constructive remarks he has made this afternoon. They only reflect his attitude all through the meetings of the committee on veterans affairs. In regard to the committees he has mentioned, I can assure him that conferences of our local committees are going on all across the country. Their work has been most helpful and constructive and is tremendously appreciated.

I do not think I should detain the committee at present except to answer such questions as may be asked. We had a splendid committee and I should like to pay a tribute to the members before these estimates are through. I happen to have been thirty years in parliament, and never in my life have I seen a committee so sustained in their devotion to the public service, both in the cause of the veterans and the cause of Canada, as was the veterans affairs committee of this parliament. Whatever may be the vicissitudes of public life in the future, the members of this committee will always have the reward of conscience from a task well done. If I were in charge of giving out awards, I would grant each one the Canada medal.

Mr. WRIGHT: On behalf of this group, I should like to say a word on this item. It is not my intention to enter into any prolonged debate and I am not even going to repeat the remarks of the hon. member for Royal. I think he has covered fairly well the points on which there might have been any difference of opinion in the committee. While we did not get all the things we wanted, there was co-operation on the part of the government in granting at least part of our requests. I hope that the same cooperation will exist in the future, because there is no doubt that after we come back to another parliament we shall have found that there are inconsistencies in these acts which will need eliminating. I hope that we shall have the same cooperation from the government in connection with listening to those complaints and remedying some of them.

As the hon. member for Royal has said, you can have the best act in the world, but if the administration and the regulations passed under it are not sympathetic the whole act will be spoiled. Taking it as a whole, I think the administration of these veterans acts has been good, but there will occur in different parts of the dominion inconsistencies which we as members will feel we must bring to the attention of the government. I hope that there will not be any heated arguments when we bring up such matters, because we do so knowing that they are just complaints which should be remedied.

There was one matter which I brought to the attention of the minister a short time ago. This had to do with conflict with respect to veterans regulations concerning men getting medical treatment during the first year after discharge, and certain provincial acts, particularly one in Saskatchewan, with respect to automobile accidents. I hope that the minister will have an opportunity to iron out these difficulties. It is the little things that really make a difference between success or failure in the administration of veterans legislation. It is the failure to remedy a thing quickly enough, to let it drag on, that gives the black eye to what might otherwise be good veterans legislation.

I believe that we have put through reasonably good veterans legislation. As I said before, perhaps it is not as complete as some of us would have liked. If we were responsible for its administration, perhaps we would not go as far as we are prepared to go when we are in opposition. If we are fair we shall admit these things. I urge the department to give sympathetic consideration to the little differences that will occur throughout the country and have them remedied as quickly as possible so that they will not become open sores and cause dissension among our veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I want to thank my hon. friend for his remarks.

Mr. QUELCH: On behalf of this group, I want to say that I agree wholeheartedly with the remarks of the two previous speakers. I do not think anything will be gained by repeating what has already been said. I was a member of the committee which sat last year and the greater part of this session. We covered every phase and angle of veterans affairs, so that it would be a sheer waste of time to travel over the same ground again. The point made by the last speaker was a very good one. No doubt, when we get back to our constituencies, we shall find that certain acts are not working out to the best advantage, but I am satisfied that if we bring defects to the attention of the minister he will give our representations every consideration, and that at the next session, if we have found serious trouble with the legislation, the minister will give us every cooperation.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Thank you.

Mr. HERRIDGE: As a member of the veterans affairs committee I want to support the remarks of the hon. member for Royal, the hon. member for Melfort and the hon. member for Acadia. I do not think there is any necessity at this time, after the long discussions we have had in the veterans affairs committee to deal with these estimates at length. I want to say that I enjoyed working with the other members of the committee and that throughout the whole of our meetings the spirit was excellent. The intention of all the members was to serve the men they were appointed to serve. I am sure that all members of the house, all veterans and the people of the country will watch with great interest the workings of our veterans legislation during the months ahead, and no doubt next session we shall be prepared to make suggestions that experience will justify. I wish to suggest through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister that it would be of great advantage to members of the house if they could obtain a copy of the consolidated acts relating to veterans.

[Mr. Wright.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is already being arranged, as soon as the senate approves the legislation.

Item agreed to.

445. District administration, $3,489,288.

Mr. HARKNESS: I notice that there are nine district administrators, with salaries ranging from $3,000 to $5,700. Would the minister indicate on what basis these districts are organized? Are they on a provincial basis, or are they military districts, and what is the reason for the wide variation in salaries?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The basis is an approximation in conformity with military districts, but sometimes it has been necessary to form sub-regional districts for purposes of better administration.

Item agreed to.

447. Treatment services, $13,761,079.

Mr. FULTON: In keeping with the spirit of cooperation displayed this afternoon, it is not my intention to embark on criticism of this item, but I would appreciate it if the minister would give some thought to methods by which treatment in hospitals could be made more readily available to the veterans. I have in mind the Shaughnessy hospital at Vancouver. A common complaint there is that the men are kept lining up for sometimes two or three days, and the men themselves say sometimes weeks, without actually getting to see a doctor. Then an appointment is made for a certain day. The veteran goes to the admitting office and is told to go over there or to sit down here, and he may stay there for some days. The generality of this complaint leads one to the thought that there must be a shortage of staff in these hospitals which gives rise to this condition. I know that in that hospital most if not all of the doctors are veterans, and I am quite certain they would not willingly keep any veteran waiting. It must be a shortage of staff, and when one looks through these items and sees the salaries that are paid to these doctors one finds a possible explanation of the shortage. I think the same condition exists with regard to the nurses in these hospitals. I know that some of these hospitals have had the greatest difficulty in getting doctors and nurses, and some effort was made to solve that problem by seconding medical personnel from the armed forces; but now the medical personnel in the armed forces are trying to get out of the armed forces as fast as they can. Would the minister make some comment on that and say whether the salary position is responsible for the shortage and whether, in that case, any increase will be made in the salaries to make service in these hospitals more attractive to the best class of medical personnel.

Mr. MACKENZIE: About six or nine months ago the remarks of my hon. friend would have been abundantly justified, but since then we have reorganized the whole medical services of the Department of Veterans Affairs under the able and, may I say, brilliant direction of Brigadier Warner. The salaries of the doctors are being raised. That was one of the problems that we have had for the last twenty-five years, and my hon. friend is quite correct in what he said on that point. The salaries of the doctors who were working for pensions and national health were far too low, but now we have the whole medical fraternity in Canada united with the department. We have the family doctor scheme; we have consultants; we have specialists; and the salaries have been raised to a maximum of $7,200. Formerly it was approximately $4,200. So that the problem which my hon. friend has quite properly mentioned has been met.

Mr. SENN: In almost every locality throughout the country there are local doctors to whom the veterans go for treatment, and I have heard complaints that the scale of fees provided for these doctors is altogether too low. Is anything being done to see that these doctors receive fair remuneration for the work they do for the veterans?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes. Within the last few weeks the scale of fees of the local or family doctors for home calls, office calls and hospital visits has been revised substantially.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does this item of treatment services cover the veterans of the first great war?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. MacNICOL: When a veteran who suffered from gas in the first great war continues to be sick and requires treatment and medicine, does he have to pay his local doctor for treatment, medicine and so forth?

Mr. MACKENZIE: If he is a pensioner he does not have to pay for treatment. In any event, he may obtain domiciliary care in a departmental institution.

Mr. MacNICOL: I know one veteran who, from my own observation, is greatly afflicted with a lung condition. He gets a very small pension of $21 or $22 a month, which is wholly inadequate, for he is unable to work except very occasionally, and his whole pension goes into medicine. Under the new veterans legislation will he be qualified to obtain medicine free?

Mr. MACKENZIE: He is entitled to a hospital allowance at any time when receiving treatment for a pensionable condition.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is he entitled to free medicine?

Mr. MACKENZIE: He can get treatment and hospital allowances when being treated for a pensionable condition.

Mr. MacNICOL: Can he get free treatment at home?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No; only in a hospital or in one of our institutions for domiciliary care.

Mr. MacNICOL: If he stays at home he is not entitled to free medicine?

Mr. MACKENZIE: He can obtain medicine while on out-patient treatment for pensionable condition if he does not want to go into the hospital.

Mr. MacNICOL: If he went as an out-patient would he get medicine free?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, absolutely free.

Mr. CARDIFF: In the case of doctors serving in military hospitals, are they paid a salary or fees, or how are they remunerated?

Mr. MACKENZIE: They may serve on salary, or they may serve part time on fees.

Mr. FULTON: I should like to take this opportunity to make a brief reference to the work which is being done at the paraplegic centre in Toronto called Lyndhurst. The men at that institution are such as prior to this war and even during the war until very recently would be condemned to be bed-ridden for the rest of their lives. I am not qualified to discuss the medical aspects, but I have been there and seen the work done. The patients are men who have suffered spinal injuries during the war and who, I am told, until this school was established and the treatment made available, might have lived for some three to five years, but within a very short time would have died, and in the meantime would have been completely bed-ridden and helpless. Under the direction of Lieutenant-Colonel John Counsell, who is himself a paraplegic, a start has been made with special reference to veterans. They took over the large home at Lyndhurst and have a centre there which, I believe, the Department of Veterans Affairs is supporting very generously at the moment. Some tribute should be paid to the work which is being done there, because these ex-officers and men whom I have seen are able to get themselves out into their wheel chairs, move themselves around, in some cases even get themselves into and out of cars and taxis, and generally lead a life which, of course, is not a normal life but enables them to look after themselves much more than formerly they could do. I believe there is some trouble in that this centre is anxious to extend its work to include all paraplegics, veterans and others. It is the only existing centre in Canada for that work, and I understand that they have made representations that non-veterans cases be allowed in that centre, to receive the same treatment, and that the work be extended. I wonder if the minister could say whether consideration is being given to that or not, and also, when he makes a statement on it, if he would cover the point in connection with the amount payable by these veterans for their wheel chairs. I regret that I overlooked the facts when the Customs Tariff Act was being discussed. These chairs are manufactured only in the United States; they are a special type, of light aluminum construction, and collapsible, so that the veteran can easily manoeuvre the chair, and when he gets into a car or taxi the chair is capable of being folded up and put in the back trunk. It is not manufactured in Canada; it has to be imported from the United States, and duty is payable on it. I intended to raise this matter when the Customs Tariff Act was before the house and ask that these chairs be exempted from duty. Perhaps the minister would bring it to the attention of the Department of Finance with a view of having these chairs exempted from duty.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I thank my hon. friend for his remarks. I, too, have been through Lyndhurst Lodge. In regard to the wheel chairs, they are purchased and maintained by the department.

This institution for paraplegics is founded upon Mill Hill, in England; and the results have been simply amazing. Perhaps I should give one or two figures to the committee. It is only a small place, with a bed capacity of thirty-seven. At present there are twenty-eight paraplegic patients. The total number of patients who have been to the lodge is sixty, of whom thirty-nine are now out doing useful work or at school. A very limited number of civilian cases are being admitted on a repayment basis from the provincial government. One such case is at the lodge at the present time.

I think a visit to this place is one of the most encouraging experiences in the world. Men who were completely paralyzed and wholly disabled—at least sixty per cent of them—are now back at work.

Mr. FULTON: My information is at variance with the minister's. I was told that they had to pay for their chairs themselves, and that is why payment of the customs duty is important. If there has been a change recently I am glad to hear of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Not veterans. That may be true of civilian patients, but not a single veteran has to pay for or maintain his wheel chair. He never has.

Mr. CHURCH: The vote for this particular item, treatment and services, is one of the utmost importance to soldiers and their dependents. Wide additions have been made in the several bills which were passed relating to this matter. The efficiency of our doctors and nurses in the last war—a matter to which I referred the other day in connection with one of the minister's bills—has been greatly increased in comparison with the first war, although it was splendid then. But there are some features of this treatment affecting outdoor patients and others who come under the scope of the several bills which call for attention. One or two expenditures are not included in the new bill. I understand it is the policy of the minister to apply this particular item to additional services. Will soldier's families and the dependents as well be included? There is some provision for dependents in one of the bills. One cannot but think of all the universities have done in connection with this item, the rapid strides in science, medicine and surgery which have been made, and the large numbers of doctors and nurses whose services in our hospitals here and overseas form a most commendable feature of this legislation. Do not forget that but for the veterans who enlisted in this war we should have had all the horrors of war on our own soil, in Ontario and Quebec and the other provinces; and the best treatment the minister can give these veterans and their families is none too good for them.

I appreciate what has been done by the universities to assist in connection with our Sunnybrook hospital, upon the erection of which about $18 million will be spent. It is going to be an important institution, and special types of cases from all parts of Ontario and other parts of the country are being dealt with. I notice that the cost of the furniture and many other items for this hospital is being contributed voluntarily—a most commendable feature. I do not see that being done in other hospitals throughout the country. Large amounts of equipment, including chairs for amputation cases and many other features which will add to the comfort of the patients, are being collected, and something is being done for the benefit of outdoor patients. I think a general principle should be applied with regard to the treatment of these cases and the provision of these services.

In addition, I find that there is much complaint from some of the soldiers' families and some of the inmates about the lack of treatment, and the equality of service provided under this item, which I hope will be applied to all who served, in addition to the imperials.

I was very much surprised at the action which was taken this morning as announced by one of our ministers. I appreciate that it does not come under this item, but let me say that it is going to cause wide disunity in this country, and I do not know of anything which will lead to more trouble than this order in council. It should be repealed and annulled.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend mentioned treatment for dependents. There are treatment allowances for dependents, but not treatment as such.

In regard to the Sunnybrook hospital, we intend to move patients in there immediately, with a gradual infiltration of patients as the construction and establishment of staff develop to completion.

Mr. McLURE: I hesitate to say even a few words since I am not a veteran of either the first or the last great war. But at this time I should like to refer to something which has been in my mind on other occasions when veterans matters were before this house. In my humble opinion, of all committees dealing with veterans or other affairs which have ever worked in this house, no committee, from my experience of it, deserves as much credit as the veterans committee which we have had this session. They certainly did good work; they had in mind only one thing, as far as I could see from their reports, and that was to do everything possible in the interests of the veterans of both wars. After saying that, I have no criticism to make, but I would point out to the minister that in our province the situation is rather different from that in other parts of the dominion. As the minister knows, he gave us a grant for two hospitals there. These, of course, even when the buildings are completed, will not be quite sufficient to accommodate the veterans who are seeking hospitalization, and when the veterans have to go to the other provinces the inconvenience is great not only to themselves but also to their relatives at home. If from time to time we appeal to the Minister of Veterans Affairs in special cases, all I am asking for at the present time, without any criticism whatever, it that he will look into our isolated conditions there.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I thank my hon. friend and assure him that I hope to carry out an intention of long standing, to visit the beautiful island in the gulf in the near future, when I shall look into all these problems.

Mr. McLURE: You will be welcome.

448. Prosthetic services, $817,758.

Mr. HARKNESS: It used to be the situation, and I should like to know whether it still is, that veterans who were deaf were supplied with hearing aids. They had to take the particular hearing apparatus supplied, whether it suited them or not. The department used to maintain that it was good and they had to take it or do without any. Some of these men contended that while it might be suitable to others, it did not meet their needs. They want to have the regulation changed so that they can get the particular type of apparatus that suits them. Can the veteran now do so?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes. About eighteen months ago, we began to get this type of appliances for deaf veterans. At that time we supplied the Zenith appliance. We have a specialist from the deaf themselves, as in the case of the blind and the amputation cases, and if the specialist is not satisfied with the standard apparatus he can choose another.

Item agreed to.

452. Veterans insurance, $143,540.

Mr. HARKNESS: This vote is for $143,000 which appears to be for administration, having nothing to do with any losses there may be by reason of premiums being small. How many policies are in force and what are the amounts? This is a fair-sized item, and I have been wondering to what extent the veterans have taken advantage of the insurance clause, and how many policies have been actually issued.

Mr. TUCKER: Business as of June 30, total number of policies under veterans insurance, 6,599; total amount, $19,693,000.

Mr. HARKNESS: Well, 6,599 policies would not seem to be very many in connection with this item of $143,000 for administration. One aspect of this division about which I am curious is advertising and publicity, $50,000.

What form does that advertising take and what good does it do? Is it necessary? I have seen none of this advertising and, as a veteran, I should like to know in what form it was put out, whom it was sent to, and the details along that line. I doubt whether it is a necessary expenditure.

Mr. TUCKER: For the most part it has taken the form of information booklets that were put out to all the troops and issued from time to time. With further reference to veterans insurance, the number of policies, as I have said, was 6,599; 84 declined, 108 withdrawn, 741 pending, actual business in force, 5,666, and the total amount, $16,705,000. That is at June 30 last. The advertising largely took the form of issuing pamphlets, giving tables of rates and so on.

Mr. HARKNESS: How many pamphlets were put out and to whom did they go? I did not get one. It happened to be a subject that I was interested in because I considered taking a policy.

Mr. TUCKER: They are made available to everyone from the service and there are inquiries coming in all the time.

Mr. HARKNESS: How many were put out?

Mr. TUCKER: We have not the exact figures but we will get them and furnish them.

Mr. McKAY: This item is one we can definitely commend the department for instituting. Does the government handle all these policies themselves as straight government policies, or are any policies underwritten by the ordinary companies?

Mr. TUCKER: They are our policies.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—

453. European war pensions—world war I, $37,500,000.

Mr. FULTON: This is the first item dealing with pensions, and I wish to raise the question of making available to pensioners some extra payment in recognition of the increase in the cost of living. I have seen correspondence between the minister or officials of the department and those who raise the question, and the answer given by the department is that when the pensions were first instituted they were found to be not sufficient and a cost of living bonus was added thereto between the years 1919 and 1925. In 1925, although I am not quite certain of the year, this cost of living bonus was incorporated in the pension itself, and the answer is given that there is already an increase in the basic rates to take care of the increased cost of living. I do not think that is strictly accurate, because it must be admitted that the cost of living has recently increased over the period before the war, and in the case of civil service salaries that increase has recently been recognized in the form of cost of living bonus which is now incorporated in the civil servant's salary. In the same way these pensioners feel that they should have a cost of living bonus. In their case it is more important than in the case of civil servants or anyone who is not a pensioner. The reason is that a pensioner, because of his disability, is less able to increase his earnings to take care of the increase in the cost of living. He is getting a pension because he is disabled, and because he is disabled he cannot go out and get extra work or look for a new job at higher wages. So that many of these men are finding themselves in actual hardship because of the increased cost of living. I know the Canadian Legion has brought this matter to the attention of the department, and I should like to know the attitude the minister takes.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend is making himself thoroughly popular, of course, and I am going to make myself thoroughly unpopular in my reply. In 1919 a bonus of twenty per cent was authorized for the basic rate of pension then in force, $600 per annum, bringing the rate of pension for total disability to $720 per annum. The cost of living index was then 126·5. In 1920 the bonus was increased to fifty per cent, making the rate of pension for total disability $900 per annum. The cost of living index was then 145·4. This rate remained in effect until 1925, when the bonus was incorporated into the rate of pension, which has remained the same ever since, namely $900. The cost of living index in 1925 had been reduced to 119·8. According to the latest available information, the cost of living index as at July 1, 1946, was 125·1 as against 145·4 in 1920.

Mr. BROOKS: In 1920 did they have the same basic year they had in 1946?

Mr. MACKENZIE: These varying rates in the cost of living index are supplied by the bureau of statistics from year to year. I have given several years; I mentioned 1919, 1920, 1925 and then 1946.

Mr. BROOKS: But may I ask what is the basic year for the 1920 figure?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The bonus was increased to fifty per cent, making the rate of pension $900 per annum. The cost of living index was then 145·4.

Mr. FULTON: But when we are discussing the basic rate of $900 per annum, it should be made clear that this amount, which is $75 a month, is the maximum pension; that is to say, the pension for total disability. A man who is 100 per cent disabled gets $75 a month.

Mr. MACKENZIE: A single man.

Mr. FULTON: Yes. I do not think this thing should be looked at from the point of view of—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Of course, if he is totally disabled he may have some allowance for helplessness as well.

Mr. FULTON: Yes, if he requires a full-time nurse. The point is that the pension for 100 per cent disability is $75 a month. I do not think this thing should be looked at from the point of view of whether we are going to make ourselves good fellows or bad fellows, or popular or unpopular. If the minister thinks I am doing this to make myself popular I can only say the government must have added the cost of living bonus to the salaries of civil servants in order to make itself popular.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am informed by my colleague that the cost of living basic index is based upon 1913.

Mr. FULTON: That is not relevant to what I am saying at the moment. I think this matter should be looked at from the point of view of whether or not a man can support himself on the scale of pension he now receives. I do not think it can be said that $75 a month is over-generous for a man who is 100 per cent disabled. The point I was making was that if the cost of living goes up, these disabled men suffer more than a person who is not disabled, because by reason of their disability they are less able to make casual earnings to take care of the increased cost of living. The minister in his answer has referred to the points which I said had already been raised in reply to the representations from the legion, and I take it that is the final decision, that there will be no increase to offset the higher cost of living?

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is nothing final in the mysterious processes of government.

Mr. CHURCH: I want to ask whether any money is provided under this item for imperials. Some of these men have been living here for thirty years. When the first great war broke out they went overseas and enlisted of their own volition, though they were Canadians then and have been ever since. I should like to see some provision made for hospital treatment for themselves and their families, and as to rate of exchange in pay. Some of them are in very bad condition; it is almost pitiable to see them. Here we are spending all these millions; and the people who went to fight in the first war, even though they were imperials and even though many of them have been living in Canada for forty years, get nothing.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Again being unpopular, I must abide by the principle I have always maintained, that unless these imperials were domiciled in Canada before they served with the imperial or other forces, they should not have precedence over Canadians who were born in this country and who do not get these benefits. We have quite a number of Canadians who went to England but through no fault of their own were not able to get to France; that was during the first war. Unless they are pensioners they do not qualify for the war veterans' allowance; and I think this committee must deal with them and give them recognition before any others who come from any other country, no matter how gallantly they have served the empire, are given these benefits which our own Canadians do not get. I have taken that stand consistently, and as long as I am head of this department I intend to abide by it. I realize it is not popular, but I think it is right.

Mr. CHURCH: If they had deserted they would have got a gold watch and an illuminated address from this parliament.

Mr. MacNICOL: In the riding of Davenport we have quite a number who, I suppose, would come under the heading of imperial soldiers; they were soldiers before they came here prior to 1914, and lived in that riding for four or five years.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Then they were domiciled here and they are protected.

Mr. MacNICOL: But when the war broke out they went to England and enlisted.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are protected.

Mr. MacNICOL: As long as they were living here before the war?

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are treated the same as Canadian if they were domiciled here in 1914, before going to war. They are protected.

Mr. MacNICOL: Even if they served in the imperial forces?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, absolutely; or in the allied forces of His Majesty.

Mr. HERRIDGE: As the minister no doubt knows, a new type of cheque is being issued to pensioners, made of a sort of semi-cardboard, which is quite stiff and which bears a notice saying, "Do not fold." This means it is not possible for a man to put the cheque in his pocketbook. I have had a number of complaints in this connection, and I should like to ask the minister whether these complaints are general, to his knowledge.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am glad to hear that complaint from my hon. friend. I understand the cheque in question is not issued by the Canadian pension commission but by the treasury as such.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry? Carried. Item 454. Carried. Item 455. Carried.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, you are calling these items after six o'clock.

Mr. BROOKS: They are not carried; it is after six o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN: It is just six o'clock. I was so interested in having the items carried that I neglected to look at the clock.

Mr. MacNICOL: The last one carried is 453.

The CHAIRMAN: I should like to make it clear that after eight o'clock we shall start with item 456. Is that agreed?

Mr. McKAY: No; 455.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well; at eight o'clock we shall start with item 455.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—
455. Unemployment assistance, $100,000.

Mr. McKAY: Is this what we normally call out-of-work benefits?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. McKAY: If not, will the minister explain the item, and also indicate the number who received assistance last year, and to date this year?

Mr. MACKENZIE: This has nothing to do with out-of-work benefits. This is an old vote which, if my memory is correct, was established in 1932 to meet unemployment conditions prevailing at that time in connection with those in the various branches of the department across Canada who needed assistance. It was our hope that it would be abolished, but unfortunately we have not yet been able to have it abolished, with the result that, to a certain extent, it still exists.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. CHURCH: Does it now include any amount for unemployed soldiers? I notice that the mayor and board of control of Toronto have been complaining about the large number of soldiers there out of work.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is definitely designed for unemployed pensioners, and only for unemployed pensioners.

Mr. CHURCH: They say unemployment among them will be worse next winter.

Item agreed to.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—
456. Hospital and other allowances—world war I, $750,000.

Mr. McKAY: Why is there an increase in this item? It would seem to stand to reason that there would be fewer veterans qualifying now than there were a year ago.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am informed that there is a gradual increase, and that this is to be expected on account of the age of a number of the pensioners from world war I receiving treatment in our hospitals.

Mr. McKAY: They would all be cases of pensioners?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. BROOKS: I should like at this point to refer to Mr. Walter Callow in Camp Hill hospital, Nova Scotia. I should imagine the minister has received some communication from him. This man has been absolutely crippled, and is blind; they call him the stone man. He cannot move. But, as I remember, through his efforts some thousands of cigarettes were obtained for soldiers overseas.

Mr. ISNOR: Millions.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Hundreds of thousands, probably millions.

Mr. BROOKS: Mr. Callow has designed a carrier for wheel chairs for the purpose of taking crippled soldiers to sports events. Has the department in any way encouraged him in this matter? The other day I noticed in a United States paper an article which said that they were designing carriers to take their helpless patients to such events. I was wondering whether our department had considered Mr. Callow's suggestion.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I believe I know Mr. Callow as well as most people do, and I know he has been doing marvellous work for the last twenty or twenty-five years. However, those who are in charge of the paraplegic curative treatment do not consider the chair he has designed to be the most effective.

Mr. BROOKS: It is a carrier, not a chair.

Mr. MACKENZIE: What is required is a chair which can be placed in an automobile. Although they are most grateful to him for the work he has done, they do not at the present time recommend the design he has submitted.

Mr. BROOKS: I do not know that Mr. Callow has asked the government to assist. He has been seeking private donations, I believe; whether he has made application to the government for assistance, I cannot say.

Mr. MACKENZIE: None.

Mr. ISNOR: I am glad the hon. member for Royal has mentioned Mr. Callow. On more than one occasion I have gone on record as advocating every possible assistance to him. I believe, too, that the hon. member for Peel has added his word to those of other hon. members. I sincerely trust that the minister will give every possible consideration to this veteran, not only because of his physical condition, but because of the splendid effort he put forth during the recent war to help make easier the lives of those who, like him, have been disabled. In addition, he performed splendid work by providing cigarettes by the millions for those overseas.

I would suggest that we could provide him with more suitable quarters at Camp Hill. I know the minister has had this matter under his personal supervision, and has been sympathetic toward it. May I point out that there is an office at present not occupied which this veteran could use to further the cause which he has supported.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I shall be glad to take that into my personal consideration at once. As regards the design which has been submitted, the official finding of the department—rightly or wrongly—is that we require folding, collapsible chairs, which will go into the ordinary motor car. His design is somewhat different, but the matter is worthy of further consideration.

Mr. TUSTIN: Perhaps I should have asked on an earlier item the question I am about to ask. However, I would point out that I have received letters, mostly from veterans of world war I, who are receiving partial pensions, requesting that they be given a cost of living allowance. I could bring a number of cases to the minister's attention. I might refer to one case of a man, the father of four or five children, who is receiving a thirty per cent disability pension and who is unable to work for more than twenty-five per cent of the time.

Pensioners in that position are having a difficult time to get along these days, and in view of the fact that almost every other department is receiving a cost of living bonus, I was wondering if the minister had given consideration to extending that cost of living bonus to pensioners in world wars I and II.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is difficult to give a decisive answer on a question such as has been asked by the hon. member. If the pension is inadequate, the pensioner can apply for a war veterans allowance, and thereby augment the assessment to meet living conditions.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I should like to add to what has been said by the hon. member for Royal and the senior hon. member for Halifax with respect to Mr. Walter Callow. Mr. Callow comes from my constituency of Cumberland and has been hospitalized since the last war. I believe that he has suffered as greatly as anyone who came out of that war. Those who have had contact with Mr. Callow's work know he has done wonderful things since the last war, and especially during the period of this war. Not only has he assisted in securing funds for cigarettes, but he has suggested a major government policy with respect to hospitalization. He proposes that more attention should be given to improving the equipment in local hospitals as opposed to concentrating on the larger hospitals in cities such as Halifax, Montreal, Toronto and other places. He feels that the returned men would get better attention and be much happier if they were accommodated in the smaller hospitals rather than all being concentrated in the larger institutions. I am very much in sympathy with the policy proposed by Mr. Callow, and I hope that the minister will give it more attention from now on and carry it out, if at all possible. It would be a good thing, not only for the returned men but for the smaller hospitals which are struggling to carry on with their very necessary operations.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I shall be very happy to look into the matter.

Item agreed to.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—

457. Gallantry awards, $60,000.

Mr. McKAY: What are the benefits given with these different awards?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The total awards granted were 2,225, and the details follow:

	Deceased	Discharged	Promoted since award	Awaiting Promotion or discharge	Authorized as senior N.C.O.	Total
V.C.	2	2	....	....	....	4

Mr. McKAY: I appreciate that information, but it does not answer my question. I wanted to know what decorations carry cash awards and what amounts are granted.

Mr. TUCKER: First, there is the Victoria Cross which carries a $50 per annum award from the date of the act of gallantry for which the award was granted, plus $25 for each bar. This is paid to all ranks below commissioned rank. This may be increased to $375 per annum if the recipient, through age and infirmity or from causes beyond his control, is unable to earn a livelihood. The gratuities paid in the other decorations are as follows:

D.F.C.	$100
D.C.M.	100
D.F.M.	100
C.G.M.	100
M.M.	100
D.S.M.	100

These are not payable if the recipient is of commissioned rank. If the recipient is awarded a disability pension he receives 12½ cents a day in lieu of gratuity.

Mr. McKAY: The only decoration that carries a yearly benefit is the Victoria Cross?

Mr. TUCKER: That is correct.

Item agreed to.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—
458. Widows' compassionate allowances—world war I, $1,800,000.

Mr. KNOWLES: I realize that this matter has been discussed this year both in the committee on veterans affairs and also when the bill amending the War Veterans Allowances Act was before the house, and I suppose we have obtained from the government about all that we can hope for this year. However, I feel that this item should not be allowed to pass without some of us stating again to the minister and to the government that we hope next year the amounts paid under these allowances will be raised to at least $40 per month. I hope the minister will continue to give his sympathetic consideration—and I hope it will produce results—the other requests made by and on behalf of these widows. Without excluding the others, I refer particularly to hospitalization because that is one thing they are vitally concerned about. I urge that something be done about this matter at an early day.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I do not usually agree with my hon. friend, but I would point out that this vote is for $1,800,000, and it was all done in the last year largely, if I may say so, through the advocacy of the hon. member for Davenport, of the hon. member who has just spoken and, of course, because of the sympathy and generosity of this house.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the annual payment per month?

Mr. KNOWLES: $31.40 per month; try to live on that.

May I ask again if consideration is being given to the question of hospitalization?

Mr. MACKENZIE: At the present time and for some time to come we shall require all our hospital space for the men who have been fighting. Until the peak of this need for treatment goes down, we cannot give any consideration to providing treatment for anybody else.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am afraid the minister does not understand what these women are asking for. Many of these women are of an age when they have to be taken into hospitals, not those administered by the department but into civilian hospitals. The problem is one of allowances to cover expenses, not one of providing space in a departmental hospital.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I may be making myself thoroughly unpopular this evening, but I say I am against that until the soldiers themselves are completely looked after.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I do not know whether the minister at any time during the discussion has given the committee a statement of the government's policy with respect to widows of non-pensionable war veterans and, if he has not, I should like to have this. Many widows of veterans of the last war are in needy circumstances.

Mr. MACKENZIE: In the first place, certain widows are entitled to pensions as a matter of right. A year ago this house in its wisdom gave attention to what we call non-pensionable widows, and we are providing $1,800,000 in the present estimates for them. At the risk of being criticized, we say that we have been pretty generous.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not think the minister should be criticized.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I do not think we can say we have been pretty generous. I have in mind a widow of a veteran who asked to go overseas during the last war but who was kept here. This man finally died as the result of injuries received. This widow has done everything in her power to raise her family and take care of herself. She is highly qualified for various kinds of work, but she is having the greatest difficulty in finding any work to do. I do not know that this committee can feel that it has been generous to the veterans of the last war so long as we leave widows of that kind to suffer around the country. I do not look upon ourselves as being generous at all. Of course there are those who say the government has no responsibility to them. But I think the country has, and that is why I am appealing to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I was impressed, when this war opened, with the statement that was made in several places. I believe it was made first by a prominent official in New Zealand and then it was repeated by several officials in Canada, that no one should be any worse off because he went to war and no one should be any better off because he did not go to war. I think that is a pretty sound principle. A woman in this position is certainly worse off because her husband went to war, and I shall not feel happy about the matter until some policy is laid down whereby we can give more assistance to widows of this type than we are giving.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not think we should let this item pass without saying a word on behalf of the minister. From the very beginning I supported this movement to give non-pensioned widows a pension which they richly deserve, and from the very beginning the minister has been sympathetic at all times to pensioning non-pensioned widows. If he had been opposed to it, we never would have got very far in our efforts for these widows, and so far as I am concerned I feel disposed to thank the minister on behalf of those I am associated with for having gone as far as he has. But, of course, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I hope he will go farther by and by.

Item agreed to.

Payments to or for veterans and dependents—

461. Pensions, North West rebellion, 1885 and general, $15,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: How many of these pensioners are there?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Including the militia service pension and the additional allowance which this house has made in the last couple of years, there are 12,249.

Mr. COCKERAM: There are 12,249 pensioners of the North West rebellion?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is militia pensions, plus our pensions.

Mr. CHURCH: I understood, when I was before the committee, that something would be done for the veterans who served in the North West rebellion in 1885. I understood that there was going to be a real clean-up this year of our debt to all these veterans who have served their country. They were the pioneers and predecessors of the present militia. They came from Halifax and the midland counties and from all over Ontario and the Ottawa district and the 90th of Winnipeg, and they have never got a cent except under the small amendment that was made last year. Last year's vote of $16,000 has now been cut down to $15,000 for "Pensions, North West rebellion, 1885 and general." I should like to know what is the distinction between the North West field force and "general". These veterans have been granted practically nothing, and it would be almost better to strike out the item than to continue the means test. I admit that an order in council was passed last session providing a very small sum of money for these veterans. They marched in the depths of winter, when it was thirty and forty degrees below zero, across the country around lake Superior before the Canadian Pacific railway was completed. They came from Halifax, the maritimes, Ontario, Winnipeg, to the defence of the prairie provinces and they were responsible for this country not being dislocated. They have been forgotten from 1885 down to to-day, except for a small grant of land hardly any of them ever see. A very small vote was put in the estimates last year, and I give the minister great credit for that, but the way it was applied it did not mean very much, if anything. It would have been far better to strike it out altogether than to apply the means test to these people. The test is well named. They should have received the same allowance as the South African veterans got as a right, not as charity. I have been told the reason why they were not treated the same. I do not like to say what the reason is, but I have been told some of the reasons.

I pleaded with the select committee for these veterans, and I want to give credit to that committee, which included members from all sides of the house, for the various bills as to veterans which they recommended to the house. That committee forgot about party politics in the nine bills and they seem to have forgotten all about the North West rebellion. There is no reference to it in the eight or nine veterans bills that passed this house. Why are these men discriminated against?

I met the widow of one of these veterans the other day. She is getting about $29 a month in old age pension. Under this vote she would have been entitled to $39. She wrote me about the matter and I told her to stick to the old age pension since they were to deduct from the $39 the $29 old age receipts. The result was that she got nothing for 1885. Her husband was one of the finest members of the press in Canada.

It is no credit to our country so to forgot these veterans and to leave these people to the municipalities. That is where they are left, and they get put out of their homes. I know one veteran who lost his books, his desk, his household goods and everything. His house was sold and he never got a nickel. These men had a reunion in June, 1945, on the anniversary of their enlistment. It is a mean way for parliament to treat these men when we are voting $51,000,000 on these various other items for veterans and dependents. I am surprised that members from the other provinces of Canada do not rise and speak on behalf of these veterans. Many of them came from Halifax in the maritime provinces, and they were known as Haligonians. Many of these men are living to-day and they are not in good circumstances. Others came from the other provinces. We owe a debt of gratitude which is long overdue to these people who did so much for the prairie provinces in 1885 before the Canadian Pacifc railway was completed. They should have more supporters than they have in this house when this item is called. The hon. member for Peel has been a very warm friend of these men. He has veterans of the North West rebellion in his riding, as have the Toronto members. But outside of him, the hon. member for Davenport and the hon. member for York South, we hear little from other members in favour of these veterans. The means test is well named. It is mean to use the veterans of this country in this way. They are the men who built up the militia in Canada from 1885 on—the old Grenadiers, the Queen's Own, the Body Guard, commanded by Colonel Denison, the Midland Battalion. Tributes and assistance for these men are long overdue. They were the very back-bone of our present militia, and their sons and grandsons served in the South African war and the two great wars.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I must take emphatic exception to my hon. friend's remarks in regard to these old veterans. I have found out that 114 veterans, as a result of what this house did during the last two years, are drawing $54,000, and forty widows are drawing $13,000. In regard to the regulations for the veterans allowance, they are exactly the same for them as they are for those who fought in the first great war. So that I do not think we have been unkind. The total annual obligation arising from what we did here last year is $66,877.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not going to talk about the Riel rebellion. There are two matters to which I was going to refer under pensions. Unfortunately I was in the industrial relations committee and did not get the chance, so that I should like to say a word on them here.

The first is the matter which I discussed with the pension committee back in 1940. It has reference to a woman divorcing her husband in the United States; he resides in Canada. In this case, after the man was divorced in the United States he re-married in Canada, supposing that he had been legally divorced. He obtained a licence and was married in a church. The woman lived with him for twenty-six years. He died last year. Despite the fact that she went through all the legal machinery provided in Canada, including a church wedding, in marrying this man, the Pension Act is such that it is held that she was not legally married to this man. I raised the matter on several occasions. I discussed it with the former Minister of Justice, the late Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, back in 1940 and 1941. He said it might necessitate a change in the divorce laws of Canada and, the war then being on, they did not want to disturb the existing machinery. At this session in the veterans affairs committee the matter was discussed briefly, and I thought that, where there were extenuating circumstances such as I have just described, the commission would be given sufficient latitude to adjudicate a matter of that kind. So I wrote the chairman of the commission and he searched the records, and concluded that no latitude was given the commission. That case still stands in abeyance. I was wondering whether the minister could not devise some ways and means of qualifying that widow for a pension. The pensioner with whom she lived had a seventy-five per cent disability. Now that he is dead, she is left at the mercy of the world.

Mr. TUCKER: Is the hon. member referring to the Adams or the Mackenzie case?

Mr. GILLIS: The Adams case. The Mackenzie case is only brief; it has to do with an old soldier who, having remarried in 1944, finds that he can not include his wife in the pension. He is practically living on her. Is there anything we can do about that?

Mr. TUCKER: First of all, in regard to the Mackenzie case, as the committee will remember, this question of a deadline was thoroughly discussed in the pension committee and it was decided, and affirmed by this house, that in the case of a marriage after the first of May, 1944, no pension could be given with respect to that wife or widow; however, if the marriage took place before that, and children were born after that deadline, a pension should be paid in respect of them. At the present time there is no way in which Mr. Mackenzie can get a pension in respect of his wife, or his widow if he should unfortunately pass away.

Mr. GILLIS: I merely used that case as an illustration. It is a general problem.

Mr. TUCKER: Of course, as the law stands at present, the commission is bound by that. The Adams case is the case where this gentleman was domiciled in Canada, and was married; his wife abandoned him and went to the United States and divorced him in the state of Vermont, I understand, on grounds which would not be recognized as valid for a divorce in Canada. So the situation is this, that in the first place the divorce was not valid in Canada because the divorce at that time had to be based on the domicile of the husband, and if the woman had tried to get the divorce in Canada she could not have got it because there were not grounds. Then this gentleman married somebody else after his wife had divorced him. At any time he could have got a divorce in Canada on the basis of what his wife had done, but he did not choose to do it, so that his marriage was not valid in Canada.

Mr. GILLIS: Well, why was he not arrested for bigamy? He lived for twenty-six years with that woman.

Mr. TUCKER: That, of course, is another question; it is a matter of the criminal code. Nevertheless, the marriage was not valid. The committee may be interested to know why we adhere to that view. We do so because, if we permitted people to go away and get divorces which are not valid in Canada, and come back to Canada, we might have disputes in respect of several wives. The question is, which wife would you recognize, unless you go by the law of Canada?

Mr. GRAYDON: Are you not getting into a bit of trouble here?

Mr. TUCKER: No, I am not. I am being very careful, and trying to point out why the law is not changed. Generally it is the husband who leaves and goes to the United States and gets a divorce which is not valid in Canada; then he comes back to Canada and marries here. Of course, under Canadian law his first wife is his lawful wife; but if you decided, regardless of the law of Canada, that you would pay a pension with respect to the second wife, you would have the first wife and perhaps her children left in a difficult position. So we felt that the only safe way to go is by the law of Canada as regards whom our law recognizes as his wife and children. No doubt it leads to difficult cases, which we recognized in the committee, and it is unfortunate that there is not some way of taking care of these cases where there is good faith, where the woman marries thinking she is going through a valid marriage, for, of course, it makes it very difficult. I hope that some way will be found to take care of these real good faith cases without having to enter into the more difficult field of complicated matrimonial relations.

Mr. GILLIS: I agree with the parliamentary assistant as to his general premise; but in the Adams case I do not think it is applicable, because, to begin with, Adams' wife deserted him while he was overseas, and when he came back she was in the United States and had secured a divorce. He was a rank and file soldier, and not knowing all the legal machinery of the country he assumed he was single. He secured a licence from the government agency.

Mr. MacNICOL: Of what province?

Mr. GILLIS: Nova Scotia. He went to a church and he was married as legally as he could be. As to his securing a Canadian divorce on the ground that his first wife had deserted him and committed misconduct through her other marriage, the financial obligation enters the picture. He would require money; he would have to serve papers on her in the United States. That was probed on several occasions, but financially he could not undertake that obligation, so that the matter slid along. I am not concerned about him; he has gone to the great beyond, but he leaves behind him a woman with whom he lived for twenty-six years.

Mr. GRANT: Any children?

Mr. GILLIS: No.

Mr. GRANT: Well, then, she is all right.

Mr. GILLIS: She is at an age to-day when she is something like ourselves, ornamental but not very useful. I am now making this suggestion to the minister, and perhaps this is the only case of the kind in Canada. I am reasonably sure that if the minister, the parliamentary assistant and the pension chairman got their heads together they could devise ways and means of granting a pension to this widow. I agree with the hon. member for Rosthern that you have to protect the people of the country against wholesale divorces and so on, but there is absolutely no doubt that there are extenuating circumstances in this case. Even if the minister would pass an order in council quietly—

An hon. MEMBER: Can that be done?

Mr. GILLIS: Even if he did that, and said that in cases such as the Adams case, taking that as a base—and I am giving the chairman of the commission administrative latitude if certain circumstances prevail—a pension will be granted, it would fix the thing up. I shall be keeping in touch with this widow because I certainly hope that the minister will do as I suggest.

Mr. MacNICOL: Under what item does the vote come for the South African veterans?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Under war veterans allowances.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: To come back to item 461, pensions in connection with the North West rebellion, I was interested in the minister's remarks with regard to the beneficent way in which the government had treated these chaps.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I did not use that word.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Well, the minister implied that he had been very generous, that the department had spent a great deal of money. One of these chaps happens to live in my own town. I know him quite well, and for some time I followed the discussion with regard to the efforts that have been made by those concerned to get a pension for their service in the North West rebellion. That is exactly sixty-one years ago, and most of these chaps are over the age limit. They are now, to use the expression of my hon. friend the member for Cape Breton South, merely ornamental.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I was not here then.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But the minister was here later on, administering the department when he could give a pension.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And I got it for them.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: When did it go through?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Two years ago.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I remember the last day of the session when the minister rose in his place and announced with great gusto the fact that at last a regulation had been passed granting these noble veterans of 1885 a splendid pension to take care of them for the rest of their days.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I never used the words "splendid pension". That is only C.C.F. exaggeration.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: On arriving back home, I met this chap and I said to him, "You will be pleased to know that the Liberal government has seen fit to grant you people a pension for your services in 1885". He replied, "You know, they have been very good to me because I got that long envelope containing an intimation that they were going to give me a pension for my services in 1885; but, strange to say, I also received notification at the same time that my old age pension was being cut off because I was getting money from another source".

Mr. MACKENZIE: Who cut it off—the provincial government, the C.C.F.?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The minister's own regulations did. If it is intended that these men shall get some special benefit, if the minister wishes to try to help them, he can pass regulations, or have them passed, to provide that the miserable pittance they receive shall not be assessable as income.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I interrupt without being unkind? The treatment they have received is exactly the same as that received by the 24,000 battle veterans of the first great war.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But they were not getting old age pensions.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are all treated in the same way.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Yes, but the others did not fall within the category of old age pensioners. It meant absolutely nothing to these men.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is no difference in treatment.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is of no use at all to these men. The veteran of the first great war is not receiving an old age pension. This man at one time was receiving an old age pension and then is given a pension in recognition of services rendered in 1885, but if he accepts the one he has to do without the other.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is $30 a month now, whereas before it was $20.

Mr. TUCKER: It is wrong to say that there is no advantage under the war veterans allowances. If he is a married man and even if his wife is not over 70 years of age, under this legislation he can get $730. He is permitted to have an income above that of $250, without affecting the allowance—

Mr. CASTLEDEN: $730?

Mr. TUCKER: Yes, and he he can get an income of $250 above that without affecting the allowance. He is permitted casual earnings of $125, an income from investments of $25 a year, and he is permitted to own a home worth $4,000, without affecting the war veterans allowance. That is much better than old age pension, as the hon. member knows, and when he says it is not an advantage he is saying something that is not correct.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It made no difference to this man.

Mr. TUCKER: In the case of a single man, he can get $365 a year. He is permitted to have earnings of $125 above that, casual earnings of $125; he is permitted to have $25 a year from investments and a home worth $4,000.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: If he can earn it at the age of eighty-one.

Mr. TUCKER: I am saying that it is better than an old age pension and many people prefer to have the allowance rather than the old age pension. I do not think, therefore, that it can be said that the people who worked to get this advantage—and they knew what the terms were under which it would be paid—did not get something of an advantage, to the northwest field force veteran. I do not think it is fair to say that nothing was obtained for them.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It certainly is wrong for the minister to claim that it was a piece of generosity. In this case it meant nothing.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Give us the concrete details of that case.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Give it to the committee now.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The name is Caldwell.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I do not want the name. Give the committee the particulars of the allowances which that man had before and the allowance he received as a result of what the house did two years ago. I want the amount right now, because it is not true.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I gave you the name.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I do not want the name but I do want the particulars. If my hon. friend makes a statement on the floor of the house, that we did not increase that man's allowances, I want to know what he was receiving previously under the old age pension, which was cancelled, and what he received through the act of this parliament.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I shall be glad to give it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I want it now.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: You have the case.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No; I want it now.

Mr. GILLIS: I think I understand the hon. member for Yorkton quite well. It works the same in all these cases.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. GILLIS: Listen—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

An hon. MEMBER: A new leader.

Mr. GILLIS: Not at all.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I thought you were working for the widows.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has the floor.

Mr. GILLIS: This sounds like the industrial relations committee where, the moment you say something that may settle the strike, they all begin to shout about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Give us the facts.

Mr. GILLIS: The minister knows that what was given the North West rebellion people was a pension of $10 a month. These fellows are old; you have to be old to get the old age pension. He receives in any province in Canada $20 a month old age pension after he passes seventy years of age. This is the condition of these old heroes who stormed lake Superior, and I am giving the government credit for what it has done, because the matter was neglected for sixty years under similar governments. The present government decided to do something about the matter, and granted a pension of $30 a month to the old veterans of the North West rebellion. To the committee which came to that decision I give full credit; but immediately that happened the provincial government cut off the $20 a month old age pension, so that these old gentlemen benefited to the extent of $10 a month. That is the case in every province of Canada. It not only applies to pensioners of that class; it applies also to those under war veterans allowances, and it applied to the soldier in the service who made an assignment to his old father and mother. Immediately the assignment was made, the $20 was cut off.

Mr. GRANT: No.

Mr. GILLIS: Oh, yes. I could give you case after case of that, where the minute the pension was granted by the federal government for a son who was killed overseas, the old age pension was discontinued. That is something we shall have to iron out in this house some time.

Mr. GRANT: But not in the case of an assignment. It may be so in the case of a pension.

Mr. GILLIS: It was done in connection with pay and allowances, too, all over the shop. I had case after case; some I straightened out and some I could not. That is the long and short of the story. Through this government we granted them $30 a month; the provincial governments cut off $20, and they benefited to the extent of $10. I hope the veterans affairs committee will reconvene next session so that we may straighten out the provincial government in that regard.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous grants—

462. Last post fund, $100,000.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I have just a couple of questions in connection with this last post fund. Does the government accept any responsibility for the supervision of this fund? If so, does it appoint any of the officers? If so, what portion of this amount is spent in salaries?

Mr. MACKENZIE: We contribute $8,500 toward the cost of administration, and all the accounts are audited by the auditor general of Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: How much is allowed in payment of a funeral?

[Mr. Gillis.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: $115.

Mr. MacNICOL: And that covers what?

Mr. MACKENZIE: During the last two years we have had a reorganization of the burial services in Canada. We have a director of military cemeteries who works together with the last post fund, the Canadian Legion and other military organizations. We are trying to assure sufficient accommodation. Last year we took over Beechwood cemetery here in Ottawa, and all across Canada we are trying to see that the accommodation is adequate and to make burials as reasonable as possible in regard to cost for those whose relatives are not possessed of substantial means.

Item agreed to.

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

464. Administration of soldier settlement, British family settlement, general land settlement and Veterans' Land Act, including engineering and other investigational planning and subdivision expenses that do not add tangible value to real property, $5,443,400.

Mr. LENNARD: I should like to refer briefly to a condition which exists in the Hamilton area and, I believe, is general throughout Ontario, in connection with the transfer of properties. I understand that all the legal work in connection with the transfer of property is being done by one very learned gentleman, Mr. W. C. Thomson, K.C., of Toronto, and that a serious bottleneck exists at the moment, with the result that veterans have to wait for months before they get the transfer of these properties. Recently an article appeared in the Hamilton Spectator relating to this matter, and I should like to read part of it:

> The bottleneck has become so choked that representations have been made to officials at Ottawa protesting "extended delays" . . .

Further on it says:

> Registry office here is admitted to be working long hours at top speed to get these abstracts out so that the transfers may be completed. However, the criticism is that local solicitors could make the searches, establish clear title to a property, and save the veteran weeks or even months of time in settling on his land.

And finally the article states:

> Local lawyers were unanimous that the fault was not in Hamilton but at Toronto or officialdom at Ottawa.
> Wilfred R. Hobson, K.C., said the delays were "becoming worse." Arthur Treleaven said that he had written three letters to the Toronto office since June 7, and had not received an answer.

In conclusion, may I say that this criticism is not in any sense political, because the first named learned gentleman is a Conservative, while the last named is a member of an honoured Liberal family in the city of Hamilton.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend is not the first to bring this matter to my attention.

I think at least twenty of my colleagues, supporters of the government, have made exactly the same representations. There are no reflections whatsoever upon the ability or integrity of Mr. Thompson, the criticisms are that there is too much centralization and occasionally there may be some delay in the clearing of titles at local centres. The suggestion has been made that local legal gentlemen should clear these titles, and the matter is now receiving active consideration.

Mr. TUCKER: On August 1 last I promised the leader of the opposition that I would give him exact information with regard to the cost of the small holdings, and I think I should carry out that undertaking though the hon. gentleman is not in the house at the moment. The questions were: (a) how many of these houses will cost the state less than $6,000; (b) how many will cost the state more than $6,000; (c) what is the estimated average excess cost of the whole project over $6,000 each?

Contracts were let for the construction of a total of 2,706 houses on subdivision projects across the dominion, 2,440 on a cost plus fixed fee per unit basis and 266 on a firm bid per unit basis. To date a total of 1,175 houses have come under final review by the committee composed of the deputy minister of veterans affairs and the director under the Veterans' Land Act. Of the houses, 609 cost the state less than $6,000; the average cost of construction was $5,574. The other 566 houses cost the state more than $6,000; the average cost of construction was $6,394. The average net cost of the total unit inclusive of house, land and all services is $7,058.

With the permission of the committee, I should like to place on record a summarized statement of the net cost to the state of these 1,175 small holding units. They represent forty separate projects in six provinces. It is not considered practicable to give the estimated net cost of the remainder of the houses under construction with the desired degree of accuracy. The remainder of 1,531 houses are in various stages of construction, with many near completion. It is estimated that all houses will have been completed by October 31 of this year. On completion of the remainder of these projects it will be possible to place on record a table similar to that which I am now filing. The statement I wish to have permission to place on record gives an exact statement of the various projects, the number that cost under $6,000 and the cost of same, the number that cost over $6,000 and the cost of same, so that all this information may be available to members of the committee.

Something has been said about the rental, with the idea that these houses were costing the veterans far more than perhaps they should. I might give the committee some information on that, for such use as they may wish to make of it. Where the adjusted cost to the director is $4,500, after the veteran has paid his ten per cent and gets his conditional write-off, the monthly rate he has to pay for twenty-five years in order to retire that contract is $14.92. If the adjusted cost to the director is $5,000, after the veteran gets his conditional write-off and pays his ten per cent his monthly cost is $16.58. If the suggested cost to the director is $5,500, that house will cost $18.24 to the veteran. If the cost is $6,000, the cost to the veteran, after he has made his down payment, is $19.90. If it is $6,500, in the event he pays $600 down, and when he gets his additional write-off, the amount he must pay for a $6,500 house is $22.39. If it is a $7,000 house he pays $600 down, and then pays a monthly amount of $24.88. If it a $7,500 house he pays $600 down, again, and his monthly payment is $27.57.

Those are figures which I believe will meet any apprehension on the part of hon. members that veterans are being asked to make payments which are out of line with rental payments in connection with other projects throughout Canada.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I should like to ask some questions. But before asking the first one, I want to stick my neck out on a limb, and perhaps I have been doing it for a long time—

Mr. FULTON: It is out now.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The hon. member for Kamloops is young yet both in years and in experience. He has a great deal of ability behind him—but it is still a long way behind him. I have heard all this discussion in connection with what we can or cannot do for the war veterans of the Riel rebellion, and a few other rebellions which happened slightly before my time. We cannot do very much for them. But I am curious about this item of $5,000 for Colonel John T. Thompson. I believe that Colonel Thompson is the man who made inquiries about carpets, and other matters of economy. If I am wrong I would like to be corrected.

Through you, Mr. Chairman, and through the minister—and just bide your time—I want to know if this $5,000 vote, the item which the parliamentary assistant endeavoured to explain—

Mr. GRANT: An annuity.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I want to know whether this annuity of $5,000 can be paid to one individual, when we can only pay our veterans $30 a month as a war veterans allowance. That will hold Prince Edward Island for a little while!

Mr. GRANT: I was trying to help you out.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I do not need any help in this case. I am one who believes that credit has not been given as it should have been to the minister who comes from my province, and happens to be Minister of Veterans Affairs, for what he has done for the veterans of Canada. I am prepared to go back before my legion and any other legion and give that credit. But I am asking the minister at the same time to explain that $5,000 annuity to one Colonel Thompson. That is my first question.

My second question—and I will have to put these glasses on; I just paid $17 for them—affects soldier settlers. As I understand it, under the new act which was brought down, a man living in an outlying district is not eligible under the Veterans' Land Act for a house or home. I have an instance in Burnaby, in my own province, although I do not live in that area. I am giving the minister's officials plenty of time to look this up, Mr. Chairman, because I think they cannot answer it. But, as I understand the situation, a veteran in an area such as Burnaby—and I am instancing Burnaby or North Vancouver—is not eligible for a home, and I want to know why he is not.

The second question I wish to ask—

Mr. GRANT: The third.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: The third question—I am being helped a lot, and again I am taking plenty of time—is as to why homes now erected in Fraser Valley are not available for sale to veterans, and why veterans are not allowed to buy Japanese farms, homes or individual holdings in Fraser Valley, despite the fact that in the veterans affairs committee I was assured that these homes were available and would be made available for immediate sale to veterans.

I am definitely saying through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister, that these Japanese farms in Fraser Valley are not being made available. These former Japanese homes in Fraser Valley are not being made available for sale. The veterans in my constituency do not know where they stand to-day in so far as purchasing homes is concerned, either those built under this veterans scheme or old homes and old farms taken over from the Japanese. I also wish to point out through you, Mr. Chairman, that no price has yet been set on veterans homes in Fraser Valley, despite the fact that veterans were assured that these homes would not cost more than $4,800.

Again I would praise the minister and his assistant for the work they have done. But this government has made a mistake or has permitted a mistake to be made in connection with the cost of these homes. We must see that the veterans get them at a cost of $4,800, at which they expected to get them. That price was advertised in every paper in British Columbia. The statement was made on every platform in British Columbia in the last election—including the statement by the member for Fraser Valley—that these homes would be available at $4,800. The last figure I could get was anywhere from $5,800 to $6,400. When I ask for the actual cost I am told I can get an order for return—which will probably be returnable about six months or a year from now. That is not good enough, because neither the minister nor I might be here six months or a year from now, if they happen to have a by-election. I hope I shall be here.

I want to know and the veterans in my riding want to know when these homes will be available and what the actual cost will be. I was told that one reason the cost in British Columbia was higher was that we believe in paying reasonably decent wages in our province. I also asked at that time why lumber should cost more at Haney, where lumber is produced than it costs at Edmonton. I asked why cement should cost more in Fraser Valley, when it is produced in British Columbia, than it costs in Edmonton, Ottawa or elsewhere.

The minister has a lot of questions to answer; if he cannot answer them all immediately I hope he will keep a record of them. Perhaps he would answer by starting with Colonel Thompson and then work down the list. But I would ask particularly, if the minister has not sufficient staff to appraise these various homes and farm and houses, why he does not employ a greater staff in order that veterans from this war in Fraser Valley may acquire these homes and farms, settle on them, and become citizens of that part of Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend, as usual, has asked a most intriguing series of questions. In the first place, in regard to properties in Fraser Valley, we had a report yesterday that we expect within the next ten days to have a sale price established for all the homes which have been constructed in Fraser Valley.

Next, with reference to Japanese homes, ninety former Japanese properties have been already sold to veterans and the remainder will be made available as quickly as possible.

Next, with regard to Coloned John Thompson, he was chairman of the Canadian pension commission; when he retired, he was not entitled to superannuation allowance, and an amount was placed in the estimates, I believe of $5,000.

Then the hon. member asked about the Soldier Settlement Act. It is expected that that situation will be met in accordance with the wishes of my hon. friend.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I thank the minister for his answers. After six months of endeavour, I am hoping to go home next week and be able to tell the settlers in my riding that at last I have got a partial answer from the department. There are some 500 Japanese farms—

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Former Japanese farms.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: And they will always be former Japanese farms. The minister now says that ninety have been sold. I want to know, when veterans of Fraser Valley and other parts of Canada are desiring to acquire these former Japanese homes, why only ninety have been made available for sale. I want definite assurance from the minister that the remainder of approximately 500 farms will be made available immediately.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The greatest demand for these farms has been from veterans with no overseas service, and it is the considered policy of the department to give preference to those who have been overseas.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am not quarrelling with the minister's statement because I feel that overseas veterans should have the preference, but there are more than 500 farms in my district, and I should like to know how long the limitations will remain and when these farms will be made available for veteran volunteers, not zombies but men with service in Canada?

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is a submission now before the minister in regard to that matter.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I should like to say a few words with reference to the policy of administering the Veterans' Land Act. I brought this question up some time ago and it was partly discussed in the veterans committee. I am not bringing up this matter before the committee for the purpose of criticizing the government. The only motive I have in discussing this matter of veterans housing is to see that the veterans for whom I am speaking are given a square deal.

When this question first came up, the veterans in Calgary formed an association. Every one of the veterans for whom I am speaking has had overseas service. When they first met there was a lengthy discussion as to the procedure that should be followed in order to get the necessary repairs and adjustments made to their property. It was suggested to them by me that as little publicity as possible be given to this matter and that every available effort be made to go through the ordinary and proper channels to get the adjustments that were needed. The veterans were agreeable in that respect and they acted accordingly.

They interviewed everyone connected with the Veterans' Land Act in Calgary, and I think in Edmonton, but, I understand, with no results. Then, when the house opened I brought up the question here. The minister was acquainted with this problem before I brought it to the attention of the house. These men have done everything to have these things adjusted in the channels that were available to them before the matter was brought up here.

I am at a loss to know why the minister has seemed to be so hostile toward these adjustments. I can assure him that in regard to these houses I have never said anything that was not true. I have never exaggerated; in fact I hasten to say that I have never given as bad a picture as I might have had I gone into the matter more in detail. The question was brought up before the veterans affairs committee. Whether that committee could have gone into the study of the matter at greater length, I do not know because I was not a member of the committee. I should like to take this opportunity of referring to the proceedings of that committee for Monday, June 3, 1946. Mr. Murchison was the witness before the committee at that time, and he has this to say, as reported on page 769:

> I can say frankly to this committee that with few exceptions the reaction of the public and veterans to this programme has been good, but there are a few exceptions which illustrate a lack of understanding of the difficulties of home construction at the present time, in some places a decided lack of appreciation of what the administration is trying to do and a tendency here and there to unfairly criticize which, to say the least, does not encourage very much expansion of building. I suggest to this committee there are plenty of places in Canada where our efforts thus far are fully appreciated and where there is still ample demand to fully absorb all the materials available for new construction. We have fortunately only a few samples of criticism of the type I referred to. Some of it developed in Calgary.

That was not answering my charge. I contend that on no occasion has Mr. Murchison ever given one instance where the things that I said in this house were not true. In fact, in my opinion Mr. Murchison did not have the information or, if he did, he did not reveal it to the committee. As I pointed out in the beginning, I have nothing to gain by this. I am not even seeking votes. It is not even in my constituency. The only thing I am concerned about is to see that proper treatment is meted out to these veterans who have served their country so well. Surely that is not asking too much. When Mr. Murchison makes this remark, "Where there is still ample demand to fully absorb all the materials available for new construction," he is threatening every veteran not to dare to criticize this policy, no matter what type of house he gets. I take the strongest possible objection to such a threat made against our returned men by any departmental official. Surely that is not the intention of the department. I am quite safe in saying—I hope I am—that the Minister of Veterans Affairs does not countenance and will not allow such a threat to be made to silence the veteran who might criticize the type of house he was getting. I think it was most unbecoming any man to make a threat of that kind. Mr. Murchison went on to say:

We have fortunately only a few samples of criticism of the type I referred to. Some of it developed in Calgary.

He was referring to statements made by me in the house in regard to the Calgary development. He went on:

I am glad that Mr. Harkness is here because it is in his constituency. It was not Mr. Harkness that spearheaded this criticism of what has been done there. . . .

I want to exonerate the hon. member for Calgary East from any criticism that I have made in the house in this regard. I take full responsibility for any statement that I have made. It was not in my constituency, and therefore I have nothing to gain by it personally. I have no votes to solicit. I have no other motive than to see that these veterans are given that which is their due. Mr. Murchison endeavoured to place on the record a statement. He said:

We have voluntary statements from some of the veterans concerned such as this. . . .

Then he went on to read a statement, but he did not give the name of the person. I think that was not intentional because he readily sent me a copy when I telephoned him for it. I will read the copy. The only difference is in the salutation and the complimentary close. It is dated March 30, 1946, and the address is 605-25th Ave. N.E., Calgary, Alberta. This is how it starts:

To whom it may concern—

May I suggest that that reads more like a circular than a personal letter.

To whom it may concern:

Having read the report in the Herald, March 29, in which Mr. Johnston says that our homes are falling apart, I would like to state that no such condition exists in my home. I am quite satisfied with the construction of my home throughout.

When looking for a home last fall I examined quite a few houses in various stages of construction, also some completed homes. In my estimation, the V.L.A. houses were a good deal better than any I had seen.

In these houses there are a few slight mistakes which are being rectified—

Notice the contradiction.

—and when they are properly finished I am quite sure I will have a home comparable to any in the city.

Previous to the war I was employed by the A. B. Cushing Company, of this city, and while there I served my apprenticeship as a carpenter.

Yours truly,

(Signed) D. Downie.

Having read that, I want to refer you, Mr. Chairman, to a letter that I received from the veterans committee which was sent to me by the chairman. It is dated April 4. This was after I had made my statement in the house to which the Minister of Veterans Affairs took great exception. The letter reads:

C. E. Johnston,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

On Wednesday evening, April 3, 1946, a meeting of the veterans' group of Tuxedo Park small holdings, was held in the home of Mr. Don Sutherland. We wish to extend our sincere thanks to you for your efforts on our behalf.

There were 16 veterans present and it was unanimously decided to notify you of our complete and entire agreement with your remarks as quoted in Hansard.

I pause here to say that I intend to read to this committee the names of the persons who were present at that meeting where the decision was unanimous. The letter goes on:

We firmly believe—

That is, all the veterans present.

—that a first-class finish could have been made in the first place as cheaply or cheaper than was done plus cost of repairs.

The repairs promised us by V.L.A. have now been started, and V.L.A. promised—

They were mostly promises.

—these repairs will be finished to our entire satisfaction. There are quite a number of trivial inspections—

Note that.

—taking place at the moment but these inspections are all carried on during day time. It is suggested by the group that an inspection be carried on during the evening when the men are home. We can then show that our complaints are justified.

I would have thought that when an inspector went around to investigate these complaints he would make his inspection when the man of the house was at home. But definitely the inspectors did not want to find him home and they did not go to make their inspections at the time the veteran would be home. The letter goes on:

The V.L.A. has approached several owners.

These were the voluntary statements to which Mr. Murchison referred and addressed, "To whom it may concern."

Mr. MACKENZIE: What was the date of that letter?

Mr. JOHNSTON: April 4. It goes on:

The V.L.A. has approached several owners, seven in number, within the last few days. They requested letters—

This was not a case of letters being written voluntarily.

—be written concerning our feelings about the homes, and the progress being made in the rectification of the previously lodged complaints. These letters in reply—

Note this. These letters, "in reply" were by veterans who were present at that meeting.

These letters, "in reply", stated—

I draw particular attention to this:

—complete accordance with your statements and also the progress being made by V.L.A. in repairing the houses.

That bears out everything I have said. But so far we have not had produced those letters which were solicited by the V.L.A. It goes on:

They also stated satisfaction will ultimately come about in most cases when these repairs have been made. This, however, does not make restitution to those of us who have had to spend considerable money personally to repair poor workmanship.

Kindest regards from all of us and again assuring you of our complete cooperation.

Yours,

H. S. Moore, (committee member).

P.S. Attached is list of veterans who attended meeting.

Then follows a list of the names, and the man's name is here whose letter was put on the report of the committee. He fully accepts my statements made in the house. The names are:

C. G. Ingram, 448 25th avenue N.E.
C. Jesson, 441 27th avenue N.E.
W. A. Dich, 445 27th avenue N.E.
R. T. Carlson, 606 25th avenue N.E.
E. Snyden, 443 25th avenue N.E.
R. J. Arkley, 447 25th avenue N.E.
D. Murdoch, 630 25th avenue N.E.
E. S. Dunn, 626 25th avenue N.E.
C. M. Huget, 425 27th avenue N.E.
D. Downie, 605 25th avenue N.E.

[Mr. Johnston.]

That is the man who signed the letter quoted by Mr. Murchison. I am referring particularly to his name, because in the next list of names which I intend to read his name is missing:

D. Sutherland, 444 25th avenue N.E.
H. S. Moore, 416 25th avenue N.E.
R. Derbyshire, 539 25th avenue N.E.
D. Moss, 535 25th avenue N.E.
E. K. Elton, 419 27th avenue N.E.
D. Dahl, 602 25th avenue N.E.

In most of these cases, Mr. Chairman, where some are, as I say, fairly satisfied, they have spent considerable money out of their own pockets to make adjustments in these houses which, as indicated in the letter, should have been done by the contractors in the first place.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to read to you the next submission which was made to the committee by Mr. Murchison; that is on page 770. He says:

Here is a statement by a responsible member of our advisory committee in Calgary.

Again, Mr. Murchison does not give the name of the person, and I do not think that was done intentionally, either, because he readily sent me the copy of the letter when I asked him for it. This was the letter; I will read from the copy which I have received, dated at 507 Grain Exchange building, Calgary, Alberta, March 30, 1946—incidentally, they were both written the same day—addressed to Mr. A. Findlater, regional supervisor, Veterans' Land Act, Calgary, Alberta, It states:

—re houses built for veterans under Veterans' Land Act in Tuxedo Park, Calgary.

On the afternoon of March 29 I inspected a number of houses that had been sold to veterans, and also interviewed a number of the occupants. Every one of the houses I examined—

Notice that—"every one".

—I found have been substantially built, i.e., basement walls—

I want you to notice this particularly:

—are quite sufficient to carry the houses erected thereon, and the sills and joists are well put in; heavy enough that there is no danger of the building sagging. In some cases—

It is marvellous how some people can make an emphatic statement and then contradict it in the next few lines.

In some cases the material used in the construction is not all No. 1 and apparently had not been properly seasoned.

Did I not make that statement? And did anybody before the committee ever contradict it? No, certainly not. And here this man confirms it.

As a result in some places it has shrunk, but not to any alarming extent. In view of the scarcity of material I consider that these dwellings have been as well constructed as could be reasonably expected. The workmanship in all cases—

Notice this:

—could not be considered as first class.

That is what I emphasized when I was speaking here. The work was far from being first-class workmanship, and the results are showing up now.

But owing to the scarcity of skilled tradesmen, I believe it would be practically impossible to have a dwelling built within a reasonable time that would not show some slight defects such as casings around the doors and windows not being properly fitted.

"Slight defects!" Can you tell me it is a slight defect when the rain will blow right through the doors and windows?

Mr. GIBSON (Comox-Alberni): Terrible!

Mr. JOHNSTON: He goes on:

The occupants whom I interviewed are well satisfied with their homes and while mentioning some slight defects here and there in the workmanship, stated that they are causing them no inconvenience but suggesting in some cases that a little later, when material and skilled tradesmen can be secured to better advantage than at present, some slight adjustments could be made.

Mr. TUCKER: What is the matter with that?

Mr. JOHNSTON: The hon. member ought to come and live in these houses and find out. The writer goes on:

After inspecting the properties and interviewing the occupants I consider that there is absolutely no foundation for the reports that these houses were badly constructed and the occupants very much dissatisfied.

Yours truly,
W. D. Mackay,
Member of the regional advisory committee.

Below he says:

I hereby certify that the above is a true and exact copy of Mr. W. D. Mackay's letter dated 30th March, 1946.

(sgd) A. Findlater,
Regional Supervisor, Veterans' Land Act,
Calgary, Alberta.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to leave it at that for the moment, other than to say that this report is so contradictory that nobody could intelligently expect any committee to believe such a statement as that. The writer says, first, that the houses are substantially built. I have pointed out to this committee that in some cases the joists do not even meet over the beam, and any man who calls himself an inspector and would say that that was satisfactorily built does not know much about the matter. Anybody who says that a house is satisfactorily built when the floors are sagging does not know much about his business. Anybody who says that a basement wall is properly built when the water comes right through the wall doesn't know much about what he is saying.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You are "off the beam", anyhow.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I may be off the beam; but the minister, like this house, is a little warped; and also the remark has been made that the water is getting in the man's basement. I have already referred to this. Incidentally, the minister, speaking on this matter in the house on July 22, said, Hansard, page 3715:

I want to say that I have abundant evidence—

That is a pretty strong expression, and I suppose the minister would not have used it unless he had.

—from the settlers themselves of their complete satisfaction with these houses.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Hear, hear.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister went on:

I have an official letter—

This ought to be worth something.

—from the city engineer of Calgary justifying these houses. This evidence disproves in their entirety the remarks made by the hon. member for Bow River.

I then said:

This was never disproved in the committee. I shall be only too pleased to have this discussed and I hope the minister brings his evidence before the committee.

I want to hear that evidence and see whether he can disprove what I have said.

Mr. TUCKER: It seems to me that the hon. member has taken a great deal of time—

Mr. MacNICOL: Forty minutes.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am going to take some more, too.

Mr. TUCKER: —to deal with something which, after all, is not nearly as serious as he would make out. On March 28 last, he made his speech in the house. The facts in regard to this matter are really very simple. On account of the housing shortage the officials under the Veterans Land Act permitted a number of veterans to move into some of these houses in Calgary before they were finished and before they were taken over from the contractors, in order to accommodate these veterans. The contractors had not completed their work; the final inspections had not taken place, and the contractors had not been paid in full and have not yet been paid. The settlers moved in in December and January. They drew attention to these defects. As I said, no final inspection has yet been made; there is no suggestion that the houses have been finally taken over, and no suggestion that they were in a shape to be finally taken over by the veterans; the veterans were just given shelter during the winter.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Exactly.

Mr. TUCKER: My hon. friend, I suppose, could say that these veterans should be kept on the street until the houses could be finished to the last nail. I wonder if that is what he means. The very kind of attack which the hon. member is making is rendering it difficult for our department to get contractors anywhere to be willing to turn over houses until they are finished to the last degree.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Nonsense.

Mr. TUCKER: I am saying, what is a fact, that the uproar which the hon. member has made on account of the houses that were turned over for temporary use of the veterans before they are finished has made other contractors, who are jealous of their reputation, and afraid of being similarly attacked, fearful of turning over houses until they are absolutely finished. That is what the hon. gentleman has accomplished, and that is not imagination; it is fact.

Now to proceed. I do not know whether Mr. Cawthorne, who wrote the following letter, is another member of the advisory committee, but I take it the hon. member is making out that this gentleman in Calgary did not know what he was talking about, that the government made Mr. Cawthorne sign anything he was asked to sign, and that my hon. friend is the only one who can give evidence before the house which can be relied on. It is a most amazing reflection for him to make on his fellow citizens of Alberta. I am sure they will be pleased to hear it. However, this is what Mr. Cawthorne said:

All adjustments needed are of a very minor nature—

And remember, these are houses not yet finished, not yet turned over.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Who wrote that letter?

Mr. TUCKER: Mr. Cawthorne, justice of the peace. I suppose he is appointed by your government.

All adjustments needed are of a very minor nature and no difficulty is anticipated in having them attended to. These homes are outstanding in external appearance and will certainly be a credit to the community and the veterans who will own them.

The sweeping assertions made by the hon. member are certainly unjustified . . .

I hope the hon. member does not report that gentleman to the premier of Alberta for saying that.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I think I will.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. TUCKER: We would not do that and I do not think you should.

Mr. JOHNSTON: On a point of order—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I have no objection—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Take your medicine.

An hon. MEMBER: He can't take it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I have no objection to the minister reading an official report from an engineer—

An hon. MEMBER: He is not minister yet.

Mr. JOHNSTON: —but I want it distinctly understood that when I asked to have reports tabled it was refused me on the ground that they were official. If he reads the reports I demand that the other reports I asked for be tabled.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You will get the whole lot of them.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Why did you not give them before?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Because I was debarred by the rules of the house. You will get more than you want.

Mr. TUCKER: This is a report from the city engineer.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You will be sorry you ever started it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Oh no, I won't.

Mr. TUCKER: This is from the city engineer of Calgary. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows he is reliable. I hope he would not suggest that this gentleman would write something that was incorrect. He says:

The houses appear to be structurally sound, and from the appearance—

Does my hon. friend suggest that the city engineer of Calgary cannot be relied upon and that only the hon. member, with his superman, X-ray vision can see something that nobody else can see? I knew the hon. member attributed to himself powers and visions that no one else had, but I do not think he would suggest that he can see things which ordinary mortals cannot see. This is what the engineer says:

The houses appear to be structurally sound and from the appearance of the finish the class of workmanship has been average. It is needless to mention that with the difficulty in obtaining material, and with having to use green lumber in some instances, that refitting of doors and windows is unavoidable, that shrinkage of floors cannot be prevented. It appears, however, that where such conditions have existed that they have been remedied, that provision has been made to relay new floors, tighten windows, doors, et cetera, in any found requiring this work . . .

The prices that the houses are being erected for are well within present-day building costs. In fact, I doubt if any private individual could obtain a price on a similar house for a figure within $500 of the costs that these are being erected for. On the whole, these are attractive looking houses, and very well equipped.

Mr. JOHNSTON: What is the cost?

Mr. TUCKER: That is in the record which I have already tabled. He says:

On the whole, these are attractive looking houses and very well equipped.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I have no great objection to that report.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I would think not.

Mr. TUCKER: That is the opinion of the city engineer of Calgary, not an official of our department, not a man who would make a statement like that unless he knew it to be correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON: He confirms everything I have said.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Do not interrupt; keep your seat.

Mr. TUCKER: In regard to this contract in Calgary, the contract for these houses was let after public advertisement and competitive tenders, to the lowest bidder, Bennett and White Limited, one of the outstanding construction firms in western Canada. The contract has been administered under supervision of the district construction supervisor appointed by the civil service commission. The construction supervisor in turn supervises the local engineers and inspectors in charge of day-to-day operations, also appointed by the civil service commission.

The houses were built under the trying conditions that confront everyone trying to build in the west. Of course, certain difficulties did appear from time to time and the government is holding the contractor responsible for making them good, and has always done so. The contractor has not been settled with, and will not be settled with until the houses pass inspection and come up to specifications.

In regard to these houses, twenty-two are now finished and occupied; eight are not completely finished yet but are occupied; eight will be ready for occupancy in a week, and twenty-two are ready for flooring and painting, and furnace work is proceeding. We are advised by the chief of the building and supplies division of veterans affairs department that the district construction supervisor reports on August 14 that all items of work that needed repairs and adjustments, as reported from last February, have now been taken care of, except that in certain houses sufficient fir flooring had not been delivered to replace softwood floors in upstairs rooms. The shortage of fir flooring in western Canada is acute and, according to the timber control regulations, they were not supposed to lay hardwood floors in the upstairs. But owing to poor quality of softwood flooring supplied through the timber control office last fall, an exception was made in the case of Calgary.

I would say to the hon. member that I do not suppose he intended this result to happen. I suppose he was called in and it was not explained to him that the houses were not finished, were not supposed to be finished, were not turned over, were not in any way accepted by the government, but the veterans were permitted to move into them before they were finished in order that they might have shelter. I suppose the hon. gentleman acted in good faith; but I say to him in all sincerity that we have had great difficulty in getting contractors throughout Canada, who are jealous of their good reputations, to permit us to have houses occupied by veterans, though it would provide them with shelter, until those houses are finished right up to the last item of the specification; and the effect of the hon. gentleman's charge has been that veterans who could have obtained shelter have been denied it on account of the charges made against this firm of contractors.

As I say, I do not suppose the hon. gentleman intended this result, but the only effect has been what I have stated. The houses have been finished in accordance with the specifications, as they would have been in any event. He does not need to think that anything he has said has contributed to these houses being brought up to specification, because before the contractors would have been paid and the houses accepted they would have had to pass the final inspection of the government under which all defects would have been corrected. So that the only result of what the hon. gentleman said has been the one I have mentioned. I consider it most unfortunate that he should have made his charge against contractors who did not take the position they might have taken and refuse to turn over these houses until they were absolutely finished. Their only reward has been this attack by the hon. member, and to have their names besmirched from one end of Canada to the other. That is a very poor reward for those people who departed from the letter of the contract which they made with the government in order to provide shelter for veterans. As I say, I do not think he intended it in that way, but it is unfortunate.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I think the parliamentary assistant has made out a very weak case for himself.

An hon. MEMBER: You are the only one who thinks so.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Oh, am I? The report of the engineer confirmed everything I said; it does not contain one thing to prove that what I said was wrong. This talk about the reputation of the contractors being at stake is just so much eyewash, because when the people moved into those houses there was nothing left unfinished about them that the contractor could not complete without any inconvenience to those who had moved in. That is the most common thing you ever heard of. I'll bet you there is not one house into which people move to-day with everything absolutely completed before the family moves in. It just isn't done. When they say they cannot build houses under the conditions under which they built these houses without having these defects, I say anyone who makes that statement does not know anything about building. I built a house at the very same time these houses were going up, and I would defy anyone to come and find the rain running into my house, or water running through my basement wall, or the floors shrinking; and I had the same material available to me that was available to them. The only difference was that in every case the government had a priority. They talk now about the floors shrinking. Well, why would the government put spruce flooring into a place, anyway, when it was all green? We are told they could not get fir flooring. Well, I got it, and everybody else around got it. Why could the government not get it? That is just silliness; and if my hon. friend thinks anybody is going to take that into consideration he is wrong.

Mr. TUCKER: I imagine all these people must be dishonest—according to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I agree almost entirely with the engineer's report. I have no criticism of him, because he pointed out quite clearly where the defects were. The parliamentary assistant suggested that the contractors must make good. He must understand that some of these veterans have already spent well over $200 to fix up a house that was new, a house that had been built according to plans and specifications. You cannot tell me that a house has been built according to plans and specifications and has the defects I have mentioned. Certainly not. Let us see how they lived up to their specifications. Let me read another letter to you, Mr. Chairman. I want you to remember that, according to the parliamentary assistant, the charge I made was unjustified; that I have done a great injustice to these contractors; that otherwise these veterans would not have had these houses. I say to you, sir, that we might better have built one good house and had one veteran well satisfied than build two poor houses and have two veterans dissatisfied. The parliamentary assistant says these people are out of the storm. I do not think they are. The storm goes right through the walls, right through the windows, right through the basement. They might just as well be outside. That is no excuse.

Mr. TUCKER: Remember that what you say is being taken down by Hansard and will be read all over the place.

Mr. JOHNSTON: That is an extremely poor argument for the government to put up. The minister says I want to put this on Hansard. Why did they not take action at first, when these veterans went after them, when they tried by every means at their disposal to get the authorities in Calgary to do something? It was expressly understood at that first meeting, that nothing would be done except through the proper channels; and I so advised them.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We took action long before you made your flamboyant speech.

Mr. JOHNSTON: With your trivial inspections, but they did not take place until afterwards.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is nonsense. You do not know what you are talking about.

Mr. MUTCH: Do you believe that yourself?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Yes, I do.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Let us get on with the work of the house.

Mr. JOHNSTON: We shall get on with it, and we shall get on with the position of these veterans, too. Here is another letter sent to me by the committee, dated May 31:

> It seems some time since we had the pleasure of communicating with you and the present time seems most appropriate, to give you a short resumé of our activities here, and reparations to our houses since you last heard from us.
>
> V.L.A. have had some repairs made—

This was after you started to fix up the places, to make the repairs.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Long before you were ever seen over there.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It goes on:

—including a little painting and new floors—

Was my charge wrong, when I complained about the floors? They had to go back and put in new floors; and then they said I was wrong.

—put in the upstairs of several two-storey homes. We all have outside water faucets now—

Quite a contribution!

—and a few basement traps have been repaired.

Was I wrong in the statement I made?

Mr. TUCKER: We inspected all the houses, all over Canada.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The letter goes on:

However, there is no sign of sidewalks or eavestroughing and little if any hope of getting these at any date apropos to our meeting this afternoon at V.L.A. with Mr. Wiber (inspector V.L.A., Edmonton).

Mr. TUCKER: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Would he suggest that we should not have allowed these veterans into these houses, unfinished as they were, until they were finished? Would he rather have had them kept out? Did we do right in letting them into the shelter of these houses before they were finished, or should we have kept them out until these houses were all completed?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Now, now; surely you do not mean a statement like that.

Mr. TUCKER: Answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON: If that is the answer to my charges I think it is very poor.

Mr. TUCKER: Admittedly these houses were not finished, and I am asking: should we have let them be occupied before they were finished, or should we have made the people wait until the houses were completed?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Certainly I shall answer it. Keep still over there, and I will tell you.

Mr. MUTCH: We have called your bluff; now answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Called my bluff?

Mr. TUCKER: Answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON: What was there in the house that was not completed?

Mr. TUCKER: Answer the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am asking you that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MUTCH: We have had two and a half hours on this. Answer the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Let us get on with our work.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. I must remind hon. members that the speaker must not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. JOHNSTON: And I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I have not given my consent. In the next paragraph the writer of this letter says:

I shall go into this meeting in a moment as I am sure you are most interested.
On Tuesday last—

Before I continue to read this letter, I want to refer to the question asked by the parliamentary assistant. He wants to know if I would have permitted these people to move in before the houses were finished. I say to him there was nothing unfinished in the houses except minor repairs which in no way affected these people taking possession of them. The floors were laid; the walls were up; everything was completed except probably the faucet on the outside tap or something like that. Certainly in every other detail they thought they were finished.

Mr. TUCKER: They had not been accepted, and were not finished according to specifications.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Listen, Mr. Chairman; I was in those houses with the inspector and he accepted them. I was in one house when we asked the inspector in regard to the flooring The floor was covered with paper, but he accepted it.

Mr. TUCKER: What was the name of the inspector who inspected these houses?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Mr. Turner.

Mr. TUCKER: Our instructions are that they were not accepted on behalf of the government.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I do not care whether they were accepted on behalf of the government or not; the inspector was there and he accepted them. When I asked him, "Did you inspect the floor with paper over it?" he acknowledged that he did, that he had never seen the floor. He was one of your government inspectors.

Mr. TUCKER: May I give the hon. member some information? The only man who has a right to accept these houses on behalf of the government, and to say that the contractor has lived up to his specifications, is the chief inspector of the province. And he did not accept these houses.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Who is the chief inspector?

Mr. TUCKER: Mr. Wiber is the district construction supervisor.

Mr. JOHNSTON: He has been there, and that is one of the difficulties. Now the hon. gentleman says, should we have allowed this man to move in without the house being finished?

An hon. MEMBER: Whitewash.

Mr. JOHNSTON: "Whitewash" is right. Listen to this:

On Tuesday last we suffered a very bad rain and windstorm. The rain came right through outside double windows, then through inside windows and on to floors of the rooms that happened to face northerly direction.

Mr. TUCKER: Do you suggest the inspector should have accepted that house in that condition? Do you suggest that?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Do you blame us for the rain?

Mr. JOHNSTON: These were houses your inspector had inspected and said they were fine—except probably the doors were not right, or the floors were shrinking, or the roof was leaking, or the windows were not right. Outside of that it was a fairly good house! I continue:

Three basements, known to us at the moment, had streams of water running across the basement floors. This water came through cracks in the cement foundation which had been covered from view by cement plaster and were hitherto unknown to us.

That is good workmanship, is it? Did you tell me a minute ago something about reliable contractors who want to save their reputations? I am going to suggest to you and I am telling you that the requirements are not there.

Mr. MACKENZIE: You are probably attacking the finest contractors in Canada.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Oh, just a minute; do not get me started on that, because I can go into more detail.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Go ahead; go ahead!

Mr. JOHNSTON: And I can assure you they were not appointed by a Social Credit government, either.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Is my hon. friend criticizing the Bennett and White people?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Certainly, for the workmanship they put into the houses.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Then you are contradicting your own statement as reported in Hansard of March 28, when you paid them the finest compliment of any contractor in Canada.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Why, you—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on; go on!

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Say it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I won't say what I started to.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Does my hon. friend deny it?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I never made such a statement in my life.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Get me Hansard of March 28; I have a pretty good memory.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I might have called them a lot of other things but not that.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I will quote you, to your own discomfort, very shortly.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Could this all be true?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON: And while we are waiting I will quote another paragraph. It says:

Three weeks ago—

And these were the houses which should not have been moved into, because they were not properly completed.

Three weeks ago we also suffered a bad windstorm—

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: We are suffering one to-night; too.

Mr. JOHNSTON:

—which tore off shingles and uprooted others. This condition was reported then and has not been rectified. When this bad storm hit Calgary on Tuesday with heavy rain it is only fate that prevented these roofs from leaking. One house in particular has 14 shingles missing completely.

I suggest again that that is poor workmanship, and that those shingles were not properly nailed. I know a hundred houses built in Calgary at that time, and the shingles never came off. You cannot tell me that the contractors are so careful of their reputation! If they are so careful of it, then there should be a little more precaution and supervision.

Mr. TUCKER: Will the hon. gentleman just tell me what he is blaming the government for? Does he say we should have accepted these houses, or should not have accepted them? I am at a loss to understand the hon. gentleman or what he is complaining about. He says they were not properly built, and the answer is that the government—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order; I must ask the hon. member to keep his seat until—

Mr. TUCKER: But I am asking a question.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): —the hon. member who has the floor is through.

Mr. TUCKER: But I am asking a question of the hon. member.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. TUCKER: With his consent, of course. Have I your consent to ask the question?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order; it is not in order to interrupt the hon. member unless he gives his consent to it.

Mr. TUCKER: I am asking if I have his consent.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I hope the hon. member will cease these interruptions.

Mr. TUCKER: Have I consent to ask these questions?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Certainly. Go ahead.

Mr. TUCKER: I should like you to say what your complaint is. You say these houses were not properly finished. We say they were not either, and we have not accepted them yet, and have not even to this date settled with the contractor. What is your complaint? Should we have accepted them, or should we not have accepted them? What should the government have done? We did not accept them, and we have not yet accepted them? Do you complain about that?

Mr. JOHNSTON: If I have not made myself clear, then I should get a hammer and use it on somebody's head.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: May I ask a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON: No.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I rise to a question of privilege.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: A question of privilege.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member does not wish to be asked a question.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North):

I do not blame the contractor for it.

And that is at page 334 of Hansard.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And this is from page 334 of Hansard, where he says:

I do not blame the contractor for it.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: On a question of privilege—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The hon. member asked permission to ask a question, and the reply was no.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am rising to a question of privilege.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): It is not a question of privilege at all.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: On a question of privilege—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): What is it?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have not yet been given an opportunity to ask it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I want to answer the question referred to a minute ago.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I have risen to a question of privilege, and I want to know whether I have the right to go ahead.

Mr. JOHNSTON: You have exhausted your privilege.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am endeavouring to explain my question of privilege. I should like to point out—

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Will the hon. member for Bow River take his seat for a moment? Now, what is your question of privilege?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: This is a statement made in the house by the hon. member for Bow River as it appears at page 332 of Hansard:

I have visited the homes after the families moved in, and I must say that under the national housing scheme the government has done a fairly good job. The material is satisfactory, the workmanship has been well done, and the people are satisfied.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And page 334.

I do not blame the contractor for it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: The minister did not read it all. Where is the reference I made with regard to poor material? Those windows were sent there ploughed out for sash-cord. That is where I said I did not blame the contractor.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You say it is good.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I do not blame the contractor when the specifications call for it. That was the government's fault. The parliamentary assistant wants to know what I complain about. Certainly anybody should be able to understand why I complain. When the windows were sent down in that condition, and the contractor was instructed to put them in, and if they were put in properly, I would not blame the contractor for it. But I certainly blame the contractor when he puts flooring in groove to groove.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: How do you put it in, if you do not put it in groove to groove?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I want to read the passage from which the minister chose to quote me. I would have thought the minister would be a little fairer, but I can see he is getting a little nervous and agitated. I quote from page 332 of Hansard as follows:

> It has been admitted by the government that under the national housing scheme 27,000 houses have been built and under Wartime Housing, 16,000. These houses have been completed and are occupied. As I said last year, I have no great complaint to make about the national housing scheme.

I am not talking about the national housing scheme. The minister does not distinguish between houses constructed by the reconstruction department and those erected by his department, and there is all the difference in the world.

An hon. MEMBER: Why?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Because one is a house and the other is not.

An hon. MEMBER: Which is which?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Which is the house, ours or theirs?

Mr. JOHNSTON: I continue:

> These houses have been completed, and are occupied. As I said last year, I have no great complaint to make about the national housing scheme. I have carefully watched construction from the laying of the foundations to the time the families moved in. I have visited the homes after the families moved in, and I must say that under the national housing scheme the government has done a fairly good job.

But that is not the Veterans Land Act.

> The material is satisfactory, the workmanship has been well done, and the people are satisfied. But that was done by private contractors, and the individual was allowed free choice of his own contractor. He was permitted to get the design that he required and to go ahead with his house. The government did not assist him with any gifts.

When the minister starts quoting things he should be fair enough and quote the whole contents.

[Mr. Cruickshank.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: I quoted from a different page.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I want to continue with these letters because they are important.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I want to appeal to the committee to observe the rules. If we are going to make any progress every hon. member who is speaking ought to have an opportunity to present his case without interruption.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: If he has a case.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I hope the hon. member will try to abide by the rules.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Let us get on with the work.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Thank you for your wise decision. You are always very just. To return to the letter, it reads:

> Now to return to our meeting with V.L.A. to-day. This meeting was called to see Mr. Wiber—

That is the man we were talking about a moment ago.

> —regarding our sidewalks and eavestroughing. Mr. Wiber wrote to one veteran last week saying we would not be getting these two items as the prices of our homes did not allow for it. Yet it has been understood right along that there was a contingency fund on each house of $250 for this purpose (told us also by Mr. Wiber a few months ago).

I should like to refer to one other paragraph as follows:

> At the meeting to-day we were told in so many words, that the repairs to our houses caused by faulty construction, were on a "cost plus" basis, and there was "only a chance", that next year, after final analysis of prices, that we may get sidewalks and eavestroughing. Mr. Wiber would not commit himself in any way in this respect. Some veterans have spent a lot of money on front lawn landscaping, in one instance $200, and this will be badly marked by dripping rain without eavestroughing.

The parliamentary assistant said that these repairs are going to be made. He says that if these windows are leaking, that is not very serious; if the wind blows the rain through on to the hardwood floors, that is not very serious.

Mr. TUCKER: On a question of privilege, I never said anything of the sort. The hon. member says that he wishes to be fair, but he has just said that I said—

The CHAIRMAN: Order.

Mr. TUCKER: On a question of privilege.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. When the Chairman rises I would ask all hon. members to resume their seats. The Chairman will then call on the hon. member who has a right to speak. The parliamentary assistant has risen on a question of privilege.

Mr. TUCKER: My question is this: The hon. member said that I said that it was not serious when windows let the wind blow the rain in. I never said anything of the sort.

Mr. JOHNSTON: You have been quoting letters from engineers and others to show that the things I have been saying are not so.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Why did you accept his statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Because he has been saying right along that the things I have charged are wrong, that I have been speaking without a knowledge of the facts.

The CHAIRMAN: Speaking about windows, it seems to me that this question has been pretty well aired in the committee. It is not within my power to close off the discussion, but I think the committee would like it to come to an end as soon as possible.

Mr. FAIR: The hon. member for Bow River is trying to let in a little light; you have let out all the air.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Pull down the blinds.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I suppose there has been enough rain going through it to make the parliamentary assistant all wet.

Mr. MACKENZIE: So are you.

Mr. JOHNSTON: This may be a joke to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and his parliamentary assistant, but it is not a joke to these veterans who have come home from overseas expecting to get something for their money.

Mr. MACKENZIE. On a point of order, both the hon. member for Rosthern and the member for Vancouver Centre have done more for the veterans at all times than—

Mr. JOHNSTON: Will you sit down and listen to a few facts?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: Will you allow veterans to talk about veterans affairs?

Mr. JOHNSTON: The veterans do not think there is much of a joke about this.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: There has been plenty of joking.

The CHAIRMAN: I think it would expedite the proceedings of the committee if the hon. member for Bow River were allowed to continue without interruption. I think he will soon complete his remarks.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I am afraid the veterans will not think according to the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They have for the last thirty years.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: You would not know what the veterans are thinking of.

Mr. JOHNSTON: It is none of your business; just keep your place.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. It is most improper for one hon. member to tell another hon. member that it is none of his business.

An hon. MEMBER: Withdraw.

The CHAIRMAN: I am not asking any hon. member to withdraw a statement, but I think if we are to maintain decorum in this committee such statements should not be made. I would ask that the hon. member be permitted to continue without interruption.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I withdraw the remark. He is not a veteran; I still am.

Mr. JOHNSTON: That is none of your business. Do you think you are any better veteran than some who own these houses?

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I am still a veteran; that is more than you are.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Do not get sassy either.

The CHAIRMAN: I must insist on all hon. members addressing the Chair. We will not make any progress in the committee if hon. members talk directly to one another. We must maintain order and as long as I am Chairman it is my duty to do so.

Mr. CRUICKSHANK: I apologize. Through you, I say I am still a veteran and he is not.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I will not stoop to the depths that some people stoop to.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): You will not rise to the heights either.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I would not have to go very far. I think this matter is too serious for members of this committee to make light of it. These difficulties will have to be ironed out, and I am endeavouring to point out these things to the government which has been attempting to disprove the statements I made. I should like to continue quoting from this letter:

> Nothing will be done regarding our windows leaking; however, it has been "graciously" granted to repair leaking basements and upturned shingles.

Then another paragraph:

> Mr. Findlater (Calgary district V.L.A. supervisor) and Mr. Turner (V.L.A. inspector, Calgary), here are doing what they can for us and their feelings are definitely on our side. It appears as if Mr. Wiber is deducting this "cost plus" from our $250 contingency figure and bungalows are paying for the new floors in two-storey houses. He refused to-day to divulge what this $250 was being spent on as he said it wasn't our business.

Mr. LOW: Who made that statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Mr. Wiber, the official government inspector.

Mr. LOW: And he is reporting to whom?

Mr. JOHNSTON: To the chairman of the veterans committee in Calgary.

Mr. LOW: And you are reading the chairman's letter?

Mr. JOHNSTON: Yes. It goes on:

There are several new homes being built in our area at present, by veterans, who chose their own plans and own contractors, through V.L.A. These homes average $6,000 and this includes hardwood floors, fireplaces, plastered walls, stucco outside, sidewalks, garages and eavestroughing. Every one of these items are absent from our homes and yet the cost is similar.

That is a direct statement from this man.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. JOHNSTON: No, it is not carried. I want to put these facts on the record so that hon. members will know the treatment these veterans are getting.

I have a letter dated Calgary, June 18, 1946, addressed to myself, which shows that it is no small number of veterans who are being treated like this. The letter says:

This meeting was attended by some twenty veterans and I am instructed to pass on to you their unanimous good wishes and continued support in your kind efforts to assist us.

May I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that that is all I am endeavouring to do. The letter goes on:

If our good friend Mr. Murchison has any doubt as to the fairness of your statements or to the actual conditions of our complaints, we suggest that rather than sit back in Ottawa and doubt our statements and your own, that he make a visit to Calgary at once.

May I heartily endorse that suggestion. I think it is high time that this government sent out capable and competent inspectors to inspect these houses and see what kind of deal these veterans are getting. The letter goes on:

I am listing the names of the veterans who attended our meeting and certify their correctness and unfailing backing in your efforts to assist us.

Mr. D. Downie is writing a personal letter to you very shortly. Thanking you for your past kindnesses.

I have never received that letter from Mr. Downie.

[Mr. Johnston.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: Who signed that letter which the hon. member has just read?

Mr. JOHNSTON: H. S. Moore.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We have another one from him quite different.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I cannot help that. There is a P.S. to the letter:

P.S. The following persons attended the meeting on June 16, 1946.

Then follows the list of names which are the same except for one or two additions, and one notable thing is that Mr. Downie was not at that meeting. He was the man who was going to write to me and who wrote to the government the "To whom it may concern" letter. He was absent from this meeting on June 16. I could go on and read similar statements because I have had correspondence from these veterans continuously.

Mr. BLACKMORE: From where?

Mr. JOHNSTON: From the committee of veterans in Calgary. They are all of them home owners. I want to read just one paragraph from a letter dated July 4 and addressed to myself from H. S. Moore:

Last Friday, a fairly heavy rainstorm prevailed for ten minutes and, within five minutes of starting, my basement was swimming with water. I 'phoned Mr. Turner and after a severe tongue lashing, regarding this condition and his failure to repair this fault (along with many others) after being reported to him three weeks ago, he came up to inspect the basement. Saturday morning, Bennett and White people were there with electric hammers, etc., and have now repaired the poorly-poured cement.

I read that to emphasize my suggestion to the minister that samples of the cement should be taken to see whether the specifications were lived up to. The letter goes on:

As was understood at the time, my basement was to be repainted as they found it before work started. This has not been done so far (unless in my absence to-day), and I do not intend making any further payments, including July 1, until the house is repaired properly. I hope I am legally protected in this instance of my refusal to make payment.

May I suggest that if that veteran is not protected he should be. These basement walls, eight inches thick, were supposed to have been built with cement, five bags of cement to the square yard, and the cement walls were supposed to have been tarred on the outside, something that is not done in Calgary in one case in a hundred because it is not necessary. But, as I say, these cellar walls were supposed to have been tarred right down to the basement floor. They were on a cement footing, with a watershed on it, and when water can pour through an eight-inch cement wall that has been tarred there is something definitely wrong. That is clear when men had to be sent out there to break the wall with electric hammers in order to repair it. You cannot tell me that these veterans are getting a square deal under those conditions, and I could quote other things just as bad as that.

Mr. FAIR: You have proved your case.

Mr. JOHNSTON: I intended to speak about the cost of these houses and the way the contracts were let. No contract in the list that was furnished to me in the return has been lived up to. In most cases the contract bid was around $5,000, but in every one of these cases, after the contract was let there was an addition which cost around $800. Before a contract is let, specifications are put out and the contractor submits his price thinking that those are the plans and specifications, but in every one of these cases the plans were changed. That is not a square deal. Mind you, Mr. Chairman, it is in the extras that the contractor makes his money. Surely the government knows that. When a contractor puts in an extra window or anything in addition to the specifications, up goes the cost. That is where he makes his money. I am not blaming the contractor for that, because that is the way the business is carried on. But the government is at fault there. I could speak for another forty minutes on contract prices. In every case a profit of from $100 to $300 is being made over the price set out. Of course, they say: That price is not the final price. I know that, but I venture to say that it will never be lower than the quoted price and in most cases it will be higher.

As I said when I made my last statement to the house, I estimated that it would cost between $500 and $1,000 to repair these houses. This estimate has been proven correct, and if this House of Commons allows these conditions to prevail and allows twenty-three or twenty-four veterans who are buying these houses to be treated in this way, I say it is a crime to treat in this way veterans who have been overseas. They are entitled to every consideration. The veteran who has fought for this country has every right to fair treatment, just the same as anybody else, and that is all I am asking. I am not looking for glory myself. I do not care if a word of mine on this subject is ever published. But I want these veterans to get a square deal.

Mr. MUTCH: Mr. Chairman, a farce is a farce, whether it is in the House of Commons or in the theatre. The main reason for my rising to-night, however, is not a desire to discuss specifically the situation in Calgary, of which I can have no personal knowledge, but to resent a slur which the previous speaker made on the committee, when he said a few moments ago, I admit with some heat because he has been pretty well steamed up all night, that he had brought this up because the veterans committee had apparently given it no consideration, and by implication he was much more interested and capable than the other sixty members of that committee. We had some fifty-one meetings, a considerable number of which were devoted to the discussion of this particular act under which these houses were built. The information which the hon. gentleman furnished and the information in rebuttal of it was before the committee; and it does not lie in his mouth, I think, as a member of this house to suggest that the members of that committee were not interested in the matter or that they were incapable of forming a judgment on it.

Beyond that, it is regrettable, of course, that in a discussion of this kind there should be so much of personalities and chitchat back and forth. Perhaps I have been to some extent guilty of it. But, as I say, that allegation against the committee I deny on behalf of myself and every member of the committee, and I think the hon. gentleman, when he reads Hansard to-morrow and notes what he has said, will perhaps regret it.

Mr. JOHNSTON: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, the hon. member who has just spoken says that I was throwing aspersions on the committee which sat on this matter. I did no such thing. I was referring in that one instance to the veterans affairs committee which sat in this house, but I did not say that they did not consider housing; I did say that they did not spend much time on this particular aspect of it. I have here the official report of June 3, No. 26, and not more than one or two pages deal with this particular question. That is what I was referring to, not that the veterans affairs committee as a committee did not deal with the whole housing problem. I was not referring to that at all: I was referring to this particular item.

Mr. KIDD: I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs one item, which came to my attention only this morning. It has to do with the priorities and restrictions in connection with the building of veterans homes. These particular homes are being built a mile or two outside the city of Kingston, not entirely under the directions of the minister's department, but by a private syndicate. Some thirty-five or forty homes are being built, and seven or eight veterans are taking advantage of this act.

They have procured the sites, and in order to progress with the work, particularly the ground work, it is necessary to construct roads and sewers for thirty-five or forty homes. This group of veterans which I mentioned before in the veterans committee want priorities in order to get drain pipe and sewage pipe, which has to be put down first; and the basins are made. If the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply were in his seat at the moment I would point out to him that he is holding up these priorities. To you, Mr. Chairman, I make my appeal that these men want to build these homes privately on the sites they have acquired under this act, and are prepared to go ahead, and I claim that they should not be held up for a few feet of soil pipe and so on. If the minister would have his officials look into the matter I think something could be accomplished.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I shall be very glad to take the matter up with the chief priority officer at once.

Mr. McIVOR: I should like to mention a case which proves that the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs and the pension board are honest and sincere in their service. When I have placed before them the facts of needy cases, in not one instance have they failed. I will give one example. A farmer about a hundred miles west of Fort William said to me one day, "I hope you treat my boy better than I was treated." I said, "What is the matter with you? You look honest and you look healthy." "Well," he said, "I have not been able to do a decent day's work since I was discharged." And I believed him. I placed the case before the pension board. He was then getting $9 a month pension. Then he was sent to Deer Lodge hospital, near Winnipeg, and was given treatment for nearly a year. They found they could not treat him successfully and they gave him a pension of $60 a month. I think it is only due to our officials that I and those like me who have seen cases of this kind get honest and generous treatment should publicly mention the fact.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I should like to refer to a question asked two or three days ago by the hon. member for Vancouver South, and also mentioned to-night by the hon. member for Fraser Valley, concerning small holdings. I was a member of the veterans committee. Most of us thought our job was done when the committee was finished, but a new interpretation of "small holdings" has been brought in, not by the Veterans' Land Act branch or the Department of Veterans Affairs, nor by the veterans affairs committee, but by the Minister of Reconstruction, and so I think any member of the veterans affairs committee should be quite free to discuss the matter here in the House of Commons.

The first mention of small holdings as far as the soldier is concerned came with this little pamphlet published by the Hon. Ian A. Mackenzie, Minister of Veterans Affairs, sent to all soldiers overseas in 1942. On page 4, in outlining what was to be done for the soldiers when they returned, it is stated in paragraph (b) that "small holding settlements means an urban, semi-rural or rural home of limited acreage located"—this phrase is especially important—"close to an employment opportunity." Then there follow almost two pages of explanation of this, and then one significant thing: "It is important that small holdings settlements referred to in (b) above should not be thought of only"—let me repeat —"only in relation to the larger and more highly industrialized centres of Canada." The rest of the page explains how the veteran who does not want to be a farmer is to be given this added security, if he has industrial employment, of having a home, a victory garden and a bit of land outside high-taxed areas in the city. Then further, in 1944, 1945 and 1946 all of us overseas received these "Back to Civil Life" pamphlets, which explained it still further; and since the war has been over the Veterans' Land Act administration have gone ahead—I think very well—in my own riding, in settling soldiers into these small holdings of an acre, or of half an acre in the vicinity of industrial employment. Now, in speaking of districts in my riding, I do not want to be parochial in my outlook, but fortunately the hon. member for Vancouver South three or four days ago mentioned in the house that, in the Vancouver area, certainly the most suitable places for small holdings were North Vancouver and Burnaby, both in my riding. The hon. member for Fraser Valley said the same thing this evening; and the minister, who is the member for Vancouver Centre, must certainly recognize that the two working-man districts of the Vancouver area are North Vancouver and Burnaby, both with ample land suitable for this purpose. This recent regulation of the Minister of Reconstruction, which was not discussed or approved by the veterans affairs committee, now limits these small holdings to communities of less than five thousand or more than fifteen miles from a metropolitan area, which, to my mind, just throws out of the window the small holdings which were promised to the veteran. A young man having industrial employment in Vancouver formerly could take up a small holding in North Vancouver, Coquitlam, Burnaby or where he would have the advantage of low tax and have a victory garden, the suburbs of the town, so that industrial employment would be available to him. But that has been destroyed, not by the Department of Veterans Affairs, but by the Department of Reconstruction in connection with its new housing scheme. This is the proper place for the minister to give me a satisfactory answer, and it will not do for him simply to say, as has been said to the hon. member for Vancouver South and the hon. member for Fraser Valley, that the matter is under consideration. He should tell us why the department is throwing out of the window these promises made to the veterans that those with industrial jobs would have small holdings in adjacent suburbs made available to them.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver North. I wonder if all the members of the committee are familiar with the evolution of the Veterans Land Act. I wrote to the Prime Minister on October 30, 1939, asking for the formation of a committee on demobilization and reestablishment and that was acceded to on November 2, 1939, when the war was very young. We had a committee formed under General McDonald, who has now been called away from us, and the organizing genius of that committee was my deputy minister, Walter Woods. We formed fourteen subcommittees. One subcommittee was to deal with land settlement. We got what we believed were the finest experts from the various departments and called in practical farmers from all across Canada in every province to advise us, and they devoted eighteen months of study to the subject before making their recommendation. One from Winnipeg was killed in an aeroplane accident at Armstrong, Mr. Grier, just after he had attended one of our meetings.

Although I was not administering soldier settlement at that time, I asked for a parliamentary committee in 1942 to which would be appointed some of our veteran members, mostly farmer veteran members of the house. That committee went carefully into the report, with the guidance of and in consultation with the present director, and we drew up a bill. Although I was not the minister, I made a suggestion that that committee form a department of veterans affairs in Canada, and the committee agreed to that proposal and sent a report to the house, which this house accepted in 1942.

What I am coming to is basically fundamental. The main idea the committee had in mind at that time was that the Veterans' Land Act should be for the settlement of farms for veterans, while the other features were incidental. The small holdings and commercial fishermen's features were incidental. Perhaps unfortunately, however, these two features became the most popular parts of the legislation and, especially in view of housing conditions in Canada, there arose a tremendous outcry for small holdings and housing, because the terms were very favourable.

At that time, as the committee knows, there were three agencies in connection with housing: finance, wartime housing, and ourselves, the Veterans Land Act, in a small way. We built 2,700 houses last year. Our terms were so much more favourable that a great demand was made that we should go into urban housing. We felt, however, that if we did we were destroying the fundamental principles of the Veterans Land Act because our main purpose is settlement and not housing.

I greatly appreciate the strength of the presentation made by my hon. friend in regard to certain areas with which I am familiar, and I will discuss the matter with my colleague. As a matter of fact, it is being discussed now, and I shall do all I can to present the ideas that my hon. friend has expressed.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I appreciate the minister's remarks, but he has not answered my question. All he has done is to say that a most careful study was given the subject by himself to begin with; then a committee of experts was appointed, and then the 1942 parliamentary committee on veterans affairs and that then they turned out this booklet which they sent to the troops, from which I will quote the main purpose in view:

> Thus the veterans land act is the flexible measure under which—

And this is in black face type: not one and subsidiary objectives, but "four main types of establishment are available." The first is farming, and, second, there is the small holding. What I as a veteran, and a member of the veterans affairs committee, object to strongly is that the minister, having shown this foresight in 1939, the department and its experts having done such a good job in establishing provisions for small holdings, the veterans affairs committee of 1942 having threshed the matter out and approved these provisions, and the department having presented these promises to the soldiers in booklet form, the soldiers having believed in it, and soldiers returning over a period of one or two years having been able to take advantage of it, it is then closed off The minister gives no reason why it was closed off. He simply says, "We are not going into urban settlement". But these are not urban districts. Take the almost rural districts of Deep Cove and Lynn Valley, in North Vancouver, where veterans with industrial jobs in Vancouver could live. Will the minister tell the veterans, will he tell the members of this house, why the veterans affairs committee has changed from the policy of allowing soldiers with industrial jobs to get into these districts, not too remote from the city, where there is low taxation and where they can operate a small holding? Why this great departure? The minister should say why the change has been made, not by his department but by the Department of Reconstruction. If he will tell us that, then we shall be able to tell the veterans the reason for the change. But for the minister to tell me in his pleasant manner that the matter is under consideration is not good enough New matters are considered, but changes should be explained. Why was the change made? As a Vancouver member I should like to know just where veterans with small industrial jobs in Vancouver are to settle, if not in North Vancouver and Burnaby.

Mr. MACKENZIE: All I can say is that I will bring my hon. friend's very able presentation to the attention of my colleague.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I am like my friend the hon. member for Bow River. All I want is an answer. We had a certain policy and it has now been changed. It is not a new matter to be studied and considered. It is something which should be explained to every veteran member of the house, why the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply and the Central Mortgage Corporation changed the promises made officially to the veterans and the policy under which such an excellent job had been done. I was glad the minister went into detail to tell us how much consideration had been given over a period of years to the setting up of these four main objectives, though one month ago the provisions for small holdings near cities was thrown out of the window.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It was not thrown out of the window. I want to be as emphatic as my hon. friend if he wants to be emphatic.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): I do.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is not a change of policy but a development of policy, the result of the coordination of three departments under the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply—that is, the department of his own, the Department of Finance and the Department of Veterans Affairs in so far as houses are concerned—leaving complete independence to the Department of Veterans Affairs in its own affairs. I am taking most sympathetic note of my hon. friend's presentation, and I shall discuss it with the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): May I ask the minister just where veterans working in his own city riding of Vancouver Centre will qualify for small holdings close enough so that they will not bankrupt themselves by transportation back and forth? What districts can they settle in since North Vancouver and Burnaby are not available to them?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am sympathetic to my hon. friend's remarks. Take Burnaby, which he represents in part. The taxation rate there is tremendously high in certain parts in connection with soldier settlement.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): The minister knows that the district of Burnaby has given to veterans with small holdings a special concession of taxes at $60 an acre, and the district of North Vancouver has also given special concession, the rate set by his department and now the veterans are rewarded by the department throwing this out of the window. I insist on that phrase. It has been thrown out of the window.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I object to that. I have not thrown anything out of the window.

Mr. SINCLAIR (Vancouver North): Then I shall merely say that this combination of the Department of Reconstruction, the Department of Finance and the Department of Veterans Affairs have flung it out the window, and I am very sorry to see that the Department of Veterans Affairs had any part of that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I should like to ask the minister who decides what regions are or are not applicable, as to employment opportunity?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The Minister of Reconstruction, after consultation with those who would represent the specific regions.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then will there be made available a list of those regions which would be suitable for small holdings?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I see no reason why not.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Is there such a list?

Mr. MACKENZIE: We have had drawn up under the director, who is present here to-night, a list of regions throughout Canada as far as our programme goes, which is rather modest. We have been asked to build 4,000 units this year out of a total of 80,000 units throughout Canada as between private enterprise and governmental agencies. For four or five years now the director has been selecting areas for small holdings. Unfortunately, or at least I think unfortunately, it has developed into group settlement on a fairly large scale; that is, with houses in great units. My own idea would have been—probably I do not know very much about it—individual settlements and holdings out five, six, eight or ten miles, for those who would have employment opportunities in the cities; but they have developed into groups of settlements adjacent to urban boundaries.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: In view of the minister's answer, then, I hope a list of the areas which are considered suitable for such small holdings will be made available to veterans so that they may know what they are doing.

May I take up another matter arising out of my own experience in connection with the efforts of soldiers to get into some of these particular units? I understand that the department now requires them to present the certificate of an employer, stating that the particular veteran is now in permanent employment. What are the regulations in that regard? It seems to me there is too much opportunity here for throwing out the applications, and the boys are feeling considerable resentment about it. A number of boys in a certain area of my constituency are anxious to get settled on small holdings. They make their application. Finally, after a good deal of correspondence some representative goes to them, and the boys now find that one of the requirements is that their employer sign a statement for the department that the particular applicant is now in permanent employment. Is that one of the requirements?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Certainly; that was the basic purpose of the act, and unanimously endorsed by the committee in 1942, that small holdings were ancillary to industrial employment, and would not necessarily be self-sustaining, as against the settlement of farm areas which would be entirely farming settlements.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: But do you require as one of the requisites, in the case of a man wanting to get on a small holding—

Mr. MACKENZIE: Not in all cases, but it is done in some cases.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is the very point. Why the discrimination; and in which regions do you require such a statement from the employer?

Mr. MACKENZIE: We require a reasonable anticipation of success on the settlement.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is agreed, but there must be certain areas—

Mr. MACKENZIE: No; it is not regional at all. It is personal, in regard to certain industrial employment areas.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Then can we say that in a certain small city in the west you would require that the employer sign a statement that the particular veteran making application for a small holding has employment, and that no veteran will have his application accepted unless he can produce such a statement?

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is no complete prohibition anywhere, but we endeavour to ascertain whether there is probable employment in view, and that is for the protection of the settler himself.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: From there where does it go? Who has the final decision? Take an actual case of a man—

Mr. MACKENZIE: The local advisory committee, of which there is one in almost every community in Canada.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The advisory committee of the department?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: What committee is it?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The number on the committee is not definitely stated; there may be three or five or seven. I am told there are now forty-five of these committees in Canada.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: You mean that every area in Canada is covered by some advisory committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: And the applicant has to satisfy that committee?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: This particular item covers the administration of soldier settlement. Does this have to do with the old soldier settlement administration?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Could the minister give us the figures for the last two years, separately, as to the cost of administration of soldier settlement, as nearly as they have it; the number of soldier settlers who have been deprived of their holdings, that is the settlers of world war No. 1, and also whether or not those holdings have been resold?

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I suggest to my hon. friend, if he does not mind, that we take up that matter to-morrow morning?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Agreed.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, August 16, 1946

The house met at eleven o'clock.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REFERENCE TO RETURN RESPECTING CAMP BORDEN ARMY REJECTION OR MEDICAL DISCHARGES

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to bring to the attention of the house a breach of the privileges of parliament by reason of the incompleteness and incorrectness of a return brought down yesterday, sessional paper No. 258, which was passed pursuant to an order of the house dated August 7, 1946.

The order in question reads as follows:

A copy of all correspondence passing between the Department of National Defence, and/or the Department of Labour, and/or the Department of Justice, and between any one or more of said departments since January, 1944, to date, in connection with the improper use of army rejection or medical discharges at Camp Borden, wherein one Arnold (also known as William Horrigan), allegedly along with one Bagley utilized army rejection or medical discharges which had been signed in, in blank, by former Major J. A. Elliott, A.19, R.C.A.S.C.

A perusal of the documents produced yesterday shows that in spite of the fact that parliament passed the order without any qualifications that any documents should be refused, a number of the letters have been deliberately omitted and the file is in the position of having been stripped and denuded of four known letters, as well as others. The four letters which do not appear in the file are the following:

(1) A letter from Mr. Robinette, K.C., of Toronto, dated March 22, referred to in letter of March 26.

(2) Letter from Mr. Miall to Mr. Anderson, dated the 26th of March.

(3) Copy of letter, October 12, from Mr. Robinette, K.C., sent to Mr. MacNamara, the deputy minister.

(4) Letter of the deputy minister of justice to Mr. MacNamara, dated the 19th of October, 1945.

[Mr. Castleden.]

These four letters are referred to in the correspondence produced, but have not been produced.

In addition to that there is correspondence I know of which shows that the R.C.M.P. found a definite case against Arnold, Elliott and Bagley, and that there was also evidence that the fake medical rejection certificates signed by Elliott at Camp Borden with the name of the recipient left in blank were sold to various persons, one of the recipients claiming that he had paid approximately $1,300 to Bagley.

I say, sir, that when letters in the possession of the department or departments of government are deleted from the record when a return or reply is brought down to this house, it is an affront to parliament and to the privileges of parliament. Parliament is entitled to full information, not to information as selected by government officials, or as to what information government officials consider sufficient for the needs or good of parliament.

This case has odoriferous characteristics. The deletion of a major portion of the record will not down the suspicion that there were reasons why the Royal Canadian Mounted Police report recommending prosecution was departed from on the recommendations of the Deputy Minister of Labour.

What I want to know is this: Where are the rest of the documents, and when will they be produced?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): May I say that the Minister of National Defence, who has been engaged for two or three hours with treasury board, will be here later to-day, and will reply, effectively, as usual, to the allegations of my hon. friend.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ABSENTEES AND DESERTERS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 31

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house, seconded by the hon. member for Kingston City (Mr. Kidd), under standing order 31, to discuss a definite matter of public importance, namely an order of the privy council passed as amnesty for 20,553 deserters and draft dodgers and including 14,000 deserters and absentees still at large in Canada who are declared never to have served.

The government has no power to pass an order in council such as this, over the head of parliament while it is in session. It is ultra vires and against the provisions of the criminal code.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have read carefully the hon. member's motion, and I do not see any urgency in it which would warrant a motion for adjournment of the house to discuss a matter of public importance. The estimates of the Minister of National Defence will be before the house, at which time the hon. member will have an opportunity to discuss the matter.

Mr. CHURCH: Do I understand then that there will be an opportunity to raise this question on the minister's estimates or on the motion to go into supply?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Mr. CHURCH: It is an insult to the glorious dead of two wars.

[Later:]

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence to table the order in council passed yesterday, and the opinion of the Department of Justice.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): The order in council was tabled yesterday.

WHEAT

LOADING OF SHIPS AT CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. KNIGHT (Saskatoon City): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister give the house assurance that there is sufficient wheat in Churchill to provide a full load for each of the six large ships which are there or en route? I am sorry I did not give the minister much notice of this question.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I received notice of the hon. member's question just before I came into the house, and I asked that inquiries be made to enable me to make a full answer. I may say, however, that my understanding is that there has been and is sufficient wheat at Churchill to load all the vessels on the way to that port. I know also that a certain amount of freight has been shipped into Churchill in the hope of exporting it to the old country via that port, but instructions have been issued that the grain shall have priority. I am making further inquiries, and if I get anything additional I shall be glad to give it to the hon. member.

Mr. KNIGHT: For the minister's information I may say that a wire received from Churchill to-day says that they are 100,000 bushels short of the amount necessary to load these ships.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION—WINNIPEG NEWSPAPERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. L. SMITH (Calgary West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, of which I have not given him notice, but it is really a pro forma matter. I understand a gentleman by the name of Card made a report some months ago to the minister with reference to the dispute in Winnipeg between a newspaper and its employees. I do not think this has been made public and I would ask the minister if he will table the report.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): I will consider the request of my hon. friend.

Mr. SMITH (Calgary West): I gather that the minister will conclude something by to-morrow.

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT

ALLEGED WASTE OF FOOD IN CAFETERIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. A. CRUICKSHANK (Fraser Valley): I should like to direct a question to a minister, but I do not know to which one I should direct it; perhaps I should address it to you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know the name of the stupid, inefficient servant of this government who issued instructions that food should be deliberately wasted in the cafeteria.

FOREIGN EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCULLOUGH (Assiniboia): I should like to address a question to the Acting Minister of Finance, based on an article appearing in the Ottawa Journal of August 13, 1946. It reads:

> Watertown police shun Canadian money
> The discount on Canadian money in Watertown and other northern New York state cities is six cents on the dollar to-day. In most stores the charge is one cent on a dime,—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member is out of order; he should ask his question without making statements.

MOTOR VEHICLES

PEACE RIVER DISTRICT—INCREASE IN PRICE OF FORD TRACTOR PARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. SOLON E. LOW (Peace River): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. Protests have reached me with regard to a recent twenty per cent increase in the Peace River district in the price of repair parts for Ford tractors. Are these parts manufactured in Canada?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): The department of reconstruction does not regulate prices. I know nothing about any recent increase or adjustment in the prices of Ford parts, and of course I cannot say whether the parts referred to by my hon. friend are made in Canada.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROVISION FOR CONSTRUCTION OF LINE FROM BARRAUTE TO KIASK FALLS, QUEBEC

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee on bill No. 345, respecting the construction of a line of railway by Canadian National Railway Company from Barraute to Kiask Falls on the Bell river in the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1—Construction and completion.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to say a few words about this bill, and I imagine that as a result of what I say the minister will give us some information. I notice in the proceedings of the committee which considered this bill a few days ago that a witness is reported as having said that there are about 75,000 people living in this area. The minister is reported on page 45 to have asked:

> Are there not about 75,000 people in that country?
> The Witness: There are about 75,000 in the country.

I hope that the support given by this house to this bill is not based on information such as that. The whole riding of Chapleau, which extends for 350 miles from east to west, has only about 45,000 people, or less.

Mr. BRADETTE: There are many more than that.

Mr. MacNICOL: The 1941 census shows 43,416, so when I said "or less" I was about correct. I do not usually make misstatements.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I am for the bill, and I am not making this statement to oppose it, but I do want to feel certain that the line is going to pay. We have altogether too many branch lines on the Canadian National Railways that are nothing but white elephants.

I notice that the pulpwood from Barraute will have to be taken by freight to Windsor Mills in Quebec, a distance of about 500 miles. Is that not quite a long distance to take pulpwood? I am just wondering whether it would be an investment. I notice in the evidence this statement by a witness: "We know that the soil is excellent." There is no reason why it should not be. It appears to me to be the same type of country as in northern Ontario and should be a good farming country. But it is the next statement made by the witness that makes me wonder:

> There is a rather happy compensating feature which is present. This whole country slopes to the north and the consequence is that as you go north you lower the elevation.

The elevation at Barraute is 1,024 feet above sea level, and at lake Mattagami, a hundred miles north, the elevation is 765 feet. That is not much of a slope in 100 miles. I know the minister's task as administrator of this department is an onerous one, but I would suggest that in receiving from the Canadian National Railways applications for branch lines all the particulars pertaining to the country to be run through be studied by him as well as by those who furnish him with reports. I am not opposing the bill. In fact I am all for that country being opened up. But the little information supplied is not a very good foundation on which to base a programme of construction.

I suggest to the minister, although this has nothing to do with the bill, that when it comes to the construction of branch lines he consider extending the branch line in Saskatchewan from St. Walburg to Heinsburg, a distance of about forty miles. That is a cut-off which the whole population in that part of Saskatchewan have been begging for, so that they would have a through line from Prince Albert to Edmonton. The proposed branch line in this bill is all right, but we must keep in mind other branch lines. I would also suggest that the Canadian National railway and the Canadian Pacific railway from Peace River west be completed.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. May I ask the hon. member for Davenport not to discuss other branch lines than the one referred to in the bill.

Mr. MacNICOL: I have gone as far as I wanted to go, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member for Davenport has stated that the minister should make sure in presenting any of these projects that the information which he receives is accurate. The minister can only rely on the information he receives from the engineers in the Department of Transport as well as from those in the Canadian National Railways. I have studied this project fairly thoroughly, and I have come to the conclusion that it is a good one, and one which should be profitable.

The hon. gentleman has asked three questions. With reference to his first question I say to him that the Canadian National railways is not relying exclusively on the factor of population, but it is relying on the natural resources, the timber, agriculture, colonization and fisheries, and upon other indications that were given by the witness before the committee. So far as the soil is concerned I cannot say a great deal more than was said by the witness himself. He is an expert, perhaps one of the best engineers in this country, and he considers that there is a good agricultural area there. It is a clay belt lying to the west of Bell river, and the slope is a gradual one. He goes on further to say that it is a successful agricultural area because people have already established themselves along the transcontinental line north of Barraute.

Mr. MacNICOL: The pulpwood will have to be taken out on the transcontinental down to Quebec, across the bridge, and to Windsor Mills where the mill is, because the timber limits in that district have become practically exhausted. What is the basis for the statement that there is a population of 75,000 in that area?

Mr. CHEVRIER: According to the 1944 statistics the population in that area was 75,000, approximately 15,000 of whom were living in towns and villages and 60,000 in rural areas.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am not opposing the bill, but I want to point out that it should be founded on correct information. If there are 75,000 people there now, the 1941 census was wholly wrong because it states that there were 43,416 people in the whole Chapleau riding.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The statistics I have show 67,689 for 1941.

Mr. MacNICOL: For where?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Those are the figures given in the agricultural census for the Abitibi area excluding Timiskaming.

Mr. MacNICOL: This branch line runs north from Barraute to near Kiask Falls on the Bell river. In that area the population must be very small. Perhaps over the whole area, 350 miles from the eastern boundary of Chapleau riding to the Ontario border, there might be a population of 43,416, but obviously there cannot be 75,000 people in the area served by the railway. The whole area covers a distance of only 350 miles from the Ontario border to right down beyond Raymond, and the population according to the census is 43,416. I am simply pointing out that we cannot base our judgment on a statement such as that, that the population is 75,000.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The construction of this branch line is not being decided on that alone.

Mr. MacNICOL: No, but that was put up to the committee as being a real argument for the construction of the railway. I know that the country is full of pulpwood and that it would be a good thing to get it out. I cannot understand why a mill is not proposed at Kiask Falls. Then the pulpwood would have to be hauled only a few miles instead of taking it down to Windsor Mills, a distance of 525 miles.

Mr. COLDWELL: How long is it estimated the pulpwood will last in that area?

Mr. CHEVRIER: In perpetuity.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is there a reforestation plan there?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No. But the plan provides for taking off about two per cent of the cut per year, which amounts to approximately 100,000 cords. I have not the exact figure here, but it was given in the evidence.

Mr. MacNICOL: It was 100,000 cords per year.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I thank the hon. gentleman. I thought that is what it was, and according to the plan the larger timber will be taken off and the small timber allowed to grow. The engineers are positive, according to the evidence given by Mr. Fairweather to the committee, that there is not the slightest danger of that area being stripped, but that the timber can be cut in perpetuity in accordance with the plan.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: The hon. member for Davenport mentioned a railway in northern Saskatchewan.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I ruled the hon. member for Davenport out of order when he referred to that branch line. I do not think this bill is wide enough to allow of the discussion of any railway except the one referred to in the bill.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, that we are discussing the expenditure of money for a branch line in this particular area to serve a mill, and surely the hon. member has the right to suggest that when we can build a railway fifty-five miles long to serve a mill we can build branch lines to serve a very large number of people who have been settled in a farming area for thirty years. That is what the hon. member for North Battleford wants to do and what the hon. member for Davenport wants to do. Surely the comparison is legitimate, in discussing a bill of this description. The St. Walburg people have been waiting for quite a long time.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Tho hon. member will be able to discuss his branch line from St. Walburg to Bonnyville fully on my estimates, if he wishes, and, I hope, later to-day. But I think the ruling of the chairman is a correct one, that we are dealing with this one bill and should limit the discussion to that.

Mr. CHURCH: I am not opposed to the principle of the bill, but I want to point out that we had a very unfortunate experience after the last war with the Canadian National and the branch lines they built to parallel other railways. Consequently the bill, while the minister has given a very fine explanation of it from an economic standpoint, an agricultural standpoint, and regarding the resources of the district, violates a sound principle enunciated by the Drayton-Acworth commission in 1917, namely that branch lines shall not be constructed until a report on them has been received from the railway commission. The railway commission is now the board of transport commissioners; they have never seen this bill. In the next place, the minister has said that the line is going to cost $75,000 a mile—a lot of money; the estimate amounts to $4,125,000; and regarding the agricultural features of the enterprise, with the shortage of farm implements and labour and the rest, it is a question if very much can be expected in agriculture there as yet. Since becoming a member of parliament I have been a warm supporter of the development of the mineral industry of this country both in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and admire what it has done for the country. In Quebec the Abitibi company have done a good deal of development and there has been a lot of litigation, but I hope the enterprise will be successful in the end.

One of the defects I see in this recommendation is that no supply of cheap light and power is assured as was proposed when the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario railway was built in Ontario. The mistake was that the T. & N.O. should have been electrified, thus resulting in a vast increase in the production of gold, silver and other base metals in Ontario. A provision of this kind should be made in the present bill.

While I support the principle of the bill, I want to find out how the minister proposes to finance it. An expenditure of over $4,000,000 is involved; and I am afraid that if we pass this one bill without any criticism it is going to open up the floodgates for the construction of branch lines. After the last war branch lines were constructed all over the country, many of them duplications of existing facilities, and many of them afterwards scrapped. That will not be so in this case, because I believe this is a good venture for the government. But I would point out to the minister that if he has all this money to spend out of the vast vote he received last year, he might spend some of it on better rolling stock and other equipment in Ontario.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): If I remember rightly—I am not relying wholly on my memory; I have Hansard before me—the minister, when the bill was introduced, referred to a guarantee of the operating costs over the first few years. I think we should be sympathetic towards this bill; I am personally sympathetic, but at the same time I feel that I am being asked to vote for something which I do not know enough about. I have not had a chance to read carefully the report of the committee, which was put in our hands only recently, but unless there is something in it which I have not observed I do not think it covers what I think the minister undertook to give us when we were in committee before, namely a breakdown of the operating revenue and expenditure. Surely that is reasonable, and I am not clear on it, maybe because I have not read the report carefully enough.

At page 48 of the committee's report there is reference to gross revenue over the first six, or perhaps five years of $3,000,000. It gives the percentages, which I will not bother to read. Perhaps the minister will read them and will give us the facts. But it seems to me that this represents a very large anticipated revenue from cordwood. I imagine we have to take the risk of not having a full operation and of only getting the smaller amount of $3 per cord which is referred to in the penalty clause. But will the minister now give us a breakdown of operating revenue and expenditure, and just in detail what he expects? I may add that when we were on this matter before the minister agreed that we should for the first period regard as virtually nil the revenue other than that from the cordwood.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I think I can answer that. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario asked a number of questions when this bill was discussed in the house, and when I answered the hon. member for St. John-Albert I said to him that the matter would be referred to a committee. The hon. gentleman immediately got to his feet and said "If that is the case it is quite satisfactory to me; any questions we have will be asked there", and the hon. gentleman then resumed his seat. An opportunity was given to discuss in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines any of the matters which had to do with the construction of this railway, from the point of view either of cost or of natural resources or traffic, and that was done one day this week.

With reference to the statement which my hon. friend asks for, the statement which was given by the expert before the committee was that the total expected revenues would be $3,007,000. These expected revenues from traffic in that area were broken down in this manner—and I think perhaps this is what my hon. friend wants: 68·5 per cent of the revenue of $3,007,000 is to be obtained from pulpwood, or that is the expectation; 7·3 per cent from agricultural commodities and other outward freight down to Barraute, and then on through the transcontinental; 14·2 per cent represents inbound freight, settlers' supplies and things of that nature; and 10 per cent represents passenger, mail and express. That is the manner in which the engineer for the Canadian National railways broke it down. It was also stated that the out-of-pocket expenses would be $2,016,000, and there would be an anticipated surplus at the end of the six year operation, thanks to the guarantee of the Canada Paper, of some $97,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not going to pursue the smaller items in the estimate of revenue; I think we have to rely on the railway's experts for them, but I think it is reasonable to ask, and I do ask, how this 68·5 per cent is made up,—how much of it comes from the paper company, and exactly what it represents in total of cords and freight rate on cords hauled.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I cannot give the freight rate. That is a matter to be fixed. All I can say is that the 68·5 per cent which represents about two-thirds of the revenue will come from pulpwood which will be cut either by Canada Paper or by settlers who will go there.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): How can the minister say he has this definite estimate of revenue if the freight rate is not fixed?

Mr. CHEVRIER: What I mean is that it has not been fixed so far as the board of transport commissioners is concerned, but it has been agreed upon by the rail company and Canada Paper.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): What is the rate?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not know what it is.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not want to be persistent or disageeable or to block things, but it does not seem to me reasonable. Unless I read this carelessly, this question was not brought out before the committee. I expected to find it brought out here but it is not here, and we are asked to vote on something as to which we are not informed at all. It does not seem to me a reasonable proceeding. The question I am asking is one which, I think, an ordinary intelligent child would ask if a proposal of this kind were put before it, and this house of mature people is asked to vote on something on which the vital figure is not given. That is a plain, inescapable statement of fact.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman. He says he is in favour of the principle of the bill, and notwithstanding that he asks that there be given here information which it is difficult to give. The hon. gentleman could have gone to the committee and have obtained this information from the expert who was there to give it, but now he comes before the committee and asks me to give it to him. I will give it. I will get the experts right now and obtain it for him. But I am wondering whether the hon. gentleman is in favour of the bill, as he says he is, or whether he is against it. Why does he not speak up and tell us where he really stands, whether he is for it or against it.

Mr. BRADETTE: He cannot have it both ways. Why did he not go before the committee?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The reason that I was not before the committee is that I am not a member of the committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That makes no difference. Any member of the House of Commons can go before a committee.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not a member of the committee and I did not have notice of the meeting of the committee. I believe that even the Minister of Veterans Affairs, with his notorious fairness, will admit that one has quite a number of things to work at at this time of the session.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I think I am doing my share.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am asking a question which I think is reasonable. Frankly, if I may express my real feeling, I think the minister was negligent in not bringing this out before the committee, as he said he would do in the House of Commons, and I thought when I asked that question—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. gentleman has said that I was negligent in not bringing this out before the committee. I do not think he has any right to say that. It is a reflection on me, and I object to his making that statement.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Withdraw.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not wish to reflect on the minister. I will withdraw it and say I think it was a regrettable oversight on the part of the minister not to have brought this out before the committee. However, what I am coming to is this. I want to ask the minister a simple question. Does he think that this house should pass on this $4,000,000 without having knowledge of the question, which I believe he will agree with me—if he does not, let him say so—is the very first question that any intelligent man would ask before voting on this measure? Does he think it is an unreasonable question? If not, should it not be on the record? Does he want this matter voted on? Let us assume that this all goes wrong, as branch lines have done in the past. Let us assume that it goes wrong some years from now, that it does not turn out very well. Does he want us to be put in the position of having it appear that we all voted for it without knowing what we were doing? I do not want to be put in that position, and I doubt whether he does either.

An hon. MEMBER: He is opposed to the bill.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I am not opposed to the bill.

[Mr. Macdonnell.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman asked that question when we discussed the matter before, and he will remember that at that time he said, "Oh, all right; if that is the position, that it is going to be referred to the committee, then it is all right".

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): And the question answered.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend said a moment ago he was not a member of the committee. That is true, but if he was interested, as he says he is, he could have gone to the committee as the member for Peel went to a committee and asked permission to give evidence and was heard. That hon. gentleman was granted that permission, and so could my hon. friend have obtained it. He could have asked one of his colleagues, a member of the committee, to submit the question, if he did not care to follow that course. He saw fit not to take either course, and I had every reason to take it for granted that he was satisfied. He is not satisfied, and of course he has every right to ask for the information which he wishes to have. The expert of the Canadian National Railways has come forward and has made a statement after a complete survey was made not only of the natural resources of the province of Quebec but also of the area that is to be tapped and where the projected line will go. Not only has he gone into that, but he has also gone into the financial aspect, and his statement, which I have no reason to disbelieve—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Nor I.

Mr. CHEVRIER: —since, as I believe, he is one of the best railway engineers in this country—

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I would think so.

Mr. CHEVRIER: —and as he has shown on more than one occasion—his statement, I say, is that according to the estimates the revenue will be three million and seven, and of that so much will come from pulpwood and so much from other sources. He was not asked at that time to break down the revenue of three million and seven, and although my hon. friend says it was an oversight on my part, I say there is no obligation on the part of the Minister of Transport to take that attitude in committee, provided he is satisfied in his own mind that the statements given by the expert are fair and reasonable.

Mr. MACKENZIE: It is the duty of the committee.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The committee has certain duties to perform, and it did perform those duties. The minister also has responsibilities, and he may rely on the evidence and on the integrity of his advisers who bring these matters before him. The hon. gentleman asks what is the freight rate. I am informed that it will be $6 per cord.

Mr. JACKMAN: Between what points does that $6 apply? Is it just the 55 miles of new projected railway?

Mr. CHEVRIER: On 43·7 miles from Barraute to the southeastern corner of the township of Laas.

Mr. JACKMAN: Six dollars a cord seems extraordinarily high for the company to stand if it is to cover only 43 miles. How far is it from the middle portion of the projected line?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The $6 a cord is from the southeast corner of the township of Laas to Barraute on to the transcontinental across the Quebec bridge into the area of the Quebec mills, and it is an average that has been struck.

Mr. GOURD (Chapleau) (Translation): Mr. Chairman, this matter concerns my constituency. I must say frankly that it is the same old argument which our Tory or Toronto friends have always brought up against the province of Quebec.

I should say, in passing, that this proposed railway line of 47 miles from Barraute northward to Kiask Falls about which we have just heard, will not only supply a paper mill, as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) said a few moments ago, but it will primarily develop land settlement. And, as has been evidenced for a long time, we have lands suitable for settlement. It should not be forgotten that at the time of my arrival at Amos in 1912, in the very area with which we are now dealing, there was absolutely no development there. Today, we have a population of about 600,000. This goes to show that the area is worthy of being developed. Now, the proposed railway line would serve timber limits containing 6,000,000 cords of pulpwood, and consequently if that line can handle 150,000 cords per year, we may be sure that the receipts will exceed the expenses incurred, and will not cost one cent to the Canadian National Railways.

Profits will be derived from the operation of the railway line from Barraute to the great water power site of Kiask Falls. The profits made will be the same as those which have always been drawn from our part of the Abitibi district? The Abitibi district and northern Quebec are not responsible for the deficit of the Canadian National Railways; on the contrary, it is rather that area which covers the deficits that have resulted from the fact that too many branch lines have been built in the west and in Ontario, while we never had our share in Quebec.

To me, such charges are truly ridiculous, and show that those who make them are ignorant of facts.

That line will make possible the development of the north country. As is well known, large quantities of ore are to be found in the north. Full particulars have been given during the discussion on gold mining, and everyone knows that the proposed line is essential to the prosperity of this country.

The line will be built not only in the interests of my constituency, but in the interests of the whole province and even of Canada at large, and I hope that this measure will be passed unanimously.

Mr. HACKETT: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make it clear that it is not a question of opposition on the part of the city of Toronto, the matter is simply that—

Mr. CHEVRIER: It looks like it.

Mr. HACKETT: No.

Mr. GOURD (Chapleau): It is the same old story, they are always against Quebec.

Mr. HACKETT: No. At all events, I may point out to my opponents that I do not come from Toronto.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Should I say: so much the better?

Mr. HACKETT: And my greatest wish is that the railway line should be built.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. HACKETT: I would like that railway line to be built, but I want to know whether it will pay sufficiently to meet its cost. I wish to make it clear to the hon. member that we were asking only for particulars, we simply asked about the freight rates so as to know what the revenue will be. To my mind those are reasonable questions to ask.

Mr. GOURD (Chapleau): Why did you not come to the committee? That was discussed in the railway committee.

Mr. HACKETT: What did the hon. member say?

Mr. GOURD (Chapleau): All that was discussed in the railway committee.

Mr. HACKETT: No, that was not discussed. I have before me the committee's report, and those questions were not answered. That is why we ask for that information to-day.

I rather incline to think that the minister was right, when he said a few moments ago, that he would obtain those particulars. I am sure that he must have them, because he is a shrewd man, a business man. I could not believe that he would support the building of a railway line that would not pay for itself, but as a matter of fact there is nothing on record to show that the line would pay for itself.

Mr. CHEVRIER: There will never be anything to prove that this railway line can be a paying proposition, as long as it has not been built.

Mr. HACKETT: I must say to the honourable minister that he is mistaken, because the planning of the undertaking should indicate that profits can be expected, and for that reason, we should be told how much freight can be handled and what rates can be charged. We only ask for reasonable information, so that, as reasonable men, we may pass judgment on the bill; in the absence of such information it would be impossible for the government as well as for the opposition to pass judgment on that matter.

Then, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the honourable the minister to do what he suggested a few moments ago when he said that he could ask his experts to come with the figures we have requested. I am sure that he has them on file, and if he would consent to leave this bill in abeyance until this afternoon, for instance—

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, no.

Mr. HACKETT: Or postpone this discussion for half an hour, if it is more convenient.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, no.

Mr. HACKETT: He could send for the information with a view to clearing up the situation. Moreover. I wish to assure the hon. member for Chapleau that there is no opposition to the project itself, provided it is reasonable. We merely ask to be shown that the project is reasonable.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I must remind the hon. member that on the second reading of the bill, I placed on Hansard figures showing the estimated revenue, expenses, and surplus. It is impossible, in a discussion like this one, to prove beyond all question that the proposed railway line will be a paying proposition or not; we can only submit an estimation and that is what I have done. I must admit quite frankly that I cannot prove beyond peradventure to the hon. members that the proposed railway will be a paying proposition, but I can tell them that the C.N.R. experts who have made a comprehensive and very careful study, have come to the conclusion that it will yield $97,000 a year. Those are the figures I can give to the hon. member and I think he should accept them, since they are given not only by myself, in good faith, in my official capacity, but also by my advisers.

Mr. HACKETT: The good faith of the minister is not questioned at all. Besides, he knows that I have the deepest respect for his person. He gave us the conclusions, while what we want are the facts on which they rest.

Mr. RICHARD (Ottawa East): You could have obtained them before.

Mr. HACKETT: I am convinced that our good friend the hon. member for Chapleau, who is a shrewd business man, would not buy a farm simply on the strength of the owner's assertion that it was a good one. He would want to know the dimensions, the kind of timber it contains, and whether the soil is good, and so on. That is not the kind of question for which we request an answer, and when those matters have been dealt with and we have been given the necessary information, the opposition, so far as I can speak on its behalf, will be satisfied. Its concern is that the proposed railway line should bring good profits.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario) (Text): I want to add a word. I think I understood what the minister said, because he speaks so clearly in French. I wish to assure him that I am not asking for the last detail. I repeat, I am in favour of the principle of the bill. I will say that I was negligent in not arranging to have these questions asked, but he will agree that it is a reasonable question. The reason I am asking the question is that if anyone asks me why I voted for this bill I shall be able to tell him. I am merely asking the minister to give me one vital figure. I know that the minister cannot be held to a dollar, but I ask him how much of the $600,000 that is expected will be obtained from the carriage of pulpwood on that line.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I imagine that what the hon. gentleman is requesting is the proportion of the amount of revenue derived from the $3,007,000 expected over the period of six years. I can only refer him to the evidence of Mr. Fairweather, who said that of the $3,007,000, 68·5 per cent would be derived from the carriage of pulpwood. The hon. gentleman asked that I break that down further, and after I brought one of the officers down here I said to him that that would be obtained from pulpwood at the rate of $6 per cord. What more does the hon. gentleman want than that?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That would have been perfectly satisfactory except that the minister said afterwards, if I understood him, that this amount did not wholly pertain to pulpwood, that it was a charge for a further carriage of—

Mr. HACKETT: It is only one-tenth of the haul. It is over four hundred miles from this point to Windsor Mills.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is 525.

Mr. HACKETT: And only forty-three miles of it are included in the $6 charge for pulpwood; therefore the revenue to be derived from that would possibly be 30 or 40 cents.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I must say that $6 per cord is on the whole route from the south-east corner of Laas down to Windsor Mills.

Mr. HACKETT: Can the minister get that information? I should like him to accept the assurance that all we want is reasonable information which will enable us to deal with the matter in a reasonable way. We do not want to bother or hinder the minister.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member any more information than I have at my disposal. That is the information which was given to me by Mr. Fairweather and which he had available in the committee; and it is based upon this, that in view of the guarantee of Canada Paper there is an estimated surplus traffic in those years of $97,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not understand fully what the hon. member for Chapleau said, but I did hear him say "Tory Toronto"; I presume—although I do not like to think so—that he was speaking more or less unfavourably of my remarks. I must tell the hon. member that there is no one in the house, including my hon. friend himself, who is more anxious to see the province of Quebec developed, than I am. I am sure I have shown that on numerous occasions in all the years I have been here. I want to see Chapleau developed too. So when I rose to express a few words on the bill I was not speaking in opposition to Chapleau riding or to the hon. member himself. I have gone into the matter fully. Perhaps the minister would tell me why the proposal was not for the line to run from Senneterre. I should think that would have shown good judgment. It may be that line running from Barraute along the Taschereau river would be on better land. If that is so, then it is all to the good. But Senneterre is a railway centre. The line through Noranda and Rouyn has many times paid what it cost to put it in there, and I am hopeful that the line now proposed will result in the same thing. It should open up a mineral as well as a pulpwood country.

Mr. BRADETTE: And agricultural.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is all to the good. So the hon. member for Chapleau must not fly off the bat and attack what he calls Tory Toronto, as he chooses to describe the city I come from. After all, we are just as much interested in the development of Canada as are the citizens of any other part of Canada. I have always tried to help the whole country, and I suggest the hon. member would have been wiser to leave me alone, and leave "Tory Toronto" alone—there is no argument in that kind of talk—and argue with the minister to have a mill built at Kiask falls. The drop in the two Kiask rapids is about 100 feet. Then up the Bell river above the falls is Parent lake, which would make an excellent reservoir. If I had been the hon. member I would not have used the argument he used, at all, but would have tried to convince the minister not to take the pulpwood down to Windsor Mills. It would take perhaps a year or two to build a line in the forty miles. I would have argued for the building of a pulp mill at Kiask falls and have the pulpwood taken there. That would give work to the men in Chapleau riding, just as work has been given to the men up in Rouyn on the line to that area.

There is no point in making an attack such as the hon. member has made. I am for the bill; I have not said one word against it. I have the right to ask questions, and I shall never give up my right to do that, to anyone. Later I hope the hon. member will not make speeches along that line, but will urge the building of a mill at Kiask falls and the processing of pulpwood there.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I tell the hon. member this, that in the $6 per cord which was mentioned a minute ago, while it is true that it is revenue which will take the pulpwood from Laas township down to Windsor Mills, there is a corresponding charge for out-of-pocket expenses on the whole line. Perhaps I might answer more specifically from this table which has been brought to my attention. I stated at the outset that the total gross revenue which would be derived for the period of the guarantee, six years, would be $3,007,000, that the total out-of-pocket expenses would be $2,316,000. That is made up of $523,000 over the branch line, $1,466,000 over the balance of the system, and $327,000 for rental of equipment, which leaves a profit before interest of $691,000, and after interest, on construction, of $97,000. Does that clear it up?

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is what I want. I was going to ask the minister that particular question, whether it was over the whole line. I thank the minister for that, and only wish to add that I have always been in favour of the principle. All I wanted was a reason for being able to vote for it, and now the responsible officials of the railway have put it in such a way that I am ready to vote for it.

Mr. McKAY: Is this railway a forerunner of a railway construction policy to be inaugurated in the future by the government? There are many districts in the west of Canada which need railways. I should like to support the principle of the bill. This country has always opened up as the railways have been built; we have to have railways if we are to have settlement. We need increasing population.

Mr. CHEVRIER: All I can tell my hon. friend is this, that the policy of the Canadian National Railways is well known. I have expounded it on several occasions. After careful consideration they came to the conclusion that this was a profitable line to build. Other lines may be brought forward in accordance with the policy of the railways from time to time. That is the only answer I can make.

Mr. McKAY: Some reference was made this morning to railway deficits, and in that connection to western Canada. I have travelled across Canada, as many other hon. members have done, and I have found that in northern Quebec and Ontario there are many miles of transcontinental railway which pass through low revenue producing areas.

Mr. BRADETTE: No; there are very few miles of that kind of railway in northern Ontario or Quebec. I live there, and I know it.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Mr. McKAY: There is very little settlement, and those areas need to be developed. I am not saying anything against them.

Mr. BRADETTE: I am not going to take that lying down.

Mr. McKAY: We have no areas of that kind in western Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I would have to support the hon. member for Cochrane in this respect, because my officials inform me that the national transcontinental in the area in which this branch line is to be built, as well as on the Ontario side, is a paying line.

Mr. BRADETTE: Certainly it is producing revenue and operating surpluses. Let me say this about the traffic that originates in northern Ontario and Quebec, through which that section of the national transcontinental is operating, that it was never intended to be as it is. It was intended to be a transcontinental railway, but it has been prostituted into not being one. I shall have more to say on that, perhaps at another session.

Mr. JACKMAN: Why was this bill not referred to the standing committee on wholly-owned government railways and steamships? I am suggesting that if it had been it would have obviated some of the difficulties we have run into to-day; and while the constitution of the two railway committees of the house is such that this bill might be directed to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, inasmuch as it has to do with government railways it would be better in future if the reference were made to the railways and shipping committee which considers operation of government-owned lines. That committee meets for a week or ten days during the year and we become conversant with railway problems.

The CHAIRMAN: I would remind the hon. member that there was a motion to refer this bill to the railway committee, and I submit that his remarks would have been in order then. It was agreed that the bill should be referred to the railway committee.

Mr. HAZEN: I think the Minister of Transport should answer the question.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The reason is quite clear. It has been the practice of this house to refer proposed branch line bills to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, because they are not yet constructed, and until they are and become part of the Canadian National system they cannot be considered by the committee on railways and shipping. Once a line has been constructed it becomes referable to the railways and shipping committee because it is the business of that committee to consider government-owned operations.

Mr. HAZEN: Is the Canadian National going to build this line?

Mr. CHEVRIER: A portion will be built by Canadian National Railways and a portion by contract.

Mr. ZAPLITNY: The minister told us that it is the plan of the Canada Paper Company to cut two per cent of the standing pulpwood each year. Is there some contract between the company and the Quebec government or between the company and the C.N.R. to that effect, or is the whole matter being left completely in the hands of the Canada Paper Company?

Mr. CHEVRIER: There is no contract, but I am informed that the province of Quebec has given the Canada Paper Company timber limits of about 700 square miles.

Mr. HACKETT: Is it a timber limit or a timber licence which is renewed from year to year?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can only refer my hon. friend to the act passed by the province of Quebec; he will be more familiar with that than I am. It is chapter 29 of the statutes of 1945, assented to on June 1, 1945. My hon. friend will find by referring to that act the nature of the licence or limit which was obtained. There is no contract; I simply referred to the policy of the Canada Paper Company and I was quoting a statement made by Mr. Fairweather when he gave his evidence before the committee.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS

Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act—

464. Administration of soldier settlement, British family settlement, general land settlement and Veterans' Land Act, including engineering and other investigational planning and subdivision expenses that do not add tangible value to real property, $5,443,400.

Mr. BROOKS: Before this item passes there is a question I should like to ask the minister having to do with the Soldier Settlement Act and the Veterans' Land Act. As we know, the soldier settlement board has to do mostly with soldiers of the first war, while the Veterans' Land Act has to do with soldiers of the second war who are taking up land or small holdings. There are two organizations, the soldier settlement board and the Veterans' Land Act. I notice that there is one director for the Soldier Settlement Act and the Veterans' Land Act, which is a good thing, but could not this idea be carried through the whole administration of the two acts? The work being done across the country is practically the same, because they are dealing with soldiers and land in the same areas. Why should there be two staffs across Canada to do practically the same work? That does not seem to me to be very economical. I notice on page 256 that there are seven district superintendents under the Veterans' Land Act. I notice also there is a reduction from five to one in the district superintendents, soldier settlement, while there is an added superintendent, agricultural branch. On the same page it states that there are 39 field supervisors, soldier settlement, grade 2, and 54 field supervisors, soldier settlement, grade 1. It would appear that there must be considerable duplication, and it would be in the interests of economy to have the same administration handle both the settlement board and the Veterans' Land Act.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I agree with every word my hon. friend has said. There is a complete merger of the administration of the two acts at the present time. I think my parliamentary assistant will want to supplement what I have said.

Mr. TUCKER: What I have to say will also answer the question asked last night in regard to the actual cost of administration of the Soldier Settlement Act. Obviously employees of the soldier settlement board are also doing work which comes under the Veterans' Land Act. The administration of the two acts is fully merged. Some work is being done which might be regarded as strictly attributable to soldier settlement board activities. It is hard to separate them in the estimates when they are working in connection with both acts. When there is one director over these two land settlement acts it is obvious that there cannot be a clear-cut line of demarcation in the office and field services charged to each act. In 1945, when the Veterans' Land Act work made up by far the greater portion of the activities, the department made as close an estimate as possible of costs chargeable to each act for the fiscal year 1945-46. With the greatly improved standing of soldier settlement accounts brought about by the debt adjustment under P.C. 10472, begun in 1943 and still going on, the cost of soldier settlement administration was estimated at $120,000. This estimate for 1945-46 is now confirmed and will stand for the present fiscal year 1946-47. The estimate should be considered on the basis that there is the complete merger suggested by the hon. member for Royal.

In regard to P.C. 10472 our committee recommended that the provisions for applications under that order in council should be extended to September 1, 1946. It was thought by the government that that hardly gave veterans who might wish to apply time enough, so the order in council which was passed on August 8, 1946 extended the time for application under P.C. 10472 to December 31 of this year.

Mr. BROOKS: The idea is that eventually both acts will be administered under the one head.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are now, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BROOKS: Are the thirty-nine field supervisors, soldier settlement grade 2, doing Veterans' Land Act supervision as well?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. BROOKS: And the fifty-four, grade 1?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD: Is the veteran to be allowed to farm the way he thinks best, or will he be told how to farm by some supervisor who does not know anything about it?

Mr. MACKENZIE: There are regional advisory committees all across Canada, and he is given the best advice possible consistent with the prospects of his future success in settlement.

Mr. HATFIELD: Then he is going to be advised every time what to plant, or how to farm.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. HATFIELD: Or when to sell?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, he is only advised with regard to the reasonable prospects in settlement.

Mr. HATFIELD: He has been in the past. He has been told what to plant, and how to farm, and all about it, by some supervisor who in many cases did not know anything about farming.

[Mr. Tucker.]

Mr. MACKENZIE: No; if he has the personality and the prospects for success he is allowed to develop his own initiative in regard to what he going to do.

Mr. WRIGHT: During the past few years, as I think the superintendent or director will admit, the habit has grown up of many of the departments of government using the field force of the soldier settlement board for various other purposes,—under the dominion farm loan act and many other government activities. They have been doing a good deal of work for the government other than that which is directly connected with their jobs. That was all right during the period when they were not being overworked, but at the present time that staff should be and I believe is fully occupied in dealing with the new settlers. This work they are doing for the other departments should, I think, be taken off their shoulders. I suggest to the minister that something be done about it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I agree with my hon. friend's observations. But the general policy is that the investigations which they make for other departments are not supposed to interfere with their essential obligations in regard to soldier settlement.

Mr. WRIGHT: Nevertheless they have only so many hours in the day in which to work, and if they have to make investigations and reports for some other departments it means that part of their time is occupied with those matters.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes, but we have field staffs which do nothing else but these investigations.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The minister will admit that very often these men were employed in other work, and therefore it was almost impossible to get at the actual cost of operating the soldier settlement board. I asked a number of questions with regard to that last night at eleven o'clock, and the minister said he would give the answers.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The cost of what?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The cost of collections, the administration under the soldier settlement board.

Mr. TUCKER: I have already given the costs. It was very hard to be exact, because, as the hon. member says, the acts are administered together. One of the main reasons for some extra cost of administration is the administration of order in council P.C. 10472, which, as I stated already, has been extended to the end of this year. The costs are estimated at $120,000. The hon. member wanted to know, I believe, the number of cancellations during the last two years. The answer is that there have been five cancellations in that period, and just one of these was an eviction. In many cases the settler moves away and it is necessary to cancel, because a quick claim cannot be obtained from him, or there is some other difficulty, but during the past two years there have been five cancellations or terminations or rescissions, and one of them an eviction.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Has the minister figures showing the relation between the cost of administration or collection by the soldier settlement board and the amount collected?

Mr. TUCKER: That was given before the committee. There are extensive tables, for which I would refer the hon. member to pages 336 to 341 inclusive, of the proceedings of the committee on veterans affairs, showing the collections through the whole period. There is there shown collections for the period from April 1, 1945 to March 31, 1946, from April 1, 1944 to March 31, 1945, and so on right up to date. The exact figures are given—the payments, which are made, the prepayments which are made, and by districts; it is a complete and exhaustive statement, and I believe the hon. gentleman will find there everything he wants. I can give the committee, though, the highlights of it. The actual statement of course indicates that the position of the soldier settler contracts has been improved amazingly, particularly during the last four years.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: War prices.

Mr. TUCKER: Well, we hope that good prices will continue. It is also the hope of my hon. friend, and I think, a hope which will be realized.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: We only hope that it will not be as a result of war.

Mr. TUCKER: I think we should pay a tribute to the wonderful work of the soldier settlers when they really get a chance of paying up their accounts, and I am very happy to pay that tribute to them. These are the highlights: 2,621 settlers, or one-third of the total active settlers as of March 31, 1942, have repaid their loans in full in cash and received title to their farms. In the four year period soldier settlers paid in cash on their contracts $5,476,489. Of this amount, $3,292,000 was in the form of payments on current instalments, and $2,183,000, prepayments in advance of maturity dates—an amazing record of desire to pay up. A review of the statistics shows that 85 per cent of the present total of 4,276 soldier settlers should have little difficulty in paying out their loans under the present contracts.

That brings into question P.C. 10472, the right to apply under which has been extended to the end of this year in accordance with the recommendations of our committee. The average age of the soldier settlers is just under fifty-seven years, and the average debt is $1,160.

Mr. McKAY: Would the hon. member give the most recent figure of the number of soldier settlers still on the land who have not yet obtained clear title?

Mr. MACKENZIE: 4,276.

Mr. McKAY: How many of those titles were acquired during the past year?

Mr. MACKENZIE: For the calendar year to date, 620.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: The answer which I did not get from the minister, although I assume it is in the figures, is the relation between the amount collected from the soldier settlers, particularly in the period say from 1926, and the actual cost of collecting it. I just want it roughly.

Mr. TUCKER: I will give the figure for the period April 1, 1945 to March 31, 1946. That is the first table here.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is not what I wanted. I wanted the picture from 1926.

Mr. TUCKER: Well, the whole thing is here.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The hon. member wants a composite percentage relationship?

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That is right. I want the amount collected and the cost of collecting it.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We will get that.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: It is important. For instance, I notice that a group of 750 soldier settlers in Saskatchewan who owed originally $2,800,000 and had paid off a little more than half of that, $1,500,000, find that they still owe the government $3,800,000. Although they paid off more than half of what they originally owed, they now owe more than when they started.

Mr. MACKENZIE: In reply to my hon. friend's question of a few minutes ago, the estimate of the officials is that the cost of administration is less than one per cent of the expenditure.

Mr. TUCKER: The hon. member will get that from the figures I gave. The collections in the last four years were $5,476,000. If you take the average cost of administration at $120,000 per year, you get just about one per cent.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: That does not give the picture for all those years back in the 1930's when wheat was down and inspectors were going all over the country trying to collect and the settlers could not pay anything. This last four years was a very favourable period. I agree with the minister, and I was glad to hear him say it, that these settlers desire more than anything else to pay off their debts. For twenty years and more they have been struggling to do that, and I wish I could get the officials to realize the plight these people are in and to recognize their good intentions. I have a number of cases in my own constituency, with which naturally I am familiar. I received a letter from the wife of one of these soldier settlers not long ago. She wanted to know what could be done to get title to their land. The man and his wife are on a quarter-section of land, and the soldier settlement board refused to grant them title, although they had asked for reductions and had bought and later sold another quarter-section of land and paid the proceeds into the board. The actual figures as given to me were that they had already paid off $3,000 on their land, had bought another quarter-section which they sold at $1,600 and paid that in, but they still could not get title to their own land. The doctor has ordered this soldier, who is getting up in the sixties, to go to a warmer climate. He cannot stand the hard work any longer, and they want to sell their land but cannot get title to it. Is there any machinery in the department whereby this man can dispose of his equity in that land so that he can get out from under and retire, and so that there may be some security for his wife?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The settlers are selling their equity in the land every day.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I will take this particular case to the minister.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I shall be very glad to look into it.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: I hope something will be done about it, because it is a deserving case.

Mr. FAIR: The picture is clearing up in connection with the old soldier settlers, and if they live long enough they will perhaps get title to their land. The soldier settlers have taken the stand right along, as many of us have done who have been trying to help them, that unjust burdens were piled upon them to begin with, and while concessions have been made from time to time by different governments in office, the concessions have never caught up with the difficulties in which these old settlers were placed. The government has dealt leniently with veterans of the last great war, but the veterans of the first great war who still have contracts with the board as of March 31, 1944, have been sadly neglected.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. My friend and I know this subject very well. He has been very consistent and devoted in his advocacy, but parliament disposed of this question earlier this session.

Mr. FAIR: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, we are considering item 464, which reads:

> Administration of soldier settlement, British family settlement, general land settlement and Veterans Land Act, including engineering and other investigational planning and subdivision expenses that do not add tangible value to real property, $5,443,400.

I should like to know why I am to be debarred from discussing what other hon. members right alongside of me have been discussing for the last fifteen minutes.

Mr. MACKENZIE: For the reason that my hon. friend made this question the subject matter of a specific resolution which was debated and disposed of by the house previously this session.

The CHAIRMAN: I believe the point of order raised by the minister is well taken. As he says, this matter was discussed under a bill that was brought down in the house, and the decision made then could be changed only by a resolution of the house. The item under consideration is the administration of soldier settlement, and discussion respecting administration would be in order.

Mr. FAIR: I do not see why I should be singled out from everybody. I understand that we have all the same rights here.

The CHAIRMAN: That is right.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The only question my hon. friend is debarred from discussing is the granting of clear title to soldier settlers, which was a specific matter discussed and disposed of by the house previously this session. My hon. friend is not debarred from discussing any other question at all relating to administration.

Mr. FAIR: I hope to be back next session, when I will deal with the question again in detail, as I have done before. I still protest against the treatment of these old veterans.

I notice that the cost of administration is now estimated at $120,000 a year, in comparison with the cost of $1,100,000 during the first twenty-five years of administration of the act. That huge expenditure looks to me like a lot of money wasted, or inefficiency or whatever you wish to call it. I believe it is partly due to a lack of ministerial supervision of the board during the time Hon. T. A. Crerar was minister. I am glad to see that the present minister is doing a little better so far as administration is concerned.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Much better.

Mr. FAIR: I am still looking for something worth while to be done for these old veterans, and I hope it will be done. I would ask why the cost of administration in the first twenty-five years was so heavy as compared with now.

A Canadian Press dispatch in the Ottawa Journal of Wednesday, August 14, states that the Prime Minister of Canada has intimated that Canada is not going to collect some $10,000,000 of debt which Italy owes us, and yet we are continuing to collect from these old soldier settlers of the first great war. It is just too bad. I know from conversations I have had with the minister that he wants to give these old veterans clear title. I want to know where the unseen power rests which will not allow the veterans to be given clear title. I am very sorry that this parliament is tied down as it is. Next session I am going to be back and if we do not get clear title for the old veterans I will see to it, as far as it is in my power to do so, that the veterans of this war get the treatment to which they are entitled and shall not be abused as the old veterans were.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I certainly admire my hon. friend's consistent attitude on this question.

Mr. PEARKES: In the last few days I have had a number of inquiries and expressions of dissatisfaction regarding the Braefoot project in Saanich. I understand the Canadian Legion and the chairman of the rehabilitation council of Victoria have requested an investigation into the administration of that project. I wonder if the minister could say whether an inquiry is being made and an investigation carried out, and if so, whether he has received any report on it.

Mr. TUCKER: The minister will answer that question in a moment. In the meantime, with reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Battle River, he can take what steps he likes as a member of parliament, but I may tell him that the time for applying for a real cut-down in these old debts of the soldier settlers of world war I has been extended to the end of this year. It may be a further extension will be made; on the other hand it may not be made. No one can be sure of that. It will be a matter of government policy. I would ask my hon. friend however to bear in mind that, if he indicates that clear titles will be given in spite of the decision of parliament again this year against his proposal, and as by that he may cause some of these soldier settlers to defer applying under order in council 10472, he should realize exactly what he may be doing. I do not want to start a controversy, but I am pointing out to him that under the order in council of July 31, 1946, a total of 1,765 settlers have had their debts reduced by $1,112,000, or an average of $630 per settler. Eighty per cent of the reductions have been made in Saskatchewan and Alberta, where two-thirds of the total settlement is located and where the adversities of the thirties had the greatest impact. The hon. gentleman was not a member of our committee. Had he been he would have heard the evidence of the director that in some cases such sweeping settlements were made under this order in council that sometimes as much as fifty per cent equity was granted to a settler; and in his campaign, which of course he has every right to carry on if he wishes to do so, I would ask him to bear in mind that the right to apply under P.C. 10472 has been extended only to the end of the year. It will do no harm for him to remember that, when he advises the various soldier settlers.

Mr. FAIR: I thank the parliamentary assistant for the information given, which I already had, and I may say that I advised those persons who have written to me in connection with debts that the offer is still open until September 30.

Mr. TUCKER: December 31, 1946.

Mr. FAIR: This is a new intimation I have received to-day. That however does not remove the injustice. There was a good deal of information given in that return, which was supposed to have cost $2,000—which I do not believe for a moment—showing that great reductions had been made. To my personal knowledge as much as four times the cost of the land at the time the sales were made in my own district has been charged these men, and it will take a good deal of the fifty per cent reduction to equalize the injustice imposed on the old veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE: In reply to the member for Nanaimo, I may say that prices are all being revised in connection with these properties. All the lands have been disposed of. There are a few who are dissatisfied with the settlement and the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. QUELCH: To what time has the date for applications been extended?

Mr. TUCKER: Under P.C. 10472? To December 31 of this year. It is further than the committee asked for.

Mr. QUELCH: It will be remembered that in 1942, when the act was first introduced, the former board under the old soldier settlement act were bitterly criticized on the ground that they had settled men who should not have been settled, and also settled men on land that was not really suitable. There was harsh criticism on that ground, and now as a consequence we find that the officials of the Veterans Land Act are overcautious in deciding what men should be allowed to go on the land.

Mr. MACKENZIE: As recommended by the committee of 1942.

Mr. QUELCH: I realize it is the result of the criticism we made. They are being a little too cautious. I suggest that there should be a margin beyond which they should not go. So long as a man can qualify from the point of view of experience; so long as he can qualify by reason of character, so long as he has the necessary money to put up the ten per cent, I do not think any veteran should be debarred from coming under the Veterans Land Act on the ground that his financial resources are not sufficient to enable him to succeed. If he has the experience, the ability, the character, the money to put down ten per cent, and can get suitable land, he should not be debarred merely on the ground that his chances of success are small. But men have been debarred for that reason.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. FULTON: I had to be in another committee last night and it may be that some information was given with regard to the disposition of the million dollars voted to equalize the costs of small holdings across the country. Was that information given? The point is this. In the committee we tried to find out how that money would be spent and how the costs would be equalized, and we were told that final costs had not been submitted by the directors of the small holdings schemes, which were being built on the cost plus basis, and therefore the final figures as to the cost of houses could not be given. Have the final figures been submitted, and may we have an idea of the average cost of the most expensive house in the country under the small holdings scheme?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Up to the present time just about half of that million dollars has been allotted. I am not in a position at the moment to give the final disposition of the areas and the allotments in respect of the remainder.

Mr. FULTON: Can the minister or his assistant give information as to what will be the average highest cost—$7,500 or $8,000—when the adjustment has been made?

Mr. TUCKER: The hon. member will find that in the table I put on Hansard last night.

Mr. FULTON: Can the hon. member give it to me now?

Mr. TUCKER: The average cost, in the statement put on Hansard yesterday, in regard to the 2,706 units, is, on the basis of the best figures we have so far, $5,969 for the house only. With various services, which include land, water, sewer service, temporary heating, transportation, travel time, drainage, driveways, roads, landscaping, and all other costs to the director, the total average unit cost was $7,058.51. The average cost of those under $6,000, house only, was $5,574.34. The average cost of those over $6,000, house only, was $6,394.17. The average excess per house over $6,000 was $213.36.

Mr. FULTON: I think I am correct in saying that in no case is the down payment being increased, but the extra cost will be amortized over the twenty-five years.

Mr. MACKENZIE: That is correct, at three and a half per cent.

Mr. FULTON: These figures were given last night?

Mr. MACKENZIE: Yes; and the rental cost to the householders over twenty-five years was given by my assistant in the house last night.

Mr. FULTON: Yes. The final point I wish to make is this. It has been stated that before they are allowed in the house some veterans are required to give an undertaking that they will pay whatever the excess over $6,000 may be. Apparently it has not been made clear to them that this excess will be amortized over the years, and that therefore they are not going to have to pay $1,300, or whatever the extra amount is. I know that situation exists because I have had personal information from the place where one of these holdings is situated. I wish the government could make it clear to all veterans that there will be a small extra payment monthly, and I wish the minister would put into effect our recommendation as to the subsidy.

Mr. MACKENZIE: My hon. friend is quite correct.

Mr. FULTON: Will the minister make that clear?

Mr. TUCKER: As a matter of fact the hon. member is quite right as to the extra payments in these cases being spread over twenty-five years. Formerly anything over the $6,000 had to be paid in addition to the cash payment. That was changed by the amendment which we passed and the order in council which was also passed some time ago whereby $600 had to be paid down and the remainder amortized. Of course it may be that somebody has not received that information, or has not been fully apprised of it; but there is no doubt that it will be made clear that the payments will be $600 down in regard to the small holdings which have already been built and the whole amount over the $600 will be spread out over the twenty-five years, less the conditional grant.

Mr. WRIGHT: I wish to concur in what the hon. member for Acadia has said with regard to numbers of veterans failing to qualify for financial reasons. I believe, as he does, that where a veteran has a good character, has farming experience and the ten per cent, there should be no question of his being qualified under the act.

I also wish to raise a point in respect to the values of land being purchased under the Veterans Land Act. In the district I represent the practice being followed is to take the 1941 price of land in that area as the basis on which the board would purchase land. If the vendors ask a price greater than that, the board insists that the applicant or the soldier shall himself put up the difference between the price that is asked and the price that the board will pay. That is working a hardship on a great many veterans, and it does not give a fair picture of the cost of land to the veterans in that area, because in many cases the veterans are paying the difference between the price asked and the price which the board are prepared to pay under the plan. I am not contending that the board should go out and pay any price at all for land, but I think anybody who has followed the agricultural trend during the last three or four years will agree that based on our present agricultural prices there is an added value to land over the 1941 prices. The board would be justified in raising the sights a little on the price which they are prepared to pay for good land in good crop areas. If they did that I believe they could settle a greater number of veterans than are being settled at the present time.

A point was raised by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton with regard to the advice given to settlers going on the land. There should be a closer liaison between the department's supervisors and the agricultural representatives in the various provinces. They are the people who should be giving advice to the settlers settling under the Veterans Land Act, rather than the supervisors. I suggest that the closest liaison be maintained between the agricultural representatives of the various provinces and the supervisors. Let these people give the advice to the settler with regard to agricultural practices. They know the practices better than the supervisor; they are in a better position to advise, and I believe that their advice will be taken with better grace than it will be from the supervisors.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I tell my hon. friend that there is the closest cooperation and constant consultation with the provincial government agricultural representatives at the present time, and between our supervisors and our regional advisory committee.

Mr. STEPHENSON: I have spoken on this question at different times, having had some experience with the building of houses on small holdings. Does the minister believe that this type of housing is meeting the requirements of the veterans? I ask this question because I was on a committee which looked in to the housing act. We made a survey in my district. We asked those who would like to build under the National Housing Act, the small holdings and the wartime housing. We found that practically all of the men favoured wartime housing because they could rent the houses at approximately $30 a month, which would give them a reasonable time to find their feet and know what they intended to do over a period of a few years. Under the small holdings arrangements, or the National Housing Act, it took practically all of their gratuity to make the down payment, which left them with very little money to set up housekeeping, buy furniture and all the things that are necessary to that end. The small holdings built in my district are not yet completed, and it seems as if no applications have been made to occupy these houses. It would appear that it is not the type of house which meets the requirements or the need of the veteran. Under this housing scheme would it be possible to bring in a system similar to wartime housing by which a veteran could rent the house for a few years until he knows where he is and what he wants to do and whether he will have sufficient money at that time to build a house when materials will be available and he will be better established? Does the minister think that plan would work?

Mr. MACKENZIE: All the housing work of Canada is now being co-ordinated under the general direction of the Minister of Reconstruction, with consultations with our department and the Department of Finance. My own personal opinion—and I am not an expert on housing; I have been through many of our houses—with all respect to my colleague who is not here, is that wartime housing houses do not compare with ours. I wish my hon. friend could visit British Columbia and see the first ten that were built in Canada on Lulu island. In artistic design, symmetry of construction, and convenience for living they are absolutely the best I have seen. To my mind the other ones are rather rigid. They are all of a pattern such as you would see in England and Scotland under the county council scheme. They look like a series of trench houses; they are all the same. That is the thing to avoid. In housing every design should be different, in order to give the houses that symmetry in construction which is more acceptable to the occupant. If you go out to Lulu island you will see that.

Mr. TUCKER: May I say a word in reply to the hon. member for Melfort? The difficulty arising from the increase in land values is constantly being considered by the administration and advisory committees. I am in entire agreement with everything he said in that regard and I believe the administration is trying to deal with the situation as well as it can, without contributing too much to an undue inflation in land values.

At one oclock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. FULTON: Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer again to the small holdings scheme under the Veterans Land Act, and particularly to the thirty or forty housing projects which the government has undertaken. In the figures which he gave last night, and again to-day, the parliamentary assistant has shown that for the most expensive group of houses, those costing over $6,000, the average cost would be $7,058. That would be after the $1,000,000 has been applied to adjusting costs across the country.

Mr. TUCKER: That is before the $1,000,000 has been applied.

Mr. FULTON: I understood from the parliamentary assistant that it was after.

Mr. TUCKER: That is the cost.

Mr. FULTON: Considerable confusion exists in this matter. I have received information by telephone, which was checked previously with officials of the department, to the effect that some of these houses are going to cost the veteran as much as $7,300.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No.

Mr. FULTON: I think the minister and his senior officials should check with the officials in the various regions. In this instance I am referring to the Sherbrooke district. The information I have received is that a five-room house which was originally supposed to cost $4,800 will now cost $7,300, and that the price of a six-room house has increased $1,800 over the original $6,000. In fairness I should add that my informant told me that the officials of the Veterans' Land Act could not or would not give him firm final figures. This was the best information that was available to the veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman?—and I do this in an effort to be helpful. The actual cost to a veteran would be the gross cost less the contingent additional grant of $1,400, less again the amount of the write-off which may be arranged under the $1,000,000.

Mr. FULTON: I am glad the minister pointed that out. I inadvertently said that the total cost to the veteran would be $7,300, but I should have said the total cost of the house will be $7,300. That is an increase of $1,300 over what was previously thought to be the maximum of $6,000.

Figures given last night as to the adjusted cost in monthly payments showed that the maximum monthly payment would be something like $27 a month for twenty-five years, at which time the total cost would be amortized. The significant fact is that the house which the veteran expected to obtain for a maximum cost of $6,000, less the additional write-off of $1,400, now will cost $1,300 or $1,400 more. Instead of the veteran being left with a liability of $4,800, he will be left with a liability of $6,000. In effect he will have a mortgage of $6,000. It is stated that this is to be amortized over twenty-five years and the cost will not be more than $27 a month, but the point is that these veterans assumed that they were going to be able to obtain houses with an outstanding liability of not more than $4,800. In the case of the smaller house, they assumed that the liability would not be more than $3,500 or $4,000; they are now faced with liabilities of from $4,500 to $6,000. These liabilities, it is true, may be amortized, but the fact remains that these veterans will have large mortgages hanging over their heads.

The arrangements outlined by the parliamentary assistant for amortization are perhaps the best that can be made if the government will not adopt the suggestion to advance the subsidy and underwrite the proportion of the cost over $6,000. What should be done is to apply the same subsidy to the proportion of the cost in excess of $6,000 as is now applied to the proportion of the cost under $6,000.

I bring up this matter again because veterans throughout the country are worried at the extent of the liabilities they are called upon to assume. It is not good enough to say that they are getting a better deal under this scheme than they are under any other. The fact is that they have made their arrangements; they are not able to make any other arrangements. They have gone ahead on the assumption that they would take the house and they expected to move into it; in some cases they have actually given up other tenancies. Instead of being faced with a reasonable obligation which they could hope to pay off, they are going to have to assume an obligation of some $4,500 for the lowest priced houses and $6,000 for the higher priced houses.

I appreciate the fact that the minister and his department have made an effort to adjust this by limiting the down payment to $600 and leaving the excess to be amortized over twenty-five years. I give them credit for going that far, but it is not far enough. The department has led the veteran to assume that he would be able to get a house which would cost a maximum of $6,000, and now it is found that it will cost almost a minimum of $6,000. I submit that the government has an obligation to these veterans, because they have been given that impression as a result of the government's representation.

I can say no more other than to press on the minister the desirability of adopting the recommendation of the committee that the cost over $6,000 be subsidized to the same degree as the cost under $6,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I appreciate the remarks of my hon. friend, but may I tell him something which he probably knows. The provisions of the Veterans' Land Act are the most generous of any housing scheme in Canada. The hon. member has no doubt compared them with the provisions made under the National Housing Act. May I say that 20,000 veterans have privately purchased houses at a cost of some $10,000,000 without any of the additional grants that are made available under the Veterans' Land Act. Then 4,500 have taken or are taking advantage of the conditional allowance and grants made available under the housing provision of the Veterans' Land Act. Our trouble is that other housing developments are jealous of the housing provisions made under the Veterans' Land Act, and if we criticize these provisions unduly in contrast with other housing projects I feel there may be an abandonment of the generous, extensive and comprehensive housing provisions of that act.

Mr. FULTON: There must be some error in the figures the minister gave. I understood him to say that 20,000 veterans have bought houses outside the Veterans Land Act at a cost of $10,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE: By private purchase.

Mr. FULTON: That represents a cost of $500 each. There must be some error there.

Mr. MACKENZIE: No, that is right.

Mr. FULTON: That is not a very strong argument in support of the contention that the Veterans Land Act scheme is the most generous if the average cost outside the act is only $500. I would like to give the minister an opportunity to correct the figure.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The $10,000,000 is what they have privately expended out of the reestablishment credit, and the average amount of reestablishment credit is $400. That has been done without any other government assistance.

Mr. FULTON: Then it has cost them so far $100 more than their reestablishment credit. I do not think there is much point in pursuing these figures, because they were given on the spur of the moment; but if that is the average cost to the veteran it is a good deal less than under the Veterans Land Act. My criticism applies only to projects built on a cost-plus basis.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The figure I gave was the initial deposit. The rest is provided from their own private resources.

Mr. FULTON: That is not what I was complaining of. A veteran makes a contract on his own for a house. He is willing to assume payment for a $6,000 house. He knows what he is getting. But here he pays down $600 and expects to get a $6,000 house, but he is now advised that he must assume a $7,000 house or he will lose his $600. That is what I am complaining about, where houses have been built on a cost-plus basis and the costs have increased beyond what the veteran was led to expect. I do not see that the figure given by the minister showing that the veteran has had to pay $100 more than his credit has any bearing on the matter, because under the scheme I refer to the veteran pays down $600, which is $200 more than his reestablishment credit.

Mr. TUCKER: Many veterans go out into the market and buy their own houses with this reestablishment credit of $425 on the average. Building costs have risen, as everybody knows. We are already giving a conditional grant of $1,400 to the veteran on the small holding, but these veterans are in the proportion of one to five of the veterans who are investing money in housing. If we go further and give the veteran who is receiving a conditional grant of $1,400 further assistance, the five out of six who are investing in housing outside of the Veterans Land Act would have just cause for complaint, because they get no help at all except their reestablishment credit. There has to be some equity in all these schemes. I can understand the hon. member's attitude in bringing this matter up, but the case is similar to the farm lands case which was brought up by the hon. member for Melfort, who said that land which you could have bought for $8,000 three years ago costs $12,000 to-day. Is the state to step in and pay the difference? That is a question that has to be considered in reference to what is being done for other veterans. The veterans who are providing houses for themselves are facing the same increased building costs, and if we say to the veterans under the Veterans Land Act: "We are already giving you $1,400 and now we are going to give you even more," the man who is getting only his reestablishment credit would have cause for complaint.

Mr. FULTON: I think it has been conclusively established that in the housing projects built on a cost-plus basis the increase over what you might call the normal costs has been greater than where the veteran has made a private deal for the building of a house. The director under the Veterans Land Act has said that he would not let any more cost-plus contracts, and I am glad of that. That indicates that experience has proved that building costs have increased more in these cost-plus projects than they have elsewhere. All I am asking is that that fact be recognized and that the veteran be put in the position he had assumed he would be in as a result of the government's representations made to him in good faith, and who now is faced with these increased costs in these projects built on the cost-plus basis.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We called for tenders in all these housing projects and we found a definite lack of cooperation from the contractors in tendering, and so we were compelled to go ahead on what we call a fixed-fee basis of $200 per house right across Canada. We tried to get tenders all across Canada in the first instance, but the contractors were chary of venturing into these housing projects for veterans.

Mr. TUCKER: The hon. member for Kamloops has suggested that in some way a veteran who had put up his own money in applying for a house could not withdraw it. But any veteran who figures he is not getting a good deal can get his money back.

Mr. FULTON: I did not say they could not get their money back.

Mr. TUCKER: If the hon. member did not say that, I understood he thought it. There should not be too much concern over what the veteran is being asked to pay for these houses, because owing to the rise in building costs since these houses were started you could not duplicate them to-day for anything like what the veterans are being asked to pay. Therefore any suggestion that in some way these veterans are being mistreated is very improper. Anybody who knows anything about building costs to-day compared with costs when these houses were being built knows that you could not duplicate these houses to-day for the same amount of money. Therefore the veteran who is going into these houses is getting three advantages. He is getting the $1,400 write-off; he is getting the advantage of a house built under lower prices than those which prevail to-day, and he is possibly getting some advantage under the million dollar write-off.

Mr. FULTON: And he has to pay $1,000 more than he expected to pay for his house.

Mr. TUCKER: Everybody else is paying not merely one thousand dollars but probably two or three thousand dollars more than he would have paid a year or two ago. The point to remember is for five veterans out of six nothing is being done in the matter of housing. They are providing their own housing privately. When the hon. member keeps pressing that a certain small group should get still further consideration, he is pressing for something which may be very desirable from his point of view—I do not know about that—but which is far beyond what is being done for other veterans. I do not think the hon. gentleman should persist in pressing for special consideration for a small group in his particular area.

Mr. FULTON: It happens that I am not pressing for a small group in my area; I am pressing the government to live up to an obligation which veterans have understood them to be assuming. However, there is no point in discussing it further.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am not attributing any motives to my hon. friend. If he wants equity in regard to the whole scope and sweep, the way to be equitable is to double or treble the reestablishment credit for the boys who got only $400 and nothing else.

Mr. HERRIDGE: A number of people in my constituency are interested in the settlement of veterans on suitable provincial crown lands. Since the signing of the agreement with British Columbia, what progress has been made in the making of arrangements to settle these men at the earliest possible day?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The agreement has been signed, and I must congratulate my hon. friend on his personal cooperation in regard to the signing of the agreement. I understand that the procedure is outlined and things are ready to go ahead.

Mr. McLURE: Under the Veterans Land Act, a case came to my attention of a young man who, when sixteen years of age, joined the navy and spent almost six years in that service. Upon his discharge he came before the supervisor and said he wanted to go farming, but when they found out his age at enlistment they said he was too young, even at twenty-one or twenty-two years of age, to go farming. I think the decision was made under some clause of the act regarding applicants' experience—that he did not have enough experience to engage in farming. He can prove that he had been living on a farm up to the age of sixteen. To whom would he appeal from the supervisor's decision, so that he could get in under the Veterans Land Act reestablishment provisions?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I do not know the particulars of the individual case, but generally speaking, unless a lad has some experience on a farm, by being brought up there—

Mr. SENN: He would have.

Mr. MACKENZIE: —and had done farm work with his parents, he would have difficulty. These cases are reviewed by a regional advisory committee consisting of practical farmers. If my hon. friend will be good enough to send me the details on this particular case I shall see that it is given every possible attention.

Item agreed to.

466. To provide for the payment of grants to veterans settled on provincial lands in accordance with agreements with provincial governments under section 35 of the Veterans Land Act, 1942, as amended, $6,000,000.

Mr. WRIGHT: There is a matter I wish to raise on this vote. In the special committee on veterans affairs, on June 27, the director made certain proposals to the committee with respect to the settlement of veterans under the group provisions or partnerships. The director stated this at page 1003:

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, at your request I have been giving careful thought to a basis upon which the principle of pooled or joint use can be made of the grants otherwise available to veterans who seek establishment on provincial land.

I am not going to continue to read his statement, except this sentence, before he made his proposal:

It is on these premises that tentative proposals have been roughly drafted as follows.

Then he gave the tentative proposals, which I do not want to take the time of the committee to read, but they were, in short, that $1,200 would be granted as a pooled account for the purchase of farm machinery and $1,120 would be granted for improvements on the particular parcels of land that the veteran had some direct title in or claim to, and that the grants would be made only where the settler had title to or a direct claim on the particular parcel of land. Do these tentative proposals as given to the committee still stand? Will they be carried out?

Mr. TUCKER: As the hon. member knows, everybody has been working at very high pressure. The director is favourable, of course, to these proposals which he laid before our committee receiving the approval of the government, but it has been impossible as yet to have them considered by the government. I can assure the hon. member than when the director laid that proposal before our committee he was very much in earnest, and he certainly had the support of a good part of the committee. I think the hon. member may rest assured that the matter will be pressed and brought before the government as quickly as possible.

Mr. WRIGHT: There is one other point I want to get cleared up with respect to this. If the proposal has not been placed before the government it may be impossible for the minister to give me the assurance I want. But the question which is bothering the people, at least in Saskatchewan, who would like to use this particular provision is whether the individual veteran who goes into this partnership will, if he withdraws from the partnership, be able to take his land out with him, or whether that land will remain in the control of the group, provided that the provincial government are prepared to guarantee any investment which the director has in the land or in the equipment which is being used to work the land?

Mr. MACKENZIE: That was the stumbling block, I think, in the discussion we had in the committee. But I can assure my hon. friend it will be carefully considered.

Mr. WRIGHT: I would like something more than that, if it is possible to give it, because it hinges on this question whether the particular proposals are to be effective or not. If provision is not made that the land shall remain in the control of the group when the government or the group are prepared to guarantee the dominion government on any investment which they have in it, the effect upon the scheme is obvious. I think the government should give consideration to leaving the land in the group. If the veteran has the right to withdraw his holding from the unit, it immediately makes the investment of the group in machinery, which it bought on the basis of operating the whole group, an uneconomic one, and renders it difficult for the group as a whole to carry on.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I am conscious of the significance of the representations of my hon. friend, and I can assure him that the matter will be most carefully reviewed.

Item agreed to.

467. To provide for the payment of grants to Indian veterans settled on Indian reserve lands under section 35A of the Veterans Land Act, 1942, as amended, $2,000,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I want to say a word by way of commendation. The vote reads:

To provide for the payment of grants to Indian veterans settled on Indian reserve lands . . .

I have in mind a small Indian reserve and band. The example they gave during the recent war, and perhaps during the previous great war, is a remarkable example of patriotism and allegiance to British ideals. I am referring to the Moravian band of the Delaware tribe in Kent county, of which band Walker Stonefish is the chief. The area occupied by the band consists, I believe, of about three thousand acres, and I doubt if there are over 200 or 250 people on the reserve. But of that 250—if there are that many—fifty-six enlisted in the forces during the recent war—fifty in the Canadian services and six in the United States services. To give you a better idea of how they enlisted, of the fifty-six there were three from the Lascelles family, four from the Huff family, five from the Jacobs family, five from the Tobias family, and nine from the Stonefish family. I do not mean that there were that many from any one family, but from those families named. When the grants are made to Indians do they go through the Indian agent on the reservation, or are they sent direct to the Indians themselves? May I say in passing that this country should be proud of what our Indian brothers did during the recent war, and I hope that some effort will be made to recognize the contribution they made to the empire and to Canada, their home.

Mr. SENN: The Indians on the reservation in my riding also had a very good record in joining the forces. I understand that in this particular band, as in many others, the land is vested in the band itself, and I would not suppose that the land itself was handed over to the individual veteran. In their particular way of holding land it is vested in the band and the Indian has a vested right only in the improvements. How are these grants being given? What is the government doing to retain title in the land until it is paid for?

Mr. MACKENZIE: The grants are under the authority of the minister of mines and are passed to us for approval, and the grant of $2,320 may be disbursed for one or more of the following purposes: Purchase of essential building materials, and other costs of construction, clearing and preparation of land for cultivation, purchase of essential farm stock and machinery, purchase of equipment essential to forestry, purchase of commercial fishing equipment, purchase of trapping or fur farming equipment, but not breeding stock; purchase of essential household equipment, acquisition of occupational rights to lands vacant or improved located within the boundaries of any Indian reserve. In addition to this, the Indian veterans have the same rights as other veterans to apply for settlement outside the Indian reserve. In such instances the usual procedure is followed in making application and arranging interviews with the Indian agent. Practically speaking their benefits are the same as those of other Canadians, and I am proud of what we have done for them.

Mr. SENN: How many veterans have taken advantage of it?

Mr. TUCKER: To date, 115 Indians have been located on Indian reserves with a total expenditure of $225,582. That is Indians on Indian reserves. I am told that approximately 10 per cent of the Indian veterans of world war II have been taken care of under the Veterans Land Act in one way or another.

Just to give an idea of the speed at which people are being settled under the Veterans Land Act, I would point out that in the month of May the number of loans approved for all classes of settlement totalled 1,808, involving a commitment of $8,836,000, and in June there were 1,829 with a commitment of $9,089,000.

Mr. SENN: Very often our friends living on reservations are not too provident in some of their dealings. Does the land act branch exercise supervision over purchases made from this amount of money?

Mr. MACKENZIE: No; the Indian agent.

Mr. HARKNESS: As this is the last of the items under the regular estimates of this department, can the parliamentary assistant give us the information he promised yesterday in connection with the item of $50,000 for advertising under the veterans insurance scheme?

Mr. MACKENZIE: I understand that will be presented as soon as possible during the course of these estimates.

Mr. HARKNESS: Can it not be given now?

Mr. TUCKER: It will be given this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE: As soon as we leave this particular discussion on the land act and come back to problems more or less financial it will be given.

Item agreed to.

646. Gratuities—Auxiliary services, $70,000.

Mr. BROOKS: I wish to refer for a moment to the A.R.P. When we were in the committee a deadline was put on the time within which a man might apply who had been injured in A.R.P. services. I am interested in the case of a man who was injured in 1941. He applied a couple of years later. He had an accident which did not seem serious at the time but which developed into a serious condition. In most of these acts the minister has some discretion, but in that particular act there is no discretion in the minister. The man himself had no idea that there would be a deadline and now he is shut off from a pension although he had a serious accident. Can any consideration be given this particular case? There are very few cases under the A.R.P.

Mr. TUCKER: The relevant clause in the civilian war pensions and allowances bill is section 42, which reads:

> No pension shall be awarded under this part in respect of any disability unless application is made therefor within one year after the day the war service injury resulting in such disability was sustained, or in the case of a male under the age of sixteen years or a female under the age of seventeen years, within one year after the respective ages are attained, and no pension shall be awarded in respect of death unless application is made therefor within one year after the death.

As I understand this case, this man did not realize that he was suffering a disability until over a year after it had occurred.

Mr. BROOKS: Yes. The man had an accident which affected his knee. He sustained the accident during a blackout; it did not develop into a serious condition until some time afterwards, and he had to have a serious operation. When I was in the committee I protested against the deadline, pointing out that the men would not know anything about it and so they would be cut off altogether from applying. I took the view that some discretion should be left with the minister or the head of the department to consider such cases.

Mr. MACKENZIE: We will certainly deal with that case, either under regulations or by order in council, or by a special item in the estimates. I shall be glad if the hon. member will send it to me.

Two questions were asked by the member for Calgary East in regard to booklets pertaining to veterans' insurance. There were 750,000 printed. Of these, 100,000 were sent overseas for distribution. The remainder have been distributed or are available for distribution throughout Canada.

Another question was asked in regard to the Last Post fund, I am afraid that incomplete information was given to the committee last evening in the course of the discussion on the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs. It was suggested that the accounts of the Last Post fund were audited by the auditor general. In actual fact the procedure is that all accounts submitted by the Last Post fund are audited prior to payment by representatives of the comptroller of the treasury. I wish to make that correction.

647. Hospital accommodation and facilities, $22,818,620.

Mr. MacNICOL: During the war quite a number of organizations performed splendid services in Toronto. I refer particularly to ladies' organizations of almost every description. They raised moneys to send favours overseas to soldiers. When the war ended and they had completed that work they found themselves with quite a number of dollars on hand. I know of one association presided over by Mrs. Stewart Sager, president of the Davenport Progressive Conservative Association, which had on hand a few hundred dollars. When I was home last I found that, with the consent of her officers, she had written out a cheque and presented it to the Hon. W. J. Stewart for the purchase of furniture for a room in Sunnybrook hospital. I understand that most of the organizations of Liberal and Progressive Conservative parties —the one I am speaking of is a Progressive Conservative association—have done likewise. When the minister gets back from his next trip will he communicate with the Hon. W. J. Stewart and ascertain the names of the various organizations which have contributed money toward the purchase of furniture for rooms in the Sunnybrook hospital—which, by the way, costs between $400 and $500—and at least send them a letter thanking them for their contribution to that end?

Mr. MACKENZIE: May I tell my hon. friend that I have been simply amazed at the generosity of the people of Toronto. I have sent every single one of the donors a personal letter of appreciation and thanks. Their performance is one of the finest things I have ever seen. There must be about five hundred donors of beds and various pieces of equipment for Sunnybrook hospital. In every single case they have received a personal letter of acknowledgment, of gratitude and of appreciation from myself.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mrs. Sager's organization made a contribution of all the furniture required for one of the rooms in Sunnybrook hospital. As I said, I believe it cost $400.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are all doing wonderful work.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am still far from satisfied with the $50,000 for advertising in the veterans insurance department. The minister said that 750,000 pamphlets were issued. The great majority of these pamphlets must have been issued prior to this fiscal year. The $50,000 is for the current fiscal year. So far we have not had any explanation as to what the money is being used for or what the advertising is.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There have been two or three different lines of activity in advertising. For instance, one was in regard to the handicap cases, which had a fine effect. I do not think there is any definite decision yet in regard to the final allotment or destination of these funds, but they will be used in connection with what we have been carrying on for the last three years—keeping the needs of veterans before the public.

Mr. HARKNESS: The $50,000 that I am worried about is under veterans insurance. There is an amount of $143,000, all told, of administrative expenses of the department to keeping in force 6,599 policies. I have been trying to get some explanation why $50,000 for advertising was necessary and particularly what the form of advertising was going to be. I might point out that it is for this current fiscal year. Apparently the three-quarters of a million pamphlets advertising this scheme must have been all printed in former years. What the minister has just said has nothing to do with this $50,000, so far as I can see.

Mr. MACKENZIE: The only reason for it would be this: it might be necessary, or it might not, to issue a booklet conveying information to some of the veterans who have come back and who are not familiar with the opportunities of the veterans' insurance, and also explaining the legislation to them. It might not be used at all.

Mr. HARKNESS: I am still not satisfied with that. It means, as a matter of fact, an expenditure of about $8 or $9 on advertising for each policy that is in force at the present time. Surely the advertising required for this veterans' insurance must have been done by this time, and there should not be any need for it in the present year.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There are 1,150,000 discharged ex-service men in Canada to-day. That means five cents for every one discharged. They should know about their opportunities in Canada. I am not saying whether it will be used or not. The idea behind it was to give the information to them by way of a pamphlet or otherwise if necessary.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT

The house resumed from Tuesday, August 13, consideration in committee of bill No. 368, to amend the Income War Tax Act—Mr. Ilsley—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 8, subsection 2—Taxpayers whose chief occupation is farming or fishing.

Hon. DOUGLAS ABBOTT (Acting Minister of Finance): We had passed subsection 1 of section 8; we were dealing with paragraph 7 of subsection 2 at page 22 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN: It starts near the bottom of page 21 and carries over to page 22.

Mr. FLEMING: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I may direct the minister's attention to the answer recorded in Hansard, which he gave on August 13. The answer, as it appears at page 4770, is ambiguous and does not leave with the reader the impression which I believe the minister wished to leave on that day. I direct the minister's attention to the reference to averaging over the three-year period, as it appears about half way down the second column. Hansard reads in this way:

Mr. Fleming: Suppose that by reason of losses with his herd he sustained an actual deficit of $2,000. The following year, we will say, he makes a profit of $2,000 and the third year another profit of $2,000.

Mr. Abbott: The average income for two years is nil.

Mr. Fleming: Will his income for the three years be the average of $4,000 over three years, or will it be the average of $2,000 on two years? In other words, are you going to allow him to set off the deficit of the first year?

And then follows this answer:

Mr. Abbott: The first year he had a loss; the second year he had a profit of $2,000, and the third year, another profit of $2,000. The average—

I think the word "average" is a mistake—

—income would be $2,000, averaged over the three years.

It seems to me that the minister gave the committee to understand that in that case $2,000 would be the total income for three years, and that the $2,000 income would be averaged over three years; so that it would be stated as an income of $667 per year.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is correct. The word "average" should be struck out of that answer which the hon. member has referred to. It should read, "The income would be $2,000, averaged over the three years", or an average of $667 in each of the years.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: Would the minister define the words "chief business, occupation, trade or calling" as they appear in section 8 (2) in the new subsection 5? Is it the calling or occupation in which a person spends most of this time, or from which he derives most of his income?

Mr. ABBOTT: I believe we had passed that part of the section. Obviously the question is one of fact for determination. The question as to what a man's chief occupation would be is one of fact, not of law. It would depend upon the facts in a particular case.

Mr. GRAYDON: He might be putting in most of his time losing money.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Will the committee permit me to ask a question which does not fall directly under the section before it? I have brought this matter to the attention of the minister. This request comes from a cooperative, quite a number of which find themselves in the same position. Perhaps the committee will permit me to put the question on record so that the answer may be given at the convenience of the minister.

This is the telegram I received after the discussion which took place in committee. It is dated at Davidson, Saskatchewan, and reads:

Our society credits patronage dividends yearly to members open account to be disposed of individually as they see fit. These dividends are generally used to settle accounts for goods owed the society or as a credit for the purchase of goods. Some draw them out in cash, others transfer their balances to loan account in which position they receive four per cent interest per annum. Here it is withdrawable at any time. Will this procedure so far as patronage dividends are concerned meet the new regulations.

This is signed by the Davidson Cooperative.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend asked me the question privately, and I expressed the opinion that this would qualify as a proper payment of patronage dividends under the provisions of the act. I said I would confirm that opinion through the officials, and I shall do so. Indications now before me are that the opinion I gave is a correct one. It would seem from the facts as given, that the money is payable on demand. It may be taken in cash, if desired, or left with the cooperative. In those circumstances I believe it complies with the requirements of the statute.

Subsections 2 and 3 of section 8 agreed to.

Section 8 agreed to.

Sections 9 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On section 15—new part VIIIA.

Mr. FLEMING: Under section 15 (1) we have certain lengthy provisions extending over more than three pages. What I have to say will apply equally to all the new sections which are proposed to be inserted in the act. The key to the new proposed appeal procedure is in some respects found in the new section 69F, at page 28, where we find a provision which embodies the budget resolutions. It provides:

This part and the schedules referred to in this part are applicable only in respect of assessments of income of the nineteen hundred and forty-six and subsequent taxation years and part VIII of this act is not applicable in respect of the said assessments.

I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee in a repetition of the observations I made in the debate on the budget resolutions. I must repeat, however, that in large measure, the provision in 69F reduces to futility the new provisions for appeal procedure. It comes down to this, that on the 1946 income the taxpayer will make his return in the spring of 1947. The assessment, in the ordinary course, will reach him about the year 1950. This new appeal procedure does not begin to function until after the taxpayer has received his notice of assessment which, in the ordinary course of events, he will receive about 1950 for the first year to which this new appeal procedure can apply.

Mr. ABBOTT: We will try to speed up the assessment.

Mr. FLEMING: It will take a lot of speeding up.

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree.

Mr. FLEMING: But let us be very hopeful, perhaps unduly hopeful, and say that the notice of assessment might be expected in two years or, if we strain our imaginations, a year and a half. Even so, it still means that it will be 1949 before the new appeal procedure can have any opportunity to function.

If there is merit in this new appeal procedure—and I think it is the opinion of the committee that such procedure is long overdue; it certainly was the opinion of the senate committee which made very useful recommendations—then surely that appeal procedure should be put to work now. Here we are about to pass legislation to bring into being two new bodies with appellate powers. We are to have an income tax appeal board and an income tax advisory board; and yet these bodies are not to begin to function until about 1950, in the ordinary course of events. If it is greatly speeded up, it might begin to work in 1949. If this procedure is not to become effective for another three years, why should we be asked to pass it now? On the other hand, if there is merit in this appeal procedure, and there is a need for it, it ought to be available to the taxpayer now. That is my first observation respecting section 15.

My second relates to cases which involve appeals, both from decisions on facts or law and from decisions involving the exercise of the minister's discretion. I am not going to go into the subject of the exercise of discretion because I discussed that on a previous occasion. However, I should like to put before the minister a case for which it seems to me no provision has been made in section 15. Take a case which might arise under both sections 69A and 69B. Suppose an appeal is launched under section 69A to the income tax appeal board from an assessment. Let us assume that one of the points involved in the minister's decision has to do with one of the subjects in connection with which he is entitled to exercise discretion under the act. In that event presumably the appeal would lie under section 69E to the other board, the income tax advisory board. It seems to me that no provision has been made here for the case which involves a decision on a point of fact or law and a decision involving the exercise of discretion. In other words, no provision has been made for the double-barrelled case. The scheme of procedure laid down in this section is that where an appeal does not involve the exercise of the minister's discretion, the appeal will lie from the minister to the income tax appeal board. But where issue is taken by the taxpayer with the minister's exercise of one of his discretionary powers, the appeal will be taken to the income tax advisory board, which does not render a judgment but simply advises the minister. The procedures in the two cases are different. The results which might flow from the decisions of the two boards are different. I therefore submit that further consideration should be given to cases involving both types of decision.

The third observation I should like to make is with reference to the draftsmanship of the substantive sections dealing with the powers of the appeal boards in these various cases. It may be that because a number of new provisions are being inserted following the present section 69 resort had to be had to schedules, but it seems to me to be an unfortunate departure from sound draftsmanship to relegate to schedules sections of the highest importance defining the powers of these appeal boards and the extent of their jurisdiction. Let us agree that schedules are the proper place to set out rates of taxation and such matters, but they are not the place to find substantive provisions of a statute defining the powers of boards of appeal. As I say, it may be that the draftsman felt that as he was inserting in the act a code of procedure between two sections, he did not wish them to extend to too great a length. If this bill is to be enacted in its present form I would urge upon the minister that when the time comes to revise the act these provisions be put in their proper place so that the sections defining the jurisdiction of these boards of appeal will follow the sections dealing with appeals in general.

The next observation I should like to make relates to warning the taxpayer of his rights in the matter of appeal. It is not to be expected that great numbers of taxpayers will know the new law with reference to appeals, particularly as we are now to have various forms of appeal. My request is that the new appeal procedure be made effective by giving the taxpayer warning in each case of his appeal rights. In the first instance, take the notice of assessment. I suggest that the notice of assessment bear on its face a warning as to what are the rights of appeal from the assessment. The taxpayer should be told that under the provisions of section 69A he may within two months appeal to the minister. Then when he receives the minister's decision he should be warned in that decision that he may within three months appeal to the income tax appeal board. The judgment issued by that board should in turn warn him that he has four months to appeal to the exchequer court. Similarly in cases involving the exercise of the minister's discretion, the taxpayer should be notified that under section 69E he may within two months file his notice of objection with the minister. Then if the minister rejects his appeal, under subsection 3 of section 69E he may within two months require the minister to refer the case to the income tax advisory board.

I should like to conclude these remarks with one further observation. In section 69B, subsection 1, paragraph (b), there is a provision which I think should be carefully examined. This is the section outlining the right of appeal to the income tax appeal board, and two cases are provided for. First, an appeal may be launched after the minister has confirmed the assessment or reassessed. Second, an appeal may be launched after six months have elapsed after service of the notice of objection and the minister has not notified the taxpayer that he has vacated or confirmed the assessment or reassessed. That section comes down to this: If for any reason the board comes to the conclusion that there is no merit in the appeal, or if the appeal is ignored by the department, or if it has not received the taxpayer's notice of appeal and the department gives no notice to the taxpayer that no action is being taken on his appeal, then the taxpayer's rights of appeal are gone without any notice to him whatever.

Mr. ABBOTT: This section is to protect the taxpayer.

Mr. FLEMING: It deals with the case of the minister not having notified the taxpayer after he has vacated the assessment or reassessed, and it will apply in the case where a taxpayer has served his notice of objection and nothing happens for six months.

Mr. ABBOTT: May I just try to clear that up? Under this section the taxpayer would first appeal to the minister and the minister may confirm the assessment or reassess. If he appeals to the minister and the minister does nothing for six months, if the minister just sits on it and the taxpayer hears nothing, then after the expiry of the six months he can go to the appeal board. It is really to give the minister six months in which either to handle the objection or fail to do it. There is really a six months' term for the taxpayer. In other words, the minister is given six months to straighten the thing out before the taxpayer goes to the income tax appeal board. While the drafting may not be perfect, that is the purpose of the section and I think it fairly accurately sets out that intention.

Mr. FLEMING: The appeal by the taxpayer may not involve a large amount, and he may not have legal advice in connection with his right to appeal. He submits his notice of objection to the minister, and then he waits to hear from the minister. Six months pass.

Mr. ABBOTT: He does not lose his right.

Mr. FLEMING: How much more time has he?—because if you look at the beginning of subsection 1 you will see it sets out his right of appeal.

Mr. ABBOTT: He has unlimited time; if the minister takes unlimited time to deal with it, he has unlimited time to lodge the appeal to the board. If the minister does not do it within six months, he can just by-pass the minister, if I may so describe it, and go to the appeal board.

Mr. FLEMING: Will the minister cast his eyes down a little further to the words:

but no appeal under this section may be instituted after the expiration of three months from the day notice has been mailed to the taxpayer under section sixty-nine A that the minister has vacated or confirmed the assessment or reassessed.

Does the minister say that this section will be interpreted so that no time limit will be applied against the taxpayer to defeat his right of appeal from the minister to the board until after three months after notice of reassessment or other disposal has been received by him?

Mr. ABBOTT: After it has been mailed to him.

Mr. FLEMING: And if the minister waits two years, to take an extreme case, that right of appeal to the board will continue through the two years and for three months?

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend is correct in that last statement. When the resolution was before the committee the hon. member for Eglinton, and I think the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario, pointed out that the board would hear appeals from assessments on 1946 income but not for earlier years, and they both suggested that authority be given to allow the board to hear appeals from assessments in respect of 1945.

Mr. FLEMING: And earlier years.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have carefully considered that point and have discussed it with the officers of the department and considered the possibilities of doing what my hon. friends have suggested, but I am afraid it is not feasible to do so, for this reason. There is a good deal of organizational work necessary in connection with the appeal board itself, and also in the Department of National Revenue, to enable the department to handle the additional work which will be thrown upon it in connection with these appeals. I think it would be unfortunate if the board were compelled to operate without proper preparation. For that reason I have come to the conclusion that it is not feasible to make the new procedure available for taxation years earlier than 1946. The present procedure of appeal to the exchequer court will remain available for those prior years.

Some progress is being made in expediting the assessment of returns. The average at present is about nine months to a year on individual returns. I must confess that that includes the easy returns, the small salary returns. For the larger returns made by people with other sources of income, where the assessment is more complicated, I do not pretend that the average is as short as I have mentioned; it is longer. However, every effort is being made to catch up with the lag, and that depends, as the committee knows, on obtaining a more experienced staff.

Mr. FLEMING: Did the minister mean to indicate that the income tax appeal board and presumably the advisory board also are to be appointed now and that they will require the next two years to prepare to exercise their functions under the act? Or is it the government's intention not to appoint the income tax appeal board and the advisory board for that period of time, until there has been some reorganization within the department?

Mr. ABBOTT: Of course my hon. friend will appreciate that there is first the problem of obtaining the right personnel for this board. When the board has been selected, it in turn has to obtain the necessary staff. It has to familiarize itself with the work with which it will have to perform. On balance it was felt that if it were in full operation by the middle of next year, that is about the most we could hope for. I agree with my hon. friend that there will be a great volume of appeals which will no doubt come forward later for 1946 which will not be ready at that time, but there will be some appeals in cases where the assessments can be made quickly. I think it will be found in 1947, when the board is ready to take over its operations, there will be plenty of work for it to handle.

Mr. FLEMING: Would the minister take a wager on that?

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, I am not a gambling man. Another interesting point my hon. friend raised was the parallel functions of the advisory board and the income tax appeal board, that appeals may well involve one point in which discretionary power is exercised by the advisory board and other points of fact and of law to go before the appeal board. That situation was thought of, and it was considered that one of two things should be done; that an appeal should be made to the advisory board and get that disposed of first, and the other appeal, if it were thought necessary in order to preserve a time limit, would not be determined until the advisory board had rendered its decision. Or, alternatively, they might proceed on parallel lines, the final decision by the appeal board on questions of fact and of law to await the final determination on the discretionary end. As a lawyer my hon. friend will appreciate that, and it seemed to be the most practical way of approaching it. I think it will be found that the appeals on matters of discretion can be disposed of more expeditiously than the other appeals, because the questions involved, while important, will be of much narrower compass. So I think in practice that is the way it will work out. It was felt in any event that it would be well to experiment to see how it works out on that basis, and if it were found that there was a serious tie-up for reasons such as my hon. friend has suggested, some appropriate change could be made.

Mr. FLEMING: Will that not make the appeal procedure expensive and cumbersome? It is the experience of most people who go before the exchequer court in income tax appeals that you rarely have an important case coming before that court that does not involve points of fact, law and discretion. If we are to make two appeals out of one, it will be a slow, cumbersome and expensive process. It emphasizes again the wisdom, if I may say so, of the recommendation that came from the senate committee, that the income tax appeal board should be clothed with authority to determine appeals on matters of discretion also. That would have given the taxpayer a simple procedure.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall be very glad to give consideration to my hon. friend's remarks. I shall have something to say in a moment on the other point he raised. But I may say from my own experience when I was handling some of these appeals, that in the few cases I had in the exchequer court I did not have any in which the question of discretion was involved. In most cases it was a question of law, and in certain cases a question of fact. I did not happen to have in my own practice questions of fact, discretion and law involved in the same case, but I have no doubt that that sometimes happens. I think we should try this out. From my own experience I believe it will work, and if it does not, we will change the law to make it work.

As to drafting and the use of the device of a schedule, I have considerable sympathy with my hon. friend's views on that, and when a general revision of the act is taking place I think we could attempt to see that the necessary provision is made. I am also in complete agreement with him on the advisability of advising the taxpayer of his new rights of appeal, and I feel sure that the Department of National Revenue can adopt procedure along the line he suggested, namely, that a clear statement of the taxpayer's rights of appeal can go out on or accompanying the notice of assessment form.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I have one question to ask the minister which, I think, could properly come at this moment by reason of what the minister has said referring to the revision of the act. May I draw his attention to what was said on October 12 last by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. Speaking of reorganization, he said—Hansard, page 1006:

> Any reorganization of the personal income tax must be so carefully and thoroughly done that it will not have to be re-done in the early future. I have somewhat reluctantly reached the conclusion that, at this early date and in view of the contingencies involved in our discussions with the provinces, it is wise not to attempt to combine an immediate revision of the whole personal income tax structure with reduction of the tax.

He goes on to speak of simplification of the forms for the forthcoming year. Are we to take it that that project of which the minister spoke, which he seemed to regard as of great importance, and which I certainly think the public regard as of great importance, has receded? I think the minister made a general reference to it on June 27 last, although at the moment I have not been able to spot it. I would like to know where the matter stands, as it is of public interest.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not the minister's statement before me, although I remember listening to it. I think what he had in mind in the statement which my hon. friend has just read was, more particularly, a reorganization of the rate structure. Of course in addition to that there is the rearrangement of the act itself. Work is being done on it continuously. As no one will appreciate better than my hon. friend or other hon. members who have legal training, that is a very big job, it is a difficult job, but work is being done on it steadily. I am not in a position to make any promises, but I would certainly hope that the revision, consolidation—simplification, if you want to call it so—to which we have all been looking forward will not be long delayed. I do not think there is anything more I can add to that statement at the moment.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I understand it, then, one can be assured that this is not something which is being done in somebody's spare time, but is regarded as an important project which is continuously proceeding.

Mr. ABBOTT: My hon. friend can rest assured that that is so.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am not going to repeat the arguments which I made on August 13 when this matter was referred to on a previous occasion. As I see the situation, while a right of appeal is granted under section 69A, having regard to the subsequent paragraph, section 69E, which deals with the question of the review of discretion, the right of appeal is very greatly circumscribed. While it will in some degree remove some of the objections which have been taken here before, I submit that it does not go far enough. For if discretionary power remains subject to appeal merely subject to submission to an advisory board, with no power to alter the decision made by the official in the exercise of his discretion, the right of appeal is to all intents and purposes, in so far as discretion is concerned, a matter of form and not of effect.

I advanced several arguments the other day in this matter. It affects individuals everywhere in this country. I come from an agricultural province, and it affects in great measure the farmers not only of my own province but of all over the dominion. Within the last two years intensified efforts have been made by the Department of National Revenue to collect income tax from farmers. Many of them have no records, and because they have none, officials of the income tax branch have simply set arbitrary figures as to what the income was, and upon the basis of whatever the arbitrary figure might be the assessment has been made. And that decision is final, regardless of equities and regardless of any injustice which may have been done.

This whole question, as I said the other day, was dealt with by a committee of the senate to which reference was made this afternoon by the hon. member for Eglinton. This committee covered the situation thoroughly, and I am going to refer to one or two recommendations which were made and ask the minister whether or not he is prepared to accept an amendment which will provide once and for all a right of appeal and will be in fact a right of appeal for most of the matters upon which to-day ministerial discretion or official discretion is accepted as final. In the report of the special committee of the senate, page 382, the following appears:

> The first important consideration which appeared repeatedly throughout the hearings and which is felt to be a fundamental principle in this connection is that the board of tax appeals, when established in whatever form considerd desirable, should be entirely divorced from and independent of the control of that department of government which is charged with the levying and collecting of taxes.

I submit that in so far as the advisory board is concerned the bill goes contrary to that principle, which is a necessary principle to be accepted, that justice is to be assured. Second, the senate committee has pointed out that it is equally important—> —that the administering officials of the department which levies and collects the taxes be not accorded any authority relating to the exercise of administrative or ministerial discretion, the levying of assessments, or the imposition of penalties which is not subject to the immediate, effective and conclusive jurisdiction of an independent tribunal.

When one looks at section 69E, setting forth as it does the number of cases of discretion provided for in this act, some indication is given of the small ambit in which there is the right of appeal. As a matter of fact the Acting Minister of Finance has just stated that, in actions he has had before the courts, they dealt mainly if not exclusively with questions of law. I can well understand that, because if they were matters of discretion there would be no right on the part of the exchequer court to hear those matters unless under the authorities it was established by the objecting party that the discretion had not really been exercised in a legal manner, or had not been exercised honestly or fairly, or that the person who exercised the discretion did so on the basis of extraneous considerations which ought not to have been before the officer in question. So the result is that the only appeals that would come before the exchequer court, the law being what it is, would be appeals dealing with a matter of law.

Mr. ABBOTT: They could be questions of fact as well.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes.

Mr. ABBOTT: I had one or two in which there was a very acutely disputed question of fact.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Oh, yes; but I believe I am correct in saying that when it is a question of fact the court resubmits, on the appeal, the matter to the minister with a view to having him determine the proper exercise of discretion in regard to the decision on those facts.

Mr. ABBOTT: It has not in my experience, but it could.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am speaking from memory, but my recollection is that on more than one occasion the court has referred a matter back to the minister because it did not have the power to substitute its decision, regardless of its feelings on the subject, for the decision on the facts as determined by the taxing officer.

Mr. ABBOTT: There were six or seven witnesses and there was no reference back, when the exchequer court heard the case.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: This committee of the senate had before it representations of almost every industry in the dominion and of every great organization. It had representatives of labour, agriculture, business and industry, and it recommended that there should be constituted a board of tax appeals either by a separate statute of the dominion parliament or by some appropriate amendment. It further recommended that, in addition to having the judicial powers of a court of record, such a board be also empowered to dispose of questions arising on matters of fact which might enter into the determination of the law relating to the proper construction of a statute, and moreover that they have full power to hear and determine any appeal made by a taxpayer from an assessment under the act. Having regard to the thoroughness with which this committee heard the evidence, and on which it came to what I believe is a reasonable conclusion, considering the wishes of the vast majority of the taxpayers of the country, and realizing that the only voice in protest against the recommendation, as appears in the report, was that of Mr. Fraser Elliott, I submit that the minister might very well have gone as far as to accept, if not all the recommendations, at least a major portion of them. I suggest that this appeal board, so far as it does operate under the income war tax act, under section 69A, should not only sit in Ottawa but should hold sittings in various places throughout the country.

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree with the hon. member.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am glad my hon. friend does, because it is impossible for those in distant provinces to have their cases presented to the appeal board unless the board from time to time sits in capital cities or in the major cities in the various provinces. I repeat, I am pleased that the minister agrees with that view, because it is obvious that otherwise many who might desire to appeal, believing it would be too expensive for them to travel to Ottawa and retain counsel, might be denied the right to appeal.

With a view to bringing the whole question to a head so far as appeals are concerned, I am going to move that section 69A be amended by adding after the word "assessment" in line 43, the following words:

or to any question of fact or arising in matters of fact which may enter into a determination of the law.

The section would then read:

A taxpayer who objects to an assessment or to any question of fact or arising in matters of fact which may enter into a determination of the law under this act may, within two months after the day of mailing of the notice of assessment, serve on the minster a notice of objection . . .

And so forth. I believe that the acceptance of this amendment would be generally benefical to the people who, during the period of the war, willingly paid income tax and often willingly accepted rulings which they believed were unjust because they did not wish to impede the war effort, realizing that it required money. If the amendment were accepted, then of course some alteration would have to be made in section 69E, to which I shall have some references to make when we come to it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I may reply briefly to the points raised by my hon. friend, particularly with reference to the exercise of discretionary powers by the minister under the provisions of the act. It was dealt with by each of us the other day on second reading of the bill, and I then put forward the view of the government, giving the reasons why it was felt that these discretionary powers must continue to be exercised by a responsible minister of the crown and not by any independent board.

It seems to me that the exercise of discretionary powers, to the extent that this may be necessary, properly belongs to ministers of the crown, and, of course, the government as a whole must take responsibility for the act of any minister, as this government is quite prepared to do. I do not believe that independent bodies that are not responsible to parliament, not responsible to the electors, should exercise the functions of government.

I agree with what has been said in this debate on previous occasions, that these discretions should be restricted to the greatest extent possible, but either under the head of effective administration of an act of this kind or in the exercise of discretion to determine what is after all a matter of government policy, I think that it is necessary that someone should have the power to exercise discretion.

Let me give one or two examples, first on the question of depletion. Under the act as it now stands the minister is given the right to fix rates of depletion in the case of certain wasting assets. In my judgment that is in essence a matter of government policy to be determined by a minister of the crown responsible to parliament and not to be determined by any independent board. The same applies to the question of rates of depreciation. That may not be quite as evident, but again, in my opinion,—it is only an opinion but it is my judgment—that is a matter which should be exercised by a responsible minister, a minister responsible to the people, and not by an independent board. The same would apply to one of the discretionary powers given under the act, to approve a particular pension fund or plan as being a plan which is entitled to avail of the provisions of the act. As to the appropriate allowance for a reserve for bad debts, there, again, that to me is a matter of government policy and should be determined by the minister and not by any independent board. There are a number of minor discretions: the power to designate where books and records are to be kept, the right to nominate persons who shall make the return on behalf of a corporation, the general power to enlarge returns, and so on. I will not assert that there are not some discretionary powers in the act which should not be eliminated, and we are endeavouring to do that. I do not think there are many. I say that the great majority of the discretions conferred on the minister by the act are discretions which should be conferred on a minister of the crown and not upon any outside independent board which is responsible to no one.

The senate committee did extremely valuable work. They made a thorough investigation of this question. Their report has been most valuable, and in many respects it is being implemented in this legislation; but in my opinion they were mistaken in their recommendation with respect to the exercise of these discretionary powers. I should like to read to the committee one statement which they made in that connection and which will be found at page 383 of the report which the hon. member for Lake Centre read. I wish the committee would listen attentively. This is what it says:

> In this connection it is also recommended that the board should, for the purpose of entertaining and disposing of appeals from assesments, have the statutory authority to exercise all the powers and discretions of whatever nature as may now be vested in the Minister of National Revenue under any of the provisions of the Income War Tax Act or the Excess Profits Tax Act, 1940, or any such powers as may be imported into them at any subsequent time by legislative or administrative authority.

I have heard a great deal in this house and elsewhere in the not too distant past about delegating authority to boards; and I would ask hon. members to read that recommendation rather carefully and see whether they do not think the suggestion is that we should delegate to this board, which would be independent of any parliament, independent of the people, the power to exercise discretions in matters which, in my judgment, are matters of government policy. If the discretion is to be exercised it should be exercised by a responsible minister of the crown who sits in the house and must answer for the exercise of that discretion. I do not want to overemphasize that point, but that is the reason why the government has come to the conclusion that these discretionary powers must be exercised by the responsible minister. In order to give some assurance that these powers will not be exercised arbitrarily, we are proposing to set up this independent advisory board which will have the task of reviewing the exercise of the discretionary powers by a minister, and, if it disagrees with the minister, so stating. But in the final analysis the decision will rest with the responsible minister. If he sees fit to do so he can disregard the advice of the advisory board. I think it is fair to say that he would be a bold man to do so. He would have to feel pretty sure that the board had gone astray. Nevertheless he will retain that right, which is fundamental to our system of parliamentary government of taking the action on his responsibility.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. ABBOTT: Gladly.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Would the decision or recommendation of the board on a matter of discretion be made known to the person appealing?

Mr. ABBOTT: Oh, yes; it is our intention that it be made known to the person appealing. It should be made known not only to him but to the public. Probably the names should be kept secret if they do not have any bearing on the findings. It is the intention that the findings of this advisory board should be made available not only to the person appealing but to the general public. I think it should be helpful to the general public to know how the discretionary powers on matters of policy and otherwise are being interpreted, how they are being exercised, and that parliament should know it. That is the reason, as concisely as I can give it, why the government has decided that these powers must remain with the responsible minister. It is for that reason that I cannot accept the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for Lake Centre.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): In cases described by the minister as matters of government policy I would find it difficult to disagree with what he has said. In regard to the discretions mentioned in section 69E, has there been singled out of the many discretions which the minister may exercise those which are in fact considered to be matters of government policy? Let me give an example. I refer the minister to page 17 of the bill and to the discretion reserved to the minister under subsection 2 of section 5, which says that depreciation may be allowed if the taxpayer is, in the opinion of the minister, making a new investment and so on. Is that what the minister would describe as a matter of government policy? It would seem to me to be something different from that. It would seem to me to be a matter not of government policy but merely of interpreting, as a matter of fact, a business point which the act sets out.

Mr. ABBOTT: I will concede that there are some borderline cases and that may be one of them. I have not had time to consider them in detail, but I would say that the majority of these discretions, the ones which are really important to the taxpayer, things like depletion, things like depreciation, bad debt reserves and so on, things which really affect the amount of taxes which he has to pay, are fundamental questions of government policy. I have had some experience in this line, as my hon. friend knows, and I make the assertion that the discretions which are important, the ones which really affect the taxpayer in his pocketbook, are ones which relate to government policy.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Let me ask one further question. When the minister says that questions of depreciation or bad debts are matters of government policy, does he mean consideration of depreciation, or bad debt reserves in a particular company or does he mean fixing a general policy which has to be followed and applied in all cases?

Mr. ABBOTT: What I mean is fixing a general policy that is applied in all cases, fixing rates of depreciation and depletion. Particularly in the case of depreciation it is difficult in a statute, for instance, to lay down a general rule for every type of asset. Generally speaking, machinery and equipment is depreciated at, let us say ten per cent a year as an example. But there may be special types of machinery and equipment that depreciate much more rapidly. There should be a discretion in the minister to allow that more rapid rate of depreciation. That is what I mean by the exercise of discretion in what is in essence a matter of government policy.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to turn to section 69E which deals with the taxpayer. The section reads:

A taxpayer who objects to a decision of the minister made in the exercise of a power conferred by one of the following provisions of this act . . . may within two months after the day . . .

—appeal to the minister, and later on the matter may be referred to the income tax advisory board. The minister says the reason why appeals on these discretionary matters cannot be allowed is that they are matters of government policy. I am going to look over a few of these.

Mr. ABBOTT: The main reason.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Paragraph (g) reads:

The minister may disallow any expenses which he determines to be in excess of what is reasonable for the business carried on by the taxpayer.

I say by no stretch of the imagination is that matter one of government policy. Then paragraph (e) reads:

The minister has the power to determine which parent shall be allowed the deduction in respect of a dependent child if the parents cannot agree between themselves.

Is that a matter of government policy?

Mr. ABBOTT: Yes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Paragraph (k) reads:

The minister may determine the chief position or occupation of a taxpayer.

(n) Under ss. 3 of s. 21 the minister has the right to value property transferred by shareholders to a personal corporation.

Mr. ABBOTT: Most of those sections are to prevent fraud.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It continues:

(o) Under s. 23 the minister may determine the fair price of commodities sold by one company to a related company.

None of these things, by any stretch of the imagination, could be considered as matters of government policy. Then we come to one about which there can be no question whatsoever:

(w) Under s. 47 the minister may determine the amount of tax to be paid notwithstanding the return made by the taxpayer.

That, I submit, is a paragraph which must be considered as unfair. Without any appeal on the part of the taxpayer. the minister simply determines that the amount for which the taxpayer should be assessed is an arbitrary amount fixed by the minister; and, regardless of the circumstances, the taxpayer has no right of appeal.

Mr. ABBOTT: Would the hon. member read the whole of section 47, to which he has just referred? That is the discretion in question. Perhaps he would allow me to read it. It states:

The minister shall not be bound by any return or information supplied by or on behalf of a taxpayer, and notwithstanding such return or information, or if no return has been made, the minister may determine the amount of the tax to be paid by any person.

That is a provision found in every income tax act. The taxpayer has his right of appeal to a court. But if we did not have the provision in the act, the taxpayer could avoid payment of the tax simply by failing to file his return.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is just what the taxpayer will not have—the right of appeal—if this becomes law. Let us examine this seriously, under section 69E.

Mr. ABBOTT: That is not a discretion.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It is set out as one of the discretionary powers under section 69E, and not subject to appeal. It is subject only to a decision by the minister.

Mr. ABBOTT: But there is an appeal against that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If that is so, it should not be in here. It should not be set out in section 69E. It says in section 69E that a taxpayer who objects to a decision of the minister made in the exercise of a power conferred by one of the provisions in the act, among others paragraph (w) which refers to section 47. That is specifically referred to. Then it goes on to say:

. . . may within two months after the day on which notification of the decision is sent to the taxpayer, object to the decision by filing a notice of objection in duplicate.

(2) Upon receipt of the notice of objection, the minister shall reconsider the decision and shall, as soon as possible, either——revise the decision, or take the alternative action.

Then it states:

(3) Where the minister has informed the taxpayer under subsection 2 of this section that he intends to affirm the decision or to make some variation therein other than that requested by the taxpayer, the taxpayer may, within two months after the day notification is sent to the taxpayer under that subsection, require the minister to refer the objection to the income tax advisory board, constituted by the fifth schedule to this act—

And soon. The very fact that it is included in section 69E, as one of the matters which go to the income tax advisory board is, I submit, of itself, definitely conclusive of the denial of the right of appeal under that particular subsection.

Mr. ABBOTT: I completely disagree with my hon. friend; but that is a matter of law.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, my hon. friend may completely disagree if he wishes. But if I am wrong in that, is it included in section 69E under one of these paragraphs in respect of which there is no appeal?

Mr. ABBOTT: He can take his appeal under either or both.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: First the minister says the reason we have section 69E is that these are matters of discretion—and it is so entitled. They are referred to as discretionary powers. Now he says either they can decide it is not a matter of discretion, and appeal under section 69A, or, if the taxpayer feels it is a discretionary matter, he can proceed under section 69E. The minister cannot have it both ways.

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. ABBOTT: I will agree with my hon. friend to this extent, that it may be unnecessary to include it in section 69E. But what we have attempted to do is to include virtually all these discretionary or alleged discretionary powers, except those which have been spent or those which refer to the excess profits tax. But if the hon. member would like to have it struck out, I would have no objection.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I think the minister must agree that it would make it conform.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am inclined to think that is correct. I would have no objection to striking it out.

Mr. FLEMING: I was interested in the answer given by the minister a minute ago with regard to making public the findings or recommendations of the income tax advisory board. I would draw to his attention the fact that there is nothing in the bill to that effect. I would invite his attention, by way of contrast, to another section in the bill. If he will look at the third schedule which begins at page 31 of the bill, and direct his attention particularly to page 34 where it deals with the powers of the income tax appeal board, he will see at the bottom of the page the following as section 10 (2):

The registrar shall, under the control and discretion of the chairman, make available for publication all decisions of the board.

That is the procedure provided for the income tax appeal board. There is nothing similar for the income tax advisory board under the fifth schedule.

Mr. ABBOTT: Perhaps I am partly responsible, because I assisted in revising these particular sections. We felt that since the income tax appeal board was, in a sense, a court, we had better spell out the provisions, completely, including the one to make the findings of the board available. Since the income tax advisory board was, in a sense, a departmental board, we thought it would be more efficient and more satisfactory to deal with a good many of these points by rule or regulation. But I give the hon. member and the committee the assurance that those rulings or decisions, or whatever you wish to call them, will be made available.

Mr. FLEMING: Besides making the decisions public, will the minister also make public the complete recommendation, with the reasons tendered to the minister by the income tax advisory board? I recall that under the procedure laid down in section 5 of the Excess Profits Tax Act the board of referees tenders its recommendation to the minister. The minister merely tells the taxpayer what his decision is, but in no case of which I am aware did he give any of the reasons, or even the gist of the decision the board of referees arrived at when making the recommendation to the minister. The minister was not bound by the recommendation. He did not publish either the recommendation or the reasons which the board attached to the recommendation.

I think that in this instance it is important not only that the decisions of the board be made public, but that the reasons for the decision also be made public. They might be of more value to other taxpayers than the bare, bald decisions.

Mr. ABBOTT: I shall take note of my hon. friend's suggestion. I cannot make any definite commitment now as to the exact form these decisions will take. It seems to me we should leave that until the board is set up. But I would agree that the material made available should be sufficient to enable others who are interested fully to appreciate the considerations involved in the recommendation. I should think it would be appropriate, of course, that names should not be mentioned—

Mr. FLEMING: Quite so.

Mr. ABBOTT: —so as not to reveal the private affairs of other people. But I can assure the committee that every effort would be made to see that the fullest possible statement is made of the reasons on which decisions are founded.

Mr. FLEMING: I believe the minister expects that these two boards will build up a certain jurisprudence. The income tax advisory board will build up its jurisprudence in relation to the interpretation of these sections with respect to discretionary powers. I believe the minister made it clear that he feels it would be of little assistance to taxpayers in general if they were simply told that an appellant's assessment had been reviewed by the income tax advisory board, and that they recommended against any interference with the assessment. They should give reasons which will be of some help to the taxpayer and to other taxpayers.

Mr. ABBOTT: I agree.

Amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) negatived.

Section agreed to.

Sections 16 to 19 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I understood that my hon. friend was going to delete paragraph (w) of section 69E.

Mr. ABBOTT: I have not thought the matter right through, but I am inclined to think that might take away something from the taxpayer which he otherwise would have. I have no objection to deleting it, but in drafting the section we attempted to include all the ones we could. This seems to be a sort of discretionary power; the words used are "the minister may determine." We put it in and I wonder if it would not be well for us to leave it in. I will give consideration to the point which my hon. friend has raised, but I really feel it may be of some benefit to the taxpayer to have it in.

Mr. GRAYDON: Is the government starting to think of the taxpayer?

Mr. ABBOTT: We always think of the taxpayer.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: It can be left in if the taxpayer is being considered. It is a fine thing to know from what the minister says that for once the taxpayer is to be considered. I submit that if it is included, then section 47 should be without prejudice to the rights of the taxpayer to appeal under section 69E.

Mr. ABBOTT: I am arguing as a lawyer, but my own feeling is that nothing said in section 69E takes away from the taxpayer the right which he has under section 69A to appeal against an assessment. He can appeal against an assessment, not only with respect to matters of fact and law but with respect to these discretionary powers. It is true, as has been pointed out here on other occasions, that in the case of most of the discretionary powers his appeal might be of little value because the court would not interfere with the exercise of a genuine discretion. The language used in section 47 is "may determine"; and when there is a determination of income, when a taxpayer has failed to file a return, has filed an incomplete return or something of that kind, if the taxpayer has any dissatisfaction he has an appeal against the assessment. I am just arguing a legal point. I may be wrong, but I think I am right.

Mr. FLEMING: I think some of the difficulty with which the minister is faced at the moment in regard to the present section 47 arises from the language of section 69E, subsection 1, which is too broad. This reads:

> A taxpayer who objects to a decision of the minister made in the exercise of a power conferred by one of the following provisions of this act . . .

The heading of that section is "review of discretion", but the word "power" might not necessarily be confined to discretionary powers.

In some of these sections there is provision for both a discretionary power and the power to make a decision. I think section 47 is a good example. I should be inclined to conjecture that the reason the draftsman put in section 69E, subsection 1, paragraph (w), was that he thought that in making a determination under the present section 47 the minister might have occasion to exercise some of the discretionary powers conferred under other sections of the act. It is quite apparent that in many cases in carrying out the provisions of section 47 the minister is bound to exercise discretionary power. Would not the difficulty be met at least to some extent, by inserting in the second line on page 27 of the bill the word "discretionary" before the word "power"? I think that would overcome the difficulty of there being any possible repugnance between section 69A and 69E and would go a long way toward overcoming the difficulty presented by the present section 47.

Mr. ABBOTT: I was wondering whether it might not be possible to cover this point by adding an additional subsection, to the effect that proceedings under this section shall be without prejudice to any right of appeal which the taxpayer may have under other provisions of this act.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I think that would cover it.

Mr. ABBOTT: I would be quite glad to insert that, and I shall ask my colleague to move it.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I move accordingly.

Amendment agreed to.

Section 15 as amended agreed to.

Sections 20 to 23 inclusive agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. JACKMAN: Section 3, subsection 7, has to do with certain forms of investment companies where the taxation is at half the regular rate, and reference is made to companies having a funded indebtedness. A company might have no bonds outstanding but, on the other hand, have a bank loan maturing in three, four or five years. Would that constitute a funded debt for the purposes of this section?

Mr. ABBOTT: I would not think a bank loan would come under the heading of funded indebtedness.

Mr. JACKMAN: I should like to ask for some clarification of the bill where non-resident owned companies are dealt with. I brought up this matter when the resolution was before the committee. Would a company whose fiscal year did not coincide with the calendar year be prejudiced as far as rate of taxation or the constitution of the tax was concerned? It is not set out specifically, but I think the minister gave that assurance.

Mr. ABBOTT: I renew that assurance.

On the schedules.

Mr. FLEMING: I should like to make an observation about the schedules, particularly the provisions contained on pages 34 and 36 of the bill. Section 8 of the third schedule defines the jurisdiction of the income tax appeal board while on page 36 the jurisdiction of the exchequer court is defined. I should like to draw attention to the language used. The present section 66, which defines the jurisdiction of the exchequer court, reads:

> Subject to the provisions of this act, the exchequer court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions that may arise in connection with any assessment made under this act and in delivering judgment may make any order as to payment of any tax, interest or penalty or as to costs as to the said court may seem right and proper.

Section 8 of the third schedule, on page 34 of the bill, gives the board of appeal three powers:

> The board may dispose of an appeal by > (a) dismissing it,
> (b) making the assessment that should have been made, or
> (c) vacating the assessment and referring it back to the minister for reconsideration and reassessment.

But when an appeal is taken from the decision of the income tax appeal board to the exchequer court, section 3 (4) of the fourth schedule, on page 36 of the bill, provides:

> The court may dispose of the appeal
> (a) by dismissing it;
> (b) by vacating the assessment;
> (c) by varying the assessment; or
> (d) by referring the assessment back to the minister for further consideration and reassessment.

The difference comes down to this, as I read these provisions: the income tax appeal board has no power to vary the assessment; the exchequer court has power to vary the assessment. What is the reason for withholding from the board the power to vary the assessment?

Mr. ABBOTT: I know there is a difference in language, but I think my hon. friend's point is covered by section 8 (1) (b), which provides that the board may dispose of an appeal by "making the assessment that should have been made." I think that is perhaps a little longer way of saying that the board may vary the assessment.

Mr. FLEMING: If the minister gives the assurance that that is the way it will be interpreted—

Mr. ABBOTT: I think it would have to be interpreted in that way, and if it were not, we would certainly amend the law. I think those words are broad enough to cover the point raised by my hon. friend.

Schedules agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. ABBOTT moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. BRACKEN: I do not think the minister should press for that to-day. Before the third reading I should like to have a copy of all the amendments that have been made in committee if that is practicable.

Motion stands.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

391. Departmental administration, $494,958.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I carry on the recommendation, Mr. Chairman, which I was making when we had the bill sponsored by the Minister of Transport before us earlier to-day? It is merely a recommendation to the minister for his consideration. It is to this effect, that the committee which has to do with wholly owned government railways and shipping might well be consolidated with the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. The reason I suggest that is that the committee on wholly owned government railways and shipping sits for only a week or ten days each session and to a certain extent lacks continuity of information and background in the railway and shipping field. The other committee having to do with railways also sits infrequently, although I have no doubt that in the early history of our country the subject of new railways, canals and telegraph lines was of much greater moment than it is at the present time. Failing the worthwhileness of that suggestion, I would suggest that bills for the construction of branch lines or for capital expenditures on behalf of the Canadian National Railways be referred to the standing committee on wholly owned government railways and shipping, which embraces within its purview the annual report of the Canadian National Railways system. The members of that committee are, to some extent at least, familiar with the operations of the railway and have the purview of its expenses, the outlook for the coming year and the capital structure of the railway system, and if there is to be any addition to the debt caused by the construction of new lines I think it would be well if in future such bills were referred to that committee, failing the acceptance of my first suggestion.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I am very glad to have the observations of the hon. gentleman on the advisability of having branch line bills referred to the committee on railways and shipping. But I should point out to him that at every session a large number of private bills having to do with the construction of bridges, tunnels, and sometimes provincial lines have always gone to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and never to the committee on railways and shipping. I would also point out that the matter is not one to be decided by the Department of Transport but by the house itself, because the committee having to do with railways, canals and telegraph lines is set up by the house itself as a standing committee and the adoption of my hon. friend's suggestion would require the rules of the house to be amended.

Mr. JACKMAN: I was asking for the minister's assistance if the idea met with his own approval.

Mr. CHEVRIER: It does not entirely meet with my approval, because I am sure the committee on railways and shipping would not want to be bothered with all these private bills. It is concerned exclusively with government-owned railway and shipping operations, having been set up for that specific purpose. I might add that, in the past, branch line bills such as the one dealing with the line between Senneterre and Rouyn and that between Taschereau and Noranda were referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines and not to the committee on railways and shipping.

Mr. HAZEN: Last week we passed the Merchant Seamen Compensation Act. Since then a matter has been brought to my attention which I should like to bring before the minister. It has been brought to my attention that the cost of insurance is prohibitive for owners of small motor vessels of from 50 to 150 tons carrying a crew of about ten men.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This matter was discussed on a separate bill having to do with compensation for merchant seamen, and I do not see how my hon. friend can properly interject on these estimates a discussion of a bill that has passed the house. In my estimates there is no item having to do with compensation for merchant seamen. I do not want to stop the hon. gentleman from getting information, but I think he had every opportunity to discuss this matter when I had the officers of the compensation board here and was prepared to answer.

Mr. HAZEN: I was not seeking information. My purpose was merely to draw to the minister's attention a matter that has been brought to my attention since the bill was passed. It is a matter that he might very well consider because it comes within his department. I shall be very brief about it; if he will consent to hear me I should like to bring it to his attention.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member should be allowed to make his statement, on condition that it will not bring about a general discussion.

Mr. HAZEN: What I wanted to point out to the minister was that it has been brought to my attention that the cost of insurance is prohibitive for owners of small motor vessels of from 50 to 150 tons which carry crews of about ten men. I am informed that there are no Canadian insurance companies that issue policies which cover seamen under this act; that the only company that issues a policy to cover seamen under this act is Lloyds of London; the policy they issue is known as a P. & I. policy, and it covers a great many more risks than those covered by the act. The cost of this policy to owners of these small vessels is about $1,500 annually. These motor vessels, from 50 to 150 tons, which ply the waters of the Atlantic between the maritimes, New England and Newfoundland, do not make large profits. I am informed that one company which operates about five of these vessels makes an average profit of about $1,000. If a company of that kind has to pay $1,500 for a policy to protect itself under this act, that practically puts it out of business. I am drawing this matter to the attention of the minister in the hope that some way can be found to permit these companies to carry on business, by providing a premium or some form of insurance which they can pay and which will allow them to make a profit.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I just want to draw to the attention of the minister a condition which has existed on the interior lakes of British Columbia for a great many years on the Arrow, the Slocan and the Kootenay lakes, and more particularly, present conditions on the Arrow lakes. From time to time in a period of forty years dissatisfaction has been expressed by the people in that area with the service provided by the Canadian Pacific steamships. The matter was drawn to the attention of the railroad commission—previously—now the transport board, and it has been generally held that these inland steamship operations do not come under the Railway Act or the Transport Act. Only recently a board of trade on the Arrow lakes presented a submission to the board of transport commissioners complaining of this service and asking for an improved service and the building of a new steamer, and the board replied to the effect that they had considerable doubt as to their jurisdiction with respect to the matters covered by the petition.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I ask the hon. gentleman if the company he refers to is a private company or is it Canadian Pacific Steamships?

Mr. HERRIDGE: The Canadian Pacific. Then they quote from a case I remember, that of Slocan District Board of Trade versus Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 27 C.P.R. cases, page 299, where it was held that the board had no jurisdiction to order the reestablishment by a dominion railway company of a daily steamship service between places on sea or inland waters running in connection with railway lines owned by the same company. Its jurisdiction under section 358 of the Railway Act extends only over tolls, tariffs and joint tariffs. In that connection I want to say that that condition makes it impossible for the residents of that area to make representations to any official government body for the improvement of the service. At the present time the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is carrying on a very much less service than the service which was in operation years ago, a service which, particularly during the winter months, is a great inconvenience to the lumber operators and the farmers in the district, because the boats do not run right through, they split the service and run only twice a week. I should like to ask the minister if he would give consideration to the situation of inland lake steamers, with a view to having an amendment made to the Railway Act bringing these operations under the control or jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The only thing I can tell my hon. friend is that, by virtue of an amendment of the Transport Act which was brought down before this house last year, regulations were made providing for licensing and other matters concerning ships, but it was restricted to a certain area and did not affect the area my hon. friend refers to. I believe he should seek redress in the Department of Trade and Commerce rather than in the Department of Transport, but I can assure him that I shall be glad to ask the opinion of the board of transport commissioners whether there is not some possibility of amending the act so as to give the commissioners jurisdiction over the steamship service to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Thank you.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: In the northern part of Saskatchewan there is a certain area which is only partly taken care of by the railway system. In 1928 a railway was started from Edmonton to go east and another from North Battleford to go west. When these two sections came within forty miles of each other construction was stopped, and it has remained stopped ever since that time; in other words, we have a gap of some forty miles in this system. The people in the district are very much inconvenienced and very much perturbed, because, the railway having been promised to them, they flocked into that area in great numbers, and are now in difficulties because the railway has not been completed, and they are asking that this shall be done. If the minister has anything to say on this matter I think that, rather than make a speech at the present time, I will pause here and ask him if he has any further comments to make. Last year consideration was promised, but apparently nothing further has been done; that is, nothing further as far as construction is concerned has been done, although I believe that further surveys and inspections have been made of that district to see just where the line should go.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman is referring, I take it, to the gap between Heinsburg, Alberta, and Frenchman Butte, Saskatchewan, having a mileage of about forty miles. The gap must be considered in the light of the policy of the Canadian National Railways, which is to look, first of all, at the cost of construction; next, at the natural resources in the area, and, finally, at the amount of traffic that is to be derived therefrom. That is the general practice or custom in the railway. There may be, in fact there have been exceptions to it, but on the whole that is the practice which the railway follows with reference to branch lines. To deal more particularly with this line, it has made a survey which indicates that, because of the limited traffic to be derived therefrom, the operation would not be a profitable one. I think that was the line about which a delegation waited upon me some time ago. I told the delegation pretty much what I had already said to my hon. friend and what I am saying now, and they countered with the suggestion that perhaps a certain angle of that area had not been taken into consideration, that in their estimation there was more traffic to be derived from the area to be closed than the survey of the Canadian National would seem to indicate. So, having regard to that, I asked the railway if they would not take another look at the situation and they have done so, but I am not in a position to give a final report on the conclusion of the survey, except to say that the territory is one which would not produce sufficient traffic to give the Canadian National Railways a return on its investment if the gap were filled by the completion of the line.

At the same time the matter is still under review, of the possibility of the railway being able to serve that territory. The hon. gentleman will remember too the discussion on the Peace River line, when something was said about coordinating rail and highway facilities; and it may very well be, though I am not saying so, that this particular gap is one which might be considered with reference to the coordination of those two facilities. If that were the case it could not be done without the consent of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan or without further consideration of the points raised by the delegation which called to see me in connection with additional traffic. It has not been possible to complete the survey in that respect. That is about as full a report as I can give to my hon. friend on the question.

Mr. MacNICOL: I will tell the minister how he can get a clear picture of the failure to connect up St. Walburg with Heinsburg. If he goes to Prince Albert and then desires to go to Edmonton, what has he to do? He has to go south to Saskatoon and then to Edmonton. If that forty-mile gap were filled he would board a sleeper at Prince Albert and go straight to Edmonton. I agree with my hon. friend over here that the gap should be completed for the accommodation of the public as well as for increased traffic.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: While it may be that in that particular district traffic is at the present moment too little, there is naturally a certain hesitancy on the part of the people living there to produce more, to raise more cattle and live stock and put more land under cultivation, because the railroad is not there. The potential production of that district greatly exceeds the present production. My information is that that particular piece of line which extends from Heinsburg to Edmonton is one of the best paying pieces of branch line of the Canadian National system. It is difficult to say that the forty-mile gap is not going to be a paying proposition. That is parallel to saying that a bridge over a river, because it does not produce any particular traffic, is not a paying proposition. Nothing can be gathered immediately on either side of the bridge, but if these forty miles were filled in the traffic would increase by reason of that very fact. At the present time the people in that area are having to cross the river by means of a ferry to a little branch line on the Canadian Pacific which is some miles south of the river, and a good deal of the trade is laboriously taken that way. At present the handicap is serious, and it seems to me a foolish idea to build so many hundreds of miles of railway and leave that forty-mile gap in the middle.

Mr. FAIR: When this question came up for discussion last year I added my words to those of hon. members who spoke in favour of it. The line is not in my constituency, but many of the people in my riding have written letters to me in connection with the matter, because they are put to a good deal of extra trouble and expense on account of the gap not being finished. The minister has given reasons why the line should not be finished, but the service that ought to be given the people there is something that should be taken into consideration, because dollars and cents do not make up the whole story. I would urge again that this forty-mile gap be completed as soon as possible, because it is highly desirable that the country there should be developed.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. STANFIELD: Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Colchester-Hants (Mr. Stanfield) has the floor.

Mr. IRVINE: Six times I have been on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I endeavour to call members as I see them rise, but sometimes a number of members rise from one group, and I try to call others who rise from other groups so that one group will not monopolize the discussion.

Mr. STANFIELD: Coming from Nova Scotia, I wish to bring up one matter that is of importance to us in that part of the country, and I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I am not going to discuss maritime freight rates. I am not being critical of the railway or of the employees, for I realize the great service that the employees have given the country, especially during the last six years while the war was on. We should like especially in the lower part of the maritimes, in Nova Scotia, and in Moncton and that vicinity, to have the Ocean Limited, running between Montreal and Halifax, made into a fast train. The train at the present time does not run a great deal faster than it did thirty years ago. The distance between Montreal and Halifax is 800 miles and, if that train made the trip in twenty or twenty-one hours, that would be about forty miles an hour, including necessary stops, which is not a great rate as railways go to-day. I will admit that speed could not be made in the winter, so that it would take a couple of hours longer. There are two other trains serving the maritimes between Montreal and Halifax, and they could well take care of the smaller stops which the Ocean Limited is now making, and they could also carry the mail and express. I should not say all mail, because it might be desirable to have the Ocean Limited carry some of the mail. All the equipment on this train has depreciated. Most of it has been in use for many years and has been rebuilt, but during the past six years it has taken an awful beating. We should like to see therefore, as soon as possible, a train made up of the latest equipment, because we feel that down there the people 800 or 600 or 500 miles away would like to travel to Montreal in as great comfort as possible. It is true that we might have to pay a little bit more to ride on this train, but there are sufficient people down there who would be willing, if necessary, to pay a little extra money to get to Montreal as quickly as they could, and with as great a degree of comfort as possible. There are many professional and business men down there who have to make frequent trips to Montreal and Toronto, and there are other people as well. It would be a matter of good business on the part of the railway to provide this service. To-day many people are travelling by air. If there were a crack train down there they would keep to the railways.

The minister knows that a leader always brings business. If there were a crack train on this line it would bring business to the railroad in more ways than one; in other words, it would be a leader. I have talked to the railwaymen on many occasions; and they believe, along with the public, that it will not pay to wait until a lot of traffic has left the railways and then try to get it back. Many passengers are leaving the railways and are travelling by automobile and air. A crack train would be a great thing not only for the people of Nova Scotia but also for that whole section of the country. It would help to improve business for the railway.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am glad to have my hon. friend's view, but I am sure he will realize that if he has found the equipment is not up to standard it is owing to the fact that during the war years the railway had to use anything it could get its hands on.

Mr. ISNOR: Why send it down to the maritimes?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I may tell my hon. friend that the maritimes are not alone in that respect, but it applies to all parts of Canada. If he wishes to come into my own riding he will see that the condition of the equipment is perhaps far worse than it is in certain parts of the maritimes.

Mr. STANFIELD: In my remarks I said that I knew the railway could not get the equipment and that it had taken a bad beating during the past six years; but as soon as equipment becomes available we should like to have it.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I was going to say to my hon. friend that perhaps he knew of the fact that some equipment was in process of manufacture at the present time for the Canadian National Railways and that I think some of it is being manufactured in the maritime provinces. I am hopeful that it will be possible to put some of these new coaches on that line.

With reference to the question of speed, of course that is an important factor so far as the service between Montreal and Halifax is concerned, but there is also the question of intermediate stops which comes into the picture. Sometimes it is not always possible to meet the wishes of those who want a faster train and those who want a train to stop at intermediate points.

Mr. STANFIELD: We still want the train.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can assure my hon. friend I am glad to have his views, and I shall ask the Canadian National Railways to explore them.

Mr. IRVINE: I wish to call the minister's attention to the resolution which was discussed at an earlier date of this session and which was to the effect that consideration be given to the building of a Peace River outlet. This may not be the time to discuss that matter fully, and I do not wish to reiterate what was said at that time; but I wish to impress on the minister that we want that railroad just as other parts of Canada want railroads. The government might just as well make up its mind that it has to be built; the people of Canada have to be served.

I wish to ask the minister a question or two in regard to the Peace River situation. First, has the government had an opportunity to give any further consideration to the matter? Second, is the minister in a position to say whether there has been any approachment by the provincial governments to the federal government for some joint action in regard to building that road? Third, does the minister know what the provincial government is proposing, and if the provincial government is going to build a line does he know which route has been selected? If the minister has any information along these lines will he be kind enough to let us know?

Mr. CHEVRIER: With reference to the second question, whether there has been any approachment by the provincial government to the federal government, I am not aware of any. I think that disposes of the other questions, save the first. With regard to that question, consideration was given to the building of a railway by the government into the Peace River district, and having regard to the reasons given during the lengthy debate which took place on the resolution and for additional reasons since apparent it was felt that this was not the time to build a railway into the Peace River district.

Mr. MACDONALD (Halifax): I wish to say a word in support of the representations made to the committee by the hon. member for Colchester-Hants. I would also add that, while the necessity of speeding up the Ocean Limited is obvious, more desirable than that is an improvement of the roadbed between Moncton and Halifax. I think the time has come to consider the question of a double track over that busy roadbed. During the war it was perhaps subject to a greater burden of traffic than any other roadbed in the dominion.

There is one other thing I should like to mention. Recently the regional headquarters of the Canadian National Railways at Moncton issued a directive the effect of which would be to prohibit the unloading of cars into freight sheds in Halifax on Sundays and holidays except in cases of emergency. The result is that, on different occasions since this directive was issued, ships which have arrived in Halifax have been delayed owing to the refusal of the railways to supply working gangs at the request of the shipping agents. This directive works a hardship not only on the longshoremen of Halifax but also on those who are interested in the shipping activities there and who naturally want to induce as much traffic as possible to go through the port. It is quite obvious that if ships are delayed there is a tendency on the part of shipowners, shipping interests and shipping agents to divert traffic elsewhere. I ask the minister to use his influence and have this directive cancelled.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am happy to tell the hon. gentleman that that matter has already been taken up with the management of the Canadian National Railways, but as yet I have not had a report on it. As soon as I receive it I shall be glad to apprise the hon. member of it.

Mr. LOW: I have another question or two in connection with the Peace River outlet which was raised by the hon. member for Cariboo. What is the policy of the government, to wait until the country is completely settled and producing paying quantities of freight before it is determined that the road should be built, or is its policy to build railway facilities so that the country can become settled and fully developed? That is my first question.

In the second place, surely it must be obvious to the minister and the board that the Peace River country could develop much more rapidly and do its part toward fulfilling the needs of the world for food production, and the production of minerals and other things, if the railway were not only continued on the Pacific coast, but improved from Edmonton to the Peace River district. Has any thought been given to improving the road bed and putting better equipment on that run? I have been on the road many times, and I have found that it is actually dangerous to ride on those trains from Edmonton to the Peace River. They cannot go faster than twenty miles an hour at any time; and at times when one is trying to sleep those old cars continue to rock and creak, so that sleep becomes impossible. That happens even in the winter time, and it continues as though the car were going to tip over. Surely the roadbed and the equipment ought to be improved so as to give a better type of service to the many thousands of people who are struggling up in that country to make their contribution to the economic welfare of this country and the world.

When the minister replies will he give us some assurance that something will be done as soon as possible to give the people there some encouragement? It is an empire in itself, and I am sure if the road were continued on to the coast, one way or another, and improvements made in the approach to the Peace River, Canada will see a tremendous development throughout that whole country, and an increased production nothing short of astounding.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I do not wish to discuss the matter at great length, because I spoke at some length on this subject during the course of the debate on the resolution of the hon. member for Cariboo. Let me say briefly, however, that even among railway engineers there is a divergence of opinion as to whether a line should go into a virgin country first and then bring in the settlers, or whether settlement should be brought in and the projected line then built.

Mr. LOW: What is your policy?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The policy of the Department of Transport to a considerable extent must depend upon what the Canadian National railways—if the line in question is in the territory of that organization—advises and recommends. In this instance, the hon. member knows the Northern Alberta railways are owned jointly by the Canadian Pacific railway company and the Canadian National railways. I would not at this or at any other time attempt to tell him what the policy of another railway is or might be. I do not know what the policy of the Canadian Pacific railway company is. But I do know that there would have to be joint agreement by the railways in connection with what the hon. member seeks.

I know many of the things he has said are true, and were brought out in the committee on railways and shipping. I can only say in reply that perhaps the position he complains about is at least in some respects due to a lack of materials and equipment. The condition of the roadbeds is a matter affecting not only the Northern Alberta railways, but many other railways. I am glad the hon. member has discussed the matter in the house because, not only will it come to the attention of the Canadian Pacific Railway, through Hansard, but so far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned, I shall see that it is brought to their attention.

Mr. BRYCE: I wonder if the minister could give us any further information respecting freight rates on beets, a matter which he had under consideration during the summer. I speak not only for the beet growers in the Red River valley, but for those throughout Canada. The minister knows that the present freight rates in Canada, which are only temporary, are renewed each year to meet motor truck competition, and that there are variations in different territories.

To-day the farmer in the United States receives more for his beets than does the farmer in Canada. On top of that, the United States farmer enjoys a cheaper freight rate than we have in Canada. I have the schedule here, but I shall not take the time of the committee to go into it in detail. However, on the average 50-mile haul the Canadian farmer pays 1·7 cents per ton-mile, whereas the United States farmer pays only one cent. On the 100-mile haul the Canadian farmer pays 1·1 cent per ton-mile, while the United States farmer pays only ·7 cents. The minister will realize that there is considerable difference in these rates.

I am wondering if the minister has anything to say in this connection, because the sugar beet industry has a great stabilizing influence on the economic life of the communities in which sugar beet factories are established. They employ a great many people, and operate throughout the year.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. BRYCE: No; I should like the minister to give me an answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Six o'clock.

Item stands.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair, and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

RADIO BROADCASTING

PRESENTATION OF SECOND AND FINAL REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the consent of the house to revert to the order of business for presenting reports?

And the house having reverted to the order of business for presenting reports by standing and select committee.

Mr. MAYBANK: I should like to table the second and final report of the committee on radio broadcasting, with the evidence presented before the committee.

Mr. JOHN BRACKEN (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the mover of this motion or the leader of the house when it is expected that an opportunity will be afforded for discussing this report?

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Prime Minister): It is expected that almost at once a bill will be presented, based upon the recommendations of the report. Probably the most convenient time to discuss the matter would be on the resolution for leave to introduce the bill or on the second reading of the bill. It is intended to proceed just as expeditiously as possible with legislation based on the report, and this should be one of the first matters to be dealt with early next week.

PRIVATE BILLS

MARIE OLIVETTE MARTHE PEPIN GIGUERE

Mr. RALPH MAYBANK (Winnipeg South Centre) moved that the house go into committee on bill No. 201, for the relief of Marie Olivette Marthe Pepin Giguere.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

On section 1.

The CHAIRMAN: There are a certain number of divorce bills and two others to be considered in committee. I am informed that the divorce bills are identical with the exception of the names of the persons interested. It has been customary in the past to put these bills through en bloc and, if it is the pleasure of the committee, that procedure can be followed now.

Mr. KNOWLES: How many are there?

The CHAIRMAN: I would have to add them up.

Mr. CHURCH: I do not intend to oppose these bills since no doubt the committee will have to pass them, but I want to object to the system. Under the Roman law marriage was a civil contract, and in many countries they have simply a registration system the same as that in force for births, deaths and marriages. The ceremony is carried out by some municipal officer. I tried to introduce a bill which would provide that any judge appointed under the Judges Act would be bound to follow the decisions of the court of final appeal which are authoritative and to be followed by all judges appointed under this act. I urge the minister to take some action along these lines during the recess so that we may have some different system. I asked for a reference to the supreme court to decide as to judges following authoritative decisions.

After the last war, as after every great war, there were hundreds and thousands of these cases. The high courts of Ontario are congested with them and the judges are sick and tired of having to deal with them. They simply take up the time of the courts of our province, and the minister should look into the matter during the recess of parliament to see if some settlement could not be arrived at of this vexed problem.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the number of divorce bills; I believe there are approximately 129.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CRIMINAL CODE

FATAL ACCIDENTS AND INJURIES FROM HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AND LEVEL CROSSINGS

The house resumed from Tuesday, April 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Church for the second reading of bill No. 27, to amend the criminal code (motor cars).

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question about order No. 21, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for the second reading of this bill. This bill has not been considered at all. I gave up an hour to the government one night when I otherwise could have proceeded with it. I want to ask the minister one short question. This parliament has been sitting now for 105 days and we have had no discussion at all of the terrible loss of life occurring in this country every week-end. There are thousands of people injured or killed in our cities, on the highways and at level crossings. The British post office stamp all mail calling attention to this danger on the highways with the slogan: "Take no chances; keep death off the road." The appalling loss of life that takes place through the motor car is almost equal to the loss of life in the great war. I hope that in the recess the government will take steps to curb the reckless and criminal negligence that people are guilty of on our highways. It has been condemned by high court judges, county court judges, juries, coroners, magistrates and the public press. It is appalling to think of people being sent into the next world without one second's notice. Yet we have not found time this session to devote five minutes to this menace to life. I gladly gave up time several evenings to aid government measures, at the request of the powers that be when this bill might have been discussed. I appreciate all that the Minister of Justice has done. He has been most obliging, courteous and kind to private members, but I must urge that something be done to curb recklessness in driving motor cars in the cities and on the highways. I do not want to see the minister killed. His predecessor told me that he was nearly knocked down when crossing the street in Ottawa. No one knows who may be next. I do not want to see the leader of our party killed or the active Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

I believe the time has come when this parliament should educate the public to the dangers and do something to curb the awful loss of life that occurs through the motor car and enforce the laws. Our legislation is defective at the present time, especially respecting hit-and-run drivers. Negligence is shown all along the line. I suggest to the minister that during the recess of parliament something should be done about this menace, a survey made and a remedy found. I should like to hear from the minister on this matter.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall not make a lengthy statement about this matter. We all deplore negligence on the highways, but who of us are not from time to time guilty of some negligence?

Motor traffic on the highways is a matter that is peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the local authorities, provincial and municipal. The only way in which this parliament can deal with it is under the criminal code, and under the criminal code there are very severe penalties for reckless driving. It is up to the local authorities to enforce both the criminal code and their own laws and regulations with respect to motor traffic. I know that some provincial authorities have adopted, as a rule that is obligatory upon the courts before which cases for reckless driving come, the cancellation of the driver's licence for a period. We from time to time receive applications that we should recommend to His Excellency that the term for which a licence is cancelled or suspended should be changed; but since I have occupied the office of Minister of Justice no such recommendation has been made without the assent of the minister in charge of the highways of the province in which the applicant resided, because I felt that it would be quite improper for any federal officer to give the right to use the highways of a province to someone who had, under the laws or regulations of the province, been deprived of that right.

I think some useful purpose can be served by a debate in this house which is reported in the newspapers and which serves to impress upon the public the necessity for everyone to exercise the greatest possible care in handling these powerful vehicles. No one a few years ago would have thought that it was possible to trust the handling of a locomotive to someone who had not had a long period of training in handling it, although the locomotive follows rigid rails and has priority over other traffic. Motor cars have not perhaps the same power as locomotives, but they travel quite as fast and it requires very little study or training to be allowed to obtain a driver's licence. There are unfortunately many accidents. In view of the facilities with which a driver's licence is obtainable and the large numbers who have such licences, the accidents are perhaps not as numerous as they might be. Nevertheless that is no reason why everyone should not be extremely careful.

I have only once appeared before the assizes in a criminal case. I was asked to defend a young man who had had the misfortune to be involved in an accident in which a workman had been killed. The young man was acquitted. I have not seen him for several years, but I know that at that time he felt that that accident was something which was going to darken the whole of his life. That is something, I think, which should be, more often than it is, brought to the attention of those who drive cars. No one means to kill anybody, but when it does happen it is for the one who is involved as driver a most distressing experience, and I think that is something which might be more often mentioned as an incentive to those who handle motor cars to drive them with the greatest possible degree of care. Once more, I think the hon. member intends to render and does render a service to his fellow citizens by asking that something be said about this in the House of Commons; but as to what can be done, I think the most effective action is to appeal to the deep sense of responsibility of the average citizen.

Mr. CHURCH: What about hit-and-run drivers? I hope the minister will not be the next victim since in his address he has followed the "line of least resistance."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Do I understand that the hon. member is withdrawing the bill?

Mr. CHURCH: No, I would rather let it stand.

Motion stands.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REPORT OF RADIO BROADCASTING COMMITTEE—POSITION OF OFFICIAL OPPOSITION

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege arising out of the laying on the table a while back of the report of the radio committee I should like to make it perfectly clear that that report is not a unanimous one, and that with many of the representations we of the official opposition are in disagreement.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

391. Departmental administration, $494,958.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Before the house rose at six o'clock, the hon. member for Selkirk raised a point about freight rates on sugar beets, and referred to a discrimination between the Canadian rate as opposed to the United States rate. At the time I was not able to give him an answer, because there are some forty thousand tariff items which are handled by the board of transport commissioners. The hon. gentleman will understand that the Department of Transport as such has no jurisdiction over tariff rates, that that is a matter which is under the board of transport commissioners. The practice is for the railway to file a tariff with the board, who in turn post the tariff up in the locality where it is to apply, and if there is any objection to it a complaint can be made to the board. It may well be that in the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman the shippers have made representations to the railways, but I have inquired of the board of transport commissioners and I am informed by them that no complaint covering this particular tariff item on sugar beets has been made to them. So the best advice I can give my hon. friend is this, that if the shippers are not able to obtain satisfaction from their railways they can always appeal to the board of transport commissioners, who will adjudicate upon it.

Mr. GILLIS: During the budget debate I introduced the subject of an application on the part of the Nova Scotia government to the national harbours board with respect to the establishment of a flour mill or the securing of a site. This has been a matter of controvery for some time between the minister of industry in the Nova Scotia government and the federal government. Later in the debate, the Minister of Transport made quite a lengthy statement and went into considerable detail to offset what the minister of industry in the Nova Scotia government had said. Now, in a press dispatch on July 17—and I want the minister to clear this matter up because it is of some importance in Nova Scotia—the minister of industry of Nova Scotia, commenting on what the Minister of Transport had said here in the budget debate with reference to that matter, issued the following statement, upon which the minister may wish to comment during his estimates:

Mr. Connolly said: "Mr. Chevrier is undoubtedly not familiar with all the facts. This is understandable in view of the fact that his predecessor, J. E. Michaud, was Minister of Transport when these negotiations were carried on. No alternative site was ever suggested by the national harbours board. On the contrary, we suggested an alternative site immediately behind pier 23, which was rejected by the national harbours board. They turned it down because, they said, there was not sufficient space to erect our plant there and because such a plant would interfere with the grain conveyers. It is absolutely incorrect that an engineer of the harbours board did survey this area for an alternative site. He was here part of one day, came in to see me and told me that he did not have the time to make a survey. The fact is that pier 25 was immobilized last year and used only for storage purposes and it was almost entirely inactive."

I am not questioning the merits or demerits of Mr. Connolly's statement or the statement of the Minister of Transport, but—

Mr. CHEVRIER: You would just like a little argument, would you?

Mr. GILLIS: —I think it is of some importance to the people of Nova Scotia to have the matter clarified in their minds. If the Nova Scotia government desired to establish an industry which, although not very big, would employ some people and provide something we have not at the present time, and they were blocked by some federal commission or because of laxity on the part of those in authority, which is the accusation made by the minister of industry of Nova Scotia—and do not forget that he is a Liberal minister in a Liberal government, so that it is a family quarrel—I am merely trying to referee it to see that somebody gets fair play; but I am not arguing this statement with the minister; I am simply bringing it to his attention—he may not have read it—so that he may be able to put the facts on the record as they really are and enlighten the people of Nova Scotia. You may be running an election down there again and we want to have the record straight.

I would also ask the minister if he would be good enough, when he has time and before the estimates are disposed of, to give us some indication as to how far the Canso project has developed. Can he make a statement supplementary to the one he made in answer to the hon. member for Inverness a few weeks ago? I believe the railway is connected with the project and there is talk of rerouting the road through Guysborough county. If he has anything further to say on the subject I shall be pleased to read it in Hansard to-morrow. I am sorry I cannot stay for his other estimates, but there are odds and ends that have to be taken care of somewhere else and I am going to try to make some contribution towards settling the steel dispute. I think we shall be busy for the rest of the evening. I wish to thank the hon. member for Kamloops for his courtesy in allowing me the floor.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Perhaps I had better reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. He refers to a statement made by Hon. Mr. Connolly, minister of industry and publicity in the Nova Scotia government. I have looked at the statement and, frankly, there is not a great deal of difference between us with the exception perhaps of two things. I can find in the statement nothing that disagrees greatly with what I said in my speech on the budget, when I believe I went into the matter of the flour mill at the port of Halifax at length on that occasion. I do not want to go into it again to-night, but I repeat that nothing in the statement made by Mr. Connolly disagrees very much with what I said. The only two points with which I can possibly take issue, are first, the statement reported in the Halifax Chronicle as follows:

> No alternative site was ever suggested by the national harbours board.

The answer to that statement is that two alternative sites were suggested by the engineer of the board who went down to make the investigation. The flour mill people and the engineer from Port Arthur or Fort William insisted that it should be pier 23 or nothing else. As the hon. gentleman knows, pier 23 is a facility of the national harbours board, and it was impossible for the board to immobilize that facility. There were, however, other alternative sites,

With reference to the other part of the statement, I quote:

> It is absolutely incorrect that an engineer of the national harbours board did survey this area for an alternative site. He was here part of one day, came in to see me and told me that he did not have the time to make a survey.

The answer to that is that the engineer is Mr. Russell Yuill, then an engineer of the national harbours board, now port manager at the port of Saint John, and he positively states that he was in Halifax for three days and did make a survey.

With reference to Canso, on June 4 I gave the hon. member for Cape Breton South a fairly complete statement on the project. I have not a great deal to add to that, save to say that since that time a contract has been given for the borings to J. P. Porter and Sons; they have succeeded in boring three holes, and the work is still progressing.

So far as the railway is concerned, I should not like to say more than this, that when I discussed it last year I told the house there were several proposals in view, one having to do with relocation of a low-grade line of railway from Sunnybrae to connect with the Antigonish and Mulgrave line, but that it depended on the nature of the project over the gut of Canso, and that so far as these proposals were concerned, they would be carefully considered by the department. I said that the question of the railway would depend on which of these three or four proposals was finally adopted by the department. I do not think I can say more than that.

Mr. GILLIS: Thank you very much.

Mr. FULTON: Under the general item of the Department of Transport I should like to make a few short remarks with regard to highways and to suggest that the dominion government should have a highway policy. At present it is obvious on looking through the estimates—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for Kamloops intimated the other night that he would like to discuss highways at this time. As I recall, the minister stated that there was no item in his estimates with regard to highways, which did not come under his department. Much as the committee might like to hear about highways, I cannot see that a discussion of the subject would be in order at this time and I do not think it should be discussed.

Mr. FULTON: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am not aware, although I have tried to find out, that there is a rule which lays it down that there must be a particular estimate in the department which is under discussion before a member can raise a certain point. It has been the custom—and I believe this is unquestionable—that on the first item, departmental administration, members are permitted a certain latitude to discuss general matters in connection with the department. Admittedly, a trans-Canada highway is not a subject of federal expenditure and, therefore, not at the moment a matter in respect of which the government has a policy. The purpose of my remarks, however, is to suggest that the dominion government should have a highway policy and should give serious consideration to the immediate development of at least one decent trans-Canada highway in order to promote the progress and development of this country. I would point out that a good many years ago, to be exact, in 1912 and 1913, a bill was introduced by the then minister of railways and canals to provide for a federal highway programme and for federal assistance to the provinces in developing their own roads. That is why I chose this department upon which to make my remarks.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That was federal assistance to the provinces in respect, I presume, of relief. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but all I need say is that when my colleague the Minister of Reconstruction was Minister of Transport he attempted to bring in a bill giving jurisdiction over rates and giving the board of transport commissioners jurisdiction over interprovincial traffic, and parliament objected to it. Had that been passed, there is no doubt that my hon. friend could discuss the subject which he now proposes to deal with. But I have no money vote in these estimates covering highways, and I would not be in a position to assist my hon. friend, though if he wishes to make a speech I shall be glad to listen to it. I must point out, however, that it is not in order under my estimates, and I say that with deference to him.

The CHAIRMAN: Of course, by unanimous consent the committee could allow the discussion to take place even though it is not in order. I would refer the hon. member to subsection 2 of standing order 58, which reads as follows:

Speeches in committee of the whole house—

And committee of supply is one of the committees of the whole house.

—must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

General discussion is frequently allowed on the first item, but the general discussion must be relevant to the items which are being considered. Therefore I rule that discussion on highways would not be in order at this time.

Mr. CHURCH: Why not take up the items separately? In that way we would make more progress.

Mr. FULTON: I did not realize that you, sir, were going to make your ruling or I should have asked permission to make one short observation before the ruling was made. I realize that members have an opportunity to discuss general matters on the budget debate. I purposely refrained from discussing highways at that time, because it seemed to me there were more important matters to deal with. I also felt that the Department of Transport estimates would be the appropriate time to have a discussion on highway policy.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. FULTON: I wonder whether you would reconsider your ruling, sir, or whether you would say now it would be permissible to bring the matter up under the estimates of the Department of Mines and Resources which does have jurisdiction over roads and national parks.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I be permitted to say a word?

The CHAIRMAN: I have given my ruling, but I shall be glad to hear the hon. member for Peel.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am not disputing your ruling, Mr. Chairman, but it does seem that some opportunity should be given hon. members on some particular item of our estimates to deal with this particular matter. If so, perhaps the estimates of the Department of Transport do cover a wide field of subjects of this kind, and by unanimous consent of the committee the hon. member might have the opportunity of making such suggestions as he cares to make. It is not going to shorten the session any by taking the matter up under another department. It will perhaps expedite matters if it is dealt with now.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I make this observation? The matter which my hon. friend wishes to discuss is one which appertains to dominion-provincial relations far more than it appertains to transportation. Although there is no agreement between the dominion and the provinces on the question of highways, I think it cannot be assigned to any particular department. There has been an opportunity for discussion on dominion-provincial relations. Perhaps that would have been the time to deal with this matter. I do not know whether there is the possibility of discussing it still further; I doubt it.

The CHAIRMAN: As I understand it, the hon. member for Kamloops desires to make a comparatively brief statement.

Mr. FULTON: Mr. Chairman, I realize that at this stage of our proceedings the house desires to finish its business. I would not care to ask for unanimous consent. I would prefer to wait until I am absolutely certain that the subject is fully in order so that I do not have to limit myself in my remarks but can deal with the subject as I see fit. Therefore I would rather not proceed at this time.

Mr. TOWNLEY-SMITH: It seems that the constituency which I represent is singularly unfortunate in that it has two lines of railway which are incomplete at the present time. I drew attention to one of them this afternoon, namely, from Frenchman Butte to Heinsburg, with respect to which the minister was good enough to make a statement as to conditions at the present time. I should now like to draw attention to the second one, which was started from St. Walburg to Beaver River or Cold Lake. The roadbed was actually completed for some miles and ties were laid down. Afterwards they were moved and since that time the roadbed has been used as a highway. The people in that district are suffering a hardship because of the failure to complete that line and at times they are under a definite handicap. Will the minister be good enough to make a statement or tell us just what the situation is concerning that particular railway? At a time when foodstuffs are so important the farmers in our country should be encouraged and helped in every possible way to produce as much as they possibly can. Instead of that, because they have not a railway completed, they are, as I say, handicapped in their production. I shall be glad if I can have a statement concerning that particular line.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The gap to which my hon. friend refers, namely, that between St. Walburg and Bonnyville is a much more considerable one than that which he discussed before the six o'clock recess. It is 125·9 miles in length. It has been given careful consideration by the Canadian National Railways. In fact the Canadian National Railways is not at all disposed against it; all to the contrary, if anything.

The portion between Bonnyville and Beaver River has been started in part. I believe the rails have been laid down, but strong representations have been made for a change in the course of the line from the St. Walburg end. In other words, it has been suggested that a line might be built east of the present location as a possible alternative route. That has necessitated a further consideration by way of survey. The Canadian National Railways are careful about the manner in which they proceed. After having obtained a survey for an area and then representations having been made that the area should not be served but that the line should be diverted to take up another route such as has been the case here, the railways go into the financial as well as the traffic possibilities. So far as the St. Walburg-Bonnyville line is concerned, all I can say to my hon. friend at the moment is that, in view of the representations made for the change of the location between St. Walburg and Loon Lake, it would be necessary to have a further survey made of that portion. How soon that can be made, I am not in a position to tell my hon. friend, but I know the Canadian National Railways have the matter actively before them.

Mr. CHURCH: I should like to take five or six minutes to deal with these estimates, particularly under the items of administration and board of railway commissioners. During the first great war and the war just closed a great deal of traffic has gone over our railroads. I hope the minister will be able to study it during the recess. I shall not argue the matter at this time but just mention it. As hon. members know, the employees of the Canadian National Railways and of the Department of Transport on land, ocean, sea and air, on the great lakes and in many other places have been working a great many hours overtime. I hope a survey will be made of the work done by our railways in the transportation of our troops from Europe, through Halifax to the different parts of the country. I hope a study will be made because they had to work under intolerable conditions and long hours, and some war-time bonus should be given to all ranks. I have been talking to many of the conductors. The hon. member for Peel as well as myself has been bringing up this matter for many years past. I hope that something will be done about the matter and their overtime good work rewarded.

The next matter to which I should like to refer has to do with the board of railway commissioners. As you know, Mr. Chairman, they were appointed to regulate the railways. In 1909, by parliamentary authority, they added to their jurisdiction the control of telephone and express companies. It seems to me that after about fifteen or twenty years we have had no rate structure investigations by the commission. Now is the time for one. One section in the Railway Act says that the board of its own volition must investigate freight, passenger, telephone and express rates, and other tolls.

Some of these companies made large sums of moneys out of the war, and I urge upon the minister that he stir up the board to see that they carry out the function for which they were appointed. I believe it is section 275 of the act which gives them the power to go in of their own volition and make investigation. They do not have to wait for applications.

The city of Toronto has spent more than $100,000 in fees paid to experts, bookkeepers, and accountants to get a flat telephone rate for the whole city for business and residential telephones, and on other rate inquiries. No doubt these companies are giving wonderful service, and they performed a great service during the war, but the time has come when the board of railway commissioners should make a study of the situation accordingly as represented.

During the war, aids to navigation on the great lakes were not what they should be. A survey in this connection should be made throughout the great lakes, because it would seem that most of the money for the use of the department is spent on the gulf and river St. Lawrence, but very little of it on the great lakes for aids to navigation on the upper lakes, where there is such a heavy tonnage. It is of interest to know that the tonnage on the great lakes and the Welland canal is equal to that of the Panama canal. I should hope that something might be done to aid some of the boat captains and their crews with better labour conditions on the ships. I know, when I was chairman of the harbour board in Toronto, and head of the city, we had to establish a long row of white hydro lights at the eastern entrance of Toronto harbour, because the captains of the lake boats could not make the port in rough weather. In fact there was rough weather there; accidents occurred and some few were drowned on the lakes in the late fall. When the minister's estimates are considered I hope a study will be made of aids to navigation on the great lakes with the fall storms. I know that many of the lights are too low, and should be elevated.

There are three other items to which I should refer, the first of which is life saving for which an amount of $44,430 is set aside in these estimates. I wish to protest against what the harbour board of Toronto has had to do in connection with life saving. In that city we have spent far more than this $44,000 on this service there alone; and the life-saving crew from that city at times has to go to Georgian bay, Muskoka, Lake Simcoe, New Ontario, the St. Lawrence river and to the bay of Quinte. Telephone calls come in constantly for the services of the Toronto life-saving crew to recover drownings.

I do not know what would happen if a steamer were to be wrecked on the lake or in the Niagara river at the present time. I know that during the first great war the Cayuga, the old Chippawa and the Corona had great difficulty at times in making harbour. I can remember when the present Minister of National Defence in the first world war was serving with the McGill battery over there, and it was one of those boats that carried him over there. The same is true of His Gracious Majesty, the present King, who happened to be on one of those boats, the Chippawa, which was scarcely able to make port because of bad weather and heavy seas. That was the occasion of his first visit as a navel cadet to Niagara in 1913.

It is the duty of the department to save the lives of passengers on ships, and to guard against drownings on the great lakes. Toronto has had to do this all over Ontario, and even to New Ontario. At the present time they simply telephone to Toronto for the life savers from that city, and Toronto gets nothing for it. This is a heavy burden on the taxpayers of that city and I hope something will be done to relieve them of some of the burden, or pay half the cost to our city, which is over $55,000 a year.

Then, I have great respect for the steamboat inspectors, all good men, who make inspections of hulls, boilers, plates, engines and that sort of thing. I wish to point out, however, that they are taking great chances at the present time. The department has built up a splendid business at Port Dalhousie—not "Port Dall-howsie", as the captains used to call it. It has been called all kinds of names. But you have built up a splendid business there, the Niagara, St. Catharines, C.N.R. subsidiary. The department operates the Dalhousie City—and also that old tub, the Northumberland which thirty years ago was not good enough for the strait of Northumberland. Prince Edward Island. But they sent it up to our town, and it is still running. I am afraid there will be accidents on it, and a new ship is wanted for next year. I travelled on it once or twice to the Canadian Henley, but I would never risk my life on it again. It is time some of the large amount of money the government is making out of these subsidiaries in the Niagara district was spent on a new ship. I know, too, that there was a request for a car ferry at Cobourg, which ran for a few days. A bumper business awaits it in the Niagara peninsula.

I have concluded about all I should like to say on these estimates. The signals service is all wrong. The department has spent large sums of money in air and rail services. Some of the work done has been very good. We realize that the radio division is necessary, although some of the ships are not equipped with radio. There is radio equipment on some of the passenger boats on the great lakes, and to Niagara and Port Dalhousie, but it is time the radio service was extended and improved, and more aids given to steamboat captains on the upper lakes in the late fall in stormy weather.

There is very heavy revenue from the traffic in the Welland canal, and because of that I hope better working conditions will be provided for canal workers. I shall not refer to all the items to-night, because I do not wish to delay the passage of the estimates. I would hope, however, that a further study would be made by the minister, and that in doing so he will not forget the great lakes, where the main tonnage is found. He should not forget, either, that the marine service on those lakes acts as a regulator of freight rates for six months of the year. In the old days boats used to come in to Toronto from Colborne, Brighton, Cobourg, Port Hope and Oshawa. But the traffic on the roads has eliminated those boats.

The marine service in the Niagara district is the most important. New boats are needed. I should hope the boats would be enlarged and the system extended. Great numbers of people now like to travel by water in the summer months, and the minister would do well to study this question during the recess of parliament.

Mr. GRAYDON: I shall delay the committee for only a moment.

An hon. MEMBER: Hear, hear.

Mr. GRAYDON: I am in agreement with that, myself. I should like to place upon the record something which I believe will be pleasing to the ears of hon. members, and which will also be informative.

During the last session of parliament other hon. members joined me in expressing our interest in the railway workers of Canada. At that time, we placed on record our humble tribute to the magnificent job done by the railway companies and their employees during the war, and I should like to renew my tribute this evening.

Before being called to the international conference overseas last fall, I received a message from the Canadian automotive transport association, which is a federation of provincial motor transport organizations. One of the pleasing parts of that communication from this entirely different type of transportation organization was that, in the very first line, they said that they took their hats off to the job the railways of Canada had done during the war. This expression prompted me to make inquiries respecting the work done by the automotive transport organization, because I thought the splendid spirit which this organization of rubber-tired transport workers had shown toward the railways should be reciprocated, if possible.

Looking into their wartime activities, I found that no less than 32,000 men, or forty-five per cent of this group of for-hire interurban carriers enlisted during the war for wartime duties overseas and in Canada. The job which they did in carrying wartime express and freight for Canada could be described as nothing short of spectacular.

In closing my brief remarks, I should also like to pay a tribute to the noble work done by those who carried passengers in rubber-tired vehicles. During 1939 these passenger coaches and buses of Canada carried a total—I think this will be rather interesting to the committee because it is not always easy to get statistics of rubber-tired traffic—of 16,600,000 passengers in 1,500 vehicles. In 1944, the second to the last year of the war, they carried 73,375,316 passengers in 2,562 vehicles. The total mileage in 1939 was 46,000,000 miles as against 73,000,000 miles in 1944. That gives some indication of the importance of this sister method of passenger transportation. Its achievements can appropriately be set alongside the magnificent job done by the railroads to help Canada's war effort achieve its gigantic objective.

Mr. McCUAIG: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak on behalf of the people who have been petitioning the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Minister of Transport and different governments during the past fifteen years to have a line of railway known as the Valmarie-Mankota gap completed. The distance between these two points is thirty-seven miles. This country has been settled for thirty-five years, and about twenty-three years ago the C.P.R. started to build a branch line from Assiniboia to Notukeu, leaving a gap of thirty-seven miles unbuilt. This gap has occasioned great hardship and losses on the sale of products and has retarded development for many years. Several years ago the Assiniboia board of trade arranged a meeting with Mr. D. C. Coleman, then president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. At that meeting two questions were asked Mr. Coleman, the first one being:

Can we be sure that the road will be completed, as it has been rumoured that it might swing north from Mankota and not connect with Valmarie?

Mr. Coleman's reply was that it was mere rumour, that the road would be connected with Valmarie. The next question was:

When could the job be expected to be completed?

To which Mr. Coleman replied:

I can promise you this, that when the finances of the company are such that we can take on a building programme, that will be one of the first jobs taken on.

It is understood that the Canadian Pacific has set aside large sums of tax-free money for post-war construction, and the people feel that the government should take steps to see that these branch lines are completed by the railroad. Surely people who have been waiting all these years, deserve to be considered, as well as the Canadian Pacific shareholders. This uncompleted gap has put the brakes on production and has added to the costs of the producers. The extra cost of hauling grain by truck is from eight to ten cents a bushel and shipping cream is out of the question. You must either make a 37-mile trip by truck to the north line or else wait for the train which makes only one trip a week. Stock shipped to Moose Jaw from Valmarie is on the train two days and has to be unloaded and fed on the way. When they leave Valmarie they go to Notukeu; then they go back to Shaunavon in the one day, and they are just thirty-five miles north from where they started.

There are twenty-three shipping points on this branch line and, according to information from the pool, a total of five and a half million bushels of grain has been shipped out from these points in one year, to say nothing about the live stock, coal and other things that are shipped in. I want to say here that if the Weyburn-Lethbridge Canadian Pacific line were a Canadian National line there would be no question about this gap being filled in. As things stand now, the produce is hauled to another shipping point on the Canadian Pacific line to the north. They get it all anyway. I should like to quote from a letter written by Mr. W. M. Neal, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as follows:

> When construction of the lines which now terminate at Valmarie and Mankota was commenced, it was anticipated that the development along the projected route would progress at a rate which would justify this company in continuing, long ere this, construction from each end until both lines met. Unfortunately, our hopes in this respect were disappointed, partially no doubt as a result of the severe drought of the 1930's. The second great war which began in September, 1939, has undoubtedly since then had its effect in retarding this long hoped for development. At more or less regular intervals requests have been received that we proceed with this work on the ground that the absence of the completed railway imposes a hardship upon the people living within the area unserved directly by a railway, and also those on the line west of Valmarie. We fully appreciate their position and their consequent desire for the completion of that line. We find ourselves looking to the future in a position where we cannot afford to expend large amounts of capital without feeling assured of a reasonable return on the investment.

This makes it quite plain that the road was built with one purpose in view, money, not to serve the people. The letter continues:

> I am sure it is apparent to you that . . . with the higher price of coal and other commodities we must now, with decreasing traffic, avoid commitments which do not indicate their ability to pay their way and show a return on the capital expended.

From the foregoing it would appear that the Canadian Pacific has no intention of completing this line. In my opinion the time has come when the government will have to take decisive steps to see that the people living along these uncompleted lines get the much needed transportation facilities. Service to and welfare of the people should be the first consideration. The Canadian Pacific has been given many concessions and privileges; and I think it is the bounden duty of the government, as the parent of the nation, to see that along with these concessions and privileges there goes some responsibility. The people trust that the Minister of Transport and the government will see that this line is built. I would ask the minister to make a statement to the committee as to what is to be done about these uncompleted branch lines. Present conditions are working a hardship on the people. According to a letter that I have received, a mass meeting was held in Valmarie last week demanding action, and the returned men did not take very kindly to the treatment they are receiving. They went overseas to fight for a Canada fit to live in, not to come back to live in hardships. I trust that the government will do something about this matter.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member asks for a statement. I will give him one very briefly. I am sure he will understand at once that the line to which he refers is in an entirely different category from what the hon. member for North Battleford urged with reference to the gap at Bonnyville-St. Walburg and Heinsburg-Frenchman Butte. Those two gaps to which the hon. member referred are in the territory of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian National Railways is responsible to parliament through the Minister of Transport, but not so with reference to the line to which the hon. member for Maple Creek has referred. The Minister of Transport has no power to order the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to build a branch line or to fill any gap. The Canadian Pacific is a private company and any representations which the hon. gentleman has to make in regard to it should be directed to that corporation. However, I shall be glad to send a copy of Hansard containing my hon. friend's remarks to the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company so that he will be able to take under advisement what my hon. friend has said.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not know whether the minister can tell the committee what amount was collected in radio fees from the people of Canada in 1946. I have the approximate amount for 1945.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him and say that radio is not under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport but under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have a few words to say about that too. We have about three ministers looking after radio at the present time. We have the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply; we have the Minister of National Revenue, and we have my hon. friend who is the guiding hand in the ministry of transport.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am afraid I shall have to interrupt my hon. friend again. The Minister of Transport has no jurisdiction over radio. The hon. gentleman has been told at the last session and at this session that, by virtue of the Assignment of Duties Act, radio, meteorological services and air services are under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I thought I would get that reply from the hon. gentleman. It is the same old story of passing the buck from one minister to the other.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I object to that sort of language from the hon. gentleman. There is no question of passing the buck. The act is quite clear, and a copy of the order in council was placed on Hansard several years ago when that was done. I object to the hon. gentleman discussing radio on my estimates.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): If I cannot discuss radio on the minister's estimates, what I can discuss is this, Mr. Chairman. The act is not clear; it does not say all that. When are we going to get down to brass tacks in connection with radio so that we shall know exactly where we stand? I have been wanting to discuss the question of economy, and I thought I might have an opportunity tonight but I imagine I am going to be ruled out of order because the minister—

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend can discuss economy all he wants on my estimates, but I would ask him to deal with the estimate now before the committee.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): As a member of the house I have the right to express my own opinion. Where are we in connection with radio? The minister tells me that the act is clear. Which act?

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): The item under consideration is 391, departmental administration. It has nothing to do with radio.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The item is departmental administration, but it is very difficult for the members of the house to know just which minister is responsible for radio. We have the Minister of Reconstruction, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Transport, each with his little hand into radio.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. This item has nothing to do with radio, and I would ask the hon. member to keep to the item under consideration. The discussion must be relevant to the item.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It will be quite relevant, Mr. Chairman. These are the estimates of the Minister of Transport. That is right, is it not? You agree with me, Mr. Chairman. Now just follow the items under Transport down until you come to item 440 and you will see the heading, "Radio Division," and four items under that heading coming in the estimates of the Department of Transport, which is the department we are discussing at the present time. It does not make any difference to me who the minister is. My point is that these radio items are in the estimates of the Department of Transport, and I submit therefore, Mr. Chairman, that you cannot prevent me from discussing the question on the estimates of the Department of Transport. I am not discussing the estimates of the minister. He is just a secondary consideration so far as I am concerned in connection with this matter. If he does not know it, it is too bad. It is true that the item before us is for departmental administration, but I direct your attention, Mr. Chairman, to item 444 under the heading "Radio Division." That is an estimate which comes under the Department of Transport, and therefore I submit that I am quite within my rights.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. I hope the hon. member will not insist on discussing radio on this item.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): These radio items are in the estimates of the Department of Transport.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity of discussing radio when the minister who is responsible for that comes before the committee, but this is not the time to discuss that subject.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): These are the estimates we are discussing, a total of $29,135,695 for the Department of Transport. I am not discussing any minister's estimate. What ministers are interested in this does not make any difference to me. But this is the Department of Transport, and I am going to insist on my rights. I have before me now the Department of Transport estimates; I have something to say about this matter, and I think it is only right that what I have to say on the question of administration, and what I consider bad administration, should be discussed under this item. I do not know why I cannot discuss bad administration.

Mr. FULTON: One cannot discuss anything else.

Mr. CHEVRIER: On the point of order, the hon. gentleman refers to his rights, and I have certain rights, too. One of them is to point out that radio is not under my jurisdiction.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Why put it under Transport, then?

Mr. CHEVRIER: If my hon. friend wants to discuss radio he can do so under item 443, "Issue of radio receiving licences", which will be followed immediately after my estimates by those of my colleague the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. I have risen on a point or order, and I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to make a ruling so that we shall make some headway on this matter, which appears to me to be quite clear.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Just a minute, Mr. Chairman, before you give any ruling. There are certain ministers concerned in connection with the estimates we have before us. It is all very well for the Minister of Transport to say that these are not his estimates. What we should have right now in this chamber is the other ministers, because this is a question of administration under the Department of Transport, and I am entitled, as a member of this house and in the exercise of my rights as a member, to discuss any item which is here right under the department's estimates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: What about your obligations as a member of parliament? It is about time you talked to us about them.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am trying to talk about them at the present time, and I am also trying to inform the taxpayers of Canada about some of the extravagances which are being committed by this government.

[Mr. Golding.]

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I ask the hon. member kindly to refrain from discussing radio. The minister responsible for radio is not in his seat at the moment. The hon. member will have an opportunity to discuss the subject fully later on. It is not under this vote.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Read above item 429, and you will see the whole story.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I am sure the hon. member will cooperate and not persist in discussing this matter when there is no minister here to deal with it.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I am awfully sorry, Mr. Chairman, but if the various ministers want to have their estimates discussed in some different form they should not put them in here under Transport. I do not know which ministers are concerned; apparently there are three or four; but the point is that I, as a member of this house, have a right to discuss any item which is shown here at the present time under Transport. That is all there is to it.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It is not carried. I again point out that I am within my rights in discussing anything as far as the Department of Transport is concerned.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is wrong. If he will read what appears above item 429 he will see that it comes under reconstruction.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I see it printed there clearly. It is under administration, is it not?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): No.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Then will the hon. gentleman tell me just where administration as far as radio is concerned is to be found?

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Certainly; it starts at item 429, and the hon. member will see that it comes under the Department of Reconstruction.

Mr. QUELCH: When the hon. member for North Battleford spoke, he stated he had the misfortune to have two unfinished branch lines in his constituency. I have the misfortune to have five. However, there are just two of these that I am concerned with. There is the line from Scapa to Hemaruka and the line from Bulwark to Airways and Bodo. In the line from Scapa to Hemaruka there is a gap of twenty-four miles from Spondin to Hemaruka which has never been ballasted.

Steels were laid, and in the early days a number of freight trains were run. But the right of way was never fenced, and therefore the trainmen had to stop and open and shut the gates every time they went through a farmer's land. These trains ran for a number of years, and there is a strong feeling throughout that area that that gap of twenty-four miles should be ballasted. I realize that it would cost a good deal of money to complete it. I drew this matter to the minister's attention some months ago when I received a petition from residents in that area. I pointed out to the minister at that time that, while it might have been uneconomic in the past to run trains through that district, I believe the whole picture is changing, because the Red Deer diversion scheme is being put through, and if the land is irrigated, no doubt the amount of business will be increased considerably. This year the government has appropriated $115,000 to check the engineering details of the Red Deer diversion scheme, and the Minister of Agriculture stated in the house this year that in all probability tenders would be let and the scheme would be proceeded with. Business will then increase and there will be a real need for this line to be completed. Of course this line is on the Canadian National Railways.

The other line is one from Bulwark to Airways and Bodo. There is no break between Airways and Bodo, and the amount of business has increased in that area considerably during the past few years. This matter I also brought to the attention of the minister along with the hon. member for Battle River and the hon. member for Camrose, and a petition was presented by me from these people. Can the minister give us any information as to whether the picture as far as the Scapa-Hemaruka line has changed since last year?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am afraid I cannot give the hon. member much information with reference to the Scapa-Hemaruka line, because, while I remember the representations that were made by himself and, I think, one or two of his colleagues at the time, what I did was to ask for a report on it, but I have not obtained one from the railways. With reference to the Bulwark-Airways line, that is a line which is some 26·9 miles in length; it serves an agricultural country, and some work was done on it under the 1929-32 branch line construction programme. But, as the hon. gentleman knows, there is no such programme before the house, and I am not in a position to tell him whether there will be one in the future, certainly not in the immediate future. But at the time that a survey was made of the Bulwark-Airways line it was thought that, in view of the expenditure required to complete the gap, the railway would not be justified in completing the line. I do not know the date of this survey, but I think it was 1945. There may be some change in the position since then. I should be glad to explore it and tell my hon. friend what the result is.

Mr. QUELCH: I should like the minister to do that, because there has been quite an improvement in that area in the past few years.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Last session this question of unfinished branch lines was discussed, and I am sorry that I was not in the house this evening when the minister made a statement in connection with the Heinsburg-Frenchman Butte line. This is the second session now that these matters have been brought to the attention of the house and the question has been considered of lines being started and never finished. We have to remember that when these lines are started they are started with the idea of bringing in settlers, and those settlers go there under the promise that they will have railway service. It seems to me that the railways have a responsibility. The situation is this. The line which has been referred to by the hon. member for Maple Creek is a Canadian Pacific branch line and we have no jurisdiction over the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but we can understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not being a publicly owned organization, is not likely to build branch lines unless it can see a profit in them. But that railway does do something else. It goes into districts where we have our own Canadian National line, and I am sure they have even built these branch lines with the idea of robbing our own system. I am perfectly sure they do that even though they will lose money on it.

Last session and the session before, and in fact since 1928, these two branch lines that were discussed by the hon. member for North Battleford were started, and a promise was given the people there. These people have been doing that long haul all these years, not only having to haul produce long distances but having to pay a high backhaul, an extra charge they should not have to pay. We shall soon have to have a showdown in this country on the question of a national railway policy. There must be a solution to the railway problem and we must answer the question whether we are going to give our people the service they require. It is the duty of the government to see that the people are serviced by railways and the only solution is to have one railway system. If we had just one railway system we would do away with a tremendous amount of duplication. In some cases where the branch line might not quite balance, but might nearly do so, that line would be more likely to be completed. As it is, however, under the present system, with one private line having been allowed by past governments to build branch lines to rob our own national system, the situation is absolutely wrong, and I want the minister to answer this question. How does a private railway in Canada obtain franchises to go in and cut in on the business that should really go to our own railway?

Mr. CHEVRIER: On the subject of the Heinsburg-Frenchman Butte line, I dealt with that in answer to another hon. member and I do not think I can be expected to deal with it again.

With reference to the second part of my hon. friend's remarks, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company obtains charters to build branch lines in the same manner as the Canadian National. It comes to parliament for them; the matter is referred to a committee, and parliament approves or disapproves. Any lines which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has obtained were obtained in that manner.

The Railway Act contains a provision covering the subject, and whether or not there is competition between the two railways, the fact is that an act was passed some years ago, the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Railway Act, in which it was certainly the intention of parliament that the two railways should cooperate. They have done so to a large extent on the Northern Alberta railways and in certain hotels, and I believe there has been a disposition on the part of the railways to meet the requirements of that act and to cooperate under its provisions.

Mr. CAMPBELL: But they are not finishing branch lines.

Mr. CHEVRIER: As I told the hon. member for Maple Creek, there is little that I as Minister of Transport can do to direct or force them to complete the lines.

Mr. CAMPBELL: That is a situation that I would correct by nationalizing all the lines in Canada.

Mr. HAZEN: Under the heading "canal service", the estimates contain five items providing for an expenditure of $3,024,200 for the administration, maintenance and improvement of canals. There are no canals in New Brunswick, and consequently I do not believe that any part of this amount will be spent in New Brunswick or, in fact, in any part of the maritime provinces. Although there are no canals in New Brunswick or in the maritimes, or almost none, it does not follow that there should not be a canal. A canal is needed to connect Northumberland strait with the bay of Fundy, and it should be built if, taking a long range view of the situation, it would be economically practical to build it.

This canal would cross the narrow, sandy, low-lying strip of land known as the isthmus of Chignecto, which is something less than twenty miles wide. There are three possible routes that have been suggested, none of which would involve any large amount of rock cutting or other expensive work. Each of the three proposed routes makes use of the northern or Northumberland strait end of the Tignish river, which flows into Baie Verte. At the southern or Bay of Fundy end, there are three existing channels at the present time, the Aulac river, Missaquash river and La Planche river, any one of which could be connected with the Tignish. This canal, I am informed, was promised the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia at the time of confederation. The first paragraph of an editorial that appeared in the Telegraph-Journal of Saint John of November 27, last year, reads:

> The pledge that a canal would be cut across the isthmus of Chignecto was one of the inducements which led the Atlantic provinces into confederation. Had it been kept, our economic story would have been different and happier. The advantages of cheap water transportation would have encouraged the development of our natural resources and given this region a larger and more prosperous population. But the province has been scandalously ignored and scorned by successive generations of politicians—to the great disadvantage of our trade and commerce.

The canal, if built, would cut down shipping distances between the St. Lawrence river and the eastern coast ports along the bay of Fundy and the United States. At present, to get from the bay of Fundy to Northumberland strait or any port on the gulf of St. Lawrence by water, it is necessary to travel around almost the whole coast or a great part of the coast of Nova Scotia via the gulf of Canso. A water trip from Saint John to Shediac in New Brunswick now covers a distance of about six hundred miles. The same trip through the proposed canal would be little more than one hundred miles in length, or a saving of five hundred miles. The distance between Saint John and Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, would be cut down from 609 miles to 179 miles, or a saving of 430 miles; the distance from Saint John to Campobello, from 830 miles to about 400 miles; from Saint John to Montreal, from 1,323 miles to about 945 miles. Savings would be made on all trips by water from any St. Lawrence or great lakes port to any city on the eastern coast of the maritimes or the United States to South America.

Mr. ISNOR: Would the hon. member give us the saving that would be made from Montreal to Halifax?

Mr. HAZEN: From Montreal to Halifax? I am speaking of from Saint John to Montreal. The present distance is 1,323 miles.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member said any port on the Atlantic.

Mr. HAZEN: I said the distance from Saint John to Montreal by water is 1,323 miles. If the canal were built the distance would be 945 miles.

Mr. ISNOR: What is the saving to Halifax?

Mr. HAZEN: I cannot tell the hon. member that. I doubt whether there would be much.

Mr. ISNOR: The hon. member ought to stick to the facts.

Mr. HAZEN: I am sticking to the facts.

No public work will assist in developing our resources in this part of Canada more than the Chignecto canal; no public work would create more jobs during the construction period or, I believe, for all time.

Surveys of the proposed canal have been made from time to time; at least half a dozen have been made, and I have read that in each case it was reported that the project was worthy of being carried through, though perhaps not immediately. The effect of the report of the commission, which was held in 1931, was that the expense could not be justified during the depression. Perhaps we now have a change of view as to what we should do during depression times. The people of the maritimes, particularly of New Brunswick, would like to see this work started. It would create new industries; it would provide new jobs; it would make the maritimes more prosperous. To quote again from the article in the Telegraph-Journal to which I referred a moment ago:

> Nothing would develop our resources more in this part of Canada than the Chignecto canal; nothing would create more jobs, both through the construction period and for all time.

Since the last session of parliament have any further steps been taken by the government to inquire into the possibilities of undertaking this work?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. member has referred to a question which is of a perennial nature. I think that every time the estimates of the Minister of Transport are up there is a demand for the building of the Chignecto canal. There have been a number of surveys and reports made on the project, some of them dating as far back at 1822. The last one was made in 1931. Since I expected that there would be a question or a more or less lengthy debate on this matter, I brought the last report with me which was made in 1931, as I said before, by Arthur Surveyer, David W. Robb and John F. Sowards. The conclusion may be summarized briefly as follows, that from the point of view of the local economic advantage the commission failed to see what benefit it would be to the districts concerned to provide, at such great cost, a navigation facility which would intensify competition in the locality served rather than lessen it. The commission also found that the canal would have no bearing whatever upon the Canada-West Indies trade. The gravamen of the report can be found in this statement:

> Having regard to transport facilities already available in the maritime area as a whole, we cannot see where any interest would suffer were the Chignecto canal project to be permitted to stand in abeyance until it can be further examined in the light of future developments in Canada's economic situation.

I can say to the hon. gentleman that, since the matter was brought up in the house last year, there have been no further submissions or reports on it. It may or may not come within the reconstruction programme. My hon. friend knows there are certain projects which have been recommended to the Department of Reconstruction. I am not aware that this one has.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Just in case there is anyone else in the committee who is as ignorant as I am, I should like to ask the minister if he would tell us briefly and informally exactly what the board of transport commissioners and the staff do. I shall explain my ignorance by saying that I have a good idea of what the old board of railway commissioners did, because they were constantly hearing applications regarding the construction of new lines of railway. This was in the days when railway building was active. I confess I know nothing about the board of transport commissioners. If anyone asked me to say how they spent their time between nine o'clock in the morning and five o'clock in the afternoon I would have very little idea. I should be interested to know. Perhaps the minister can tell us briefly.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I shall be glad to tell my hon. friend what the board of transport commissioners do, how they operate and how their time is taken up. The board of transport commissioners is constituted under the Railway Act. The original act of 1903 gave them jurisdiction over certain railways in this country. The powers which they had at that time were fairly limited. Since that time, their jurisdiction has been greatly extended. It has been extended to cover such things as railways, telegraphs, telephones, ships and other matters. The mileage which now comes under their jurisdiction is 41,425 as compared with 19,610, when they came into being.

Since the establishment of the board, its jurisdiction has been extended to cover the following matters: express tolls; telephone companies; telegraph companies; international bridges and tunnels; Maritime Freight Rates Act; abandonment of portion of railway lines; Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act; certain agreements; purchase of electrical energy from persons who have acquired water power under lease from the crown, and the railway grade crossing fund.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Thank you for that.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I could go on for some time.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That is quite satisfactory. Will the minister give me one or two illustrations of the way in which the thing operates? I notice here a director of traffic. I am anxious to know just how it operates. We have the railways and the board with jurisdiction over them. Will the minister make clear the various things which come under the board? When you speak of a director of traffic, does that mean that there are certain questions or principles of traffic that the board controls, or do they have traffic questions, or is it a question of traffic, of tolls, of rates which they determine? Will the minister just say a word or two about that, and while he is on his feet, perhaps he would explain what the signal engineer does.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): We are on item 391.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I hope this has to do with the question of administration.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The detail might well be discussed under the specific item, but on the general information which my hon. friend wanted I believe I have given him a satisfactory answer. On the subject of traffic, traffic is a fairly busy part of the commission's operations. That board hands down judgments, renders decisions and makes general orders and regulations which appear in semi-monthly bulletins published through the king's printer. It has to do with freight tariffs, passenger tariffs, express tariffs, telephone tariffs, sleeping and parlour car tariffs, telegraph and radio tariffs, bridge tolls, water freight tariffs, water passenger tariffs and agreed charges.

In the report I tabled earlier in the session —and perhaps the hon. member has not had a chance to read it; I am sure he cannot read everything that is tabled in the house—it will be found that in the traffic operations of the board of transport commissioners there were no less than 44,920 tariff matters handled by the traffic division of that body.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): The hon. member for The Battlefords mentioned the matter of the propriety of building certain lines of railways. For instance, this morning we were considering a new line. Would the building of that line of railway be considered by the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No, not until after the line is built. After it is built it automatically comes under their jurisdiction. I presume my hon. friend has in mind the rates on pulp which we were discussing this morning. I was going to say that after the line has been built the railway must file its rates with the board. If it is not a satisfactory rate to the shippers there can be objection to it.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I hope this will be my last question, but this does interest me. Is it not right to say that the old railway board had as one of its chief functions the duty of determining whether such-and-such a line should be built. Assuming that is right—and I suggest it is—I suggest to the minister that it might appear from the description that the minister has given of the powers of the board that, with their knowledge of the railway situation in Canada, they ought to be able to arrive at a better judgment than any other body as to whether or not such-and-such a line is needed. Is that a fair observation? If so, could that matter be considered, namely as to whether it would not be the proper and natural body to consider such matters, in the early stages?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The board of transport commissioners have jurisdiction over the abandonment of lines. As I said to the hon. member, they do not function until a line has been built.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): But might they not?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I suppose consideration could be given to that. But as the matter now stands, and as the Railway Act now functions, they have not that right.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister give consideration to that?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Mr. JAQUES: May I call the minister's attention to the poor train service on the Canadian National Railways between Calgary and Edmonton? That line has operated since 1911, and runs through one of the finest farming districts in western Canada. There used to be a daily service—I am not so sure that there were not two trains each day—but for a number of years now there has been only a train every other day. That is poor service. It is curious to note that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company runs three trains each day, including Sundays, between Calgary and Edmonton, through Red Deer.

The Canadian National Railways, running between Calgary and Edmonton, through Camrose and Mirror, has only one train every other day, which works a great hardship upon the people in that area. For instance, if they want to go to Edmonton and wish to travel on a Tuesday they would not arrive until late in the evening, and would have either to come home early the next morning, preventing their doing any business, or wait until the Friday before returning. This means a stay of two days in Edmonton or Calgary, as the case may be.

There are many complaints about this and I would ask the minister to look into the matter. It is a very poor service, and there is no reason for it that I can see. It is one of the best farming districts in western Canada.

Comparison was made this evening between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific railway. I can say only this, that if you ever travelled over those two lines you would decide that the Canadian National Railways service between Calgary and Edmonton is a poor advertisement for public ownership of railways.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am pleased to have these representations from the hon. member. This is the first complaint made to me personally respecting the service between Calgary and Edmonton. I shall be glad to bring it to the attention of the Canadian National Railways officials.

Mr. ARGUE: I should like to refer to the fences along the Canadian Pacific railway right of way south of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, from Lisieux to Rockglen and west to Killdeer. I have considerable information here on my desk, among which is a letter from Peter Lode of Lisieux. I thought I might read from it those parts which set out clearly the point in question. Mr. Lode had one of his cattle beasts killed on the Canadian Pacific railway tracks. His letter states that the fences were down, that the railway company was not maintaining those fences as they should be maintained, and that for that reason the steer got on the tracks. His letter states in part:

> I asked the board of transport commissioners to send an inspector out here to inspect the dilapidated fence and gates on the C.P.R. from Lisieux to Killdeer. On September 18, 1945, engineer Mr. Parks, members of the B.T.C. and three C.P.R. officials, assistant superintendent Mr. Jones of Moose Jaw, engineer Mr. Clarke of Moose Jaw, and road boss Mr. Ironrud of Assiniboia . . .

He states he followed them along the railroad track when they were making the inspection. Apparently following that they made a report to the board of transport commissioners, a copy of which was sent to Mr. Lode. In that connection Mr. Lode said this:

> When I received the report from the B.T.C. I showed the report to my neighbours. They were all flabbergasted, so my neighbours suggested we take pictures of the fence and gates. Mr. Spagrud, Mr. Bjorenson and myself live between mile posts 3 and 6 along the Killdeer branch.

Then he goes on to say that they took a number of pictures. In his letter he says he has a complaint to register against the board of transport commissioners, because they should protect individuals to see that they do not suffer loss on account of neglect on the part of the railway company.

I have here a petition, not in required form, for tabling, but the recital of which states this:

> We the undersigned residents of the above districts, hereby make the following statement:
> That to our personal knowledge and experience, we say, that the C.P.R. right of way fences from the townsite of Lisieux, to Rockglen, and from Rockglen west to Killdeer, are not kept in proper repair, and that live stock can, and does get through in and on to the tracks and that we have been forced at different times to repair the C.P.R. fences ourselves, in order to keep our cattle and horses from entering on to the C.P.R. railway tracks.

This particular statement is signed by eleven people living around Lisieux. I also have sixteen snapshots here which show the fences down along the Canadian Pacific railway right of way, and I shall send them across to the minister so that he may look at them.

I think he can agree that the fence along that particular part of the railroad has not been kept in proper repair.

Mr. CASTLEDEN: Could the minister give us an explanation of the general policy of the Department of Transport with regard to the acquisition and disposal of airports throughout Canada?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is a matter for the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply who has jurisdiction over air services and airports.

Mr. ARGUE: Will the minister say that he will look into this matter of fences along the Canadian Pacific right of way from Lisieux to Rockglen?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I must give the same reply to my hon. friend that I gave to the hon. member for Swift Current. The Department of Transport has no jurisdiction over the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which is a private corporation. The hon. gentleman will have to make representations to that company. I shall be glad to refer his remarks to the president of that company. If it is a matter that has to do with the board of transport commissioners, any individual in that area can make a complaint to the board and get a hearing.

Item agreed to.

Administration of the Transport Act—
392. Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—administration, maintenance and operation, $329,940.

Mr. McLURE: This afternoon, when the hon. member for Colchester-Hants was speaking, he said that he was not going to deal with freight rates. Quite a smile lit up the face of the minister. I hope that when I announce my subject that smile will broaden. I want to make a few remarks with reference to the board of transport commissioners and their administration of transportation rates in Prince Edward Island. I want to bring this to the attention of the committee and the minister.

As hon. members know, it has always been difficult for me to put my questions and to have them answered, and I find it still harder to get them implemented. However, I was sent here by the constituency of Queens to put our problems before the minister and before this committee. The problem that I intend to deal with in connection with the board of transport commissioners is in reference to truck rates, et cetera, on our ferry. There has been a continuous fight over this matter for some time. Our motto is parva sub ingenti, the small under the great, and we must keep up that fight for our rights. Because of our geographical position, I sometimes think our province does not get its rights as compared with the other provinces of Canada.

When we have to fight so hard for these I am reminded of a slogan which was coined by a farmer and afterwards borrowed by one of the great writers. This farmer was watching a bulldog pup in deadly combat with a great Dane dog. Finally the bulldog pup triumphed and then the farmer coined this saying: "It isn't the size of the dog in the fight that counts, but the size of the fight in the dog that wins." We must live up to that motto of ours, parva sub ingenti.

On July 8—and this brings me to my subject—I asked a question with reference to transportation. I directed this question to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Transport. The Prime Minister passed the question on to the Minister of Transport. My question was:

> Under what or by whose authority is the board of transport commissioners to hold a meeting in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on July 17 next, regarding truck freight rates on the Borden-Tormentine ferry?

The Minister of Transport replied as follows:

> . . . any individual or group of individuals may make application to the board of transport commissioners to have rates revised.

The minister promised to give a more definite answer later on. At that time I protested at the holding of a transport board meeting in Charlottetown. The Speaker would not allow me to debate the subject or even to give my reasons for protesting, so that I now take this opportunity to do so. The Speaker ruled me out of order on that day, but on the following day the minister made this statement:

> Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Queens (Mr. McLure) asked the following question:
> Under what or by whose authority is the board of transport commissioners to hold a meeting in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, on July 17 next, regarding truck freight rates on the Borden-Tormentine ferry?
> The authority is that contained in sections 33 and 325 of the Railway Act. The complaint has been lodged by the board of trade for the town of Summerside.

I still say, as I have said time and time before in this house, that that is not a correct answer. I should like to refer briefly to Hansard of December 17, 1945, at pages 3685 and 3686. I shall not read it all, but I should like to refer to the points dealing directly with this question. I quote:

> Why should they—

Meaning the Canadian National Railways.

—make rates over a ferry owned by the government? I want the Minister of Transport to set the rates himself.

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Transport cannot set the rate.

Mr. McLure: Does the minister tell this committee that he has no authority over rates?

Mr. Chevrier: I said that the minister could not set the rate.

Mr. McLure: Does the minister mean by that, that the government cannot set the rate?

Mr. Chevrier: I will explain what I mean when I answer the hon. gentleman.

And later on:

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend is of the opinion that the Minister of Transport should eliminate what he calls these prohibitive rates. I say to him that the minister has no authority to do that.

Mr. McLure: With reference to these rates, I understood the minister to say that the commission set these rates, and that he as minister of the Department of Transport did not have the authority to fix the rates.

Let me refer now to the protest I made on July 8 and my reasons for same. First, it is not within the jurisdiction of the board of transport commissioners to determine whether or not there has been a fulfilment of the terms of confederation between Prince Edward Island and the dominion as entered into in 1873. Second, under the British North America Act the dominion parliament and it alone, through its Minister of Transport of the government, has the exclusive authority over all matters such as rates, freight rates, et cetera, on ferries between a province and any British or foreign country, or between any two provinces (see section 91 subsection 13 of the British North America Act). On the two mentioned points I made my protest but did not get it on the record at that time.

Under these two points what could the board of transport commissioners do about setting or revising rates when they went to Charlottetown? It was and is entirely outside the jurisdiction of the board of transport. The ferries must be treated as national highways under the pact of 1873.

Furthermore, there is nothing in the Railway Act which gives the board of transport commissioners the jurisdiction to determine rates, charges, et cetera, on an interprovincial ferry which the railway does not own, does not charter, or does not maintain. I want to emphasize that—which the railway does not own, does not charter, or does not maintain.

Before submitting further proof for my protest, let me again quote the transportation terms of 1873 between my province and the dominion. The dominion gave a guarantee to Prince Edward Island—and here is the guarantee:

To assume and defray all the charges for efficient steam service for the conveyance of mails and passengers to be established and maintained between the island and the mainland of the dominion, winter and summer, et cetera.

And further:

Such other charges as may be incident to, and connected with the services which by the British North America Act, 1867, appertain to the general government, and as are or may be allowed to other provinces.

Let me further endeavour to convince the Minister of Transport that he is the man with the power, or I might say to him as regards ourselves that he is the "Ingenti".

The board of transport commissioners held their hearings in Charlottetown on July 17 and 18 last and may have reported to the minister. I do not know. But I have seen a full report of their hearings.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I may tell my hon. friend that I have not.

Mr. McLURE: I can supply the minister with a verbatim report.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I shall be glad to see it.

Mr. McLURE: Evidently my protest of their jurisdiction came before the meeting, either directly or indirectly, and how did they consider it? Here is what they said with regard to it. Mr. A. K. Dysart, Montreal, was legal counsel representing the Canadian National Railways, and here is what he said under examination:

This matter (the terms of confederation) was an issue between the province and the dominion over which the transport commission had no jurisdiction.

Chief Commissioner J. A. Cross, K.C., agreed with the legal counsel Mr. Dysart, and here is what he said.:

There seems to be a good deal involved outside of our sphere. So far as we are concerned, we are going to confine ourselves to our own jurisdiction under the Railway Act, possibly supplemented by the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Further on in the evidence at the hearings, the legal counsel for the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Dysart, said, and I want the minister to notice this point:

The fixing of rates was the prerogative of the government or the parliament of Canada.

The report further states that Chief Commissioner J. A. Cross, K.C., congratulated Mr. Dysart, so that he must have agreed with his remarks.

The Minister of Transport I believe must realize from the evidence submitted that both the legal counsel, Mr. Dysart and the Chief Commissioner Mr. Cross, K.C., were in doubt about their jurisdiction in acting for a subcontractor of the ferries, when they said "they were acting under the Railway Act, possibly supplemented by the Maritime Freight Rates Act." Note those words, Mr. Chairman—"possibly supplemented by the Maritime Freight Rates Act."

It was indeed regrettable that a group of individuals brought this matter up, because they had no authority to speak for the province or to negotiate terms with the subcontractors' board of commissioners for the province.

Without emphasizing those facts any further, it is now up to the Prince Edward Island government, when the board of transport commissioners report after having taken the whole matter under advisement—whoever they are going to report to I do not know—to pay no attention to the report but immediately to take the matter up with the government at Ottawa, parliament and the Minister of Transport, because he and he alone can settle these rates for us and give us justice with regard to the rates.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not what the hon. gentleman was saying. He says that the power lies with the government. He is now destroying his own argument.

Mr. McLURE: The power lies with the government and parliament through the Minister of Transport.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Does the hon. gentleman not think we had better await the judgment of the commission before deciding the case?

Mr. McLURE: I am reading from the evidence, just giving the facts.

Mr. CHEVRIER: They have not handed down their judgment yet.

Mr. McLURE: I am quoting what they said to prove that the power was vested in the parliament of Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is not in the Minister of Transport.

Mr. McLURE: If it is vested in parliament it must come under the cabinet and under some cabinet minister, and the only cabinet minister it could come under is the Minister of Transport.

In closing, I wish to say that I think the minister should take this matter up, and then I am sure he will convince himself, if I am unable to convince him, that parliament and the cabinet and the Minister of Transport have the power, or the Minister of Transport alone has the power to settle this question over which we have so long argued.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. McLure.]

Canals service—

396. To provide for expenses in connection with St. Lawrence ship canal surveys and investigations, $5,000.

Mr. McLURE: I have no objection to this item for the St. Lawrence ship canal, but what I want to ask the minister is whether this is a deficit on the canals, or do they operate at a profit?

Mr. CHEVRIER: What item is the hon. gentleman talking of? Item 396 is the St. Lawrence ship canal surveys, and that is the item he is on.

Mr. McLURE: What I was going to ask the minister was, how is it that item 469 comes under "deficits" and canals do not?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, this vote for item 393 has to do with the administration. It is not a deficit vote; it is for payment of salaries and the like; and the item having to do with operation and maintenance is not a deficit vote, because it has to do with salaries for the employees of the canals all across Canada. There are canals to the extent of some five hundred miles. For that very reason it would not be a deficit vote.

Mr. McLURE: Then let me ask another question. The reason I referred to it was that, when you come to item 469, which will be reached after a while, for the very same reason it is marked "deficits". How is that?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Because it is an operation of the Canadian National Railways as agent for the government of Canada.

Mr. McLURE: And the other is operated by the government.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): The hon. member for St. John-Albert, I understand, made reference to the Chignecto canal and the necessity for completing that undertaking in the interests of the maritime provinces. I want to point out to the committee and to the minister that the people in the maritime provinces—in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island—are intensely interested in the construction of this canal for transportation purposes and the possibilities for power purposes; and I should like the minister, out of the appropriation for canals, to see that some further inquiries are made as to the possibilities of building this canal. I understand that the last report on this undertaking was back in 1931. The people who have made an investigation of this report are not satisfied that a full and proper inquiry was made. I point out to the minister that it is important in the interests of the people directly concerned and in the interests of transportation in that part of Canada that this canal be constructed. It affects the transportation of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I will not delay the committee any more at this time, but I do not want the department to overlook the necessity of constructing this work.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
401. Marine service steamers, including icebreakers—maintenance, operation and repairs, $1,760,000.

Mr. HAZEN: What did it cost to maintain and operate icebreakers in the St. Lawrence river to Montreal last year, and how many icebreakers were employed?

Mr. CHEVRIER: In the Montreal area two icebreakers alone were engaged, the steamer Lapointe and the steamer Maclean. The cost of operating these icebreakers was $236,300.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
402. Construction, maintenance and supervision of aids to navigation, including salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $2,562,330.

Mr. PEARKES: I am anxious to enlist the minister's interest in those employees of his who are engaged in a very lonely and, at times, hazardous occupation, namely the lighthouse keepers of our coasts and the personnel who charge the batteries of the different lights. If you are sailing by in a luxury yacht or in a C.P.R. steamer and perhaps wave to the lighthouse keeper's daughter, you are apt to say, "How attractive these red and white buildings look"; but if you land, and I speak as a result of personal visits on the Pacific coast, you will find that conditions in those houses are far from satisfactory. Repairs which, I presume, come under the Department of Public Works, but no doubt would be initiated by the minister's department, are long overdue. There is a story in nearly every case of leaking roofs, inadequate water and cramped conditions, and frequently there is also the story of antiquated equipment. I had occasion to draw to the minister's attention last March an accident which occurred to one of these lighthouse keepers by having to use a hand-starter for a 20-horsepower stationary diesel engine, and the minister promised at that time that he would look into the matter and see whether automatic starters could be provided for this equipment. Could the minister report now as to whether he is in a position to supply these automatic starters and whether something can be done to improve the lot of these servants of the government?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The position of lightkeepers has been enhanced considerably by the department. It is true that lightkeepers live in isolated areas, and the department has been trying to better their position, and has provided for an increase in their allowance. An order in council has been brought down, and a vote is contained in these estimates which will provide a certain amount of money, I think it is $25 a month, to the lightkeeper so as to assist in paying the wages of his assistant. We are doing something, too, with reference to leave, particularly for those who are in isolated spots. To-day practically every keeper on the west coast is getting leave. As regards the matter of more modern equipment to which my hon. friend has referred, I am informed by one of my officers here that the new equipment is actually in the field and should be in the hands of the lightkeepers before long.

Mr. HAZEN: I wish to thank the minister for the information that it cost $230,000 to maintain the icebreakers. Can he tell me how much sooner navigation is opened on the St. Lawrence by reason of the operation of the icebreakers? Has he any information about that?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The icebreaker performs a dual purpose. Not only has it to do with the opening of navigation, but it also provides protection from floods to people living on the south shore. Because of the advanced operation of these icebreakers in 1946 we were able to avoid a great deal of flooding on the south side of Montreal. So far as navigation is concerned, were it not for the work of the icebreakers, I believe navigation would open considerably later than it does each year.

Mr. HAZEN: Has the minister any figures in regard to time?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It is an average of two to three weeks.

Mr. ISNOR: May I ask the minister, in reference to icebreaking in the maritimes, whether a dollar has ever been spent in the last ten years in Halifax harbour?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The Saurel, which is an icebreaker, has been there all along.

Mr. ISNOR: But has there been any occasion when ice has been broken in the harbour? Will the minister please answer that? Does he know of any occasion when an icebreaker was ever required to break ice there?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Not in the harbour of Halifax, but I am informed that ice has been broken in the Bedford basin.

Mr. ISNOR: My question was with reference to the harbour. There has never been any icebreaking in the harbour?

Mr. CHEVRIER: No.

Mr. WINTERS: I wish to endorse wholeheartedly the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo. The lighthouse keepers should be given every consideration. It is true that in many cases they have to live in quarters that are little better than shacks, and when the hon. member from Nanaimo says that the rain beats through the roofs he is correct. That is the case in some lighthouses on the east coast. I would ask the minister to take into consideration the possibility of providing better communication facilities for lighthouses. In one instance I requested the department to provide a telephone, and they replied that it was not in accordance with the policy of the department to provide these facilities in cases such as that in question. In this modern age consideration should be given to a change in policy, if that is the only reason why telephone service cannot be supplied. Also in particular I would ask the minister whether the construction of the radio beacon at Cross island off Lunenburg harbour has been completed and whether or not an improvement requested for the light at the entrance to Liverpool harbour will be effected in the near future.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend will realize that it is difficult to give detailed answers to questions with reference to specific lights, but on the general question of the position of lightkeepers, I may say that it is far better than it has been in the past. This vote contains $40,000 which will be given to lightkeepers and their assistants to improve their position. In the matter of communications, there are no less than 200 radio telephone sets being purchased by the department from War Assets Corporation for installation in these lighthouses. The hon. member has asked two questions having to do with particular lighthouses and I shall try to get the reply before the committee rises.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I support the request of the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg and the hon. member for Nanaimo. I would point out the necessity of further lighthouse provisions in the county of Cumberland, so far as Pugwash is concerned. What provision has been made for the replacement of range lights at Pugwash, destroyed during the war years and not yet restored? There is an emergency light placed there as a range light to guide ships coming into the port of Pugwash. It is one of the best of the outports in the maritime provinces, if not the best. The shipping and lumber interests use the port continuously. It is one of the safest in Canada; but it has been pointed out, both in this house and to the department, that it is necessary to do some dredging in order to take out some of the bends in the channel and also to make it somewhat deeper over the bar at the mouth of the harbour. At the present time ships are able to enter in perfect safety if they have a trained pilot and draw about twenty-one to twenty-two feet. This water can be deepened several feet at a minimum of expense, and the channel leading into the harbour is one of the best natural channels in all Canada. It can be straightened out at the minimum of cost. I realize that this work is not altogether in the minister's department, but by recommendations from him and from his officers I believe the Department of Public Works would be encouraged to undertake it. I understand that the responsibility for maintaining and rebuilding lighthouses does come under the minister, and I should like to have a statement from him as to what he proposes to do in order to restore this range light at Pugwash, which has been destroyed in the last few years.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will get the answer.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I wish to speak briefly with reference to lighthouse keepers. The keeper in the town in which I live informed me a short time ago that during 1945 there was a deduction from his salary of, I believe, $15 a month—I will not be sure of the figure—for rent for living in the lighthouse building. That is a condition which has never existed in the past. I do not know where they would expect the lighthouse keeper to live. This man showed me the deduction from his salary, indicating that he had been charged rent for living in the building. That building is on a reef off the mainland about a mile or a mile and a quarter—

Mr. CHEVRIER: From where?

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): From the town of St. Andrews. It is called New Light or Navy Island bar, I will not say which, in the minister's records. This man's salary is between $1,100 and $1,200 a year. I submit that it is indefensible to charge this man rent for living in such a place, especially in view of the fact that in winter he cannot get ashore. He is there for days at a time when the weather is such that he finds it impossible to go ashore. This deduction has never been made in the past, and I would ask the minister why it was made in 1945.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Would my hon. friend be good enough to give me the details? My officer informs me that there is never any charge for rent. On the contrary, he is generally credited with rent.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): The explanation I had from Mr. Doughty was that there had been a deduction. He showed me the deduction, though I will not say it was $15. I cannot remember the exact amount, but I know that he brought it to my attention, and it was the first time it had been deducted. He had been on the light for about fifteen or sixteen years. The charge has never been made before in all the years he has been there. I believe there is a younger man there this season.

Mr. MOORE: The Hudson Bay route association is interested in the use of that route, and I would ask the minister if it is the intention of the department to apply some of the newer navigational devices discovered during the war years with the possibility of extending the season of shipping in the Hudson bay district.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can only supplement what I said in that connection on a previous occasion, that any new device or equipment that can better the position in the harbour at Churchill will be purchased by the Department of Transport; but even if that is purchased, I have some doubt, in fact I have great doubt whether it will lengthen the shipping season; as my hon. friend knows, it is a question of weather rather than a question of equipment.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to make a request of the minister. I realize it is a bit unusual, but I think it is reasonable. The hon. member for Vancouver East is tied up, as are other hon. members, in the industrial relations committee. He is most anxious to say something in connection with this item. We have sent a message to him. We had all we could do to get the message in, let alone get him out. Would the minister consider allowing this item to stand?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Why not pass the item? I shall not stop the hon. gentleman from making his comments on another item. The hon. gentleman spoke to me about the matter, and I told him that I should be glad to accommodate him.

Mr. KNOWLES: Will the Chairman permit it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I give the undertaking now.

The CHAIRMAN: The Chairman is always guided by the wishes of the committee.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
404. Maintenance and repairs to wharves, $5,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why is this item under the Department of Transport? Why did it not appear in the estimates of the Department of Public Works?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Because the sum of $5,000 has been awarded to the Department of Transport for small repairs. When a wharf is built it is done by the Department of Public Works, but sometimes there are small repairs not exceeding $50, and this item is for that purpose.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
406. Administration of pilotage, including authority for temporary recoverable advances to certain pilotage districts, $167,770.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Will the minister say why pilotage is not self-sustaining? Why should there be a public grant for that? Why do not ships pay their own way, or is there something else to it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: This item is for the administration of pilotage headquarters, district office expenses and the like.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
407. Life saving service, including rewards for saving life, $44,430.

Mr. GRAYDON: I hesitate to hold up a good-natured committee at this time on a matter of life saving services, but this is a matter of profound interest to many people in Canada. Will the minister take a moment to put on the record how this money has been spent and what are the outstanding rewards for the saving of life which have been given during the last period that this estimate normally covers? It is a matter of great interest to the people of Canada; it is an item which I fancy this committee is more pleased to pass than most items that are before us. The committee would be grateful if the minister would give us all the information he has at this time.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I might tell the hon. gentleman that the appropriation of $44,430 provides for the maintenance of five life saving stations, two on the Atlantic and three on the Pacific, for rendering aid to vessels in distress and saving lives endangered by marine casualties and for rewards to many boat crews for saving life on the high seas and territorial waters of Canada under conditions of great difficulty and danger and requiring the display of exceptional bravery. This sum is not always expended and I am informed that in 1946 no awards have been made. I had a statement for the 1945 estimates when we were discussing the item, but unfortunately it is not with me now.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—

411. Steamship inspection and the carrying out of the provisions of the conventions for the safety of life at sea and load lines, $255,280.

Mr. ARCHIBALD: Last winter representations were made to me by the boat owners of Prince Rupert, particularly the halibut fleet, with respect to the inspection service and the equipment which they must carry when they go to sea. It seems that the inspectors of the department demand on a halibut boat the same life saving equipment as is carried by a full-fledged lifeboat. This is not practical on a halibut boat. What they want is a dory. They should like the inspectors to permit them to carry a dory instead of a boat the size of a lifeboat.

Another thing about which there is a complaint is the three water-tight bulkheads on boats forty-five feet and over. The regulation is expressed in tonnage, but it works out roughly to a boat of that length. When you put in a forward bulkhead you have an airtight compartment and on a wooden boat rot sets in in a remarkably short period of time. They think the department should consult with such responsible people as the boat owners, so that something other than a watertight bulkhead could be put in which would give approximately the same safety measures. They object to this iron-clad rule. I myself have run into it. The result is that small yards, such as Maclean's of Prince Rupert, find it difficult to build boats over forty-five feet because of the demands made on them by the department. I think more consultation should be had with the small shipyards on this type of equipment. Something should be worked out that would be more flexible, so that these men could go ahead with the building of boats. The lifeboat equipment on these boats and the watertight bulkheads are definitely sore points with the halibut men.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I shall be glad to bring the remarks of my hon. friend to the attention of the steamship inspection board.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I wish to speak briefly on this matter of steamboat inspection. In January 1946, the Robert Kann was sunk near Grand Manan island with thirteen persons aboard. At that time there was a lot of criticism around Saint John and Charlotte county of the steamship inspection services. I have nothing to say so far as inspection is concerned; I know nothing about it. But I know the boat that was lost was an old boat in disrepair. There is no question in my mind that it should have been off the route long before that time. At the present time there is a boat there called the Keith Kann, and apparently it is in the same condition as the Robert Kann. I realize that during the war it was difficult to get boats of any kind for this service; but since the war is over and there seems to be plenty of boats available, I think the steamship inspection should be looked after carefully, because the night these thirteen persons perished off that island they left in a lifeboat sixteen feet long and went from the end of Grand Manan island to the Nova Scotia shore. The fact that the boat was only sixteen feet long is a pretty good indication that the craft which sank was in a poor condition. In view of that, I would suggest that they be much more careful in steamship inspection in future for fear the same thing might happen again.

Marine service—

413. River St. Lawrence ship channel—contract dredging in the St. Lawrence river and Montreal harbour, including cost of administration—capital, $992,780.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): What is the aggregate amount which has been expended up to date in connection with dredging of the St. Lawrence? This item provides for $992,780 for the current fiscal year and deals with the St. Lawrence ship canal.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I shall have to get the information for my hon. friend. I believe I can get it in the annual report, in a minute. It is a considerable amount.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): I do not wish to hold up the item, but I should like to have that information, because it runs into many millions of dollars. I will not deny the interests of the St. Lawrence route, but I wish again to point out how difficult it is for us to get even moderate expenditures to aid our navigation at the head of the bay of Fundy in the maritime provinces. I would contrast the difficulty we have in securing the drainage of our marshlands with these large appropriations made for improvements on the St. Lawrence. The people of the maritime provinces feel that very little consideration has been given to their interests, compared with the comparatively enormous expenditures being made on the St. Lawrence route and other places in Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that the amount expended since 1930 is about $34 million.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): That only goes to 1930. I should like to have it from the beginning.

Item agreed to.

Marine service—
414. River St. Lawrence ship channel—administration and operation, $221,660.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister give some information supplementary to that given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce respecting plans for the use of the Hudson bay route at Churchill? Would he indicate whether the revenue this year is likely to be increased as a result of shipments of wheat over the Hudson bay route? The information given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not complete; perhaps the Minister of Transport could add to it?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I should not like to add to what was said this morning by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I believe he covered the question fully, namely that the ships at Churchill would take out all the wheat that was there. So far as incoming wheat is concerned, I am afraid I cannot say anything in addition to what was said by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MacNICOL: The report is that nine ships will come in and go out of the harbour this summer; and if they do, that will add materially to the revenue of the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I understand that there is not sufficient wheat available at Churchill. Are arrangements now under way to have additional cargoes of wheat made available, so that wheat may be moved to Europe by the fastest and shortest route during the next few weeks?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that the season closes before this year's crop can possibly get there.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There is surely a great deal of wheat available on the prairies. If the government were really concerned about getting wheat to Europe I would suppose that wheat could be supplied. The government might well give consideration to seeing that some of the wheat moves to Churchill immediately. Could the minister give a further statement?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I cannot add to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said this morning. The wheat board is under his jurisdiction.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—
415. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $42,000.

Mr. JACKMAN: How many private cars are used by the Department of Transport? I note that in the details of this item there are four stewards at $1,740 and three porters, at $1,620, making a total of $11,820, exclusive of cost of living bonus. What are these stewards and porters used for?

Then I draw the minister's attention to the item for an official car at $5,000, as set out at page 227 of the estimates. How many cars are used, and what is the purpose of them?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The item provides for five cars, two of which are those of His Excellency the Governor General, and three under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport. Of the three, one is assigned to the Prime Minister, one to the Minister of Transport and one is a general, official car for the use of all ministers. The $42,000 compares favourably with amounts spent each year since 1936, when the amount was $57,000, and last year when it was $39,000. This has to do with salaries paid to stewards and porters, plus cost of living bonus, in connection with the operation of the three cars I have mentioned, and the two assigned to His Excellency. Then there is the sum of $15,000 for repairs. My hon. friend is probably aware that some of these cars are thirty years old, and it takes substantial repairs to keep them in operation. I might also add that they are not used extensively.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—
416. Hudson Bay railway—construction and improvements, capital, $15,500.

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland): Would the minister make a declaration of policy respecting the movement of feed grains from Churchill to the maritime provinces, to justify this large expenditure in connection with the Hudson Bay railway, with a view to serving agricultural interests and stock raising in the maritime provinces? It has been suggested at different times that accommodation be provided at Pugwash and other places in Nova Scotia for storing these feed grains which would be transferred from Hudson bay by boat and stored at Pugwash, at the head of the bay of Fundy, for distribution to the farmers. This could be done at low transportation cost, and to some extent would justify the expenditure of these many millions of dollars in the facilities at Churchill.

Mr. CHEVRIER: No part of this estimate is for expenditures on feed grain. It is to cover the deficit in operations of the Hudson Bay railway by the Canadian National Railways as agent for the government of Canada.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—

417. Hudson Bay railway—To provide for the difference between the expenditures for operation and maintenance, and revenue accruing from operation during the year ending March 31, 1947, not exceeding $525,000.

Mr. JACKMAN: This is item 417. It is now eleven o'clock. I would ask that it be called eleven o'clock and that the item should stand.

Mr. CHEVRIER: We are on item 417.

Mr. JACKMAN: Would you call it eleven o'clock, Mr. Chairman? I wish to ask a question which would require a lengthy answer.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Let us have the question.

Mr. JACKMAN: I suggest that it is eleven o'clock.

Item stands.

WAR EXPENDITURES

PRESENTATION OF FIFTH AND FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. G. B. ISNOR (Halifax) presented the fifth and final report of the special committee on war expenditures and economies, as follows:

The special committee on war expenditures and economies begs leave to present the following as its fifth and final report.

Under date of March 22, 1946, your committee was appointed "to examine the expenditures defrayed out of moneys provided by parliament for national defence and demobilization, and for other services directly connected with the war, including the disposal of surplus war assets, and to report what, if any, economies consistent with the execution of the policy decided by the government, may be effected therein."

[Mr. P. C. Black.]

The committee met four days after its appointment and since that date it has held forty-one sittings and heard twenty witnesses.

A steering committee was set up and recommended procedure which was approved by the main committee.

In giving consideration to matters coming within the scope of its reference, your committee decided to pursue the inquiries initiated during the last session, and accordingly turned its attention towards the operations of War Assets Corporation, its organization, functions and policies in the marketing of surplus assets, its priority system, etc. It also inquired into the methods of declaring surpluses, and the receiving, checking, and storing of such surpluses before final disposal.

Arising out of these inquiries, it was found expedient to secure evidence from the three armed services, viz.: navy, army and air force with a view to ascertaining what quantities of material and equipment had been transferred to War Assets Corporation for disposal and whether, in the interest of economy, stocks held by these services are limited to their requirements under post-war establishments.

A visit was made to the head office of War Assets Corporation, at Montreal, so that first-hand information could be sought and a study made of the general organization and set-up of the corporation.

Before the committee had proceeded at any length into the study of quick disposals it was felt that a change in respect of priorities should be given consideration, so that the disposal of surplus material could be effected with greater expedition by revising the method of granting priorities insofar as the time element was concerned. It was, therefore, recommended and approved by the house "that in respect of priorities granted to federal, provincial and municipal governments, the thirty day period now in effect, be reduced to ten days."

From the evidence submitted it was ascertained that greater care should be exercised by the armed services and War Assets Corporation when surpluses were being turned over, and, accordingly your committee recommended, and the house approved, "that when surpluses are to be declared by the armed services, or from any other source, advance notice be given to War Assets Corporation so that a representative of the corporation be on hand to check and receive surpluses."

A statement tabled by War Assets Corporation showed gross sales of declared surpluses, from 1944 to July 31, 1946 as follows:

To March 31, 1945	$ 9,507,127 00
1945—
April	1,386,291 16
May	4,566,293 80
June	2,132,337 53
July	7,231,162 22
August	6,308,356 54
September	3,047,375 08
October	6,345,218 20
November	10,067,956 83
December	10,153,689 23
1946—
January	14,477,019 19
February	16,331,943 54
March	42,830,725 34
April	21,942,541 66
May	22,608,326 47
June	26,075,839 04
July	21,510,947 43
Total	$226,523,150 26

The witness representing the Royal Canadian Naval Services presented statements as to their wartime and peacetime requirements, the disposal of surplus assets and the policy to retain sufficient consumable stores for three to five years, based on the anticipated rate of consumption of the peacetime navy, and for the retention of special equipment.

It was shown that the total surplus declarations made by the navy from V-J day to the 31st March, 1946, was as follows:—

Stores (cost value)	$ 14,353,284 75
Ships (cost value)	223,391,221 93
Properties (cost value) ...	12,503,132 92
Total	$250,247,639 60

The naval service witness also supplied a list of yachts chartered commercially, or on a nominal basis, or donated, and a statement showing the disposition made of such yachts, and including moneys required to recondition them for return to their owners. A summary showed:—

25 vessels on commercial charters;
27 vessels chartered at $1 a year;
5 vessels sold and
6 vessels on loan without cost from other departments.

The army witness outlined:—

1. (a) The background of army equipment.
(b) The organization of provision within the army to assist in categorizing information deemed necessary by the committee.

2. The equipment policy to provide for the post-war army, based on the following:
(a) An active force;
(b) A reserve force;
(c) Supplementary reserve;
(d) Cadet training.

3. Implementation of the equipment policy.
In connection with economy, the governing factors were outlined in respect to:
(a) Disposal of surpluses at rates consistent with diminishing requirements.
(b) Retention of stores and equipment required for the post-war army.
(c) Acquisition of modern stores required to ensure a high degree of efficiency in the post-war army.

It was shown that the army vehicle surpluses amounted to 24,055, of which 15,955 had been disposed of up to April 1, 1946, and the balance of 8,100 to be disposed of by the end of 1946.

Categorizing of army stores and equipment were shown under the following classifications:

1. General stores
(a) Clothing.
(b) Camp and barracks equipment.
2. Technical stores
(a) Ammunition
(b) Small arms
(c) Radio and telecommunication equipment.
(d) Engineer equipment.
3. Vehicles.
(a) Load carrying and passenger vehicles.
(b) Armoured fighting vehicles.
4. Mechanical equipment, including mobile and self propelled engineer equipment such as graders and other road machinery, equipment required for clearing snow, etc.

As at April 1, 1946, the approximate cost of these holdings amounted to $509,286,897, and the approximate cost of materials disposed of to $86,042,008.

The witnesses were questioned in respect of all these holdings, the need of some and the final disposal of any surpluses.

Your committee desires to draw to the attention of the house, and particularly to the attention of the Minister of Defence, that in prewar days there were 93 personnel carrier vehicles and that the post-war requirements show 4,133 vehicles of this type, which number appears excessive.

Witnesses from the Royal Canadian Air Force also appeared before the committee and gave a general outline of the policies and practices affecting equipment during the latter years of the war, since the cessation of hostilities, as well as those in effect at the present time.

The statement dealt with all forms and types of equipment, provisioning and contract cutbacks, stock retentions, disposal policy and other matters of policy. In connection with declared surpluses, it was shown that the air force had declared, as at May 1, 1946, equipment of an approximate total cost of $624,677,000.

Considerable discussion centred around the destruction of material at Penhold, Calgary and other depots. A statement was submitted which did not meet with general approval. The committee, as a whole, was critical of the manner in which the R.C.A.F. admittedly acting under general authority from War Assets Corporation, had brought about the destruction of equipment at these R.C.A.F. depots. This equipment, which was termed unserviceable (i.e., beyond economical repair) and had been listed as of no marketable value, was marked for physical destruction.

It is to be regretted, and is indeed unfortunate, that no collective statistical data was kept of the equipment which was reduced, to produce as it was not apparent at the time that there was any advantage to be gained from the additional administrative work involved. It was pointed out by the R.C.A.F. that all serviceable bits and pieces and parts were extracted. The destruction, nevertheless, took place; and although the policy, in this respect has been changed, your committee take the definite stand that no such procedure or action should have been followed or allowed. According to R.C.A.F. witness no further destruction has taken place since August, 1945.

Witnesses were also heard from the special service branches of the navy and air force and from the joint services advisory committee on welfare, voluntary and auxiliary services, Department of National War Services, respecting donations of materials, equipment and furnishings for the comfort and enjoyment of men and women of the services and the final disposal of same, by sale or otherwise.

Your committee recommends that such donated equipment, materials and furnishings above referred to and still in stores, be disposed of and that the revenue derived from this source be used for the benefit of the personnel of the armed services.

Because of articles appearing in newspapers and magazines respecting the destruction of war materials, it was deemed advisable to call before the committee the writer of certain of these articles which charged the air force with the alleged mutilation and scrapping of batteries delivered from No. 1 Equipment Depot, Toronto. A report dealing with this subject had previously been received from the Department of National Defence for Air under date of 29th May, 1946, as appears in the minutes of proceedings and evidence of June 6, 1946.

The writer of those articles made what appeared to your committee serious charges against the air force and War Assets Corporation. One of his statements was that, while he had not counted the number of batteries on a junk pile, he figured the volume of one battery, and then, using a correcting factor, arrived at a number of 2,000. The R.C.A.F. witness stated that only 371 batteries had been released from No. 1 Equipment Depot from 25th June, 1945, to October 3, 1945.

Another allegation by the same witness was to the effect that he had purchased for $5 a damaged 5J22 battery, which cost the taxpayers $80. This statement was contradicted and invoices produced to show that this type of battery (5J22) cost the taxpayer only $14.68.

Certain other figures of costs, as submitted by this writer witness were challenged, and figures of actual cost were given to show the incorrectness of statements contained in printed articles, although the great majority of figures of cost have not yet been examined.

Your committee's inquiry in this connection had not reached a stage where further comment on the evidence can be made, but your committee feels that what appear to be sensational articles, should not go unchallenged.

Another subject which your committee had under consideration and to which it devoted much time and study, is the question of making war surpluses available for instructional and school purposes.

Witnesses were heard in support of a more generous treatment to educational institutions. The policy and procedure whereby War Assets Corporation disposes of surplus material and equipment to educational institutions were submitted to the committee. These dealt very fully with all phases of this important question, and members of the committee gave careful attention to means whereby useful equipment could be made available to educational institutions with the least possible delay. While, in the opinion of your committee the present policy of indefinite loan is sound from the viewpoint of War Assets Corporation, your committee recommends:

1. That the present policy of indefinite loan to educational institutions be broadened to include equipment not readily saleable.

2. That official educational representatives be permitted to visit and inspect such material and equipment as may be considered of educational value.

3. That there be granted to educational institutions a discount equal to that received by any dealer for similar lines.

In the interest of economy, it is further recommended that additional outlets be found, or other suitable steps taken, with a view to speeding up War Assets Corporation's sales, and thus save storage and maintenance charges and, at the same time, place much needed material on the market.

The following measures are also recommended to speed disposal, viz.:

(a) Decentralized "sales-at-the-site";

(b) Selecting "short-supply" civilian items for immediate sale;

(c) Disposing of real property as quickly as possible, consistent with the protection of public interest;

(d) Making all building material immediately available for construction purposes;

(e) The non-employment by War Assets Corporation of persons otherwise interested in outside business;

(f) Greater publicity by War Assets Corporation in respect of the sale and disposal of all war surpluses.

With a view to effecting economy in the armed services, it is further recommended that all branches review, before the end of 1946, or, as early thereafter as possible, the need of retention of consumable stores, particularly with respect to the building up of reserves of clothing and equipment, bearing in mind the present shortage of many lines required for civilian consumption.

It is also recommended that a review should be made of post-war requirements.

Your committee recommends that a similar committee be appointed immediately after the opening of the next session. In this connection, it is respectfully suggested that study be given to the advisability of merging the work of this committee with that of the standing committee on public accounts by broadening its reference to include all war expenditures, and that the committee be known as the special committee on national expenditures.

Your committee wishes to express its appreciation of the cooperation and assistance received throughout its deliberations, from officials of War Assets Corporation, representatives of the armed services and other departmental officials.

A copy of the minutes of proceedings and evidence taken by your committee, consisting of 1130 pages, is annexed hereto.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Gordon B. Isnor,
Chairman.

INQUIRY AS TO MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): May I ask the chairman of the war expenditures committee whether there is to be a motion this session for concurrence in the report?

Mr. ISNOR: That matter was considered by our committee, and if an opportunity presents itself I shall be pleased to make such a motion.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. GORDON GRAYDON (Peel): May I ask the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply a question, in view of the rather uncertain answer given by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Isnor), the chairman of the war expenditures committee, to the question whether or not a motion for concurrence in the report of the committee on war assets disposal will be made this session? Will there be an opportunity for discussion of this matter on any of his estimates?

Right Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Reconstruction and Supply): I expect that my estimates will be considered to-day, and I shall be very glad to have the discussion on an appropriate item. I will specify an item when my estimates come on.

Mr. GRAYDON: So that there will be an opportunity, for instance, to deal with the Brown charges, with which, I think, the report deals very unsatisfactorily, in the nature of a whitewash.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

TYPOGRAPHICAL UNION—SOUTHAM NEWSPAPERS

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as requested by the hon. member for Calgary West (Mr. Smith) I wish to lay on the table copy of the report of W. D. Card, K.C., industrial disputes inquiry commissioner, in connection with the dispute between the Winnipeg Free Press Company Limited and the Southam Company Limited (Winnipeg Tribune Division), Winnipeg, Manitoba, and the Winnipeg typographical union, local 191, of the international typographical union.

Mr. KNOWLES: May I ask the Minister of Labour if he has given consideration to changing the status of Mr. Justice Richards from that of an informal investigator to that of a commissioner in connection with the typographical dispute?

Mr. MITCHELL: I do not think it makes much difference what Mr. Justice Richards' official position is; for as my hon. friend remembers, we have had many commissioners in that dispute.

Mr. KNOWLES: Only two.

Mr. MITCHELL: No; we have had three. We had a commission in British Columbia, headed by Brigadier Lett, and two in Winnipeg. The Lett report was made public also. While I see no objection to calling Mr. Justice Richards a commissioner, I do not think it would make much difference.

Mr. KNOWLES: It gives him a little more authority.

Mr. MITCHELL: Well, if he needs the authority, my hon. friend can rest assured that he will get it.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—PENSION RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Minister of Labour, now that he has tabled the Card report, if he will also table the report of Mr. Harris Johnstone with respect to the C.P.R. 1919 pension dispute? The reason I couple the two together is that the minister refused my request once before, saying that these things have to cut both ways, and since there was an objection to the tabling of the Card report he could not table the other.

Hon. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (Minister of Labour): At the time I spoke of the thing cutting both ways the circumstances were different; they have changed somewhat since I gave my hon. friend that reply. Now, just wait a minute; don't sit there and smile.

Mr. GRAYDON: It is not unparliamentary to smile.

Mr. MACKENZIE: "Smile, and be a villain!".

Mr. MITCHELL: Anyway, it is a change to see my hon. friend smile. Since that time the report has been tabled and discussed, the contents of the report of Mr. Justice Sloan, of British Columbia, are known, and also that of Magistrate Hanrahan of Windsor, and Mr. Justice Roach, in the steel case. With the development of labour relations, the use of commissioners has made them to all intents and purposes, or almost akin to, conciliation boards, and I have taken the position, let the sun shine in.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is what I am asking for.

Mr. MITCHELL: Just a minute. As we submit to the parties concerned, the reports of conciliation boards, I have reached this opinion over the last few weeks, that these commissioners being to all intents and purposes conciliation commissioners, it is probably better to follow the law and the precedents with respect to conciliation boards.

Mr. KNOWLES: The minister has not answered my question about the Johnstone report.

Mr. MITCHELL: I will table it.

INDIAN ACT

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL JOINT COMMITTEE OF BOTH HOUSES

Mr. D. F. BROWN (Essex West) moved that the third report of the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons appointed to examine and consider the Indian Act, presented to the house on Thursday, August 15, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TAXATION

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—ARRANGEMENTS WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the junior member for Queens (Mr. McLure) asked me the following question on Thursday:

Has the government of Prince Edward Island completed arrangements with the federal government for the tax relief compensation as per provincial conference claims submitted?

In reply I may say that no tax agreement has been concluded with the government of Prince Edward Island since the conclusion of the wartime tax agreement in the spring of 1942.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DIEFENBAKER—REFERENCE TO RETURN RESPECTING CAMP BORDEN ARMY REJECTION OR MEDICAL DISCHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I raised a question of privilege respecting a return which was brought down, and pointed out that some letters were missing and that what the house received was an expurgated edition of the files. When I raised the question yesterday, the leader of the house announced that I would be answered yesterday by the Minister of National Defence. He also indicated the degree to which I would be answered. Apparently the minister did not follow the admonition of the Minister of Labour a moment ago when he suggested that the sun be let shine in. I rose on a question of privilege yesterday to do just what my hon. friend the Minister of Labour suggested was the proper course; and I would ask the minister now to advise when these documents are to be placed in the records of the house. I think they should be tabled to-day. There should be no dilatoriness on the part of parliament in its demand that civil servants, when there is an order for the production of all the documents, shall in fact bring down all the documents.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Acting Prime Minister): I rather resent the lecture of the hon. member to civil servants in that connection. I think all hon. members will concede that civil servants are usually very diligent in fulfilling their duties. The leader of the house was under the impression that this principally concerned the Department of National Defence. I ascertained that it does not, and that most of the correspondence was correspondence between the Department of Justice and the Department of Labour. I obtained a copy of the hon. member's remarks and just a little over half an hour ago had an interview with the deputy minister of justice about it. I asked him to go into it very carefully and to prepare a memorandum on the observations that the hon. member made. I again wish to assure the hon. member that as far as I know the civil servants, they endeavour to carry out their duties fully and responsibly.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: If it was not the civil servants, then the responsibility rests right on the government for having taken these documents, and we know now who is responsible.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: My hon. friend is much too quick to jump to conclusions. I signed for the Secretary of State the cover sheet of this report and I did not examine the report, but I looked and saw that there were signatures of three deputy ministers on the report and therefore, without checking its contents, I signed it and it was tabled in that condition. I did not know until the hon. member raised the question in the house that there was anything referred to in the correspondence that was not included in the report.

Mr. POULIOT: It is a very good thing to know what he jumps at.

Mr. GRAYDON: I have a suggestion to make which I intended bringing forward before in connection with orders for returns passed by the house from time to time. I have noticed that they are signed by various civil servants and simply given the imprimatur of the responsible minister, and then they go on to the house. I think the member for Lake Centre has a very good point, recognition of which will be of value both to this government and to governments in the future. I do not think an order for return should ever be brought down until a minister of the crown has thoroughly understood and gone into the whole matter, instead of relying, as the leader of the government has done, on civil servants —and I am not criticizing him personally in the regard—and putting the responsibility back upon them. That should never be possible as far as government is concerned, because the responsibility to parliament with respect to the accuracy of these things is not the deputy minister's. It rests entirely over there, in those seats we are looking at across the way.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I quite admit that the responsibility rests here, and if it is the desire of hon. members that a return be not brought down until a minister will have had time personally to investigate the files and to satisfy himself that the return is complete, that will be quite satisfactory to the government, but it will involve much more delay than is now experienced in the filing of these returns. There are other matters that cabinet ministers have to attend to besides going over the files to pick out the documents included in motions for returns.

Mr. GRAYDON: That is a strange admission from the leader of the government. The cat is out of the bag; we now know that ministers do not bother about questions but simply leave them to civil servants and the minister hands them to us.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Nonsense.

Mr. GRAYDON: May I say to the acting leader of the government that when he talks about responsibility of ministers in other directions, he has no greater responsibility elsewhere than to members of this parliament.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: When the hon. member who has just taken his seat will have experienced some of the responsibility of holding office, and not shadow office, he will have another view of the duties a minister has to discharge in the interests of the country.

JUDGES ACT

CONSOLIDATION AND AMENDMENTS OF ACT—SALARIES, ETC.

The house resumed, from Friday, August 2, consideration in committee of bill No. 250, respecting judges of dominion and provincial courts—Mr. St. Laurent—Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice): When this bill was before the committee on August 2, all the clauses with the exception of 27 had been passed and 27 was allowed to stand for further consideration. Clause 27 is the one which amends a former clause in the Judges Act which had to do with the possibility of the chief commissioner or the deputy chief commissioner of the board of railway commissioners, if he was a judge of the high court before appointment, being treated in the same way as if he had remained with the high court until the date of retirement from the board of railway commissioners. Section 27 proposes to extend that to other offices under the crown.

The section is of course not an integral part of the Judges Act, and it met with considerable opposition and criticism in the house. I endeavoured to redraft it in a manner to restrict it to high court judges who might be elected to the court of international justice, to high court judges who might be appointed ambassadors, or who might be appointed chief commissioner or deputy chief commissioner of the board of railway commissioners, and in the amended form I discussed it informally with some hon. members who had raised objection to the original clause. After giving it consideration they informed me that even in the modified form they felt so strongly about it that they could not allow it to pass without dividing the house on it.

I must say there are also several members on this side of the house who would naturally prefer, as I would myself, that the Judges Act have nothing to do with anything that is not strictly and essentially connected with the administration of justice, and I would also very much deprecate having a division which might be on party lines over any clause of the Judges Act. In view of the apparent overwhelming proportion of opinion in favour of all the substantial provisions of the Judges Act, and the statements that have been made to me that this clause, even in the amended form, could not pass without a division of the house, which might be on party lines, I prefer to drop both the proposed amendment and the clause, and have this act, not one sponsored by any party but one which meets the views of the large majority of members of the house regardless of party.

If it is the pleasure of the house I would ask that clause 27 be dropped, and that would dispose of the whole act. But there is one other point that has arisen since. Hon. members will recall that the act provides for increasing by one the judges of the exchequer court and increasing by two the judges of the trial division of the supreme court of Ontario. Since the bill was before the committee we have been informed that the situation in Ontario is such that they would greatly desire to have these two additional appointments made before 1947, when the act would come into force, and I would therefore ask leaves of the house to revert to section 39 of the bill, which is the provisional section that would come into force right away, and add to it an amendment that would allow the additional judge of the exchequer court and two additional judges of the supreme court of Ontario, to be appointed at once—of course that will be at the salaries which now prevail—instead of having to wait until after January 1 to make these appointments. This would be accomplished by adding to section 39 the following:

(2) Section 6 of the Judges Act is amended by substituting the word "three" for the word "two" in paragraph (b) thereof.

(3) Subsection 1 of section 8 of the Judges Act is amended by substituting the word "fourteen" for the word "twelve" in paragraph (e) thereof.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: How would the section then read?

Mr. ST. LAURENT: The way in which we propose to do it is to amend sections of the existing Judges Act, replacing "two" by "three" in the present Judges Act with respect to the exchequer court, and replacing "twelve" by "fourteen" in the present Judges Act for the trial division of the high court of Ontario. That amendment will come into force as soon as the bill is assented to, and like the rest of section 39 it will be exhausted when the new act comes into force, but it will allow these additional appointments to be made under the old scale of salaries instead of waiting until after January 1 to make them. The department of the attorney general and the chief justices of Ontario have represented to us that the dispatch of business in Ontario makes it desirable to have that done at once.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: First with regard to the withdrawal of the section in question, I think the minister has followed the proper course. The other day some mention was was made of the fact that in 1931 an amendment had been passed to make provision for the resignation of a judge from a superior court and his appointment to the railway commission in such a way that the time he was on the commission, along with the period he occupied the bench, would count in the determination of his pension I looked up that debate and found that the point which was made at that time both by Mr. Guthrie, the Minister of Justice, and Mr. Bennett, and concurred in by Mr. Lapointe, was that in the case of the chairman of the railway commission the appointment was in the nature of a judicial one, and that the railway commission was by statute a court of record.

So far as diplomatic servants are concerned I am sure the minister will be able to cover the situation by making provision that those who serve in foreign fields shall in fact receive no less consideration than those who serve in our country.

With regard to the other amendments suggested, we of course support them. In view of the glut of work in the courts in Ontario it is necessary that these judges be appointed. We give support to the request for the amendment suggested by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I ask one of my colleagues to move the motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I move accordingly.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the change is made may I say that I have a recollection of what was done some years ago by Mr. Bennett for General McNaughton. There is an analogy between what was done for him and section 27 which will disappear. He was chief of staff at a certain salary and was appointed president of the national research council at a higher salary. The position at the national research council carried no superannuation. The evidence of that is that Doctor H. M. Tory, who was president before, had nothing more than his salary. The engagement is considered a ten-year contract; but when General McNaughton was transferred from the position of chief of staff to that of president of the national research council he was seconded by the army to that position. In law the word "seconded" means that the man carries with him all the advantages that he had in his previous position, even though there are no such advantages attached to the new position. Because of that seconding General McNaughton was superannuated from the national research council at a pension of $8,000 per annum instead of $4,000 and his wife will be entitled to a pension of $4,000 per annum when he dies. I am greatly surprised that that matter was not used in Qu'Appelle; it is enough to defeat a man, although it is strictly legal. Also Major General Vanier, when he was plain colonel, was secretary for a time to Howard Ferguson when he was high commissioner in England. It was a civil service position. He was seconded by the army to that position, and he was entitled to more benefits. What I wanted to say is that the thing has been done by other parties in cases that were quite similar.

While I am on my feet I should like to say a word about Judge T. C. Davis, whom I know personally, and for whom I have the greatest respect. I regret some of the things that have been said about him, because in the discharge of his duties he has done exceptionally well. His name must be vindicated in the house.

He contributed to a large extent to making Canada better known in Australia, and he has done a lot for the boys who were there. I wanted to pay this tribute to him. Although I have personal views about the judiciary—and I have some very dear friends among the judges, men whom I respect very much—it does not mean that because a man is a judge he must be free from criticism when such bills as this one come before the house. But the criticism must be fair and must be on a higher level than what took place on this bill and which could be called an aspersion on Judge Davis. It was not fair.

Section 27 withdrawn.

Amendments to section 39 agreed to.

Section 39 as amended agreed to.

Bill reported.

The CHAIRMAN: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. MACKENZIE: With the consent of the house, now.

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice) moved:

That Bill No. 250, respecting judges of dominion and provincial courts, be now read a third time.

Mr. WILLIAM BRYCE (Selkirk): While taking part in this debate previously I was asked a question by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Hackett), and I should like to take just one moment to convince the hon. member that I did know what I was talking about, though he caught me unawares at the time. We were talking about political appointments of judges in Britain, and since that time I have made a few inquiries. I am going to deal with Scotland, however, because I am more certain of my facts there than in connection with England, though in days gone by England has depended upon the good lawyers coming from Scotland to give justice there. In Scotland the judges are recommended by their brethren of the bar association; their names are submitted to the secretary for Scotland and the appointments are made official by him. That takes away entirely the political aspect of the appointment. I feel quite sure, Mr. Speaker, that this is done in England as well. In any event they are positively not appointed because they were Liberals or Tories, but for their ability to dispense justice without bias. I might mention some of the legal lights in that class: Thomas Shaw, later Lord Shaw of Dunfermline; Alex Ure, formerly lord advocate of Scotland; and there was also Scott Dickson, a Tory.

Mr. MACKENZIE: And Lord Haldane.

Mr. BRYCE: Many other names could be added to this list. I am quite in agreement with the suggestion that the bar association should make these representations, because they know their members and their ability. I have always maintained that the bar association or the lawyers' union is the strongest union in the world, and I should like them to remember that. They discipline their members; they maintain order and dignity in the profession, and I think it quite right that they should recommend the men to be appointed as judges.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): I should like to say just a word before this motion is carried. I was admitted to the bar thirty-two years ago; for the last fifteen or sixteen years I have not practised.

Mr. MacNICOL: You have graced the bar, too.

Mr. POULIOT: Thank you. I am quite free to express an opinion on judges, who must be considered with fairness. In the minds of the people regulations that have been passed by minor clerks are the law of the land. The private individual makes no distinction between a statute studied and approved by both houses of parliament which later receives royal sanction, and an order which is signed by a minor clerk, because the result is the same. If a citizen infringes the statutory law or the regulation he has to pay a fine or go to gaol. The other day I spoke of Gulliver; but the case of the Canadian citizen is rather different, because Gulliver did not give to the dwarfs of Lilliput the rope with which he was tied. On the other hand we give to the dwarfs of the civil service plenty of rope with which to tie not an individual but all Canadian citizens. We supply the rope by giving them a great deal of power, and as a result the judges suffer because the necessary distinction is not made and cannot be made by the private individual unless he takes a course in law.

There is another question in my mind. The judges have to apply the law. Does that mean that the law is justice? It would be a great mistake to contend that justice and law are synonymous. I believe in equity; I believe not in the strict interpretation of the law but in its interpretation in a broad manner taking into consideration all the human facts and factors related to the application of the precepts of law. Therefore we cannot very well speak any longer about the sanctity of law, except the law which derives directly from the ten commandments which ruled the world for centuries because men abided by them and followed their spirit.

There is another principle of law that the individual has no excuse for ignoring. At the present time I do not know how a candidate for legal honours can be qualified to pass successfully an examination on all the orders made during the war, which are the law of the land. At this time I must pay a special tribute to the Minister of Justice (Mr. St. Laurent) for his endeavour to improve conditions which could easily become chaotic in the legal domain; and he can rely on the able assistance of the Solicitor General (Mr. Jean) who for several months has been pruning the orders in council and orders with real success. When I listened to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Graydon) a moment ago I wondered if his suggestion was that in each department the minister should dictate all the correspondence of that department. That would be beyond the physical capacity of any man, so perhaps there was a little exaggeration there. But when there is a trend in the right direction, it must be noted, approved and encouraged. In this connection I have been complaining for years about the absurdity of some of the regulations, but there is still some hope when we see the work being done under the Minister of Justice by the Solicitor General, and I congratulate them both.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: May I remind the hon. member that the principle of the bill was approved on second reading. The motion now before the house is that the bill be now read a third time, which does not allow for a general discussion.

Mr. POULIOT: I am referring to the laws which the judges have to interpret. If there are no laws, there would be no judges and this bill would be just a waste of time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This discussion would have been in order on the second reading, but I submit it is not in order under the motion now before the house.

Mr. POULIOT: This is the first time that I have been called to order in a case like this. If there was no law, there would be no judges. I do not think I am out of order when I refer to the improvement of the law to facilitate the work of the judges. We are here to pass laws, and if a bill enables members of parliament to introduce some improvement in legislation I think it would be one similar to this one.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Apparently the only difference between the Speaker and the hon. gentleman is that the Speaker is of the opinion that this discussion should have taken place when the second reading was being considered.

Mr. POULIOT: I am not insisting, but I think these matters could be mentioned on any section of the bill or on any reading of the bill. I shall conclude what I have to say by recalling to hon. members that the task of the judge is quite hard. He must be like Cæsar's wife and be above all temptation.

Mr. GRAYDON: Above suspicion.

An hon. MEMBER: There is a difference.

Mr. POULIOT: Cæsar's wife was above both, and I am referring now to temptation. There is an impression in the minds of the public that it is difficult to undertake an action against a wealthy corporation because the plaintiff may not be able to carry his case through all the courts to which it might be taken by the corporation. You, Mr. Speaker, know from your successful experience at the bar that all men are considered to be alike in the eyes of the law. To permit such an impression to continue would be unjust to the judges and unjust to the law makers.

A judge may be absolutely independent, and that is why I support this bill. I am glad the Minister of Justice has sponsored it. Perhaps it has come at the wrong time and, as in many other things, perhaps the government has waited ten or fifteen years too long before adjusting the salaries of judges. This bill has been brought in at a critical and difficult time. It will be seen from what has been said by members of the bar who are members of this house and who are familiar with conditions all through the land that amendments are necessary to the Judges Act.

Before concluding I have another observation to make. The other day the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) sponsored a bill to amend the Judges Act. I agree with him in one thing, that judges should be appointed to investigating commissions but they should not be appointed to administrative or managing commissions. A judge is experienced with witnesses, he knows how to deal with them and how to protect them so that they will receive fair treatment. A judge has the respect of the community and he is well qualified to preside over a commission of that type, provided that sufficient judges are still available to try the cases in the court so that the public will not suffer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I would again remind the hon. member that that is a matter which goes to the very principle of the bill. It would have been in order in the debate on the second reading before the principle was approved, but the principle has been approved. I feel I have been most generous in my interpretation of the rules.

Mr. STANLEY KNOWLES (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the main provisions of the bill now before us have to do with increasing the salaries of judges. We in this group have listened to the arguments that have been put forward but we remain unconvinced that it is urgent that such steps be taken at this time. As we have indicated previously, we are in favour of raising the standard of living of all Canadians, and we would not except judges from that view, but there is such a thing as priorities. We feel very strongly that for this parliament to pass the measure at this time and to fail to deal with such an important matter as old age pensions would be a disgrace. We have stated that position before, and in spite of the arguments that have been offered in support of this bill we do not feel that this is the time for it to be given third reading.

Various arguments have been put forward in favour of increasing these salaries, such as the contention that it is necessary to pay higher salaries in order to get the best men on the bench and to assure that we shall have judges who will be perfectly fair. As we said before, we regard this argument as something of a reflection upon those who hold or aspire to this high office. We feel that impartial and fair judgments are not to be obtained by paying for them. Surely a measure such as this can wait until some of these other matters of greater urgency are dealt with.

The proposal was made that something should be done this year about old age pensions. On June 24 we thought we had a promise from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Claxton) that a measure would be brought before the house relating to the amount of the old age pension. When I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) about that on July 5 he asked for time to answer, and a week later indicated that in view of the intention to introduce an amendment to the National Emergency Transitional Powers Act, any legislation respecting old age pensions would have to wait until next year. During the weeks and months we have been discussing these matters the cost of living has gone up and other difficulties facing the old age pensioners have increased. We feel very keenly that our scale of values is all wrong if we go ahead with this measure and then in a week or so prorogue without dealing with the case of the old age pensioners and others we might mention.

I would also mention the argument that was advanced in another place—I do not refer to the senate, but to a room between here and the senate—that any increase in wages of over ten cents an hour is not to be considered at the present time because it would be a threat of inflation. If that argument is valid it applies to these increases as well.

For these reasons we feel that now is not the time to give a third reading to this measure, and therefore, so as not to take any more time on it, I now move, seconded by my deskmate the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson):

That the word "now" be left out and the words "this day six months hence" be added at the end of the question.

Mr. SENN: I was paired with the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. Leger). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. BOUCHER: I was paired with the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. McCulloch). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment, and perhaps he would have too.

Mr. STUART (Charlotte): I was paired with the hon. member for Lambton West (Mr. Murphy). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. GILLIS: I was paired with the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. McGarry). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. WEIR: I was paired with the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Thatcher). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The question is on the main motion.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Before the bill is read the third time, may I indicate why I feel that I should vote for it. I too take the attitude that people in lower income brackets should have higher incomes. I too take the attitude that old age pensions should be raised. And if I had thought for one moment that, by not raising the judges' salaries, the old age pensioners would get any more, I certainly would vote against the bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. I would remind the hon. member that the principle of the bill was approved on second reading and general discussion of the bill is not in order at this time. The motion before the house is "That the bill be now read the third time".

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a point of order. It is my contention that the hon. gentleman is entitled to give a personal explanation at any time about the stand he takes on a bill. If he is not permitted to say why he is voting as he is, why he is supporting a bill, we might just as well shut up now, put a padlock on the chamber, and go home. To me it is the essence of liberty, the essence of parliament, that a member should be free to say why he does something in the house, and the hon. member was saying so in his splendid way. I hope, sir, you will reconsider your decision in this case.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: May I remind the house that there must be some regularity in debate. The rules have been enacted by the house for a purpose, and the purpose of second reading is to approve or disapprove the principle of the bill. On the third reading the question of the principle of the bill is not debatable. The only question that is debatable is whether or not the bill should now be read the third time. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre gave certain reasons why he thought it should not be read the third time and he moved an amendment accordingly. I do not wish unduly to restrict debate; my object is merely to bring that fact to the hon. gentleman's attention.

Mr. LOW: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I submit that we have before us now a motion for the third reading of the bill. Surely the rules of the house are all so framed as to permit any member to say why he intends to support that motion for the third reading or, on the other hand, to oppose it. If your objection, sir, is sustained, it will deny us the privilege of stating our position on the motion for third reading, and that is not in the best interests of the work of the house. In my opinion the hon. member is entirely in order in stating his reason for supporting the motion for third reading.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member for Macleod would be in order in giving his reasons for supporting the motion for the third reading of the bill. He had an opportunity, and all hon. members had an opportunity, to give their reasons why they were for or against the principle of the bill, and that question has been resolved, the house having decided on the second reading that it was in favour of the principle. The rules of the house are so prepared that there shall not be needless repetition, and once a question has been decided it has been definitely disposed of.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I was listening carefully to the hon. member and I do not think it was his intention to call in question again the principle of the bill.

Mr. LOW: That is right.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I gathered that he was merely explaining his attitude towards it, without venturing upon a general discussion of the principle. I believe that if the hon. member were allowed to continue he would not be apt to infringe the rule by a discussion of the principle, which has been decided.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Probably I should not have interrupted the hon. member for Macleod, but I did feel that in fairness to all hon. members he should be reminded of the rule in regard to the question of discussing the principle of the bill at this stage.

Mr. HANSELL: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, I assure you I will stay within the rules. I would point out, however, that the member for Winnipeg North Centre in presenting his amendment made quite a little speech to show why he could not vote for the bill and why he proposed the amendment, and I am now stating why I can vote for the bill on the main motion. I have referred, however, to one or two arguments which the hon. member made. I may state now that my purpose will be fulfilled by referring to those arguments briefly, and I am not going to discuss the matter at great length.

The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar at the last session made what I thought was a very good observation in a debate when this house was proposing to raise our own expenditures. An observation was also made by the member for Vancouver East, that he was not going to vote for that measure because he felt there were other people in need. I think there are other people in need now. In my opinion, the leader of the C.C.F. at that time gave a logical reason for his action. He said that if we thought old age pensions would have been raised at that time by our refraining from raising our own income as members of parliament, we would not have voted for the extra allowance for expenses.

I am confused about this. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar seems to indicate that the principle is all right when we want to raise our own salaries, but it is not all right when we want to raise somebody else's. That to me is not logical. The whole thing boils down to this. There is a false philosophy and a false thinking, that the only reason one section of the community gets more is the fact that another gets less, or that one section gets less because another gets more. That is not right, and we do not believe it. We believe that there is enough for everyone. If you pare down the top to give to the bottom, no one will have enough, and we believe that you can always raise the others up. Voting for this bill does not prevent the government from raising old age pensions. They can raise those pensions to-morrow if they want to do so. With that explanation I am ready to vote for the third reading of the bill.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): We shall oppose the third reading of the bill, and in spite of what the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat has said regarding my logic on another occasion, I would point out that in our opinion the members of the bench, the judges, are already in receipt of salaries which in some instances are twice as great as allowances made to members of parliament who out of their own salaries must meet their expenditures. But that is not the point I wish to make. The point is that we are trying to make an effective protest against the neglect by the government of others who are sadly in need. We think this is a matter of priority, and the hon. member who moved the six-months hoist did so in order to make that protest and to emphasize it, although we shall not delay the house in asking for another recorded vote. We shall simply ask that we be recorded "on division", because we think that is sufficient. We are making a protest against this because we consider there is a priority and that those who are really in need, the old age pensioners, and those who have to live on small incomes, should have had first consideration at the hands of this parliament, and then we might have dealt with other salaries on another occasion. I repeat, it is a question of priority, and I wish to make that plain as the reason why we shall vote against the bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. COLDWELL: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, and bill read the third time and passed.

COMBINES INVESTIGATION ACT

MONOPOLISTIC TRADE RESTRICTIONS—COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Right Hon. L. S. ST. LAURENT (Minister of Justice) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the senate to bill No. 193, to amend the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): I have something to say about this. How difficult it is for members of parliament to take notice of the amendments that come from the senate. This bill has been printed since it was passed by the house, but without the senate amendments. We are precisely on the principle of these amendments. Speaking to that, sir, I wish to praise the senate highly for the liberalism which is shown by the members of that house. Of course legislation cannot be perfect; but tolerance and justice exist in the senate, and it should be taught to those in the various departments who draft the legislation. The amendments which come from the senate are fine; they have been drafted in a broad manner. One of them, to section 6, gives more importance to the work that can be performed by judges on the one hand and on the other hand to the fact that a twenty-four hour notice shall be served on the other party, or, if less than twenty-four hours, only with the approval of the judge. That is fair. I will not insist any more about it. It is time that the house acknowledged the progress which is made in the other chamber. For a time they seemed to be indifferent to legislation which was passed by us, but there is a revival of consciousness over there and it is a good sign. There are able men in that chamber who can do a lot for their country by improving the legislation that goes from this house to the other. Since the amendments are not contained in the bill I hope that in due course the Minister of Justice will be kind enough to summarize them and show that they are real progress.

Before resuming my seat I have something else to say. It is not because we say that progress can be made that one should be offended. We are in an age of perpetual recommencement. Laws should be carefully improved by us. I am sure that with the exhaustive work of the committee, and the tremendous amount of correspondence that members of parliament have to deal with, it has been impossible for most members to read and scrutinize all the legislation that has come before us. I hope that there will be less legislation in the future. We have had too much this year; it cannot be easily digested. We have to take it for granted that this is a good bill. Members do not have the time or the opportunity to form their own opinions about it. It will be the law of the land; it will be the law that will bind Canadian citizens after it is passed and sanctioned. I hope that in future sessions of parliament we shall have less legislation and that we shall work as members of parliament with regard to statutory legislation in the same manner as the solicitor general has been acting with regard to orders in council and regulations. Our work is not to pass more legislation; it is to prune legislation that we now have and make it understandable and practicable, make it the best possible for all concerned.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to ask the minister whether he is satisfied with the amendments which have been made by the other house. Unfortunately we have not had time to study them. I wonder whether one of them does not interfere with the effectiveness of the attempt to restrain practices which are against the best interests of people in trade. I refer to page 3, line 40, where the word "unduly" has been inserted. Section 30 reads:

> (a) unduly to limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce; or
> (b) —

And this is the place where "unduly" has been inserted. The paragraph will now read:

> —unduly to restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity.

It seems to me that the word "unduly" limits the commissioner to some extent. I am afraid of the word "unduly," because the use of patents in this country is a matter which must receive serious consideration of the combines investigation organization. A few days ago I had a protest from a retailer who wanted to import and sell certain types of radios. He found that he could neither import nor sell, neither could an organization in the United States with safety send into this country their product because they must pay certain dues to an organization in Canada known as Canadian Radio Patents Limited. For years I have known this to be the practice. On one occasion a local teacher bought in the United States a radio for a car and a little radio for his room, brought them into this country and declared them at the port of entry. Shortly afterwards he was notified by this organization that he must not use these radios in his car or in his dwelling without first of all paying an imposition to this organization. I want to be assured that this bill has in no respect been emasculated by the gentlemen of the other place.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I fully shared the hon. gentleman's concern when I went before the committee of the other place to discuss with them the terms of the bill. With respect to the word "unduly" which is inserted here, I do not think it makes any difference in the real meaning of the section. The word "unduly" would be quite unnecessary if we had only "to injure trade," because to injure trade is always undue. But it was argued there, and I could not deny it, that every patent does permit some restriction of trade. So having the word "restrain" they felt that the word "unduly" should precede it, that it should be only when one went beyond what was intended by parliament to be the proper use of a patent that he should be interfered with.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is a satisfactory explanation.

Mr. ST. LAURENT: I thought that was a good explanation. It was suggested that we might take out "restrain" and leave "injure." They did not ask that the word "unduly" qualify 'injure," because if there is injury, that is always undue; but the word "restrain" in itself without the word "unduly" appeared to them to contradict the very essence of a patent, which does permit the exercise of some restraint which is not undue and is not contrary to the intention of parliament.

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

VETERANS BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL LOANS ACT—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to bill No. 332, respecting loans to veterans to assist in establishment of business or professionally.

He said: The amendments are minor, factual and linguistic. There is no change at all in the principle of the bill.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Yesterday I had a letter from a returned soldier living on Dovercourt road, Toronto, who is engaged with his father in the business of making candies. He bitterly complains about not being able to get the sugar with which to carry on the manufacture of their products. Here is a returned soldier, with a good record, trying to earn a living, without asking the government for pension or support; all he wants is sugar. Has this bill anything to do with those entering business being able to get the commodities they require in order to carry on their business? It may be that the bill has nothing to do with that; I have not read it, but if not with whom should I take up the complaint of this young returned hero who is unable to obtain that which he requires in order to continue his business?

Mr. MACKENZIE: If my hon. friend will take it up with me, I will take it up with the wartime prices and trade board.

Mr. COLDWELL: I really think the minister is asking us to accept something we have not seen. I have nothing before me in regard to these amendments.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are in Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. COLDWELL: But Votes and Proceedings have just come in.

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are in the Votes and Proceedings of last Thursday, at page 706.

Mr. COLDWELL: Then it is my fault I have not seen them.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I can assure my hon. friend that the amendments are very minor and of no consequence in regard to the principle of the bill.

Mr. COLDWELL: If that is so, I confess it is my own fault.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Temiscouata): There is one thing that has surprised me lately; that is, the abandonment of the policy of registration. Now we have a bill for vocational purposes. What is essential is to know the inclination of everyone. I am all in favour of an amnesty for the N.R.M.A. men, but at the same time I wonder why we abandoned the policy of registration, which is necessary if we are to adopt any vocational policy. It would have been very easy to learn from every boy at the time of discharge what was his inclination.

Mr. MACKENZIE: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, what has national registration to do with business and professional loans for soldiers?

Mr. POULIOT: Exactly; it is for soldiers.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This all goes to show that when the rules of the house are departed from there is some confusion. The hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) was allowed to ask a question with regard to sugar, which had nothing to do with the bill, and an answer was given. Now the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) desires to ask further questions which in my opinion do not refer to the bill any more than the previous question did. In all fairness, however, since the hon. member for Davenport was permitted to make a brief statement, the hon. member for Temiscouata should be given the same privilege. He always abides by the rules, and I think he should be allowed to do this.

Mr. POULIOT: Well, sir, I do not want to protest against your ruling at all, but this bill has to do with the establishment, in business or professionally, of the veterans. This is a vocation, and it goes along with the bill dealing with vocational training. What I say is that there are simple ways to do things, but those who organize the legislation never think of the simple ways. They always take the hard way.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I rise to a point of order. The only matter before this house is, does this house concur in the specific amendments made in another place to a bill already adopted by this house, both in principle and in detail.

Mr. POULIOT: I am speaking about the principle of those amendments.

Mr. MACKENZIE: I do not suppose my hon. friend has even seen them.

Mr. POULIOT: They must exist, and if so they exist in virtue of a principle; and I am speaking to that principle.

Mr. MACKENZIE: There is not a single amendment coming from the other place that affects the principle of this bill in the least.

Mr. POULIOT: Then why do they come before the house at all?

Mr. MACKENZIE: They are just improvements in draftsmanship.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The only question before the house for consideration is concurrence in certain amendments made to this bill in the other place, and discussion can be allowed only with respect to those amendments. Probably I was remiss in my duty when I did not call the hon. member for Davenport to order, and hon. members will see the difficult position in which I am now placed as a result. May I ask the hon. member for Temiscouata at this time just to discuss only the amendments made by the senate?

Mr. POULIOT: I want you to understand, sir, that I am not trying to put up a blockade. I am here to simplify things, to make suggestions to that effect. Why should fifty or sixty members of the House of Commons be kept here to look after certain clerical changes in the drafting of a bill? That should be done by the clerks of the senate and the house at a joint conference on these matters. These amendments should never come before us if they do not change the meaning of the legislation. Doctor Beauchesne and Mr. Moyer could get together and look after this; why should sixty members of the House of Commons have to listen to that and why should you, sir, be placed in the position of having to read that stuff to the house when it is purely a clerical matter?

Motion agreed to; amendments read the second time and concurred in.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS

PRESENTATION OF SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The house having reverted to the order: Presenting reports by standing and select committees:

Mr. MAURICE LALONDE (Labelle) presented the second report of the committee on industrial relations, as follows:

Pursuant to the following order of reference dated 16th July, 1946, namely,

> That the said committee be directed and empowered to investigate, immediately, all issues connected with and appertaining to the present industrial unrest in Canada, with power to call and examine witnesses under oath, and with power to call for persons, papers and records and take all essential evidence, and to report their findings and conclusions to the house;
> And that the said committee be empowered to sit while the house is sitting, and that the said committee be further empowered to employ counsel to assist them in their deliberations, your committee immediately commenced its sittings, and held forty-eight meetings as the exigencies of the session permitted.

It was apparent to your committee that the present industrial unrest in Canada creates a condition of emergency necessitating the immediate investigation of all issues connected with and appertaining thereto.

An opportunity was thus afforded for the first time for labour and management to present to a committee of parliament such statements as the terms of your order of reference required and such are on record.

In addition your committee heard evidence from responsible officials of the wartime prices and trade board, the national war labour board and the minister and other officials of the Department of Labour, as well as the acting Minister of Finance.

The following witnesses testified before the committee, namely,

C. H. Millard, Canadian national director, United Steelworkers of America,

H. G. Hilton, president, the Steel Company of Canada Limited, Hamilton, Ontario.

Gordon MacMillan, director, Algoma Steel Corporation, Limited, Sault Ste. Marie, Ontario.

Clement Anson, general manager, Sydney steel plant division, Dominion Steel & Coal Corporation, Sydney, Nova Scotia.

The Honourable Mr. Justice W. D. Roach.

Donald Gordon, chairman, wartime prices and trade board, Ottawa, Ontario.

C. A. L. Murchison, alternate chairman, national war labour board, Ottawa, Ontario.

Arthur MacNamara, deputy Minister of Labour, Ottawa, Ontario.

A. J. Brown, vice-chairman, wartime labour relations board, Ottawa, Ontario.

M. M. MacLean, director of industrial relations, Department of Labour, Ottawa, Ontario.

Honourable D. C. Abbott, acting Minister of Finance, Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Pat Conroy, chairman of the wage coordinating committee of the Canadian congress of labour.

Honourable Humphrey Mitchell, Minister of Labour, Ottawa, Ontario.

Joseph MacKenzie, United Rubber Workers of America.

George Burt, director, region 7 (UAW-CIO), Windsor, Ontario.

C. S. Jackson, Canadian president, United Electrical Workers of America, Toronto, Ontario.

This is the first time that all these points of view could be placed before a committee of parliament and the Canadian people.

The committee appointed L. W. Brockington, K.C., as mediator to discuss their respective points of view with the companies and the union. Mr. Brockington reported that while he had succeeded in meeting with the parties jointly and while further offers were made by the parties nevertheless a settlement of the steel strike was not effected.

Your committee, in the light of the evidence heard makes the following recommendations:

1. (a) That the proposed dominion-provincial labour conference be called at the earliest possible moment to draft a labour code within the limits of the Canadian constitution and with a view to establishing machinery for the prevention of dislocations in industry;

(b) That in the interval much closer contact be established between the wartime prices and trade board and the regional and national war labour boards.

(c) That matters coming before the regional and national war labour boards be handled expeditiously.

2. Your committee is convinced that continued price control is only possible with a reasonable measure of wage control.

3. Your committee recommends that a measure of union security should follow certification.

4. Law being the basis of our society, your committee condemns:

(a) the policy adopted by some unions and some employers of disregarding the legal machinery provided for adjusting wages and settling disputes;

(b) breaches of the law of Canada by the use of physical force or otherwise either by employer or union.

5. Your committee recommends that the law of picketing be studied with a view to its modernization and clarification and for the purpose of making it more effective for the protection of the rights of all elements in the community.

6. Your committee recommends that the Minister of Labour may, at the request of either party to an industrial dispute, and if he deems fit, either before or after a strike is in progress, direct that a strike vote be taken under government supervision to determine the wishes of the men affected as to whether a strike will take place or otherwise.

7. Your committee recommends that the controllers appointed by order in council P.C. 2901 be instructed to implement the terms of such order with such modifications as the government may determine.

A copy of the minutes of proceedings and evidence taken before your committee as well as the exhibits filed is appended.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

Maurice Lalonde,
Chairman.

Mr. GRAYDON: I should like to ask the hon. member for Labelle, the chairman of the industrial relations committee, if it is his intention to move concurrence in the report he has just tabled and, if so, when will that be done.

Mr. LALONDE: I intend to move concurrence in the report on Monday next.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SITTING THIS DAY UNTIL 7 P.M.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Veterans Affairs): If I might be permitted to revert to motions I should like to move:

That standing order 6 be suspended this day and that the house continue to sit after six o'clock p.m. until 7 o'clock p.m.

I have consulted with the leaders of the various parties and groups in the house and they are all in agreement with this motion.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Macdonald (Brantford City) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

Railway service—

418. Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals—construction and improvement of terminal facilities—capital (estimated cost $4,500,000, amount required for 1946-47), $2,350,000.

Hon. LIONEL CHEVRIER (Minister of Transport): I should like to clear up some questions that were asked yesterday. The hon. member for Charlotte referred to a deduction that had been made from the salary of a lighthouse keeper in his constituency, whose name he gave. A thorough search has been made in connection with the matter brought up by the hon. member concerning deductions at Navy island bar light station, and no record can be found nor any explanation offered for the assertion that a deduction was made of $15 per month for rent. The present lightkeeper is now on retiring leave. I can give details of his salary, but I would prefer not to put them on Hansard. These details are clearly indicative that no charge or deduction has been made for rent. If the hon. member desires to see them, they are available.

The hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg asked a question about the construction of a radio beacon at Cross island. The reply with reference to the lighthouse establishment at Fort Point, Liverpool harbour, is that the light is functioning as usual but the lighthouse structure is being encroached upon by erosion. The immediate site is owned by the Department of Transport, and the adjacent property, a park, is understood to be municipally owned. Negotiations have taken place with the parks branch, Department of Mines and Resources, to ascertain if they were disposed to spend any money in protecting this site, and a negative reply was received.

The arresting of erosion is always expensive and somewhat doubtful as to final results. A thorough study is being made of the situation and of the possibility of a smaller and more modern establishment being erected, somewhat in from the waterfront, is being considered.

The hon. member for Cumberland asked a question about the light at Pugwash. The answer is that at Pugwash harbour there are two ranges and two lights in operation, one east of the harbour at Steven Point, and one west of the harbour at Bigelow. There is no change at Steven Point. At Bigelow the back light was destroyed by fire on August 11, 1942, and a temporary pole light was installed on August 15, 1942. The permanent establishment became effective in May, 1943. There is no change. The same lights are in effect as were in use in pre-war days.

I would like to clarify a reply that I made to a question asked by the hon. member for St. John-Albert. I told him last evening that the sum of $236,300 had been the cost of operating ice breakers on the St. Lawrence last year. That is true, but the two vessels, the Lapointe and the MacLean, are used for other purposes as well as ice breaking, and the amount that I gave was the total amount for ice-breaking and the other work performed by the Lapointe and the MacLean. I am informed that the actual cost of ice-breaking performed by the Lapointe and the MacLean in the St. Lawrence in the fiscal year 1945-46 was $108,000.

Mr. STIRLING: May I be permitted to ask a question on a railway matter under this item?—I do not know where else to ask it. It is based on a report recently published by the British Columbia government with regard to the inquiry made by the committee on resources. It deals with the probable extension of the Pacific Great Eastern from Quesnel to Hudson Hope. The minister is well aware of the possibilities of settlement which will result from the continuation of that road. Can the minister say whether the federal government would be ready to cooperate with the government of British Columbia to assist in making available the finances necessary for the extension of this railway? The minister will remember that it has been the subject of consideration by the two transportation companies, by the provincial government and by the dominion government in years past, and it would really seem as if there was a prospect of some progress being made. In view of the desire for the settlement of returned men on suitable locations and with the opportunities which will be needed for the settlement of immigrants when they begin to come, it is most desirable that assistance be given to this prospect if it be possible.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman will remember that I went into this matter at length on a resolution moved by the hon. member for Cariboo. I think the only way in which I can answer the question is this. When the legislature of British Columbia asked this government to appoint representatives on a committee to study this question, we consented on certain conditions. The committee came to certain conclusions, presented in the report, one of which was that until the traffic has increased to considerably more than it is at present—I believe 1,000,0000 tons per annum was the requirement—there would be no reason for extending the Pacific Great Eastern north to Hudson Hope.

Mr. STIRLING: The traffic on the existing line only?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, together with population. The report deals with that. There are several conclusions in the report, which I dealt with on the resolution of the hon. member for Cariboo. Until the position with respect to that report is clarified I can see no opportunity for cooperating with the British Columbia government. There has been no demand for it, but if there were I can assure my hon. friend that it would be given very serious consideration.

Mr. MacNICOL: I concur in what was suggested by the hon. member for Yale. May I ask, if the railway were run north, where would it run to beyond Hudson Hope? Is it proposed to connect up with the railroad that is projected west of Peace river, past Hudson Hope and on to the west? As to the railway running north along the line mentioned by the hon. member for Yale, there is an excellent position at Hudson Hope for a bridge, one of the very best sites on the whole Peace river. At that point the river is at its narrowest and the banks are very high, about 900 feet, and more or less perpendicular. The Hudson Hope rapids are just at that point.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend will remember that the proposal is to join the projection of the Pacific Great Eastern northerly from Prince George with the Northern Alberta railways. Several routes have been suggested in the reports tabled in this house by previous governments. The report made by the committee on resources set up by British Columbia in conjunction with the two railways and the federal government's reports have suggested alternative routes. At the time of the discussion of the resolution moved by the hon. member for Cariboo, I commented fully on these. I have not now before me the plan and reports such as I had then. All I can say to my hon. friend is that there were alternative routes. I am not prepared to go into them in detail now, as I was on the resolution, but I can say that one of the alternative routes was perhaps the best from the point of view of physiography and of cost.

Mr. IRVINE: I am glad to hear that the minister is prepared to give the matter serious consideration if the provincial government approaches the dominion government with respect to extending the railway into Peace River. That is something. But I disagree sharply with the minister's statement that this cannot be done until traffic has increased.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I interrupt my hon. friend to say that that was not the minister's statement. I was referring to a conclusion in the report of the committee, which is a different thing.

Mr. IRVINE: I do not care who made the report. It is a piece of absurdity to say that the line cannot be built until traffic has increased; because how can traffic increase on something that does not exist? The only route they have now is to climb over the mountains and carry the freight on their backs, which they are doing. This railway starts nowhere and ends nowhere, as I said before. It leaves a gap between it and Vancouver and another gap between Vancouver and Peace river. How in heaven's name can traffic increase on a thing like that?

Mr. JACKMAN: Item 417, Hudson Bay railway, had not been passed last evening when we adjourned. The first question I should like answered is this. In the 1945-46 comparative estimate an appropriation of $500,000 was made to cover the deficit, and yet the loss experienced in 1944-45, the fiscal year of the railway which as far as I know coincides with the government fiscal year, amounts to $564,940. May I ask where the difference came from?

Mr. CHEVRIER: For the year 1945-46 the deficit is $500,000, and for this year it is $525,000.

Mr. JACKMAN: The actual deficit, according to the statement given to the committee, was $564,940, yet the appropriation last year was $500,000. How are these two items reconciled?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am informed that that is accounted for by a further supplementary estimate.

Mr. JACKMAN: Was that passed, or are we to have it yet?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am further informed that the deficit for 1945-46 is $499,669, and for the year 1944-45 it was $564,940.

Mr. JACKMAN: The appropriation, according to the comparative estimates, is only $500,000 to cover the deficit, yet actually it was $564,000. Where does the sixty-four thousand come from?

Mr. CHEVRIER: By a further supplementary estimate.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is that passed, or is it to be passed yet?

Mr. CHEVRIER: It has passed.

Mr. JACKMAN: Will the minister give the committee an opinion as to the future of this railway, which is running a deficit of over half a million dollars on operating account, giving no return whatever on the capital invested in it or on the capital invested in the port facilities plus the additional amounts which have to be appropriated from time to time to keep these facilities up to the proper standard of service?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the hon. member suggest abandoning the line?

Mr. JACKMAN: Perhaps the hon. member would like to give it to somebody. I do not know of anybody who wants it, but I shall be very glad to hear his suggestions later on if the minister does not satisfy the committee. This railway charges no depreciation whatever on a capital investment which runs up in the neighbourhood of $50 million. As came out in the hearings a year ago, the Canadian National which manages this for the government, stated that the amounts appropriated to keep the capital investment in running order would be larger from year to year, because the railway is getting a little older and parts of it are wearing out and have to be replaced, which was not the case when it was a new railway; so we may look forward to increasing deficits unless there is an increase of revenue to offset this extra expense. What is the government spending in connection with this railway? Is it true that it has never been given a fair trial, as some hon. members have suggested on previous occasions, or is it now going to get enough wheat traffic or other traffic to establish whether it is an enterprise worth continuing; or, perhaps are there other reasons besides the commercial reasons why it should be continued? Many of my constituents who find themselves, if single, in the $750 tax bracket, or if married, in the $1,500 class, regret very much to see $525,000 being appropriated for the maintenance of this railway, which apparently is not providing sufficient service to the people of Canada, particularly the people of western Canada, to justify its use. I understand that any grain which goes up to Churchill must be kept there, because of the period of the year in which the crops come in, until the next season, which means at least nine months' storage, and I understand the cost of a year's storage is about nine cents a bushel. While that may not be a serious impediment, because a lot of our grain is kept over from year to year, nevertheless the grain cannot be shipped out from Churchill when it it desired on the world market, except during the very short navigation season. When the government is handling the grain—a large part of our grain is handled by wheat pools, who apparently were desirous of having this railway in the first place—why is it they do not direct more grain shipments over this line in order to prove whether or not it has an economic justification? In other words I want to know whether the railway has ever been given a chance, and if not, whose fault it is; and will it be given a chance, or is it just going to be saddled on the Canadian taxpayer for an indefinite period? I happened to notice in the Globe and Mail this morning an editorial entitled "New Hope for an Old Problem." I quote therefrom "On the other hand, only last winter the federal Department of Transport reported most unfavourably on Churchill"—I presume as a port which could be used for a sufficient length of time during the year when it is free from ice to make it pay its way. If the minister can give the committee some information as to the future of this railway, or what we are going to do about it in the way of giving it a chance, it will be very welcome to the people of Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The hon. gentleman has said that there is no charge for depreciation on the Hudson Bay railway; neither is there any charge for interest. That has been the custom and the practice with reference to this particular agency of the federal government; it is not a new thing not to charge up interest or depreciation.

Mr. JACKMAN: It is not important; it is simply a question—

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, the hon. gentleman asked the question and I am going to reply to him. The hon. gentleman seeks to create the impression in this house that the deficits in connection with the Hudson Bay railway are so huge that if they were discontinued we would get relief from taxation. My hon. friend might well speak of other operations which result in deficits. There is not only the railway to the Hudson bay or the elevator at the port of Churchill; there are other agencies under federal jurisdiction which show budgetary deficits. It is unfortunate that they cannot be made to pay. I hope that some time it will be possible for us to devise ways and means whereby surpluses instead of deficits will be forthcoming on the Hudson Bay railway.

My hon. friend has asked a question on the present position and the policy in that connection. He asked the very same question last year. He asked too that this whole matter be submitted to the committee on railways and shipping, although it had not been the practice to do that in the past. At his request I suggested that the matter be referred to the committee on railways and shipping, and there was an opportunity of discussing it fully. But my recollection is that he asked very few questions on it. I have, however, obtained a report from the research and development branch of the Canadian National Railways concerning the operation of the Hudson Bay railway, and I would refer to it in part. The report was made by Mr. S. W. Fairweather, vice-president of research and development, Canadian National Railways. He says in part that he has taken occasion to go into this matter even to the extent of limiting train service to the summer months, and if that were done it would be possible to reduce the deficit by some $175,000 a year. But to accomplish this result would be to handicap seriously the commercial development which has taken place along the line. In the report he goes on to say that mining development has, since the end of the war, taken on a new impetus in the area. He also refers to the cutting of pulpwood along the Hudson Bay railway as a new venture which he thinks will be profitable, and he concludes his report by stating in part:

> I have reached the conclusion that present and prospective developments on the first two subdivisions, namely, from The Pas to Gillam, a distance of 326 miles, are such as to justify the continuance of the present train service and when developments in the Herb lake area take place, which are planned for this year, train service on the first subdivision from The Pas to Webowden, will likely have to be increased, so that it would not be true economy to reduce the services at the present time, even though they are being operated at a loss. I am not so clear as to the justification for continuing the winter service to Churchill. The economy which might be effected by limiting the service beyond Gillam during the winter months might be of the order of $50,000 per year, but could hardly exceed that figure. Having regard to the above, I am satisfied that the Hudson Bay railway is being operated with a minimum of expenditure consistent with the objective of furnishing enough transportation to permit of the development of the natural resources tributary to it. With the development of a mine or mines in the Herb lake area there should be some improvement in operating results.

I may say to my hon. friend, though he knows it, that the Hudson Bay railway is operated by the Canadian National Railways, and they have been doing a pretty fair job. In fact, I do not believe that any other agency could operate it as inexpensively as does the Canadian National Railways. In view of the report made by Mr. Fairweather, I do not think it would be the intention of the government to discontinue that service.

Mr. JACKMAN: May I ask the minister what was contained in the report of his own department which this editorial in the Globe and Mail said reported most unfavourably on Churchill? I presume the reference was to ice conditions in Hudson bay.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am not aware of any unfavourable report made by the Department of Transport on the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. MacNICOL: The Hudson Bay railway would pay if at least ten million bushels of wheat were shipped to that port yearly. All the reports indicate that, and that was the information I got from the folks who operate the railway at The Pas. I found them efficient men, and the road-bed itself is one of the best I have been over. It is well built, it has excellent rails, and apparently any number of sidings to allow for a considerable movement of wheat. I should imagine that one programme the minister might follow would be to promote the shipping of at least ten to twenty million bushels of wheat a year from the west, as they are always asking, to Churchill. The port is not open in the winter, but there is a very large elevator there, one of the finest in America, built by the Minister of Reconstruction, and I believe it is capable of holding two million or more bushels. It could be filled in the fall of the year awaiting transportation opening some time, I presume, in July or August. In the meantime, wheat stored on the prairies could be sent down in trainloads to Churchill so that the moment the elevator was empty it could be filled again. It could be filled many times until in the shipping season there would be from ten to twenty million bushels shipped. I believe, from all I can hear, that the troubles of the country in regard to putting up for a yearly deficit would then be over. The wheat shipped by that route would mean, I am told, a difference of six cents a bushel to somebody—I do not know to whom, but to somebody or some organization. I am convinced it is a worthwhile programme for the minister to follow, to encourage the shipment of as much wheat as possible over the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I should state in fairness to the national harbours board that, immediately following the last session of parliament, its officers made the strongest representations to the wheat board along the line suggested by my hon. friend. In fact the representations made by the national harbours board to the wheat board were renewed on many occasions, but for reasons given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce it was not found possible to direct towards Churchill the wheat that we were anxious to have in our elevators.

Mr. MOORE: I wish to say a few words in connection with item 417, dealing with the Hudson Bay railway, which runs through a corner of my constituency. Naturally I am interested in its development. I was particularly interested in what the minister had to say with respect to the importance of the railway to the development of mining in that part of northern Manitoba. That was so well dealt with that I shall not labour the point. However, the farmers in both Manitoba and Saskatchewan are particularly interested in the development of the Hudson Bay route, since the use of it would facilitate the marketing of Canadian grain and save the farmers of the west a great deal of money. The member for Rosedale said that the storing of grain at Churchill would cost about ten cents a bushel; that is to say, it had to be stored during the winter months to the next shipping season. That is quite true, but under normal conditions in Canada we have to store wheat in the central elevators at the head of the lakes, at Montreal and Halifax, so that that argument, that storing the grain at Churchill would cost ten cents a bushel, is out, because the grain has to be stored in the other elevators as well.

With respect to the operation of the railway, I note the item states that there is a loss of $525,000 per annum. I think we should go back to the war years if we wish to find out whether it is possible for this railway to be operated at a profit. If we review the figures with respect to what was done on that railway during the war, we must come to the conclusion that it can be operated at a profit. During the years 1942-43, the Americans operated a large air base at Churchill and this was supplied by the Hudson Bay railway. During these two years the Hudson Bay railway did make a profit. I checked the figures in connection with the profit and I found that nine thousand carloads of freight were transported over the road. This additional freight enabled the railroad to operate at a surplus.

Mr. MacNICOL: Ten million bushels of wheat a year would do that.

Mr. MOORE: If nine thousand carloads of freight were to be transported to Churchill in the form of wheat it would amount to some 12,250,000 bushels. If 9,000 carloads of ordinary freight would pay for the operation of the railroad for one year, I take it for granted that the same quantity of wheat would also pay for its operation.

According to the Minister of Reconstruction, who spoke on this subject last year, the facilities at Churchill were built to handle a large quantity of wheat in a short space of time. He also told us that it would be possible to handle approximately twenty million bushels of wheat during the shipping season, which at the present time is estimated to be about ten weeks. It would require something like 15,000 cars to transport twenty million bushels of wheat. Therefore I take it if we operated this road to its fullest extent during the season which the government has indicated it could be operated, it could be operated at a profit.

I should also like to say a word or two about the Churchill route. I notice it is commonly referred to as a route which is not proven. It is not certain how long it can operate. This year six vessels of the Dalgliesh Steamship Company, which is located at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England, are coming to Churchill. I wrote to the Dalgliesh Steamship Company and asked them for information with regard to use of the Churchill route. I asked them a specific question with respect to the use of radar on their ships, and this is their reply:

> The radar sets used by the services are not perfect for the use of the merchant navy—as you can imagine, they were required largely for dealing with enemy action and not primarily for navigating a ship. There have been very few radar sets fitted on tramp vessels so far. We ourselves are now fitting one to one of our vessels which we hope will prove satisfactory and give us some idea of the scope of the help which will be afforded to our crews.
> It may be possible to get one of the vessels proceeding to Churchill this year fitted with radar, which would give us some idea of the scope of the help provided.

I would ask hon. members to listen to this:

> I am quite certain that with these devices fitted we can make the passage to the Hudson Bay as easy navigationally as the passage up the St. Lawrence.

[Mr. Moore.]

This letter came to me under date of June 17 this year.

I should now like to refer to the future of the country through which this railroad runs. It runs through a large mineralized area stretching from just north of the Pas to Ilford. Its possibilities cannot be overestimated; in fact it is generally conceded by geologists, who are in a position to know of the minerals which exist in this area, that so far few of them have been developed. Pulypwood and lumbering operations are also carried on, and these can be extended.

Mr. MacNICOL: And millions and millions of pit props.

Mr. MOORE: I should like to refer to the shortage of coal in Canada. At the present time vessels which come to Churchill are apt to be ballasted with sea water. Is it not possible to have vessels which will be coming there in the near future loaded with coal, if it is possible to get it in England, and transport it to Canada to help relieve the serious coal shortage which now exists?

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I say one word in connection with a statement made a moment ago that the storage at the Churchill elevators costs from eight to nine cents a bushel. I have not at hand the report of the national harbours board—

Mr. MacNICOL: I did not say anything like that.

Some hon. MEMBERS: The hon. member for Rosedale did.

Mr. JACKMAN: I said about three-quarters of a cent a month, or a little less than nine cents a year.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The matter is clearly set out in the report of the national harbours board, which is not before me at the moment. The report would indicate that the storage on about 1,800,000 bushels of wheat for the year is more in the neighbourhood of about 2·6 cents a bushel than eight or nine cents, which makes a considerable difference.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Item 417 has been carried. The hon. member for Rosedale asked permission to refer to it.

Mr. JACKMAN: No; according to my recollection, and the report in Hansard, item 417 was not carried last night.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Item 417 was carried.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was on my feet last night; it certainly was not carried last night.

Mr. JACKMAN: It was not carried.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not wish to delay the committee much longer. I think the serious comments made by the hon. member for Rosedale do not help to create better feeling in this country. I am glad that his colleague, the hon. member for Davenport, took part in the discussion. I am sorry that he was not present to hear the comments of the hon. member for Rosedale, or he would have spoken a little more emphatically. I am sorry the leader of the official opposition was not here, or he too would wish to say something about the disparaging remarks of the hon. member for Rosedale.

Mr. GRAYDON: Your leader is not here.

Mr. JACKMAN: On a point of privilege, I said nothing disparaging about the Hudson Bay railway. What I asked for was information. I asked about the government's attitude toward the statement made last session by the hon. member for Regina City, who asked if this railway had been given a fair trial. That was what I was asking the minister.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I should like to call the attention to the fact that item 417 is carried and was recorded in the Votes and Proceedings, which is the official record of our proceedings. Hansard may not record it, but it is recorded here, and as hon. members will see it is also recorded in the Votes and Proceedings.

Mr. GRAYDON: On a point of order, these things often crop up in our discussions. I realize that it is difficult for the chairman and the members of the committee always to agree on what has been carried in the great rush and pressure of business towards the end of the session. My recollection is that item 417 was not carried last night. I know quite well that the chairman and the assistant clerk have records to the contrary. I do not wish to put my word against the word of other hon. members. Either one of us may be right. In view of the obvious confusion in connection with it I suggest that it would not be right to shut off discussion on the item at this time. Perhaps with the consent of the committee the chairman will allow us to discuss the item.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): I should like to say to the committee that it is the duty of the chairman to call the attention of the committee to the fact that an item is carried when a further lengthy discussion takes place. However, I believe the committee is anxious to continue discussing this particular item and that I should permit whatever discussion is desired.

Mr. NICHOLSON: At page 4962 of Hansard I find the following: "Item stands."

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): That is not the official record.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I submit that when the Hansard reporters and members of the committee heard "Item stands" at eleven o'clock last night, certainly it was not clear that it was carried. Hansard also records that the hon. member for Rosedale asked that the item stand.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Golding): Order. If hon. members wish to continue to discuss the item I shall permit it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am very glad the hon. member for Rosedale has made his position clear, and that he did not wish his remarks this afternoon to be interpreted as I had understood them. The people I represent in parliament still feel that this route has not received the consideration it deserves. For some years I have lived at Hudson Bay Junction, which is 594 miles from Churchill. By rail we are 832 miles from Port Arthur, at the head of the lakes, and we have always found it difficult to understand why more of our grain is not moved over this more direct route. The distance from Churchill to Liverpool is approximately the same as the distance from Montreal to Liverpool; but now, at the beginning of the shipping season at Churchill, it is hard for us to understand why the elevator was not filled.

Mr. MacNICOL: It was filled to overflowing.

Mr. NICHOLSON: My understanding is that it was not filled when the boats went in there. Perhaps the minister can put us straight on that; my information is that it was not full. Certainly there has not been much grain moving to Churchill in the past few weeks; and considering the very serious shortage of food in Europe and the shortage of box cars for use at harvest time I cannot understand why arrangements were not made to use these terminal facilities to capacity and have the railway trains moving the grain that is available on the prairies up to that point. On several occasions it has been demonstrated that grain could be moved in there very quickly and loaded on ships in the minimum of time. In view of the fact that the route did not have a fair chance during the war I think people were quite justified in expecting that it would be used to capacity this year. Would the minister indicate whether the elevator was full at the beginning of the season?

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend is certainly persistent in asking that question. However, I shall try to answer it satisfactorily. I told the hon. member for Davenport that the national harbours board had made very strong representations to the wheat board in connection with the movement of grain through Churchill. The wheat board have taken the position that they will move new crop wheat to Churchill if sufficient tonnage is available to take it to its overseas destination prior to the close of navigation this year; and as I shall indicate in a moment there is sufficient shipping in sight to move the grain at present in storage at Churchill. But because of the very short supply situation it would be impossible to move further wheat to Churchill from the 1945 crop, and it is really doubtful if supplies from the 1946 crop could be moved in time to be available for shipment, that is if tonnage were available. I think hon. gentlemen will agree that if a substantial stock of wheat from the new crop were moved to Churchill and had to be housed there until August of next year, when the navigation season opens, there might be considerable criticism in view of the world demand for all possible grain to be shipped at the earliest possible moment.

The elevator capacity at Churchill is 2,200,000 bushels, and the present stores are indicated as 1,800,000 bushels. Some six ships have been made available to take out this wheat. I have before me the schedule of vessels for grain loadings at Churchill. One of these ships, the Mount Revelstoke Park, arrived on August 10 and departed on August 15, carrying 335,000 bushels of wheat. The Hillcrest Park arrived on the 12th, the Essex Trader on the 13th, the Rocky Mountain Park on the 15th, and two others, the Whiteshell Park and the Bellwood Park, have not yet arrived but are expected on the 19th and 21st respectively. These ships have a carrying capacity of 8,500 tons, and it is expected that this shipping will take care of the grain now in the elevator.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like to add a further word, because this is a very important subject. The Minister of Reconstruction is in the chamber, and he will bear out what I have to say. The Minister of Transport told us the elevator at Churchill had only about 1,800,000 bushels, and perhaps that is correct at the present time. When I was there it was full to overflowing. I was told by the man in charge that it had something over 2,000,000 bushels at that time, but that was five years ago. No wheat has moved there in five years, however, because it could not get out, owing to war.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is quite correct.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Some was shipped to the United States.

Mr. MacNICOL: How?

Mr. NICHOLSON: By boat.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. MacNICOL: Well, I suppose they could do that. The Minister of Reconstruction built one of the finest elevators in the world there, and he knows the unloading capacity. I have just forgotten it; I believe it is 60 carloads an hour, though it may be more and perhaps I should not quote a figure at all when I am not sure. In any case I believe we have at Churchill the very fastest loading and unloading equipment in the world to-day. I wonder if the Minister of Reconstruction himself believes that conditions would warrant the construction of one or two more elevators of this kind at Churchill, so that when wheat could be transported from the prairies to Churchill in the off season the elevators could be filled and made ready for shipment in July or August, when the boats returned. In that way I believe the port would be able to handle something between ten and twenty million bushels of wheat a year. I spent three or four days there and made very exhaustive inquiries and from what I heard I believe that could be done. If we could ship ten to twenty million bushels of wheat a season from the prairies through the port of Churchill, with the proper elevator facilities there, the whole problem of deficits on the railway would be solved.

Mr. KNIGHT: I am deeply interested in this question. The people surrounding the city I represent in this house are vitally concerned with the success of the Hudson Bay railway and the Churchill route. Furthermore, in spite of repeated attacks upon it made by certain interests and the representatives of those interests in this country, we believe ultimately this route will be successful. I understand there is a chance that some time in the future the western governments will see to it that the route becomes a success, if no one else will undertake to do so. However, that is by the way.

When the minister was on his feet he said he thought the six ships at present at Churchill or en route there would take care of the wheat now in that elevator. I quite agree with that statement, and I am just afraid of something else in that connection. Three days ago I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce if it was true that there was a shortage of 100,000 bushels of wheat at this port which was required to fill to capacity the six ships in question. The minister said he thought that information was incorrect, but that he would look into it. Since that time I have heard nothing from the minister, but I have been talking to the officials of his department and I cannot get any very clear statement on that point. Has the Minister of Transport any information in that regard? Before he answers that question may I say that the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce say they have been in communication with the shipping authorities, I believe with headquarters at Montreal, and with the wheat board, having its headquarters at Winnipeg, but as yet they have not been able to answer my question, whether it is a fact that one of these six ships brought to Churchill at such cost will have to go out again with a partial cargo. The members of the Hudson bay route association are vitally concerned that that should not happen. The Hudson Bay route has received many black eyes and they are anxious that it should not receive any more. We are anxious that the wheat should be there. If it is not there, it should be found immediately so that this ship may go out with a full cargo. Can the minister give any further information?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am afraid I cannot add anything to what I said in answer to the hon. member for Mackenzie, namely, that the six ships whose names I gave had a sufficient tonnage to take out the 1,800,000 bushels of wheat. I am sure the hon. member will realize that the national harbours board is interested because of the revenue received from storage, but the movement of grain and wheat and the like is under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. McLURE: There are many hon. members in this house who have made trips to Prince Edward Island and who know under what conditions they have to travel across to that island even when they are at their best. I should like the minister to give a report with regard to the construction and improvement of the terminals for which provision is being made in item 418. I am sure if these terminals are improved it will be an encouragement to the people who travel there and who we hope will come again.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The construction of a new car ferry will of necessity mean the providing of additional facilities at the terminals, and the estimate of the cost at Borden and Tormentine will be in the neigbhourhood of $2,350,000 for the fiscal year 1946-47. The estimated cost of the construction of both terminals is $5,458,000. As far as the present position at Tormentine is concerned I can tell my hon. friend that tenders have been called by the Canadian National Railways. While the contract has not been awarded, the Canadian National Railways are negotiating with the Canadian Dredge and Dock Company Limited, the lowest bidder, and I presume they will enter into a contract with them in due course. So far as Borden is concerned, tenders were called for but there were no bidders. It is proposed to readvertise the work on a different basis in the hope that a bidder for the work can be obtained.

Mr. McLURE: Would that amount include the dredging?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes, all the dredging.

Item agreed to.

Railway service—

419. To provide for the construction of an icebreaker-railway car-highway vehicle-passenger ferry vessel for the Prince Edward Island car ferry service, estimated to cost $5,000,000. Amount required for 1946-47 (revote $598,180) —capital, $2,000,000.

Mr. McLURE: This vote is to provide for the construction of an icebreaker and so on at an estimated cost of $5,000,000. The estimates for 1943 contained an item of $3,000,000 but very little work was done in that year. The money was revoted in 1944, when there was an item of $2,400,000 of which $2,300,000 was a revote. In 1945-46 there was a vote of $2,342,500, and now in 1946-47 we have item 419 for $2,000,000, which includes a revote of $598,180.

The expenditures to date have been $700,000 in 1944, $1,525,000 in 1945, and now we have a vote of $2,000,000 in 1946-47. Even if this money is all spent before the end of the year, according to the estimated cost of this ship it will be only three-quarters constructed at that time. The people down there are anxious to know when they can expect this ship to be completed and in operation. It was definitely promised to us in 1945. Then we had another promise for September 1946. The latest promise was for December, but no year is specified. While four months remain in 1946 during which considerable work could be done on this ship, I think it is safe to say that there is not one chance in a thousand of its being in service in 1946.

Mr. CHEVRIER: My hon. friend, speaking in that vein, will certainly not hasten delivery.

Mr. McLURE: I do not think I am any detriment to the progress of the work, because I have urged with all my power that it be continued. I will repeat that. From the information I have I do not believe there is one chance in a thousand that she will be in service in 1946, unless the days of miracles are not over. I would go further and say that I have doubts whether she will be in service in 1947. Perhaps I am a little pessimistic, but judging from the way the work has been going on and from the reports received down there, I cannot see any hope.

I am mentioning this in the hope that the minister will endeavour to have those who have the contract put on more men. I do not think they are held up for materials at the present time, or at least we have no information on that. The boat could have been built five years ago in the United States. When the S.S. Charlottetown was lost in June, 1941, the United States had not yet declared war and there was plenty of opportunity to have this ship built in their shipyards. However, that has been lost to us and Prince Edward Island has been a greater sufferer thereby.

In dealing with this matter, I do not want to say anything that is unfair in any way. I simply wish to place before the minister the terrible conditions with regard to shipping in Prince Edward Island. Our farmers have already become very uneasy with regard to the shipments they expect to make this coming season. I hold in my hand a copy of a letter dated July 12, 1946, which was sent to the Prime Minister by the potato growers' association, drawing to his attention what they are looking for by way of having this ship completed for 1946, and among other things, they say, in conclusion:

> We respectfully urge you, honourable sir, that you as head of all departments will see that every possible effort is made to have the new ferry reach us in time for the traffic of this coming winter.

There have been all kinds of representations made to the department, all urging the early completion of this ship.

Another thing that has tied up our transportation facilities and given our tourist business a black eye has been what I might call the neglect with regard to the repairs to the Prince Edward, a ship which has been in service all winter. We know that she had to be repaired, and after she had gone in for repairs we were furnished with an auxiliary ship at the beginning of the tourist season. Just when the tourists were starting to come in many of them could not get across the strait on time and had to sleep in their cars all night on the Tormentine side. The government of Prince Edward Island spends some $25,000 a year in advertising for tourist business, but any friends they make in that way are simply wiped off the map by the delays of the dominion government. The whole thing seems to be more or less of a muddle and we can get no satisfaction as to when we can depend on the new ship being in service.

May I draw to the attention of the committee the opinion of the premier of Prince Edward Island regarding this matter. In a speech in the local legislature in March last he said:

> It seems to me that under the terms of confederation, when something has happened to interrupt our communication for which the dominion failed to make adequate provision, we have a claim against Canada for the loss sustained. The delay of even a day or two might bring up claims of thousands of dollars. I believe that we should claim from the dominion government, on account of delinquencies on their part for transportation across the straits, hundreds of thousands of dollars—it may be millions.

That is from the Liberal premier of our province. Our people in Prince Edward Island are most anxious to-day because the situation is so serious. Here we are with the expectation of shipping at least 9,000 to 10,000 cars of potatoes this fall. That is quite a lot to be carried over by the one steamer. Should we have to hold over some of that crop until the winter season and should the old ship happen to break down, look what a loss that would be to our farmers!

I might state further that, because of the hold-up this summer, the coal shortage has become almost desperate there; and with coal to come in, and the shortage of refrigerator cars for potatoes, we are going to have a real bottleneck in transportation in Prince Edward Island. The minister may think I am simply making complaints, but I am not making these representations by way of complaint at all. I simply wish to place before the committee and the minister how serious the transportation situation is there, in the hope of arousing his very best interest. I am sure that if he will look into the matter we shall have his support and that our shippers and our whole transportation system will benefit.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I may tell the hon. gentleman in answer to his representations that I have keenly at heart the position with respect to shipping between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. I am glad that he has brought these representations to my attention, but I can tell him that not a day of the week passes without the members from Prince Edward Island who sit on this side of the house making representations to me with reference to the car ferry and the island shipping situation generally.

The hon. gentleman said that the car ferry was definitely promised for September of 1946. I am sure the hon. member does not want to be unfair and I am sure he did not intend to make that statement. The car ferry was never promised definitely, to use his own words, for September of 1946. What was told to the hon. gentleman was this, that if deliveries could be made on schedule the car ferry would be delivered. The hon. gentleman says that the delay is due to the federal government. Let me assure him that the delay is not in any way due to anything which the federal government is doing; quite the contrary. The contract was given to a responsible contractor. He is unable to obtain deliveries of material and of the equipment that is required. The strikes that have been taking place across the country have contributed to the delays, and I am sure my hon. friend is as familiar with that as I am. There are important items of equipment which enter into a ship such as pumps, switchboards and panel boards which were promised almost a year ago and have not yet been delivered. Surely that is not the fault of the contractor in any way. I invite my hon. friend to go to Sorel and see for himself, as hon. members from Prince Edward Island on this side of the house have done. I will make the trip just as readily available to him so that he may go and see for himself that, if there is any delay, it is not in any sense due to the contractor.

My hon. friend referred to the potato situation. Surely he must know that if there has been delay with reference to that it is because of the shortage of refrigerator cars. Many of these cars have come into Canada from the United States, and they have had to be returned; in the United States there is a shortage of no less than 25,000 railroad cars. The shortage exists not only in the hon. member's end of the country, it is all over Canada; and while I feel for his province I must tell him that the position is the same throughout Canada. I am hopeful that it will be righted in the near future, and I can tell the hon. member without hesitation that if there is anything the minister can do to expedite the delivery of the new car ferry for Prince Edward Island he may rest assured that it will be done.

Mr. McLURE: I just want to say that, even if this shortage of materials did exist, since 1943 many vessels have been launched by the same construction company, and possibly they have taken some of the material which we should have had for our ship.

With regard to the very kind invitation the minister extended to me to go to Sorel, I should have liked to go with the hon. members from his side of the house when they visited that city, but I did not know of it until they came back. They gave an optimistic report of the construction work; no doubt they had to keep whistling pretty well to keep up the spirits of the people down home, but I believe that if they would express their conscientious beliefs on this matter they would have their doubts, as I have, that this cannot be completed in 1946, and if construction work is not pushed I doubt if she can be constructed in 1947. However, we have gone over this. I thank the minister for his very kind words with reference to our condition, and I should like to go oue step farther. He promised to come to our province last season; at least, he was so reported in the press.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, I hope to go.

Mr. McLURE: I know he has been busy. As one of the members for Prince Edward Island I invite him to come this season. He will need a holiday when this session is over; why cannot he spend a week or ten days with us, and we will try to make it so pleasurable for him that everything he has experienced here which may have been discourteous or disagreeable will be forgotten? I do not know whether I understood the minister to make the statement that the ship "won't be constructed if you talk that way." I do not know what kind of talk he meant, but I should like him to explain that.

Mr. GRANT: Some hon. members think I should say something on this item. The hon. member for Fraser Valley was urging me to do so, but it was not my intention to say anything at all, for I wish to get home as speedily as possible.

Mr. COLDWELL: On the ferry?

Mr. GRANT: I am very proud to see that the estimates contain two items of over $5,000,000 for a new car ferry and $4,500,000 for an extension of and repairs to the pier. Since the minister has said what I intended to say, I can be very brief. I would point out to the Tory member for Prince Edward Island that it comes with very bad grace from him to talk about transportation at the present time in this house, because he was here between 1930 and 1935, and I would say that during that period anything the farmers could sell for export could easily have been taken over to the mainland on a rowboat.

420. Strait of Canso—Surveys and investigations, $60,000.

Mr. GRAYDON: When I was over to Cape Breton island some time ago I was impressed, as I think everyone is who takes that trip across the strait of Canso, with the great lack of convenient accommodation and transportation from the mainland to Cape Breton. If my humble views, as one who comes from central Canada, may help the minister in expediting the provision of better transportation across the strait, I should like to add my voice to those who from time to time have brought up this subject in the house. The strait is not very wide.

Mr. MacNICOL: A mile.

Mr. GRAYDON: As the hon. member for Davenport, who is an expert on matters of this kind, has pointed out, the width is probably not more than a mile, and it would seem to me that something more than a ferry is required. I see that the item provides $60,000 for surveys and investigations. I am hopeful that the minister will be able to tell the committee that it is the policy of the government to provide a bridge or causeway of the proper type with adequate carrying capacity, and that it will be carried out within the near future in the interests of the people of Cape Breton.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I have been asked that question so often and have made a reply so often that I am sure my hon. friend will not want me to elaborate greatly on it. It cannot be decided what type of construction or what works will be effected at the strait of Canso until such time as the survey has been completed. This vote of $60,000 provides for a survey to ascertain what the bed of the gut consists of, whether it is rock or mud or clay, and until the survey and the engineer's report are completed I shall not be able to tell the hon. gentleman what type of construction may be adopted.

Mr. GRAYDON: When was the survey started, and what progress has been made up to date?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I gave a full report to the hon. member for Cape Breton South on two occasions, and again last night. Perhaps the hon. member was not in the house at the time—

Mr. GRAYDON: I was not.

Mr. CHEVRIER: —but if my hon. friend looks at Hansard of yesterday he will find a fairly complete report on the matter.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to congratulate the minister and the government upon providing for this expenditure to improve conditions in Prince Edward Island. I am happy to realize that the government is approaching the future with courage and even with aggressiveness; this is as it should be. Too often governments, after a war is over, think of nothing but retrenchment, belt-tightening, and all that sort of thing. That is not the kind of policy which will make Canada great and strong. I commend the government for reaching out and spending some money to improve conditions in the maritimes; and as a western member I think perhaps a word of commendation may be of some value.

Railway service—

421. Canadian government railways — Construction and improvements of drainage works at Fairview subway, at Halifax, N.S.—capital, $40,000.

Mr. MACDONALD (Halifax): This vote will, I hope, help to end a menace and a nuisance that has existed in Halifax since 1916 when the Fairview subway was built as part of the Halifax ocean terminals project. It is the main exit out of the city of Halifax, and it presents two problems, one having to do with flooding and the other with the passage of traffic. The vote here is for the construction of improvements to drainage works at Fairview. It is quite true that flood conditions there, following torrential rains, render this subway impassable at times, but there is also great danger to traffic moving to and from the subway, in and out of the city. What I wish to inquire about is whether this vote will cover not only drainage and improvements but also improvements to the subway, so that it will help to make the passageway safer for traffic. It is a problem which concerns not only the Canadian government railways but the department of highways of the Nova Scotia government and, as well, the city of Halifax. All three parties should be interested in the work to be done, and I would ask the minister whether he has the approval and concurrence of the provincial highways department and the city of Halifax for the proposed work.

Mr. CHEVRIER: This item of $40,000 has to do with drainage only and not the reconstruction of the subway. I am informed that the city of Halifax will contribute $5,000 toward the drainage work and that this scheme in connection with drainage has the approval of both the provincial and municipal authorities.

Railway service—

422. Maritime Freight Rates Act—To hereby authorize and provide for the payment from time to time during the fiscal year 1946-47 to the Canadian National Railway Company of the difference (estimated by the Canadian National Railway Company and certified by the auditors of the said company to the Minister of Transport as and when required by the said minister) occurring on account of the application of the Maritime Freight Rates Act, between the tariff tolls and the normal tolls (upon the same basis as set out in section 9 of the said act with respect to companies therein referred to) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1946 under the tariffs approved on the eastern lines (as referred to in section 2 of the said act) of the Canadian National Railways, $3,042,000.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): As I understand this, for some reason which I wish the minister would explain it is thought desirable to charge the transport department with $3,000,000 in this item and virtually a million dollars in the next by way of giving indirect relief to the Canadian National Railways. Is this correct?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The first vote has reference to the reduction in tariff tolls on traffic over the Canadian National, and the following vote is in respect of reduction in tolls on traffic over railways other than the Canadian National, east of a point in the province of Quebec. I believe it is Diamond Junction.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): This item is necessitated by reason of the fact that certain relief in tolls is given because, as a matter of policy, it is felt not desirable to ask the Canadian National Railways to carry that load?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Perhaps I should say that it is done by act of parliament under the Maritime Freight Rates Act, passed by this house.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): There is no one who is more anxious to see the Canadian National Railways do well than I am, nor is there anyone who believes in it more than I do. Second, I feel that in the past parliament has done wisely to relieve the Canadian National Railways, as it has done, from some of the excess capitalization due to the fact that several railways were combined in it. But that is a different matter from this. I simply wish to raise the question whether it is wise to have this charge, which I think is one that should be borne by the Canadian National Railways. It is an indirect way of increasing the revenue of the Canadian National by $3,000,000, if I understand it. I suggest that it is the interests of clarity and in the interests of the Canadian National itself to have its full picture clearly given as one, and not to find $3,000,000 here, which I suggest should be in their account.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is that the right interpretation? I understood that this was not to relieve the Canadian National Railways but rather to relieve the people who live east of Diamond Junction.

Mr. HOWE: And there is $900,000 for the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, on the same score.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Let us be clear. I said that it was to relieve the people. It is necessitated by reason of the fact that it is considered desirable to give toll relief to those people and I am not questioning that, but I submit that it is unsound to have that $3,000,000 tucked in here, because it distorts the true picture of the Canadian National to that extent. If it is desirable to give these people relief, that means that the Canadian National earns $3,000,000 less. I am not questioning that, but I should like to know what the Minister of Reconstruction thinks about this, because he has spoken about peculiar methods of financing.

Mr. HOWE: This is done in consequence of an act of the Canadian parliament. The statute was passed to implement the Duncan report, which stated that the people of the maritimes were unduly handicapped by geography in maintaining a competitive position with the rest of Canada.. It was not a matter for the Canadian National Railways. It had no obligation to correct the geography of Canada; that was for parliament. The Canadian National applies the same standard rates to the maritimes as to other parts of the country. The rates are the same, and because parliament decided that the position of the maritime provinces in respect of transportation should be recognized, reductions in rates were made a charge against all the people of Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: It would not be there unless the freight rates were reduced, and the government votes the money to the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific so that the people in the maritimes can do business.

Mr. HOWE: It is a statutory obligation.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): That fact is neither here nor there. The authority that made the statute can change it. I simply suggest that we should understand what it is.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am wondering what alternative policy the hon. gentleman would suggest.

Mr. CHEVRIER: You would have to amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act.

Item agreed to.

Pensions and other benefits—

427. Railway employees' provident fund—To supplement pension allowances under the provisions of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railway Employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum payment during the period January 1, 1946, to March 31, 1947, the sum of $30 per month instead of $20 as fixed by the said act, $19,200.

Mr. CAMPBELL: I should like to know from the minister exactly how the railway employees are pensioned, if they are pensioned. I have noticed, especially in the last two years, that there are a great number of old men working on the railways. I would say that many of these men look as if they were close to seventy years old, particularly the engineers and conductors. Is there any way of pensioning them before they are absolutely worn out? Last winter I was informed by a group of railway workers that, after an engineer is pensioned off, his average span of life is two years.

Mr. HOMUTH: Not in Ontario.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is there anything in the Pension Act to permit their being pensioned before they are worn out, or do the railways take everything out of them before they pension them?

Mr. CHEVRIER: The item now under discussion has to do with the railway employees' provident fund, and it is sought to add to that to the extent of $19,200. The Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railway employees' provident fund provides for the payment to retiring employees a monthly allowance of one and one-half per cent for each year of service of the average monthly salary received by each employee for the eight years immediately preceding his retirement, such monthly allowance to be not less than $20. Because of the increased cost of living, that was augmented by $10 to raise the amount from $20 to $30, and for the purpose of looking after this increase a vote of $19,200 is included in this item.

Mr. CAMPBELL: Is there any retirement age?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I believe it is sixty-five.

Mr. HOMUTH: The retiring age is sixty-five, but if a man has perfect eyesight and so on he may carry on for another two or three years. They are doing that on the railways.

Mr. HOWE: The railways did that during the war, but it is not usual railway practice.

Mr. HOMUTH: Because of lack of experienced men they have been doing it. These are things that one expects in the ordinary course of carrying on a business.

Mr. KNOWLES: It should be clear that the matter covered by this item relates only to a limited number of railway employees.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. CHEVRIER: I made that clear in answering my hon. friend.

Mr. KNOWLES: I am sure the minister did, but I was not sure that it was understood because of the discussion that has since taken place. Has any consideration been given to the enactment of legislation in Canada similar to the railroad retirement legislation in the United States? As the minister knows, I am keenly interested in a pension dispute which I am now discussing with the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour. Without going into it in these estimates, may I say it is my conviction, as a result of the study I have made of railroad pension systems, that it would be definitely advantageous if a plan similar to that in the United States were in force in this country. I realize that there is a stock answer to the effect that it is a matter of government policy to be made known in due course. Is consideration being given to this matter?

Mr. CHEVRIER: All I can tell the hon. gentleman is that the Canadian National Railways has its own pension scheme. This matter did come up in the committee on railways and shipping, and while I can speak only from memory, I think the president of the Canadian National Railways did say in effect that consideration had been given to the United States method of retirement but that its own scheme was working fairly satisfactorily.

Mr. KNOWLES: That is true with regard to the Canadian National scheme, but the Canadian National is not the only railway in Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: That is true.

Mr. KNOWLES: We do have some trouble with the other railroad on pension matters.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sure the hon. member will admit that the jurisdiction which the Department of Transport will have over other railways is certainly limited.

Mr. KNOWLES: While I have no desire to get into the old argument to-day, my view is that a service as nationwide in scope as transportation, in effect, a natural monopoly —at least it should be—which is woven so completely into the economic life of the country is such that it should be in a little different category from one we sometimes regard as an ordinary private business. It does seem to me that the employees in the transportation field should receive more complete coverage than is provided at present.

Mr. POULIOT: May I be permitted to say a word? This item dates from the time that the Intercolonial was a government railway, a time when the cost of living was much lower than it is now. Naturally the pensions are not so high as they are under other schemes. Some representations have been made to my colleague the hon. member for Levis and to myself to try to adjust the figure by having an increase paid to these people who have been superannuated under the old Intercolonial railway scheme. It takes some time. I spoke to the minister about the matter and he seemed to look at it favourably. I hope that in the near future the claims will be adjusted fairly.

Government-owned enterprises—Deficits—Transport—

469. Amount required to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1946-47 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made from time to time by the national company to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1946, $707,000.

Mr. McLURE: I asked a question before as to why this item is called a deficit when the other expenditures on canals are not so defined. I did not get the full meaning of what the minister said. When the money for both these matters comes out of the same fund why should our system be called a deficit and the canals not? I should like to have some explanation.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I thought I dealt with that last night in answer to a question by the hon. gentleman, but I can add this remark: the reason for it is that the revenue from the car ferry is applied against the expenditures and the net result is the deficit.

Mr. McLURE: Has the minister a breakdown of the item? I am not asking for it to-day.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I can give it to the hon. gentleman. The total operating revenues estimated for 1946 are $142,000. The total operating expenses are $836,500; net operating deficit, $694,500; interest on unfunded debt $12,500, making a total net income deficit of $707,000.

Mr. McLURE: That would include repairs to the ships as well?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Yes.

Item agreed to.

Demobilization and reconversion—Transport—

620. To provide for facilities and operations under the administration of the director of merchant seamen, $5,877,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: The minister was good enough to agree that I might say something on this item which I was unable to say last evening on item 402. I have noted in Hansard the remarks of the hon. member for Nanaimo and other hon. members in regard to lighthouses, and were it not for the fact that I promised certain lighthouse keepers I would raise this matter I would have let it go at that. I have also noted a letter from the minister to the secretary of the amalgamated civil servants which appeared in the Civil Service Digest for May, 1946, from which I understand the minister has given some consideration to improving conditions in connection with lighthouses in various parts of Canada. The particular lighthouses I have in mind at the moment are one-man lighthouses; there is one at Cape Mudge on the west coast, and another at Scarlet Point. These are one-man lighthouses and I believe both are what they call watch lights.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Are they both isolated?

Mr. MacINNIS: They are both isolated; at least I gather that from the fact that in one case I am told there is mail service only once a month, which would indicate that this lighthouse is quite isolated. The Cape Mudge light, as I said, is a watch light, on twenty-four hour service, situated in the entrance to Seymour Narrows, and is a beacon light for the notorious Ripple Rock, about which we heard so much last week. This lighthouse keeper informs me that sometimes during foggy weather he has been on duty continuously for as long as seventy-two hours. Obviously he cannot carry on efficiently for that length of time, and as a result the service given to ships must suffer. I am also informed that the light is operated by hand, and that the machinery must be wound every two hours, which means that this lightkeeper must have his rest interrupted in order to perform that service. Has the minister or his department given any consideration to the installation of some automatic machinery to operate this light?

Another complaint in connection with these lighthouses is in regard to the payment of assistants. I notice that during the past year a certain amount of money has been allowed for this purpose, and that is all to the good. Perhaps I need not labour this point, except to urge the minister to deal generously with these lighthouse keepers because of the position they are in, removed from the social life of any community. They must live day in and day out, year in and year out, separated from almost everything that makes life worth while to the rest of us, and without association with other human beings.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I am sure my hon. friend takes a great interest in the lighthouse keepers, not only because of what he has now said but because of his representations last year on these estimates. Perhaps I might put on record just what we have done in the Department of Transport for lighthouse keepers; and I think I can be brief. There is a definite trend in the department to improve the condition of lightkeepers, who, it is recognized, are faithful servants of the crown. As my hon. friend knows, an order in council was passed and some $40,000 voted yesterday, covering an additional allowance for lighthouse keepers to assist toward paying the wages of assistants at the rate of $25 a month. In addition to the cost of living bonus, the principle of annual leave for lightkeepers has been recognized, and it is being extended and generally made available with pay where stations are in operation the year round. Housing is being improved, with sanitary conditions being incorporated in new structures and added to others, and we are trying to get separate accommodation for assistants. Radiotelephones are being installed on both coasts, which it is hoped will be in operation this fall. Where reasonably available, electricity is being installed, and also telephone service. Every possible assistance is given by the marine service steamers, and their visits augmented by mail service contracts where that is possible. Consideration is being given to the department assuming other assistance and other benefits for the lightkeepers.

My hon. friend spoke of the light at Cape Mudge. Until recently this was a single man station, but the classification has been raised to provide for an assistant. I am instructed that winding is rarely required more frequently than every four hours. At most single-man stations the winding is arranged for every fourteen hours, according to my information from the director of marine services.

Mr. CASE: This is one of the largest items in the estimates and is to provide for facilities and operations under the administration of the director of merchant seamen. Referring to the details at page 282 of the estimates, I should like to ask three questions. Included in this item is an amount of $1,727,600 for the operation of manning pools and training schools. My question in regard to that is, should that not properly be charged to national defence? The next item is $50,400 to cover the expenses of the London, England, office. The third item is special bonus at end of war, $2,062.50. I probably should eliminate the second item, operation of manning pools and training schools, $1,727,600. Then there is an item, technical training for seamen, $100,000. These items total $5,877,000, which is a considerable increase over the previous period. Would the minister care to explain this increase and also state whether the items I have referred to are related to national defence or if they are purely departmental expenditures?

Mr. CHEVRIER: They are not related to national defence; they are departmental matters, because the director of merchant seamen has been placed under the Department of Transport. He had to do with the operation of manning pools during the war and with the administration of training schools. There were two such schools, one at Prescott and one at Hubbards, Nova Scotia, and these are covered by this item.

With reference to the expenses in London, England, the same reason is applicable. The United Kingdom authorities requested us to take care of British seamen and the logical man to do it was the director of merchant seamen.

The amount provided for the special bonus is really to cover two bonuses. The first was a war bonus granted to seamen who signed an agreement for two years or the duration of the war, whichever was the lesser. This was a bonus of ten per cent of the annual earnings. Then there was a special war rehabilitation payment of ten per cent of the total earnings. Technical training is also under the jurisdiction of the director of merchant seamen.

Mr. CASE: Would any proportion of the expenses of the operation of manning pools and training schools be taken out of the ten per cent?

Mr. CHEVRIER: That has nothing to do with the bonus. That is to cover the expenses of operating the five manning pools and two training schools.

Mr. CASE: It makes no difference to the personnel?

Mr. CHEVRIER: Not at all.

Mr. POULIOT: Is it only merchant seamen on vessels of Canadian registry who enjoy the benefits mentioned here, or do they apply to all seamen?

Mr. CHEVRIER: They apply chiefly to merchant seamen on ships registered in Canada, but there have been some exceptions made, for example in the case of certain cable ships.

Mr. POULIOT: We should look after the people on our ships. I do not see why we should take care of seamen on ships that are not registered in Canada.

Mr. CHEVRIER: The exceptions cover Canadians who have been assigned to certain ships registered outside Canada, such as the three cable ships I referred to a moment ago. and would apply to Canadians working on those ships which are of British registry.

Mr. POULIOT: I wish to express my regret at the fact that certain large companies like the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services register their ships outside of Canada. This service is supposed to be a Canadian service. There are very few large ships registered in Canada, and I think the way this company is acting is prejudicial to the interests of Canada.

Mr. MACDONALD (Halifax): I think the time has come when we should have a Canadian maritime commission. I believe that such a commission would be in the interests of both the ship owners and the seamen. It could assist in securing regular and permanent employment for the ships of our merchant fleet and also for our seamen. I have in my hand a copy of the merchant marine act, 1936, passed by the United States congress which provides for a United States maritime commission. The declaration of policy is set out in the first section, which provides:

> It is necessary for the national defence and development of its foreign and domestic commerce that the United States shall have a merchant marine (a) sufficient to carry its domestic water-borne commerce and a substantial portion of the water-borne export and import foreign commerce of the United States and to provide shipping service on all routes essential for maintaining the flow of such domestic and foreign water-borne commerce at all times; (b) capable of serving as a naval and military auxiliary in time of war or national emergency; (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States in so far as may be practicable and (d) composed of the best equipped, safest, and most suitable types of vessels, constructed in the United States and manned with a trained and efficient citizen personnel.

Section 210 of the act provides that it shall be the duty of the commission set up under the act to make a survey of the United States merchant marine with a view to securing, among other things, a merchant fleet owned by citizens of the United States and to plan vessels designed to afford the best and most complete protection for passengers and crew against fire and all marine perils.

Another section provides that the commission is authorized and directed to study all maritime problems arising in the carrying out of the policy set forth in the act and to study and cooperate with vessel owners in devising means by which the importers and exporters of the United States can be induced to give preference to vessels under United States registry.

To-day Canada is a great trading nation. At the outbreak of war we had thirty-seven ocean-going ships, with a total personnel of about 1,400. To-day we have over 200 ocean-going vessels, with a personnel of 12,000 trained seamen. Prior to the war, it seemed to be taken for granted that it was impossible for Canada to have a strong merchant marine. Most of our exports and imports were carried in bottoms of United Kingdom or foreign registry. In those days we were not in position to look after our merchant ships as we are to-day.

At the present time there is a wide demand all over the world for Canadian products. Before the war—and I suppose this custom still exists—the purchaser of goods would dictate the ship in which those goods were to be carried. To-day we are making loans and advancing credits to many countries, and it seems to me that the time has come when we should see that the goods and commodities purchased as a consequence of these credits and advances should be shipped in Canadian ships sailing from Canadian ports.

It is no use to say that the adoption of such a policy would mean that orders would be placed in the United States instead of in Canada. That answer was given me a year ago when I brought up this question. Ten years ago the United States congress passed a law which requires that all exports financed by government money shall be carried in ships registered in the United States if there are sufficient ships of sufficient tonnage available. There is no good reason why we should not adopt the same policy.

There is another matter that might very well be considered by a maritime commission. It is one that has arisen at different times. That is the question of restricting our coastal trade to Canadian ships. That is the policy followed in the United States. Much of our coastal trade is being carried by foreign ships owned in countries where the same privileges are not given to our ship owners.

Another matter that might very well be considered by this commission is safety provisions for the crew and passengers of ships, crew accommodation and better services in the kitchens or galleys in order to make life at sea safer and more pleasant. This commission could absorb some of the activities of the Canadian shipping board, which was set up in 1939 under the War Measures Act and whose existence I presume will soon come to an end. That board did excellent work during the war. I have heard criticism of its work in no part of the country.

We find ourselves in this position. We have in Canada a large merchant fleet of over 200 vessels, employing over 14,000 seamen. We are well equipped with ships; we have the material, the means and the personnel in Canada to build ships. Many thousands of our men are skilled in the art of shipbuilding. We should not lose those skills and that important trade. Our national economy would suggest that steps be taken now to ensure the continued employment of all these classes of men. We have many different departments to-day concerned with the problems of seamen, shipbuilding and shipping, and I think the time has come when all these activities should be coordinated. I know of no better way of doing that than by setting up a maritime commission and having it study all these problems and be in a position to advise the government. I do not say that such a commission should be given all the powers given to the commission in the United States, but many of those powers might well be adapted to this country. I would ask the minister to give his favourable consideration to this suggestion.

Mr. POULIOT: Before the minister replies, I wish to congratulate my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax upon his excellent speech. But I wonder if this work should be done by a commission. I am a strong believer in having a large number of Canadian ships to carry Canadian produce. The mail contracts should also be given to ships of Canadian registry. That would be a great inducement to shipping companies to register their ships in Canada. Then they would be under the control of the Minister of Transport. That is most important, because many a time ships of foreign registry do some wrong to Canadian shipping and get away from the jurisdiction of the minister.

I support wholeheartedly my hon. friend's suggestion that we should build a large fleet of merchant ships of our own, and I would suggest that the government see that we get the largest possible number of ships to take care of our foreign trade so that there will be no delay in making shipments. That is a thing that cannot be done all at once; it may take some time, but it should be done. In this matter we should leave aside the old school tie of past ages. Our business in foreign countries is now in charge of commercial attaches who are responsible to British authorities and sometimes are not free and independent. The only thing they do is to make some reports and answer letters that are sent to them. They must be more active than that, and they must be under Canadian jurisdiction, because trade is the life-blood of the nation. If the views expressed by the junior member for Halifax are carried out, I believe it will be to the great benefit of this country.

There is something in the air, Mr. Chairman. What was said not long ago in another debate shows that there is a change of mind for the better in some quarters of the house and that some are now prepared to consider Canadian interests first. That is of the utmost importance because, if we cannot develop our own trade, this country is finished.

Mr. HOWE: The Minister of Transport has asked me to reply since I have been charged by the government with the duty of exploring the possibilities of a maritime commission and of reporting to the government on the requirements. There seems to be little doubt that Canadian shipping at the moment is in the position where a maritime commission is required.

The functions mentioned by my hon. friend are being taken care of to-day by three different departments. For example, the Canadian shipping board and shipping subsidies are administered by the Department of Trade and Commerce; the regulation of shipping is in the Department of Transport; and the operation of Park Steamships Company and certain control of shipyards is centred in the Department of Reconstruction.

Some progress is being made in drafting a maritime act to be administered by a maritime commission. The sale of Park Steamships Company has been carried out with a view to building a substantial Canadian merchant marine, and an endeavour has been made to place our shipyards in a position to service a substantial Canadian maritime fleet. There has not been great urgency about the formation of a maritime commission to date, because our ships and shipyards have been busy on foreign orders. However, the situation may change shortly, and for that reason we hope that some time next year we shall have a maritime commission in operation.

Air service—

429. Air transport board—salaries and office expenses, $193,090.

Mr. MERRITT: Last year, at page 2495 of Hansard, the Minister of Reconstruction highly praised the proposed air service between Vancouver and Lethbridge, stopping at intermediate points in the interior of British Columbia. In part, he said this:

This is considered an excellent aeroplane route. The rail transportation, as I think my hon. friend will agree, is not the best, and weather conditions are such that from time to time the highways are blocked. Another fortunate feature is that the area is well supplied with airports, so that a well-equipped and well-financed company should be able to give an excellent service and should find it a profitable operation.

At the same time he referred to the application by three companies to the air transport board which was heard in Vancouver in January, to operate over this line. Recently the application of each of the three companies has been turned down, and apparently the air transport board will not permit any company to operate this route at the present time and under present conditions.

The air transport board turned down the application on five grounds. They said first that the traffic potential of the area was not enough. My only comment on that is that, if that rule is to be applied by the board, we shall not have any scheduled intermediate service lines in British Columbia for many a long day, because this route passes through the most populated part of British Columbia. In the interior will be found a population of over 150,000; the Vancouver area contains some 400,000 and upwards; and the Lethbridge area, some 25,000. If that kind of thing is going to stop the approval of the service we shall have to wait for a long time in British Columbia before we have such a service. Next, the air transport board found that the rail and the bus services were quite adequate. I just read what the minister's view of that is, and my view is exactly the same as that of the minister. The third ground of the air transport board's decision was that the weather was so bad that the route could not be operated on schedule. There again, if we are to change the weather before we have any kind of scheduled service to these points we shall have to wait much longer than the people of Canada and particularly the people of the area concerned will want. Fourthly, it was said that the operation of this route would not be undertaken at a loss. Of course that is certainly so; nobody will want to operate such a route at a loss. The fifth reason given was that the aeroplane DC-3 was obsolescent, was not operationally satisfactory for the route, and was too large. Well, I understand the DC-3 to be the wartime Dakota, and I would think it most surprising to most people who know anything about air service to say that the DC-3 was obsolescent enough to make that a factor in washing out the service, particularly since I understand that the T.C.A. is now equipping certain of its services with that self-same aircraft.

But the real reason this application was turned down was not mentioned by the air transport board. It was that the company had applied for fifty cents per mile airmail subsidy and the department had offered only fifteen cents per mile of such subsidy. They later brought that offer up to 22½ cents per mile, but it was considered by the companies concerned that it was impossible to inaugurate this service without fifty cents per mile, the calculations being worked out on carrying a minimum of five passengers per mile and the rest of the cost being made up in the initial stages by the airmail subsidy. The rate of fifteen cents is, as I understand, the present established rate for T.C.A. It has been reduced to this figure very recently: the minister will know the exact date; I am not sure, but I believe it is since the end of the war. Before that time, T.C.A. was getting an airmail subsidy of forty-two cents per mile, and when T.C.A. was first inaugurated it got sixty cents per mile. It is again my understanding, subject to correction by the minister, that private airline companies which have received airmail subsidies in the past have received them to the amount of sixty cents, or fifty cents, or something comparable with the T.C.A. rate.

My first complaint to the committee and to the minister is that a mail subsidy to a transportation company has historically been a way of getting a necessary service into operation, and I do not believe that there has been a transportation system in the world for a hundred years—and probably one could go back much further than that—which has not had some assistance in the way of mail subsidies from the government to get it "over the hump."

Here we have a situation where we have thousands of men coming back from overseas qualified to serve in this particular walk of life, which is important for Canadians in the future, and we find a complete change of policy by the government in this respect. Apparently, from now on, the airmail subsidies which will be offered will be only in the amount which a well established and well cared for air line like the T.C.A., with all the advantages it has, is allowed. If we are to have an expansion of flying in this country to the extent that we should have it, a change of policy of that kind is a serious thing to face. I do not think the committee will doubt that if the T.C.A. determine to expand or to institute any service they will get all the money they need to do it and they will get any subsidy they need to do it. The minister said, talking about this very business last year, that if a service were necessary he would be in favour of giving it a subsidy. So that to come along, after blowing up the route in this house, after saying that one of these companies would be chosen for this route, after letting them incorporate, letting them make all their arrangements, encouraging them to come forward, and then bring in this new and this bad policy, is particularly hard on the companies concerned and very hard on air transport generally in Canada.

I do not intend to go into the details of this particular operation because, while my remarks are, of course, directed to this case, they will be equally applicable to every other company which is interested in developing private routes. There is great need for a clear indication by the minister of the scope that will be given private schedule services in this country. We had this matter up last session, and all hon. members will recall the long debate on bush and feeder lines and the evasive answers—I use that word advisedly—of the minister with respect to what he would permit. There is need for definition of the airmail subsidies policy. There is need for the institution of a policy at a more or less higher rate at the inception of an air line and then a scaled-down rate as it gets going. That is the practice followed in the past in all modes of transportation and the practice followed in Canada in particular by this government in relation to the development of air lines. There is great need for the drawing of a line between T.C.A. and other companies, because the minister can hardly expect many people in the country not to believe that, if the kind of thing that I have raised here goes on, there is a desire on the part of the government to keep competition with T.C.A. off these intermediate lines and to reserve them for eventual development by T.C.A., thus in effect holding from the people who require it a necessary service until T.C.A. comes along to do the work.

There is another and perhaps the most important definition of policy which the minister must give, and that is whether the transport board is to decide these questions on their merits or on instructions from the government. Here we have a perfectly clear case where the air transport board turns down an application on five technical grounds related to the safety and the possibilities of development of the route, none of which holds water in the minds of the people interested. Then we find that behind that decision of the board was the real reason, that the government was not going to provide airmail subsidies which these people had every right to expect when they started on their venture. It seems to me to be more than clear that this decision of the air transport board has been dictated by the minister and the board has had to produce reasons to get round the difficulty. The same thing, many hon. members believe, is going on in connection with radio, and no doubt other examples can be given.

The last thing I want to say about this case is that one can see in it the heavy hand of regulation by the government. These counsels of perfection which the government seems to require should be applied only to a reasonable extent necessary for safety of life. A little initiative should be left to the discretion of those who are to put their money into the project. We would then have a very much faster development of air transport in the country, to the great good of all those who wish to travel and also to the great good of those people who are keen to get into this game and to make use of the skill they have acquired in recent years.

I urge the minister to reconsider the question of airmail subsidies and to recognize that they are subsidies for development, and have always been such, and to give private companies that wish to fly such services the same opportunity as he will undoubtedly give T.C.A.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend has made some serious charges. He suggested that I personnally intervened to direct the air transport board to refuse a licence. Why would he make that charge? These men associated with Capilano Airways are my personal friends.

Mr. MERRITT: If I might interrupt—

Mr. HOWE: Sit down and let me reply to your speech.

Mr. MERRITT: I did not make a personal charge.

Mr. HOWE: You did indeed.

Mr. MERRITT: I said that the government must have directed the board.

Mr. HOWE: That means that the minister directed the board. Let me explore that a little. You made the charge. Let it stand on the record and you can hear the answer and the country can read it. The men behind this application happened to be a group of personal friends of mine. One of them is one of the closest friends I have in the dominion. Why should I intervene to wreck them? Can my hon. friend tell me that? As a matter of fact, I was not aware that the application had been turned down until I received a letter from Mr. Leigh Stevenson, who is president of Capilano Airways Limited, and I immediately wrote advising him that if he cared to appeal I would be glad to review the situation, as is my duty and right, on appeal.

My hon. friend is quite right that the real reason the application was refused is that the company stated it could not operate the line without a subsidy. My hon. friend is quite wrong when he says that mail subsidies are given. The post office does not subsidize air lines. It pays for the service and pays a rate which it believes the service is worth to the post office. I hear another voice over there. Would the hon. gentleman mind withholding his remarks until I get through? They are not very important, I know, and they can wait.

Mr. JACKMAN: If the minister wishes to take that attitude, since he has directed that statement at me, I may say that the hon. gentleman used the word "subsidy" as referring, to my mind at any rate, to the contract with the Post Office Department. It is not granted in the form of a subsidy, but the contract is arranged, I believe, so that the new service may get on its feet.

The CHAIRMAN: May I ask all hon. gentlemen when they are speaking to address the Chair.

Mr. HOWE: Have I the floor, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN: The minister has the floor.

Mr. HOWE: Thank you. The route was advertised by the air transport board. It believed it to be a good route and it received three applications. The board would have been glad to grant a licence to any one of the three had it been able to assure the board that it could operate the route on the traffic in view and the rates offered. The three applicants filed their rates for various services, with which there was no quarrel. Passenger rates were higher than charged by Trans-Canada Air Lines, but no exception was taken to that. It was believed that the rates were in line with the requirements of the traffic. The difficulty was that, when all other means of revenue were added up, a certain amount was required for carriage of mail to make the operation balance out and show a profit. I have nothing to do with the arrangements with the post office. The responsible officers went to the Post Office Deparment and applied for a certain rate. The Post Office Department replied that all it could grant was the Trans-Canada rate, which is a pound rate for the carriage of mail. I think the rate is 1·5 mills per pound per mile. That rate was offered to the applicants. The air transport board conducted a survey of the probable mail on the route, and that figure was given to the airways company. It was found that the revenue from mail was not nearly sufficient, and on a renewed application I think the Post Office Department guaranteed a minimum rate of—I am not sure what the minimum rate is, I would say 150 pounds.

Mr. STIRLING: It is 100 pounds.

Mr. HOWE: One hundred pounds, which is unusual; at least there is no guarantee to any other air line that I know of; each air line simply depends on the actual mail that it obtains, but this other company got a guarantee. I personally intervened to the extent of writing my colleague to say that I hoped the Post Office Department could take another view and perhaps increase the guarantee. After a survey of its position, the Post Office Department believed that it was not justified in doing so. If Capilano Airways Limited had said that, knowing all the facts, it wished to operate the line, without subsidy, a licence would have been granted, and will be granted to-day if it cares to appeal the ruling of the board. There is no question about that. Licences are granted freely in all parts of Canada to those who can make a living out of the business there is in sight; but it is questionable policy that the provision of the Aeronautics Act concerning the subsidization of new air lines should be used for subsidizing a line which, in view of the air transport board, is not likely to be self-supporting for a considerable time.

It is all very well to subsidize the necessary services into undeveloped country if the service cannot be provided in any other way. This is being done in one instance for a service which was formerly a profitable one. On account of the closing of mining operations, it was having a difficult time, but for the services to be discontinued would have left a number of settlers without any communication whatever.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The M. and C. Aviation Company.

Mr. HOWE: Yes, that is the only service in the country that is being subsidized at the moment. We have a case in Nova Scotia which is at a critical stage. The Maritime Central Airways applied for a route from Saint John to Yarmouth to Halifax. It simply applied for the route. The application was granted because the indications were that the Maritime Central Airways believed that it could carry on the operation without a subsidy. No subsidy was asked for. It is found that it cannot carry on without a subsidy. It finds that it is losing money and it wants to discontinue the route. There was a hearing before the air transport board. It is asking for permission to discontinue its scheduled services. The government can hardly be expected to be in the position that anyone who wishes to start a route will automatically get a subsidy if the route does not show a profit.

The route proposed is over a territory which I should like to see developed. The board advertised for applications for the route, and three were submitted. Every effort has been made to explore the situation and to assist the air lines to determine whether it will be a profitable operation. I think the board is performing a service for applicants and for all concerned in seeing that the facts are fully developed. Personally I am sorry that my colleague, the Postmaster General, is not more optimistic about the mail prospects there; but he has made his investigation and has formed his opinion of the airmail potentialities. There remain the express and freight but that, of course, is a matter for development by the air line. That is a matter, I presume, on which the Capilano Airways have made their own estimate and have decided the possible revenue which can be obtained from that source.

Reference was made to the report of the air transport board. I can hardly believe that it reads, as my hon. friend says, that the DC-3 aeroplane is obsolescent; but there is a characteristic of the DC-3 aeroplane which the board believed makes it unsuitable for operation over high mountains, namely, that it has not a good single-engine performance at high altitude. Trans-Canada Air Lines has some twenty-five DC-3's and operates them everywhere in Canada except across the Rockies, for Trans-Canada Air Lines does not believe it is safe to operate them over mountainous country at altitudes above 11,000 feet. That is a technical opinion, and for that reason Trans-Canada Air Lines uses Lockheeds, which have a satisfactory single-engine performance at high altitude. I suppose the board gave its opinion as information for potential operators of the route. I just put in that word of explanation to show why that plane is not considered satisfactory.

Mr. MERRITT: I wish to say to the minister that I have no personal charge to maintain at all.

Mr. HOWE: Why would the hon. member say that the minister dictated?

Mr. MERRITT: I am going to explain that. When I see five reasons given by the board for turning down an application and that none of these reasons apparently would hold water if the question of the mail payments is overcome, it is hard for anyone not to believe that there must have been some knowledge on the part of the air transport board that airmail payments would not be increased, and therefore that the application would not be granted. Had the board turned it down on the ground that, since no airmail contract of the amount required could be obtained, they would not have approved it on the financial ground, then I would not have said what I said. But when they bring in technical grounds to support a position from which they would withdraw if the financial reasons were removed, I think my comment, and certainly my request that the minister say whether it is an independent board, are quite justified.

The other thing I wish to say is that in using the word "subsidies" with respect to the airmail contract I was using a word which has been in common use for a long time with regard to steamships, for instance. One often hears of airmail subsidies. Let us call them airmail contracts. I wish to point out to the committee that the amount asked by this particular airline for its airmail contract was fifty cents per mile, whereas the Trans-Canada Air Lines received at the beginning sixty cents, and forty-two cents for most of its life until now, and has only recently been dropped to fifteen cents. If that contract was good for the Trans-Canada Air Lines, why is it not good for a private company pioneering a new route?

Mr. HOWE: I should like to explain the airmail rates. The basis of the Trans-Canada Air Lines contract was first a rate per mile, sixty cents per mile. By a profit-sharing arrangement set out in the act that rate was reduced to forty-one cents per mile. Then the contract was changed to another basis which the Post Office Department thought was fairer, and which the Trans-Canada Air Lines was willing to accept. At present, when T.C.A. carries a pound of mail a mile it gets paid 1·5 mills for the service. T.C.A. is not subsidized; the mail it carries returns payment to it at that rate. The present rate is not a drop from forty-two cents a mile; as a matter of fact it is about the same thing. The earnings from mail this year under that contract are about the same as they were under the rate of forty-two cents a mile. The difficulty in the Okanagan is that the potential volume of mail is not heavy enough to promise a satisfactory return.

Mr. MERRITT: Can the minister say how the 1·5 mill rate compares with the rate of forty-two cents a mile, or sixty cents a mile, the old method of computation?

Mr. HOWE: The earnings of T.C.A. from mail under the 1·5 mill rate are about the same as under the 42-cent rate which obtained last year.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not going to add very much to what has already been said by the other members from British Columbia; but, as it appears to me, the situation is this. We already have air service by T.C.A. between Vancouver and Lethbridge, but we have no air service into the interior of British Columbia, to such important towns as Penticton, Trail and Kimberley. These days everyone seems to want fast service. I do not know why we want to travel so fast, but the people feel that when the Joneses do it they have to keep up with the Joneses. These interior towns of British Columbia are entitled to some consideration in the matter of air service. If T.C.A. cannot give that service at this time—and it could not do so without going to some expense—perhaps something could be done so that a private company could provide the service. I have read the brief of Capilano Airways, which I imagine was sent to other hon. members; I have read the decision of the transport board turning down that application for a licence on this route, but I think the board should give the matter further consideration. Railway service on the Kettle Valley line is not very good. I imagine it is the slowest service in Canada, because of the nature of the country through which the railway runs. I have here the rail time in hours from Vancouver to Penticton, from Vancouver to Trail and from Vancouver to Kimberley. By rail from Vancouver to Penticton it is eleven hours; the air time is one hour and fifteen minutes. The rail time from Vancouver to Trail is twenty-five hours; the air time is two hours. From Vancouver to Kimberley by train takes thirty hours; the air time is two hours and forty-five minutes. As I said, the people of the country are air-minded and want to travel fast, so that I think the interior towns of British Columbia are entitled to some consideration in this matter and I would urge that the board reconsider this application.

Mr. STIRLING: I am also most interested in the turning down of the three applications by the air transport board, because those whom I represent are potential passengers and certainly potential letter writers for this route. I would draw the attention of the committee to the reasonableness of the resentment which these people feel. We remember the various statements made in the past with regard to the starting of air routes which should be feeders for T.C.A. I could quote the remarks of the Prime Minister and the remarks of the minister himself with regard to the desirability of affording openings for our returning airmen. I would also remind hon. members that when I raised this matter in the house last year the Minister of Reconstruction expressed the opinion that this was an excellent potential route. He agreed that the train service available was indifferent. He agreed that, on occasions, weather conditions made the highways unusable. He agreed that this area was studded with emergency airfields, and for all these reasons the hopes of those supporting these applications were certainly raised.

Then we move on to what actually happened at the hearing by the air transport board. Two officials of the Capilano company were asked to come to Ottawa, and when they got here they were asked if they were ready to accept the rate offered by the Post Office Department for the carriage of mail. It was most unfortunate that this occurred just at the time the Post Office Department was declining to continue to pay the T.C.A. the old rate for mail. When T.C.A. put on other planes, multiplying the service by three, it was found that sixty cents a mile resulted in an amount much larger than the poundage of mail warranted, so that the Post Office Department came to a new arrangement with T.C.A., which has been described and into which I need not go. But that change took place, unfortunately, just at the time this application was being considered. Obviously the figures used by the applicants in making up their estimates were based on what they know T.C.A. had been receiving.

Of course the minister is perfectly right in saying he is not concerned with the rate paid by the Post Office Department. When I took up this matter with the Post Office Department I ascertained that they had gone as far as they considered they could go in meeting the applicants. They did raise the minimum poundage on which they would pay the rate; they did raise the mill rate, but they did not raise it high enough to enable an agreement to be reached with the applicants.

There was no doubt in the minds of those who knew what was going on that the real sticker in the case was the amount that would be received for air mail. So that the resentment of the people concerned was heightened when the air transport board came out with these five stupid reasons for turning down the application. One reason given is that the existing rail and bus services now serving these areas are adequate. The minister himself agreed that they were utterly inadequate, and everyone who lives in the south country knows that to be the case. As to another reason, in regard to the population to be served, I do not know where the air transport people got their figures, but certainly they were not those of December, 1945; in fact they were about one-third those figures. They made slight reference to the volume of business in the territory concerned, but they surely passed over the considerable industrial development consequent upon the Consolidated at Trail, and they seem to have forgotten altogether that there is big business in fruit and vegetables in the Okanagan and subsidiary valleys. There is a tremendous traffic potentiality there, both in passengers and mail.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard pointed out, there have been many instances in the past, particularly with regard to T.C.A. itself, where assistance has been given for a certain time by way of airmail payments. The minister may quite well reply to me that this has nothing to do with him because the decision turned on the mail, but I suggest to him that, as the minister responsible for the development of civil aviation and since he has expressed a desire to find openings for our returned men, he should take this matter up with the Postmaster General to see whether the matter cannot be reopened and the rate increased somewhat by the Post Office Department.

Mr. HOWE: I would remind my hon. friend that when he was discussing the Air Transport Act he was one of the most insistent that the board should not be dominated by the minister. He does not like this report by the air transport board and he thinks I should take the responsibility of overriding it.

Mr. STIRLING: The minister has tremendous power.

Mr. HOWE: There is an appeal to the minister.

Mr. STIRLING: I warmly support the minister's suggestion, and I hope that when the appeal is made he will give it his good graces.

Mr. HOWE: This route was advertised and it was stated that applications would be received. I think my hon. friend is giving me too much credit if he thinks I have influence over the Postmaster General. I live in an area where there are about 100,000 people, and we have no airmail service at all because I have been unable to persuade the Postmaster General to give that region a mail rate higher than he was offering in the Okanagan. The result is that no one will take the route. I think that, once the post office takes a stand, there is no power outside the post office that can make it change its opinion as to what should be paid for the carriage of mail. However, if Capilano Airways Limited will indicate that it believes it can operate this route with the revenues there are in sight, and if it cares to appeal the decision of the board, I can assure my hon. friend its application will be granted.

Mr. HERRIDGE: I should like to support what the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard has said, and also what has been said by the hon. member for Yale. The hon. member for Yale has taken a great interest in this matter. The people in my constituency were very much disappointed when they heard that this application had been turned down, and I was glad to hear the minister say that there is a possibility of its being considered on appeal.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Carried.

Mr. HERRIDGE: Regardless of the wishes of the hon. member for Vancouver East, I should like to deal with two or three reasons which have been given by the board and which I think the minister must agree are quite illogical for turning down this application. If the airmail contract were satisfactory these reason would not exist in view of his previous statement. I shall deal first with the traffic potentialities. The board considered only those places at which planes would land, and they estimated the population of the district to be served as being only 107,000. The latest figures show that there are over 167,000 people in that area who would be served.

The next reason given was that the rail and bus services were quite adequate. If that reason were applied generally there would be no scheduled air routes in operation to-day. The third ground was as to irregularity of service. I think for three months of the year possibly that would apply, but I understand that the reports of the meteorological branch of the Department of Transport indicate that service could be provided with between seventy-five and ninety-five per cent regularity. Then there is the question of willingness to operate without profit, and in this connection the minister has explained something which I did not understand before when he referred to the operation of DC-3 aircraft over high mountains.

Again I want to express to the minister the feeling of the people in my constituency. They were extremely disappointed when this application was turned down and they are looking forward to something being done in order that this service may be established in the near future. There are plenty of overseas men who have flown and there are plenty of ground crew who are willing and anxious to fly and service these planes.

Mr. KNOWLES: I should like to discuss briefly with the minister a matter pertaining to civil aviation policy in connection with which he and I do not see eye to eye. However, before doing this I should like to offer a word of well-deserved congratulation to the government, and more particularly to the minister, for his administration in this field. We know how proud the minister is of Trans-Canada Air Lines, and he has every reason to be proud of the efficiency and safety with which that line operates. He has also reason to be proud of the speed with which it has been extending its services, not only in Canada but to other countries and across the seas to other parts of the world.

I have a certain amount of sympathy with the general attitude of the government toward civil aviation, in that they seem to realize that this is a service to be developed. The government has seemed anxious to avoid some of the mistakes of the past, particularly in the early days of the railroads, and to provide service without the disadvantages of cut-throat competition. The minister knows that we in this group welcomed and gave strong support to the general statement of policy which he made on March 17, 1944, and to certain other statements which he made and measures which he has brought down from time to time. However, in his statement of March 17, 1944, the minister made one pronouncement which does not seem to have been carried out. He said, as recorded in Hansard:

> Accordingly, after full consideration, the government has decided that the railways shall not exercise any monopoly of air services. Steps will be taken to require our railways to divest themselves of ownership of air lines, to the end that, within a period of one year from the ending of the European war, transport by air will be entirely separate from surface transportation.

The minister indicated that he was not altogether happy about having to make a break between the Canadian National and Trans-Canada Air Lines; but because of the way in which Canadian Pacific Air Lines had —and I am using his own words—"lost no time in challenging the non-competitive position of Trans-Canada Air Lines", it was necessary to put forward this new policy. In leading up to that, he made a statement which is part of my reason for having offered a few complimentary remarks, and I quote again:

> Service to the public must be the paramount consideration, and it seemed obvious that the cost of a non-competitive, non-profit service was the lowest that could be offered the public.

There are many other quotations which I could make from that excellent speech of the minister, but I shall not take the time to do so. I only wish he had lived up to it in full. Later on in that session, there was further discussion of this proposal to compel the railways to divest themselves of ownership of air lines. I felt at the time that the minister had retreated from the forceful and aggressive position which he had taken on March 17. When I suggested to him on April 21, 1944, that he had made such a retreat he did not altogether like it. I quote his words:

> I said we had better wait until we had seen the bill.

That was his reply to my charge that the minister had retreated.

So far as the complete implementing of the policy is concerned, we are still waiting, and this is now August, 1946, more than two years later. In the meantime a bill was introduced and passed, an act to amend the Aeronautics Act, Bill No. 133, of the session of 1944, which contained clauses designed to give legislative effect to this policy laid down on March 17, 1944. Section 14 of that act reads in part—I will give just the significant clause:

> . . . but every such licence, if not cancelled or suspended by the board under section thirteen of this act, shall cease to be valid one year after the termination, as fixed by order in council, of the war in Europe which commenced on the tenth day of September, one thousand nine hundred and thirty-nine.

Another section of the same act, section 12, subsection 2, related to this matter, and reads as follows:

> No such licence shall be issued in respect of a commercial air service, owned, leased, controlled or operated by any person who is engaged in the transport of goods or passengers for hire or reward by means other than aircraft unless the governor in council is of opinion that it is in the public interest that such licence be issued.

That bill was passed in the session of 1944. So far as I can learn, the many subsidiary companies which were bought up by the Canadian Pacific are still being operated by that company. This raises, of course, the whole question, the merits of which some might want to debate, but I remember very well that when the former member for York-Sunbury, Mr. Hanson, charged that the government's policy amounted to confiscation the minister's reply, which I heartily endorsed, was that these smaller companies which had been pioneered in the earlier days by independent operators had in effect been confiscated by the Canadian Pacific, "which entered the field of transportation by air and bought the stock of all the independent operators, thus obtaining by the end of 1941 a monopoly in the field of transport by air except for trans-continental air lines". I have been paraphrasing, except at the end when I was quoting the minister.

My concern about all this is that it seems to me that we are laying the basis of another huge monopoly in the northern part of this country. The thing I am most concerned about is the monopoly of transportation in the northland which the Canadian Pacific has and of the way in which that transportation monopoly can tie in with a monopoly in mineral production in northern Canada. My whole point is that I welcomed, as all of us did in this group, the statement of policy made by the minister. We welcomed the extent to which that statement was given legislative effect in the bill from which I have just quoted. But I should now like to hear from the minister when it is to be carried out.

I suppose there may be some argument as to when the war in Europe ended, but I think it ended in May, 1945, and more than a year has since elapsed. When we were discussing that particular section, section 14, on July 17, 1944, the minister said, and I quote his words, "My hon. friend will see that section 14 is mandatory." That is the section which calls upon the board to cancel licences previously in effect which, as I say, made it possible to give effect to this general policy.

There are other things with regard to civil aviation about which I should like to speak if it were not for taking up the time of the committee at this stage. But I should like to hear from the minister with respect to this whole question of policy relating to the ownership of air lines by railway companies, with particular reference to Canadian Pacific Air Lines.

Mr. HOWE: My hon. friend has given a correct statement of the policy announced by the government in 1944. At the time I made the announcement I was very sure I was right. A good section of the house was very sure I was wrong, but that gave me no pause whatsoever. At that time the public was not getting the service to which I believed it was entitled, and I think the public in that area believed it too. Certainly the relations between the government and Canadian Pacific Air Lines were far from satisfactory, and there was no doubt at the time that the non-competitive position of Trans-Canada Air Lines was being challenged. Legislation was passed, and the present technical position is that the mandatory date, which would be May, 1946, has been advanced one year under the Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. KNOWLES: Does the minister mean it has been advanced solely for the purpose of this legislation?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. HOWE: Yes. The effective date of this legislation has been advanced by order in council passed under the Emergency Powers Act.

Mr. KNOWLES: I suppose that order in council was tabled.

Mr. HOWE: Yes; all orders in council passed under the Emergency Powers Act are tabled.

Mr. KNOWLES: I never heard of that one.

Mr. HOWE: You were engaged in higher statesmanship for a considerable period.

Mr. KNOWLES: I was flying in your planes.

Mr. HOWE: The position is that we explored the possibilities of carrying out announced government policy. It seemed easy when it was announced. We thought it would be easy to divide up the system and return it to small operations, but when we undertook to do so we were faced with a great expansion of air activity in the north which required additional services. Obviously Canadian Pacific Air Lines was not in a position to buy extra equipment until it had some security of service. We then explored as to how we could break the system down into individual routes, each serving a particular territory, as was proposed at the time the discussion took place. But we could find no group strong enough to take over any of these services. The value of the equipment owned by Canadian Pacific Air Lines was in the vicinity of seven or eight million dollars. The additional equipment required ran into several more millions. I might remind my hon. friend that to-day an ordinary 20-passenger plane costs some $200,000, and there are planes flying to-day, a good many of them, that cost $1,000,000. It is not a business which can be entered without substantial capital.

The air transport board was established when that policy was announced and the board started a study of the northern situation. There was also a change of management in Canadian Pacific Air Lines and a change in the directorate, from the president down. The closest cooperation was obtained between management and the air transport board in working out policy matters. Those hon. members who are familiar with the territory served by Canadian Pacific Air Lines will agree that the service has improved tremendously. Services which were inadequate at the time that that discussion took place have been made adequate. All sources of friction have been removed as between the government authority and Canadian Pacific Air Lines and between Canadian Pacific Air Lines and Trans-Canada Air Lines. To-day the two operations are working as an integrated system. At the time, Canadian Pacific Air Lines was ambitious to extend its territory into other parts of Canada. To-day it finds it has a sufficient task to develop the parts of Canada for which it was then and is now responsible for giving service, with the result that any new air lines that care to enter the business and are able to finance their operation can find a scope for their activities in parts of Canada not at present served. To-day I have come to the conclusion that, while the policy when it was announced may then have been the correct policy, the public interest, which I say again must be the paramount consideration of all air line activities, is better served by the present combination of services than it could be served by any plan which can now be devised as an alternative to the present arrangement.

No man likes to change his mind; nevertheless I have always believed that it is better to change my mind than to continue on a wrong course I think in the light of the evolution which has occurred since I made the statement I can say that the system which is operating to-day is the one best suited for giving service to the public in the territory in question.

Mr. MacNICOL: I know I am right now.

Mr. KNOWLES: One thing which one must admire is the minister's frankness, even when one does not agree with him.

Mr. MacNICOL: He is right, now.

Mr. KNOWLES: He has now stated that the policy announced on the 17th of March, 1944, with respect to the government owning these air lines has been abrogated by the government.

Mr. HOWE: No. I should like to correct that impression.

Mr. KNOWLES: All right; I want to get it clear.

Mr. HOWE: I said that the date of applying the policy had been advanced one year by the government; and I was giving my own opinions, as minister responsible for the services, that the policy announced on that date was not the policy which would give best service to the public in the area. That is my own opinion. The government policy has not been changed, and will not be changed, naturally, until the act is changed. The House of Commons must approve any change of policy, because this house passed the act which established the earlier government policy.

Mr. MacNICOL: We shall be glad to change it.

Mr. KNOWLES: There can be no doubt that the personal view of the minister with respect to these matters will carry a great deal of weight when it comes to formulating government policy; and I say again that the minister himself has stated clearly that his view is quite different from that which he expressed on March 17, 1944. It is quite interesting to notice from what sections of the house the minister has been getting his applause to-day.

An hon. MEMBER: All.

Mr. KNOWLES: No; mainly from the Tories. Apparently he found it embarrassing that we were in such strong agreement with with him when this policy was first laid down. I want to say this to my now Tory friend, the Minister of Reconstruction and Supply. One does not often make predictions, because these things go on the record and they can be thrown back at you, as I have been throwing back the minister's statements to him to-day. But I declare that the day will come when we shall have to undo the harm done to the Canadian economy by the monopoly which we are building up in transportation and mineral production in Canada's northland, which surely belongs to the people of the country as a whole.

Canadian Pacific Air Lines insists—and one has no reason to doubt their figures—that it is losing money on its air line operations, particularly those in the north. Well, I am not one who imagines that a company of that size is losing money unless it feels that there is an advantage somewhere else, or an advantage in the future which makes that loss worth while; and I am very sorry to hear that the minister has changed his mind. My hon. friends to the right put a good deal of pressure on him for about two years with respect to this point. Whether it was that pressure, or whatever it was, which caused him to change his mind I do not know. But they will be jointly responsible for the monopoly which is being built up as a result of this, and for this further exploitation of the natural resources that belong to the Canadian people, and for the harm which will yet have to be undone.

Mr. ADAMSON: If I had been a Latin scholar, no doubt I would quote some apt phrase to submit to the minister on his change of policy.

Mr. HOWE: I change whenever I find myself in error.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Tempora mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis.

Mr. KNOWLES: Mene, mene, tekel, Upharsin.

Mr. ADAMSON: I was going to say, mens sana in corpore sano. However, I am pleased that the minister has, shall we say for the first time, seen the light. I want to make just one reply to our socialist friends with regard to serving the public. I have in mind one mining camp which is to-day and has been served entirely by air. I speak of the Red Lake mining camp, with a population of between four and five thousand people. To put that camp in the hands of a small operator would be nothing short of criminal. At times when you have bad weather you may have as many as fifteen or twenty aircraft a day flying into that camp with vital supplies; and you must have, for camps of this kind, a thoroughly reliable, large and perfectly competent organization to do the job. Unless you are dealing with an organization that has, first of all, the know-how, and second, the capital and resources to do the job, you are jeopardizing the very people whom the C.C.F. party are so anxious to look after; that is, the residents of these remote areas who are building up the country. I want to say that I am pleased with the change in the policy of the government.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): I do not suppose that I shall often be in the position of asking the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to make an extra speech, although I am always interested in what he says; but I want to ask him a pointed question. If I remember aright, he said that he had seen a statement on Canadian Pacific Air Lines, which he took at its face value, that it had lost money in its operations in the north. Then he went on, and I could not understand him at all, because he seemed to suggest, if I understood him aright, that that could not be the whole story, that there must be something sinister, something else, that it could not be possible that the Canadian Pacific was taking a broad view and was prepared to take a loss to-day because of the hope that it would build up a situation which it could hope would profit it to-morrow. If I got the hon. member's point correctly, I wish he would explain that, because to me it goes very deep. It is most unfortunate if in our relations with each other we have to assume that there is always something sinister. Personally I believe that the Canadian Pacific has been a broad-gauge organization. It has committed faults, it is true, but I believe it is prepared to take broad and long-range views, and the whole country is evidence of that. I should like to know what the hon. member meant by that.

[Mr. Mackenzie.]

Mr. KNOWLES: If I remember correctly what I said—and I think I do—I suggested that I could not imagine that the Canadian Pacific was losing money on the operation unless one or other of two things was the case. The first alternative I suggested was that there might be some other immediate advantage; the second alternative was one to which my hon. friend the member for Muskoka-Ontario just referred, namely, that there would be an advantage in the future.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Muskoka-Ontario): Then I take it back; I am sorry.
