What really matters to us, Mr. Speaker, is that the bill concerning family allowances, although imperfect, be passed as soon as possible and without debate. It would still be an improvement over the present situation.

Now that I have risen, Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify a point: yesterday, the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) and Progressive Conservative House leader stated, as reported in Hansard on page 8441, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I am sure I speak for all members of my party when I say that we will give our sincere and utmost co-operation to this worth-while Christmas-like suggestion, without debate.

Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to see that after one day the Progressive Conservatives have started to disagree again. They are going to filibuster so as to prevent the passing of this legislation. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that the Conservatives get together for ten minutes so as to reach an agreement, come back to us afterwards and really work.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, of course the answer to the last statement is that we stand by our word but the ground rules have been changed again.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: We will agree to a House leaders' meeting this afternoon, and when we see the proposition in writing we will try to make progress later today on what the government House leader puts forward.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think that some measure of agreement has been reached at this point. At least hon. members have agreed to try to agree.

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF CERTAIN MOTIONS TO ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, following what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said at the beginning of today's session, and as a result of the legal roadblock which Your Honour, I am sure, reluctantly threw up with regard to what was proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), behind which the government has crept for shelter, I would ask leave under Standing Order 43 to move as follows:

> That this House order that the Notices of Motions appearing in the names of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and the hon. member for Calgary North under notices pursuant to Standing Order 58 be transferred to the item "Daily Routine of Business—Motions."

Mr. Speaker: Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO CONSTITUENCIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent of the House to move a motion—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cossitt: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not think they are mind readers on the other side of the House—perhaps mindless rather than mind readers. I ask unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under Standing Order 43 pertaining to the manner in which funds under the Local Initiatives Program have been awarded to the various electoral districts this year. I ask permission to move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That before this year's Local Initiatives Program is proceeded with any further, this House instructs the government to conduct an immediate and speedy revision of the amounts of funds allocated to individual constituencies with regard only to such things as area need—

An hon. Member: Did you get too much?

Mr. Cossitt: The Liberals got it all.

—unemployment and project worthiness rather than advice from its political advisers on Liberal party patronage.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Leeds, as I have suggested to him previously from time to time, that a motion proposed to the House in those terms should not be put. I think it unfair for the hon. member to ask the Chair to put a motion such as this to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I will inquire whether there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege, with all due respect, Sir, I bow to your ruling, but I feel it is the privilege of any member of the House when he notices, as we all have, that the government has divided these moneys on the basis of ministers' ridings and other Liberal members' ridings, to protest. I repeat that we have the right to object when LIP grants are awarded on the basis of cabinet ministers' ridings and other Liberal members' ridings getting more than others.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SUGGESTED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DEVELOPMENT OF OIL SANDS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the urgency of the need to develop the Athabaska oil sands since conventional crude oil supplies in Canada will be exhausted within ten years, and in view of the most recent statement by the Premier of Alberta that he would like to see greater public ownership of production facilities and would welcome applications from all sources, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman):

That this House instruct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to submit to the government of Alberta proposals for joint federal-provincial development of the oil sands.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

EMERGENCY MEASURES ORGANIZATION

CUTTING OF BUDGET—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the defence department's decision to cut the budget of the Emergency Measures Organization by 50 per cent, in view of the fact that such a budget cut will grievously affect the operation of many local Emergency Measures Organization groups, resulting in the loss of approximately 1,000 jobs across Canada, and in view of the fact that this cut was decided upon without consultation with provincial governments, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House recommends to the Minister of Defence that he reconsider the proposed cut, with a view to reinstating the original budget.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

SHORTAGE OF EDIBLE OILS FOR PREPARED FOOD PRODUCTS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the Canadian food industry has reported a serious shortage of edible oils required in the normal conduct of its business, and since the recent major price increases in vegetable oils are already affecting prepared food costs, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce immediately ban all exports of vegetable oils until such time as he can assure this House that domestic requirements of the Canadian food processing industry can and will be fulfilled.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the motion proposed by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity. The motion cannot be put.

SEEKING OF AGREEMENT WITH ALBERTA ON MECHANISM FOR STAGED PRICE INCREASES IN PETROLEUM PRODUCTS IF FREEZE LIFTED

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We want Horner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, with my voice as it is today I certainly will not try to outshout the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay). I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, in view of the replies he gave earlier in the week that discussions were going on with the government of Alberta about the pricing of oil following the freeze, whether he has been pursuing and seeking an agreement on a mechanism for staged price increases in regard to petroleum products following the end of the freeze, whenever that may be?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, because of my involvement in the House yesterday I was not able to meet with the Alberta officials, but my deputy minister did have occasion to continue the discussion which has been going on for the last two weeks or so with regard, among other things, to the appropriate pricing mechanism for Canadian oil and also the impact of the legislative changes the Alberta government has proposed with regard to oil royalties. I would have to say that to the moment there has been no conclusion to these discussions, or no agreement concluded. I anticipate that there may be a basis for further discussions in the coming week.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister tell the House whether he, the department or the government, have taken any initiative in this matter and whether the government is presenting any specific proposal with regard to price increases after January 31, staged or otherwise? If so, what is the proposal that the government of Canada has put forward?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have put forward a number of proposals. Since this is still a matter of discussion, and as the proposals were really put forward ad referendum for the cabinets of both sides, that at the moment I am afraid I cannot say what they are.

INCREASE IN OIL EXPORT TAX TO $2.20 FOR JANUARY—INTENTION RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF WAYS AND MEANS MOTION—DISPOSITION OF INCREASE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the fact that last Friday the National Energy Board informed the oil companies that the export tax for the month of January would be $2.20, raised from the $1.90 figure for December. I assume this is the differential that the National Energy Board anticipates there will be between the Canadian and Chicago prices. Does the minister intend to bring in a ways and means motion to implement that tax, and will that tax be levied on exported Canadian crude oil for the month of January?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I may correct the hon. gentleman, the National Energy Board advised the industry that the differential between the Canadian price and the export price would be increased by a further 30 cents, to $2.20. There has been no decision yet as to the appropriate treatment of the additional 30 cents from the taxation point of view, or how that is to be dealt with. I might say that this matter comes under the discussions we are having with Alberta concerning the export tax and also the price.

Mr. Douglas: In view of press reports that the minister outside the House said that the government may let this 30 cents a barrel flow through to the exporting oil companies, is that the government's intention, and why does the government find it necessary to give a windfall of something over $300,000 per day or $120 million per year to the oil industry at this time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it was in response to a question as to the possible ways in which the additional 30 cents would be dealt with that I mentioned three possibilities: an increase in tax by that amount, an increase in the domestic price by that amount, or neither an increase in the tax nor in the domestic price, which would result in the amount flowing through. At the moment there has been no decision on which of the three will be implemented.

Mr. Douglas: In order that this matter may be put in some legal framework so that we do not have constant decisions and changes of decision by the government as to where this money is to go, how soon does the government intend to bring in a bill to establish clearly the fact that the differential between the Canadian frozen price and the Chicago price will constitute the export tax as an ongoing process?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there has been a ways and means motion for the month of December and we would anticipate bringing forward one for January as well, I hope at an early date. If I might ask the hon. member to wait with regard to the taxation treatment of this $2.20 until later this day, he would have a fuller answer to his question.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS—POSSIBILITY OF SURRENDER OF POWERS TO QUEBEC—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Does he intend to yield certain powers to Quebec in the matter of telecommunications and what position will the government take before Quebec representations?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we are quite aware of Quebec claims at the present time and we have expressed our intention to discuss any matter whatever which Quebec or any other province would want to discuss, provided Quebec or any other province, in making their claims, also accepts to discuss all its legislation as well as its position up to now.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, would the minister also say what part the provinces are going to play in the field of communications? Will the central government give up part of its jurisdiction to the provinces and will the owners of cable TV firms be submitted to two jurisdictions?

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, when you undertake with the provinces a discussion on the matters that the hon. member is raising, it is most difficult to give the answer before the discussions take place. We wanted to rush things with the provinces. They are trying to stall them. They wanted the next conference to be held in June. We managed to gain three months. But obviously I cannot give the answer before we get to some conclusions since this is a discussion in good faith on our part and also, I hope, on the part of the provinces.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POLICY RESPECTING PORTUGUESE COLONIALISM AND SUPPLYING OF ARMS—POSITION AT FORTHCOMING NATO CONFERENCE

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the fact that, at the United Nations on several occasions since 1962 and recently at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' meeting in Ottawa, the government of Canada has recognized the right of Angolese people to a freely chosen government and in view of the unfair advantage taken of 15 million black people by 700,000 privileged whites, what will be the position of Canada at the next NATO conference concerning the use by Portugal of NATO arms or of NATO member countries against Angola, Mozambique and Guinea Bissau?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the Canadian government toward the colonial policies of Portugal has been stated many times, both in the House and outside, and I have expressed our view personally to the foreign minister of Portugal. We are opposed to Portuguese colonial policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: We do not supply arms to Portugal and I think, if I may suggest this, that it is misleading to talk about NATO arms. There are no such things as NATO arms. There are arms supplied by individual countries which would probably supply them whether they were members of NATO or not.

ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS OF FAMINE IN ETHIOPIA

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In view of the recent CBC revelations concerning the thousands of starving Ethiopian children, can the government tell us what further action it plans to take so that Canada may take part in the relief of these victims whose fate is troubling the conscience of the world?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to refer to a committee, I announced in the miscellaneous estimates committee that Canada had decided to contribute $1.5 million to the relief of suffering in Ethiopia. This is our second contribution. Our first was a nominal amount to the Canadian Red Cross of $50,000.

PORTUGUESE COLONIAL POLICY—REASON FOR CANADIAN ABSTENTION FROM UNITED NATIONS VOTE RESPECTING RECOGNITION OF GUINEA BISSAU

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the first question concerning Portuguese colonial policy and the government's abhorrence of that policy. Can the minister explain Canada's abstention in September with respect to the recognition of Guinea Bissau and, in addition, whether any action will be taken by our government at the NATO conference to determine the legitimacy of the government now commanding the support of more than 90 countries with respect to Guinea Bissau?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we would welcome the independence of all of the Portuguese colonies, including what has now been called Guinea Bissau. As soon as the group that is supporting the independence of Guinea Bissau establishes itself throughout the country as a government that can discharge its international obligations, we will recognize it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs could be a bit clearer. In view of the fact that some 90 countries, I believe, voted at the United Nations in recognition of the government of Guinea Bissau, and as we moved for the recognition of the government of Chile with a good deal less public support than that, may I ask what further evidence it will take for the government of Canada to recognize the legitimacy of this regime?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we recognized the new government of Chile because it was in effective control of the country. Unfortunately the militants, guerillas or whatever you want to call them that are now trying to establish an independent government in Guinea Bissau have not been able to establish themselves in the capital and are not able to be in a position to discharge their international obligations. As soon as they are, we will recognize them.

GUINEA BISSAU—ATTITUDE OF CANADA ON ADMISSION TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs about Guinea Bissau. If the Canadian government is so anxious to be of assistance to independence movements, will the minister tell us what Canada is doing with regard to the initiative of many other nations to bring Guinea Bissau into the United Nations? How have we voted or how do we propose to vote on the admission of Guinea Bissau to the United Nations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the position we have taken on that question has so far been one of abstention. We are not opposed to the entrance of Guinea Bissau as soon as it is established as an independent country with a government that can discharge its international obligations.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS TO REDUCE UNEMPLOYMENT IN EASTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since the unemployment rate is basically unchanged in the Eastern Townships area, could the minister indicate to the House whether he intends to increase the funds allotted to local initiatives projects at least at the same level as last year's?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no decision has yet been taken on that matter.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—POSSIBLE RECONSIDERATION OF BASIS ON WHICH FUNDS ALLOCATED

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Does the minister intend to adjust the allotments already made or any proposed future allotments on a more fair basis with regard to opposition members in the House rather than leaning toward Liberal members and cabinet ministers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the question. The allocation formula was tabled in the House.

NAME OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS REPRESENTATIVE ON TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PETROLEUM SUPPLY AND DEMAND—ALLEGED CONTRADICTORY STATEMENTS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who has referred to his appearance before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Can the minister explain his statement to that committee on December 3 that he was aware of who his departmental representative is on the technical advisory committee on petroleum supply and demand, bearing in mind his statement in the House on December 4 that he did not know who his departmental representative on that committee was and declined to name him?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure whether it is in order to refer to what went on in committee, but perhaps I can answer the question directly. I am aware of the name of the official. He is a very competent one.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: But I suggest it is not appropriate to bring the names of officials who are acting on behalf of ministers into contention in the House of Commons. One ought to address one's questions to ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for York-Simcoe on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Simcoe North.

ATTENDANCE OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS REPRESENTATIVE AT MEETINGS OF TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE OF PETROLEUM SUPPLY AND DEMAND

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Can the minister categorically confirm that Mr. A. E. Ritchie, Under Secretary for the Department of External Affairs, is the departmental representative appointed to the technical advisory committee. If so, can he also confirm to the House how many times the representative has attended the technical advisory committee meetings, and in what form did Mr. Ritchie report to the minister?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I could say this is a question that might be placed on the order paper, but I believe it is desirable to clarify the position. Mr. Ritchie did not attend any of the meetings of that particular committee. He designated an expert on Middle East affairs who went to the committee meetings to advise on the Middle East situation.

Oral Questions

HEALTH

AVAILABILITY OF HYDRAZINE SULPHATE FOR CANCER RESEARCH AND TREATMENT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the early optimistic reports on the treatment of cancer by hydrazine sulphate, which treatment and research is, I believe, being carried out under the direction of Dr. Burke of the National Cancer Institute of the United States, is the drug now available in Canada through the Food and Drug Directorate or otherwise for research and treatment?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of this question and inquire into the possible use of hydrazine sulphate in Canada at the present time. As soon as I have an answer, I will inform the hon. member.

URANIUM—REASON FOR DROP IN PRODUCTION OF ELDORADO MINE

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It deals with a slightly different aspect of the energy situation in Canada. In view of the increasing importance of uranium to Canada and the world, why has the production of uranium ore at Eldorado Nuclear Mine Limited of Uranium City dropped from approximately one and a quarter million pounds to an estimated seven or eight hundred thousand pounds this year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to go into the Eldorado situation at greater length, but perhaps I could not do so effectively in the question period.

OIL EXPORT TAX—DISPOSITION OF ADDITIONAL 30 CENTS FOR JANUARY

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I wonder if I might correct a response I gave to the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands earlier in the question period when I indicated there had not been a position taken with regard to the treatment of the additional 30 cents. There has indeed been a decision made in that regard and, as I indicated, there will be a statement on that later this day.

PETROLEUM—BASIS ON WHICH SHORTFALL PREDICTION MADE BY MINISTER

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister is quoted as saying that if the shortfall predictions are not accurate the oil companies will be largely to blame. On what basis did the minister make this statement, and does it indicate he has no confidence in the predictions provided to him by the government appointed committee on petroleum supply and demand?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what statement the hon. member is referring. I have indicated we have taken the advice of the committee with regard to the possible shortfall this winter. I have no reason to doubt that it is a competent statement on their part. I suggest that the statement the hon. member is referring to may have been taken out of context.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the hon. member for Meadow Lake had a supplementary to his previous question. I apologize to him. I did not see him rise.

URANIUM—SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT CONTROL OF SALES TO ASSURE DOMESTIC SUPPLIES AND FAIR ALLOCATION TO CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Elias Nesdoly (Meadow Lake): In view of the fact that a private corporation appears at this time to be making all the sales of uranium oxide, is the government prepared to assume responsibility for all sales of uranium oxide so that Canada's long-term requirements may be assured and also to assure that a Crown corporation gets its fair share of the sales?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member there is a contradiction in his suggestion that we should make export sales and assure our long-term requirements at the same time. I agree that in general terms Eldorado should be put on a commercial footing, more so than in recent years, and I will be making some submissions to my colleagues in that regard. I think the appropriate point of consideration, and this will be done by the Atomic Energy Control Board, is as to at what level the reserves should be maintained for domestic purposes.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT QUEBEC BENEFICIARIES WILL RECEIVE A MINIMUM OF $20

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the Quebec government intends to establish its own family allowances plan and such allowances being taxable, could the minister tell the House whether he has had any discussions with the Quebec government and whether an agreement has been concluded in order that the minimum allowance of $20 will be paid for each child, as provided in Bill C-211, although this bill has not yet been passed by the House?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there are several confused points in the question and I have already found unfortunately such confusion among a number of citizens.

First of all, the family allowance to be paid by the federal government to Quebec will be taxable under the terms of the federal Income Tax Act. The situation will be the same in Quebec as in the other provinces. Second, the minimum provided by the federal law is $12, or 60 per cent of $20; and third, the allowances payable by Quebec itself to its citizens, out of its own revenue will not be taxed under the provincial income tax act as they will take the place of the exemptions provided for in the federal act.

I therefore take this opportunity to clarify the matter in order to stem rumours that Quebec is being favoured in relation to the other provinces.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish, first of all to thank the minister for his explanation, and then to ask him a supplementary.

I hope Bill C-211 will be passed and come into effect on January 1. May I be allowed to ask the minister whether the bill that was passed during this session increasing family allowances to $12 will be automatically rescinded and replaced by Bill C-211, without taking into account the one we passed and which took effect on October 12?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to confirm that such will be the case if hon. members of the Progressive Conservative Party can get organized and decide to approve the bill that it may be passed as soon as possible.

AIR TRANSPORT

HEAD TAX ON PASSENGERS—SUGGESTED CHANGE FOR PASSENGERS USING FEEDER AIRLINES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since the announced head tax of $2.80 on air passengers means an increase in the Victoria-Vancouver air fare of 21½ per cent and four out of five passengers leaving Victoria are going to Vancouver, is the minister considering any changes designed to make this new tax less discriminatory against people who live on islands or reside in cities and towns on feeder airline routes?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

COMMUNICATIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL—CANADIAN PACIFIC TELECOMMUNICATIONS—APPLICATION FOR INCREASE IN RATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTEST

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. I ask him whether he will make the House aware of the application by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Telecommunications for an increase in rates. Will he let the House know what the nature of the application is?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, when those applications for tariff increases are submitted to the Canadian Transport Commission, I think that they become public documents. If a public document has been filed with the Transport Commission, I will be pleased to send a copy to the right hon. member in both official languages.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is apparent that the minister does not know what is going on, so I will ask him whether or not there is to be an application for a 100 per cent increase in respect of the transmission of news stories, and whether smaller radio stations across the country have already protested that this increase will create a very serious situation for them financially? Furthermore, will the minister arrange for counsel to represent the minister and the government of Canada before the Transport Commission and take the strongest possible exception to such an increase at this time?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): It is also quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that the right hon. member knows very little about the matter. I explained to the House not very long ago—and moreover it seems to me that the right hon. member was there—that the minister, unless there are quite exceptional circumstances, refrains from making representations to the telecommunications committee of the CTC. The reason is that eventually as minister, he can be called, as he was in June last, to recommend to the cabinet that it should amend the CTC decisions. If he complied with the suggestion of the right hon. member, he would therefore find himself in the position of the lawyer and subsequently the judge in the same cause.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The high spirits of hon. gentlemen opposite today indicate that their fear of defeat on Monday has been removed. I ask the minister: does he say there is no example of a government being represented by counsel before the Transport Commission to object to an application for rate increases? Does he say this has never happened?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, under a Progressive Conservative government everything could happen; so this may well have happened too.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a very interesting exchange between the right hon. gentleman and the minister, but I wonder whether we might not now move to the next question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The fact that it has been done indicates it was needed. The fact that the minister is not going to do it indicates that the people are to be mulcted because of the failure of the government to protect them.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

COST OF EYEGLASSES—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION BY COMBINES BRANCH—POSSIBLE IMPORTATION FROM CHINA

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that various studies estimate that one firm, Imperial Optical, owns between 85 per cent and 90 per cent of all retail optical outlets in Canada, thus constituting an effective monopoly in this field, and in view of recent findings by the Saskatchewan department of health that people are being charged two or three times as much for eyeglasses as they should be, has the minister set in motion an investigation by the Combines Investigation Branch of this situation which is against the public interest?

Hon. Herb. Gray (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): A research inquiry into this matter is already under way. The director and I found an opportunity for a useful discussion of this issue when I met with the Saskatchewan minister of consumer affairs in Regina the other day.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Following a question I asked on November 30, the minister promised to look into ways and means of encouraging competition by importing lower priced eyeglasses from China. Can the minister inform the House as to the results of his initiative to date?

Mr. Gray: I do not have a report for the hon. lady yet. I shall endeavour to get one for her as soon as possible.

SPORTS

DISPUTE BETWEEN CIAU AND COLLEGES—REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERCEDE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in his capacity as the minister responsible for amateur sport. I have given him notice. Will he intercede in the present CIAU dispute with several colleges across the country, affecting college basketball and Canadian championships and tournaments to be played shortly over the Christmas season, especially in view of the fact that a discriminatory by-law passed by the CIAU is before at least one commission on human rights for resolution?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I have much sympathy with universities and colleges in the Maritimes with regard to the particular problem they face. But the hon. member knows I have no power or authority to give instructions to the CIAU. I will be pleased to raise the matter with the CIAU, but the matter is now the subject of discussion and representations among the members of the CIAU. I can only add that the organization is going through the same problems that a lot of Canadians are going through, trying to get Canadian independence at the same time as getting the best players possible. They will have to resolve the problem in their own time.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate in part the minister's answer, but in view of the fact the CIAU and the national championships are funded by Sport Canada, would the minister intercede until the human rights commission has at least come to a decision on whether it is a discriminatory by-law on the basis of nationality, race, colour or creed?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I believe I said in my answer that I would indeed make representations to the CIAU but that I am in no position to give instructions to the CIAU.

ENERGY

PROPOSED RETURN TO DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME TO REDUCE CONSUMPTION OF ENERGY

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines, and Resources.

Does the minister intend to change his mind about reinstating summer time, or daylight saving time, in order to save energy now that the United States have accepted a suggestion similar to the one I made in this House on October 31?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker.

OFFER TO TABLE CERTAIN DOCUMENTS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. On November 13, in answer to a question of mine, the minister asked whether I was prepared to table some documents. I am now prepared to table a representative sample, and I ask the minister if he would afford me the vehicle for doing so.

INDUSTRY

CLOSING OF HAWKER SIDDELEY FORGE OPERATION AT TRENTON, N.S.—EFFECT ON RELATED INDUSTRIES IN AREA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the ministers of industry, trade and commerce, DREE or national defence, all of whom have been given notice. Does the government intend to take any measures to scrutinize the decision of Hawker Siddeley of Canada Limited to close its large forging operation at Trenton, Nova Scotia, the largest such press in Canada, which by its nature has a good deal of effect on some regional industries?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have not had notice of the question but I will be very pleased to look into it and report back to the hon. member.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Perhaps he has had notice. I apologize to the Minister of Industry Trade and Commerce. I thought I had given him notice. Has the minister made any assessment of what effect the loss of this unique press and forge capability will have on other related industries in the area such as the Sydney steel plant and so on? If not, would he look into the situation and report to the House?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do the latter. I have to advise the hon. member that it may well be that there is something on my desk that I did not see this morning, but like my colleague I did not get notice either.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

TIME TAKEN FOR SPECIAL DELIVERY LETTER MAILED IN REGINA TO REACH MISSISSAUGA—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. I want to advise him before I proceed with my question, if I may, that Mississauga is the seventh most populous city in Canada and has direct air service to Regina.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Mississauga should follow the good example set by the hon. member for Peel South and ask a question.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, as I said, my question is for the Postmaster General. Will he advise me and the House how long it should take a special delivery letter with a 40 cent stamp on it to go from Regina to Mississauga?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are building one of the most modern mail handling centres in the hon. member's constituency; as soon as this is done, I am sure the service will be excellent in that region.

PROPOSALS TO ALBERTA IN RELATION TO EXPORT TAX AND PRICE FREEZE—DATE OF DISCLOSURE

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. Has the government placed before the government of the province of Alberta a specific proposal to take effect at the end of the export tax and the price freeze on January 30?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, explained the situation, that his deputy minister had visited the government of Alberta and had put before them a number of possible proposals, and that everything was on an ad referendum basis.

Mr. Gillies: When will the House be informed of the nature of these proposals?

Mr. Sharp: Soon.

APPLICATION OF ONTARIO HYDRO TO INCREASE EXPORT OF ELECTRICITY—DATE OF DECISION BY CABINET

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the recent application by Ontario Hydro to the National Energy Board for authority to increase exports of hydro power to the United States by more than one-third, I would ask the minister whether the recommendation of the National Energy Board on this application has been passed on to the cabinet for approval and, if so, when is the decision on this important matter to be handed down?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check and see whether the board has indeed rendered a decision. If it has, I have not seen it.

APPLICATION OF ONTARIO HYDRO TO INCREASE EXPORT OF ELECTRICITY—POSSIBLE UTILIZATION TO MEET CRISIS IN EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is this hydro energy which is proposed for export surplus to Canadian needs and, if so, has the government investigated the possibility of utilizing this valuable energy source to help meet the energy crisis in eastern Canada, particularly in the Montreal area?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, this is a question of interruptable power and therefore it would have to be found to be surplus to Canadian needs. As to whether it is in fact surplus to Canadian needs, this is what the Energy Board has been holding a hearing about.

SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN EASTERN CANADA—REQUEST THAT WHEAT BOARD MAKE SUFFICIENT QUANTITIES AVAILABLE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlottte): Mr. Speaker, since the minister responsible for the Wheat Board advised the House yesterday that 150 cars would be made available by the CNR for eastern Canadian grain requirements, and since the feed grain supply in the eastern area of Canada is critical, would the minister now advise the Wheat Board to offer feed grain in sufficient quantities for loading into these 150 cars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should think that the hon. member and all hon. members would appreciate that throughout the situation where feed was in short supply domestically, either in the far eastern or far western parts of Canada, the Canadian Wheat Board has acted in an admirable fashion to make sure that domestic needs were served first.

Mr. McCain: Since I have been informed that dealers in the east are unable to get any wheat from the Wheat Board this week, and very little oats and barley, would the Minister of Agriculture please intercede on behalf of eastern agriculture and these mills which have been out of some varieties of grain for up to two weeks?

Mr. Speaker: That is a representation.

FERTILIZERS—ALLEGED SHORTAGE IN CANADA CAUSED BY SALE TO UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that fertilizer is moving across the United States border to the point where Canadian farmers' requirements are not being met, and in view of the fact that fertilizer is being used to fertilize Washington forests, would the minister inform the House whether or not Canadian farmers are going to receive first consideration, or United States forests?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member recognizes, and remembers as well as I do, that the commercial fertilizer plants were built on the basis that a certain percentage volume of production would be exported. As I have said before, I am optimistic that the needs of all farmers in Canada will be looked after. We are compiling a report that I hope to submit to the House in the very near future.

SUGGESTED FREEZE ON CLOSURE OF COUNTRY ELEVATORS TO CONSERVE FUEL

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board and arises out of the energy crisis. If this crisis does exist, to conserve gas and possibly save longer hauls by farm trucks would the minister put an immediate freeze on the closure of any country elevators? This action would not only conserve fuel, but for a change the minister might do something that pleases the farmers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough. Order. The hon. member for Marquette is rising on a point of order, but I am sure he appreciates that a question asked in those terms is hardly in order. Perhaps the hon. member would rephrase his question. Although we have reached the end of the question period, I will recognize the hon. member for Hillsborough afterward.

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to rephrase my question. Will the minister put an immediate freeze on the closure of country elevators?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the question of whether the country elevators close or do not is, of course, one for the elevator companies themselves, the largest of which are the farmer-owned co-operatives which make decisions in the best interests of farmers. I do not think I should interfere in those decisions even on the question of energy.

MILK SUBSIDY—REASON FOR DELAY IN SIGNING AGREEMENT WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the federal milk subsidy has been made operative in the nine other provinces, will he advise us when, oh when, will it be operable in P.E.I., and also reveal the reason for the delay for which Premier Campbell blames him?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether Premier Campbell blames me, but I am pleased to announce to the hon. member and the House that the agreement has been signed to begin as of December 10 for one complete year from that date.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: For a complete five cents a quart roll back.

Mr. Speaker: I see there are two members seeking to ask supplementary questions, but we have reached the end of the question period. I wonder if the Chair might recognize those hon. members and others seeking to ask supplementary questions tomorrow, knowing of their interest in this subject.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Last evening, Mr. Speaker, when I was speaking on the bill before us I indicated I felt the government had acted largely on the advice of a technical advisory committee, and that is confirmed by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). I also indicated it was particularly pertinent that members of this House should inquire into who actually sat on that advisory committee, what meetings were held, what form of report did the committee make to the minister and, most important, what was the basis of the committee's judgment which led to the recommendation to the minister.

It is particularly interesting that we have been unable to date to get the minister or the government to reveal who, in fact, sits on this technical advisory committee. Attempts were made in this House and at the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee to determine exactly who are the members, by name, from industry and from governmental departments. To date, we have not succeeded in having a candid disclosure in this regard.

I would go even further, because I think it is important to note on the record, that I believe there has been a misrepresentation concerning the membership of that committee. I should like to refer to the reports of that committee on Monday, December 3. As reported at page 57:29, I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp):

> I understand that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has established, with industry, the Technical Advisory Committee on Petroleum Supply. Are you familiar with this committee?

The minister replied:

> Yes, I am.

I then asked:

> That Minister has also informed us that you have a representative on the Committee. Is that correct?

The minister then replied:

> That is right.

I then asked:

> Who is the representative, Mr. Minister?

The minister then said:

> Mr. Ritchie, nominally, is the member. If he cannot attend, then another official of the department replaces him.

I asked:

> Who would that other official be?

The answer was given by Mr. Ritchie, who also attended the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee meeting. He said:

> It could be Don McPhail, the Director-General of the Economic Bureau.

Subsequently at that Miscellaneous Estimates committee meeting I asked Mr. Ritchie how many meetings of the technical committee he had attended and he initially indicated two or three. Then, on further questioning he finally said he had not attended any of the meetings of the technical committee. I feel it is pertinent to draw this to the attention of the House, particularly when we remember that the day after the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee meeting, on December 4, the Secretary of State for External Affairs was asked similar questions in the House by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). The Secretary of State referred the question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who at page 8385 of Hansard said in part:

> —I am afraid I cannot say who the individuals were at the moment. However, representatives of various departments have been designated.

The Leader of the Opposition persisted and, as recorded on the same page, asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs:

> —will he tell us who this individual is.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs finally replied:

> —I do not know who it is who has been designated for this purpose.

Surely, it is very strange that within 24 hours the minister should be able to reverse himself so dramatically on a simple question as to who has been appointed to a committee, bearing in mind that this committee has tremendous importance as far as our debate today is concerned.

Mr. Baker: Reversal is not unusual for this government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): How would you know, Wally? You see everything upside down.

Mr. Baker: I am looking at you all the time, perhaps that is the reason.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that I felt this government had put Canada in an extremely unfavourable position as far as the private international oil companies in the world are concerned, and that I felt it must be held responsible for that position. I feel that was perhaps indicated yesterday in the remarks of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to this House when, as recorded at page 8442 of Hansard, he said:

Industry has urged the government to put in place a mandatory allocation program as quickly as possible—

Industry has made the request, and it would appear on the evidence which has been produced, that the government is responding basically to the request of those industrial leaders. I suggest this is nothing new.

It is interesting to note that there is a standing committee of this House known as the Committee on National Resources and Public Works. On March 8, there were some very interesting questions and answers between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and certain representatives of opposition parties on that Committee in respect of fuel security problems in eastern Canada. I think that exchange should be put on the record as recorded at page 4:9 of those proceedings, the minister was asked whether he would be willing to enter into negotiations on a direct government-to-government basis, for example with Venezuela, in an attempt to secure oil supplies for eastern Canada if a crisis should arise. The minister stated:

That is a possibility. In these arrangements with the supplier countries we have inclined not to get into a direct government-to-government basis. Dr. Howland has represented Canada in the OECD discussions in this regard and the approach taken generally within OECD is that it should not be on a government-to-government basis as between consumers and producers but it should be left on the company basis.

Surely we do not have to reiterate the fact that the minister has continually said it is a private international company matter and that we in Canada must accept their position as to whether, in fact we have a shortfall in Canada.

I should like to come back to those minutes shortly, but dealing with the international companies I think it is helpful if we review the names of the international companies to which the minister is responding. One might refer to them as the group of seven because they are seven in number. There is BP Trading Company in the United Kingdom. There is Exxon from the United States, Gulf from the United States, Petrofina from Belgium, The Royal Dutch-Shell group from the United Kingdom and Holland; Sun Oil from the United States and Texaco from the United States. Those are the international companies to which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has told us we must respond. The size of those companies is truly large. For example, Exxon is the second largest corporation in the United States, ranking only behind General Motors in sales but ahead of General Motors in terms of total assets. Exxon is based in New York and has sales of some $20 billion, which is even greater than the budget of the Minister of Finance, and it has assets of $21 billion.

The other companies I have listed are among the largest in the world. This is true, but I would suggest that no company, regardless of how large it is, should be able to push Canada around the way certain of these companies apparently are pushing our government around. Every one of the group of seven has a subsidiary in Canada. I think it is interesting to note that while a great deal is made about the foreign ownership of companies in Canada, it would take relatively little investment on the part of Canadians to shift control of all those subsidiary companies from foreign ownership to Canadian ownership. I am not speaking—and I would emphasize this—of state control. That is perhaps the only type of control, of which the government thinks. I am thinking of investment by individual Canadians. If the government would facilitate it, the shareholder control of literally all the subsidiaries of the group of seven in Canada could be shifted so that they could be Canadian owned. This would require an expenditure by Canadian investors of something in the order of $2½ billion. This may sound like a large figure until we relate it to the total worth of all companies in Canada.

For example, if we look at the Toronto Stock Exchange we find that the amount which it would take to shift control of these subsidiary companies to Canada from the international oil companies would be approximately one per cent of the total value of all stocks trading in Toronto.

Mr. Whicher: That was last week.

Mr. Stevens: No, that is today. We took the total off at noon today. I, of course, do not know, because of government action, whether the Toronto market has fallen since noon.

Yesterday the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources read at great length from a publication he put out last June called "An Energy Policy for Canada". I thought the minister was not particularly careful when he was reading from this publication to make clear that the publication was put out for discussion purposes only last June. The government emphasized at that time it was not necessarily bound by the policies suggested in the analysis but felt there should be perhaps two years discussion before the government actually took a decision on energy policy. It may be that on a lot of other matters on which the government has procrastinated it has not been caught off base to date, but here we have a clear example of where the government's lack of policy and planning has caught up with it. The energy situation in the world caught them.

I would point out that while the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources referred to page 121 in that report, he was very careful not to flip over the page and read from page 122 where we find the following:

Methods of increasing our security of supply over this medium-term period have been suggested by industry and others and include:

Under that heading various things are listed that could be done or have been suggested to be done. I would point out that even today most of those items have not even been suggested to be done by the government to ensure security of supply in eastern Canada. For example, the first item listed is extension to eastern Canada of pipeline facilities from western Canada. It may be that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) likes to appear on television and tell the people that a decision has been made to build the pipeline, but the fact is it was only being discussed in June. We in this party say build it and build it now.

An hon. Member: You did not say that last fall.

An hon. Member: We sure did.

Mr. Baldwin: I said it last fall.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, on that point I would ask the Prime Minister, in his statement later this afternoon in this House, to tell us definitely if the pipeline is to be built, and when and how. I believe the Prime Minister should indicate to us exactly what type of a pipeline it will be. Will it be a reversible pipeline? We say it should be.

The second point referred to in that analysis is that there should be added capacity for fuel storage established in eastern Canada. We in this party have been saying for a long time that such capacity should be built, and I say to the Prime Minister today that he should let us know if they are going to do it. Mr. Speaker, I should also like to ask the Prime Minister if he intends to implement staged price increases after the freeze but keep the Canadian price somewhat below world prices. That is our position and it is time the Prime Minister let us know what his position is.

If the Prime Minister does accept that position from us, I hope he will go the second step and offer a quid pro quo to those in western Canada on such things as transportation facilities to ensure that they can compete in world and national markets more readily than they have been doing. While the Prime Minister is speaking, I hope he will also indicate if the government is considering a home heating oil price shelter,—subsidized by the federal treasury if necessary. I mean for all Canadians who will need such assistance in this coming winter. That is our policy, and I would be interested to learn if the Prime Minister is able to agree with that point.

Mr. Speaker, I have indicated in a very preliminary way that we do not feel we have sufficient facts before us to properly determine whether Bill C-236 should be accepted in its many ramifications. We believe that the facts must be disclosed. I have referred to the Committee on National Resources and Public Works, but I would point out that that committee has not sat for six months, and that is the committee that was established by the House to consider energy matters. Yet, the government has seen fit to allow the committee not to sit in order to hear witnesses and attempt to arrive at the actual facts regarding the current situation in Canada.

It has been suggested to us by the government that we have a crisis.

Mr. Baldwin: Its sits over there.

Mr. Stevens: I emphasize that the committee which you would normally expect the government would have asked to look into the question of energy, suitable security of supply for eastern Canadians and a pricing program, would have been the Committee on National Resources and Public Works. Yet it has not been called for six months. As one of the hon. members has mentioned, we, on this side of the House, have asked repeatedly that that committee be called. We believe the government has not made a case to substantiate their position I hope the Prime Minister will attempt to indicate to us what case they have for stating there may be a major energy crisis in Canada this winter and for their belief that this crisis warrants the wide powers which the government wants under Bill C-236.

Here again, if I may, I would like to refer to the resources committee because at its March meeting, to which I have already referred, the question of a possible fuel shortage in eastern Canada was raised. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in turn referred the question to Dr. Howland who was the chairman of the National Energy Board. Dr. Howland at that time said that based on a possible 25 per cent reduction in world fuel supplies, Canada would not have a serious shortfall for 5.5 months. I feel we should have the right to know what has caused the difference in the ensuing months. Why are we now told that a 20 per cent possible world shortfall first of all, has to be accepted by Canada because the international private companies say we must accept it, and secondly, why is such a 20 per cent shortfall going to have such dire consequences in Canada when the former chairman of the National Energy Board told us that even a 25 per cent reduction, if it were shared by Canada, would not be felt in any serious way for 5.5 months?

I feel that the Prime Minister owes this House clarification of the situation concerning the export tax, which he has said is not permanent. What does the government propose to do with this tax revenue, what new measures might they substitute? I notice that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) is with us today, and I must say how absolutely amazed I and my colleagues were that the Minister of finance and his deputy minister were not even aware that Canada has had export taxes in the past. In fact, they did not know that there is an existing statute, the Export Act, that provides for export taxes.

Surely, the government is totally adrift. They have lost their course. They have no policy and, unfortunately, it is showing up with respect to energy. During the Prime Minister's remarks I hope that he will offer a statement on how he intends to help the poor pay for higher fuel costs this winter. What steps does the Prime Minister intend to take to ensure that the poor who may feel the crisis as it is described by the government, will be relieved from its maximum impact?

So far I have touched on questions related to oil and energy generally, but I think we should bear in mind that we are being asked to approve at the second reading stage a bill that is extremely wide in its ramifications. I think it is fair to say that not only should we have the facts on matters touching on energy which I have outlined, but it is time that this government indicated to us what they believe will be the unemployment situation in Canada in 1974.

Mr. Baldwin: We know what it will be after the next election.

Mr. Stevens: What, in fact, do they believe will be the industrial production level in Canada in 1974?

An hon. Member: High.

Mr. Stevens: What will be the real growth level and what will be the rate of inflation?

An hon. Member: Low.

Mr. Stevens: I hope that is on the record. The answer to my first three questions was "very high" and the answer to the last one was "very low". I believe it was the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) who made that comment.

In truth, this is more of a crisis within government than it is an energy crisis. We have a power hungry Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: He could generate enough gas for all of Ontario.

Mr. Stevens: The minister sees an opportunity to take unto himself and his department new powers, presumably at the expense of other ministers to whom he sometimes refers as colleagues.

In considering this bill, I believe we should remember that Canada is unique in the industrial western world. In 1973, we are 118 per cent self sufficient in oil. Surely we are owed an explanation by the government as to why a country that is 118 per cent self sufficient in oil has to live with a bill such as Bill C-236. In short, we are a net contributor to the world oil pool, and I think the minister owes us an explanation, which he did not give yesterday, as to why a nation such as ours, a net contributor to the world oil pool should have to live with a world shortfall.

The minister has sometimes said that we must be a good international citizen and that is why we must live with this shortfall. He has referred to such countries as Sweden as the ones he feels might need oil which would be diverted from Canada. Surely he is totally ignoring the different circumstances of the countries concerned. Sweden does not have the unemployment problem that Canada has, and to be casually stating that we must accept a shortfall because someone other than the Canadian Government has decreed it, is an unfortunate position to put Canadians into without further explanation. If we accept world sharing now, so be it, but I feel we do so only because the government has allowed us to drift into that position without proper arrangements being made in anticipation of the present world crisis. The government knew such a crisis could occur.

I have referred to the committee proceedings that took place up to June 6, that is the National Resources Committee. There was all kinds of testimony before that committee as to possible shortfalls, and how those shortfalls could be covered if they materialized. The government to date has been negligent in its efforts, and we today are faced with a crisis which is really a crisis within that government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has now expired.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in my statement of November 22 on national television I said that the government's first priority in the face of the current oil shortage was to assure necessary fuel supplies to all Canadians this winter, no matter what developments took place abroad.

I described the measures that the government was taking to assure the supply of oil to regions where shortages were most likely to occur. I indicated that Canadians would be asked to co-operate in a program of voluntary restraints to economize on the use of energy. I added that mandatory allocations at the wholesale level would be required to ensure a fair and equitable distribution of available supplies.

On November 26, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), after consultation with the provinces, presented to the House a set of guidelines to conserve energy, and outlined the main features of the mandatory control system. On December 3, the minister tabled a bill to establish an Energy Supplies Allocation Board and to give to it the powers which it needs. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in the debate which ensues.

It would be a mistake to underestimate the potential seriousness of the problem which led us to take these actions. Other countries, day by day, are taking the measures they think necessary to meet the same or greater difficulties. The government nonetheless believes that, barring some unforeseeable events, the Canadian short-term energy problem can be overcome.

We are confident that no Canadian need fear serious shortages of oil and fuel this winter, provided each one of us plays his part and contributes his share. We are also confident that the Canadian economy is flexible and resilient enough to adjust quickly to changing conditions and to maintain high levels of production and employment. I want to take this occasion once again to urge all Canadians to study and follow closely the guidelines given by the minister, and to ask the House to give early passage to the bill which it is now debating.

But my immediate task, Mr. Speaker, is to place before the House proposals which will set the basis for a new national oil policy. The objective of that policy, to be reached before the end of this decade, is Canadian self-sufficiency in oil and oil products.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: During the intervening period we must create in Canada the physical capacity necessary to give us security of supply, and protection against the type of emergency now threatening us. In moving towards its objective, the government will also wish to maintain a reliable capacity for some continuing export of oil to the United States and a market in Canada for reliable foreign suppliers of oil to us.

The new policy will abolish the "Ottawa Valley Line". The Canadian market for oil will no longer be divided in two, one for domestically produced oil and another for imported oil. It will thus be a "one-Canada", not a "two-Canada" oil policy. The western provinces will have a guaranteed outlet for increased production; and the eastern provinces will be guaranteed security of supply.

The creation of a national market for Canadian oil is one essential requirement of a new policy. Others are, first, a pricing mechanism which will provide sufficient incentives for the development of our oil resources; second, measures to ensure that any escalation in returns and revenues as a result of any higher prices will be used in a manner conducive to security and self-sufficiency; third, the establishment of a publicly-owned Canadian petroleum company principally to expedite exploration and development; fourth, the early completion of a pipeline of adequate capacity to serve Montreal and as required more eastern points; and fifth, intensification of research on oil sands technology to permit their full and rapid development.

I intend placing these proposals before the meeting of first ministers of the federal and provincial governments. I am suggesting to the premiers that the conference should be held on January 22 and 23, immediately before the meeting of finance ministers now planned for January 24 and 25. In the meantime, I have asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) to consult with all provinces in preparation for the conference.

The construction of a pipeline to Montreal, which the government announced some time ago, is the single most urgent step towards the attainment of our national goals. Without a pipeline, eastern Canada will never be certain that it can meet its requirements should overseas supply be interrupted.

Moreover, without a pipeline the government is unable to guarantee a market in Canada for Canadian oil at a level sufficient to ensure the development of the oil sands and other Canadian sources of supply.

The federal government is taking all necessary measures to ensure that construction begins at the earliest possible moment in 1974. The government has directed the Canadian Commercial Corporation to determine whether the project could be expedited in any way if it were to place orders for steel or for pipe immediately. If such action would help, the government will direct that it be taken at once. Any steel or pipe so ordered would be re-sold at cost to those undertaking construction of the pipeline. Of course before construction can begin the National Energy Board must, under the law, hold hearings and be satisfied that the proposed route, the financial arrangements and the proposed rates will best serve the public interest and that adequate compensation will be paid for the rights-of-way. The government has asked the Board to carry out all proceedings in a manner as expeditious as the law will permit.

A second requirement for self-sufficiency is a rapid and significant increase in oil production in Canada. In 1972, Canada produced 1.7 million barrels of crude oil per the day and consumed 1.55 million barrels. We exported 950,000 barrels and we imported 770,000 barrels. We were, in a mathematical sense, self-sufficient. We will continue to have the necessary conventional reserves for some time, but not for long. The reserves from conventional sources—mostly from the oil fields of Alberta—are known and no major new discoveries can be hoped for at present. Production from these existing reserves is expected to decline towards the end of this decade and will then be insufficient to meet current and projected rates of consumption.

Canada must therefore move and move immediately to develop its frontier and non-conventional sources of supply so as to be able to reach a situation that will permit self-sufficiency. We do not want to cut off our exports and we do not want to reduce imports from reliable suppliers. However, we do want, and we do intend to put ourselves in a position where, in case of need, we do not have to depend on imports with all the risks we now know that dependence entails.

[English]

Canada is rich in oil. The Alberta oil sands alone are estimated to contain over 500 billion barrels of oil, as much as or more than the presently estimated reserves of the Middle East. Exploration activity, in the Arctic and off the Atlantic Coast, shows considerable promise. But none of these sources is anywhere close to producing oil in the quantities required to meet the challenge of the seventies and beyond. In the case of the oil sands, technologies must be developed which do not yet exist in order to permit the development of 85 per cent of the sands which are deeply buried. The development of the oil sands and other frontier resources will require major effort in which all Canadians must, directly or indirectly, join and participate.

A characteristic common to all frontier oil, and oil from unconventional sources such as the tar sands, is that it is much more expensive to develop and to bring into production than wells in the southern parts of Canada. This simple, undisputed fact is often ignored because it contains an unpleasant truth. It means that the days of abundant, cheap energy for Canadians must come to an end. It means that the cost of producing domestic oil must go up before too long. It means that Canadians must be prepared sooner or later, in some way or another, to pay for these additional costs or go without oil. Any attempt to hide these facts, and to formulate future policies without taking them into account, can only lead in the longer run to even greater shortages and, hence, to even higher prices than Canadians are now experiencing in the eastern provinces. In short, we must in the long run allow the price of domestically produced crude oil to rise toward a level high enough to ensure development of the Alberta oil sands and other Canadian resources but not one bit higher.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And how much is that?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the opposition wants us to decide this unilaterally or if they want us to consult with Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You would not consult, anyway.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Hees: Stick to the straight stuff, Pierre, the humour is terrible.

Mr. Trudeau: However, while prices must go up in the long run if we are to have adequate supplies, that does not mean that they must go up at once.

On September 4, I announced that the government had requested the oil companies not to raise the price of domestically produced oil during the period ending January 31, 1974, and that the companies had voluntarily agreed to this request. The outbreak of hostilities in the Middle East has resulted in a sudden rise in the price of international oil to a level which few, if any, expected at the time of my statement on September 4. In recent weeks there have been some discussions with the province of Alberta and with representatives of some of the companies about the timing and the extent of any price changes. Not unexpectedly, both are anxious to see such changes begin as soon as possible.

After careful consideration, the federal government has come to the conclusion that there is neither need nor justification for changes in the price of domestic heating oil during the present heating season.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: If you want to see if David is smiling, he is.

Mr. Trudeau: We will, therefore, undertake new discussions with the government of Alberta and with the oil companies to secure their agreement to maintain the price of domestically produced oil at the current level at least until the end of this winter.

I hope they will understand the reasonableness of this request and will accept it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We know the reason.

Mr. Trudeau: I was happy to hear, Mr. Speaker, as I was coming in, that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on behalf of the Tory party was indicating that he would support this approach, too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I certainly appreciate that this unanimity in the House will make it easier for the oil companies and for the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The federal government will continue to levy a tax or, after February 1, a charge equal to the difference between our domestic price and the export price as determined by the National Energy Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: The federal government's offer—

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must call again for the co-operation of hon. members who may wish perhaps to allow the Prime Minister to continue with his remarks.

• (1620)

Mr. Trudeau: The federal government's offer to share the proceeds of the tax to January 31 with the producing provinces on a 50/50 basis of course stands. We will discuss with first ministers the disposition of the revenues forthcoming from the charge levied from February 1, 1974 onward.

While it is hoped to defer any change in the level of domestic oil prices as long as it is possible to do so, and while it will be the government's objective to ensure that they do not at any time go beyond what is required to ensure the development of the Alberta oil sands and other Canadian resources, the current increases in international prices as well as any adjustments in domestic prices in the future have serious implications for the people of Canada generally and for the national interest.

So far as the people of Canada are concerned, changes that have already taken place in landed prices in St. Lawrence and Atlantic coast ports impose a burden on low income families. For those in greatest need, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has already informed the provinces that the federal government would view favourably related increases in welfare allowances paid under the Canada Assistance Plan. The federal government pays half of such allowances. Payments under OAS/GIS and under the CPP are now tied to the cost of living index. That index will reflect the higher cost of oil and oil products. The higher family allowances, which will be paid as soon as the necessary legislation is passed, are also tied to the cost of living index. The federal government recognizes that all these higher payments will not in themselves in all cases offset the increase in oil prices, especially in the eastern provinces. Something more may well be required. This is a further matter I will raise at the meeting of first ministers.

So far as any future change in domestic prices is concerned, I want to make clear that the government feels that there will be a national interest to be considered and protected. We will not be prepared to acquiesce in any situation in which windfall profits accrue to private corporations simply because of unusual and unpredictable circumstances of shortage created by major world producers for political and economic reasons of their own. Nor do we feel that it would be fair or just to have any windfall financial benefits accrue only to the producing provinces, leaving all the rest of the people of Canada with nothing but the burdens. There is, in the view of the government, strong justification for a national share in any unforeseen benefits just as there is a national assumption of unexpected costs and losses.

For we must consider the national action and the national commitment that will be required in achieving the capacity for self-sufficiency which is our objective. The pipeline to the east and the rapid development of western oil resources will require very heavy investment.

The market in the east for Canadian oil going through the pipeline must be certain. It must not disappear if international oil suddenly and temporarily drops in price. In short, we are proposing a national commitment to develop oil resources; there is a national strategic interest in them and there is an over-riding national interest in security of supply.

I should point out too that the rate and scale of development of oil resources in the west thus far has been the result in part of national action. The "national oil policy" established in 1961, with the protected market in central Canada in the years since then, together with federal tax and other incentives, have helped to develop what is a national and not a purely provincial productive capacity.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What benefit will central Canadian industry derive from that? Five times as much.

Mr. Trudeau: These are strong and, to my mind, compelling reasons for a national sharing of the proceeds of any unusual increases in oil prices that may result from artificial international scarcities.

In asserting that there is a national interest which may have to be considered in any adjustments imposed by circumstances in the future, the federal government realizes that it is touching upon an area where strong views are held. The government is doing so because it feels it is necessary to be frank about something that may have to be considered in the interest of the citizens and taxpayers of the country as a whole. I trust this will be equally true for the hon. member for Edmonton who seems to have only one city, only one province, in mind.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You may laugh, but that is the whole population and not only half.

Mr. Trudeau: It will be with this interest very much in mind that the government will continue its discussions with the producing provinces and consult with the others.

I would merely ask the hon. member to consult his colleague from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). When they have reached an agreement, they can then perhaps come back to speak to us.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He has just said that you are wrong.

Mr. Trudeau: You shouldn't address yourself to me.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You did not listen to him, you did not understand him.

[English]

Mr. Trudeau: One of the instruments of the new national oil policy is a national petroleum company. A bill will be introduced at the next session of parliament to establish such a company and at that time the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will present full details to the House.

The new company will serve several purposes. It will undertake exploration for conventional oil and gas in the provinces as well as in areas under the control of the federal government, namely, in the Yukon and Northwest Territories and the Atlantic and Pacific offshore coastal areas.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It will assist and participate in the research and development work necessary to develop an in situ technology for the production of the vast amounts of oil from the oil sands which cannot be extracted by presently known methods. To this particular end, it will invest approximately $40 million over the next five years in co-operation with the Province of Alberta and private firms. Should the Province of Alberta prefer some other arrangement for carrying on this project, such as an independent Canada-Alberta Institute, the government would be quite prepared to discuss it with them.

● (1630)

The company will have a capacity to invest, in agreement with Alberta, in the development of the oil sands in those portions of the deposit which are exploitable by existing technology. The company could assist in oil sands development by way of equity investment, for instance, so as to ensure that this capacity to produce advances as rapidly as is industrially possible and as is environmentally and economically sound.

Mr. Stanfield: Forty million dollars!

Mr. Trudeau: No. It is $40 million for research. If the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) could hear above the noise of his own members he would know what I am talking about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: The company will not be precluded from developing other reserves which it may discover through its exploration activities, but it may choose to hold part of such resources as a reserve for the long term security of the Canadian market. This is a function which private investors often find it difficult to perform for understandable reasons, and it is a function to which the government attaches importance. Finally, the company will assist in ensuring reliable and adequate imports of oil to meet present and foreseeable needs for foreign oil.

The government has found in recent weeks that it can play an important role in purchasing petroleum and petroleum products. It proposes to exercise this role through the company. Finally, the company will not be prevented by law from entering the refining and distribution fields, but its more immediate and present tasks may not lead to this for some time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Why don't you just nationalize the whole industry?

Mr. Bawden: What happened to the Liberal party?

Mr. Trudeau: The national petroleum company will add significantly to the industry's total capacity to identify and bring into production Canada's oil and gas resources. It is not, however, intended in any way to displace the private sector.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Look what has happened to the Liberals!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order?

Mr. Nowlan: There is none over there.

An hon. Member: Get to the part about the election.

Mr. Hees: I am glad the Prime Minister has a sense of humour.

Mr. Trudeau: For a time I thought I might at least succeed in unifying the Tories, but I see from some of their faces that they are not unified even on this issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Nor is it intended to discourage investment by foreign companies which will continue to be welcome. The company will be ready to enter into joint ventures with other firms in that industry as well as with the provinces, both in exploration and in development. The government will, however, look to this corporation to contribute to an increased Canadian presence in petroleum exploration and development.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: Are you going to move its head offices to Vancouver, too?

An hon. Member: Move it to Mount Royal!

Mr. Trudeau: It will, in its joint ventures, attempt to involve smaller Canadian-controlled firms which currently find it difficult to sustain costly and lengthy development efforts. It will thus ensure for Canadians a more significant role in the development of their own resources.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Where is Jim Richardson?

Some hon. Members: What about Turner?

Mr. Trudeau: If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I will re-read the last phrase. I should like it to be on the record that the hoots of the Tories are opposing this phrase—"It will thus ensure for Canadians a more significant role in the development of their own resources".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You don't know how or where!

Mr. Trudeau: They are doing it again, Mr. Speaker, but I will not read it for a third time.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Hees: Once more, with feeling.

An hon. Member: We did not believe it the first time.

[Translation]

Mr. Trudeau: En français, then.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is even worse than—

[English]

Mr. Trudeau: In our future self-sufficiency, it is the government's hope that a significant role may be played by resources on the Atlantic continental shelf. While exploration has proceeded there it has not been as rapid as we would wish. I doubt if it has been delayed by the failure thus far to reach agreement with the five eastern provinces on offshore oil administration. We are, I think, much closer to agreement and I hope it may be achieved soon. In future exploration and development, there will be a positive role for the national petroleum company, either acting alone or through joint ventures with oil companies.

Any oil policy must, if it is to be effective, take account of the larger energy picture. It should be so designed as to be consistent with the conservation and prudent use of all sources of energy while at the same time encouraging the substitution of relatively more plentiful resources for relatively scarcer ones.

Canadian natural gas is already supplying a substantial portion of our energy needs and some of those of the United States. Enormous quantities of gas are available to be transported from the far north. A major development is the proposed gas pipeline up the Mackenzie Valley to move Alaskan gas to United States markets and at the same time to make it possible to move Canadian northern gas to Canadian markets. While this project must, of course, be submitted to the usual regulatory proceedings and cannot go ahead until it has been approved by responsible Canadian authorities, the government believes that it would be in the public interest to facilitate early construction by any means which do not require the lowering of environmental standards or the neglect of Indian rights and interests.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I can see no reason why Canada could not give suitable undertakings as to the movement, without discriminatory impediment, of Alaskan gas through a pipeline across Canada to United States markets provided all public interest and regulatory conditions are met in the building and operation of the pipeline. An undertaking of this sort would, of course, be reciprocal, with the same assurance being given to Canada regarding our oil and gas shipments through the United States.

The development of nuclear power in Canada presents a third major potential source of energy which may be of considerable assistance in achieving the goal of security and self-sufficiency in oil. The success of the Ontario Hydro reactor at Pickering has shown beyond a doubt the soundness and viability of Canadian atomic energy technology. Ontario and Quebec already have nuclear reactors and more are being or will be built in those provinces. In order to reduce the present and future dependence of other provinces on oil for electric energy, the government will enter into discussions with any of them that may be interested in assistance in financing construction of the initial nuclear generating station in each province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: At present the Atlantic provinces are very much dependent on oil for fuel in the production of electric power. In the case of New Brunswick, most of its hydroelectric power potential has been developed. Additional electrical capacity must essentially be thermal, based either on imported oil or on nuclear energy. The government has had discussions in recent months with the government of New Brunswick concerning construction of a nuclear reactor in that province under the new policy to which I have referred. The federal government has offered to help finance 50 per cent of capital cost of a new 600 megawatt nuclear power station, both to meet growth of demand in New Brunswick and, by interconnection with Quebec and Nova Scotia, to tie more closely the regional power system in eastern Canada.

Before ending my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I should like to reassure the government and people of the United States that, while we must move toward security of supply and a capacity for self-sufficiency, we will not do so in a manner which is destructive of the beneficial ties that have developed between our two countries. Obviously, the first duty of any Canadian government must be towards its own people. But we will wish to consult with the United States, and we will plan the development of our oil resources in such a way as to continue to export for some years yet. We probably will also continue to meet part of our total requirements through imports for at least some period, even after the pipeline to Montreal is completed.

The policy I have outlined is one that I am convinced is fair, reasonable and in the best interests of Canadians in all parts of Canada. I recognize that there will be differences of view on various aspects of it. The policy is, however, coherent in its relationship of current and future prices to current and future needs for energy in Canada. It will establish, too that security of supply which can ensure that we will not at some future time incur the hazards and inconveniences we now face. I hope the policy will justify and receive the co-operation of the provinces and the approval of this House.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for York North is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether we can determine from the Leader of the Opposition if he would care to call off the vote on Monday now?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Liberal Party is no better at humour than it is at policy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member for Compton on a point of order.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will allow me, I would like to ask him a simple question and I trust he will want to answer it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I think the hon. member's request could well be accepted, first with the consent of the Prime Minister but also with the consent of the House because the Chair has already recognized the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). If the House does not object and the Prime Minister agrees to answer the question, I will recognize the hon. member for Compton.

Mr. Trudeau: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I will be quite pleased to answer the hon. member. I have to give a press conference but, of course, I would be very glad to answer questions from hon. members first as long as there are not too many of them.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the right hon. Prime Minister, in view of the new developments considered by him such as the extension of the pipeline and the development of the tar sands in Alberta, whether he intends to use various financial institutions to render beneficial the transactions in which the government will be engaging with respect to the financing of those large projects. I would also ask the Prime Minister if he intends to ask the World Bank for interest free loans as other countries do for developments of that size?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that we do not always share the same views on economic theories. As far as I am concerned, I am not all that prepared to accept the suggestions made by the hon. member, but had the people of Alberta not so massively rejected the Social Credit theories at the last election, that province of course might very well make that suggestion to me but they are no longer interested.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the miracle of expediency that we have just witnessed makes Paul's conversion on the road to Damascus look like very small scale stuff.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

● (1650)

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member for Lotbinière rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fortin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. My point of order concerns the remarks made by the right hon. Prime Minister. He has misled the House. The financial situation of Alberta was fantastic under a Social Credit government. Most of its problems started when it got a Progressive Conservative government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The hon. member will agree with the Chair that the issue he has referred to is far from being a point of order. It is a simple argument. I must therefore return to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we have just witnessed the presentation of Liberal policy made solely to please the NDP, with the obvious purpose in mind of avoiding defeat on the vote we are to have on Monday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No, we want an election.

An hon. Member: Let's have one now.

Mr. Hees: I am told that the two parties, the Liberals and the NDP, have worked very hard in the last two days to put this policy together. It is interesting to hear this afternoon the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) make a presentation of policy which right up until this moment the Liberal party steadfastly, again and again, refused to adopt. Now, all of a sudden, to please the NDP in the shadow of a vote on Monday night, they give us this new Liberal policy. I suggest that the words we have heard this afternoon were those of Pierre Trudeau, but the music was that of David Lewis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: This kind of policy making which changes from day to day has, unfortunately, been slowing down decisions of the oil and gas industry which they must make immediately if there is to be a satisfactory expansionary exploration program for the additional energy resources we will need so that this country may become truly self-sufficient in the very near future and for the months and years ahead. It is about that I wish to speak for the few minutes I have available to me this afternoon, and I will then conclude my remarks at eight o'clock.

I want to talk about what is necessary to bring about self-sufficiency in energy in this country. This can only be done by bringing about conditions which make it possible for the only people who can find the oil and gas reserves in this country, that is the oil and gas industry, to expand their exploratory program and, in so doing, produce the additional energy we will need to satisfy not only our present needs, but those of the future which will be far greater than today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: In the situation that has developed as a result of the Arab-Israeli war, we came to see very clearly just how dependent this country has become on not only the Arab oil producing countries but on the multinational corporations which handle the offshore oil we have been using up to the present time. It has become painfully obvious that we can no longer allow this country to be subject to decisions made outside this country over which we have no control, and which can have such a disastrous effect not only on this country but on the people who live here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Thank you for your support, George.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I listened this afternoon to the Prime Minister outlining some specific measures that should be adopted by this government. This is the overture of soothing approach orchestrated to please the NDP in respect of matters the government has refused steadfastly to introduce up to this moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: We heard the Prime Minister this afternoon talk about the great necessity, of which everybody knows, of building that Montreal pipeline without further delay. The very first thing that must be done is to acquire rights-of-way so that the pipeline can be laid, but we heard nothing about that this afternoon.

An hon. Member: You weren't listening.

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister has not the slightest idea of what is to be done. There is no plan for acquiring the rights-of-way; there is no plan for acquiring the steel and there is no plan for building that Montreal extension of the pipeline that we hear about as something to please the NDP in advance of Monday night.

We have heard reference to the adoption of another position of the official opposition in respect of building this Montreal pipeline. It was in 1969, four years ago, that the official opposition first started urging this government to build that Montreal pipeline as a means of making this country not nearly so dependent as we are on Arab and foreign produced oil. At our policy convention in Niagara Falls, at that time, we said that as a government the Conservative party would "strengthen the National Oil Policy by including a pipeline to Montreal as a security protection against the interruption of oil supplies from potentially unstable areas". That is what we said four years ago; that is what we urged the government to do, and that is what the government refused to do. I suggest that is why we are in the situation we find ourselves in today. Now, the Prime Minister comes before us and tells us that because the NDP have been urging this, and because we told the government it should do this four years ago, they have been converted like Paul on the road to Damascus, so they are now great advocates of this Montreal pipeline.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, may I call it five o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie)—external affairs—suggested invitation to Saudi Arabian and Algerian oil ministers to visit Canada; the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—Public Service—arbitration of salaries of clerical staff—government position in light of salaries recommended for managerial levels; the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty)—external affairs—protection of Canadian visitors to United States against being stranded if gas rationing introduced.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions, papers and public bills.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order; I believe there is a general agreement that private member's bill No. C-49 be considered today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It is my understanding that following an agreement made last week the House has decided to proceed today with the consideration of Bill C-49, appearing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

FAIR CREDIT REPORTING ACT

MEASURE TO PROTECT CONSUMERS FROM UNFAIR CREDIT REPORTING

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East) moved that Bill C-49, respecting disclosure of credit rating records, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill, which has been on the order paper now for a year, first reading having been given on January 15, 1973, is to protect Canadians from unfair credit reporting. It can be cited as the Fair Credit Reporting Act.

We have just concluded in this House a debate on the wiretapping bill to protect the privacy of Canadians from this modern source of electronic surveillance. We all know the consequences of electronic wiretapping in wrong hands. It is interesting to quote the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) when he was Minister of Justice. In a paper he delivered at Queens University he said:

● (1700)

> The orbit of privacy will be an ever shrinking one, but the need for privacy will become more paramount than ever. The law must ensure that the right to privacy remains sacrosanct.

He went on to conclude:

> The erosion of privacy is the beginning of the end of freedom.

Mr. Speaker, I can think of no better quotation to put forward in support of my bill than those very eloquent remarks by the Minister of Finance when he was Minister of Justice. Robert Merton in his book "Social theory and social structure" said:

> Privacy is not merely a personal predilection; it is an important functional requirement for the effective operation of social structure. Social systems must provide for a portion of the self which is kept apart, immune from social surveillance.

It has become trite to say that we are in a cashless society, an age of credit cards, an age of computerized data banks. As I look around at this insidious erosion of privacy represented by these data banks and widespread use of credit cards, one gets the impression we are all in a race to 1984. Certainly, it seems as if the government, which is one of the chief offenders in respect of the improper use of credit reporting—and if time permitted I could refer to the Income Tax Act—and the private sector are in headlong competition to 1984, and yet we are all the losers as a consequence. Each of us will lose unless we become seized of the problem. I realize that there are those who will put forward the argument of jurisdiction and the constitution. Certainly, it is true to say that the provinces under our constitution have great responsibilities in this area which unfortunately, at least it seems to me, all too few are prepared to discharge. The two exceptions I think of are the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia. I shall have more to say about that in a few moments.

I believe the federal government has a very important responsibility in this area because only the federal government can provide the protection under the law which will ensure a standard of privacy with regard to credit reporting right across the country. Only the federal government can provide the legislative protective framework to protect Canadians from inter-provincial and international trafficking in individual credit information, because this is what is taking place today. We have as a result of sophisticated techniques and the use of date banks, a traffic developing in credit information about each one of us, interprovincially and internationally. Indeed, it can be said that credit reporting and credit information about each one of us, has become big business. It now can be said to be a saleable commodity. It is to protect Canadians against this international and interprovincial trafficking of credit information, which is all too often erroneous, that I put forward this bill in the spirit of the constitution, given the responsibility of the federal government to protect Canadians and ensure to all Canadians the right to privacy.

Credit bureaux provide what they submit to be factual material. In their opinion this material is factual, but the whole basis on which I build my case is that all too often this material is far from factual and all too often contains very false, misleading and damaging information in respect of the individual concerned. The fact is that they do provide this kind of information in respect of more than six million Canadians per year. They have various and different methods of investigation. For example, they usually obtain information from secondary and questionable sources such as what would appear in the public media, in newspaper stories or whatever information they can obtain from the neighbours and friends of the individual under investigation. Consequently, their method of operation is not noted for its accuracy.

I might quote from the author of "Canadian Consumers Handbook", J. D. James who said:

> Credit investigators churn out files on individuals the way a sausage factory turns out sausages. Many are paid piece rate for each report turned out. The fact that there are many inaccuracies is not hard to understand.

A further quotation which I think is relevant is from an article which appeared in Maclean's magazine. Maclean's magazine did an exposé of this whole business of credit reporting. They quote a credit investigator who said, according to Maclean's:

> I always tried to get one good source anyway, but I cooked up most of the supporting ones. Some guys cook an entire report, sometimes often in alleged updating of old reports, but it's too dangerous. I've seen a man dead six months being written up as enjoying good health, seen recently, steadily employed, etc.

I will agree that that is probably an exaggeration and probably does not happen too often, but the fact is it is happening in varying degrees. The general manager of the Associated Credit Bureaux of Canada says that credit is a privilege and you must lose some of your privacy to prove you deserve it. I do not agree with that statement. I do not believe that credit can any longer be considered a privilege. Credit now is an absolute essential, an absolutely vital part of this new cashless society. In any event, I question that we should have to lose any part of our privacy in order to qualify for that.

However, it is more than a slight loss of privacy when some of the questions of credit reporters and investigators relate to very personal affairs, matters of a personal nature such as a man's drinking or driving habits, his weight, or the kind of influence that his wife has on him. All of our rights are limited unless we do something about it. The consumer, the average Canadian, has no idea of what information is on file. He may not at any time see the information that is contained therein, even though this may be vital to his very welfare or the welfare of his family because this information is kept from him and there is no law which demands that it be divulged to him on request. There is no provision for review or revision, and no provision for challenging the information contained in such files. There is no limit on the length of time that information, which is all too often erroneous or no longer relevant, such as a bankruptcy or a minor conviction for impaired driving, is to be kept on file. In other words, there is no statute of limitation.

The Consumers Association of Canada, in a survey of various Canadian cities, discovered that the accessibility of credit records to consumers was at best difficult and all too often impossible. The British Columbia privacy act has taken the right step in the direction of consumer protection, in my view, by making it an offence, actionable without proof of damage, for a person wilfully and without claim of right to violate the privacy of another.

It is worth quoting from the Ontario Law Reform Commission report of 1968 which is still, in my view, the most definitive work on this subject, notwithstanding the fact that it was brought down some five years ago. It proposes that:

> The collection of economic, commercial and social data about an individual for the use of the collector should be governed by the basic rules of (1) consent and (2) non-disclosure to others.

Therein are contained the basic elements of the protection of privacy for which my bill is put forward.

The other recommendations of the Ontario Law Reform Commission which I think are relevant concern the collection and disclosure of such data as relate to protected areas of information which should not be included, for example, religious affiliation, mental health, personal hygiene and so on. It recommended that the collection of economic, commercial and social data about individuals done with the intention and purpose of disclosure should be licensed by the province. It went on to recommend that the risk of whether a report is libelous should be placed upon the reporting agency and its source, not upon the injured individual.

Another of its recommendations is that a duplicate of every formal report made be automatically sent to the person concerned, and a periodic listing supplied in the case of informal disclosures. It recommended the setting up of machinery whereby the individual can challenge the accuracy of any item in his credit rating and require the bureau to correct its records. It recommended the placing of a time limit on the period that undesirable material may remain on file, and that the making or publishing of a false credit report should be a serious civil offence for which the injured party would be offered damages resulting in a penalty to the offender.

Unfortunately, time does not permit me to go into the very excellent legislation which has recently been brought down by the Ontario legislature, but it certainly stands as the hallmark and the guiding light for all jurisdictions in Canada, including this jurisdiction which, in my view, notwithstanding my limited knowledge of constitutional law, has a responsibility in this regard.

It might be worth putting forward an example of what can happen and what often does happen. There is one particular case which was reported, but how many cases go by undetected and how often are the lives of Canadians permanently damaged, careers destroyed and families broken up because of irresponsible credit reporting, the using of false, misleading and unreliable information. This is a story which was published in the March 1970 issue of Maclean's magazine. It is about a gentleman by the name of Bruce McGrath—no relation—and it reads:

> When he was 27, the future looked good for McGrath. He was the branch manager for a finance company at Sarnia, Ontario. He had climed aggressively, rapidly in five years, through the hierarchies of three companies. He had made some enemies on the way up. But Sarnia was home and he was well known—especially as a 150 pound but terribly tenacious quarterback of the Sarnia Golden Bears and Sarnia Imperials. Then he resigned for personal reasons, which Maclean's is satisfied had nothing to do with his ability, business judgment or honesty.

With his background, McGrath has no trouble getting job interviews with, he says, 12 different firms. In some instances he was told he was hired—but there was always a final rejection. He couldn't find out why. Then a Sarnia-based businessman offered him a job, and McGrath told him, "I don't know what it is, but something is wrong. I've had a dozen jobs offered and then withdrawn". The man called on the McGraths a few days later. He brought a personnel file compiled by a large firm that specializes in such reporting.

That report quoted unnamed previous colleagues as saying McGrath had been fired. The reason given was the unspecified charge of "loose morals".

I will not read any further, but it turns out that the information was totally false, totally erroneous. The reverse was true. As a matter of fact, he had been offered a promotion at the time he resigned, but this had seriously affected his whole life. After this gentleman had shown him the file, he tried to obtain agreement from the credit agency to have a look at the file, only to be denied it. Ironically, the gentleman who showed him the file did so at great risk because he was breaking the agreement with the credit agency by divulging that information. Furthermore, the same gentleman withdrew the very job offer which resulted in the file being divulged. The whole life of that man was altered drastically. I do not know what became of him, but I hope he has been successful. I understand he graduated from law school and probably is now a very successful lawyer. He has served us all well by having the courage to come forward to tell us what happened to him, to document what can happen to all of us and what does happen to many of us even though we never have the opportunity to know about it.

The bill before the House goes a long way toward providing the kind of privacy and protection from irresponsible credit reporting that has been brought down by the Ontario legislature. This bill will provide that kind of privacy right across Canada. It will protect Canadians from trafficking in false and misleading credit information. It will protect Canadians from having damaging information retained on their credit files, information that is no longer relevant. In other words, it will apply the principle of statutory limitation. It has a number of very good areas of consumer protection.

I am not naïve enough, Mr. Speaker, to think this bill will pass today. It merely serves as a vehicle for some of us to put forward our views on this matter, and to express our concern about it. But perhaps some day it could be the subject of further investigation and study by a parliamentary committee, and perhaps even the subject of legislation by a government that expresses concern for the privacy of Canadians, the same kind of concern that was embodied in the wiretapping bill. Perhaps that concern can be carried forward to produce this type of legislation to provide protection to Canadians against irresponsible credit reporting.

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I do not have major issue to take with the remarks just made by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), but I do feel that in this short debate there are a few points that should be underlined. I want to start by looking at some of the provisions in the bill itself.

For example in clause 8(3), concerning the permissible purposes of reports, it is important to read that it provides:

To a person which it has reason to believe (a) intends to use the information in connection with a credit transaction involving the consumer on whom the information is to be furnished and involving the . . . review . . . of an account of, the consumer;

or alternatively for review we can substitute:

—or collection of the account of, the consumer;

On these two points I have some doubts in my mind as to their adequacy, and believe there should be a considerable expansion of the intent. I feel that they leave themselves open to considerable misuse if allowed to pass in their present form, and I just want to draw this to the attention of the hon. member.

I also want to draw attention to clause 14(5), about which I also have reservations. It reads:

Except as provided in sections 20 and 21, no consumer shall have any claim against or bring any action or proceeding in the nature of defamation, invasion of privacy, or negligence with respect to the reporting of information against any consumer reporting agency, any user of information, or any person who furnishes information to a consumer reporting agency, based on information disclosed pursuant to section 13, 14 or 19, except as to false information furnished with malice or wilful intent to injure such consumer.

My reservation here is the simple one that the statements may in themselves be correct but not necessarily complete. We are all aware of what can be done with a half statement. Again, I am concerned lest there should be room here for misinterpretation because of insufficient or inadequate reporting of information.

There is one other point I want to underline, stemming from my study of the bill, and that concerns clause 15 dealing with the procedure in case of disputed accuracy. My concern is with clause 15(1) where it reads:

If the completeness or accuracy item of any information contained in his file is disputed by a consumer—

And further down the page in subclause (3) it again refers to "disputed by the consumer." My concern is that the item itself has to be disputed and not the total impact, not the effect of the report on the person reading same.

Just for a moment I wish to turn, as the hon. member did, to what has happened in the provincial field. In the statement of findings of the Consumer Affairs Conference held at Charlottetown, P.E.I., from September 10 to September 12 this year, it was reported that several of the provinces have already legislated in this area, and they advise that the procedure is working out reasonably well. It was felt that the Manitoba legislation was attractive but the Manitoba delegates pointed out that medical information was exempted in the act, as was qualified privilege, and they felt that further consideration might be given to those areas.

The provinces of British Columbia, Alberta and Prince Edward Island indicated that legislation was under active consideration and was expected to be finalized within the next year. The New Brunswick delegates claimed that they had established a satisfactory arrangement with the credit reporting agencies in their province whereby they allow persons to see their own files and, as a result, the provincial consumer bureau is not encountering any problems. The province of Nova Scotia is now working on regulations, and recommends that the agencies be registered and bonded.

It was noted that a great deal of progress had been made over the past year, and it would appear that the matter will be adequately dealt with by the provinces in the near future. Thus, as of mid-November legislation had been passed and proclaimed in Manitoba, Quebec and Saskatchewan. Ontario, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland passed similar legislation but have not yet proclaimed it. British Columbia, Alberta and Prince Edward Island in statements have indicated that legislation is under active consideration, and only New Brunswick appears not to be contemplating legislation for reasons which I have already mentioned.

I want to refer briefly to the Quebec legislation. The hon. member for St. John's East referred to the legislation passed in Ontario, which I also agree is excellent legislation. In the province of Quebec, provisions respecting a person's right of access to his credit record were incorporated into the Quebec Consumer Protection Act, in sections 43 to 46 thereof, and were proclaimed in force as of July 21, 1971. Section 43 defines as an "information agent" any person "carrying on the business of preparing and distributing to others credit reports respecting character, reputation and solvency of a person." Section 45 provides that any person may, during business hours, see any information gathered, and credit reports in the hands of an information agent, and may make written comments which must be added to his credit record.

He may also, for a fee determined by regulation to be a flat 50 cents, plus an additional 50 cents per page, obtain a copy of his credit record. The information agent is not bound to disclose to anyone the source of his information about him, unless the source appears in the credit record.

A report by Mr. F. J. E. Jordan, who is special assistant to the Deputy Attorney General of Canada, entitled "Privacy, Computer Data Banks, Communications and the Constitution" was addressed primarily to the question of a person's right to privacy as affected by such technological developments as the computer, but many of his findings would be applicable to the specific question of an individual's credit rating, whether or not such a rating was stored or disseminated in computerized form.

Concerning institutions specifically named by the BNA Act as being subject to federal jurisdiction, Mr. Jordan discusses the banks, and the business of banking as an example of a subject area coming under parliament's full jurisdiction. Adapting his analysis to the question of the privacy of credit rating, it could be argued that the Bank Act could be amended to set out the conditions under which banks could supply information about their customers' credit standing to such agencies as credit bureaux. Mr. Jordan finds it not unreasonable to suggest that parliament could go beyond applying its jurisdiction over statistics to the statistics collecting activities of the federal government, and extend it to "similar activities by other persons." Applying this idea to the credit rating area the argument could be developed that, to the extent that information about the credit rating of individuals takes on numerical or statistical form, the treatment of such ratings might be brought under the control of parliament.

● (1730)

Mr. Jordan also examines the celebrated peace, order and good government clause of the constitution. He comments that the operation of a nationwide computer data banking system might become a subject of national interest concerning the body politic, and this might suggest that such a data bank ought to come under the peace, order and good government provisions.

Mr. Jordan discusses the possibility of using the federal government's jurisdiction over matters of criminal law as a means of achieving some control over the gathering and dissemination of information via computer banks. He observes that certain activities on the part of data bank operators could be prohibited under the criminal law. Mr. Jordan also observes that the criminal law is in essence prohibitory rather than regulatory and this would, he implies, limit its utility in controlling the activities of data bank operators. It would appear to be questionable also, for similar reasons, whether the criminal law power could be successfully invoked to control the activities of credit raters.

Mr. Jordan discusses certain other constitutional powers of the federal government which could, by some arguments, be invoked to support federal control over data banks. These include jurisdiction over copyrights, jurisdiction over trade and commerce, the federal right to incorporate companies with other than provincial objects, parliament's right to bring within its jurisdiction such works as it declares to be "for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces" even though such works may be wholly situated within one province, and parliament's jurisdiction over "local works and undertakings" that are "connecting the province with any other or others of the provinces, or extending beyond the limits of the province."

These constitutional heads have somewhat less interest, in a discussion of credit rating agencies and their control, than they might have in a discussion of computerized information systems, whether or not run by credit raters. It might be noted, however, that if credit raters in Canada computerize their operations extensively, and if such operations develop interprovincial and even international aspects, as could happen if the credit ratings of Canadians were stored in computers beyond the borders of the country, parliament's jurisdiction over local works and undertakings extending beyond the limits of the province might assume considerable significance.

I also want to make some comments about a bill passed by the Senate of the United States, called the Truth in Lending Act. I would mention some rather interesting points about that act which might be borne in mind when any legislation in this field is being drawn up in the future. Under that act, merchants would have to mail bills at least 14 days before payment is due; otherwise, they would be barred from charging interest on revolving credit. If a customer's payment on a revolving account is received before it is due, a finance charge is prohibited. Further, discrimination against credit applicants on the basis of sex or marriage status would become unlawful.

If we were to introduce such provisions, I wonder how we would get over our problems in Canada, inasmuch as we have not resolved the matter of equal status and equal rights in other areas. The prohibition against discrimination—I am talking about equal status—would apply in the approval or denial of credit and in the determination of credit terms; and it would cover just about all kinds of credit transactions, including consumer, mortgage and business loans.

Another interesting provision is this: companies that extend credit would be given 30 days to respond to customer inquiries about bills and would be required to settle disputes within 90 days. One problem that some people seem to have encountered is that when they get into a dispute concerning a credit account, the computer keeps on churning out the interest charges while the discussion is going on. Sometimes it seems impossible to stop the machines. Another interesting feature of this bill provides that until a company giving the credit has complied with all requirements for resolving billing differences it would be barred from dunning a customer, threatening him with a bad credit report or taking other action to collect disputed bills.

I am very much afraid that as we are moving into the era of computerized records we, individually, as the hon. member for St. John's East suggested, will face a situation in which, unknown to us, there will be files with information about us and we shall not have any chance to dispute the correctness of the information. Yet that information can be made available to other persons when we are being hired, when we are applying loans or, for that matter, to people acting in many other areas. For example, consider what happens to a husband and wife when they separate or have a dispute and the wife wants to obtain information on what her husband is doing, or vice versa. I am concerned about information which may be stored in computer banks or elsewhere, information of which we have no knowledge and which, therefore, we may not demand to see, not knowing of its existence. That is potentially a dangerous situation.

The bill we are discussing is excellent in principle. I submit it needs to be given a tremendous amount of study and consideration. I suggest that by this discussion we may be opening the door for legislation which is contemplated for the new year, possibly in the next session. I hope we shall see a bill incorporating many of the suggestions made by the hon. member for St. John's East in order to provide the type of protection which I think we have all indicated we find desirable.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) has done us a service by introducing this bill. No area of consumer relations or of consumer problems is more complicated and thorny and creates greater difficulties for consumers than the area we are discussing. We run across this problem all the time. Little has been done to cope with it at the federal level. Some years ago we had a study on consumer credit. Not much by way of legislation resulted from that study.

By introducing this lengthy and elaborate bill, I think the hon. member for St. John's East has shown a good understanding of the complexities we encounter in dealing with problems of this kind. What he left unsaid, the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) may have filled in, inasmuch as he indicated possible abuses connected with computers. Possibly, this bill could be called an act to prevent the invasion of privacy.

Mr. Atkey: The teeth have been drawn from the government's bill.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Perhaps we ought to call this bill the restoration of privacy act, or a bill for the restoration of privacy in certain areas. We are dealing with a tremendously difficult area. After all, credit is a facility for enabling one to live beyond one's income and, in far too many cases, this ability creates many difficulties. The provinces have probably been wrestling with the problem more successfully up to this point than has the federal government. This is an excellent bill. It is a long and complicated bill. We cannot deal with it in detail today because this is not the proper place to do that. A bill of this type ought to be introduced before an appropriate consumers affairs committee. It should be studied there; there should be careful scrutiny, with witnesses called and all the rest. This matter is much more complicated than meets the eye.

I thoroughly agree with the points that have been raised. The hon. member for St. John's East has been receiving the same type of letters as the rest of us, complaining about neighbours being used as snoopers or being approached to give evidence which is often very unreliable and which forms the basis of irresponsible credit reports.

I have received many complaints. Not only do these snoopers go into how much these people are in arrears, but they go into their personal lives in detail. Neighbours are asked about the marital status of the person being investigated. They are asked whether the individual who comes around in the evening is the husband or someone else. Questions such as this do not have anything to do with a credit rating and are an insult to the person under investigation.

I do not know whether we should have the exact type of credit reporting bureau that is suggested in this bill, but we should have some type of bureau with people who have expert knowledge and can deal with complaints. People have every right to know their credit rating at any time. They should have the same right to know their credit rating as their bank standing. They can go into the bank at any time to determine the state of their account. They should also be able to make the same inquiry as to the state of their credit rating. This could only be ensured by legislation.

My province has been slower than some which have legislation in this regard, but they are now working on it. We have a new consumers department. I know this matter is slated for consideration in the spring session of the legislature. It will be a great blessing to people who are in difficulty because of their credit situation.

I do not intend to make a long speech, because a great deal has already been said. Coming from the west, I can identify with the conditions that have been described on the east coast as well as those described by the hon.

member for Vaudreuil in Quebec. This question is Canada-wide in its application and should be dealt with by the federal parliament through the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

I hope that legislation covering this credit aspect will be introduced before very long. The problem is getting more and more serious as devices for invading privacy become more and more diverse and embarrassing. While my hon. friend may say that all privacy has gone, there are people who have managed to keep a few shreds of it and they would like to be able to maintain that position. I very much hope this bill will be given second reading and referred to the standing committee to be examined at leisure and in depth. This is something for which many of us have been pressing for a good many years.

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, as a new member in this House, and having a passing interest in the field of privacy, I was delighted early in the session when I noted the bill before us today, Bill C-49, standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath). Indeed, I think I can say this is one of the most sophisticated pieces of legislation in the field of privacy that we have seen this session. It is to the credit of that hon. member that this bill should come before the House to be debated today and perhaps referred to a standing committee for further consideration.

Three years ago the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs made a few passing references to problems of the sort that are dealt with in this bill. They referred to the interprovincial and international flow of personal information through telecommunication facilities linking computers with central data banks. They pointed out that no new development in trade and commerce has ever had more need for or been less subjected to regulation than the private data being programmed into and transmitted by such systems.

The government of Canada, to its credit, in April, 1971, commissioned a task force on privacy and computers which dealt with many of the considerations which have been discussed in this debate. There is a great deal of valuable information as to existing operations in the private sector and in the government of Canada. As I pointed out on Tuesday of this week, that report went a long way to alerting Canadians to many of the dangers, not only in the credit field but in other fields, of applied computer uses; existing and potential dangers and threats to the individual privacy of millions of Canadians.

In response to comments by a number of members the other night about the work that has yet to be done in the field of privacy, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) gave some indication of government support. I wish to quote briefly from his words as reported at page 8406 of Hansard:

> But I do anticipate us coming forward with additional measures, both in relation to computers and in other ways, to further protect individual privacy in this country . . .
> We must move to meet these advances and techniques in our time. We are doing so at this particular time in respect of the devices for intrusion related to the conversations of individuals. We will do so step by step and without delay with regard to other areas. It was for this reason that we commissioned the study on privacy and computers, and followed it up with action inside the government to determine how we could most effectively carry out the recommendations or suggestions which are implicit in the work which went on in producing that report.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway).]

Here are the key words:

> The House will before long see the fruits of some of that labour, and with that we will continue to do what we are doing in respect of this bill in protection of privacy.

I can suggest no better place to start than for the government to consider Bill C-49 standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East. A few technical problems were pointed out by the hon. member opposite. I do not share so many of his concerns of a constitutional nature. I looked at some of the problems in that field. I think this could provide a good starting point for work in the standing committee. One of the great problems in approaching this field of attempting to alert Canadians to the dangers is to assist them in appreciating what we are talking about when we deal with the right to privacy. The right to privacy is perhaps accepted by many members of the House as a substantive legal right, yet in non-lawyers' language what does it really mean? I think the task force on computers and privacy came close to coming to grips with that question. The task force said:

> Thus, the claim to privacy, as we know it, is eminently a phenomenon of the industrial and postindustrial age in which the exigencies of urban life have led to an atomic concept of society in place of the earlier organic model. Formerly, in moving from the country to the city, physical solitude was traded for anonymity. The exchange is increasingly nullified and anonymity is compromised by the spread of information systems and networks while solitude in cities has been largely lost. Moreover, the process is one way: institutions learn more about individuals, but individuals learn no more about the institutions, or even about what the institutions learn about them.

To put that in simple language, Canadians fear the powers of mass surveillance which large corporations can exercise through the use of computers. They fear this power because they do not have access to it and they do not understand it. In a recent book entitled "Private Lives and Public Surveillance", the author, Mr. James B. Rule, referred to this question of the invasion of privacy particularly in the consumer credit field. He used the term "mass surveillance" as an appropriate one to typify the view most people have of the use of computers in that field. In describing mass surveillance and human repression, he said this:

> If the erosion of personal privacy represents, for most people, one of unpleasant consequences of mass surveillance, then the abridgement of personal freedom represents the other. People instinctively feel that the appetite of corporate agencies for personal data is not simply whimsical. They feel rather that information so collected is apt to bear on subsequent decision-making, and that such decision-making may work to their disadvantage. The case studies have shown that these perceptions are quite correct, at least as far as they go. The question is: has this inquiry also revealed an over-all trend toward totalitarian repressiveness in the model of "1984"?

I would answer that question in the affirmative. I was interested to note the reference by the hon. member for St. John's East to the experience of a young businessman who later became a law student and then a lawyer in Sarnia, Ontario. This young man, Mr. Bruce McGrath, was a law student of mine and I had occasion to spend many hours with him on a personal basis discussing his situation, one which was so carefully described by the hon. member for St. John's East.

The psychological damage which had been done to this young man as a result of the error which had been made and transmitted, in terms of his job prospects and credit rating, was painfully evident. I understand the agony which this man suffered and I imagine there are thousands of Canadians who have suffered in similar circumstances. If we as legislators can enact laws which will reduce the incidence of this suffering, or even eliminate it, we shall have gone a long way toward making our society a better place in which to live.

Finally, I want to mention a related field involving the use of computers in the collection of data concerning offences against the criminal law. I refer specifically to the Canadian Police Information Centre which is now in operation collecting data on many millions of Canadians, not only concerning offences which have been committed but concerning investigations and personal information on individuals which may or may not be accurate and which, if revealed to certain people, could cause great damage to the person concerned.

This represents one of the most blatant invasions of the individual right to privacy our society has yet seen. For some weeks a number of questions have been on the order paper in my name asking the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) for more information about this system. Answers have not yet been forthcoming. I trust this is another area in which we may see legislation passed giving Canadians the guarantees and protection they require if they are to retain any right of privacy.

Mr. Paul McRae (Fort William): I see it is almost six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. There is, therefore, no time left in which to launch into a discussion of this topic except to say I think there is a great deal of unanimity among all parties that this bill should be looked at very carefully by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in an attempt to fill in the gaps left in the provincial field which make consumer reporting a dangerous thing for many Canadians.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I realise that the time allotted to this debate has expired and that there is not time for the question to be put. I wish to thank all hon. members who have participated in the debate. I appreciate the worth-while suggestion by the hon. member who has just resumed his seat and I hope the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will indeed take a look at this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale), that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortage or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time an referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, when five o'clock was called I was dealing with the latest chapter in the love affair between the Liberals and NDP. Since I finished speaking I have heard the most recent episode in this courtship, and that is that the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) was contacted—

Mr. Baldwin: Please!

Mr. Hees: I am sorry, I mean the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) was contacted in Alberta a short time ago and was reported to be overjoyed. He is reported to have said that this is the greatest victory the NDP has ever had, and he has assured the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) publicly, as he did privately before he went on his trip, that he would support the government on Monday night. So for the time being that is the end of this delightful little love story, but I suppose more and more chapters will unfold as this session and the next session go on.

I was also talking about the great need for steps that must be taken if this country is to be made self-sufficient in energy, not just in the immediate future but in the years ahead. The first thing I said the government must do is to come to grips with, and not just talk about, the building of the Montreal pipeline. Today the Prime Minister spoke glibly of that and said it was going ahead. We have been hearing that for months, Mr. Speaker. He makes this announcement every few days whenever he thinks that the NDP's love might be flagging a little. Just as you tell your girl or your wife several times a day you really do love her, so he keeps assuring the hon. member for York South that he really is going to build the Montreal pipeline. He came through with a few more goodies today.

The hon. member for Peace River—I am sorry, I mean York South. The reason I keep saying Peace River is that I am thinking of the former leader of the Social Credit party. I mean of course, the hon. member for York South. Any time his affection seems to be flagging, the Prime Minister can be counted upon to come forward with new assurances to keep him in line.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are all mixed up.

Mr. Hees: Besides getting this Montreal pipeline built so that Canadian oil can be used to supply Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, we must also find the additional oil that is going to be needed to supply all of Canada's needs in the future. We know that today Quebec and the Atlantic provinces together use some 900,000 barrels of oil per day, which when the pipeline to Montreal is finally completed in some two to three years will amount at least to an additional one million barrels a day that have to be found.

Where is that extra oil going to come from? Obviously, most of that oil has not yet been discovered. We must find this additional oil because we cannot in any way interfere with the one million barrels a day of oil and the 250,000 barrels a day of petroleum products which we deliver by contract to the United States. I think it is obvious to all members of this House and to all Canadians that any attempt to do divert even a small part of that solemnly entered into commitment would have a catastrophic effect both on our trading relationships with the United States, where we export 70 per cent of all our export products, and on our general relationship, on which we rely so heavily, with our neighbour to the south. In order to have enough oil to look after our needs for the future, we will have to discover two barrels of new oil per day for each barrel that we use. If we do not discover new oil at this rate, in ten years we are going to start running out of this fuel.

Let us ask ourselves how we have been doing in this regard in recent years. The sad story is that during the past three years we have discovered only one new barrel for each barrel of oil that we have been using. So the next question is: Where must we find the additional oil we are going to need? The answer, of course, is that it must come mostly from three places, the Arctic islands, the Mackenzie delta, and off the east coast of Canada.

The next question is: How much money should we be spending each year on exploration to produce both our present needs and the additional oil we are going to need in the future? The answer to that given by the oil industry, the people who have to do the discovering, and the only people who are doing this discovery work now, is that we must spend in the future a minimum of $750 million a year. The present indication is that, because of the lack of confidence that the oil industry has in the policies of this government, the amount of money that will be spent next year, 1974, will be only about half of this $750 million. This, of course, will leave this country very, very short of the oil we are going to need, and we must do something about it.

The reason this discovery process is being slowed down so materially is that the oil industry on which we have to rely to find this new oil is very, very dissatisfied with the decision-making process of this government. Unless they can get the decisions that must be made by this government in the very near future, we will be very short of the oil we will need in the future.

What are the oil companies trying to find out? First of all, they want to find out—and have been waiting for 2½ years to get this information, with no result whatsoever—the federal government's stand on the question of permits, leases and royalties in respect of Arctic and offshore oil that will be discovered as a result of the exploratory programs of the oil industry. Until these answers are given to the petroleum industry, the companies which will be putting up the risk capital to do this work in discovery of new petroleum will not spend any more than the projected amount I have given, that is, $375 million in 1974 instead of twice that amount, $750 million, which is the amount that must be spent if we are to find new oil now to enable this country to become self-sufficient in the future.

The government must make up its mind on what it intends to do regarding these matters, and let the oil companies know just what that intention is. It must sit down and discuss these matters with the oil industry and work out mutually satisfactory solutions. When it does that, the oil companies will go out and spend this $750 million. They want to do this and are anxious to do it, but they will not do it until they find out from this government how it intends to treat the finds they make at great cost to themselves. I think we all agree that is a very fair stand for the petroleum industry.

The second thing that has held back the production of additional oil products is the lack of a decision to go ahead with the Athabasca tar sands. This afternoon the Prime Minister spoke glibly about the way this project is going to go forward. It is not going to go forward until the Syncrude Corporation is advised by this government that it is willing to treat the 50 per cent net profit, that portion which by agreement will accrue to the Alberta government, in exactly the same way as any other royalty paid to any other government, for tax purposes, by the federal government. When the Syncrude Corporation is advised that this government is willing to treat 50 per cent of the net profits in that way, then the Syncrude project will go forward. It will not go forward until the federal government makes that information available. It is as simple as that. The Prime Minister can make all the syrupy speeches he wants, trying to build confidence in this country, about how this big project is going ahead; but I tell you it will not go ahead until this government gets off the seat of its pants, does a little thinking and lets the oil industry know what it is going to do in respect of this important matter.

Something that should disturb all of us who are interested in the provision of fuel for this country, and who are particularly interested in the magnificent Syncrude project, is information that the United States government has just issued the first six permits required to develop the oil shales of Colorado. This is a similar type of project to the Athabasca tar sands. If this project gets into production before the Syncrude project, this may very easily diminish very considerably the value of the Athabasca tar sands.

The oil industry in Canada is very worried about this aspect of the whole proposition, but the government does not seem to pay any attention to this concern. It seems to think we have the Athabasca tar sands production all to ourselves, it can do what it wants and take all the time it wants. Those in the oil industry who know of this matter will tell you that the Colorado oil shales represent a very worrying aspect of this whole matter. For that reason, this government should make a decision and so advise the Syncrude Corporation, allowing that very important resource to be developed in the shortest possible time.

Finally, the petroleum industry in Canada is holding back on the expansion of its operations because the government has largely removed from the National Energy Board the advisory function that was definitely granted it by the National Energy Board Act when it was passed in 1959. In the years following the passing of that act, the oil and gas industry learned to have great confidence in the recommendations of that board because those recommendations were based upon facts and not on political considerations. These facts and recommendations were made known to the oil and gas industry. The government, of course, had the right to decide on oil policy. But when the National Energy Board had the right to advise the government and make that advice known to the oil and gas industry, the industry knew the government was making these decisions, whatever they may be, on the basis of facts and not just on the basis of political considerations.

The government's oil policy today is decided 100 per cent in this way. What bothers the oil industry so much today is that these decisions are not only political but, as we have seen in the last few weeks, they can be changed two or three times in a single week. When an industry requires up to eight years from the time the decision to develop a project is made until the final production of the oil and gas, one can understand why such an industry cannot have any confidence in decisions based on political considerations, as they are now, and changed as rapidly as are the decisions of this government.

The speech made by the Prime Minister today is the greatest example of how the decisions of this government can change almost daily. His speech contained assertions that the government intends to do those things which a few days or weeks ago it stated flatly, over and over again, it would not do. Now, because the party to the left, the NDP, put the heat on and said it would defeat the government on Monday night if it did not come to terms and do exactly what that party wanted done, the Prime Minister has changed his mind. His speech could easily have been written by the hon. member for York South. My information is that that member did have a great deal to do with the writing of this speech. One thing that has been proved beyond any shadow of a doubt is that in the future Canada is going back to the two-party system; there will be a free enterprise party and a socialist party.

Both the Liberal Party and the NDP have a very celebrated day—December 6, 1973. It is going to be known as "A" day, amalgamation day. They will celebrate it together. There will be bonfires burning in their caucuses tonight, and everybody will be very very happy indeed.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The same old rag that has not been washed.

Mr. Stanfield: You should do some washing over there.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that this country will not be self-sufficient in respect of energy for not only the immediate future but the long-term future unless four very definite things are done. I will sum them up. First of all, the government—

Mr. Woolliams: A new government.

Mr. Hees: Yes. This is one of the very reassuring things, that in a very short space of time a Conservative government will do these things. There is no question about it. Don't kid yourselves about that. First of all, the government must stop talking about the building of the Montreal extension of the oil pipeline. It must get down to the question of appropriations and the provision of the steel and the labour needed. It must have an actual timetable in respect of getting ahead with the building of this pipeline. Let them stop talking and let them do something for once. That is the first thing which must be taken on as a project of priority without any delay.

Second, the government must discuss with the petroleum industry the government's ideas regarding the ground rules pertaining to permits, leases and royalties as they affect Arctic and offshore oil, and work out a mutually satisfactory arrangement with the industry on these important aspects of how they will operate. Third, the government must advise the management of the Syncrude project that it will treat for tax purposes the net profit paid to the Alberta government in the same manner as any other royalty.

Mr. Speaker, I have wakened these deadbeat Liberals on the other side of the House. Most of these people have not spoken two words in two months and now they are all jabbering; they are alive and listening. I hope they will learn something, because there is plenty they can learn and I am telling it to them now. The next thing the government must do is transfer back to the National Energy Board the advisory function which was given to it by the National Energy Board Act of 1959. This advisory function was given to it under a Conservative government. This satisfied the National Energy Board. This should be done now so that we will get away from the type of oil policy indulged in by the Liberal government at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, I happen to write my own speeches and I do not mind when I hear this clap trap from the minister and his confreres. I say that what is needed in this whole matter is a revision of the government's decision-making process. Really now there is no decision-making process. The only people who make decisions in the conglomeration of Liberals and New Democrats are the New Democrats. They wrote that policy today: it was their policy and not that of the government.

I say, for heaven's sake get down to a policy-making process which will convince the petroleum industry that you know what you are doing, so that they can make their plans, can make the additional discoveries needed and can bring these locations into production so that this country can at long last become self-sufficient in respect of energy. I urge the government to do this in a very short space of time. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that when a Conservative government takes over very soon, these are the kind of policies that this country will see.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, the reaction of the Conservative Party which we have seen this evening is one of shock, distress and frustration. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) said to me, in his very good rhetoric, a few minutes ago that the distress of the Conservative Party reminded him of the farmer on the Prairies who went to milk a cow during a lightning storm and was left holding the bag.

An hon. Member: I didn't get it.

Mr. Nystrom: Anyway, Mr. Speaker. I am very amused by the reaction of the Conservative Party tonight. Their leader said in Vancouver recently that they wanted a staged price increase for consumers of petroleum products in this country, and they wanted that price increase to go away up almost to the level of the international price. This is what the Leader of the Conservative Party wanted for the consumers of Canada.

If we look at the price of petroleum in this country today, we see there is a difference of $2.20 a barrel between the domestic price and the international price. If the Conservative Party wanted to lift the price freeze, it would mean that over the next few years the oil companies of this country, because they have some ten billion barrels of assets in Canada, would be getting a windfall of some $22 billion. This would be the result if we listened to the Conservative Party. That is exactly what the Conservative Party wanted to do. It is very interesting to look at the party to my right and see some of the difficulty that that party faces. I have here an article from the Toronto Star of December 5 which quotes the energy minister of the province of Ontario when speaking to Albertans. He said:

—they have a responsibility to hold the price on our conventional oil and gas and protect the nation and people—

He also stressed that this refers to all people in Canada. He went on to say this, which I find very interesting:

—Canada has proven conventional oil reserves of about ten billion barrels. "If we bump the price by $5 a barrel—and there are plenty of people that are talking about $9 oil in Canada at the wellhead—there'll be a windfall for somebody of $50 billion"—

Those are the words of Darcy McKeough, the minister of energy in the province of Ontario. Here we have a national Conservative Party that wants to take price controls off energy in the country and allow the price to float in relation to what the international price may be, whatever it may be. I do not wish to comment on the statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made today, except to say one of the significant things in it is that we now have some public involvement in the oil industry in this country. How much that may be will be seen some time in the future.

We must take this energy situation very seriously. It is an important issue, not just for now but for the future of this country. We must have a policy which includes not only price but also those who own and control the industry in this country. To us in this party, this is very important. We suggest there should be public ownership of the energy resources of this country and that, like electricity, any energy should be treated as a public utility and should not be left solely in the hands of national and international cartels.

I suggest that the announcement made by the Prime Minister today is the beginning of some kind of public involvement in the gas industry in Canada. But I would like to see all future energy resources in this country treated as a public utility, under public ownership, through joint co-operation between the various provinces and the federal government. I can assure you that some provinces would be very interested in that type of proposal.

The development of energy resources could be financed through public ownership quite easily. For example, we could channel the revenues from the export tax, which will amount to millions of dollars annually if the situation remains as it is, into the development of energy resources for the public. If there is to be a price increase some time in the future, we could earmark the increase over the cost of the oil industry toward the development of that industry under public ownership.

These are just a couple of proposals regarding the future development of gas and oil in this country. Many people in this House have heard complaints that the oil industry does not have enough incentives. A few minutes ago the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) said that the oil industry does not have the confidence of this country and therefore it will not develop. I wonder why they say that. All they have to do is look at the profit picture for the last year to see whether or not the oil industry has enough incentive.

First of all, we find that the price per barrel that the oil industry receives has gone up by 95 cents in 1973. That is an increase of 37 per cent that the oil companies are getting. This is before any kind of price freeze or export tax has been levied by the government. This increase that the government has granted them has brought the oil companies some $700,000 this year, and some companies have had profits of some 87 per cent. I suggest that that is a hefty increase for the oil companies and a real incentive, as the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) said. I think the time has come when there must be public control and public ownership of the energy resources of our country.

I think, for example, that the price control to which the Prime Minister referred regarding energy should not be lifted at the end of next April but should be a permanent part of the energy policy of this country, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said in the House yesterday. There is no reason at all why there should not be some permanent price controls on energy in this country, which would be adjusted only when the oil companies have legitimate increases in cost. And the price should not be adjusted to give the oil industry additional profits.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nystrom: That is an idea to which this party wants to hold the Prime Minister when he refers to unnecessary profiteering by the gas and oil industry. It is a selective control that our party is advocating. It is not like the phony 90-day freeze that the Conservative Party is advocating on commodities, on wages and prices across this country. That would not help anyone; it would only hurt the pensioner and the low income earner.

I also suggest that the export tax be a permanent feature of our gas and oil policy. If there are any windfall gains to be made in the gas and oil industry, those gains should come back to the people of this country who own the resources, not to some foreign-based, multinational corporations. The windfall gains that are made could be channelled into a fund, for example into the Canadian Development Corporation for the development of the tar sands, the development of the resources in the north and in other parts of this country under public ownership, so the people of Canada could reap the benefits, rather than the few entrepreneurs who live outside our borders.

All one has to do is look at some of the real effects that foreign ownership has had in our oil industry to realize the emergency proportion it has reached. I find that over $1 billion is leaving Canada this year in terms of dividends and profits from the oil industry and finding its way into the hands of foreign investors, perhaps in the United States. Much of that $1 billion is used for exploration outside of this country, such as in the North Sea. Another statistic I have is that about 86 per cent of the dividends on the earnings made by oil corporations in this country go outside of Canada, and only 14 per cent stay here for exploration, development and expansion. In my opinion, that is an example of the negative value of foreign ownership and control.

It is not only that. When you have that type of control of the oil industry, you find there is a lack of jobs. For example, the petrochemical industry is not developed in Canada, but elsewhere. This is one of the by-products of foreign ownership. You will find that in times of emergency, such as we have now, an oil corporation may divert some of its supplies from one destination to another. Multinational oil companies are huge international private governments; they are huge elephants that stamp around in countries as if those countries were small ants scurrying to get out of the way of the big feet of the elephant. In the House we have a perfect lobby for these companies, namely, the Progressive Conservative Party. We should tell the people of Canada about it as loudly, as clearly and as often as we possibly can.

I think we should do all we can to force the government of this country to become more and more involved in the gas and oil industry on behalf of the people of Canada, because that industry belongs to the people and we have the money, technology and resources to develop it. Therefore, we should develop it for the use of the Canadian people. If we do that, Canada might have a great future, because there is a genuine shortage of energy throughout the world and if Canada developed its own energy industry this could have a real spin-off effect in other industries. Countries in western Europe, countries like Japan, Great Britain and perhaps the United States, will want to import more manufactured goods and have a high energy input some time in the future.

If we in Canada have our own energy resources and an abundant supply of them at the cheapest possible price, we will be able to produce more goods for export to other countries that might be less fortunate in terms of gas and oil. I suggest it is important that we keep pushing the government now and in the future toward getting more involved in the gas and oil industry of this country. As I said, I think we can do it. I think we should be encouraging the government now to buy out the major oil companies. If we did that, we would be on the way to real public involvement in the gas and oil industry. If we expanded and used the export tax, the tax revenues on gas and oil, we would have in this country within 10 or 15 years an energy industry wholly owned by the people. We would not have to take over the oil companies. In 10 or 15 years their assets would be depleted and they would be a public utility, under public control and ownership, a people's oil industry that would serve the people of this country. Any profits that were made would stay here, and any oil man will tell you that the oil industry today is very profitable, for they are raking in literally millions and millions of dollars.

Any decisions that were made would then be made here in Canada for the public good, not the private good, and any jobs created in the petroleum industry would be here in Canada. We could develop an industrial structure that was responsive to our needs both social and economic. The bill we are debating today, I see as a small part in the national energy policy that this country should be evolving in the next 12 or 15 years.

The allocation bill we have before us will give the government some of the powers to take the steps that I and others in my party want taken, and that I suggest the people of the country want taken. A Gallup poll conducted a few months ago showed that the majority of the people of the country want the energy resources of the country, including gas and oil, brought under public ownership and control. It also showed that the Liberals and Conservatives surveyed preferred to have energy resources owned by the people rather than by foreign-based, multinational corporations. That is the direction in which we should be moving. We can move in that direction. Other countries have done so and there is no reason why Canada should not.

We have the resources, Mr. Speaker. In the oil sands of Alberta and Saskatchewan we have in oil reserves as much as all of the Arab states put together. We should not allow the tar sands to be sold out in the same way that the oil industry to date has been sold out to foreigners. As a result, the oil policy of this country has been established by foreign-based, multinational corporations in the private sector. The time has come to change that policy and have a public input on behalf of the people of the country.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I was delighted today by the statement made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) in which he clearly illustrated that the government intends, in a very forceful and dramatic way—

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be disagreeable to my colleague, but according to an established tradition of the House, after a ministerial statement, a spokesman for each party is asked to make appropriate comments. In this circumstance, I think that it would be entirely normal for the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) who is the spokesman for the Social Credit

Party of Canada in the House. I respectfully submit this point of order so that the established customs of the House be followed.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his intervention. The Chair does its best to recognize hon. members according to the number of members in the parties. I can advise the hon. member and the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), to whom I have just directed a note, that after the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) completes his speech, and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) speaks, the hon. member for Lotbinière will be recognized. I hope this will be done before ten o'clock. It is the practice of the Chair to try to see that at least one member of each party is recognized during any one day of debate. The hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Cafik: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I started off by saying I am delighted with the statement made by the Prime Minister today, indicating in no uncertain terms that the government intends to exercise control over the development of our natural resources and to see that the corporations, multinational or otherwise, act in such a way as to maximize protection for the consumer, particularly the consumer of home heating oil products.

Bill C-236 clearly restates our desire to have complete control over emergency supply allocations in Canada and is a welcome move. It is an emergency step to deal with the emergency situation in which we now find ourselves, but if passed by parliament it will be available as a permanent piece of legislation for use in any other such emergencies in times to come. The broad powers provided under the bill are necessary in order to protect our economy, the essential services of the country, and more particularly the oil consumer in terms of supply and prices.

It will also protect something that is very close to the hearts and minds of all Canadians, in that the independent distributors of petroleum products can now be assured that they will not be squeezed out of the marketplace by the multinational corporations who may have a vested interest in serving themselves rather than the independent dealers with whom they were happy to deal in the past.

Through this bill we are also ensuring the best use of our distribution system—ship, rail, truck and pipeline—to see that the private sector behaves in a good corporate way in meeting the national objective of getting energy supplies to all Canadians and to the essential public services which require them. Of course, at a time of crisis and high demand we must hedge the public against what might be termed corporate greed, against the self-interest of the multinationals who can arbitrarily dislocate the economy and national well-being of our citizens at large. This crisis has provided Canada with a tremendous opportunity to act now and dramatically exert national control over multinational corporations to make sure they serve the best interests of all Canadians, and to ensure that for years to come, for centuries to come, this country will be self-sufficient in energy supplies.

The Prime Minister spoke not only in terms of oil supplies but in terms of delivery systems. However, Bill C-236, now before the House is directed more toward delivery than supply. There is no question that supplies are a problem of a worldwide nature, and in particular for developing countries. It was interesting that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) did not seem to recognize this point, and I gather that the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) does not recognize it either.

The hon. member, speaking of supplies, talked about the Syncrude project and indicated that as a result of the Americans going forward with their shale development project in the United States this might well lessen the value of our tar sands unless we develop them rather quickly. To me, this implies a feeling on his part that once these two projects are developed we will have a world surplus of oil then and in the future. That flies directly in the face of the well known fact that, with the passage of time, the world will still be in an energy crisis and alternative energy supplies must be developed. I do not know how the Conservatives can have it both ways, one talking about the tremendous energy crisis and another saying we had better hurry up the development of tar sands because, if we do not, the Americans will beat us with their shale project and therefore we will not have anything worth while in Canada. That does not seem to be at all consistent.

Another matter with respect to the rather nebulous position of the Conservative Party in regard to this overall problem is the fact that during the 1972 election campaign, and afterwards, I was under the impression that the Conservatives were the party who wanted to have wage and price controls. The simple fact now is that every time controls are put on one sector of the economy or another by the government in order to protect the consumers, the Conservatives cry "foul". Their leader, when in Vancouver the other day, indicated that when the petroleum price freeze is lifted he would like to see staged increases. That does not sound very consistent to me.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I have heard quoted two or three times today what my leader is alleged to have said in Vancouver.

An hon. Member: Don't you know what was said?

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) would mind keeping quiet.

An hon. Member: What is your point?

Mr. Woolliams: At no time did he make that statement.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Woolliams: I have seen the script.

An hon. Member: But were you there?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Obviously, a point of debate has arisen. The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) will be recognized, as I indicated before, immediately following the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), and he can read into the record what was actually said. I think we should proceed in the traditional method of debate. If hon. members disagree with each other, this is a free place; they have the right to rise and state their disagreement.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask the hon. member to co-operate with the Chair. The point concerns him, but this is the essence of debate. In a few minutes he will have a chance to present a rebuttal of the case presented by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, surely, notwithstanding the rules of debate, the truth is important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare has the floor.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I say, with due respect to the hon. member for Calgary North—I do respect him—that it is evident that I am quoting from what I believe to be the statement made. I do not think I am wrong.

Mr. Woolliams: You are.

Mr. Cafik: I am sure the record will show in due course that what I have read from the statement made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) indicates that he has advocated the staging of price increases after the freeze has been lifted on January 31, 1974. If that is not true, that will be fine: I will be glad to see that the Leader of the Opposition has come to his senses and realizes that this is not a good position to advocate.

In any event, this government certainly does not subscribe to that position. The Prime Minister indicated eloquently today that we do not believe there ought to be staged increases after the price freeze comes off. He said in no uncertain terms that it was his view that we should have voluntary controls until at least the end of the present heating season. I subscribe to that view.

An hon. Member: Then how high would it go?

Mr. Cafik: An hon. member asks, "Then how high would it go?" Finally, Mr. Speaker, what we have preached has finally stuck, has finally come home. We have said that wage and price controls advocated by those on the other side of the House would, once the lid had been lifted, only serve to create artificial pressures.

As has been said several times, the price of oil in Canada is not related to the cost of production in Canada but, rather, to market value in the world. That market value is not related to costs but is related to the shortage of supplies and the cutback in production in Arab countries. Therefore, we are simply saying that there is no justification for an increase at this time, as costs have not gone up, merely because there is an opportunity for the companies to garner more money from the people of Canada and of the world as a result of the tight supply situation.

An hon. Member: How high would the price go after the freeze?

Mr. Cafik: I presume the hon. member would recant what has been said on behalf of the Conservative Party about the putting of a lid on wages and prices, in view of the dangers which would arise once the lid was taken off. If that is the hon. member's position, then I am delighted to hear that he and other members of his party have come to their senses in that regard.

An hon. Member: Answer the question. How high would prices go then?

Mr. Cafik: One thing is sure. If the opposition party were in power today, oil prices in this country would be higher than they are today. A freeze would not have been put on, because I think hon. members opposite are the biggest lobby for the large oil corporations in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cafik: I think all Canadians welcome Bill C-236 which would clearly establish energy supply allocations in Canada through a board which would control the movement and distribution of petroleum products.

I now wish to say something about the over-all problem of energy in this country and what I think ought to be done about it. Without doubt, the people of Canada are sick and tired of what they believe to be the corporate rip-off by the multinational oil corporations.

An hon. Member: Now you are really recanting.

Mr. Cafik: The hon. member opposite may laugh, but I will tell him one thing: his attitude shows he does not care. That is not true of my party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: The Prime Minister responded properly, I thought, by saying that we would keep controls on and see that the best interests of all Canadians are protected. I welcome the establishment of the Canadian petroleum corporation because I think it is essential for the Canadian government to involve itself in exploration in conjunction with the private sector. I particularly welcome the emphasis the Prime Minister gave to our supporting and helping, in exploration activities, those smaller Canadian-owned petroleum corporations which find it difficult to compete with the large multinational corporations. I think that will do much to help give us a greater degree of Canadian control over our natural resources.

The Prime Minister mentioned the pipeline from the west to the Montreal area. That is very important. I am delighted with the urgent priority given to this matter. May I make a suggestion, which is not really original to myself, which might be considered. In the interim, at the appropriate time we might be able to take advantage of some of the excellent personnel in the armed forces who could help in the development of this project and speed it up.

I think the new Canadian petroleum corporation could be used as a vehicle for development. Under its aegis we could set up a development fund into which special taxes and depletion allowances as presently available to the large oil companies in this country could be funnelled, so that we could establish a sizeable fund for developing our own natural resources, which would include not only the tar sands but offshore resources and resources in other parts of Canada.

The oil export tax, established in Canada some months ago over the cries of "foul" by many Conservative members, I think has been a useful tool for ensuring that the government of Canada, in conjunction with the government of Alberta, can build up funds for those very developmental purposes. The export tax which many were led to believe was a tax against the consumers of Canada is in fact a tax to protect them. It was to make sure that people in Canada are only paying Canadian prices, not prices according to the Chicago market. Because of the export tax there has been a considerable increment in funds to be used for national purposes such as the development of oil projects in future. I welcome that.

Many Canadians are not fully aware of the enormous rise in the price of oil which has taken place in the world, and how much we have to be thankful for in this country because we are not permitting international prices to be charged on the domestic market. Recently, for instance, Nigerian oil has been sold for $16.40 per barrel; Tunisian oil for $12.60 per barrel. The Chicago market price, as best I can calculate, with our tax added is $6.40 per barrel. The Canadian price is much lower than that, being in the neighbourhood of $4 per barrel, only because the government has put the lid on and made sure that the corporations do not line their pockets because of the international energy crisis.

Another area that concerns me a great deal is the need for us to develop and stimulate alternative sources to fossil fuel for energy purposes. A good example of what we can do has taken place in my own constituency. For example, the Prime Minister referred to the Pickering nuclear plant. That has been a phenomenal success, something of which all Canadians can be proud. It is much more successful than any alternative form of developing hydroelectric power tried by any other country in the world, including the United States. The fact that it uses uranium rather than enriched uranium causes a greatly reduced operating cost of that plant.

I welcome the suggestion by the Prime Minister that the federal government will participate, as it did in the Pickering project, in developing similar plants in the provinces across Canada. By doing this, the impact can be phenomenal in terms of reduced fossil fuel use. For example, the Pickering plant is at present capable of generating enough power to heat every home in Toronto and light every light at peak periods. All this can be done by one nuclear plant. That is quite an achievement.

I think in the long haul we ought to give more emphasis to this kind of energy and less to the conversion of homes to the use of natural gas and oil supplies for home heating purposes, particularly in large metropolitan areas like Toronto, Montreal, and so on. It is now proposed to double the plant in Pickering. After that is completed, it will generate an enormous amount of power. It will take some of the pressure off the use of fossil fuels. I am sure it will serve as an enormous export boon when the world becomes aware, as it has increasingly been doing, of the tremendous project we have in the Pickering generating station.

There are other things we must do, perhaps in conjunction with the United Nations or at least other countries. We should evolve massive projects by numbers of countries in the world to look into the problems of solar energy. This is enormously expensive to develop. We must develop hydrogen use and other forms of energy production. There is no question that in 20 or 30 years, which is not long in the lifetime of a nation or the world, we will have to look at these other sources. I believe Canada can set the pace and an example in the development of that kind of approach in which we will conserve our energy, keeping it for a longer period of time in areas where it is really essential and not using it in areas where alternatives are presently available.

The same is true with regard to the use of automobiles. On a recent trip to England, I was quite impressed with a milk van which, when full, carried 40 cases of milk. It was powered by electricity, two batteries, one on each side of the vehicle. It travelled over 50 miles an hour, with a range of 250 miles on one charge. It is plugged in at night and then used for a full day for the delivery of this product. I do not know why there is not more emphasis given in this country to that clean form of operation for delivery vehicles. Even with its limited use, it can certainly be used much more extensively than at the present time.

Energy is a long and involved subject. I am delighted that the government, through the speech of the Prime Minister today, illustrated its determination to control this field and see that the consumers of Canada are protected, in terms of delivery and supply, in both the short run and the long run and are protected in terms of price so that they will not be gouged now or in the future because of artificial pressures and shortages that have been created.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in order to get the debate back on the rails, may I point out that this is a second reading debate on Bill C-236. I think members opposite have lost track of what this debate is about. I was rather surprised today with the panic of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government over this crisis. It is really a government crisis and not an energy crisis. The Prime Minister's statement has been called a new national oil policy. There was not anything new about it. We have heard on several occasions the same announcements he made today. However, there was one that struck me forcibly. I will call it as a witness in my opening remarks. I will name the witness. It is very interesting. It is a very fresh piece of evidence. This is what the witness said: "It means that the cost of producing domestic oil must go up before too long. It means that Canadians must be prepared, sooner or later, in some way or another to pay for these additional costs or go without oil. Any attempt to hide these facts and to formulate future policies without taking them into account can only lead in the longer run to even greater shortages and hence to even higher prices than Canadians are now experiencing in eastern provinces. In short we must in the long run allow the price of domestically produced crude oil to rise . . . "

Mr. Lalonde: That's right.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) says that is right. If he says it is right, it is right: ". . . toward a level high enough to ensure the development of the Alberta oil sands and other Canadian resources but not one bit higher." The witness who said that this afternoon was the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: It was him, and not our leader, who talked about increased prices of oil. When he is dealing with the Syncrude project, he is dealing with a very expensive producing cost in an expensive process. If he says the cost must go higher than the cost of the Syncrude plant production, the Prime Minister is talking about a price of a barrel of crude petroleum in excess of $10. Compare that statement with any statement that our national leader has made at any time.

I am sorry the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) has left the chamber. He said it was the Conservative leader who talked about increases in price. Today the Prime Minister, the head of the government, said "any attempt to hide these facts and to formulate future policies without taking them into account" would not be realistic. There is the evidence. Tonight we have before us the bill. I want to deal briefly with how I see it.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Just keep on reading.

Mr. Woolliams: I always like to see the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) here. I will say this about him: he is active.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I just want you to keep quoting the Prime Minister.

Mr. Woolliams: I will leave it to you to study what he said. I quoted what he said about increases. I wonder of the hon. member could once in a while bear to listen, rather than ramble along. I have studied the remarks of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) as they are to be found at page 8442 and subsequent pages in Hansard in reference to Bill C-236. What is this bill about? It is a bill to set up a federal board to be known as the emergency supplies allocation board. I will quote one sentence from the minister's speech. He said:

I discussed such things as the rapid increase of movement through the St. Lawrence Seaway, government purchases of products on world markets and the organization of transportation through the Trans-Mountain pipeline system and the Panama Canal.

What he is really saying is that there is a shortfall. Whether it is as a result of the force majeure clause in contracts, the possibility of those contracts being performed, or whatever it is, what he is really saying is that we now find ourselves in desperate straits because for ten long years the government did nothing about the most serious problem which now faces us—transportation.

Representatives of the industry came to Ottawa in 1969 and begged the government to take action to see that a pipeline was built so that Canada's oil supply would always be secure. At the moment, the only answer that the government has to meet the emergency affecting Quebec and the maritimes is to send tankers all the way from Vancouver down the coast, through the Panama Canal and up to Montreal. Then on September 4, the Prime Minister announced he was going to build a pipeline to Montreal through Sarnia. When we questioned him about it, this is what he had to say—and this is on November 23. I asked the following question:

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister two questions arising out of the statement he made last night and what he said today. I should like something to be clarified.

I went on to deal with the price. Then I asked a further question:

Yesterday the Prime Minister dealt with the Montreal pipeline and said it had been announced. We have had various announcements about this pipeline. As the pipeline is important to ensure supply, how far has the project gone? Who is going to build it? When is the project going to commence, and is the government assured of enough steel so it can go ahead?

I repeat that on September 4, 1973, four years after the government had been approached, he finally announced that a start would be made on this undertaking. Then, on November 22 he appeared on TV promising a pipeline for a second time. And as if that music were not sufficient on two occasions, he sings the same hymn this afternoon. It is all words and no action. The Prime Minister says the pipeline was announced on September 4. It was such a great speech he made today: "Following that announcement, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have been putting together the answers to the questions asked by the hon. member and they will be announced soon in the usual course".

Now we have been given a further announcement, but what we want to see is some action. These emergency measures would never have been necessary if the government had planned and encouraged the building of pipelines guaranteeing the sufficiency of supply of natural gas and crude petroleum to the area east of the Ottawa Valley, and, indeed, the Maritimes. What really happened was this: they relied on imports. Nobody wanted western Canadian crude petroleum for years. We couldn't give it away. Finally they woke up when imports were cut off, and now they are going to transport oil through the Panama Canal. What a policy! How many miles is it by tanker from Vancouver to Montreal?

Mr. McRae: The same as from Montreal to Vancouver.

Mr. Woolliams: It is 7,202 miles. Compare that distance with approximately 2,000 miles from Alberta to Montreal, the distance over which the pipeline would transport crude petroleum, as the crow flies. The minister made a confession of the government's mistakes, as hon. members will see if they turn to page 8442, when he said:

The picture which emerges indicates clearly the possibility of shortages of middle distillates and heavy oils in the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and to some extent Ontario. There is also the possibility of local shortages of these products in British Columbia.

If this bill is passed by parliament and if the board becomes a living reality, then I fear it will be merely an instrument of the minister's power complex and an image of his political conscience, rather than a board which will deliver sound economic decisions for the good of the consumer and for the good of the country. All this bill really does is set up a super-department which will carry out the ideas and policies of the minister. It will be the minister who makes the decisions by order in council and the board will carry them out. He will be the general. The board will merely be an instrument by means of which he will invade the rights of the provinces and the civil rights of the people.

I also fear it will be used by him to pit one part of the country against another. The government has been very good at this. The board will be made up of an army of people carrying out the minister's will, the minister's authority. It will help realize the government's desire for political advantage for the purpose of retaining and regaining political power. It will exercise political muscle without any appeal from its decisions being possible. No checks and balances will control its power. The jurisdiction of this board will stretch out into every field of energy like tentacles grasping and controlling the destiny of the various provinces and of the people of Canada, killing off industrial incentive which would assure a continued oil supply so necessary for Canada's security.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), when he led off this debate for our party, described the board as owned, operated and manned by the minister. This board is being conceived in an atmosphere of failure of decision on the part of the government. It is being conceived in the climate of a desperate minority government clinging to power. It is being conceived at a time when the government wishes to bury its procrastination or, at least, to have its procrastination interpreted as Liberal pragmatism and action.

It is a great disappointment to me, and I know it is a great disappointment to all western Canadians who realize that Canada has become self-sufficient as far as energy supplies are concerned, to find that the government cannot use its power as it ought to be used because of deals with its NDP friends. What is really happening is this. We have an NDP government with a rump on the other side directing the policies of the government, both parties standing, speaking and voting together and planning a socialistic state.

Once this board is set up, all-powerful and all-encompassing, the minister—I can almost hear him now—will answer questions put to him in reference to autocratic and arbitrary decisions, or decisions which are wrong and unjust, by saying these are decisions of the board. It is the board, he will tell us, which made those decisions. He will pass the buck to the board while he himself dons the veil of innocence. I have no doubt that the board will be used as a political vehicle and as an instrument for granting privileges to favoured political areas while creating adversity for others. It really is a super-department set up under the control of the minister to carry out his will as if he were a general in the field fighting a battle.

One has only to examine the grants made by the Liberal Party under the LIP program to know that the government cannot be trusted and will continue along this road of being political and partisan to the extent of being irresponsible. Once you give the minister the power that this bill gives to him, he will make decisions in one province which may be very favourable because the political climate is very favourable to him in that province. But he will make other decisions in other provinces which do not vote Liberal, just as the LIP program was a political slush-fund for Liberal interests and Liberal candidates everywhere.

An hon. Member: Never.

Mr. Woolliams: My hon. friend says never. I ask not to get into that argument, but let him check the figures that Rosedale, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, gave and you will see where half a million dollars went anyway.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Rosedale is a depressed area.

Mr. Woolliams: As my hon. friend says, anybody who knows anything about Rosedale knows it is a depressed area. It is quite within the realm of imagination, when you examine the bill, to learn that the minister will use his super-board to ration gas in Calgary, or in a city in a province where energy is produced, whereas gas will be pumped into tanks in other provinces without any restriction or control. This board has the power to act on a regional basis, as is apparent when you read the sections of the bill. I imagine they could ration gas and oil in Alberta and remove rationing in other provinces which do not even produce the commodity. If they can do what they did to the LIP program, then they can manoeuvre as far as the energy program is concerned.

Let me give a few examples of the sections contained in the bill. Clause 15 gives the minister power over provincial rights to control all energy and fuel, even electric power. I wonder what the province of Quebec will say when they find that by clause 15 of this bill the government, through this board, can step in, take over electrical energy and the hydro plant of Quebec, direct how it will be operated, direct the price, direct the imports and exports, and direct and control the operation itself. If that is not an infringement of provincial rights, nothing is.

Let me refer to clause 17(4) and clause 18(4), at pages 11 and 12 of the bill. What do they say? Let me just show the House what the bill does say. Clause 17 deals with the regulation of imports and subsection (4) provides:

> In the event of a conflict between any regulation under this act and any provision of the National Energy Board Act or any regulation made thereunder, the regulation under this act prevails.

In other words, the National Energy Board, which was set up as a quasi-judicial body to make independent decisions on supply, to control supply, to control imports, to control exports, to give inventories of energy supplies from time to time, is having its jurisdiction taken away by this board whose only power lies under the direction of the general, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

What does clause 18 have to say? After all, we are debating this bill. It says:

(4) In the event of a conflict between any regulation under this Act and any provision of the National Energy Board Act or any regulation made thereunder, the regulation under this act prevails.

This section is dealing with regulating exports, obtaining an inventory and sizing up the situation as between imports and exports. When this bill is passed it will permit the minister to veto any decision of the National Energy Board, which as I say was set up as an independent board and has worked very well since it came into operation in 1962. It is interesting also to look at clause 21. Hon. members talk about civil rights. Clause 21, at page 14 of the bill, provides:

Where pursuant to a regulation under this Act any person is required to do or to omit to do anything contrary to the terms and conditions of any contract entered into by that person, the contract is modified to the extent necessary to enable compliance to be made with the requirements of the regulation.

In other words, any contracts made between corporations or people as far as natural gas, crude petroleum or other forms of energy are concerned can be altered or changed by the minister at will for his power lust. This is part of the bill we are asked to approve. The strongest provision comes on page 15. I often wonder, when I listen to some people, if they ever read the bills they are talking about. Clause 23 gives the minister this power. It provides:

Where in order to comply with any regulation under this act a person would be required to enter into any agreement, arrangement or course of action that might cause him to contravene the Combines Investigation Act, such person may apply to the board for an order exempting him from that act in respect of that particular agreement, arrangement or course of action.

In other words, this bill gives the minister the right to allow people to enter into contracts contrary to the Combines Investigation Act and do away with all competition. What will the result be? If that does not result in higher prices to the consumer, then no terms or conditions or any act would. As I see it, that is the effect of the bill.

I have spoken of some of the weaknesses of the bill as I see the situation. The Prime Minister spoke this afternoon, and one of the questions we have to analyse is his credibility and the credibility of the minister. Today, if I heard him aright, and hon. members can check his speech, he said that 50 per cent of the surtax would go back to the provinces. Not only have I at the committee level but also in this House of Commons questioned the minister and the Prime Minister about this, but I have been assured by the minister not only in the House but at the committee level that 100 per cent of the tax would go back to the producing province. I should like to refer to report No. 44 of the miscellaneous estimates committee where this question was asked by me, and later by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). The hon. member asked:

Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the minister could clarify a statement that he made earlier with respect to the $1.90 per barrel tax. Did I understand him correctly to say that either directly or indirectly the entire tax will go back either to the province or be used within the province where it originated?

MR. MACDONALD (ROSEDALE): Yes, sir.

So we were promised by the minister that 100 per cent of that tax would go back to Alberta or Saskatchewan where the crude petroleum is produced, passing through the Interprovincial pipeline into eastern Canada. Yet today the Prime Minister vetoed the statement of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources with reference to the return of that tax to the provinces.

Not only will this bill override provincial rights. Once you give the government this power they will certainly override provincial rights, particularly in a province that does not support the Liberal Party. This puts me in mind of Mackenzie King's slogan during the depression. He said, "There won't be one five-cent piece for any unemployed person in any province where there is a Conservative government". Those words came to haunt him in the 1930 election.

Therefore, it is now obvious that Canada's so-called energy crisis is one of absence of government leadership and responsibility in energy matters. This is becoming more apparent every day as the government continues on a course that seems to be not only lacking in solutions but in a clear understanding of what action has taken place. Canada this winter is faced with a major petroleum supply shortage in eastern Canada and the Maritimes. All of this is due to a lack of planning of our transportation facilities. I shall never tire of repeating that this pipeline should have been built and be in operation by now. There would not have been any shortage of fuel or gasoline in this country today if it had. We have the crude petroleum and natural gas, plus other energy commodities, to be totally self-sufficient, but the pipeline capacity is inadequate, as the government is now finding out, to carry the necessary extra crude petroleum.

If he means to build a pipeline, and he did not clarify that this afternoon, from Sarnia, that will only give Quebec another 50,000 barrels of crude petroleum a day. If he means to increase the capacity of the Interprovincial pipeline from Alberta through Saskatchewan to Sarnia in order to be able to supply the million barrels needed each day in eastern Canada, then of course he would have a project for which if he could get it off the tracing board, the Canadian consumers in that part of the country would have some appreciation. This government has sat idly by, failing to take any decision early enough to prevent a crisis here in Canada. In fact, I think they like the crisis.

I prepared some of these remarks before I heard the Prime Minister today. I ask what our policy should be on a short-term and long-term basis so Canada will not find itself in this position in the future. I am tired of saying there is no energy crisis in Canada, as we have a supply of natural gas and crude petroleum. What crisis there is is a government crisis as a result of procrastination and vacillation.

An hon. Member: It's a Macdonald crisis or a Trudeau crisis.

Mr. Woolliams: If this government had made a decision, we would be constructing the Montreal pipeline now, or at least the first extension from Sarnia to Montreal, and then enlarge the Interprovincial pipeline so as to carry the necessary capacity to guarantee sufficient crude petroleum from Alberta to the east. Why was there this delay? Why has this decision not been made since 1963 when the Liberal government was elected? Why has there been a delay since 1968 in the days of this man who was going to do great things? The only thing I recall him saying in 1968 on television, and I refer to this little playboy, was that he would make no promises to Canadians. Of the many great promises he has made since, that is the only one he has kept. He has done nothing.

Secondly, we should create a tax climate that will encourage capital, particularly Canadian risk capital, into investment in exploration development of the Athabasca tar sands and to find other fields as we have done in the past. I heard the Prime Minister say this afternoon that it is not likely there are any other fields in Alberta. If we had not drilled, searched for and provided a tax climate so there could be that kind of development, we would not have found the Leduc field in 1947 when the first well was blown in by the Imperial Oil Company.

We should put together immediately a new national oil policy after consultation with the provinces and make certain that any surtax, a mechanism used to keep the price of gas and oil down in Canada when under pressure from high world competition and prices, will be returned to the provinces where the resource exists and is developed. I think that is a fair premise. I am sure that if you had a surtax on steel for some reason, that money should go back to the province of Ontario, or the money in respect of iron ore should go back to the province of Quebec where it is mined.

Surely that is a reasonable policy and we should be able to consult with the provinces and work out the problems. This Prime Minister, this government and the minister—I am happy to see him here in the House—have run slipshod over all the premiers of the provinces and provincial representatives.

An hon. Member: No way.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member should go and talk to the premiers. We should begin immediately, and this should have taken place years ago, to negotiate with the United States in reference to a natural gas pipeline down the Mackenzie delta, through Alberta to the industrial centres of Canada and the United States. Why would this be necessary? I agree with the Prime Minister in this regard. I prepared some of this before I listened to what he had to say.

The economics of bringing natural gas from the Arctic is such that we have to combine our efforts with the United States, which could then bring down its natural gas from their areas. The natural gas from both areas would be transported down the same pipeline. Our natural gas could be used in Canada and theirs could be used in their own country. That combined effort would make this energy economic and at a price range the people of Canada could afford. It would be at a price at which industries could use the energy and compete with world markets. As a result of the procrastination and vacillation of this government in not doing this years ago, we find this development has not taken place. This has been a government of words and inaction.

I know that some people are frightened because there is some mystery about the foreign investments bill which will set up a screening process, but no such process should be used dictatorially by this government without consultation with the provinces that may be affected. I have talked to members from the Maritimes and I know that they need capital. Certain areas in western Canada need capital, but the needs may be entirely different than perhaps the needs in Ontario or in other parts of central Canada. Therefore, before the government uses this screening process there must be consultation with the provinces. Today we are self-sufficient in Canada, but if we have this kind of government which does everything to antagonize the development of the petroleum industry we will soon be in the position that other countries find themselves in, and have to rely on imports rather than on our own production.

We should now make certain that the Syncrude project, which is worth $800 million, guaranteeing 10,000 jobs and billions of barrels of crude petroleum for Canada in the future, goes ahead without frustration caused by scare tactics on the part of this government. The uncertainty and confusion in respect of government policy is frustrating and delaying this important project that promises a continued supply of energy for our industrial complexes and cheap fuel for our homes. This is an important project, but instead of the government providing incentives, it provides discouragements. The Premier of Alberta worked with a group for the development of the tar sands in order to guarantee a supply of crude petroleum not only in western Canada but here in eastern Canada.

The next thing I suggest is that we should return the National Energy Board to its proper function of being an independent board making decisions as to pipelines, security of supply, exports, imports, etc., and get government interference out of that board. In particular, the government must appoint men other than political heelers. I have read clauses of Bill C-236 that indicate this super-board the minister wants to set up will be able to override any decision of the Energy Board—and if that is not interference, nothing is.

The next question that came to my mind in considering this bill was why the future supply of petroleum and natural gas is so important to our well-being. May I set out now that according to recent technical papers, and this is material researched by an independent petroleum association, Canada is considered to have, at current rates of production, undiscovered reserves equivalent to 100 years' supply for oil needs and 250 years' supply for gas needs. In addition, and the Prime Minister touched on this today, the Alberta oil sands are estimated to contain 250 billion barrels of oil of which approximately 26.5 billion barrels are recoverable by current processes.

An hon. Member: He is reading again.

Mr. Woolliams: I am reading from my notes, and I might point out that I have done a lot of research on this matter because of its importance.

An hon. Member: Where do you get those figures?

Mr. Woolliams: The figures come from a report of the Canadian Petroleum Association, an independent petroleum group which hired technicians, geologists, to come up with these figures. While these potential reserves postulated by various geologists are large, they will only become a reality by exploration, and only through risk exploration can Canada become assured of long-term supply. In undertaking this risk exploration it must first be recognized that compared to Middle East supplies or, in fact, any other reserves worldwide except the United States, Canadian oil and gas are high-cost in terms of finding, developing and transportation costs.

Wells in Venezuela produce as many as 10,000 barrels of crude per day. Our wells in Alberta, the best of them, produce about 100 to 200 barrels a day. It costs just as much to drill one of the wells in Alberta as it costs to drill wells in the Middle East or in Venezuela which produce 10,000 barrels a day. So the cost of our production is very high. Secondly, it must be recognized that these risk investments are generally of a fairly long-term nature in that there is a long lead time before an idea is transferred into reserves and possible return.

In central Canada it takes five to seven years to do the necessary geological, geophysical and drilling work required to develop a specific plan to start selling oil and gas. In the frontier area the lead time is even longer. Gas was found in Sable Island in 1967. There were close to 70 wells. Six years later this gas is still a considerable time from being produced. I heard in the House the other day, when the government was being questioned, that they were thinking of building a pipeline to get this gas into the Maritimes where it is needed. This should have been off the planning board a long time ago. The emergency is now; the winter is here; the people will be cold and will suffer now.

An hon. Member: You said there is no crisis.

Mr. Woolliams: There is a government crisis, but no shortage of supply. Gas was found at Drake Point in the Arctic in July, 1969, and it is unlikely that any gas will be marketed before the 1980s. The point I wish to make is that these long lead time periods require committing funds for a considerable period into the future, with little or no return. Each long-term commitment necessitates long-term planning and the careful evaluation of alternatives, particularly when the need for capital is so great.

All we have had from this government is short-term planning, which is not good enough. When they talk about the crisis, the crisis is because there is no transportation policy or encouragement in respect of a transportation policy. Therefore, we have a crisis now in Quebec and in the Maritimes. From the individual company's point of view, the exploration risk must be weighed against opportunities elsewhere. I could name many companies which have their head office in Calgary and which are not drilling in Alberta or becoming involved in the tar sands. They have gone to the North Sea because they get a better deal from the British.

The oil industry is a multinational industry because risk capital flows all over the world. That is why it takes a lot of capital to develop and find either oil or natural gas. The industry needs to work in a climate of relatively stable conditions. That is why I endorse the Energy Board. It cannot operate in a legislative vacuum such as it does under this government. It cannot operate under conditions where great uncertainties exist, or in circumstances where legislative or regulatory guarantees are unilaterally changed without regard to the guarantee. That is exactly what Bill C-236 will do. It will create a czar in the government which will be all powerful in respect of energy, and the board will have to carry out the orders of the great general. The industry cannot operate where legislative changes are made retroactively or where legislative changes are made quickly without allowing for a phase-in period to allow industry adjustments.

May I repeat that if the transportation facilities were adequate, Canada would be self-sufficient in energy supplies and the consumers this winter would not be frightened about the possibility of not being warm in their homes and in the hospitals. I heard that in one hospital, I believe it was in the province of Newfoundland, several deaths of babies occurred because of the cold—and this in a place like Canada!

Mr. Woolliams: That was on television. You may say it is nonsense. Until recently, Arab nations provided to eastern Canada 30 per cent of its crude oil needs. This amounted to approximately 300,000 barrels of crude oil a day. The government maintained that the Arabs were going to cut back 25 per cent of that supply, amounting to 75,000 barrels of crude oil a day. Now the government maintains the shortage will be not 75,000 barrels a day but 200,000 barrels a day. They maintain that this is due to the multinational oil companies having the power to argue and successfully allege that the contracts for supply of this crude petroleum can be upset due to impossibility of performance of supply contracts.

It is they that are on the side of the multinational corporations. They say they cannot do anything about it. They say they are helpless. This has been given the fancy term force majeure, a clause in the contract relieving these oil companies from fulfilling their contracts. If they are permitted to use this as an excuse, then oil shortages will be shared with Canada's traditional suppliers. For example, Venezuela would be forced to divert its oil to other countries. We could have taken on the great multinational oil corporations if we had pipelines built now, instead of having to ship oil by tanker down the Pacific coast and through the Panama Canal to prevent Quebec and the Maritimes from going cold this winter.

The minister says he found out only a short time ago that the oil companies were going to default on their obligations to Canada, while the president of Shell Canada claims that the minister's department has known for a long time that this action might be taken. Are our rights being honoured? Are the consumers of Canada being sabotaged by international corporations? We cannot obtain the answers from the government, except that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has stated that the multinational corporations can shortchange Canada and do it legally.

I should like to ask the government, who governs Canada? For example, when the minister was asked on Thursday a week ago what shortages he was looking to in Ontario and British Columbia, he said he meant shortages of bunker fuel used in ships and in large factories.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the House would give consent to the hon. member to continue for a few more minutes so that I could ask him a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I should like to compliment the hon. member on his speech. It is a good speech. It is really in respect of the appointments that I wish to ask him a question. It is not a question of political hacks but, rather, of obtaining qualified people in the oil business who would be prepared to sacrifice better incomes in order to make such a contribution. I should like to ask the hon. member if he can suggest names of people both for this board and for the National Energy Board, because there is an industry place on this board and we would like to have on it people who would be prepared to give up much higher incomes in order to come down to Ottawa and do this work.

Mr. Woolliams: I think that would be easy to do. As the minister knows, the first chairman of the National Energy Board was a man who was involved for much of his life in the petroleum industry. He was chairman of the conservation board in Alberta and then finally became chairman of the National Energy Board. At the present time I do not know the new chairman, but I would say that if that board keeps its personnel so that it is allowed to act independently as it has in the past, it is safe. But under this act, as I read the section—I do not know whether the minister had stepped out at that time—the new board which is being set up, this super-board, can override any independent decision of the Energy Board.

If the people who are being set up on this board are not political appointments, I will be most surprised. It will be the biggest change that has happened since the Trudeau administration went in, because when one looks at the number of members who were defeated in the last election and sees the political plums they hold, one knows what kind of personnel this board will have.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Could I put another question to the hon. member? What I am concerned about with regard to the board is having his kind of fellow on the board and, indeed, on the National Energy Board. I do not think the hon. member should reply to this tonight. He might like to reply to me in private. I would like to see people from the oil industry on this board and on the National Energy Board. They could take a cut of $20,000, $30,000 or $40,000 a year, come down here and devote their time to public service. I would be very much obliged to the hon. member if he could give me the names of people among his friends in Calgary whom we could seriously consider.

Mr. Woolliams: Deputy ministers now get $60,000 a year. That is the increased salary which they got from this government. I do not think there are many executives in the Calgary oil petroleum industry getting $60,000 a year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: All right, my friends, name them. These ignoramuses should name them.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The problem is that you and I are wasting our time.

Mr. McRae: May I ask the hon. member a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. McRae: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I recognize the hon. member as the next speaker to rise. Does the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) agree to the question?

Mr. Woolliams: I do not mind if they question me all night, because I would like to help the government with some answers which they need to have.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The minister is also anxious to ask a question. I will recognize the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) first, followed by the minister.

Mr. McRae: I was confused by a few things that the hon. member said. He spoke about the tar sands in some detail and then he spoke about the high exploration cost. Was he referring to the high exploration cost so far as the tar sands are concerned—we know where they are—or was he talking about ordinary crude?

Mr. Woolliams: I can certainly answer these questions. Of course we know where the tar sands are. I was referring to the development of a new process. You want to be careful, you will burst a blood vessel, my boy. Take it easy. I do not want to be personal. The hon. member asked me a question and I am prepared to answer it if he would only learn to listen.

It is estimated that to produce a barrel of crude from the tar sands today would cost $10 a barrel of crude petroleum, and no profit can be made on that. With reference to drilling, at one time you could drill a well in Alberta for $500,000. In the last ten years it has cost $1.5 million. You know what the costs are of steel, labour, and so on. Everything has gone up under this government. That is why the cost is so high.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I rise on a question of privilege. I just want to say that it is a great pleasure to hear from the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) on these questions. He remains an asset to the House in terms of his revelations regarding the oil industry and I only regret that we have not had more time to hear him. In fact, I think we should give him the remaining 3½ to four minutes this evening so that he can complete his remarks, because I am sure that with his knowledge of the industry he has not done justice to the subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member does not seem too anxious to continue, so I will recognize the hon. member for Fort William.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to be selfish, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I think this is definitely out of order now. I recognized the hon. member for Fort William for the purpose of making his comments to the House. Perhaps he would like to start his speech now.

Mr. McRae: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I thought that after we had heard two spokesmen for each party, a member of the Social Credit Party of Canada could have been recognized. My colleague from Compton (Mr. Latulippe) is ready to speak. In my opinion, he could say himself that it is 10 o'clock and continue tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I have indeed watched the hon. member for a few minutes. He had previously asked to be recognized or suggested his name to the Chair, but at no time did the hon. member rising on a point of order or the hon. member beside him show that they wished to speak. I therefore recognized the hon. member that I noticed.

Mr. Fortin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. We may perhaps be too far from the Chair, but I should respectfully point out that I rose twice to be recognized. My colleague from Compton (Mr. Latulippe) rose just before the hon. member whom you recognized. Furthermore, I do not accept what you have just said, because it is neither relevant nor gracious for the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Nonetheless, I shall recognize once more the hon. member for Fort William.

[English]

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on some of the remarks made by hon. members in the opposition, and also discuss what I consider to be the three major ingredients of a comprehensive Canadian energy policy. But I see that it is now ten o'clock and I believe we should call in ten o'clock. We can continue the debate at our next sitting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member suggests that it is ten o'clock.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SUGGESTED INVITATION TO SAUDIAN ARABIAN AND ALGERIAN OIL MINISTERS TO VISIT CANADA

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to give consideration to inviting Sheik Yamani, oil minister of Saudi Arabia, to come to Ottawa. I noted that the Saudi minister and his Algerian counterpart were in the United States after completing visits to western Europe.

In the whole confused story of our energy problem there is at least one aspect that is clear. We are not in meaningful communication with great portions of the Arab world, especially the major oil producers. One day we have announcements of actions by Saudi Arabia. The next day we are told that not Saudi Arabia but Abu Dhabi was involved. There is no clearcut picture of Canada's status in reference to oil coming from the Portland pipeline. We have been told that all was well, and well understood. I heard Sheik Yamani on television a few days ago indicate that that aspect would need looking into.

A leading oil man declares that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) was advised that Saudi Arabia had Canada on the embargo list. The minister denied this but was unable to indicate how much oil had been shipped from Saudi Arabia to Canada in the last 30 days. Indeed, the whole record of the minister's handling of the present problem is so inept as to be frightening. On Tuesday, the Come-By-Chance announcement was an "ace in the hole". On Wednesday, it was something considerably less. On an issue of such seriousness, with profound ramifications, economic, constitutional and international, the people of this country should not be placed in such jeopardy as to have their destinies reside in a man whose incapacity has been so painfully proven over many years in so many public assignments.

I hoped the Secretary of State for External Affairs would follow my suggestion and arrange that Sheik Yamani be invited to Ottawa so that some information and clarity might be obtained. I would like to know if the Sheik was invited. As long ago as last spring I urged, in the external affairs committee, the necessity of opening full-fledged diplomatic missions in the oil states of the Arab world. With the vast areas of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and the Gulf states we have either no diplomatic contact or contact of the most tenuous kind. Missions in Cairo, Beirut, and Tel Aviv scarcely open the line of communication with oil states. Iraq has a most highly qualified ambassador in Ottawa, but we seem not able to open a mission in Baghdad.

Although the problems and burdens likely to fall upon the ordinary Canadian citizen, especially in the Atlantic region, are of the utmost importance, we must not lose sight of the fact that the current Canadian problem about oil, whatever its dimensions, cannot be considered today in isolation from the highly explosive Middle East political and military situation.

Little is gained by denouncing the Arab states, whose newly proven unity has been most effective, as practitioners of blackmail. The use of economic sanctions has an ancient history. Long ago it was used by combatants and opponents. In recent years I have heard Canadian ministers point with pious pride to our non-trade with Rhodesia. Then we think of the Trading with the Enemy Act of the United States and the moral satisfaction of those Canadians who dilate upon the sinfulness of buying California grapes.

There is no law, international or otherwise, which decrees that the Arabs must sell their oil indiscriminately all over the world. I must regret that they have taken any steps to inhibit in any degree their sales to my country, but I do not deny them the right to select their customers in the international marketplace.

In reference to the over-all political situation, Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian people have a right to know just where we stand with the Arab world. Have we reasons for quarrelling with these people? Why is Canada in a category different from that of Britain, France, Belgium and other European countries? What view do we have on the Middle East situation differing from these countries? They recognize Israel, and ipso facto believe in its existence. Does Canada believe that the lands occupied by Israel after the UN decision of the forties and the 1967 war are to be permanently alienated from the Arab states? Is this the reason why Canada is on the neutral list and our NATO allies in Europe, with two exceptions, are on the friendly list? This is a very important and significant question.

I think that we should know what is the stand of the government on this most volatile and very grave portentous situation. The reasons for our being in a category different from Britain and France should be made clear to the people of Canada who may suffer grievously. All of these countries supported UN resolution 242, as did we. Wherein have we differed since? For what reason are we on less than friendly terms with the Arab world, with whom we have had no conflicts or quarrels so far as I know, and whose progress toward a peaceful, prosperous existence we should welcome?

I would welcome some replies from the distinguished parliamentary secretary for whom I have the highest regard, and indeed I may have the honour of getting a reply from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is famous for presenting the worst possible situations. With his record, I would say he is the best possible man to tell us about another worst possible situation.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to reply to the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) who is generally well regarded in this House, although not for any particular intellectual qualifications. I think he is generally regarded as being a rather well meaning, but very shallow and intellectually lightweight person. Still it is certainly a pleasure to reply to him. I may also say the most outstanding thing about the hon. member is his sideburns, in respect of which no other member of the House can claim precedence. He has, undoubtedly, the most outstanding pair of sideburns in the House.

I was interested in his reference to Sheik Yamani, and that gave me greater pleasure in rising to speak tonight because I had the most recent opportunity of any member of the House to speak with the sheik, who was a classmate of mine at Harvard law school. The sheik made it very clear to me at the time, and I have since vouchsafed it to this House, that Canada is on no embargo list so far as his government is concerned, and indeed the suggestions to that effect by the hon. member for Hillsborough and other badly informed persons like the hon. member are, of course, without foundation.

I welcome the statement of the sheik that in fact he had the highest regard for our country and that he did not share the impression which the hon. member for Hillsborough sought to circulate this evening, that Canada is poorly regarded in the Arab world. Indeed, Canada is well regarded, and so far as the sheik is concerned, he said he would check this rumour, created by an international petroleum corporation as to the way in which it would have the Arab peoples view us.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that it is indeed in the interests of Canada and Canadians to establish good relations with the Arab peoples and this has been one of the objectives of our foreign policy for many years. This has been a difficult relationship in terms of both the Arab and Israeli communities, and this is why Canadians above all have sought to play a role that would not aggravate either side of the controversy. Quite to the contrary, Canadians want to play a constructive role so that these two peoples, arising from such close ethnic backgrounds, with so many ties of history, can come together and establish a lasting and permanent peace on the basis of mutual co-operation and confidence in the Middle East.

The hon. member referred to many of the hard fought debates in the United Nations General Assembly on the question of the ceasefire lines, on resolution 242 and on other matters. I would say, Mr. Speaker, in this regard that the important question for Canadians to face, even though Canadians may at the moment be somewhat concerned about oil supplies, about the lack of oil, or extent of deprivation from which they suffer or with which they may be threatened, is the question of the importance of establishing in the Middle East community an effective role for Canadians to play in trying to bring those two communities together.

This has been the role of the government of Canada, dating back, if I may say so, to the days of my former leader whom the hon. member for Hillsborough was prepared to castigate in the past, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson. The work of that great Canadian in the Middle East was recognized. It was known that he wanted to try and bring about peace between those two great and historic peoples. This is the role for Canada. This is the role this government will try to discharge, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN VISITORS TO UNITED STATES AGAINST BEING STRANDED IF GAS RATIONING INTRODUCED

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak tonight because of my failure last Monday to persuade the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) to even acknowledge his responsibility for protecting the well-being of Canadian citizens who may soon be stranded in the United States if gasoline rationing is invoked in that country. Hansard records my questions and the minister's evasions and blandishments in the following way, at page 8343:

MR. PERRIN BEATTY (WELLINGTON-GREY-DUFFERIN-WATERLOO): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It arises from the possibility of gasoline rationing in the United States. Has the minister consulted with his American counterparts to get an agreement from the Americans to ensure that the interests of Canadians abroad will be protected so they will not be stranded there if gasoline rationing is introduced in that country?

HON. MITCHELL SHARP (SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS): Mr. Speaker, I would not think that Canadians who wish to travel in the United States would be exempted from those kinds of measures. I should think they would want to comply.

MR. BEATTY (WELLINGTON-GREY-DUFFERIN-WATERLOO): What specific measures will the minister be taking on behalf of the Canadian government to protect the interests of Canadian nationals travelling abroad who find themselves trapped there? Is the minister not concerned about the interests of Canadian?

MR. SHARP: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are concerned. I think we can look after the interests of Canadians in this regard. However, I do not think we should create the impression that we should be free when Americans are subject to rationing.

What a remarkable statement for a minister of the Crown to make—that he did not feel Canadians trapped in the United States as a result of American rationing would want any special treatment if it were necessary to get them home to their families. I cannot help but be reminded, when I read the comments of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, of Winston Churchill's description of Clement Attlee as "a sheep in sheep's clothing".

This year, tens of thousands of Canadians will be visiting the United States and will be taking with them millions of tourist dollars which will be a great asset to the American economy. The only thing they ask in return from the Americans is that they be treated in a fair and decent way, and that they not be left stranded hundreds of miles from their homes and families. I think their request is not unreasonable. Yet, the minister refuses even to talk to the Americans to request that the rights of Canadians be respected. Although he intimates that the government can do something for stranted Canadians, he refuses to say what.

This is the second time since the beginning of the energy crisis that this minister has demonstrated to Canadians that you will find more backbone in a bowl of jello than you will find in his office. It was not all that long ago that we saw on nationwide television the rather pathetic spectacle of the Secretary of State for External Affairs begging the ambassadors of the Arab sheikhs not to blackmail this country with their oil. "We like the Israelis" he said, "but we also like the Arabs too. We want to be everybody's friend and we know that everybody will want to be our friends too."

That performance, Mr. Speaker, did not fill Canadians with pride. They were not proud to see their government jumping through Arab hoops in order to be ensured that our oil supply is not cut. In the end, Canada has still been subject to the Arab cutback in production. It is countries like Holland and the United States, which refused to be blackmailed away from support of Israel, which have reason for pride. Yet, unlike Canada, both those countries are highly dependent on oil from the Middle East for the health of their respective economies. This country, which is one of the few major nations in the world able to claim self-sufficiency in oil, refuses even to make a protest over the hostile and aggressive actions of the Arabs against us.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that this coalition government will continue in office for some months. However, as long as this minister retains his portfolio, we will continue to pay for his timidity with the honour and the rights of Canadians.

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all, to my mind, the hon. member who just spoke and the one who preceded him, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) both proved how much discord there is in the Progressive Conservative Party. One can hardly imagine speeches that differ as much as the two we have just heard from two members of the same party.

It seems to me the hon. member should know that Canada is neither pro-Israel, nor pro-Arab; that it wants to remain neutral and help solve the conflict. I feel that doing what the hon. member has just done, by playing one clan against the other, one country against the other, can only achieve results that are diametrically opposed to those he himself or the Canadian people would achieve, that is peace in that part of the world. I would be angry with myself for uttering such provocative remarks as he has come out with.

This being so, I would like to say that the oil shortage in the United States is increasingly serious and that Canadians who are planning to go in that country should know that posters have already been set up on American highways warning drivers of the gas shortage.

Unfortunately we cannot do much for the Canadian people who are refused gas at American gas stations. We have asked our embassy in Washington to see whether there was a policy favouring American clients at the expense of Canadian clients. Our Canadian embassy has advised us that for the moment there was no discriminatory policy at the federal level cr in the various states. This was confirmed by the American Automobile Association.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LEBLANC (LAURIER)—CHARGES RESPECTING CONDUCT AS CHAIRMAN OF COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege because I feel that some hon. members have questioned my integrity on two occasions: The member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on Tuesday December 4 and the member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) on Thursday December 6. I also wish to point out that such an attack had also been made against me as chairman of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates by the member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) on Monday, March 15, 1971.

It should be pointed out that those three members are not regular members of the committee which I chair and consequently are unaware of the rules established by that committee.

Hon. members will agree with me that these three members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have shown political pettiness and niggardliness in their vicious, violent, scathing, low, sectarian, false, erroneous, malicious, discriminatory, detrimental, pernicious and misleading attack. I can think of other qualificatives, Mr. Speaker, but of course I would not dare use them in the House because I know you would find them out of order. I do not want to follow the bad example set recently in this House by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan).

There are three charges laid against me: first, refusal to recognize hon. members of the official opposition; second, irregular use of an illegal chronometer; third, favouritism toward government members to the detriment of those of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that on Tuesday, December 4, you gave me the opportunity to explain myself. It seems however that these explanations are not sufficient since the hon. member for Calgary North played another dirty trick on Thursday, December 6.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate and respect the decisions made by Your Honour in each case. However, in order that I may settle once and for all, for my colleagues, the public and my constituents, this question which has been dragging on since 1971, if you rule that this is a prima facie question of privilege requiring a motion, I am ready to suggest that this question be discussed before the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, as the hon. member for St. John's East and myself have already suggested.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) has given notice to the Chair of his intention to rise on a question of privilege concerning the circumstances he has mentioned. I remind the hon. member that his notice reached the Chair a bit late.

Still he could have risen after the hour of notice, that is in a few minutes. However, I thought that it would be easier to try and settle the matter immediately. The hon. member for Laurier has referred to the fact that this question was raised a few days ago by another member who suggested that there was a question of privilege which should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Now the hon. member is suggesting that the matter be studied by another committee of the House. The Chair at that time ruled that there did not seem to be a prima facie question of privilege which should be studied by a committee, and I do not see how I could now change this ruling. The hon. member has referred to certain incidents which occurred in a committee. It has been suggested repeatedly that committee deliberations should not be discussed by the House except in the form of a committee report. I regret, like all hon. members, the difficulties which may come up occasionally, similar to those the hon. member has alluded to, but I see no point in having the deliberations of a particular committee looked into by another one. That, in essence, is the ruling I gave the day before yesterday, I believe, and I see nothing in the circumstances mentioned by the hon. member for Laurier to justify any other decision today.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROPOSAL FOR PASSAGE OF CERTAIN BILLS

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I shall try again today to make some progress with the business of the House. We had a meeting of the House leaders, as suggested yesterday, and I believe there is a basis for proceeding to clear out of the way a number of important bills.

As I understand the consensus reached, we will deal with all stages of the Parole Act and of the residential mortgage bill without debate. We will also give second reading to the parks bill and, having achieved all that, we would give passage to the Canada Pension Plan Bill No. 2—

An hon. Member: Would you try for No. 1?

Mr. MacEachen: —and the Family Allowances Act. If the hon. member tempts me I will put in CPP No. 1.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): May I, not only on behalf of the Official Opposition but on behalf of the only opposition left in this House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1110)

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, we agree with a House order as outlined. We now have the deletion of the third reading of the parks bill, which bothered us yesterday. We are pleased to honour the commitment we made.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: You have already spoken. One speaker for each party.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word on behalf of the influential opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In other words, on behalf of the party in this House that is making parliament work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: You are straight out of Charles Dickens.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sorry that my friends of the Official Opposition, the members of the oil lobby, are so distressed this morning. May I say what I rose to say, namely, that the package the government House leader has reported to Your Honour is one that all four party House leaders agreed to this morning. There might have been added one qualifying word. Where the minister said "without debate" he could have said "without further debate", because these measures have been debated at length at various stages. But the proposals suggested by the minister have our support.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, despite the vagaries of the hon. member from the Progressive Conservative Party, the only efficient opposition party in the House, that is the Social Credit Party of Canada, is here to work. Whatever that hon. member may think, the agreement of the Social Crediters was needed for unanimous consent. We were pleased to give it this morning.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, may I thank the House for its co-operation and suggest that we might deal with this package of legislation when Government Orders are called before we deal with the debate on the oil bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TABLING OF PAPER, "THE CRIMINAL IN CANADIAN SOCIETY—A PERSPECTIVE ON CORRECTIONS"

Hon. ATOMIC ENERGY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE OF CANDU NUCLEAR POWER STATION TO REPUBLIC OF KOREA AND BUILDING OF HEAVY WATER PLANT IN QUEBEC

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to advise the House that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has received from the Korea Electric Company Limited, the national electric utility of the Republic of Korea, a letter of intent to purchase a 600 megawatt CANDU nuclear power station, together with an option for another. This is the second time this year that another country has opted in favour of the Canadian nuclear power system, featuring heavy water moderator, natural uranium fuel and pressure tube reactor. In March the Argentine Atomic Energy Commission chose for Argentina's next nuclear power station a 600 megawatt CANDU offered by AECL and an Italian partner, Italimpianti. Contract negotiations for the Argentine project are in the final stages and are expected to be completed around the end of the year.

Acting on the letter of intent, a team of AECL engineers will go to Seoul this weekend for technical discussions relative to the Korean content of the plant. Another team will follow in January to complete specifications and the scope of supply and to set parameters for pricing the project. The aim is to complete the agreement by March.

I would also remind hon. members of the offer which has been made to the province of New Brunswick, mentioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his statement yesterday, of federal support for a CANDU nuclear power station in that province. As part of the government's general policy of providing financial assistance to the installation of the first commercial CANDU nuclear plant in each province, the government will also be prepared to extend similar financial assistance to the province of Manitoba just as soon as the provincial utility decides to proceed with such an installation.

The growing acceptance of the CANDU nuclear reactor system both at home and abroad has led to a requirement for a further investment in heavy water production facilities, a question which has been kept before the House by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would like to announce, therefore, that the government will finance the construction of a new heavy water production plant of 800 tons per year capacity in the province of Quebec near the site of the Gentilly reactor. Once built the new facility should provide the assurance of adequate heavy water supplies both at home and abroad for the following several years.

However, projections indicate that the CANDU nuclear industry will continue to grow with even more heavy water needed in future. The government has decided that when the production of an additional federally financed heavy water plant is required in the next few years to support the nuclear program, such plant should be located at an appropriate site in either Manitoba or Saskatchewan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as perhaps one of the greatest experts on this subject in the House of Commons I know I would be expected by the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) to say a word or two.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to begin by congratulating the minister first of all on receiving the applause of his colleagues today after they pulled the rug out from under him yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to congratulate quite sincerely the Atomic Energy Commission and wish them every success with these two prospective sales which I hope are completed satisfactorily. It will be interesting in due course for the House to be told the terms upon which the sales will be financed. However, I do know something about the dedication of the people involved in promoting the CANDU project in Canada, the way they have strived to make this project a success and the way they have worked to promote sales abroad. I wish them every success in this regard.

I think it is pretty clear that in the coming years Canada will have to depend a great deal on the development of atomic power. Obviously there will be a growing role for the CANDU system within our country and there will of course, be an increased requirement for heavy water to be manufactured in Canada.

One thing we note in this connection is a change in the approach of the government. The initial method was to interest private companies in the building of heavy water plants, the first one being at Glace Bay and the second at Port Hawkesbury. Now the trend seems to be away from that toward the government building these plants directly or through the Atomic Energy Commission. It will be interesting to have an explanation some time of this change and whether it is an indication that private companies like Canadian General Electric and others who in bygone years evinced a great interest in building these heavy water plants have lost their interest or whether the government or the Atomic Energy Commission has decided directly it is in the public interest that these plants be built and owned by the government of Canada. It will be interesting to learn why this change in policy has taken place.

Finally, may I also say, in view of the interest the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) has shown in the matter, that I am pleased to see reference made to the possibility of a heavy water plant being built in either Saskatchewan or Manitoba. I shall not take sides, of course, as between Saskatchewan and Manitoba but simply express the hope that before very long the hon. member for St. Boniface will have a heavy water plant of his own to boast about.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I cannot claim the expertise in this subject the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) can, for which I thank God. I am interested to note that at the time this announcement is made the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is absent from the House. According to newspaper rumours, he indicated that if the next plant was not constructed in the western part of the country he might tender his resignation. I am wondering whether that is the occasion for his absence.

On behalf of our party may I say this announcement of additional sales of the CANDU reactor is most welcome. I think the government officials involved in negotiating the sales deserve to be congratulated most sincerely. I welcome also the reference in the minister's announcement to the fact that when it becomes necessary to build a fourth heavy water plant it will be located in the western part of the country in either Manitoba or Saskatchewan. This is a welcome announcement and a necessary step. It is important that all parts of the country participate to a great extent in the development of this technology.

I suggest to the minister that, given the current success in the sales of the CANDU reactor, perhaps it is now time for the government to demonstrate even further confidence in the technology developed by our scientists by taking the plunge and going into production of these reactors with the assumption that we can reduce the relatively high initial cost of these reactors through economies of scale that would be involved in a sort of production line run and that by reducing those costs the potential for external sales of the reactor would increase. If increased foreign sales should not materialize, there is great need for such reactors in the future in this country and their production would not be wasted in any way.

Again I congratulate the government and the officials involved on making these sales and on having developed a technology which is now finding worldwide acceptance and is making Canada one of the leaders in a new area of technology.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, having heard yesterday the Prime Minister state the government's energy policy, and having listened today to the announcement by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), I must say that, once again, this seems to be a mini-speech from the throne, inasmuch as this policy statement seems in keeping with the expectations of Canadians and parliamentarians.

We have problems, I know, and the Canadian people are counting on their representatives in the House to find solutions, not 20 years from now, but at this very moment, so that they may stop living in anxiety. Are we really going to run short of energy in one area or another. We must stop thinking that we have in Canada natural resources that we are unable to develop and that we must rely on others.

I have been interested for quite a long time in the matter of heavy water production in Canada. Attempts were made by the federal government, the provincial governments, and even by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), when he was premier of Nova Scotia. If we are to rely on information obtained from scientists, it must be admitted that they recognize today that the failure of the Glace Bay project was due to the poor quality of the water that prevented the end from being achieved.

Today, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has conducted extensive research in this area. I am aware of this because I have always kept in touch with this agency to make sure that they were really working in earnest and to find out whether they were going to recommend to the government to set up a new plant in a suitable location where the climate and the quality of the water would allow a large production at the lowest possible cost, thus enabling nuclear plants to operate at full capacity.

I have always been disappointed, Mr. Speaker, that it was decided to build nuclear plants without a secure supply of heavy water to operate these plants at full capacity.

I have nothing against Russia, but I remember very well that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, to a question I asked him in this House, replied that the slowdown at the Gentilly nuclear plant was due to a shortage of heavy water and the inability of Russia to supply more. Because of this answer, I have kept urging the minister and the government that more research be conducted with a view to sitting up a heavy water plant in Canada which could produce more of it in order to allow our nuclear plants to operate at full capacity.

I kept insisting, Mr. Speaker, that this plant be built in the Montmagny area, in the county of Bellechasse, and as recently as yesterday, I talked with the mayor of Montmagny, Dr. Gaétan Gauthier, to whom I pay tribute because he made representations and worked sensibly with his council members, along with his committee, in order to secure a heavy water plant in the Montmagny area.

Today, I must admit that the decision made by the cabinet was a sound one in the light of the information given to me by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. At any rate, I am glad that this plant is located in the province of Quebec. I am a Canadian but I am also a Quebecker. I read in the minister's statement that the government is considering the installation of another plant in a not too distant future in another area of Canada. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this is the proper procedure in order to bring Canadians closes together instead of dividing them and to enable Canada to benefit fully from all our forms of energy, so that we may work together to solve problems and meet the needs of all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that you are anxious that I complete my remarks. I will conclude right away but, in any case, I hope that the Minister of Energy, Mines, and Resources will continue to show great energy and that this plant will operate as soon as possible, so that we may be self-sufficient and produce all the energy we can in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse).]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

● (1130)

CANADIAN CRUDE OIL—REASON FOR EXTENSION OF PRICE FREEZE—JUSTIFICATION FOR HIGHER PRICES PAID BY EASTERN CANADIANS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Previously the minister had indicated that the price freeze on Canadian crude would terminate at the end of January and the Prime Minister had said on national television that the price freeze on Canadian crude in its present form would end in January. I would like to ask the minister what happened. What changed the policy between the time of the Prime Minister's statement on November 22 and yesterday?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will have been aware of widespread disagreement on the question of the pricing of Canadian produced oil in Canadian markets, both within this House and, indeed, on the part of a number of provincial governments. It seemed to us appropriate, in light of the forthcoming first ministers' conference, that this is the kind of question that should be focused on nationally and on which we should seek to get some national agreement. On that basis it seemed reasonable to postpone the date for future increases until we have some agreement with regard to the current position and also with regard to a pricing mechanism for the future, to be discussed within the framework of a first ministers' conference.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the benefit of the freeze on Canadian crude to consumers of gasoline, home heating oil and other petroleum products throughout most of the country, is there any reason why the government of Canada, through the minister or the Prime Minister, in its beneficent way could not provide some price shelter also for the people of the Atlantic provinces and the people of Quebec who are now paying very much higher prices, particularly for home heating oil? Is there any justification for the minister and the government continuing the existence of these two sorts of Canadians? Is there any justification the minister can give for continuation of a policy which imposes the highest prices on those Canadians with the lowest personal incomes?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did make some reference to certain ameliorating actions the government had taken with regard to those consumers in the eastern Canadian market who need assistance the most. This proposal of the Leader of the Opposition for cross-subsidization of eastern consumers by the western producing interests is an important question to be considered at the federal-provincial conference. Unfortunately I cannot announce anything today in that regard.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister did not mean to twist what I said. I am not talking about cross-subsidization. I want to make it very clear that I am not asking western producers to subsidize eastern consumers. I am asking the government of Canada to provide an equal hand for all Canadians. In view of the Prime Minister having indicated in response to a question from the hon. member for York South that before the year's end legislation would be introduced to indicate the way in which prices will be determined after the freeze, would the minister tell the House whether that legislation is now prepared, whether it will be presented to the House before the end of the year, and what kind of mechanism is intended?

Mr. Hees: A quick conference is necessary.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure what legislation the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. Hees: Why don't you listen instead of talking, Don?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I would think the hon. member for St. Boniface could be a little quieter now that he has some hope of getting a heavy water plant.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fraser: Here comes the heavy humour plant.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for St. Boniface, but I remind hon. members that we are still on the very first question and we now have a point of order. Certainly we are not moving as quickly as we ought to try to move. As I say, the hon. member for St. Boniface has a point of order, after which we will try to move on a little more quickly with the question period.

• (1140)

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to make the suggestion, in view of the fact the Leader of the Opposition had trouble making his question clear to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, that possibly his confrere who spoke on behalf of the opposition yesterday might be able to do it for him.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, in light of the Prime Minister's statement in the House on November 22 with regard to the pricing process of Canadian crude following termination of the freeze in which he said, "we will have to introduce legislation certainly before the year's end to indicate the way in which these prices will be determined", may I ask the minister whether this legislation has been prepared, when will it be presented to the House, and what kind of mechanism is intended?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, legislation clearly will not be introduced before the federal-provincial conference. It is specifically for the purpose of talking about questions like the pricing problem that the Prime Minister will be meeting with the other first ministers. On that basis I would think the appropriate time for legislative change would be after the federal-provincial conference when we have achieved a consensus.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It appears that a number of members are seeking supplementaries on this first question. We will start with the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and then go to the hon. member for Yukon.

CANADIAN CRUDE OIL—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF WHEN PRICE FREEZE WILL END

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, at the risk of pointing out a further zig-zag in policy I will merely ask the minister this question. On the matter of the termination of the price freeze there are a lot of misinterpretations of the very vague language of the Prime Minister yesterday when he used the phrases "heating season" and "the end of winter". I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he can possibly give us his interpretation of those phrases? What date has the government got in mind for now lifting the freeze?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the reference to the end of the heating season is probably as accurate as it is possible to be. I think this is a question that should be discussed at the federal-provincial conference. Very obviously it will be at the end of the fourth or perhaps the fifth month next year when the weather improves.

Mr. Nielsen: Not where I come from!

CANADIAN CRUDE OIL—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE EXTENDED PRICE FREEZE WILL APPLY REGARDLESS OF POSITION OF ALBERTA AND OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the Prime Minister's statement yesterday that there is neither need nor justification for changes in the price of domestic heating oil during the present heating season and that the government will undertake discussions with the government of Alberta and the oil companies to secure their agreement to achieve this goal, would the minister state in the House, without reservation, that the government will impose that freeze regardless of the predictable position that will be taken by the oil companies and their ally, the premier of Alberta?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will not say that categorically. I would seek, first, to get their support. I hope we will have the support of the province of Alberta and the oil companies in this regard. Of course, if that support is refused we will have to consider our position and I will then advise the House.

DOMESTIC OIL TO WHICH LONG-TERM PRICE INCREASES WILL APPLY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary, again on the question of price in the longer term. In view of the Prime Minister's statement that we must in the long term allow the price of domestic oil to float upward in order to ensure the development of future resources, would the minister tell us whether price increases would apply to the conventional reserves of about ten billion barrels or was the Prime Minister speaking only of the higher cost oil from the tar sands?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the questions in the choice of a pricing system, whether we might have a multi-level pricing system in our market. I think that will be discussed more fully at the federal-provincial conference.

OIL EXPORT CHARGE AFTER FEBRUARY 1 NEXT—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO PORTION WILL BE RETURNED TO COMPANIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary to clarify another statement made by the Prime Minister yesterday regarding the disposition of the export charge as it will be called after February the first. Can the minister state without reservation that no portion of that charge will be returned to the multinational oil companies?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it would be the intention to bring it into the public sector. Discussions, of course, will continue with the province of Alberta with regard to the possible sharing of the export charge. If there were a decision that some part of it should go to Alberta, it would then be for that province to determine where it would go. At the federal level it would be the intention to take it into the public treasury.

CONSULTATION BY MINISTER WITH OIL COMPANIES TO PREVENT UNJUSTIFIED PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Lotbinière wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. Prime Minister announced yesterday that the price freeze would not be applied in eastern Canada.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

I wish to ask the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources if he had discussions or contacts of some sort with, among others, the Exxon corporation, which supplies eastern Canada, in order that the people of that region do not suffer from an exaggerated price increase in oil products.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I had no such contacts.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, can the hon. minister say whether he intends to discuss with provincial premiers or with his counterparts the development of a policy or guideline which would protect the eastern Canada population against an exaggerated increase? Has he specific measures to suggest or is it only a general discussion?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, this question is on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Acting Prime Minister. As the marriage was consummated yesterday afternoon, is it the intention to call the new party the "Liberal New Democrats" or has the hon. member for York South insisted that it be called "NDP Liberals"?

Mr. Sharp: You can do better than that.

CRUDE OIL—EFFECT OF PRICE FREEZE ON SYNCRUDE PROJECT—PRICE LEVEL NECESSARY TO ENABLE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is along the lines of a question asked by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. The Prime Minister said yesterday that "in short, we must in the long run allow the price of domestically produced crude oil to rise toward a level high enough to ensure development of the Alberta oil sands." Does that mean there will be no development of the Alberta sands until the price freeze goes off? When he added, "but not one bit higher", how high did he mean, $10 a barrel which the economists are talking about now to develop this project?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we would anticipate that the Syncrude project would be going ahead. So the answer to the hon. gentleman's question is that this will not delay action in that area. With regard to the appropriate level of price, that obviously is a matter that will have to be discussed at the federal-provincial conference particularly with relation to the expected cost of synthetic oil developments in the coming years.

SUGGESTED TAX CONCESSIONS TO REDUCE PRICE OF GASOLINE AND HEATING OIL TO CONSUMERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I make this suggestion to the Minister of Finance, and I put it as a question. In light of the fact the Prime Minister has made the statement that the price of crude petroleum must go up, has the Minister of Finance given any consideration and, if not, will he give consideration to tax concessions so as to reduce the consumer price for gasoline and heating fuel?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I interpret that suggestion as a suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate that we are still on the first question. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Yukon, who was on his feet when we adjourned yesterday, on a supplementary and then recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATION OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES AT FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Eric Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary I intended to ask yesterday had to do with milk but my supplementary today has to do with the oil situation. The minister has mentioned the federal-provincial conference in January where these problems are going to be discussed and particularly the lifting of the price freeze at the end of the heating season. Can he assure the northern residents of Yukon and the Northwest Territories that they are going to have representation at that conference inasmuch as the heating season is somewhat longer for them than for the rest of the country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is a first ministers' conference and in that respect I am not exactly certain how we accommodate them, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that the interests of the two territories will be adequately represented.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the freeze stay on until the frost comes out of the ground?

HIGHER HOME HEATING COSTS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST PEOPLE UNDER CERTAIN STATUTES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It arises from the Prime Minister's reference yesterday afternoon to higher home heating costs. Yesterday the Prime Minister referred not only to the Canada Assistance Plan but also in an oblique way to the old age security, the guaranteed income supplement and family allowances. Is the minister prepared to make a statement as to what definite ways the government has in mind for assisting people with higher heating costs under these pieces of legislation?

● (1150)

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hees: Give him the same answer you gave him at caucus last Wednesday.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the noise from the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is over.

Mr. Hees: Give him the same answer you gave him at caucus.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we should try to move a little more efficiently. It seems that the minister heard the question asked by the member for Winnipeg North Centre and perhaps he could attempt to reply to it now.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings was answering for me and I had difficulty understanding what he was saying. I wish to say to the hon. member that old age pensions will be increased in January according to the escalation formula. The figures released Tuesday, show $108 for the basic pension and $184 when combined with the supplement for a single person starting January 1. This will represent another increase in old age security and the guaranteed income supplement. With regard to aid under the Canada Assistance Plan, I have written to my colleagues and have already received a reply from Prince Edward Island indicating that they will increase their payments under the Canada Assistance Plan by 10 per cent. I have approved the increase and confirmed that the federal government will share in a flat increase of 10 per cent in benefits. I would also like to remind hon. members of a bill passed by the House last week, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lalonde: —which has given to the provinces another $190 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that after the Prime Minister said all that yesterday afternoon, he said, and I quote his words, "something more may well be required"—

Mr. Bell: How much more do you want?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —will the Minister of National Health and Welfare make a statement before the Christmas recess as to what that something more is going to be?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, with regard to something more, I might say that Newfoundland is receiving $24.1 million more, Prince Edward Island, $4.6 million—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I appeal to hon. members to assist the Chair in getting the question period moving just a little more quickly. As hon. members know, we are still on the first round of questioning. At this pace, I am not sure whether we will go much farther. I will now recognize the hon. member for Egmont.

Oral Questions

OIL—EFFECT OF EXTENDED PRICE FREEZE ON DOMESTIC CRUDE ON PRICES IN QUEBEC AND ATLANTIC CANADA THIS WINTER

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the Prime Minister's statement yesterday afternoon did not really clarify the situation with regard to the need for a two-Canada oil policy, particularly the application of the freeze with respect to eastern Canada, will the minister advise whether the price freeze that is to continue in effect for the rest of the winter season will have any bearing in Quebec and Atlantic Canada where prices have already risen since September by 20 per cent and are close to 40 per cent over the level of prices in western Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the intent would be to seek continued agreement with regard to the freeze on the basis that we are seeking to hold prices down except where the cost of offshore crude feedstock necessitates increases.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the fact, referred to a moment ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the Prime Minister said something more may be required but no discussion will take place until January and presumably there will be no action until after that time, what mechanism will be in effect to deal with these offshore companies so that the increasing disparity that exists between eastern and western Canada will not be allowed to become even worse?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I have already indicated, Mr. Speaker, we will follow the same procedure we have followed until this point. With regard to action to be taken, as the Minister of National Health and Welfare has pointed out there has been a substantial transfer of financial resources to those particular provinces, and we would think they would be in an excellent position to take action with regard to these commodities in their own jurisdiction.

EXTENSION OF PIPELINE TO MONTREAL—CONTINUATION FARTHER EAST AS REQUIRED—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): In his statement yesterday the Prime Minister indicated that in addition to building the Montreal pipeline it would be extended as required to points farther east. What did the Prime Minister mean by that reference? What determination will be made by the minister with respect to building this pipeline, and how soon will there be some announcement with regard to an extension to these eastern points?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, one question to be considered at least in the shorter run is the modification of the Portland pipeline. As the hon. member may know, there are a number of discussions current with regard to the extension of additional pipeline connections farther east, either from the St. Lawrence or Lorneville. These discussions, among other things, will include the ability to make the line reversible so that in times of crisis feedstock could be moved back and forth.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the hon. member for a further supplementary, but we should try to have fewer than three supplementaries to each question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As the minister has referred to the Lorneville situation in particular, and as there has been anticipation for some months in that part of the province of New Brunswick respecting the building of that capacity, does this mean the minister's department will accelerate its decision in this regard instead of holding up the project?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we have not been holding up the project. There has been an extensive examination of the factors involved, particularly the economic factors, in the different pipeline possibilities. As the hon. member may know, there are at least three of them: the lower St. Lawrence, Lorneville and Canso. There is obviously a problem of choice involved as to which is the best in the over-all Canadian interest.

CONSTRUCTION OF HEAVY WATER PLANT IN QUEBEC—REQUEST THAT REPORT TO CABINET BE MADE PUBLIC—USE OF BANK OF CANADA TO FINANCE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Could the minister inform the House if the report filed with the cabinet by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited will be published, or whether it is considered as a confidential report? Moreover, could he inform us when the building of this plant will start and when is the plant expected to be in operation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not know precisely to which report the hon. member is referring. The heavy water plant will be in operation, I think, within about four years.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I would like to ask a supplementary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker.

The report to which I refer—and I think my question is quite clear about it—was brought in after the study undertaken by the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. This report was certainly submitted to the cabinet so that the latter may rule wisely and decide about the location of a heavy water plant.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. Such report will not be made public.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for your patience but as this matter is most important, I shall be brief. In view of the federal government's announcement regarding the building of such a plant, could the minister tell us whether the government will have recourse to the Bank of Canada to finance this construction so that Canadians will not—

Some hon. Members: Oh no! Not again!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I am hurt by such remarks whenever I utter the words "Bank of Canada". It is the bank of all Canadians and everybody seems to be insulted. I regret that very much. It is a Canadian institution and we should have the right to talk about it in this House—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): I ask my question very seriously, Mr. Speaker. I am never joking.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member ask his question because we are going to be short of time.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the government intends to use the services of the Bank of Canada to finance that project so that Canadians will not have to carry unnecessary interests and pay for four plants to get only one at the end.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the government intends to use normal sources of financing to that end.

GRAIN

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF BOXCAR CONTROLLER TO FACILITATE MOVEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I turn from oil to wheat and direct a question to the minister reporting for the Wheat Board. Has the government given reconsideration to the appointment of a boxcar controller with appropriate powers. The legislation would be passed very quickly by the House because during the last eight or nine days the backlog has increased and the Wheat Board has been losing contracts. Some have been lost completely and others have been deferred as a result of the failure to make available the necessary boxcars, which the railways naturally will use for the carriage of other commodities on which a greater profit can be realized. Would the minister, in these circumstances, not be willing to bring before the House legislation to do something to reduce the backlog of 75 million bushels of wheat at the present time, get the wheat moving and thereby enable the Wheat Board to fulfil its contracts?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the railways gave the Wheat Board figures as to the number of cars which could be put into the movement of grain and the railways have in fact been keeping very close to that number of cars. There is, of course, great pressure upon the railways from those who wish to move many other products, and the effort of the railways is to serve all customers as well as possible. I am sure my colleague, the Minister of Transport, would look seriously at the question of the appointment of a controller, or some other device, if he felt that any unfair attitude was being shown as between various products. But I think it is a little unfair for members from the prairie region to say that wheat only should move, as it would be for members from British Columbia to say that lumber only should move. I think we should appreciate that an effort must be made to serve all products as effectively as possible, although sometimes a difficult judgment has to be exercised.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The conversion of the minister from being a representative for Saskatchewan will be interesting to the farmers of that province. I ask him whether or not the government will give consideration—the responsibility is his because he is looking after grain—to giving a controller the power to allocate cars between the various claims by producers of commodities. Let him not give an evasive answer. The fact, please.

Mr. Lang: As far as cars available for grain are concerned, a very effective block shipping system was set up several years ago along with coordinators at the terminals, measures which were never put into effect while the right hon. gentleman was prime minister. I am happy to tell the right hon. gentleman that my supporters in Saskatchewan find I can represent them and the people of Canada at the same time, something which he never managed to accomplish.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: The exhilaration being displayed opposite would indicate a source other than heavy water. I am glad to have that admission from the minister. It has been my view that he has forsaken the west. He now admits it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

OIL—ROLE OF TECHNICAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE IN POLICY CHANGES ANNOUNCED BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Were the policy changes announced by the Prime Minister yesterday based in whole or in part on recommendations from the technical advisory committee to the minister? If so, to what extent?

Mr. Hees: No. They were based on the recommendations of the New Democratic Party.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The changes announced were of a more long-term nature, not with regard to emergency interruptions of supply with which the technical advisory committee has been concerned. As the hon. member knows, the terms of reference of that committee are to deal with the crisis situation which might be faced this winter in the event of the interruption of supplies to eastern Canada.

Mr. Balfour: Did the technical advisory committee approve the extension of the price freeze?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have really answered that question already. The committee is concerned with the threatened interruption of supplies to eastern Canada.

OIL—REASON FOR SEVEN YEAR DELAY IN MAKING CANADA SELF-SUFFICIENT

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of industry figures that our present oil production is 300,000 barrels a day above our consumption, can the minister explain why the government now feels it needs seven years to make Canada self-sufficient in oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If the hon. gentleman will re-read the statement, he will know there is no intention to cease exports to the United States during this period. The construction of plants to extract oil from the tar sands could well require very extensive investment over a considerable period of time before self-sufficiency is realized.

PENITENTIARIES

PRINCE ALBERT—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF WHAT CONSTITUTES "NORMAL CONDITIONS"—INABILITY OF COMMITTEE TO VISIT CERTAIN AREA

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General arising out of his comment a few weeks ago that the situation at the Saskatchewan Penitentiary at Prince Albert was getting back to normal. Did his statement take account of the fact that inmates who are in segregation and dissociation are denied the right to make telephone calls to anyone and that this right has been suspended indefinitely? Can he explain why some of these inmates have been kept in the hole, in solitary, in one instance for more than 200 days? Does this represent a situation which is back to normalcy?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): I would have to look into the individual cases. I know that some inmates are kept in segregation for a long time because they still present behavioural problems to the penitentiary. But I will look into the cases and get the names and find out what is wrong.

Mr. Howard: Would the minister also look at that section of the penitentiary in which these particular inmates are kept and determine whether or not this was the area of the penitentiary to which no key could be found, as a result of which the penitentiary subcommittee, when it visited Prince Albert, could not get in to see what was going on?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Allmand: I will do that, Mr. Speaker, and I might have our recently appointed ombudsman look into that question.

NATIONAL PARKS

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO RESIDENTS APPEALING LEASE RENTALS

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and his parliamentary secretary, I shall direct my question to the Minister of Justice. Since federal law provides that the only way in which residents of the town sites in national parks can appeal lease rentals is through the Federal Court, will the government extend to those persons the same treatment as was extended to the native people at James Bay by financing their test appeal whose purpose is to clarify federal law? Can the minister give us an affirmative answer to this question before December 15 which is the deadline set by his officials?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): I shall be glad to look into the matter and discuss it with my colleague.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBLE SUBJECTING OF PERSONS GRANTED LANDED STATUS TO FURTHER PROCESSING

Mr. Bill Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. When applicants for admission to Canada are granted unconditional landed status by the Immigration Appeal Board as provided by section 15 of the Immigration Appeal Board Act, should this not finish the matter as far as applicants are concerned, or are their applications subject to further processing by immigration officers?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. The normal practice of the department is to have the person concerned medically examined before he is landed. Should the hon. member be aware of a problem in any particular case I would be glad if he would bring it to our attention.

REASON FOR NOT EXTENDING SHARING OF EXPORT TAX WITH PROVINCES BEYOND THE FREEZE PERIOD

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House on what basis the government decision was reached not to extend the 50-50 sharing of the oil export tax with the four western producing provinces beyond the freeze period?

● (1210)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague has already replied to that question by saying that this is a matter to be discussed with the provinces in January.

NUCLEAR REACTORS AND HEAVY WATER PLANTS—DATE OF EXPANSION IN WESTERN CANADA—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT FUNDS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In light of the Prime Minister's statement in the House yesterday, and in view of the difficulties we are presently facing in respect of more conventional hydraulic generating stations and the need for nuclear research and development, could the minister make a statement as to the time frame he is looking at in regard to the possible expansion of heavy water plant sites and nuclear reactors in western Canada?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my statement, it seems that the earliest nuclear reactor in western Canada will be at such time as the Manitoba utility decides that it should bring a nuclear reactor on stream for its purposes. There has been some discussion in British Columbia, as the hon. gentleman may know, with regard to the possibility of a nuclear reactor to meet the power needs of Vancouver Island, but I think it is fair to say that that discussion to the moment has been inconclusive.

With regard to additional heavy water plants, this depends to a degree on the rate of sale of the CANDU system in other nations. Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. has been active in its export program, and it will be a combination of additional nuclear plants for export and for Canada which will determine the time frame within which the next one will be brought on. Judging by this year's rate, that should be at a fairly early date.

Mr. Epp: I should like to commend the minister for the statement he made and also with respect to sales. The lack of confidence that has been evident in places such as the Whiteshell nuclear research station, I believe, will be rectified to a great extent. In light of the expanded acceptance of the CANDU reactor, I should like to ask the minister whether he has in mind a widespread expansion of research and development funds for nuclear research in our present installations.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for his kind remarks. I think it is fair to say that because of its active export program AECL has been concentrating its attention on marketing the existing reactor. It does have two modifications which are currently under study. As to a specific program to increase research, I do not think that at the moment they have any proposal in regard to Whiteshell, though obviously that is a site that they would want to concentrate their efforts upon when additional research does come along.

Oral Questions

PETROLEUM—REFERENCE TO MINISTER'S STATEMENTS CONCERNING ALBERTA MARKETING BOARD AND LIFTING OF PRICE FREEZE

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources having to do with the minister's insistence in the past that he will always stick to the written record. The minister on November 14 in the miscellaneous estimates committee was asked about his position if the Alberta government, by way of royalty or a marketing board, raised its prices to world prices for petroleum products and he said "Yes, indeed, that would certainly reduce, if not eliminate, the export tax". When asked if that would be acceptable to him the minister said it would certainly be acceptable. Would the minister say now whether he will still stick by that statement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in light of the proposal to hold a meeting of first ministers, among our requests to Alberta would be one that it not change the current policy but discuss it at this conference.

Mr. Speaker: We have just about reached the end of the question period. The hon. member for Calgary South might ask a supplementary and then I will see the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. Bawden: The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on November 14, in response to a question whether the government was irrevocably committed to lifting the freeze on crude prices, said yes, that was the policy as announced. In view of the uncertainty that has been created in the provinces and for the Canadian people and the fact that Canadians cannot trust his answers, will he say whether this will change in the future?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY INTO LEAKED DOCUMENT—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and refers to the statement he made last week about disclosure to a member of this House of confidential information contained in a document. On the assumption that the long established procedures referred to by the minister in his statement to the House last Thursday include suspension, followed by an inquiry, possibly dismissal and the right of appeal, can the minister tell the House how far these procedures have now gone? Specifically, can he tell us whether the person charged with the leaks has at least been suspended from the public service, as is required—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might allow the minister to reply to the first part of the question. It seems to me that a question as long as this one takes a little too much time away from other hon. members with questions to ask. I assume that the hon. member has now asked his question and the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the investigation is continuing. I was in touch with the officers who are in charge and they are pursuing their inquiries in accordance with the procedures set down. Of course, no one has been charged. The investigation is continuing.

ALLEGED DENIAL OF GASOLINE TO CANADIAN MOTORISTS IN UNITED STATES—POSSIBLE RECIPROCAL ARRANGEMENT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last week I drew to the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the possibility that American service stations were refusing to sell gasoline to Canadian automobile drivers in the United States. The minister indicated he would ask the Department of External Affairs to investigate the matter. Would the minister inform the House if he has now looked into these allegations, whether there is any truth to them and, if there is, what action is being contemplated to avoid distress to Canadians driving in the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we did make inquiries. First, we determined that there is no government policy, whether at the federal or state level, which would discriminate against Canadians. We also inquired of the American Automobile Association and they said they had no such policy. Of course, individual service stations, if they are short of supplies, may have to decide to whom they will sell their supplies, but as far as we know there is no discrimination against Canadians as such.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, I have a related matter concerning a problem anticipated at some Canadian border points during weekends when American service stations are not even serving their own nationals and American nationals cross the border to fill their tanks in Canada. Is any consideration being given by the government of Canada to entering into discussions with the government of the United States to try to regulate these two related problems?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as far as Canada is concerned we have no policy of discriminating against Americans or other foreigners. The hon. member will have noticed that last weekend, which I think was the first on which American service stations were not open, there was no exceptional demand for gasoline in Canada and we hope this will continue to be the situation. If, however, the situation changes I can assure the hon. member that we will pursue the matter.

EXTENSION OF OIL PIPELINE TO MONTREAL—DISCUSSIONS ON AVAILABILITY OF STEEL FROM HAMILTON MILLS

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and has to do with the long awaited extension of the oil pipeline. Can the minister advise what specific steps have been taken or definite discussions had, if any, to ensure adequate supplies of steel from the great city of Hamilton?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday, we have been in discussion with the pipeline company which, in turn, has determined the availability of steel from Stelco—Hamilton produced steel. The Canadian Commercial Corporation will be authorized to go ahead to assure the availability of steel for the start of the pipeline.

PROPOSED HEAVY WATER PLANT AT GENTILLY—NUMBER OF EMPLOYEES REQUIRED TO OPERATE

Mr. Florian Côté (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

On behalf of my constituents, I wish to thank him for his decision to build a nuclear plant in Gentilly.

Can the minister tell us how many employees will be required for its operation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I doubt that such a question is in order. The Chair gives the floor to the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. I am seeking a very important and necessary clarification of part of the Prime Minister's speech appearing in yesterday's Hansard at page 8481:

The market in the east for Canadian oil going through the pipeline must be certain. It must not disappear if international oil suddenly and temporarily drops in price.

I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether this is a promise or a threat, and if the Prime Minister is going to disappear will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that it will be up the pipe?

FINANCE

SUGGESTED REMOVAL OF RESTRICTIONS ON IMPORTATION OF RAILWAY CARS

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked earlier by the right hon. member for Prince Albert and has to do with the shortage of rail cars. In light of the disastrous effect the shortage of rail cars has in various western provinces in respect of various industries, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has had any discussions with the minister responsible for the Wheat Board and the Minister of Transport regarding the possibility of removing the very heavy import restrictions on equipment of this nature coming into Canada?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have been consulting on that and other matters affecting the movement of rolling stock in the country. Orders of the day.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege in relation to an answer I gave the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre a few minutes ago. I may have inadvertently misled the House. I believe I referred to $190 million in increased equalization during the course of the current year. I have now made some quick calculations. I had already started to say that Newfoundland would receive $24.1 million, P.E.I., $4.6 million, Nova Scotia, $22.4 million, New Brunswick, $20.5 million—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Lalonde: —Quebec, $72.2 million, Manitoba, $10 million and Saskatchewan, $20.9 million, for a total of $175 million, not $190 million.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. parliamentary secretary is rising on a point of order.

Parole Act

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order.

For the last few months I have been privately complaining at least 20 times that the copy of Hansard which is left in my desk is in the other official language, which is not my mother tongue, and no improvement has been made since. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether it would be possible for the House proceedings to be printed the same way as the committee proceedings where both versions are in the same copy. Since it is under your chairmanship that the statutes have been published in both official languages within the same volume, would it be possible to have the House proceedings in both versions also in the same volume so as to avoid those repeated mistakes which are occurring in spite of our private complaints?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the government House leader might like to get back to his seat. Since the Thursday question was not asked yesterday, I wonder if the House would be interested in knowing what of the few remaining items we shall deal with next week and in what order?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we will continue with the debate on the oil supplies bill today and if not completed will continue with it on Tuesday. Following that I should like to take Canada Pension Plan bill No. 1.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a different point of order. I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) would like to ask the House to revert to motions to make a brief statement.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I had informed the hon. gentleman who made this suggestion that Mr. Serjeant is not being prosecuted in Tanzania and I expect his imminent discharge. ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Thursday, December 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236 to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Speaker: I believe yesterday the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) had the floor.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to resume this debate and congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for his excellent outline of a national energy policy for all Canadians, Canadians from every part of this nation. This policy contrasts with the no-policy of the Conservatives, although I must say that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) attempted to give his view of what the policy should be from the point of view of the board room and was certainly reinforced last evening by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) in this respect. Somehow, I just cannot believe this is the prevailing view of the whole party, but who knows? I feel that the New Democratic Party has taken too much upon itself in saying that this is its policy. I should like to show that for nearly a year the Canadian petroleum corporation, or as some of us call it the "Oil-Can" had been on the drawing boards and was actually being considered. A very good document was produced in the month of June which refers to most, if not all, the things mentioned by the Prime Minister last night.

This policy is the policy of the Liberal Party and the Liberal Government and we support it to a man. If hon. members will consult Hansard for October 25, they will see that four speakers on the government side—each of us, including the minister—talked about federal involvement in the tar sands. Clearly, we were very concerned that the approach to the tar sands was the approach taken by a commission of the Alberta government, not some group from New York. These are our policies. We stand behind them but welcome the support of the NDP in this respect.

There are three major elements involved in the Prime Minister's speech and involved in a national energy policy. The first has to be an adequate and secure supply of oil and energy. The second has to be a much greater degree of Canadian control. The third is a single fair price adequate to ensure a secure supply. The Prime Minister discussed these elements last night in general. I should like to deal in some detail with certain of them. Let us deal first with the matter of an adequate and secure supply for all Canadians, both in the short-run and in the long-run.

This bill is designed to assist in securing that supply and making sure that all Canadians do not go short and that no one in Canada suffers. The minister has suggested in respect of the short-run that if there is a shortage of 10 per cent a voluntary program would be effective. He outlined suggestions along that line. If the shortage in the east should go up to 25 per cent, then there would be mandatory allotments and beyond 25 per cent there would be rationing. These short-run possibilities are all covered in this bill. It is however the long-run situation which concerns me most. I should like to deal with the long-run supply situation for a few minutes.

According to the Canadian Geological Survey, CGS, in 1972 Canada was considered to have 134 billion barrels of ultimately recoverable conventional crude oil, that is excluding the tar sands or shales. But by 1973, even though we had only used about half a billion barrels, the CGS estimate had gone down to 99 billion. I am only taking a guess, although I have had some consultations and discussions, that by the beginning of this year the figure will be closer to somewhere between 60 billion and 70 billion barrels. So that in the course of two years we have used roughly one billion barrels, the estimated ultimately recoverable quantity has dwindled from about 134 billion to something between 60 billion and 70 billion barrels, about half of what it was before.

We must also consider that when we refer to this figure of 60 billion to 70 billion barrels we are talking about the oil that is available from the western basin, about 15 billion barrels, and about half of that has already been recovered. We can, therefore, reduce this estimated figure of ultimately recoverable oil outside of Alberta to somewhere in the area of 50 billion barrels, not including, as I said before, the tar sands or any shales that may be available. This is conventional crude. The Prime Minister indicated in his speech yesterday, and this was indicated also in the discussions we have had with petroleum geologists, that the bulk of this 50 billion barrels that is still to be recovered comes from very difficult frontier areas.

There have been very disappointing results in terms of exploration discoveries in the past year or two, which brings us to the conclusion that if we are to continue growth we will have to develop the tar sands. By the early 1980's, it is expected we will need something in the neighbourhood of two million barrels of oil a day ourselves, which will be close to three quarters of a billion barrels a year. Therefore, if we arrive at this point in the early 1980's or by the mid 1980's, what we will have to develop are the tar sands. According to the figures that I have seen from CGS, we have in the neighbourhood of 60 billion to 70 billion barrels of accessible mining type tar sands, and quantities that will vary from 200 million to 600 million barrels of so-called "in situ" sands which have to be extracted in a different fashion. The problem with the mining is that the capital investment is very high. It is estimated that to bring out the two million barrels from the tar sands—and it appears likely that Alberta crude will run out in 1980-1985—we will need an investment of about $30 billion.

It is not just a matter of investment but also a matter of time, how fast you can set up a plant. The industry claims that each plant will take a year and a half. If you peruse a study that was carried out by a government appointed committee of some 40 or 50 senior civil servants in the Alberta government—this was not an outside committee but an interdepartmental committee which produced a very fine document—you will find that we may need up to four years to set up one of these plants. So, we do have a serious problem.

I must say that last night I was very disappointed when I heard the statement made by the Hon. Eric Kierans over the CBC which was totally in error. Perhaps all hon. members on the other side were not here during the whole speech of the Prime Minister or may not have heard parts of it because of the enthusiasm of members on this side for the Prime Minister and for his speech, but I would like to repeat what was said twice by the Prime Minister. At one point Mr. Kierans indicated that $40 million was a ridiculous amount of money to cover the cost of the exploration of the tar sands. Certainly, it is a ridiculous amount of money for exploration, but the tar sands need not be explored, they are not like another oil area. We know where the oil in the tar sands is. Mind you, you may want to take samples, but you know where it is. That amount of money is not for exploration. This $40 million is for research, and in that sense it may even be more than necessary. My feeling is that if necessary more will be added. It is the research into the in situ tar sands so that the oil may be extracted by methods which are not known to the oil industry that require research. That is what the $40 million is for.

[Mr. McRae.]

I should like to read a short excerpt from the Prime Minister's comments to make sure that everyone has heard what the Prime Minister said. He said:

> It will assist and participate in the research and development work necessary to develop an in situ technology for the production of the vast amounts of oil from the oil sands which cannot be extracted by presently known methods. To this particular end, it will invest approximately $40 million over the next five years in co-operation with the province of Alberta and private firms. Should the province of Alberta prefer some other arrangements for carrying on this project, such as an independent Canada-Alberta institute, the government would be quite prepared to discuss it with them.

I like this concept and I think the people of Alberta will like it. The government will be prepared to discuss it with them. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) then questioned the $40 million, and the Prime Minister said:

> No. It is $40 million for research.

I think that the CBC and Mr. Kierans should be corrected. It should be pointed out to them that they made a very serious error in commenting on the Prime Minister's statement relative to this policy.

I have dealt at some length with the shortfall, and I have expressed my concern regarding what will happen in the future when there might be greater energy shortages. This contrasts greatly with the attitude of the other parties in the House which do not appear to be concerned about the long-term supply. I am not referring only to the debate in the last two or three days or in the last two or three months. Since we have been here as a parliament we have been listening to the Conservative Party saying that there is unlimited oil, there is no shortage; let us not worry about it.

During the committee meetings, this is the kind of thing we heard. So, I feel that not enough attention has been given to this problem. What is the solution? Of course, we have to find alternate supplies and we have to depend on some world supplies. We have to find other methods of achieving energy sufficiency. But I think the most important area that we have to consider seriously is conservation, and now I would like to deal for a moment with the subject of conservation. We have mentioned short-term conservation, both voluntary and mandatory, such as turning off lights and measures of this kind. This is part of conservation but a serious look at conservation must include other ingredients. It may even include a substantial change in our lifestyle. Possibly we can expect that type of thing in the not too distant future. It certainly means that we have to rationalize things like our transportation system. It does not make sense to have an airplane flying from Toronto to Montreal using six times the fuel per passenger mile that a railway uses. It means that our railways have to develop fast, rapid transportation.

We should also take another look at Pickering airport. In discussions with the President of the CNR he has convinced me that the $400 million to $800 million involved in that project could establish rapid rail transportation between Toronto and Ottawa and Ottawa and Montreal.

Mr. Crouse: What about STOL?

Mr. McRae: We should examine it also. This is part of the problem connected with the over-all transportation system. I am told there is a factor of four to one in the use of fuel by trucks per ton mile as compared with railways. We must also examine the question of private transportation versus public transportation. If there were not so many private cars on our streets there would be more buses, and the buses would move faster. These are some of the things I think of when I refer to life style.

There is another problem that has to be solved and conservation seems to be the answer. If, by using a magic wand, we could solve all our energy problems tomorrow we would still create a whole series of other problems. Cheap energy means that we use up our resources at a much faster rate, in turn creating other problems. Therefore, the establishment of a conservation board is one of those elements that are important in terms of secure and adequate supply of energy.

The other ingredient of a secure and adequate supply of energy is the delivery system. We must have a secure delivery system. Here, I must admit that this is perhaps the only element of policy that I have seen coming from the Conservative party. Apparently it made this suggestion a part of its policy in 1969, but it was dealt with only in a very "iffy" way during the 1972 election. There seems to be no argument on this matter. If the phrase "secure energy supply" is to mean anything, it means our energy supply will only be secure if the pipeline to be built is built entirely within the boundaries of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McRae: I would advocate that the pipeline be built in three stages. The first stage would start at St. Ignace, about 30 miles from Sault Ste. Marie, where the oil line now runs, and go from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal. I understand that the distance between St. Ignace and Montreal is somewhat shorter than the distance between Sarnia and Montreal. The cost for tunnelling and laying the line might be slightly higher, but securing the right of way would be relatively simple as most of the land is held by the Crown.

The second and third stages could almost be built simultaneously, although there should be discussion as to which should come first. The second stage would be to run that line from Gretna, Manitoba to Thunder Bay and around Lake Superior to the Sault. In that way we would have a secure line from Manitoba, at the point at which oil now leaves by pipeline to flow through the United States, to Montreal. I think that is absolutely essential in terms of secure energy deliveries.

The third stage, which could be started soon, would be the extension of the line from Montreal to assure a secure supply to the Maritime provinces. This portion of the line would be reversible, so that oil could flow in both directions, and should be built to accommodate other products besides oil. In short, our delivery policy should be such that eventually Canada will have a completely Canadian delivery system stretching from coast to coast.

The second element of a national energy policy which the Prime Minister dealt with, and which I think is absolutely essential, is the quick reversal of the present ownership situation. We must get away from 80 per cent or 90 per cent American ownership to a position which is the reverse of that. The quickest way for this to be done—

An hon. Member: There are no Alberta members present.

Mr. McRae: I am sorry about that. The quickest way for this to be done would be through the Canadian petroleum corporation announced by the Prime Minister yesterday. I am sorry the Alberta members are not here. They should be interested because I think the Canadian petroleum corporation offers a great opportunity for the people of Alberta. The Prime Minister indicated this yesterday, and I would like to say a little more about it today. It offers an opportunity for the independent Canadian producers. These are the people I would like to see supported. Here, I speak of the Canadian producers who are actually exploring, and the Canadian companies which are doing the drilling.

The Canadian petroleum corporation must also assure supplies to independent Canadian retailers, who are now being forced out of business because they cannot get oil from the multinational corporations. It is extremely important that we, as a government, undertake to support these small independents in every way we can. The Canadian petroleum corporation can give that support. Mr. Speaker, I would like to continue after we resume.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. McRae: Mr. Speaker, before we recessed for lunch I was talking about three elements of a national energy policy that the Prime Minister so eloquently laid out yesterday, namely the adequate secure supply, adequate Canadian control and ownership and a single fair price adequate to maintain this supply.

I should like to go back for a moment to a point that has to do with the notion of Canadian control and ownership and the Canadian Petroleum Corporation or "Oil-Can" or whatever it will be called, and to stress the importance that this company will have in its dealings with the Canadian independents. I think this is a group that could very well be in some trouble in terms of price and other factors. One of the important elements in our policy has to be that we will make sure that we support these independents, that we will support the people who are doing the exploration and we will support the people who are doing the drilling, the Canadian companies in that business. We should also make sure that supplies get to the small retailer. It is possible that 200 or 300 of them may go out of business in the next six months in Montreal alone if they do not get supplies. It is these people we want to support, to make sure they get supplies and are allowed to remain in a legitimate business even though small. The small business interests will benefit from the Canadian petroleum corporation.

The third element in the policy is the price. I think that we must have, first, a single price, a fair price and a price that is adequate to meet the demands of our supply needs. The single price is the first thing I mention and when I say single price I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there should be one single price across Canada for oil, excluding transportation costs. Perhaps some day if we rationalize our transportation we can include that in our price. At this point, I think we should have a single price; the people from the east and from the west, Alberta and British Columbia, should be paying that single price. It may be that a producing province, in order to equate this with internal problems or to give the people in the province a fair deal, will want a return in some fashion of some portion of the price. I have heard the Premier of Alberta say this is the sort of thing they may want to do, but there has to be a single price across the country.

Point No. 2, Mr. Speaker, is that the price has to be fair. This is the point upon which there is a great deal of concern. The price that is arrived at has to be justified. There is no justification for someone who can produce 100,000 barrels of oil at $3 per barrel being given $6 per barrel for it. There cannot be a windfall effect and this is one thing we must understand, that there should be no rip-off. The price has to be justified. On the other hand, there have to be ways of inducing people to explore and put money into the tar sands and so on. The NDP feels that they are the only ones concerned about a price freeze, but they must remember that on September 5 it was this party which imposed that price freeze.

There are all kinds of things that we can do about pricing, and all kinds of ways to avoid this windfall type of pricing. My own suggestion, and one that I feel strongly about, is that a national marketing board, separate from a Canadian petroleum corporation, should be established. I think it should be separate in the same way that I think it is wise to have the CBC separate from the CRTC. I do not think the regulatory body or marketing board should be governing the corporation that is operating the business. I think a national marketing board is a good way of achieving a single price. It is also a good way of avoiding a rip-off. A national marketing board could buy $3 oil or $4 oil—I guess there is no $3 oil left—it could buy $6 oil and it could buy from offshore. It could commit itself to buying so many hundred thousand barrels a day from the tar sands at $8 or $9 a barrel and it could commit itself to buying offshore and northern frontier oil at $9, $10 or $12 a barrel. In other words, you can have a mix of prices, each price justified by the fact that we need the oil and are meeting costs with a reasonable profit to the people producing the oil. The final price can be a single price which is an amalgam of all these prices. It would be fair and no one would be ripped-off. This objective can be achieved by a national marketing board.

I understand that a national marketing board is one of the alternatives available to us. I hope the government takes a very careful look at this possibility. I realize it will not be easy to put such a board into effect. It will be necessary to deal with the province of Alberta which has proposed its own marketing board. Any dealings of this kind must be based on co-operation.

There is no doubt there is concern in Alberta about the rest of Canada. Albertans have a very important resource, and they need some quid pro quo in order to make this kind of deal possible. I suggested a quid pro quo in speeches I made in October and November. It is very seldom we agree, but my suggestion was similar to the one made by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that the quid pro quo might be within the transportation policy.

The Toronto area, the golden horseshoe, is in a position of overgrowth. The mayor of Toronto is visiting places like Thunder Bay, saying that Toronto has had enough growth and suggesting that we take some of it. One of the ingredients of a national policy for redistributing growth must be some kind of equity in the freight rate structure. This must be designed to redistribute the growth.

Alberta has two major industries, oil and ranching and all the smaller industries that flow from them. It could use some diversification. An important quid pro quo could be this transportation policy. There is a great deal of merit in a national marketing board. It can effect a single price, ensure there will be no rip-off, and ensure adequate money will be available for further development and exploration.

In conclusion, I wish to review the points I have made. Our national energy policy must achieve certain things. There must be an adequate and secure supply. There must be enough exploration. Most important, we must develop the tar sands as rapidly as possible. We must have a very active conservation program. There must be a Canadian national pipeline which will eventually stretch from coast to coast. Our energy supplies, particularly oil and gas, should be controlled by Canadians. The vehicle for this will be the national petroleum corporation which must support the industry, including the independents. We must have a single fair price to ensure adequate supplies of oil in the future. With these ingredients, which were announced in the policy statement yesterday, Canadians can be assured that our energy policy is in safe hands and moving in the right direction.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say a few words on such an important bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill asks such great things of Canadians that it is imperative that we should consider it seriously and take whatever measures are indicated to meet the needs of Canada for oil products and ensure the developments provided for in the bill.

• (1420)

In considering this bill, Mr. Speaker, I ask myself the following question: Why did the government wait so long before introducing legislation to set up an energy supplies allocation board responsible for the distribution of our resources according to the needs of the various Canadian regions? It seems to me the government should have shown more foresight before waking up in the very middle of a crisis. It should have been easy to foresee in view of the Arab-Israeli war. But the government was blind.

It was easy to see that things were going well between those two countries. Since the U.S.A. supply Israel with armaments, and Canada is supposed to be one of their accomplices, it was obvious we would eventually have difficulties with regard to our gas and other oil supplies.

This bill causes us to look at the situation not only in Canada but throughout the world. Few people foresee an end to the present acute world-wide oil crisis. And the conflicting news going round on the matter further add to the existing confusion.

In many countries of western Europe, all car traffic is prohibited on Sundays, especially in West Germany, Italy, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Belgium. Great Britain, Finland, Norway and Poland announced further energy conservation measures. According to the latest news, Mr. Speaker, France and Great Britain will be spared an additional 5 per cent cutback in oil supplies that Arab countries intend to apply this month against all countries who oppose their policy in the Middle East.

In the United States, President Nixon announced further restrictive measures prohibiting gas stations from staying open from 9 p.m. on Saturday until midnight on Sunday. Companies will have to reduce their deliveries of liquid fuel to individuals by 15 per cent, to business concerns by 25 per cent and to industries by 10 per cent. Supplies of aircraft fuel have be reduced by 5 per cent and again to 15 per cent starting next month.

Mr. Speaker, as you see, we are in great difficulty and it is high time for us Canadians to take the required steps, inasmuch as it is materially possible and feasible to extend the pipeline and to ensure the development of our natural or oil resources. Supplies from Alberta barely meet Quebec needs.

It has been recalled that we import about 25 per cent of our oil from Near East countries. Moreover, it must be noted that most of our supplies come through the Portland-Montreal pipeline. Saudi Arabia and Abu Dhabi may stop providing Montreal refineries with oil carried by the Portland pipeline.

The 25 per cent cutback in Arabian production may result in a 20 per cent decrease in world supplies. Eastern Canada would then feel directly the effects of such a cutback as well as of a world shortage.

Granting, Mr. Speaker, that work volume is comparable to that of previous years, we must anticipate a possible shortage for next year. Because of a possible worsening of the Quebec situation, it is our duty to take the necessary measures to ensure the provision of essential services and also to advocate voluntary consumer restrictions.

With regards to the federal project of extending the pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, no decision should be made before further meetings between the federal and Quebec governments.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I regret that Quebec did not see farther than its nose and that it prevented the extension of the Sarnia-Montreal pipeline, in order to promote the building of a deep-sea harbour to import foreign oil instead of encouraging Canadian oil companies.

Mr. Speaker, I blame Quebec's childish policies. If we are short of oil in Quebec and were taken by surprise, the fault lies with the province. The Quebec government persisted in wanting the federal government to build a deep-sea port to get foreign oil, while it would have been preferable to extend that pipeline to Montreal.

Today, we say that if there is a Borden line, the fault lies with Quebec. Quebec could have been provided with a Canadian service that would have been able to provide sufficient supplies to meet the needs of the eastern provinces. In order to develop our resources and sell our oil at reasonable prices, the time had come to take the necessary steps and provide for the financing of that project with Canadian capital and at low interest rates since it is to serve public interest.

We also believe, Mr. Speaker, that the government should issue the development permits it usually grants to companies developing Canadian resources in order to keep certain controls so as to meet with whatever situation might arise. However we regret to see that this legislation is limited to the creation of machinery, without specifying political and economic frameworks, without creating any financing agency, since in those great projects, the "dance of millions" will start, and that will increase the price of money as well as building and production costs. In all their speeches, not one of the previous speakers mentioned finance. Yet, this field is the most important. It is the first one for which we should make arrangements for easy term financing of such gigantic projects.

Mr. Speaker, the important thing is not the price freeze, but the freeze on interest rates. Interest rates are now excessively high and if we go ahead with these big projects we shall have to pay these high interest rates, which will increase construction costs and the cost of living of all citizens.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated yesterday that he would propose measures to cope with that. Since family allowances and old age security pensions are geared to the cost of living increase, the latter will therefore continue to increase to unequaled heights. If the cost of living goes up again, Mr. Speaker, how will the Canadian people survive? How will they pay all those taxes and the excessive interests on money? How can we make both ends meet if we undertake to build what must be built and ensure urgent and essential developments in our country? We should also devise technical means to finance all those projects at very low interest costs, that is the administration costs.

Moreover, the Prime Minister stated yesterday that he would only have to ask the steel makers to produce at cost price. Why does he not ask those who control money and credit to also supply credit at cost price? Because as a good many others he is tied by the neck, a servant of financial magnates. He is not one of those who want to give back to the state what belongs to the state.

Mr. Speaker, the state must be independent, and the way we are acting now, we are far from being independent. We depend on foreign capital, on those who make capital out of nothing. If we want to develop our natural resources, we will have to ask permission of these servants of financial interests, as if they owned our natural resources.

Everybody says that these natural resources belong to us, that all we have to do is develop them, but in order to do that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), the Prime Minister and the government will have to kneel in front of big finance to ask permission to develop these natural resources. It will be necessary to take the assets of all Canadians, the assets of all new developments and to credit them to this sacrosanct finance.

There, Mr. Speaker, is where we stand. This is how we should work in a logical way. This is where we should put all our activities in order to build what we ought to, make Canadians benefit from their resources and not take them away from them by doing what we do now. Instead of developing our resources for Canadians, we develop them for a few financiers, to their profit at the expense of Canadians. We commit Canadians to pay a tribute for generations and these developments will never be theirs. They will always be the property of those who finance them.

If we want a sovereign government, Mr. Speaker, the time has come, with respect to the great developments that are essential, to assume our financial sovereignty, put it to the test and at the disposal of the Canadian public. The time has come for us to use it to develop our resources and satisfy the needs of Canadians, so that they will secure and, above all, retain the ownership of their assets and property.

Mr. Speaker, in order to bring about the necessary developments, namely, the sharing of Canadian resources with the Canadian people, thereby providing them with the bare necessities of life, we shall have to get even deeper into debt while paying tribute to high finance. Mr. Speaker, we shall be enslaved even more than we are now, because the Canadian debt is astronomical and the interest on the federal debt alone exceeds $3 billion. This debt is huge and unbearable. If we increase the public debt even more through these developments, we will increase interests as well. We will therefore increase taxpayers' interests and taxes to such an extent that they will be compelled to go bankrupt.

The previous speaker said a moment ago that independent companies were going bankrupt, but when this pipeline is built under the present system, all Canada will go under. Mr. Speaker, everything will go into the hands of big financial institutions that exploit to the utmost the economy of countries, in particular that of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I say that this government has carried out a short-range policy and I will prove it in a few moments. As a matter of fact, a large percentage of Canadians have been kept unemployed for several years. Therefore, we could have carried out the developments that were necessary for Canada and provided some work for these people instead of paying them unemployment insurance benefits, instead of taking from those who work in order to give to those who do not work. This is what we could have done.

But the government, with their short-range policy, have always blocked everything. We are always blocked by finance. A lot of projects should have been undertaken but were not because the necessary funds were not available and we were afraid of getting further into debt.

Our financial institutions are there to serve us and had they done just that instead of catering to the few big financial institutions that we know, we might have distributed our resources to the benefit of Canadians and put at their disposal the wealth that exists everywhere in Canada. We will never lack oil or energy products since we are able to develop them. There is plenty of energy and oil products in Canada, but in order to develop them, Mr. Speaker, we have to get into debt for generations to come. Such development should be possible without getting into debt.

New developments require new credit and it should be issued without interest. Mr. Speaker, we could give back our national heritage to the Canadian people, we could leave them their assets instead of merely changing their owners. To hand over undevelopped natural resources in return for credit to finance them is as bad, Mr. Speaker, as giving the neighbour's house to the State or to somebody else.

In order to carry on the necessary developments, Mr. Speaker, namely to distribute Canadian resources to Canadians and look after the bare necessities of life, we will have to go into debt forever.

Under our current system we have all the necessary facilities to give Canadians a sound economy and develop all those major resources and mainly our oil resources. We have all the necessary facilities for their transportation and development. We also have, if we want to take the time to think about it, all the necessary facilities to finance those enterprises without creating new mortgages on old mortgages.

Thus the administration cost would decrease as the debt is amortized and Canadians would become owners instead of have-nots. Under the current system one must be an accomplice and a parasite to give our natural resources to foreigners for developing them. They are being mortaged and in addition to that perhaps we will have to pay them ten times within ten years.

I would like to say a few words about the speech made yesterday by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as reported in today's Le Devoir. I will only quote one excerpt. The Prime Minister stated:

> This is why the government has decided to invest $40 million within five years in a research and development project of the Alberta oil sands; this is also why it is prepared to make equity investments in the corporations which will exploit those oil sands as well as in those which will do the same in the Arctic and offshore through the new national petroleum company.

The new national petroleum company has no financial facilities. And to finance it the government will have to find money somewhere. The Prime Minister stated that the government will buy shares in those corporations and financial developments. To buy shares it will need money, and the Prime Minister will do as usual: he will try to sell phares on Canadian market to suck up all the savings of the taxpayers and hand them over to the state that could find other sources of financing.

When the state takes all the available savings, there is nothing left to set up industries, and promote the economic development of Canadians. All government levels, provincial as well as federal and municipal, take hold of the people's savings and invest them on the long term in projects like those that have just been mentioned, while Canadians are without money. No one can invest except the Industrial Development Bank that gouges Canadians, industrials and businessmen by lending them money at exorbitant rates.

Mr. Speaker, the quotation continues as follows:

Among the five main points of the new national oil policy, which is explained elsewhere in detail, the construction of a pipeline to Montreal is perhaps the least spectacular measure, as this decision was announced three months ago; but, according to Mr. Trudeau, it is "by far the single most urgent step towards the achievement of our national goals".

Mr. Speaker, we all agree on that point. This pipeline should have been built long ago. But we know that what is most important is to find the money to build it. If we do not do so, we will build it to the expense of Canadians, and we will involve into debt not only the present generation but generations, to come, and we have no right to do that.

I go on quoting:

Without a pipeline, said the Prime Minister, eastern Canada will never be certain that it can meet its requirements should overseas supply be interrupted.

Moreover, without a pipeline the government is unable to guarantee a market in Canada for Canadian oil at a level sufficient to ensure the development of the oil sands and other Canadian sources of supply.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, that this will require once again billions of dollars, and those billions, we will not find in the pocket of a beggar, when there is only about $4½ billion in legal money in circulation. According to figures of the Bank of Canada, there are about $4½ billion in legal money in circulation. Are we going to pay off all our debts with $4½ billion, when the federal debt amounts to almost $48 billion? Federal, provincial and everybody's debts in Canada exceed $130 billion. We have $4½ billion to pay them off. Are we going, with $4½ billion, to pay for developments that amount to $5, $6, $7 or $8 billion? No figures are available in this regard. These are figures that I submit to the House, but I am quite sure that it will amount to about $10 billion. Only $4½ billion in legal money in circulation. Therefore, we will have to issue new credits. Those new credits will be issued through debts, mortgages, repayments. We will have to repay perhaps three or four times more than we received.

This is the assumption, Mr. Speaker. Governments should open their eyes instead of laughing at what we are doing and what we are suggesting. Instead of laughing at the suggestions we made, the implementation of which we long called for, they should keep their eyes and their ears open and try to understand once and for all that it is impossible to develop a country by running it deeper and deeper into debt and by always paying back double or triple the amounts received. It cannot and will not always work. It can work for some time but not always. I keep on quoting:

Even though the extension of the price freeze west of the Ottawa Valley until the end of winter smells of political opportunism, the overall position of the Trudeau government on the long term price system effective for the oil industry stays unchanged. Evidently, Mr. Trudeau now agrees with the NDP that for the moment higher prices for Canadian oil would neither be necessary nor justified. On the other hand, he threatens that "this undisputable fact" and "this unpleasant truth" that the era of plentiful and cheap energy has gone.

We want to prevent prices from going up but the problem will not be solved by freezing prices. Prices are frozen and then, as in the United States, they have to be unfrozen, otherwise industries close down. In order to prevent their closing down, prices have to be unfrozen.

What we need, Mr. Speaker, is to adjust prices to the purchasing power. Consequently, prices must be lowered instead of frozen. The economic method we advocate contains a price adjustment mechanism which would also reduce the cost of production and the cost of finance which would allow for cheap production for all Canadians and allow them to live decently in their country which is bursting with wealth. Finally, it would allow for the distribution of that wealth because it belongs to Canadians. It does not belong to a few financiers who never lifted a shovel and never will and who use only their pen to print figures and lend that accounting to the state or large corporations who will be developing the energy we will need to keep Canada operating. This is a banker's pen run country.

The government must take control of that pen and force financiers to issue new credits for new developments at administrative cost. Then, Mr. Speaker, we will be doing something for this country. We can develop everything that is physically possible and normally good to develop. We will never be able to do it otherwise, certainly not by continuing to increase debts, mortgages, the cost of living and setting up a kind of economy where life becomes impossible, governments rip off individuals to pump money in the pockets of high finance. Mr. Speaker, we will have to put an end to this one day.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, debating Bill C-236 on Friday afternoon seems a bit of an anticlimax, having decided which way the vote will go next Monday. I really cannot help but think, in respect of this emergency act, that the government could be accused of using a sledge-hammer to kill a fly. The government has not proven the energy crisis in Canada is severe enough to justify this far-reaching intervention in the rights of the private sector, retailers, wholesalers or of the provinces at the present time. The government has not justified the need for these sweeping powers to deal with the present situation in Canada. We should not be stampeded into giving up all rights as individuals merely to deal with the problem, although it is important, because the net result may well be worse than the problem itself. We have just dealt with the foreign investment bill, and many considered it of little significance, by which the government is going to effectively divest most areas of Canada of what little local control they have.

Before this bill is passed, there should be an intensive inquiry into Canada's energy crisis to determine the true extent of it. We have been told time and time again that this energy crisis is a crisis of transportation and distribution rather than of production. In the short-run, this is undoubtedly true, but there are many more serious portents in respect of the long-run. I do not think the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dealt with them adequately yesterday.

We have heard criticisms from the NDP that the decision of the Conservative Diefenbaker government was instrumental in creating the oil shortage by instituting the Ottawa Valley line and not continuing the pipeline to Montreal. Without the creation of the Ottawa Valley line, there would have been no market for western oil except what the United States took, and the western oil industry would not have been developed. There are those who suggest that this policy cost Ontario dearly, an estimated $500 million in ten years. But perhaps to put it in proper perspective, I should remind hon. members that the consumers of Canada will benefit to the extent of $150 million in this year alone by the discounting of wheat and feed grains to the western producers for the benefit of consumers who are mostly in eastern Ontario.

We have heard so many conflicting statements, Mr. Speaker, as to what is the real or expected shortage of supplies that we are entitled to hear from the government exactly what its assessment of the situation is. If there is to be a serious shortage in the Maritimes and Montreal, let the government present its findings and analysis if it has any.

Now, what about the possibility of resumption of supplies of offshore oil. It certainly seems likely that the Arab oil blackmail will be unable to last indefinitely, but it certainly and probably will last for this winter. In assessing the Middle East situation we must realize that Syria and Egypt, the Arab Republic, are now in a very weak position and that the strength of the Arab world has shifted to the monarchies. Jordan hardly joined in the fighting. Certainly, the Arab kings are fearful for their monarchies and really fear the Arab Republics more than they do Israel. They are also aware that they might lose the U.S. market permanently. Indeed, it seems likely that the Arab oil boycott has already set in motion the measures necessary to allow considerable independence from the Arab demands.

We need to know in the short run, what is the situation this bill is designed to cope with; we want to know what powers the government will have and what the objectives are. Can the allocations board be criticized for its lack of independence? There are thousands of products that can be affected by the decisions of the board. No one will oppose a reasonable amount of allocation and regulation if necessary, but the dimensions of the immediate crisis must be made clear.

Mr. Speaker, turning to the longer-term crisis, there are those who suggest that this may well be a turning point in the lifestyle of the people of this continent. The conservationists have made the accusation that the Americans, with 8 per cent of the world's population, are using 33 per cent of the world's energy. Somehow or other, many Canadians accuse the Americans of this, but they forget that we Canadians are in the same position. They forget also that we are part of the North American continent, and that we cannot escape the fact that if there is a lifestyle change in the United States there will be one for us. Already the stock markets are reacting by the most drastic fall since the great depression and are still on their way down. With about 40 per cent of the North American economy tied to the automobile industry, any drastic change is bound to severely affect our economy.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

There are those who suggest that by keeping the price of fuel oils far below world prices we could somehow insulate ourselves from the world prices and still have a prosperous economy. There are those who suggest that by somehow preventing the export of energy, we could have a very cheap supply and could isolate ourselves from the North American economy. Mr. Speaker, surely it is impossible to do this on any more than a short-term basis without doing serious damage to our own energy resources. Keeping the price of oil and gas so low, when it is such a valuable commodity, can only increase the drain on the rather limited supply of cheap oil and gas that is available to our country.

It has always been interesting to me that when a rural family had to accept welfare for some reason, the first thing that the welfare officer did was to have them throw out the woodstove and replace it with an oil burner, on the basis that the family was deprived. Rationing by price is certainly one of the most effective methods of reducing consumption of these very valuable commodities of oil and gas and, if we are seriously concerned about the preservation of these very important commodities, we should allow rationing by price.

If we are concerned about sudden drastic increases causing hardship, we could look at the staging of prices and financial support for the disadvantaged groups. After all, we are doing just this with regard to food. There has been a drastic increase in the price of food, but no one has suggested that we should have a price freeze on food because it is recognized that we need these price increases if we are to have food on the table. Indeed, there are those who suggest that precious oil and gas commodities should not be burned in stoves but should be reserved for the use of the plastic industries and for production of the many products that have enriched the lives of the people of the world. If nothing else, this debate should focus attention on some areas in which our energy needs can be debated.

There is one aspect of this bill, and an aspect of the export tax, that is very disturbing to anyone who thinks seriously of the prospects of Canadian unity. The implementation of the export tax without consultation with the government of Alberta, on a non-renewable resource, is one of the greatest attacks on a region and a province that has been made in this country. First of all, this tax, which may or may not be justified, could not be implemented in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec without their consultation. This is a serious manifestation of what the government of Canada is willing to do in the periphery areas at any time it suits it, on the basis of so-called national interest. It also happens that the government of Alberta is a Conservative government, and therefore this administration felt completely free to inflict any punishment it wished on the people of Alberta. Similarly, under the provisions of this bill the government can extract from the provinces all their resources and thus deprive them of a reason to exist. This situation cannot help but strengthen the feeling that, for western Canada at least, there is not much in the Canadian confederation for them. The government has given the excuse that the oil companies were making windfall profits and therefore the tax was necessary.

Mr. Speaker, in a Finance Committee meeting the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) suggested that out of every dollar of this tax, about 22 cents would have been returned to the producing province and that of the balance, almost 40 cents would have gone to the federal government in corporation tax. Even if the whole dollar were used by the oil companies as profit, with no re-investment, 40 cents would have been returned to the dividend holder but, so if he were a Canadian he would have paid a third, on the average, to the federal treasury.

If companies are making windfall profits, there are many other ways in which they can be taxed. Canada has only ten years supply of conventional crude at the current rate of usage. The rate of discovery in Canada has been disappointingly low, and there has been a net drop in reserves. In the province of British Columbia, under an NDP government, the number of wells drilled in 1973 compared to 1972, dropped from 190 to 138, with Saskatchewan staying almost the same, and only Alberta showing a 50 per cent increase. In recent committee meetings it was pointed out that last year the industry found only 75 million barrels of oil, and the equivalent in gas, for an expenditure of $385 million, which amounts to a rate increase of $5 a barrel.

The Canadian Society of Petroleum Geologists estimates that although our potential reserves amount to 60 billion barrels, significant quantities of oil can only come from one area, namely Newfoundland and Labrador, at $5 to $6 a barrel. It is also pointed out that the 3 million or 4 million barrels of oil that geologists claim lie undiscovered in western Canada either do not exist or represent very high-cost oil. This leaves the tar sands of Alberta and Saskatchewan as the prime sources of Canadian energy requirements. But all indications are that the tar sands oil will be expensive and that it will cost at least $6 a barrel before it could be exploited. Clearly, the price could be much higher.

The development of the tar sands by Syncrude, which holds rights on eight square miles out of the 30,000 square miles of tar sands, will cost upward of $1 billion which will be invested in processes that are not yet completely proven. This is hard to see as a sell-out to multinational corporations, particularly when the Alberta government has begun indexing, which will provide the people of Alberta with a stake in the profit and will ultimately benefit the people of Canada through the transfer of payments.

Almost certainly, the development of the Alberta tar sands will provide Canadians with expensive energy because the project is work-intensive and the costs will rise as the general wage level rises. Furthermore, the project will be competitive with similar projects in the large conventional oilfields around the world, such as the one in Alaska and the one in the North Sea where four wells have a proved potential of two billion barrels of oil, and taking into account the Colorado shale sands and coal gasification it is almost certain that Canadians will have to pay a high price for energy if we must rely on the Athabasca tar sands.

The announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday that, in effect, Canada will have to rely on the tar sands as the major source of energy requires a great deal of thought and consideration. All the authorities suggest that the development of the tar sands is an expensive proposition. If it is to be made economic, this fact will have to be recognized by the federal and the provincial governments. Oil from the tar sands will not be cheap oil, and if these governments attempt to ignore the fact it will not be possible to proceed with the development of the resource. It seems certain that significant changes will have to be made in the tax on conventional crude oil, and rather than obtaining more government revenue from the tar sands development lower taxes will have to be applied if the cost of the tar sands project is to be low enough to produce oil at a price competitive with other conventional fuels.

In the eagerness to abolish the export tax it has been forgotten that oil prices are set on the international market and that the price of crude has risen partially in relation to the devaluation of the American dollar. It is certainly analogous to the price of wheat, which has risen from $2 to $5.50 based largely on the devaluation of the American dollar.

I do not see how a widespread differential in oil price on either side of the U.S. Canada border can exist. We would have to curtail or virtually prohibit the entry of American cars into Canada. This would disrupt our tourist trade and it would certainly disrupt the historic pattern of trade between the two countries. Unless we wish to retreat within our borders and cut off the movement of goods and people across the border, we cannot have an effective two-price system. The Americans are attempting to ration their energy through rising prices, and this eventually creates a much better balance even if it has serious effects on certain segments of the economy.

There is another aspect of the oil situation that we should consider carefully. For generations the Maritimes and Quebec have benefited from cheap offshore oil. Almost certainly the historic trend in the development of oil will return when the situation normalizes. The Arab nations will continue to provide a large pool of conventional oil to the world because, whether we like it or not, the world will use the resources collectively.

In Canada we have a dual situation in view of the fact that Quebec represents a relatively independent segment of our nation. For hundreds of years, the French community in the world has been on good terms with the Arab world, as is evidenced by the fact that unlike the situation of the Netherlands and West Germany, France is now enjoying almost normal trade relations because of its exemption from the Arab oil embargo. It has been reported that a similar offer has been made to the province of Quebec and that they may expect sympathetic treatment from the Arabs. Why do we not use this advantage to broaden our contacts with the Arab countries and take advantage of the special possibilities that exist in this regard?

Yesterday the Prime Minister suggested that Canada would be glad to invest in a Mackenzie Valley pipeline to carry Alaskan and Canadian gas to the south. Investment agents are now advising that the purchase of Mackenzie delta stocks in such companies as Imperial, Shell and Numac are not very attractive because, in the view of many, the chances of success of the Canadian Arctic Gas system are not great. It is believed by many that the Trans-Alaska pipeline will be the carrier bringing North Slope gas to the U.S. market.

The so-called LNG technology is not new; it has been in operation for ten years. It is pointed out that the major disadvantage of the El Paso project, for Canadians, is that it is a U.S. project within the control of the United States. The events of the last six months have made the Americans distrustful of the suppliers of energy. It is widely stated in Washington that the recent pronouncements from Ottawa have caused Washington to be dubious of the sincerity of their northern friends. Some time ago it seemed that the Canadian Arctic Gas group was in a position of advantage, but even they admit that El Paso is a competitive project and that cost will be secondary to security. The Trans-Alaska gas line route is shorter and the Alaskan Indian claims have been settled, while the Canadian Indian claims have not. It is generally agreed that a treaty will have to be drawn up between Canada and the U.S. and that such a treaty is not possible at present in Canada. A study of the merits of the two projects indicates that the Trans-Alaska pipeline would bring great benefits to Alaska and would give it a chance to build a petrochemical complex for the provision of energy to the Pacific rim countries.

If the El Paso project is adopted, it is likely that the Canadian project could not be proceeded with as the amount of gas found in the delta is not sufficient to warrant the construction of a pipeline at this stage. Furthermore, even if the pipeline were to be built some time in the future to fill Canadian needs, the price of gas would have to be much higher than has been foreseen. The major reason for not building the pipeline, in the eyes of the Americans, is national security and their desire to see their project wrapped in the American flag. So that if Canadians feel they should go ahead with the construction of the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline, a great deal of effort will have to be made at the diplomatic level to bring this about.

It is too bad that the Mackenzie Valley pipeline has not been built, because according to the evidence which was brought forward in the committee the Mackenzie Valley basin is one of the areas where oil exists in small quantities. Without a pipeline to tap it, it does not seem that it will be worthy of development for a good many years yet.

Yesterday the Prime Minister announced a national petroleum company. It is difficult to foresee what will be its role. I took it from the Prime Minister's words that he sees it as an exploration company. But I point out that in the area of conventional exploration, where wild-catting is prevalent, government companies operate the poorest and private companies operate the best. Manitoba has a government-sponsored mining company which is trying to find new mines. It has spent a considerable sum of money and is now being criticized because it has not yet found anything. So far as the tar sands are concerned, these are already discovered. The Alberta government has a stranglehold on production from them, and the profits from the oil sands will eventually become available to all Canadians.

The crux of the problem will be the extent to which Ottawa attempts to control and exploit western Canadian resources for the national good. If this is applied to all resources, eventually we will end up with a unitary state. The complete centralization at Ottawa of all resources would not be good for Canadian unity. If oil resources should be centralized at Ottawa, then a good argument can be made for having all the resources of all the provinces centralized in a similar manner. In a country of so many regions such as ours, this would place a great strain on confederation.

It has been suggested that a single national marketing agency would be valuable in the energy field. The Canadian Wheat Board is an example of a single national marketing agency. It has been very successful in selling grain abroad at as high a price as possible for the Canadian farmers, but when it comes to setting the price of grain within the country it runs into problems. Should it set the price in favour of the producers, or in favour of the consumers? Generally speaking, those with the largest political clout will win out.

The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae), who spoke earlier this afternoon, said that the proposed Canadian petroleum corporation would help small, independent petroleum producers. I suggest that small businesses find it very difficult to get along with government and government agencies. Large industries, in contract, have a lot of back-up and management and are able to deal with government on a much better basis. The Canadian petroleum corporation, far from increasing the input of small companies, will reduce their input in favour of the much larger companies.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, having worked for 25 years in the private sector, I sometimes happen to feel philosophical misgivings when we have to debate bills involving a much more intense activity from the government in the economic affairs of this nation.

When we will have to consider and to evaluate the interests involved and the general good of the Canadian people, I think we will have to offset any inclination we may have towards free enterprise and set our sights on the importance of protecting the Canadian people as a whole. That more or less sums up the problem put to us today in this debate and without hesitating, I must state that, on the issue of energy and oil, I stand left of center. Mr. Speaker, in the face of the insecurity we know here in the area of energy, I do not hesitate to take position in favour of marked and direct action on the part of the federal government in the area of energy in general and oil in particular.

Mr. Speaker, that is why Bill C-236, which for all practical purposes aims at giving the federal government extensive powers to administer the supply and distribution of oil in Canada during one year, is a bill we will have to support precisely because it aims at protecting the interests of Canadians as a whole.

I am pleased that this government has deemed necessary to restrict the duration of the bill, since it will expire in a year. If necessary, Parliament may approve an extension of the powers provided in the bill now under consideration.

As a result of the restriction applied under that legislation, I am ready to trust the cabinet as well as the agencies it will establish to cope with the present emergency.

Having said that, I woulk like to review the situation and add a few facts omitted by previous speakers. Canada is producing at the present time some two million barrels of oil per day. Of that amount, about 50 per cent is exported to the United States, while the other 50 per cent is used in Canada from Vancouver to Ottawa.

But in earlier years, the rest of Canada had to depend on offshore supplies. Going back some years, we realize that we began developing energy in Canada in 1947. Prior to that, Canada had been dependent on U.S. imports for western Canada and on Arab imports for eastern Canada.

Until 1947, Mr. Speaker, for all practical purposes, we were not producing a barrel of oil in Canada. It is only in 1947 that we started to develop the resources discovered in Alberta. In the following years, that industry was developed but it was in competition with a very sound and expanding industry in the United States which was competing with the new Canadian industry.

Then in 1961, the Canadian government took a first step and by creating a protected Canadian market for the western industry allowed that industry to develop.

That brings me to discuss the position of the province of Quebec on that issue. Some people wonder what is the position of Quebec in the present crisis, especially on the proposals put forward by both sides.

In the past, as I said, the province of Quebec has always depended on offshore supplies. That has always been true and with a few exceptions, it is still true today. The international market was operating and Montreal was supplied with fuel mostly by tankers, at least during the shipping period. There was also the pipeline which is still in use from Portland to Montreal that served to ensure the supply to a certain extent after the shipping season.

That system worked out quite well through the years but now the market has developed, the demand has increased and the oil shipped from Portland is not enough, especially when the supply may be stopped at Portland.

In 1961, when the Canadian government decided to set the Borden line, it was a sound decision, Mr. Speaker, but yet, at that time, that measure was to a certain extent contrary to the interests of Quebec because the refining industry in Quebec, particularly in Montreal, supplied the Toronto and all the Ontario market, since the tankers were not using the St. Lawrence Seaway to reach the United States and the Great Lakes with a sufficient amount of oil.

Over that period Montreal has been able to benefit from the Ontario market and when that decision was taken in 1961, it had a negative effect on the Montreal industry. We from the east and from Quebec in particular accepted it because this was a fair Canadian policy aimed at protecting and allowing the growth of a required Canadian industry.

In Montreal, we experienced for a number of years a freeze on our oil industry which did not grow until 1970, that is nine years later when we witnessed a growth in the field of refining for the province of Quebec.

To a certain extent, therefore, by agreeing to this policy we contributed to rationing at the development level. Obviously we did keep on benefiting from a price which was advantageous for us in the east, in Quebec and in the Maritimes. That was in the national interest, Mr. Speaker, and we had to provide a Canadian market for Alberta oil in order that the operation could become profitable.

What would now seem to be the problem is the fact that the Canadian government has duties and responsibilities toward all Canadians and it cannot escape them without attracting well deserved criticism.

Therefore it had to take some precautions in the face of such a serious situation and this is the purpose of the bill before us. Moreover, the government should set up a long term energy policy as indicated Thursday afternoon by the Prime Minister to the great satisfaction of all Canadians.

However the establishment of such an overall Canadian energy policy compared to the former one which was partial should not be set up for the second time while ignoring the priority interests of the provinces and mainly of Quebec in this field. The appropriate negotiations will take place between the federal government and the provinces. I hope that all avenues will be explored to ensure adequate supply to the eastern provinces while allowing industrial expansion on their territory.

It is wise to consider two particular points. For the safety of our supplies we must build a pipeline for the transportation of western oil. It is desirable, if possible, that this pipeline be totally located on Canadian soil and be reversible. Here is why: There is currently a crisis, a tension, a war and parleys in the Middle East. Discoveries are made throughout the world, new oil resources are found. A very important one was announced recently in northern Great Britain.

Obviously, the Arabs will be interested in participating in the oil market and in selling their oil at the highest cost possible but they will face competition. The prices will probably settle at a much more normal level than the current prices and will be probably higher than before. But this would enable Canadians if we are still in a position to import from offshore, to save our resources for future generations. Even if we have to ensure safe supplies to all Canadians from Halifax to Vancouver, we have no right to sacrifice at the same time the interests of future generations.

While it is possible and economically feasible to adopt a Canadian energy policy, particularly for oil, to ensure a Canadian market capable of supporting the efficient development of the Canadian oil industry and the Athabaska sands, we must at the same time consider seriously the possibility of keeping our market open to crude oil imports, so that we might benefit from the situation when prices are lower while being sparing of whatever Canadian resources we have.

That is the attitude we must adopt as responsible political men. We must not be shortsighted and say: "We must be self-sufficient, as soon as possible," all other possibilities open to us of getting our supplies at reasonable cost, with reasonable guarantees, from sources other than Canadian.

That is why the bill as introduced, as well as the statement the Prime Minister read to the House yesterday, please me greatly. As a matter of fact, in his speech, the right hon. Prime Minister, as reported on page 8478 of Hansard, says precisely, and I quote:

● (1530)

In moving towards its objective, the government will also wish to maintain a reliable capacity for some continuing export of oil to the United States . . .

—on the one hand—

. . . and a market in Canada for reliable foreign suppliers of oil to us.

I believe one should insist on that last part of the Prime Minister's statement so as to allow for the most objective negotiations possible with the Canadian provinces, with the province of Quebec, with the Maritime provinces that invested money and are entitled, if possible, to rely as they have done until now on supplies from the Arab countries, from Venezuela or from any source outside Canada in the coming years.

I would have liked to deal a little longer with the problem as a whole, but there is a detail in the bill that concerns me in a special way and obviously concerns the Quebec people. In Quebec, we are self-sufficient as far as electric energy is concerned. We are more than self-sufficient, we export that energy and have been exporting it for many years; Quebec's hydroelectric system is connected to that of the neighbouring province, Ontario, and billions of kilowatts are delivered by us every year to that province. That same system is connected to the American northeast system. Thus, there is a sort of arrangement and exchange between the systems of those three parts of this continent. The province of Quebec has always been an important source of hydroelectric energy and we have been able, as far as possible, to place it at the disposal of our neighbours the United States and our sister province of Ontario. Of course, we shall continue to do so as far as possible. The province of Quebec still has a large hydroelectric potential to develop; this is already being done and the province is considering even greater projects. I think that as Canadians it is in our interest to encourage the province to make those developments because we will all benefit from it.

But I would like to sound a note of warning to all provinces: the federal government should not take advantage of the situation to assume a right which it does not need. This applies to Alberta as well as to the province of Quebec. I am pleased to find restrictions in the legislation before us, particularly the one year limit, because otherwise I would not accept it as a Quebecker. Some of my colleagues are in the same position. As members representing various areas of Canada we all are in the same position. Then we should not agree to place it under federal control unless there is a completely new understanding and distribution of powers and responsibilities between both government levels.

So I make that reservation on that basis and I think we should be careful regarding what we intend to do because it might have very serious effects in the years to come. Having made that reservation, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in the last few weeks the government of Quebec did not seem to have any real policy.

It was thought that Quebec was not aware of the problems it would encounter. Maybe the Quebec leaders did not want to make any big statement which would frighten the population by pointing out the seriousness of the situation, but if you study the statements made during the last week, and particularly if you discuss with certain Quebec politicians, you will realize that these responsible people have nevertheless assembled highly valuable information on the energy situation in general, and in Quebec in particular, and on the choices facing the province.

Some very fundamental questions are being asked by our friends, the Quebec members. A policy has been developed. Yesterday, we outlined the new energy policy. These are the principles established yesterday. There are still many things to do. Such principles have to be analyzed and machinery has to be set up if they are to work out. It is not sufficient to lay down principles. Mechanisms are needed and have to function under the best possible agreement.

In concluding, I therefore urge all my colleagues to deal with this problem with an open mind, to repress the feelings which we may all have at times when such important issues are at stake. I can assure the House that as a Quebec member, just as much as my colleagues from Alberta who are representing the interests of that province, I am concerned with that problem and I would not want my province to suffer from a federal ruling any more, I think, than our Alberta colleagues would. On the other hand, I am sure that our colleagues from Alberta, like us from Quebec, wish that with good co-operation from provincial governments the best energy policy possible be set up, with regard to the present situation which is urgent, but especially, with regard to Canada's medium and short term needs. Since Providence has endowed Canada with a very advantageous situation in the energy field, if we manage to agree and to set up an objective policy which would be good for all Canadians, we will succeed, Mr. Speaker, in creating here a fantastic economic development. When we consider the difficulties of the European countries, those of our southern neighbour, those of Japan, and when we consider also Canada's long term energy potential, if, through co-operation, we succeed in establishing a policy for a rational development of our energy resources, we will be able to give Canada an important industrial expansion since energy is essential to industrial development. It so happens that Canada is the only country which now has these abundant energy resources, qualified specialists, a population eager to work and responsible governments. Thus, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that, together, we are going to find solutions along those lines.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I do not usually participate in debates respecting oil policy and oil development in this country, but I do not feel embarrassed or bashful about entering this debate. It seems that from the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) down, there are people who rank in the amateur category with respect to the development of an oil policy for this country. I would indicate to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and others in the House this afternoon that not to participate in this debate would be a great disservice to the people I represent in Prince Edward Island, as well as to all those who live in Quebec and the rest of eastern Canada. Quite frankly, if there is any single aspect of the government's policy to date that disturbs me, it has to do with the almost total neglect of the situation that exists in eastern Canada in respect of the need for petroleum. I am not only disturbed, but perplexed.

Mr. Lang: How about nuclear energy?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The minister may be concerned about nuclear energy, but unless he is ready to raise such a plant in the next few weeks he is living in an atmosphere that is very far removed from the situation that exists in this country. I do not want to daydream: I want to deal with some of the realities that exist today, will exist next week and in months to come. While it is true we are here to frame laws and establish guidelines for orderly and progressive development of this country in the long term, we have a primary responsibility to deal with problems of an immediate nature that concern the citizens of Canada. Surely all of us, as politicians, must realize this.

As I said a moment ago, I am not only disturbed but perplexed that the Prime Minister of this country, who at the present time leads a substantial bloc of members who represent his home province of Quebec, could ignore the situation that exists in that province. As the hon. member who just spoke suggested, it could be that the government of Quebec has not been overly informed or aware of the problems with regard to petroleum shortages and costs that exist in that province. I am sure that in the coming weeks both the government of Quebec and the government of Canada will be increasingly aware of the extent of the impact this problem will have on Quebec and the four Atlantic provinces.

I make no apology this afternoon for spending all my time on the petroleum situation in eastern Canada. I must admit I was a little flummoxed when watching the national news last night on television. The Prime Minster's statement made here yesterday afternoon was reported as though it was the second coming. It was described in euphoric terms as being a sort of solution to all the problems we face in what has been described as an energy crisis in the past few months.

After going on for a few minutes about what the Prime Minister said, the chief newscaster, Lloyd Robertson, said in his concluding remarks that one has to admit that not very much was really clarified in the Prime Minister's statement and there were really more questions raised than answered. After he had made a few remarks in similar vein, one began wondering what all the excitement was about. Perhaps it was difficult for the CBC, in its wisdom, to deal with it in a more objective and dispassionate way. After all, there was a drama associated with the build-up that took place this week. There was an obvious expectation that my friends to the left might not support the government in a motion of confidence next Monday. I say "left" in a physical sense because they are moving substantially to my right and have been doing so for the past few months. They created some sense of drama over the fact they might not support the government. There was never any doubt in my mind.

Mr. Lalonde: They are to the right of the Liberals.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I would say that both the Liberals and the NDP are trying to get on the right of each other. Whether they can achieve that remains to be seen. There was no surprise whatsoever.

Mr. Lang: Why do you look so sad?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I can see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) is not observant. If he had watched me yesterday afternoon, I did not look sad; in fact, I was smiling to myself after noting how cheaply the people to my left can be bought. I wondered what all the excitement was about. I thought of some analogies, but I will not use them this afternoon. It was all too obvious how easily my friends in the New Democratic Party—I think they are my friends and I hope they will continue to be my friends—would jump through the hoops that were raised for them to go through. The hoops that were raised could only be described as "now you see them, now you don't."

● (1540)

From the moment the Prime Minister mouthed the words "continued price freeze" and "national petroleum corporation"—and, I predict, in the days and weeks to come—we will have been increasingly in the dark or, to make a very bad pun, in the cold about what in fact the government plans to do on either of these two fronts. If my friends to the left have any illusions about this, I hope they will try to dispel them as early as possible because I do not want them to continue to dwell in this kind of ignorance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Tell us what you would do.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I will get there. Be patient, my friend. One of the primary concerns, as I understand it, of the New Democratic Party has been the advocacy of a national petroleum company. I might say to hon. members in my own party that this is not some kind of flamingly radical idea; we have heard just this week of great oil discoveries in the North Sea shared in by the Coal Board of Great Britain which is a Crown corporation. The conventions of British Petroleum and other companies have obviously introduced certain supportive elements in the world of national and international oil exploration and development. Anyway, it is a touchstone for my friends in the NDP so the Prime Minister included it in his speech, as we knew he would, and he said:

One of the instruments of the new national oil policy—

We shall have to find various gradations of "new", Mr. Speaker, because this is this week's new; a week ago there was a "new," and there was a "new" in September and whenever you want to start the chain of newness. But a new national oil policy is the establishment of a national petroleum company. Just to make certain the point was made and that my friends on the left heard it clearly, he explained the nature of this company. He said it would undertake exploration, it would assist and participate in the research and development work necessary—

Mr. Woolliams: All for $40 million!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): He went on to suggest just how serious it was by saying that he was going to spend a massive amount of money, something like $40 million—not in a year, because this is a thrifty Prime Minister, but over the next five years.

Mr. Lalonde: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member is unwittingly attacking the privileges of this House, and particularly the rights of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) by attributing to him a statement he did not make. I refer the hon. member to the record in Hansard. I am afraid the hon. member has been listening to the CBC rather than to the Prime Minister in the House. I noticed that the CBC spent the evening making exactly the same mistake as the hon. member has been making, and as his leader almost made yesterday. The Prime Minister put it quite clearly that the $40 million in question was not for the purposes of the national oil corporation but for the purposes of research into the technology of the tar sands. Attributing this as the budget of the national oil corporation is a distortion of the Prime Minister's statement.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I think the hon. minister will agree that this is a matter or point of discussion. He may perhaps have a chance to speak to that later when he will have the floor.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I certainly share with you, sir, the hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will expound this information to us on the nature of this subject later in the debate. But just so he will not be in the dark, I have an official copy of the text used yesterday by the Prime Minister, and if the minister would like to come over here and consult it, he can.

An hon. Member: Did you write the speech, Marc?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I think this is one speech he would like to be dissociated from. As I say, the magnificent sum of $40 million is to be expended by the corporation over the next five years in co-operation with the province of Alberta and private firms. Even a colleague and fellow countryman of the minister was quick to respond last night. I am sure many of us heard Mr. Kierans when he said this was peanuts.

Mr. Lalonde: He was misled by the CBC, too.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): He said it was a drop in the bucket, that it would not even be enough to administer the bureaucracy in Ottawa. I could also say it would not be much more than the monthly sum presently being taken by the government in export tax at its present level against exports of petroleum from this country. Who is this government trying to fool? The only thing of which we can be sure is that they have fooled 30 or so members to my left at least long enough to carry them through the Christmas season.

Mr. Baker: It sounds as though they have fooled the Minister of National Health and Welfare, too.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I want to take this opportunity to enlighten my friends to the left. The Prime Minister was trying to tell them how this corporation would operate in terms of developing, assisting and such things. Then he went on to say—this is why I suggest my friends on the left have been bought at a very cheap price indeed—"It is not, however, intended in any way to displace the private sector."

Mr. Woolliams: What a joke.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Nor, continued the Prime Minister, was it intended to discourage investment by foreign companies, which would continue to be welcome. I am looking forward to hearing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) or the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) tell us how much they enjoyed that statement as part of their policy, and how much they will continue to support it.

Mr. Baker: The socialist birthright sold for a mess of potage.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): To paraphrase another statesman, never have so few been bought with so little. Nevertheless, I want to return to the essence of my speech this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is there an essence?

An hon. Member: Yes, vanilla.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is the degree to which the Prime Minister ignored in his statement the increasing problem in eastern Canada both in terms of petroleum supply and costs. As my leader put it so well again today in questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), we in the five eastern provinces, which have traditionally experienced the lowest per capita income and in many cases the highest living costs, must now suffer the highest oil heating and gasoline costs in the country. As I mentioned in my question to the minister earlier today, since September our costs have gone up in the eastern provinces by some 20 per cent or more and now stand between 35 per cent and 40 per cent higher than in parts of western Canada.

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): They are going to increase your old age pensions.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): That's right. I am going to deal with that a little later on. This is the situation with which we are faced. I pressed the minister today because the Prime Minister deliberately did not say whether any action would be taken by the government to maintain a freeze on prices in eastern Canada. I asked the minister whether the government was planning any further action to deal with this very serious situation, and the minister simply replied that the government would seek to hold the price down except where the cost of offshore crude necessitated an increase.

All this means is that the government will continue to do nothing with respect to the deteriorating situation in eastern Canada. I cannot for the life of me understand how the Prime Minister, with so many members from Quebec in his own caucus, together with a sprinkling of members from the four Atlantic provinces, could deal in such a superficial and totally ineffective way with the increasing energy costs and the prospective energy shortages in eastern Canada.

Mr. Baker: Backbenchers abdicating their responsibility.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It was one thing to make remarks about the sort of half-hearted and ineffective steps which might be taken either by the Minister of National Health and Welfare or by some other mechanism which might be developed out of the federal-provincial conference in January, but it was quite another thing totally to ignore the basic question concerning the threatened interruption of supply.

We have been seeing a kind of ritual dance in the past few days on the question whether we will or we will not have a shortage of petroleum supplies in eastern Canada. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources cannot seem to get his figures straight for very many days in a row. In one instance he talks of a daily shortfall of 75,000 barrels; then in a few days' time he starts talking about a shortfall of 200,000 barrels a day.

Then there is no clear picture as to the way in which the government may try to make up this shortfall. Suddenly, really almost as a surprise to the minister it would seem, we have Mr. Shaheen telling us that the new refinery at Come-By-Chance which is just coming into operation will make up a substantial portion of that shortfall. To this the minister says it is not possible, that the refinery would not be in operation, at least in those terms, for another month or so.

So who knows, Mr. Speaker, what new chapter in this drama the minister will unfold in the days to come? One thing is clear, however: the Prime Minister opened no new chapters and gave us no new information on this subject yesterday when he announced his so-called new national oil policy. If it was a new national oil policy, it was one which suddenly separated Quebec and all of eastern Canada. I find it passing strange—

An hon. Member: That is what you did back in 1961.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, we have a lot of prospective speakers on the other side and I look forward to hearing them; I am sure they will be given the opportunity to speak.

Mr. Corbin: Call home and see what your people think of it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I also go home from time to time, which is more than the hon. member opposite does. From the statement of the Prime Minister yesterday, a Prime Minister who has been a consistent avocate of a "one Canada" policy, we have a new kind of Ottawa Valley line, a new kind of "two Canada" oil policy. He spoke of an oil policy that would be controlled by some new kind of petroleum company. He said he would carry on the freeze for the rest of the winter—and you pick the date, Mr. Speaker, when winter will end. We will continue to ship our oil resources, when possible, to the Unites States. But when he comes to eastern Canada, his oil policy gets into the vaguest possible terms. He has now tagged on to the Montreal pipeline the concept of a pipeline "when it becomes necessary". When I asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources today when this might be, he really was not able to say. I agree that it does not make sense—

Mr. Corbin: You don't make sense. Who in hell will believe you back in the Maritimes?

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A great deal more people will believe me, because I talk about the situation as it is down there, compared with the hon. member and his colleagues who have ignored it altogether. However, if the hon. member wants to speak, I hope he will have the opportunity. I suspect that his party will be only too pleased to welcome his remarks, as they have in the past. When he has listened a little more, he may at least feel concerned about the problems in the Maritimes, which is more than seems to be the case now.

Mr. Corbin: Your time is almost up.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I want to tell my hon. friend from New Brunswick, in case he does not know, that we are facing a serious situation. I do not think I have heard him express any concern over it, but perhaps after I have told him that in his home province—

Mr. Corbin: You have seen action from this government.

Mr. Crouse: Even your own whip laughs at that statement.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, if this is action with respect to eastern Canada, I would hate to see inaction. In the hon. member's home province of New Brunswick the people were paying for home heating fuel last September, 27.3 cents in Saint John and 29.6 cents in Fredericton. This month, December, in the city of Saint John they are paying 33.2 cents, an increase of 5.9 cents in about 3½ months. That is action for you; that is performance, Mr. Speaker. In the city of Fredericton the price has gone from 29.6 cents to 35.5 cents, an increase of 5.9 cents. If that is the kind of action for which this hon. member is taking credit on behalf of the government, I hope he will make a trip home and explain and justify this action to the people he represents here in parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): At the present time, Mr. Speaker, there are people both in his province and in mine who during this winter pay $25 to $30 a month more to heat their homes. If the hon. member regards that as good action, I hope he will stand up and defend it.

Mr. Corbin: It's not true.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): The hon. member says it is not true. He does not want to believe it is true. I wish I did not have to stand here and say it is true. This is why we want to see action taken by the government that will make it not true; but so far there has not even been evidence of an awareness of, or concern about, the problem on the part of this government.

It is bad enough for the eastern provinces to face higher home heating costs, but to a greater or lesser degree the people of eastern Canada are also faced with increasing electricity costs. In my home province of Prince Edward Island, in addition to the 20 per cent or more increase in home heating fuel which took place in December, we will pay 25 to 30 per cent more for electricity, since electricity in Prince Edward Island is thermal generating. I will go into this and other facets later on, Mr. Speaker, when we return to this debate on the first of next week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps this is a good point to recognize that it is four o'clock p.m. The House will therefore proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills.

The understanding of the Chair, which perhaps can be confirmed now, is that the notice of motion to be proceeded with is No. 37, in the name of the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). If I am correct in this understanding, I will proceed immediately to put it.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

HISTORIC SITES

SUGGESTED GOVERNMENT INVESTIGATION OF FEASIBILITY OF NATIONWIDE PROGRAM FOR PRESERVATION OF HISTORIC SITES AND BUILDINGS

Mr. Ron Atkey (St. Paul's) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should investigate the feasibility of a nationwide program for the preservation of historic buildings and sites of architectural merit and integrity through financial assistance to municipalities, historical societies and other non-profit organizations for the acquisition, restoration and maintenance of such buildings and sites to be occupied in a manner consistent with original public or private use, but to be open to the public at regular periods.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I move this motion urging a new approach to the preservation of historic buildings and sites. Canada has a rich heritage. It has often been said that to understand a people, to understand a country, one has to understand its history. This is also true if the people of a country as large and diverse as Canada are to understand each other.

It is difficult to understand a country's history without appreciating the actual buildings that the people of earlier generations lived in, their homes, their shops, their places of work, all of which formed part of their character and identity. The carved doors, the old wainscoting, the pine furniture, the fancy brickwork, the iron fences, the stained glass windows—all of these items found in historic buildings tell us something about our forefathers and provide us with that important feeling of continuity with the past.

Canadians know a little more about themselves when they are able to experience historic buildings and sites as part of their daily lives, either at work or in their residential neighbourhoods. For these reasons, I believe the federal government must give a higher priority to the preservation of historic buildings and sites than has been the case to date.

The new approach which I am suggesting would involve much greater participation by private individuals, municipalities, historical societies and other non-profit organizations, not only in terms of money which they might contribute but in the role they might play in the acquisition, restoration, ownership and maintenance of such buildings.

Briefly put, I believe that we should break away from the notion that only government is capable of acting as proprietary trustee for our important historic buildings and sites. Private individuals and organizations are also capable of acting as trustees of our history under certain conditions, yet the present policy of the federal government is to virtually exclude such persons or organizations from participating in federal funding while at the same time maintaining an ownership role. In other words, the general thrust of existing federal programs so far has been based on government ownership. In my view this is not sufficient because it will not permit preservation of a sufficient number of worth-while buildings. My motion today seeks to provide a program which would shift some of the preservation effort and responsibility to the private sector. Since everything today needs a title, I would call it a program for "participation in preservation".

I would not want my remarks today construed as a deprecation of some of the fine work done by the National Historic Parks and Sites Branch of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. The important restorations of such historic sites as the Fortress of Louisburg in Cape Breton, Fort Lennox in Quebec, the Niagara Historic Frontier and Fort George in Ontario, Lower Fort Garry in Manitoba, Rocky Mountain House in Alberta, and Fort Langley in British Columbia have served not only to preserve these sites but to illustrate events in Canadian history to all those who visit these places.

But these types of projects, important as they are, claim the lion's share of the federal budget in this field. They are all grandiose, government-owned and operated projects, reflecting largely military sites or buildings which may create the mistaken impression of Canada as a bellicose nation with a history consisting largely of military events. Also, most of these sites are of significance only to the Anglophone and Francophone groups of this country. Most of the places of historical value to the heritage of the so-called "third group" Canadians have been virtually ignored.

The only site representative of the non-French or non-Anglo aspects of our history which has been considered worthy of full-scale commemoration is the Batoche Rectory in Saskatchewan, the headquarters of the Métis during the great northwest rebellion of 1885 at Duck Lake. The neglect of the contribution of such groups as the Italians, Ukrainians, Jews, Scandinavians and Germans to our heritage not only misrepresents our history but also exacerbates the sense of exclusion felt by these people.

More important, however, these types of projects claim millions of dollars in capital and operating expenses, leaving little if any financial support for smaller buildings which may not be of national historical importance yet which are worthy of preservation to a particular community or neighbourhood. Admittedly, the National Historic Sites Branch does have a limited program under which it can enter into co-operative arrangements with historical societies or municipalities. However, the branch takes on only two or three of these projects each year, and usually to the extent of paying 50 per cent of the cost of acquisition and restoration. The amount of money spent is a mere drop in the bucket compared with the money spent on national historic sites.

For example, in the last fiscal year, 1972-73, the money spent on co-operative agreements was only $87,416, which is only .59 per cent of the total capital and operating expenditures of close to $15 million on national historic sites. In the previous year the amount was only $79,000, or .63 per cent of the total expenditure. That is not to say the branch's program of co-operative arrangement is incapable of accommodating the type of program I have in mind. For example, one of the co-operative agreements involves the restoration of the Grange House in my home city of Toronto. The branch contributed $50,000 to the project owned and operated by the Art Gallery of Ontario which raised close to $600,000 from private sources to complete what is an excellent example of Toronto's early history. Federal participation of this sort happens all too rarely, only two or three times a year throughout the country, an appallingly weak effort. To fit the concept advanced in my motion, the branch's program would have to be expanded a hundredfold, and in certain cases permit participation of private individuals in return for a commitment to maintain and periodically make accessible to the public.

I could suggest any number of historic buildings that could qualify for such a program, buildings which might be irretrievably lost unless action is soon taken. Indeed, one of the excellent initiatives taken by the Historic Sites Branch in 1962 was to establish a Canadian inventory of historic building. This three-phased, ten-year program was the first comprehensive architectural history in the world created for a computerized information system. So far the plan has resulted in the recording of the exteriors of over 106,000 buildings across Canada, and the eventual goal is the full restoration of about 700 of those buildings of exceptional significance or architectural merit.

I am proud of the fact that close to 5,000 of those buildings either entered or about to be entered in the computer system are located in an area of my constituency known as the Annex. Several years ago the Annex ratepayers' association, which this year celebrated its fiftieth anniversary, organized a group of volunteers to undertake the task of photographing and recording the details of the many buildings there constructed prior to 1910 and found to be of architectural merit, and in some cases owned by a famous Canadian. Assistance was provided by the Historic Sites Branch through the supplying of proper forms and reimbursement for film. One of the buildings included in the Annex inventory was the residence on Admiral Road of the late Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson when he was a member of the faculty at the University of Toronto. There is another residence on Walmer Road which housed the late Vincent Massey when he was the dean of Victoria College.

Another group of historic houses in the Annex is found in the Huron-Madison area. There is a particular group of nine houses, five of which were constructed prior to 1895 and the remainder before 1905, which last year were threatened with demolition, to be replaced by a high-rise apartment building. At the instigation of the Annex ratepayers' association, the Toronto city council formed a committee, to which I was named, which conducted detailed studies. This committee eventually recommended that a non-profit community corporation be formed to acquire the property now owned by the city for purposes of combined residential-commercial use in an historic setting. The corporation is now formed and anxiously awaiting CMHC approval of mortgage funding under conditions that will permit about 25 per cent of the historic property to be put to commercial use in order to make the project economically viable. This is a clear example where a federal program of the flexible type which I have proposed would ensure the preservation of these buildings as a supplement to CMHC funding. Alternatively, the CMHC might adopt more flexible guidelines to permit its financing policies to take into account the significant historical element which is a part of this project.

Another building in the Annex worthy of preservation is St. Paul's-Avenue Road United Church, constructed in 1887. It is almost the last visual link with the nineteenth century on that part of Avenue Road, and in only three generations' time it will be older than any building north of the parliament buildings in the entire city of Toronto. The church, because of financial difficulties and a declining congregation, was almost forced to sell out to a development corporation which wanted to erect a high-rise office tower on the site. Fortunately, the officers of the church first sought the advice of the Avenue-Bay-Cottingham residents' association and the Annex ratepayers' association, which resulted in the formation of a joint committee and later a non-profit corporation called the St. Paul's Centre Foundation which is now seeking financial assistance in order to lease the church for 30 years for community purposes.

Specifically, the sanctuary of the church boasts the best concert acoustics in Toronto, apart from Massey Hall, and could be easily converted into a first-class hall for the presentation of concerts, plays, recitals, and meetings. Other rooms of the church are ideal for workrooms, classrooms, a drop-in centre and senior citizens' facilities. The church would continue to have facilities for Sunday morning worship and an office for its minister. Again, this is the sort of building which provides a comfortable link with the past for residents of the area and the thousands who drive by it daily. This is the type of project which the federal program I am advocating should encompass. I am sure there are hundreds, even thousands, of buildings in various parts of Canada equally worthy of federal assistance to ensure their preservation.

Just the other day I received in the mail a notice that the old nineteenth century Victoria Opera House in the town of Petrolia, Ontario, where I grew up, was to be restored provided adequate financial assistance could be obtained from private and public sources. That hall had significance for me because it was the place where I entered my first public speaking contest while still in elementary school. The hall and the large building in which it was housed was an important link with the past glories of the nineteenth century which that town enjoyed, and an important part of the learning experience of every child who has grown up there since.

Lest my remarks so far appear to be overly critical of federal government inaction, let me congratulate the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) for having the good sense to establish Heritage Canada, effective last April 2. This is a type of national trust designed initially to involve Canadians in preservation through the sale of memberships at $5 a person. With an endowment of $12 million from the government, this non-profit corporation will be able to generate additional funds from private donations, bequests and membership fees in order to purchase, renovate, sell or lease historic properties of local, regional or national importance.

To a certain extent, the future plans of Heritage Canada may meet some of the objectives of the "Participation in preservation" program embodied in my motion. For example, it is my understanding that Heritage Canada does not intend to make any major purchases of historic buildings, but instead will seek other private agencies or individuals to buy and conserve such properties and then will support them in preparing the property for public use and enjoyment. If Heritage Canada does acquire real property, it may be designated "heritage property" in which case it cannot be sold or mortgaged, but only leased to a government department or agency or private organization under strict conditions. Alternatively, it may be designated merely as a worth-while building, in which case it can be sold or leased for commercial use as a restaurant, boutique, office, residence, and so on and placed under restrictive covenants to protect in perpetuity façades and significant interiors. In the last instance, whole groups of worth-while buildings, indeed whole neighbourhoods of historic significance, may be preserved.

Unfortunately, Heritage Canada is not yet in a position to act. In its August newsletter the corporation indicated it could not assist in any purchases this year, notwithstanding the risk that some buildings or streetscapes might be irretrievably lost. Moreover, the corporation indicated that it would be obliged to decline all requests for financial help in the restoration of historic buildings in private hands. Only if the property is transferrred to an acceptable public body will Heritage Canada even be in a position to consider requests for support. There is not even any indication of what would constitute an acceptable public body. For example, would the Annex Community Corporation, which will own the nine Huron-Madison houses, or the St. Paul's Centre Foundation, which will lease the church on Avenue Road, qualify under the corporation's directive? Certainly this is far from clear. Obviously, the private individuals who own or lease historic buildings, regardless of their architectural merit and integrity, are going to be denied any assistance.

Heritage Canada may have already fallen into the same rigid philosophy that has characterized the programs of the Historic Sites Branch for so many years. This is a philosophy which says that private individuals are not competent or responsible enough to act as trustees of Canada's historic buildings. Only the government or an acceptable public body can do it. In my view, this is overly paternalistic and is destructive of many of the stated goals of Heritage Canada. Granted, there must be some public protection when government funds are applied to assist a private individual on a restoration project. This protection requires not only a preservation of the historical and architectural integrity of the building, but a check on speculators and unwarranted increases in value accruing to the private owner at public expense. However, this type of problem can be easily overcome through the proper use of restrictive convenants and zoning bylaws.

I was pleased to learn that the government of Ontario has proposed far reaching legislation to permit the province or municipalities to designate historic buildings of provincial or local importance. Moreover, an amendment to the Planning Act would permit municipalities to impose what will be known as "historic conservation district zoning", subject to prior adoption of appropriate policies as a part of the official plan of the municipality. Most important, this legislation will enable municipalities, or the province, through the Ontario Heritage Foundation to make loans or grants to owners or tenants of historic buildings which have been municipally or provincially designated.

There is no paternalism with this program. There is no fear that the private individual will abuse his position of trust as owner or trustee of part of Canada's history. Legislation of this sort is already in place in the province of Alberta, effective May 10 of this year. Legislation similar in nature has been in force in Quebec since 1963, but on a limited basis. Sooner or later some of this philosophy will find its way into the legislative corridors of power in Ottawa. The government cannot do the job alone, particularly in the cities where the pressure of demolition and redevelopment is relentless.

The federal government can leisurely make an inventory of over 100,000 buildings in three years. How many of those buildings have already been destroyed? The government can then make a more complete inventory of one-twentieth of these buildings. How many of those buildings will still be standing? Ten years after the original inventory, the government will select less than 1 per cent of the buildings as deserving of complete restoration, if they can find them. Or will they find only a parking lot or a high-rise apartment building, or an expressway route where once stood a building they decided worthy of restoration?

In a field such as this, in a time such as ours, it is not rational for the government to adopt a "go it alone" policy. The government, the country, cannot afford to spurn offers of aid in this field so vital to our sense of national identity. We must protect and preserve these buildings. The government, now, does not have the resources to acquire and restore all buildings worthy of conservation. They need to encourage, not discourage, attempts by private individuals to act in this field.

Mr. Speaker, I commend to you, to members of this House and to the government my program for "participation in preservation."

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join this debate, or discussion really, with the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey). I thank him for bringing forward this whole question and for showing concern and sensitivity for a problem which concerns us all and certainly concerns this government. The hon. member for St. Paul's obviously recognizes the immense strides that have been made by this government in preserving our heritage, more so in the last five or six years than in all its previous history. Much of it is too late, but certainly an immense start has been made.

I really do not think it is fair to say on the one hand that all this had been done, then imply that nothing has been done and suggest that unlimited government funds are available. In all fairness, they are taxpayers' funds and not government funds. I think we must keep things in some sort of perspective here. Hon. members speak about the Annex Historical Society. I think it is an absolutely admirable move on the part of the citizens of that area, as is the North York Historical Society in my constituency and the Unionville group which have done a magnificent job in preserving absolutely exquisite buildings which were built and lived in by the pioneers of that region.

I think the hon. member probably knows, in the village of Unionville, also in my constituency, about the work that is being done by the Unionville Arts Foundation, the historical society and the museum in Markham and places like that. These are local groups which should be encouraged and are being encouraged. I think they well-up from the community; but there is the question of by how much and how far one can legitimately expect the government to go. I should like to see it go as far as it is possible to go, but I think it has gone a long way.

There are a number of trade-offs. For example, we can start talking about Mr. Pearson's home. No one has greater affection for Mr. Pearson than myself, except perhaps Mrs. Pearson. The house has great appeal. But Mr. Pearson lived in many places. One has to use one's judgment. The same is true with regard to the home of Vincent Massey.

Do we do the same with the Massey home on Jarvis Street, which is now one of our better restaurants in Toronto? What about all the places where the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has lived or claims to have lived, visited or was born in? My goodness, it would take up the entire budget. I think we have to watch that.

Coming from Toronto, I could name such places as the old city hall. But which city hall should be preserved, the old one or the old-old one? The old city hall is preserved through the centennial program and it is a treasure of a building. A great preservation job has been done on it. The we have to determine what should be done with what is known as the old city hall at Queen Street. Is it worth preserving? It is typical of a certain type of architecture. In my view it is an ugly type of architecture, but perhaps it is unique and should be preserved. The new city hall will at some time be the old city hall. We have to leave some places for future generations; we cannot have a whole line of city halls along the street. The same problem exists with the Union Station in Ottawa. Ottawans have a deep attachment for it and want to preserve it.

Mr. Atkey: Hear, hear!

Mr. Danson: Frankly, I question this. I do not think it is a significant building. There is a sentimental attachment to it, but in its usual frugal way the government has converted it into a conference centre for the people of Canada and the international community. There is also the Union Station in Toronto which in its centre part and mezzanine is an example of copied architecture, but a really good one. It was built by an architect of that period. I do not know whether or not it was built by Lennox, as was the old city hall and other well known buildings in Toronto.

We must make a serious decision about what we should preserve and what we should not preserve. Other countries have this problem also. Boston has a particular problem in this respect in trying to keep the city working, the traffic moving and also preserving some rather important sites.

I think the motion is worth while and I compliment the hon. member for covering many points in his comments. However, I would like to refer to my notes to complete the record and to see what has been done. I think it is worth while for all hon. members and for those millions of people who read Hansard regularly from page to page to know precisely what the programs are and what has been done. I must say I speak with a special affection about my own home, which is about 150 years old—but the mortgage still is not paid. It is one of the pioneer homes in the northeast part of Toronto. The Harrison family made the bricks and the glass. They fought with Mackenzie. One of them died in the Upper Canada rebellion, and Mackenzie stayed in it. It is a good thing that we are keeping it in the Liberal tradition.

May I now revert to the policies that have been implemented. The national historic parks and sites of Canada commemorate the persons, places and events which have been declared by the minister, on the advice of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, to be of major historic or architectural significance in the development of Canada. We have tried to do these things in the context of what the federal government is trying to do and in the context of its criteria. A policy statement on the national historic sites was tabled in the House of Commons in 1968 by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) on the recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. Among other things, the policy elaborated the criteria for the designation of national historic sites for the benefit of parliament and the public.

To be commemorated, a site or structure must be closely associated with a person, place or event of national historical importance, or it must illustrate the cultural, social, political, economic or military patterns of history or of a prehistoric people or archaeological discovery. A building may also be declared of national significance because of its great age or because it is an outstanding example of period architecture of which there are few remaining examples.

This raises the problem of people saying that a site in their town is the one they want to preserve. But should we preserve them all? In advising the minister on the commemoration of places, persons and events of national historical importance, the board may recommend that sites, buildings and other structures of national importance be developed as national historic parks or historic sites, or that commemoration be carried out by the erection of national historic plaques or, in exceptional circumstances, of distinctive monuments. The emphasis, of course, is on national importance, and here we get down to the problem of local groups. We all have them, and there is a great deal of emotion and sentimentality engendered by them. We have the Amswell House in Thornhill, in my constituency, which gained the attention of the press in Toronto on certain days and everyone was concerned. But it was not that unique and it was not of national importance, although it would be nice to have preserved it. I think there is a limit on how far we can go.

Suggestions for the establishment of historic sites and parks come from many sources: the general public, members of parliament, historical societies and other groups, departmental staff, and members of the board themselves. Since its establishment, Parks Canada, on the recommendation of the board, has been instrumental in the creation of more than 80 historic parks and major sites and in the commemoration of some 650 persons and events of national—as opposed to local or regional—significance. Negotiations are at present being conducted with provincial governments for the acquisition of further sites which have been declared to be of major national historical significance.

The facilities of the branch to develop sites of national significance are not such that it is possible to cope directly with the restoration and maintenance of all sites designated as being of national significance and it has, therefore, been a policy of the branch to encourage other levels of government and private organizations to maintain and even restore and operate such structures for the benefit of the public. In this connection, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is empowered to make agreements with other levels of government or with non-profit, incorporated bodies under which the department may contribute up to 50 per cent of the cost of the acquisition and restoration of a building of special significance, on the understanding that the other party will contribute the balance of acquisition and restoration costs and will assume all operation and maintenance costs in perpetuity and agree to open the building to the public for a specified minimum period each year. If I understood the hon. member correctly, I do not think he was criticizing those criteria. I think, although there is a case for argument, that they are fair.

The department has entered into more than 30 such cost-sharing agreements with provincial and municipal organizations and with incorporated non-profit societies. An example of the department's involvement in cost-sharing agreements is the Halifax waterfront buildings project in which you, Mr. Speaker, would be particularly interested and which you would appreciate. I am pretty sure your home is among those sites. The project undertaken jointly by the department, by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the city of Halifax and Historic Developments Limited, a Halifax firm of architectural, engineering and civic interests, will undertake the restoration of six historic buildings. Another example is the department's agreement with the Art Gallery of Toronto for the restoration and furnishing of the Grange House in that city, which I believe is the oldest brick house in Toronto, the home of the first governor of Upper Canada, John Graves Simcoe. The building is very attractive and it has been of some utilitarian value.

In addition to the department's activities in the field of historic preservation, acting either solely or in concert with other bodies, a considerable number of such projects have been carried out or are ongoing under the aegis of other federal government departments, provincial or municipal governments and by private interests. Examples are the old Bonsecour market in Montreal, which is a most attractive site, Bastion Square in Victoria, Gastown in Vancouver, and the headquarters in London, Ontario, of a major Canadian company which is still retained as a commercial building. There is the old Bank of Canada building on Toronto Street, which I believe is the head office of Argus Corporation.

An interesting project is the development on Sussex Street, in Ottawa, of one of the old convent buildings as you get down near the Mint, which is being redeveloped for the headquarters of the Department of Urban Affairs. This is a particularly special thing being done in this city and adds to the value of the restoration and preservation of the entire market. These are very special places in Canada that should be maintained. We appreciate them in Halifax, in Charlottetown, in Prince Edward Island, in Quebec City—

Mr. McGrath: And in St. John's, Newfoundland, the oldest city in Canada.

Mr. Danson: Yes, particularly so. But one that we seem to forget and that is not getting enough attention is Kingston itself. That city is chock-full of buildings of particular historical and architectural value that could be preserved. In fact, I think the whole city of Kingston should be preserved. I believe that the hon. member for St. Paul's referred to areas of historical significance that should be developed and preserved, and certainly this is one.

Mr. Atkey: It is coming under provincial legislation.

Mr. Danson: I am delighted that the province is involved and there is room for co-operation with the federal government. In the summer of 1970, Parks Canada launched a nationwide survey of Canada's old structures. Called the Canadian inventory of historic building, the project will take eight to ten years to complete. The program began with the study of building exteriors and will culminate with in-depth studies of the best structures. It is a three-phase program, and as a result we will end up for the first time with an inventory which is properly catalogued and computerized, so that if a local ratepayers' association or historical society wants to preserve a Prince Arthur house, and there are approximately 300 Prince Arthur houses across the country being used for catering establishments, from this inventory we will be able to determine which are the valuable ones to preserve.

This will be the real value of the inventory, because without it we would not know the extent of the architectural heritage we have and of which we should be so proud. This will help preserve our cultural background and soul. When combined with other programs operated by our citizenship branch, and by the Department of the Secretary of State, it will help give us a fuller appreciation of our heritage and history. It is something that is particularly appreciated by our children. The old house in which I live, Mr. Speaker, is a special joy to my children. It gives them an appreciation of certain types of things which they know to be beautiful and assume to be of historic value, things which other people might pass by.

As can be seen from much of what has been said, the federal government is carrying out a number of different complementary programs to identify and preserve sites of national importance. Many provinces and a number of municipalities are also acting to preserve sites of regional and local importance. Despite all this effort, it must be noted that historic preservation is a costly exercise. Unless a structure has been very well maintained, the costs of restoration are high and maintenance is more than normal since in both cases the work must be done to standards of historical authenticity. Not only does this involve research to establish original appearance, but it makes heavy demands on highly trained personnel such as restoration architects and conservators, currently in short supply.

I believe we could discuss this question at much greater length, Mr. Speaker, and I do not think we would be bored by it. It is something in which we all share an interest. I am particularly grateful to the hon. member for bringing this motion forward. I wish the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) were here, because in Cobourg the old opera house is of special importance. I might mention, in passing, the restoration work done on Roosevelt University, on Michigan Avenue in Chicago. It is a rather unique building which was about to be destroyed. It was one of Louis Sullivan's buildings and acoustically was one of the greatest halls in the world. Rather than tear it down, the authorities have preserved it for use as a modern university building and concert hall.

The hon. member for St. Paul's, who is a lawyer from Toronto, will himself appreciate the value of Osgoode Hall, and Campbell House, named after one of the first chief justices of Ontario. The Law Society of Upper Canada, I believe, paid for its restoration and the moving of it, although I imagine there was some government assistance. Here is a very excellent example of early Georgian, in a Canadian sense, architecture being preserved and moved to the Canada Life property near Osgoode Hall for everybody to see and enjoy. Formerly it was an office building for a jobbers supplier.

These are the kinds of things that local people can do and that we can assist them to continue doing. Some of this work is being done by Heritage Canada, Heritage Ontario, Parks Canada and other such agencies. But it is worth keeping in mind that these things cannot be imposed by the federal government: they have to be done in co-operation with private groups and other levels of government. It is just not good enough to say that the federal government should supply the funds. I am not suggesting that the hon. member is saying that alone, but first there has to be an appreciation and understanding by local authorities and local groups that this work is important. However, there is a limit to these resources, Mr. Speaker. There is a trade-off, about which I spoke.

The fact that this debate is taking place today is somewhat significant. Surprisingly enough, those people who are concerned do read Hansard. Here I refer to the people in government who are concerned with this matter. It is some comfort to them to know that we appreciate their concern and their efforts. All too often they may think that they are working in a vacuum, unappreciated. Here I refer to the people in the National Museums Branch, in Heritage Canada, the National Historic Sites Branch, the NCC, the National Archives—people whose work is appreciated and valued. They do a fine job. They are largely unsung, so I think it is good for them to know that there are a lot of people who support their work and who will support any initiatives they may take or suggest.

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I will only speak a few minutes, because I see that the hon. member opposite has a few words to say on the matter. I will speak briefly, since I merely want to thank the mover for asking the government and I quote:

> . . . the government should investigate the feasibility of a nationwide programme for the preservation of historic buildings and sites of architectural merits and integrity through financial assistance to municipalities, historical societies . . .

Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased with that motion, because in addition to asking the government to consider the opportunity of establishing a preservation program for historic sites, I have always found—and I think it is good to draw the attention of the House to this—that governments have already acted to preserve our historic sites. However, I have also always found that such action was concentrated in the larger cities: Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Halifax, etc. Some thought is always given to the possibility of restoring some historic sites in large cities, but they forget that the entire population is paying for this work.

We do not object to that, indeed, we are even happy about it, but we would like a small share of our tax money to return to our regions. We are asking the civil servants to get out once in a while of our large cities and tour our areas, because we have marvelous historic sites often maintained by voluntary workers through the efforts of local citizens.

I shall start by drawing the government's attention to a series of centres and historic buildings. We all remember that at the time of the centennial of Confederation, the government asked all social organizations and all cities and municipalities to do something to celebrate that event. In my area we did something. On the occasion of the centennial of Confederation, we erected a building. The government gave us a small grant of about one third the worth of this monument which was meant to be a library. It was eventually turned into a museum, but we are stuck with two thirds of the debt and interests which my constituents must pay, while our requests for assistance from the federal government are left unanswered. And yet, it was mentioned on the application, at their urging, that this building would be a monument to the centennial of Confederation. Even though we still pay taxes for other monuments, we pay taxes on the interests and capital for ours.

If the federal government was prepared to help our area, it could do something to salvage those monuments. Some might blame the authorities of the time for relying too much on the government. Maybe they were overly pro-government and were let down. It would be a fine gesture on the part of the federal government to help pay for those buildings erected to Canada's glory, after all, and to try to set finance afloat, by granting a direct assistance for the maintenance of these buildings, that is the François-Paradis museum, commemorating a discoverer of my region.

I also draw the government's attention to another well-known monument, that is the Maria Chapdelaine property, that of the famous novelist Louis Hémon, of international reputation, but which was never granted federal aid. This monument was erected to commemorate founders, creators of our region, and I need not say anymore because I believe that Maria Chapdelaine is internationally known. I urge the minister and the federal authorities, if they have any money to spend, to try and help those who are now maintaining this property which needs face-lifting. And I believe that this would be a good example of federal co-operation, as well as proof that they really want all parts of this country to be treated the same way. This would help eliminate regional disparities as regards historic sites because our people feel that credits that are voted and taxes that are paid for the maintenance of historic sites are always for purposes of agreements and never for our regions themselves.

I will conclude by referring to another historic monument in my region that is called the Victor Delamarre museum. I believe that the mere mention of his name will remind everyone of the strong man par excellence commemorated by the "Domaine Victor Delamarre" at Bouchette Lake. Financial assistance has been asked of the federal government for the maintenance of this historical monument. We receive from time to time a little assistance through local initiatives and opportunities for youth projects, but this is greatly inadequate.

If the government would, once and for all be complétely impartial and consider historic sites throughout Canada, then I believe that those I mentioned deserve as much as the others. I have no grudge against Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, or any other city. I only ask the government to be fair, and since everyone pays taxes, they should be equitably distributed. If big cities are proud of their historical monuments, it must be remembered that we are all proud, and we hope to see the day when the government will listen to our voice and help local associations, cities, towns and villages to restore magnificent historical monuments. It would be to the glory not only of the province of Quebec but of the whole of Canada.

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a few of the remaining minutes I should like to commend the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) on the resolution that he has placed before the House this afternoon: even though it may be the victim of the usual Friday afternoon experience, I trust he will feel satisfied that this has been a useful and worth-while debate. The hon. member himself admitted that a great deal is being done in Canada with respect to the preserving of historic buildings and sites, and the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) sought to spell that out. But it is still true that if we let our history slip away, we will not be able to recover it. I therefore think it is an excellent idea which the hon. member for St. Paul's has placed before the House and before the government, and I hope consideration will be given to it.

I should like in a moment or two to make reference to two projects in which I confess I have a personal interest, but at least I can boast that neither is in my constituency. I mention them because I think they represent the kind of projects in this general area that need to be included.

Sir, and I am thinking of you as Mr. Deputy Speaker, in your province of Nova Scotia there is a great deal of respect for old buildings and places that mark the history of that province. I am particularly interested in a building known as the old meeting-house at Barrington, Nova Scotia. It is a building that was constructed prior to 1800; in fact, back some piece into the 1700s. It is a small but very interesting old building which is now being maintained by the Cape Sable Historical Society. That particular part of Nova Scotia represents a culture and a heritage that is quite different from parts of Nova Scotia 20 or 30 miles away from it. I am familiar with it because it is the part of Canada to which my ancestors came more than 200 years ago and lived in for a long time.

I always find it most interesting to go there and I find that the members of my family, those who came after me, are fascinated by such history as is evidenced just by going into that area. I think an organization such as the Cape Sable Historical Society deserves the kind of support suggested in the motion that is before us. I put forward that building as the type of structure that is different from the monuments, and so on, that were suggested by the last speaker—and as one other branch of our history that should be remembered. I urge that those who are doing their part in this field, as are the members of the Cape Sable Historical Society, should be supported.

The other project in which I am interested is closer to where I now live, although it is not right in my constituency. I refer to the home where my predecessor, the late J. S. Woodsworth, lived for the last number of years of his life. It was for a while the home of my colleague who is not here this afternoon, the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). Before that it was the home of his father, the Reverend James Woodsworth, who was a very important person in the life of the Methodist Church in western Canada.

We at times think of the homes and birthplaces of those who reached the pinnacle and became premier, prime minister or what have you. Perhaps there are others like the late Mr. Woodsworth whose life should be remembered in this way. There is a society that is getting money together for the purchase of that home and making it a place which people can visit. This is not a commercial. Like the one in Barrington, Nova Scotia, it is a type of building which is perhaps a little different from some of those that have been mentioned.

I take this minute or two to mention these projects for their own sake because I think they are typical of many such projects throughout this country which deserve the kind of support set out in the motion of the hon. member for St. Paul's. Therefore, I commend him for this motion. Perhaps there is no reason why we always have to talk these things out on Friday afternoons. Maybe the group of friendly members who are here would agree to let this motion pass.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is up to his usual Friday afternoon tricks. He used about 15 minutes of the time—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Order.

Mr. Cullen: That is a slight exaggeration. I should say he used up most of the time, or some of the time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I only had the floor for seven minutes.

Historic Sites

Mr. Cullen: That will be about seven times longer than I will have to speak. I commend the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Atkey) on this motion. I know he has a sense of history. It was indicated by the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), who lives in the Toronto suburbs, that this is because the hon. member now lives in Toronto. I suggest, with respect, it is because of the fact that he lived in Petrolia, Ontario, a very well known place with a sense of history. Every day when you go by the buildings in that community you cannot help being struck by the age of so many buildings. The people there are doing something about preserving them.

I wish private members' hour was two hours, because I could go on for another hour on this subject. I want to mention something that happened in the past which I consider to have been a disaster. The Hon. Alexander Mackenzie lived in the area of Sarnia-Lambton. He was a stonemason and built the county jail, the county courthouse and the county council building prior to the turn of the century. When that building was no longer used by the county council or as a county jail and county courthouse, it was torn down. It was one example of the handiwork of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie in that area, and it was torn down.

To commemorate the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, we now have an historic plaque which was put in place by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. That department was responsible for doing that. However, how much better it would have been to preserve the ancient county courthouse, jail and county chambers as a memorial to this great Canadian.

We have another building in Sarnia called Lawrence House. It is not as old as some of the buildings in Kingston and Halifax, but it should be preserved. It is my hope that citizens in the Sarnia area will mount an attack to preserve this structure. If it means setting up a non-profit corporation to do so, I hope they will take that kind of action because it is the kind of building that should be preserved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CREATION OF FEDERAL COMMISSION FOR THE PROTECTION OF EGALITARIAN RIGHTS

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted by the United Nations on December 10, 1948, the General Assembly proclaimed the declaration as a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations. Article 2 of the declaration contains the following statement:

> Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms set forth in this declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, colour, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

In pursuance of the ideals set forth in the declaration, the government of Canada has been active in combatting discriminatory practices in a number of ways. The Fair Labour Code, the Public Service Employment Act and the Unemployment Insurance Act all contain anti-discrimination provisions. Such provisions also appear in the fair wages and hours of labour regulations, the fair wages policy order and the national housing loan regulations. These measures are implemented by investigation and conciliation conducted by special staffs of the departments and agencies concerned. These activities have been most effective toward achieving the goal of eliminating discrimination within their scope of application.

On this occasion of the 25th anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, it gives me great pleasure to announce that the government now proposes to deal with these matters in a more comprehensive fashion. Cabinet has recently approved the creation of a federal commission for the protection of egalitarian rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: This decision follows upon a proposal made on the basis of studies conducted by my department and after consultation with provincial human rights bodies and other experts in the field. In particular, I should like to acknowledge the work of my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), and his officials, especially in relation to the rights of women. That work and his proposals to protect women from discrimination, originally intended for the Labour Code, will now be included in the legislation to establish this commission, which is to be introduced early in the next session of parliament.

The bill will contain provision for the principles and procedures under which the commission would operate and establish the necessary powers of enforcement. In addition to being charged with administering the act, the commission would have an important role in promoting research and public education in relation to its purposes and functions. It would maintain close liaison with its equivalents in the provinces in order to foster common and improved policies and practices and to avoid conflict in cases of common jurisdiction. It would also keep abreast of developments respecting human rights at the United Nations and in other countries. In this way Canadian arrangements for the elimination of discriminatory practices could be constantly improved.

In formulating the above proposals, the government has been greatly assisted by suggestions and recommendations made by many individuals and bodies, and particularly by various women's organizations, for the establishment of such a commission at the federal level.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, in Alexander Solzhenitsyn's 1970 Nobel lecture, which the government of the Soviet Union would not let him leave the country to give in Stockholm, this brave man said:

> A quarter of a century ago, with the great hopes of mankind, the United Nations was born. Alas, in the immoral world it, too, became immoral. It is not a United Nations but a United Governments, in which those freely elected and those imposed by force and those which seized power by arms are all on a par. Through the mercenary bias of the majority, the United Nation's jealously worries about the freedom of some peoples and pays no attention to the freedom of others. By an officious vote it rejected a review of private complaints—the groans, shouts and pleadings of individual, common, plain people, insects too small for such a great organization. The United Nations never tried to make binding on governments, a condition of their membership, the Declaration of Human Rights, the outstanding document of its 25 years—and thus the United Nations betrayed the common people to the will of governments they had not chosen.

Although Solzhenitsyn's cri de cœur might seem pessimistic to some of us, I think it is right that we remember, in these days of high-sounding exhortations, the harsh realities of the lives of many citizens of the world. After all, unbelievable as it may seem, some people in the world are at this very time considering holding a convention on torture as a policy of some governments.

The minister's announcement is, of course, welcome. It is an idea which has been current for some time and has been suggested by, among others, the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in 1970. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in two speeches this year, on February 14 and May 20, endorsed such a proposal.

I hope very much that the commission the minister is setting up will be directly responsible to parliament and not to the cabinet or to himself. I hope also that the minister is able to find a more simple title as "Federal Commission for the Protection of Egalitarian Rights" could sound ponderous to some.

Twenty-five years after the United Nations voted for the Declaration of Human Rights Canada has not yet ratified some of the covenants on human rights adopted as long ago as 1966. There were three: the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights, the international covenant on civil and political rights, and the optional protocol to the international covenant on civil and political rights. I hope that with the coming into being of the commission the minister has announced the government will get on with the job of getting the provincial governments to permit the government of Canada to ratify these very important protocols.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) has made this statement, referring as it does to one of the most important human documents that has ever existed, the Universal Declaration of Human Rights on the occasion, as he has said, of its twenty-fifth birthday.

Those of us, however, who review the world today must be aware that, in spite of the noble aspirations set out in this document, the realities of the world are very different. As the hon. member who preceded me has said, widespread throughout the world there are instances of direct political torture, political imprisonment and political persecution taking place. We have not yet dealt with those things so important to the fundamental security, life and welfare of the people of the world. Therefore I join with the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in regretting the poor record of our country, not with regard to its attitude toward human rights but in respect of the ratification of the various conventions supposed to implement the declaration of human rights.

I know it is said that this is because we have a federal country and that many of these matters are within provincial jurisdiction. I suggest to the minister and, indeed, to all members of the government, that the time has come to review the policy of ratification and, if it is deemed necessary, to approach the provinces again seeking their concurrence in obtaining Canada's full adherence to the declaration of human rights and its conventions.

We welcome the promised legislation to appoint a federal commission on these matters, especially as they affect the status of women. We gave our full support to the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women. While we know that progress has been made, we know there is still much greater progress to be made in the future.

[Mr. Fairweather.]

There is another matter in this connection which we would ask the government to consider. I refer to the whole question of a constitutional bill of rights for Canada. Only a few months ago the Supreme Court of Canada delivered a decision in the Lavell case which cast serious doubts upon the effectiveness of the Bill of Rights and the protection it offers against discrimination on the ground of sex. We believe, and I think the Prime Minister said sometime ago, that the time will come when he will seek the approval of the provinces to move toward a constitutional bill of rights. He said there was an election pending. I think the election to which he referred has taken place. The time has now come to renew the effort to get a full constitutional bill of rights. I can tell him that many people are concerned and that many of the provincial governments have changed since his previous efforts were made. I believe a different atmosphere would now prevail. We welcome this statement and urge the government to proceed much faster and farther in the direction of guaranteeing human rights than has been done to date in the constitutional field, in the ratification of international conventions, and in every other method of enforcement so that those things which are so fundamental to the life and happiness of our people and the people of the world will be enforced.

I can assure the government that many people in Canada are deeply concerned about this matter. I have had an opportunity to judge that by the concern shown for the political prisoners in South Viet Nam and the innumerable letters I have received on that subject. I do not believe that the Canadian people are pragmatic and cynical. I think they believe in fundamental rights and that it would be a welcome action if our government took an effective lead in this field.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we all the more welcome the minister's statement as it is always advisable, when it is not sometimes too late for individuals whose rights have been infringed, to concretize hopes which unfortunately too often remain policy statements.

If the aim of the proposed commission is to promote the safeguard of individual family and people's rights, we surely entirely agree. I am especially pleased that the advice of provincial organizations has been sought to provide a better coordinated commission more suitable for all areas of the country.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to point out among others an example of discrimination existing at the present time as regards the age of Canadian citizens. Indeed, it is discriminatory to deny an individual whose spouse is not 65 years of age his entire old age security pension. In other words, a 65 year-old individual whose spouse is 60 is punished because the man or woman has chosen a spouse five years or even a year younger. This is discrimination.

Mr. Speaker, that couple will get only $179 while another who is over 65 will receive $340. I think that this government should, through that commission, consider the immediate abolition of that discrimination made against couples when both spouses are not 65 years old.

Of course at the international level our country must keep on being the one that sets an example and it must therefore try and defend all people whose liberties related to the fundamental right of any human being are sometimes flouted. It is our duty to do so fearlessly, with courage, in order to set an example for the whole world.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, in our own country we should no longer accept discrimination in areas such as old age security pensions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

POSITION OF LIBERAL AND NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to put forward a motion under Standing Order 43, if permission be granted, the reason for which appears in the motion. I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That for the purposes of this debate today and, for the guidance of the Chair, for all debates and oral questions dealing with energy, this House accept as an established fact that, since the joint statement made on Thursday last by the Prime Minister on behalf of himself and the hon. member for York South, the Liberal and New Democratic Parties are in direct coalition.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not and the motion cannot therefore be put.

HUMAN RIGHTS

OPPRESSION OF ANGOLAN COFFEE WORKERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity since it affects the human rights that are not respected in a part of the world, namely Angola.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House, to mark with dignity and confidence the twenty-fifth anniversary of the International Declaration of Human Rights, request the United Nations to take the necessary steps to put an end to the oppression and slavery whose victims are the Angolan workers on coffee plantations, in order that human rights mays also be respected in this part of the world, and that the Secretary of State for External Affairs be requested to advise the people concerned of this decision.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Bellechasse. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the motion cannot be put.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PUT PHOTOGRAPHS OF CANDIDATES ON BALLOTS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-238, to amend the Canada Elections Act (form of ballot).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Firth: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the Canada Elections Act to assist those Canadians who are unable to read English or French and thus prevent spoiled ballots. This would be achieved by putting a photograph of the candidate beside his name on the ballot paper.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PENITENTIARY—MEETING OF SUPERVISORS WITH SOLICITOR GENERAL

Question No. 2,650—Mr. Reynolds:

In mid-May, did the supervisors at the British Columbia Penitentiary request a meeting with the Solicitor General to discuss (a) over-crowding (b) inmate discipline (c) protective custody inmates (d) temporary absences (e) detrimental press releases concerning penitentiary staff and, if so, how much time did the Minister spend with that group?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Yes. The Solicitor General went to British Columbia on May 14, 1973, to visit William Head Institution on Vancouver Island, and to deliver an address to the John Howard Society in Vancouver, but had returned to Ottawa before he heard of the supervisors' request. The Solicitor General met with the administrators, staff and inmate committee representatives of British Columbia Penitentiary on December 13, 1972 where the problems cited have been discussed. The Solicitor General has also met with representatives from 19 other institutions where similar discussion has taken place. The Solicitor General is aware of and is working to correct the problems alluded to by the British Columbia Penitentiary supervisors.

OFY—ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO CONSTITUENCIES REPRESENTED BY MEMBERS OF CABINET, 1972-73

Question No. 2,673—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What was the total amount of OFY funds allocated in 1972-73 to constituencies represented in the House of Commons by members of the Cabinet?

2. (a) What is the name of each constituency represented by a Cabinet Minister (b) what is the name of the Minister (c) what was the specific total of OFY funds allocated to each such constituency in 1972-73?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1 and 2. It is not possible to answer this question, since the allocation of the funds of the OFY program is done within a framework of regions and sub-regions and not within the framework of electoral constituencies.

SPORT CANADA POLICY

Question No. 2,685—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What is the main goal of Sport Canada?

2. What steps has Sport Canada taken to initiate long term planning and general development of the majority of Canadian youth?

3. In the assessment of the Department of National Health and Welfare, what have been the three major contributions of Sport Canada to sport development?

4. What new programs has Sport Canada introduced?

5. Who dictates Sport Canada policy?

6. On what major sport (swimming, track and field, soccer, etc.) is it concentrating?

7. What growth in amateur sport has taken place since the creation of Sport Canada?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. To encourage, promote and develop fitness and amateur sport in Canada.

2. Sport Canada is primarily concerned with sport on national and international levels of competition. Elements contributing to long-term planning include the Task Force Report on Sport For Canadians; special conferences; e.g. National Conference on Olympic '76 Development; continuing discussions with national sports governing bodies and internal planning. Recreation Canada has, as its main concern, the general development of the majority of Canadian youth.

3. Some of the major contributions of Sports Canada to sport development are: (i) Canada Games; (ii) Establishment of the National Administrative Centre for Sport and Recreation including the appointment of technical directors in a number of national sport governing bodies on the Olympic program, (iii) A general strengthening of national sport governing bodies including the establishment of the Coaches Association of Canada and Game Plan '76.

4. Since 1970 (i) Establishment of: Administrative Centre for Sport and Recreation, Hockey Canada, Canadian Academy of Sports Medicine, Sport Participation, Coaches Association of Canada (ii) in addition: Increased aid to national sport governing bodies, for national and international competitions. Provision of grants in aid to student athletes. Appointment of technical directors in eleven sports associations. Program of special assistance to outstanding Canadian athletes preparing for international competitions. Sport administration projects designed to encourage more Canadians to become involved in sport.

5. The minister, on the advice of departmental officials and the National Advisory Council on Fitness and Amateur Sport. He may also choose to seek advice from sports bodies and other organizations or individuals in formulating policy.

6. Sport Canada provides financial assistance to more than sixty national sport governing bodies. Concentration on particular sports varies from time to time because of many contributing factors.

7. (i) Increased activity as reflected in No. 4 above. (ii) Larger national competitions. (iii) Greater involvement by provincial and municipal governments and by educational institutions. (iv) Growth of Canada Games. (v) More international events being hosted in Canada.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—EMPLOYMENT OF INUIT—INDIAN PEOPLE

Question No. 2,780—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. How many (a) Inuit (b) status Indian people are now employed regularly in the Canadian Armed Forces?

2. How many (a) Inuit (b) status Indian people have withdrawn from the Canadian Armed Forces in each year 1970, 1971, 1972 and 1973 to date?

3. Are any special preparatory courses provided for Inuit or Indian people who are recruited in either of the territories and, if so, where are such courses conducted?

4. Is it the intention to commence such preparatory courses in a northern environment and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Canadian Forces do not maintain statistics on the racial origin of its members. As of October 1, 1973 there were 12 persons in the Canadian Forces who have declared fluency in an Inuit language and 35 who declared fluency in an Indian language.

2. Based on review of linguistic proficiency records of members the following applies:

Withdrawals	Persons Fluent Inuit	Persons Fluent Indian
Year 1970	1	13
1971	3	7
1972	2	4

[Mr. Lalonde.]

3. No. There are no special courses accorded to the Inuit or Indian recruits from the territories. Once in the Forces, northern inhabitants receive training identical to all other entrants and are given special tutoring if required. Where practical the Forces attempt to ensure that two or more native applicants from one area proceed through training together.

4. No. Any special adaptation problems for northerners are handled as required by recruit school training specialists.

POST OFFICE—LETTER FROM LANARK BOARD OF EDUCATION RELATING TO LATE MAIL DELIVERY

Question No. 2,800—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Postmaster General receive a letter dated October 3, 1973 from the Lanark County Board of Education on the subject of late mail delivery and, if so, did this letter state that a cheque from the Treasurer of Ontario mailed in Toronto at 5.00 p.m. on Thursday, September 27 did not reach the Lanark County Board of Education until October 2 and as a result this school board lost $561.70 interest on money that they were not able to deposit?

2. Is the Post Office Department giving immediate consideration to remunerating the Lanark County Board of Education for their loss resulting from slow mail delivery?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. The Lanark County Board of Education has written to the Postmaster General concerning a cheque mailed by the Treasurer of Ontario. This cheque was not ready for mailing in time for the late afternoon mail pick-up. It was posted after the deadline set for next day delivery under the Assured Mail Program. Because of the late mailing the next delivery day was Monday, October 1. It arrived Tuesday, October 2.

2. No.

Order Paper Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE—COMMUNITY TEAMS, MASSET, B.C.

Question No. 2,819—Mr. Howard:

1. Is there any prohibition either direct or by implication that Canadian Armed Forces personnel stationed at Masset, British Columbia are not to become players on any softball teams other than one which may be organized for armed forces personnel and, if so, does this prohibition apply to any softball team which may be organized among native Indian people?

2. If such a prohibition does exist, by whose order or authority was that decison made and is, or has that person been asked or directed to alter the prohibition so there can be free association among the various people in the area?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No. in the past few years a number of servicemen have participated as players on local community teams including teams organized by native Indian people. In 1973 CFS Masset organized a second softball team and this may have contributed to the lack of participation of Canadian Forces personnel on other community softball teams. One serviceman is however currently playing as a member of the locally organized Haida basketball team.

2. Not applicable.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—USE OF CAMP MEAFORD

Question No. 2,824—Mr. Mitges:

Which Canadian army units made use of Camp Meaford and what was the length of time in days or months each unit occupied the Camp in 1970, 1971, 1972 and to October 1, 1973?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The following Canadian Armed Forces units made use of Camp Meaford and its ranges during the period 1970 to 1 October 1973 as follows: 1970: The Combat Arms School located at CFB Borden made continuous use of Camp Meaford during the period January 1, 1970 to November 1, 1970. 1971: No training at Camp Meaford. 1972: Field training but no weapons firing: January 31-February 4, 1st Battalion The Royal Canadian Regiment; February 5-6, Grey and Simcoe Foresters (Militia); May 26-28, Lincoln and Welland Regiment (Militia); June 3, Grey and Simcoe Foresters (Militia); July 16-19, Canadian Forces Officer Candidate School; July 14-August 19, Canadian Forces School of Administration, and Logistics and Canadian Forces Dental Services School; August 1-2, Grey and Simcoe Foresters (Militia); August 13-14, Canadian Forces School of Aeronautical and Ordnance Engineering; August 13-16, Hamilton Militia District; September 13-15, Canadian Forces School of Intelligence and Security; September 25-27, 706 Communications Squadron; September 29-October 1, Grey Simcoe Foresters (Militia). 1973: Field training but no weapons firing: January 23-30, Grey and Simcoe Foresters (Militia); February 1-6, Grey and Simcoe Foresters (Militia); February 9-11, Lincoln and Welland Regiment (Militia); February 12-21, 1st Battalion The Royal Canadian Regiment. CANADA SHIPPING ACT—AUTHORITY TO INSPECT SUBMERSIBLES

Question No. 2,986—Mr. Forrestall:

Does the Minister of Transport intend to place before Parliament legislation in the way of amendments to the Canada Shipping Act to provide for the inspection of (a) all submersibles operating within the jurisdictional purview of the government, regardless of gross tonnage (b) submersibles owned or leased by the government and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The Canada Shipping Act gives authority for the issue by the Governor in Council of regulations dealing with the construction and equipping of all ships regardless of tonnage. However, the act also provides exemptions from annual inspection by a steamship inspector in so far as small vessels are concerned. The need to verify whether or not such vessels do comply with the regulations has been met by means of unscheduled and occasional surveys for enforcement purposes which are not prohibited by the act. In the case of submersibles, it is considered that there would be no problem in carrying out surveys on a similar basis when construction and equipment regulations have been finalized. Hence, there is no intention at this time to put forward an amendment to the act removing such vessels from the sections dealing with annual inspection exemption. Submersibles owned or leased by the government would come under the jurisdiction of the Canada Shipping Act and its regulations if they are registered, and as this can be done by directive it is not considered necessary to amend the act in this respect.

CBC—NEWS SPECIAL ON PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO CHINA

Question No. 2,987—Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain):

1. On what date was the decision made to prepare an hour-long CBC News Special on the visit of the Prime Minister to China?

2. At any stage in the discussion of the proposal to prepare a News Special, was there communication between CBC and the Office of the Prime Minister and, if so, what was the nature of each such communication?

3. What are the (a) costs of production (b) other related costs to CBC of this News Special?

4. If this News Special was sponsored on the national network, what would be the cost to the sponsor?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Prime Minister's Office as follows: 1. Early in September it was decided that a TV news special covering the Prime Minister's visit to China was warranted, in addition to regular news coverage. On October 4 the decision was made to schedule a one-hour program for telecast on October 19.

2. Both CBC television networks requested the Prime Minister before his departure for China to grant them interviews for special programs to be broadcast on his return. These interviews were given in the usual way when the Prime Minister had concluded his discussions with the government of the People's Republic of China.

3. It has not been customary to require the Corporation to disclose such details of its operations as costs related to individual programs.

4. As a matter of policy, the CBC does not accept sponsorship of its news specials. Therefore, no monetary value is placed on such coverage that would enable the Corporation to arrive at a realistic figure.

DUPLICATION OF DND PRESS RELEASES

Question No. 3,016—Mr. Reynolds:

1. Were eight individually stamped letters, each containing the identical DND Press Release, sent to the City Editor of the Vancouver Sun and, if so, for what reason?

2. Were similar situations repeated with newspapers across the country?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Due to the mechanical failure of one addressograph machine several envelopes were identically addressed. This problem was of short duration and has been corrected.

2. No reports have been received by the Department of National Defence of similar multiple addressing to newspapers other than the Vancouver Sun.

CBC SERIES "SUNDAY", "WEEKEND", AND "UP CANADA"

Question No. 3,020—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. How many members of the production staff of CBC program series, "Sunday", were on the staff of the series, "Weekend", and have been appointed to the staff of the new series "Up Canada"?

2. What was the estimated viewing audience of "Sunday", and of "Weekend"?

3. What was the production budget of "Sunday" and of "Weekend"?

4. What is the production budget of the new series "Up Canada"?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. One.

2. During 1967, the year "Sunday" was scheduled, it had a mid-season average weekly audience of some 2,253,000 viewers. Corresponding mid-season audiences for "Weekend" were as follows: 1970, 2,279,000; 1971, 1,652,000; 1972, 1,452,000; 1973, 1,562,000.

3 and 4. It has not been customary to require the CBC to disclose financial details of its operations such as individual program budgets.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—OFFICE IN FORFAR, ONTARIO

Question No. 3,024—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Post Office Department willing to reopen a post office in Forfar, Ontario and (a) if so, on what date (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Is the Department aware that there are two small rural industries in Forfar that require more adequate postal service than they are now obtaining as rural route box holders and is the Department willing to provide this service?

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): 1. No. The criteria for the establishment of a post office has not been met.

2. Existing service provides daily delivery via a rural route. The requirements of these postal users is being reviewed.

CBC—"THE TOMMY BANKS SHOW"

Question No. 3,036—Mr. Paproski:

1. Was a well-established, well received series featuring one of Canada's best and most knowledgeable entertainers "The Tommy Banks Show" dropped from CBC TV network and, if so, for what reason?

2. How much advance notice was given prior to cancellation of contract?

3. How many other 100 per cent Canadian content programs of such calibre does CBC TV have?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The Tommy Banks Show has not been dropped from the network but it is planned to adjust the schedule at the end of December and resume telecasts of this program during the summer. The CBC feels the program is well done, and has tried different scheduling times and both half-hour and one hour formats in the two years it has been on the air in an attempt to improve its share of the audience as well as audience enjoyment among those who watch the program. However, the show has not been able to draw the strong audience that is desirable especially during the winter months.

2. Tommy Banks was advised in October that the programs remaining to be shown after December would be scheduled during the summer instead of continuing through January to March.

3. It is difficult to measure the quality of each individual program in a way that would establish realistically how many are similar in calibre.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—COST OF CHUTE-DES-PASSES DAM AND SHIPSHAW CENTRAL POWER STATION

Question No. 3,038—Mr. Gauthier (Roberval):

Will the Minister of National Defence advise the cost to the government of (a) the Chute-des-Passes dam in Lake St. John West (b) the Shipshaw central power station during the late forties?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) No information available. (b) Reference to the Shipshaw Power Station is contained in the "History of the Department of Munitions and Supply", by J. de N. Kennedy published by the King's Printer in 1950. The following appears at page 102: "With the imminence of war, the United Kingdom became interested in obtaining additional facilities for the production of primary aluminum and the commonly used mill forms and, with the financial assistance of that country, Aluminum Co. of Canada, Limited constructed a very large and up-to-date plant in Kingston, Ontario. Before World War II, Aluminum Co. of Canada, Limited had laid a base for almost unlimited extension of their reduction facilities of Arvida, in northern Quebec, and in order to produce the enormous quantities of primary aluminum which the expanding munitions programme of the Allies required, the Shipshaw Power Project was constructed. The project produced an additional 833,000 horse-power and cost approximately $70,000,000; it was financed by the Company itself and the profits from the American contract were used to amortize the capital costs incurred. The production of primary aluminum by the Company increased from 82,800 tons in 1939 to approximately 500,000 tons in 1943."

REVENUE DERIVED FROM THE 12 PER CENT TAX ON GASOLINE

Question No. 3,088—Mr. Andre:

1. (a) How much revenue was derived from the 12 per cent manufacturer's tax on gasoline for the 1972 calendar year and for the twelve months prior to October 1, 1973 (b) how much was derived from the area east of the Ottawa valley and how much from the area west of the Ottawa valley?

2. What were the revenues from this tax for all other refined petroleum products for each of these time periods and each of the areas?

3. How much is this tax for gasoline, expressed in terms of cents per gallon of gasoline sold, for each of the time periods and each of the areas?

4. What are the sources of information and methods of calculation used to answer these questions?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as National Revenue is concerned: 1. (a) and (b) We are unable to provide the information requested because the 12 per cent federal sales tax imposed by the Excise Tax Act is recorded in one account without any distinction as to the products from which it was derived.

2. See answer to 1 (a) and (b).

[Mr. Faulkner.]

3. The national rounded average tax content for the 1972 calendar year was 2⅔ cents per gallon of Grade No. 1 gasoline and 216 cents per gallon of Grade No. 2 gasoline. For the twelve months prior to October 1, 1973, the national rounded average tax content was 3 cents and 2½ cents per gallon of Grade No. 1 and Grade No. 2 gasoline, respectively.

4. The average tax content was arrived at by analysing information obtained as a result of a sample survey of sales in the industry taking into account both prices and proportions of sales to the different marketing levels.

NATO EXPENDITURES—PERCENTAGE RATE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

Question No. 3,104—Mr. Stevens:

Would there be an increase in defence expenditure if the percentage rate of gross national product on defence was pegged to the present NATO members states' average expenditure on defence and, if so, by what amount?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Yes. If the 1972 average expenditure on defence for the European members of NATO only, expressed as a percentage of gross national product, is taken as the base, the increase would be approximately $1.5 billion. If the 1972 average for all NATO countries is taken as the base, the increase would be approximately $3 billion.

EDC LOAN FINANCING TO CHILE

Question No. 3,106—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. What was the actual level of EDC loan financing to Chile between January 1965 and December 1970?

2. What is the dollar value of (a) aircraft (b) telecommunications components of the $5 million loan to Chile approved by EDC in April 1973 referred to in the Secretary of State for External Affairs' statement of October 26, 1973?

3. (a) What organization was to receive (i) the aircraft (ii) the telecommunications equipment (b) what was the precise nature of the telecommunications equipment referred to in this loan?

4. Does EDC approval of the loan referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his statement of October 26 mean that a specific legal agreement was signed with Chile regarding the loan and loan terms, or only that approval to negotiate such a loan was given?

5. Does the governement intend to make this loan available to the Chilean Junta and (a) if so, will the terms of the loan to the Junta be exactly the same as those offered to the Allende government (b) if not, how will they differ?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): EDC reports that: 1. The actual level of EDC's loan financing to Chile between January 1965 and December 1970 was $1,952,500.

2. With respect to the $5 million loan to Chile approved by EDC in April 1973 and referred to in the October 26, 1973 statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the dollar value (a) of the aircraft component is $1.15 million, and (b) of the telecommunications component is $3.85 million.

3. (a) The organization which was to receive (i) the aircraft is Linea Aerea Nacional, and (ii) the telecommunications equipment is Empresa Nacional de Telecommunicaciones; and (b) The precise nature of the telecommunications equipment referred to in this loan is microwave multiplex and ancillary equipment with adequate provision for voice channel expansion in television transmission.

4. EDC approval of the loan referred to by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his statement of October 26, 1973 means that in April 1973, EDC's board of directors gave approval to make a formal offer.

5. The financing is an EDC loan under section 29 of the Export Development Act, and is not a government loan; EDC intends to make it available to the Chilean Junta, and (a) The terms will be exactly the same as those offered to the Allende government; and (b) Not applicable.

EDC—REFUSAL OF REQUEST BY TIMBER JACK OF WOODSTOCK, ONTARIO

Question No. 3,110—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. Did EDC turn down a request by Timber Jack of Woodstock, Ontario in 1972, to finance a $4 million order by Chile and, if so, for what reason?

2. Did EDC officials indicate that the reason for such a decision was government policy not to extend loans to Chile at that time, as indicated at page 2220 of Hansard?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): EDC reports that: 1. EDC had a request in November 1972 from Eaton Yale Limited, Forestry Equipment Division, Woodstock, Ontario to provide insurance cover for a proposed sale to Chile valued at $4 million. EDC as a responsible agency declined to insure on the ground that the proposed transaction would almost certainly result in a loss.

2. EDC officials indicated that the reason for the decision was their own assessment of the risk.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—STATEMENT BY MINISTER PERTAINING TO DEFENCE SPENDING

Question No. 3,114—Mr. Forrestall:

Were any outside individuals or agencies involved in the writing of the recent statement given by the Minister of National Defence pertaining to defence spending and budgeting and, if so, who were they and at what price was their talent secured?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No.

INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS IN FIELD OF NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Question No. 3,164—Mr. Orlikow:

How many industrial accidents, including fatalities, occurred in the field of the non-operating railway employment for each of the past three years?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): During the year 1972 there were 25,378 industrial accidents resulting in injury to non-operating railway workers. Of these accidents, nine were fatal and 2,859 resulted in loss of time from work. Comparable figures for previous years are not available as reporting regulations under the Canada Labour Code Part IV (Safety of Employees) were not in effect prior to January 1, 1972.

Order Paper Questions

LE DAIN COMMISSION REPORT—ENGLISH

Question No. 3,175—Mr. Lawrence:

1. Has the English version of the Le Dain Commission Report been received by the government and, if so, on what date?

2. On what date was the English version of the Le Dain Commission Report sent to the translation bureau for translation into French?

3. To what translation bureau was the English version of the Le Dain Commission Report sent?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No.

2. The compiling of the English drafts of the final report began in the summer of 1972 and portions of the report were submitted for translation on an ongoing basis.

3. Les Traductions 530, Inc., Montreal.

LIP—SALARIES PAID BY SPONSORS OF PROJECTS

Question No. 3,186—Mr. Godin:

Since persons hired under the Local Initiatives Program are supposed to receive $100 a week, is the government considering dealing severely with sponsors of some projects subsidized by this program who paid weekly salaries of only $50 and $60 during the winters of 1971-72 and 1972-73?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): The criteria of the Local Initiatives Program provided that the salaries paid by project sponsors would not exceed the local prevailing rates for each occupation. This stipulation was subject to the proviso that the total salaries paid to all the employees employed on a project would not exceed an average of $100.00 per man-week over the life of the project. It was envisaged that some employees such as unskilled labourers, might receive less than $100.00 per week, whereas the salary paid to skilled employees might exceed that figure. All employees, however, had to receive the minimum rate for the province concerned.

*ROYAL CANADIAN MINT—SELECTION OF ACRES CONSULTING SERVICES LTD. TO HANDLE PERSONNEL SERVICES

Question No. 3,297—Mr. McKenzie:

1. For what reason was Acres Consulting Services Ltd. of Toronto chosen as the firm to handle personnel services for the new Royal Canadian Mint to be located in Winnipeg?

2. For what reason was the contract not awarded to a Winnipeg management consultant firm?

3. What criteria were used by the government in awarding the contract?

4. Is it the intention of the government to continue to award contracts relating to the Mint to firms in other cities?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. Acres Consulting Services Limited have been retained by the Royal Canadian Mint to act as advisors in the reorganization of the entire Mint, and the establishment of staff requirements resulting from the transfer to Winnipeg of the Coining Division, the expansion of the Numismatic Division to handle the Olympic program, and the eventual renovation of the Ottawa Mint. Their responsibility for hiring personnel for Winnipeg is limited to several specialized engineering support positions. The balance of the recruiting being handled by the Personnel Department of the Royal Canadian Mint.

2 and 3. Acres Consulting Services Limited were retained for purposes of continuity and because of their special background in manufacturing plants, having been originally hired by the Department of Finance in 1967 to prepare plans for a new Canadian Mint, and later having been responsible for the process engineering for the new Mint in Winnipeg.

4. No, insofar as contracts for management consultants are concerned. With regard to contracts for coinage metals, tenders will normally be called on a national basis; manufacturing supplies and services will be obtained in the Winnipeg area as far as possible, based upon competitive prices and availability.

RECONCILIATION OF TRADE FIGURES

Question No. 3,307—Mr. Fairweather:

Have United States and Canadian trade figures been reconciled as a result of the special study initiated by the United States Department of Commerce and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and designed to overcome a substantial difference in totals between the statistics of the respective departments?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that statistics published by the United States and Canada for their merchandise trade with each other have been reconciled for the years 1970, 1971 and 1972 by Statistics Canada and the Census Bureau of the United States. The results were reported in press releases issued by Statistics Canada on January 10 and November 6, 1973. A detailed report on the reconciliation of statistics for 1970 has been published and is available from the External Trade Division, Statistics Canada. The Joint Task Force will begin shortly to reconcile 1973 figures.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ENERGY

OIL—POSITION OF SAUDI ARABIA RESPECTING SHIPMENT TO CANADA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On December 6 he categorically told the House that he had been told by Sheik Yamani of Saudi Arabia that Canada was not on the embargo list so far as Saudi Arabia was concerned. Since this seems to conflict with what the Sheik has said very recently in public, can the minister tell us whether Canada is now listed as a specially embargoed destination by the government of Saudi Arabia because the oil might be trans-shipped to the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that the Sheik was reported to have said that on television last night. We had inquiries made this morning. While it was not possible to reach the Sheik himself, one of his staff was contacted and he confirmed, as the Sheik confirmed to me last week, that the name of Canada was not on the unfriendly list and that we remain on the neutral list. I gather that the Sheik said last night that they were concerned about the possible diversion of Saudi Arabian oil to the United States. Our intention is to follow this up again with the government of Saudi Arabia in order to point out that oil coming to Portland for transport through the pipeline can really go practically to no other destination but Canada, and also to point out that there has not been a diversion of Arabian source oil from Canada to the United States.

Mr. Stanfield: Do I take it from the minister's reply that we are now in fact cut off by Saudi Arabia as far as oil supplies are concerned unless we can satisfy the government of that country with respect to trans-shipment of Arab oil to the United States? Are we cut off at the present time?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I might say it is because we are uncertain of the exact position of Saudi Arabia, in light of this recent statement, that we are going to confirm that. I hope to be able to know more definitely in a couple of days what the position of that government is.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister tell the House whether to his knowledge any oil has in fact been shipped from Saudi Arabia destined to Canada since late October?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the last oil received—I think it was by the Irving refinery—was in the third week of November. What the actual date of shipment would be I could not be certain. That refinery is supplied by Saudi Arabian and Iranian sources and I am informed it has been kept whole. On the question of other shipments, of course we have known for some time that they would refuse to deliver to Portland, so I think I can confirm fairly accurately that no Saudi Arabian oil has come through Portland to Montreal.

OIL—EFFECT OF LACK OF SHIPMENTS FROM SAUDI ARABIA ON ESTIMATED SHORTFALL

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the Sheik's declaration last night, which made it pretty evident that we are on the neutral list or embargo list and have not received Arab oil since October 19, how does that affect the minister's estimate of a 200,000 barrels per day shortfall? Has this fact been included in the minister's estimate or not?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I might point out that I have the Sheik's "W5" text in front of me and he did not say what the hon. gentleman attributes to him. As to whether or not it will add to the shortfall, it could if it is the policy of Saudi Arabia not to ship even to Canadian ports as opposed to Portland.

Mr. Lawrence: Can the minister tell the House if the Shaheen Come-By-Chance refinery is included in this cut-off list or are they getting Arab oil?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, they have received a shipment, but from Kuwait.

POSITION OF ARAB COUNTRIES ON SHIPMENT OF OIL TO COME-BY-CHANCE REFINERY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact the Come-By-Chance refinery was dependent to a very large extent on Middle Eastern oil as well as some Nigerian oil, and in view of the fact that this oil was for processing and trans-shipment to the United States, have the Middle Eastern countries indicated to the government that they will not allow oil to go to the Come-By-Chance refinery unless it is to be used exclusively for Canadian purposes?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, they have not specifically made that point with regard to the Come-By-Chance refinery, although it is a fair inference from what has been said that if crude oil from Arab states is diverted from Canada to embargoed states the crude oil source could be shut off if that practice occurred.

Mr. Douglas: In view of the fact the minister has had some discussions with Mr. Shaheen, was it intimated to Mr. Shaheen that he would not get oil if it was going to be trans-shipped to the United States? Is that the reason for Mr. Shaheen's decision to allow Canadians to have 100,000 barrels per day?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Shaheen seemed to understand this disability very well.

POSSIBLE GUARANTEE BY CANADA THAT SAUDI ARABIAN OIL WILL NOT BE DIVERTED TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If the only impediment to the shipment of Saudi Arabian oil to Canada is a guarantee on the part of the government of Canada that none of the oil products from that crude will be diverted to the United States either directly or indirectly, is the government of Canada willing to give that guarantee?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think we would like to explore the position very definitively with the Saudi Arabian government. As we have indicated at times in the past, we are not prepared to be subjected to pressure of this kind, particularly if it relates to a good customer of ours.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley is rising on a supplementary. He will be recognized and then the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

REASON FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER LAST THURSDAY

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Having regard to the statements made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on Friday, December 7, that pricing mechanism, consumer subsidization and pricing legislation are all subjects for discussion at the first ministers' conference in January, can the Prime Minister tell the House why suddenly on Thursday of last week he felt it fit to intervene in the debate on the allocation bill to make a statement involving the sudden appearance of a so-called government energy policy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this is argument and debate rather than a question.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. According to Hansard, on December 7 the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources avoided no less than nine times answers to energy questions by simply stating they would come up for discussion at the first ministers' conference in January. I should like to know if the Prime Minister can tell the House whether he made his statement because he disagrees with his minister of whether he made his statement last Thursday simply to pacify the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs but since he has just stepped out perhaps I might be recognized when he returns.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT GUARANTEED LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESSES—REQUEST THAT MAXIMUM BE INCREASED

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the hon. Minister of Finance, but since he is absent I shall direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Would he advise the House of the progress made in the consultations to assist small businesses to obtain loans from the chartered banks? Under these circumstances, will the $25,000 loan ceiling be raised so that small businesses may benefit more from this law?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be pleased to refer this question to the hon. Minister of Finance who will certainly report to the hon. member as soon as it is possibly feasible.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO PLACING OF ORDER FOR STEEL OR PIPE—DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Supply and Services regarding the Montreal pipeline. In fact has there been an order placed in terms of acquiring steel and/or pipe? Has an order been placed yet?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister advise whether the government has determined the size of the pipe that is required and, further, can he advise when the government intends to see that the pipeline is started?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: This whole question is still under review, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: In light of the speculation in the city of Hamilton involving the Steel Company of Canada, can the minister advise whether he has been in touch with the Steel Company of Canada with respect to the size of the pipeline, the time of commencement of construction, and the ordering of steel and/or pipe, or whether in fact the obligation with respect to the supplying of steel will be shared by anyone else? Can he answer any of these questions so that we can have something of substance rather than the speculation now existing in the city of Hamilton?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I know that my department's officers are still at the discussion stage with those of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. No negotiation has yet been started with the companies.

AMOUNT OF WESTERN CRUDE OIL THAT CAN BE MOVED FROM ONTARIO TO QUEBEC MARKET—EFFECT OF TRANS MOUNTAIN PRODUCTION ON ESTIMATED SHORTFALL

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On November 28 the minister told the House that it was his estimate that 40,000 to 60,000 barrels per day of western crude oil could move from Ontario to the Quebec market. In view of the fact industry people have said in the past week that this is pure fantasy, would the minister say whether it is pure fantasy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is a difference of opinion in this regard between officials of the Department of Transport and my department and of the industry. There is a feeling within government circles that with certain physical changes in the system, plus the kind of direction that could be given by the energy resources allocation board, a higher rate of throughput could be achieved.

Mr. Bawden: Mr. Speaker, if I may use the minister's words, he has said there are some facts upon which reasonable men can differ. Can the minister say whether it is true that the Trans Mountain Pipe Line is now putting through some 50 per cent more volume for eastern markets, the volume having risen from 50,000 barrels a day to 75,000 barrels a day or an amount of 875,000 gallons per day, and will this amount take care of the entire shortfall that he projected some weeks ago?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check the hon. member's figure on throughput. The figure with regard to shortfall was a prospective one and it could be, as has been indicated today, even greater if there are certain international complications.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INCREASES IN WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCES, OLD AGE SECURITY AND GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT—ACTION TO PREVENT OFFSETTING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I now direct my question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As there are to be increases in January in old age security and the guaranteed income supplement on the one hand and in the war veterans allowance on the other, are the necessary steps being taken so that veterans who are on both will receive both and not have one set off against the other?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, those necessary steps are being taken.

INCREASES IN WAR DISABILITY PENSIONS AND VETERANS ALLOWANCES—ACTION TO PREVENT OFFSETTING

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister if similar action will be taken with respect to those who are on both the war disability pension under the Pension Act and on the war veterans allowance? Since each of these will be escalated in January, will veterans on both receive both increases?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which has been looked at previously, and veterans will be receiving this. There may be some cases in which, possibly, the war veterans allowance will be classed as income and in that way it may be denied, but this is subject to income assessment.

EXEMPTION FROM INCOME OF PARTIAL DISABILITY PENSION INCREASES INCLUDED WITH WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Has the minister taken any action to exempt from income increases in disability pensions for those veterans who are receiving partial disability pensions in their war veterans allowance payments?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I think the hon. member knows that these allowances have an income ceiling attached to them. Therefore, when veterans are in receipt of disability pensions such pensions have to be classed as income.

LABOUR RELATIONS

PROGRESS TOWARD SETTLEMENT OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES' DISPUTE

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Transport.

Since the 100,000 non-operating railway employees who went back to work after the strike last summer are still waiting for the results of the arbitration ordered by special legislation of Parliament, can the hon. Minister of Transport, who is an expert on work standards, tell us how the negotiations related to these employees are going and whether he intends telling us about their results in the near future?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The hon. member who is well acquainted with the Portneuf workers and the unions, is well aware of the fact that this report is to be made to the Minister of Labour.

OIL—GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS FOR DOMESTIC PRICING POLICY

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Friday the minister told the House that many aspects of the new energy policy will be discussed at the January first ministers' meeting. Can the minister now tell the House if the government has a specific proposal for a domestic pricing policy and, if so, when will it be announced?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we will be bringing forward some alternative proposals in this regard to the conference.

Mr. Neil (Moose Jaw): Does the government now have a definite pricing mechanism to incorporate in legislation and, if so, when can it be expected?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question on Friday.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY WILL HAVE ADEQUATE SUPPLIES OF PETROLEUM PRODUCTS NEXT YEAR

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the agricultural industry is one of the largest users of petroleum in the country, can the minister assure the agricultural industry, especially east of the Ottawa Valley, that there will be adequate supplies of petroleum for the upcoming 1974-75 crop?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, one of the critical questions would be the early support of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues for the Energy Resources Allocation Board bill.

FIGURE TO WHICH PRICE OF DOMESTIC OIL MAY BE ALLOWED TO RISE TO ENSURE TAR SANDS DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's recent statement that the price of domestically produced oil must be allowed to rise to a level high enough to allow for speedy development of the tar sands, can the Prime Minister indicate what figure he had in mind inasmuch as the current estimate of the level would be approximately $10 per barrel?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the figure we have in mind is one we will be discussing with the provinces at the January conference.

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the Prime Minister indicate what date he has in mind by which this level will be reached for Canadian produced crude oil?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to understand that we do not want to act unilaterally and be accused of doing that, and that we have to bring to the provinces the discussion of these matters. This will be done in January.

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

ACTION TO INCREASE PAYMENTS TO PRERETIRED COAL MINERS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation. In light of the fact the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and I have been protesting to this and previous ministers for some years that the amount received by preretired coal miners has never been adequate—I might add, with some success in the case of the present minister—may I ask if during the recent session with Mr. Tom Kent, President of Devco, this question was discussed? If so, what action was taken, keeping in mind that even with a cost of living escalation these forcibly retired coal miners are still not receiving enough to get by on?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the largest number who are preretired I think I indicated to the House some time ago, and certainly discussed with the president of the corporation, the fact that the corporation would have the government's approval if it were to move to the same arrangement as exists with old age pensions. That would be to escalate their pensions not so much by 2 per cent but in accordance with the cost of living index once the necessary legislation has passed the House, which presumably will be in a short time as it is now in the other place. In addition, of course, during the past few months there was a substantial increase in preretirement leave and other benefits. There are one or two specific anomalies with regard to certain individuals, which I have discussed at great length with the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond and will also be prepared to discuss with the hon. member and which we are trying to iron out in the interests of equity.

GRAIN

RAPESEED MARKETING PLEBISCITE—MAILING OF ADDITIONAL BALLOTS TO PRODUCERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. With regard to the vote on rapeseed marketing which has been under way since December 4 and the ballots that have been sent to producers, may I ask the minister whether ballots are being mailed now to other producers, in addition to the 36,000 to whom ballots were sent, for December delivery? How many additional ballots are being sent out?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the figure originally used, in the order of 36,000 and some ballots, is the total number known to us to be eligible. As I understand it, this is the number now being sent out. There was an original number sent out and it was found that some additional ones were left out. These have gone out later. Therefore, ballots postmarked January 4 will be the deadline for receipt of ballots.

Mr. Gleave: Can the minister tell the House how many additional ballots are being sent out and whether all producers will now have until January 4 to complete sending in their returns? Can he assure the House that, indeed, all those producers who should receive ballots are going to receive them?

[Mr. Muir.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the deadline of January 4 for returning ballots applies to all producers, so that the deadline is extended for all. Obviously, we attempted to make sure that everyone who should get a ballot obtained one. We publicized the fact that the material and ballots were going out so that we could receive information from producers if they did not receive them. I would have to obtain the exact number for the hon. member.

● (1450)

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): May I ask the President of the Privy Council whether he will hold discussions with the Chief Electoral Officer and request that in the electoral district of Saskatoon-Humboldt a line for use by undecided voters be provided on the ballots?

ENERGY

SOURCE OF INFORMATION LEADING TO DECISION TO EXTEND PRICE FREEZE ON WESTERN CRUDE OIL

Mr. Joe Clark (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising from the minister's statement on Friday that the technical advisory committee and its recommendations are to be used only in situations of crisis. Can the minister tell the House the source of the information included in the Prime Minister's speech on energy last Thursday?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am not sure to which aspect of the speech the hon. gentleman is referring but in principle the source of the information is my department and the National Energy Board.

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): To be more precise, can the minister tell us the source of the expert and detailed information which led to the Prime Minister's decision concerning the price freeze and the announcement of policy in that connection?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think the hon. gentleman may be aware that there has been widespread opposition throughout the country to increasing prices in the western part of the market at a time when there has been no identifiable increase in the cost to the Canadian producing industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The judgment of the federal Liberal caucus in that regard was the determining factor.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Rocky Mountain): Am I correct, then, in assuming that the source of the recommendation with respect to the price freeze was that corner of the House which was the loudest when the minister made his comments?

NATIONAL REVENUE

INQUIRY AS TO COLLECTION OF AMOUNTS OWING BY JOHN C. DOYLE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue I should like to ask the acting minister a question concerning the accounts due to the Department of National Revenue by that notorious refugee from justice, John C. Doyle. It was said some months ago in answer to a question in the House that some settlement had been arranged in connection with the millions of dollars owing by him for income taxes. I would ask the minister to tell the House, now that Doyle is in custody, whether the government has collected the enormous amounts on which this man was in default?

Hon. Herb Gray (Acting Minister of National Revenue): I shall be happy to take notice of that question and bring it to the attention of my colleague.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am just wondering whether Mr. Doyle is still the pampered pet of the Liberals as he was under Smallwood and Pickersgill.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Since Doyle has now been charged, and has enjoyed the weekend in what we commonly call the crowbar hotel, would the minister be prepared to negotiate with the United States authorities with a view to trading Doyle, who is wanted in the United States, for Banks, who is also a fond friend of the Liberal party, and bring Banks back to justice?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBILITY OF CHARGING EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES EMPLOYMENT RATED PREMIUMS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has the minister received from the Unemployment Insurance Commission a proposal, a brief or a proposition in connection with charging employers and employees employment-rated premiums for unemployment insurance much in the same way that the Workmen's Compensation Board charges employers employment or danger-rated premiums in connection with payments to that fund?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I do not recognize any brief or submission in the terms the hon. member has described but I shall certainly inquire. He may be referring to serious discussions which took place and which concern part of the present act in connection with merit-rated premiums, a part of the act that has not yet been proclaimed.

ALLEGED PAY SUPPLEMENTS BY EMPLOYERS TO EMPLOYEES PRIOR TO LAY-OFFS TO ENSURE MAXIMUM BENEFITS

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Is the minister aware that a great number of employers are using the unemployment insurance fund to supplement or handle employees during lay-off periods and are topping up pay prior to lay-offs so that employees may receive the maximum possible benefits from the fund during the period of lay off?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I would be very grateful to the hon. member for any specific information he may have on this matter. I can assure him that whenever such indication has been given we have conducted investigations. I shall be very glad to co-operate with the hon. member if he will co-operate with me by providing this information so we can act.

ENERGY

USE OF TANKERS TO TRANSPORT OIL VIA ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

Mr. J. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In the light of statements by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister that the supplying of crude oil to eastern Canada was one of the major problems and that the government recognized it in August and September, can the hon. gentleman tell us why it took until the middle of November before any priority was given to oil tankers passing through the St. Lawrence Seaway system, although it was known that the seaway would be closed down within four weeks?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): I think that from August, 1973, to date there has been a constant increase in the amount of oil moved through the St. Lawrence and the seaway, rising from 15,000 tons to 300,000 tons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Morgan: When was the order given that oil tankers moving through the St. Lawrence Seaway system should be given priority?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I cannot say exactly, Mr. Speaker, but it was surely several weeks ago.

Mr. Morgan: About the middle of November, yes?

Mr. Hees: At least two weeks ago.

AGRICULTURE

MILK PRODUCTS—SUPPLIES VIS-À-VIS NEEDS—POSSIBLE AMENDMENT OF DAIRY POLICY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the public concern regarding a possible lack of milk products, could the minister inform the House about the present situation in that field? Does the rate of production meet the country's needs right now?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that production in the month of October showed some improvement, but over the whole of the year the production of milk is down by 5.9 per cent across the nation. That means we shall have to find sources of supply. We have found sources of supply for some of the products we need, mainly butter from New Zealand and other countries. We shall have to import that product. Economic factors are not the only thing keeping people in the dairy business—we know that—but they are important.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in view of the constant rise in the production cost in this field, can the minister tell us if he will suggest changes in the milk policy and a price increase so as to encourage such production in Canada?

[English]

Mr. Whelan: On Friday, Mr. Speaker, I met the national dairy consultative committee for the nation and discussed this very matter.

DISCUSSION AND DEBATE OF ENERGY ANALYSIS—REQUEST THAT POLICY STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER BE REFERRED TO NATURAL RESOURCES COMMITTEE

Mr. Keith Taylor (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of various government statements that the energy analysis tabled last June would provide a basis for public discussion and debate, can the minister tell the House whether, since then, any formal public discussions and debates have been held?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I wonder where the hon. member has been in the last six months.

Mr. Taylor: Having regard to the fact that the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works has not met for six months, will the minister refer the Prime Minister's statement of last Thursday to that committee for discussion and debate?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I would point out to the hon. gentleman that committee discussion took place in the committee on miscellaneous estimates which has focused on this subject.

● (1500)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Second, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works does have an order of reference at the present time. If opposition members had been interested in such a discussion, such a discussion could have been held.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Calgary Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Andre: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said that there was no call for the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to meet. For the benefit of the House may I say that is untrue. I requested the vice-chairman to hold a meeting of the subcommittee of this committee so we could call a meeting, but so far the request has been denied.

TRANSPORT

SHORTAGE OF BOXCARS FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA LUMBER—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Harry Olaussen (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As I understand it, the Minister of Transport recently assured the House that Canadian National, the British Columbia Railway and Canadian Pacific ordered railway cars for lumber movement at the beginning of the year. In view of the very critical shortage that now exists in British Columbia, can the minister inform the House what plans he has implemented for the manufacture of boxcars, and what plans the government has for the future?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I understand the question. Private industry, of course, manufactures boxcars in Canada.

Mr. Olaussen: Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Transport, please?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have said again and again that we were doing all we could to supply boxcars to the lumber companies of British Columbia. The position of the British Columbia Railway is to rely on the CNR and CPR to have boxcars. They did not order boxcars for years before this present crisis. Last year the industry itself forecast an increase of 6 per cent, when actually the increase is 18 per cent. The lumber companies refused to co-operate with the railways in regard to not keeping cars 40 days but 14 days, which is the average in Canada. If the hon. member can convince the lumber companies to take care of their own interests, perhaps we can convince the railways to do the same.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I bring to the attention of hon. members that we will be running short of time very soon.

Mr. Olaussen: Mr. Speaker, I direct my supplementary to the Minister of Transport. What progress has there been in consultation with the government of British Columbia regarding the critical shortage of boxcars in that province, and is any action being contemplated by the federal government?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think that the government of British Columbia has exactly the same problem that we have. We cannot build boxcars overnight. If we want more boxcars in B.C., this House will have to tell us from which part of Canada we are going to remove boxcars.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River on a supplementary and then the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether it is not a fact that the railroads are actually phasing out more boxcars than they are putting into service these days, and that an order for only a thousand boxcars has been given to solve the great problem we have in this country in regard to wheat and lumber movements. When can we expect some action?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think there are not far from 1,000, perhaps more, boxcars that are now being repaired by Canadian National. I hope CPR will do the same and will not ask to be paid in advance of repairing the boxcars. We can have boxcars if hon. members are ready to accept the fact that we must remove boxcars from the grain movement and send them to British Columbia for lumber movement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I guess the Minister of Supply and Services must have anticipated I was going to ask him a question because he has left the chamber.

NATURAL GAS—SUGGESTED PIPELINE FROM SABLE ISLAND TO NOVA SCOTIA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact Premier Gerald Regan, in an interview at Province House, Nova Scotia, expressed himself as being optimistic about getting federal support for a natural gas pipeline from Sable Island, would the minister inform the House whether there is sufficient gas on Sable Island to warrant a pipeline to Nova Scotia, and will any federal support be provided toward its construction?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, there has been some success with the exploration on Sable Island and on the continental shelf close by. I think it is fair to say that at the moment there is no certainty that the gas could be delivered at the kind of price that would make it attractive to Nova Scotia. This, of course, is a matter dependent upon exploration results.

HOUSING

PROGRESS TOWARD AGREEMENTS ON URBAN RENEWAL PROJECTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs but, in view of his absence, I shall address it to his parliamentary secretary.

Could the minister advise the House of the progress achieved or the agreements concluded to this date in connection with the program legislated on by Bill C-133 which is intended to encourage and help the municipalities in achieving their urban renewal projects? The minister announced that $100 million would be available to the provinces in 1973. Could we obtain details on the agreements concluded to this day?

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs met the Ontario ministers in charge of housing and finance today. It seems that at noon the two ministers, Messrs. Basford and Welch, announced that they had concluded a federal-provincial agreement involving expenditures of $26 million this year, under the neighbourhood improvement program.

LABOUR RELATIONS

POSSIBLE GOVERNMENT GUARANTEE OF LOANS MADE TO MARITIME EMPLOYERS' ASSOCIATION TO MEET TERMS OF SETTLEMENT WITH DOCKWORKERS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister indicate whether or not he has had any communication from the Maritime Employers Association, whose head office is, of course, in Montreal—

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Excuse me, did the hon. member say Maritime?

Mr. Forrestall: The association of shipping companies which looks after the hiring of stevedores and so on. Has the minister had any communication from that association with respect to the federal authority assuming the very substantial liabilities in terms of dollars and cents incurred by that association 18 months ago now in connection with the last labour difficulties and the settlement that was arrived at?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard about this. I will inquire of the department and see whether there was such a communication.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder whether in the course of his inquiries the minister would determine—

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I am not contradicting the hon. member, but is he talking about the Maritime Employers Association of Montreal?

Mr. Hees: That is what he said.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Excuse me, I did not understand aright. There is a request for help; there is no doubt of that.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder whether the minister could indicate how the government intends to react to this request?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I think we are going to try to help, not in terms of granting any money but in terms of perhaps guaranteeing some loans from the bank so that the company can carry out its obligations under the agreement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member might ask a supplementary and then I will call orders of the day.

Mr. Forrestall: I wonder whether the minister would indicate to the House if he has sought very firm advice from the law officers of the Crown as to the procedural capability of the government assuming debts on behalf of private organizations?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we have studied this problem very seriously. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the settlement of the Montreal strike some time ago he will see that we committed ourselves to guaranteeing work for the longshoremen at the port of Montreal. If they wish to reduce the pool of longshoremen, then we accept no financial responsibility, but we have to guarantee loans or money borrowed by the Maritime Employers Association in order to solve this problem.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in respect of the proceedings of the House for today. As hon. members will be aware, there are seven different notices on the order paper for today, and it seems to me it would be useful if the Chair could indicate how we are to proceed. Three notices are in respect of motions that could be debated starting now. One of these motions is in the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), a motion of non-confidence in the government, and the other two are in the names of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), both of which relate to concurrence in the Sixth Report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

We had some discussions about these two motions last Thursday, and I would say, Sir, that in spite of the importance of the housing question which they raise, no one would contend that they should take priority today over the non-confidence motion presented by the Leader of the Official Opposition. That, of course, is for Your Honour to rule under the terms of Standing Order 58(4)(b).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I hear some objections from my friends to the right. My purpose in raising this point is that it seems to me it would be helpful if Your Honour had any suggestion as to when either of those motions respecting housing might be debated, and by "when" I mean on what day or under what order they might be debated. I assume that we shall proceed today with the motion in the name of the Leader of the Opposition.

Apart from those three motions, Sir, there are four which would seem to come up for consideration at 9.45 tonight. Again, I think it would be useful if we knew at this stage how we are to proceed. To begin with, there is a notice of opposition filed by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) under Standing Order 58(4)(a) which in my submission is faulty. It is not a notice of opposition to an entire item, but rather a notice of opposition in respect of $16,999.99 of that vote. The hon. member's motion refers to the salary of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), minus $1, but the figures in the motion make it minus one cent.

An hon. Member: And that's just about right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would point out, Sir, that motions are supposed to make sense, and since the $15,000 salary of the minister, and his $2,000 car allowance, are not in the estimates at all but rather in two separate statutes, it seems to me it is faulty, indeed misleading, to try to import that issue into this motion. Indeed, the item in the supplementary estimates to which opposition is taken in part is not even an administrative item of the department but—

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The time is rapidly moving along, and all that is happening now is that the time for speeches is being cut down. Surely, the time for this point to be raised is tonight when these motions are called, rather than now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to enter caveats now and deal with the matter at 9.45 tonight if that is the wish of the Chair. It did seem to me that these various points should be considered now, so the House would know how we are proceeding today.

An hon. Member: We know how we are proceeding; do you know how you are proceeding?

Mr. Bell: Further to what the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has said, Mr. Speaker, we realize there may be some controversy about this matter but we were hoping everybody in the House would have the same interest in the motion now before us as we have, and rather than lose time by having a long procedural argument at this stage prior to your decision, that could be done tonight after the vote.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall leave it to Your Honour to decide when the matter is to be debated and when Your Honour makes a ruling, but I submit that the notice of opposition is faulty in that it is not a notice of opposition to an entire item.

I also submit that the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Yukon amending the motion put down in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) for the reduction of that item is likewise out of order.

Some hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At the point when the motion of the President of the Treasury Board is made there will be no debate and therefore no amendment is in order. I think that even my friends in the official opposition would like to know how we are to proceed today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has raised two points, the first relating to the possible order of precedence for consideration of motions which are on the order paper in relation to the business of supply. I am sure all hon. members will agree that priority should be given to the motion in the name of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), which is a non-confidence motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has asked a question which may be of interest, but which is not entirely relevant at this particular moment, and that is the question as to when the other two motions standing in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North might be discussed. Assuming these motions were in order they would have to be discussed, debated or considered as supply business on a supply day, but not on this day. That is obvious enough.

I appreciate the other point of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in respect of the motion of the hon. member for Yukon in the form of an amendment to the notice of opposition to vote 20a, but perhaps it would be fair to allow the hon. Leader of the Opposition to proceed with his motion, a caveat having been entered by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, with which I associate myself. I am sure the hon. member for Yukon has some reservations about the procedural acceptability of either or both of these matters, and perhaps this matter can be looked at later this day.

If for any reason the motion in the name of the Leader of the Opposition came to a vote before 9.45 this evening, this might give us an opportunity to look at the procedural question; otherwise, it would be dealt with sometime after ten o'clock this evening.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58—NON-CONFIDENCE MOTION—ALLEGED LOSS TO PUBLIC AS RESULT OF ENERGY POLICY OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition) moved:

That this House has lost confidence in the government due to its incompetent, inconsistent and vacillating energy policy which is bringing economic loss to Canada and hardship to the consuming public.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have half an hour under the rules. The dust was just starting to settle Saturday evening following the two speeches made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau); one on Thursday and one on Friday, when I turned my radio on shortly after six o'clock and heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) reported as having said: "The alliance has some tough problems to face but I do not think it is in danger". It took me a few seconds to realize the minister was talking about NATO and not the alliance between the Liberals and the NDP. But one thing the Prime Minister has certainly guaranteed—and indeed, Sir, has gone out of his way to guarantee—is that the alliance which is the confederation of Canada will certainly have some tough problems to face in the days ahead. I intend to focus on some of these problems today in presenting this motion of non-confidence.

● (1520)

I want to make it clear that my remarks today are directed to the Canadian people. It is not possible, Mr. Speaker, to speak to the government on questions of principles for it has none. Neither is it possible to address the New Democratic Party for its members are in a rather particular position. After the word of a former prime minister of Great Britain, they are in the position of those who have power without the attendant responsibility. In short, this is a completely new form of parliamentary democracy.

[English]

But all that sort of business, aside, Mr. Speaker, nothing is so critical or crucial as the fact that anybody can clearly see where this is leading. The Prime Minister on Thursday last proclaimed the basis for a new national energy policy which was neither his policy—we all know that—nor more important was it a national policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, it was a hoax and a fraud misrepresented to be misunderstood. I say most emphatically that while we believed before last Thursday there was no reason for us to have confidence in this government, we believe it even more strongly today. Sir Charles Dickens created a character called "The Artful Dodger". The name has a contemporary application with a minor modification. I think a writer chronicling developments of the present government could do worse than describe the Prime Minister as "The Artless Dodger". On Friday the Prime Minister went to British Columbia to make a speech. If he intends to keep on making this kind of speech on a weekly basis his office should get in contact with the television networks again and the networks might be induced to pick up this new Canadian game show which could appropriately be entitled "The Baiting Game". If the offending premier of the region should get baited into a fight the Prime Minister would go into a playoff in which he plays off one part of the country against another.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Last Friday the target was the premier of Alberta. The technique was for the Prime Minister to pay tribute to his own foresight and with his impeccable use of language, always eloquent, he said the Premier of Alberta had been caught with his pants down. Well, as to his foresight, the Canadian people realize that the only reason Quebec and the Atlantic provinces are threatened with the oil shortage this winter is that the Prime Minister got caught with his own pants down. Despite years of warning, his government did not extend the pipeline to Montreal. It did not even act to increase storage facilities and build up the supply to a 90-day level as it had been recommended it should do. Surely, it is really strange what the Prime Minister can foresee and what he cannot foresee when it suits his purpose.

In the course of his Thursday explanation of a decision to seek extension of the voluntary freeze on the price of domestic crude, he said that when the freeze was originally set to terminate at the end of January—that is when he announced it in that fashion on September 4—that at that time, according to the Prime Minister's latest scenario, few if any people could have foreseen the sudden rise in international oil prices that would ensue as a result of the Middle East hostilities. That, of course, was a beautifully irrelevant assertion, because that circumstance has nothing to do with the duration of the freeze although it might very well have something to do with the extent of any permissible increase in prices. In fact, the Prime Minister cannot trace back any unexpected world development which should really have changed his commitment announced on September 4. All that has changed has been the Prime Minister's position, and that evidently changed sometime between his television address on November 22 and last Thursday afternoon.

On television he said, "the price freeze in its present form will end in January". Two days prior to the television statement, on November 20, the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) put a question to the Prime Minister about the freeze. In his answer the Prime Minister referred the House to his statement of September 4 to the effect that the government had obtained agreement from the major petroleum companies to accept a voluntary freeze until January 31. The Prime Minister said:

This is the undertaking I gave and this is the undertaking which I believe they——intend to respect.

The companies.

I do not intend to blow my horn about foresight when I say I did not believe the Prime Minister, and therefore could not believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), on any of the umpteen times they said this original commitment would be honoured.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Now, whether or not I trust a statement by the Prime Minister of this country may not be of much importance, but the Prime Minister stressed on Thursday the importance of the development of the energy resources that this country will require in the future. Surely, trust and confidence in prime ministerial statements is important if we are to get on with that job. I know there are some who may assess all this simply as slick politics, and others who, in some warped fashion are saying this is the way to make parliament work. I do not have any sympathy with either point of view because in betraying its word a government without integrity may have purchased a temporary survival in power. I say simply this to those whose concern does not extend to the victims of this particular breach of word,—

● (1530)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —I caution them to think about the victims that the next breach of word may bring.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I ask the House to think about another large number of victims of the policy announced by the Prime Minister, those Canadians who live in Quebec and the Atlantic Provinces. How will these people feel about these policies? How can any prime minister describe an energy policy as a national policy when it divides the country, when it leaves half the country almost out in the cold, at least until 1980?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On Thursday, the Prime Minister said—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: The hon. member had better wait. He may learn something from this.

Mr. Baker: We know him; he won't learn a thing.

Mr. Stanfield: I quote what the Prime Minister said on Thursday:

The Canadian market for oil will no longer be divided in two, one for domestically produced oil and another for imported oil. It will thus be a "one-Canada", not a "two-Canada" oil policy.

That is simply not so, not until 1980, even on the Prime Minister's own statement. We can all agree with the expressed aim of self-sufficiency by the end of the decade. Personally, I have to agree because I have said a number of times that self-sufficiency is desirable. In fact, I think we have it today, except in terms of our ability to distribute the oil.

An hon. Member: You see it differently from where you sit.

Mr. Stanfield: How can the Prime Minister speak about a one Canada policy as though it were some kind of a de facto situation when he says in the same speech:

In moving toward its objective—

That is the objective of self-sufficiency in 1980.

—the government will also wish to maintain a reliable capacity for some continuing export of oil to the United States and a market in Canada for reliable foreign suppliers of oil to us.

Later, he said:

We do not want to cut off our exports and we do not want to reduce imports from reliable suppliers.

In other words, this oil will continue to come to eastern Canada, not at reduced but at world prices, which of course the oil companies will pass on to the consumers, industrial and domestic, in the Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec.

The Prime Minister does not even tell us the size of the proposed pipeline. Of course, he cannot because he does not know, as was indicated by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) today. A question was asked of the minister today and he did not know. The pipeline might carry enough to serve half the eastern market, and the other half of the demand will be met by imported crude which now costs some $3 more than the price of domestic crude in Canada. The proposed pipeline to Montreal will presumably provide something like security of supply to Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. It will not create one market for petroleum in Canada. It will not mean the absence of two prices.

The Prime Minister's statement made in the House on Thursday assures the continuation of two oil policies in the country, the continuation of two markets, with the people of the Atlantic provinces and the province of Quebec continuing to be dependent upon imported crude which the Prime Minister does not want to reduce in volume. That is what the Prime Minister said and that is the policy that all those members from Quebec in the Liberal party applauded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: They will begin to wake up, and when they really wake up they will realize the extent to which they betrayed their own people in the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In the policy announced by the Prime Minister on Thursday, there is no comfort and no concern for Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. The Prime Minister put it rather neatly from his point of view, I thought, on December 4 when, in replying to my colleague, the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates), he said:

I think it is pushing it a bit far and it is a little bit much that now those provincial governments expect the federal taxpayers to bail them out when the sheiks of Araby have increased their prices.

I really have to say this, that the only one whom the Prime Minister is interested in bailing out is himself.

An hon. Member: At any price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: But I would say to the Prime Minister and those Liberal members from Quebec—because there are very few from the Atlantic provinces among them—

An hon. Member: Tell us your policy.

Mr. Stanfield: My policy is one price.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: Try another question.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, this would be enormously funny if it were not so serious for the people they represent over there. I say to the Prime Minister that one thing this so-called national policy does for this country is to divide it, to give an assurance of supply to that half of the country where such an assurance already exists, and to give the back of his hand to the rest. If that is not a two Canada policy, we can only wait to see a better one from the same source.

[Translation]

As a result of this policy, the government has split up the country into two markets, one of which is free and the other closed.

Mr. Pelletier (Sherbrooke): Not true.

Mr. Stanfield: It is true. It is important to say—although we seem to be the only ones in this House who have the frankness and the courage to say it—that the part of the country that has the greater need of a guarantee against energy price discrimination is precisely the one which does not get it, because it has been excluded from the government's plans, from its so-called national policies. In a way, it has been left to fend for itself.

It is a sure thing, Mr. Speaker, that this policy will result in a difficult and trying period for many individuals this winter, a promise of continued discrimination for many years, a proof of increasing inequalities, and a guarantee of economic problems for eastern Canada. It is certain that such is now, and will be in the future, the fate of Newfoundland, the Maritimes, and Quebec, if Parliament supports the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) statement and gives it the appearance of a national energy policy for Canada.

[English]

I am curious to know, Mr. Speaker, how this policy that discriminates against the people of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec can be described properly as national. I am curious to know where the members opposite who come from these provinces stand on this question. Yes, they are laughing, but their laughter is already sounding a little hollow.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) isn't here. I am curious to know where he stands on this because I have always believed his leader learned a great deal from him, but apparently his leader did not learn any geography from him.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: For those who live east of the Ottawa valley it will cost more for home heat, it will cost more to operate automobiles, it will cost more to operate trucks, it will cost more to heat their offices, and will cost more to fuel their industry. Someone says this will be the case everywhere. The Prime Minister promised to keep prices down in the rest of Canada. That is what he indicated he is going to do, but he is going to continue to import high priced, internationally priced oil into the Atlantic provinces and Quebec. This means that not only will that petroleum cost more in absolute terms in those parts of Canada but it will cost more in relative terms, compared with those who live in that part of Canada presently recognized by the Prime Minister and his supporters as being within the boundaries of his national, one-Canada policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am genuinely concerned for eastern Canada, for Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. Those sitting on the Liberal benches opposite, and so far as I know those hon. members to my left who, I thought, were genuinely interested in the problems of low income people and in the problems of regional disparity, do not seem to be aware of the economic implications and the social cost of a policy that abandons the interests of eastern Canada in a matter of serious, vital significance to those provinces.

But I must say, and I am also concerned at this, that while the government appears to have gotten some new lease on life, an extended pardon through the charity of a minority in this House, it also seems to have gotten a new lease on its old arrogance. If anything is worse than the Prime Minister's stated policy it is the rhetoric that he is using to defend it. Not only does his policy divide the country, but his rhetoric will divide it further. He gave proof of that in his performance in Vancouver.

Mr. Hees: What a performance!

Mr. Stanfield: He appears to believe it is in the interests of his national policy in this country to divide the east and the west, and to divide the producing provinces against the rest of the country. This is unquestionably the most serious matter contained in the Prime Minister's policy announcement of last Thursday. But there are other serious omissions as well.

The Prime Minister said on Thursday "it would be in the public interest to facilitate early construction" of the Mackenzie valley pipeline "to move Alaskan gas to United States markets and at the same time to make it possible to move Canadian northern gas to Canadian markets." What does he mean? Does he mean that Canadian gas will move through that pipeline only to Canadian markets? No, he does not. He does not say that. He puts it the other way around. He does not want to say that a significant portion of Canadian gas might have to move to the U.S. market to even begin to interest the Americans in waiting for this project and relying on it. He does not say that because it does not suit his purposes.

He passed off the whole question of native rights and environmental concerns in half a sentence. He neglected to mention that the Americans have been watching our performance on these matters. That is one of the reasons they turned down a Mackenzie valley oil line, and they are well along the way to turning down involvement in a gas line unless we are prepared to show them that we are able and willing to settle this question relating to native rights, and to make the Americans some offer that they cannot refuse. I will be interested to hear and to see how my hon. friends to my left react to this so-called policy. I will be most interested indeed to see their vote of confidence in it.

So far as the proposed Canadian petroleum corporation is concerned, the Prime Minister gave us some platitudinous generalities, and we were told that all would be revealed by the minister in the next session of parliament. Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to the Prime Minister because I am afraid I laughed out loud at that part of his speech. Surely, we must know at least one basic thing about this corporation, and there is no reason why we should not know it now. On what terms will this corporation compete with privately-owned companies? If the government has thought all this through, I would expect some minister to be able to answer that question for us in the course of today's debate.

It is obvious that tossing this project into a speech, without spelling out its basic terms of reference and modus operandi, is bound to have a discouraging effect on private planning to help find the energy resources for the future that, I agree with the Prime Minister, are so important to this country. But we don't even know, Sir, the extent to which this proposed Canadian petroleum corporation will be capitalized. At a time when continuing development is a matter of such concern to the Prime Minister, as well as to the rest of us, it is surely insane for the government to generate further uncertainty in the industry by leaving basic questions like that up in the air.

The Prime Minister's declaration of his national energy policy may exceed the fondest dreams of some, but that policy represents a nightmare for many others, including those provinces for which it offers nothing to alleviate their present difficulties and for which, in the several years ahead, that policy only means further discrimination, increased economic disparity, and further oppressive burdens to bear in the social costs of enduring this policy. Those who support that policy will become the advocates and architects of a genuine two-Canada policy. They will be supporting a movement toward regional disparity such as we have not yet seen, Mr. Speaker. Those who support it will do so that they themselves may survive, whether or not the hopes of many Canadians perish because their interests have been abandoned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It is my earnest belief that we will not have a comprehensive energy policy, a consistent policy—we shall not have any truly national policy based upon consultation and co-operation so long as political expediency rules the judgment of our national government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Today, as the standing orders of this House provide us with the opportunity to do, we are presenting to the House an opportunity to end this rule of expediency and to restore a climate in which national unity is not a political game.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish I had a little more time to deal with those fellows across the floor. I am thinking particularly of the members from Quebec who sold out their province. I do not know exactly why.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: My most charitable assumption is ignorance. Sooner or later, sir, this House must affirm that one Canada in spirit and purpose is more important than one party in power.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for York South. The hon. member for Ontario rises on a point of order.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I wondered if the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would permit a question?

Some hon. Members: No, no!

An hon. Member: Tomorrow morning.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if it could be made clear whether the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) is replying on behalf of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I think we should say yes to that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for York South again but the hon. parliamentary secretary seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if, with unanimous consent of the House, we could extend the time of the Leader of the Opposition so he could explain where he stands on the oil policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This would require the unanimous consent of the House and the hon. member for York South has indeed been recognized. I think I will recognize him again.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, all I can say to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) is that he is no more amusing as a front bench Conservative member than he was as a Liberal member of cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You let him know David.

An hon. Member: He is a sorehead as well as a turncoat.

Mr. Lewis: I just listened to a 30 minute speech by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), most of which was devoted to a defence of the oil corporations of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: There was hardly a word about Canadian oil policy and, indeed, there could not be because I understand that a committee of the Conservative party is now sitting and their policy will not be available for four or five weeks at least, and probably not for four or five years. There are only two ways by which we can have in Canada at the present time one oil price for all Canadians.

An hon. Member: One is to get rid of you.

Mr. Lewis: One is a proposition made by the Leader of the Official Opposition in Vancouver that the price freeze should come off on January 31, and that the price of domestic conventional oil should be raised, not up to the world price but a little bit below the world price. That was his policy. Therefore, if you want to have one policy for Canada, you raise the price of conventional oil produced in this country to all Canadians and everyone in Canada will pay a lot more.

But there is another way by which you can have a one price for all Canadians and that is the way we have suggested, namely that a national petroleum corporation be the agency that buys both domestic and foreign oil and equalize that price, pool it and have the people west of the Ottawa valley pay a little more and people east of the Ottawa valley a lot less.

• (1600)

Mr. Lewis: That is the only way to have one price across Canada that will be fair to all the people of Canada and that will not enrich the international oil corporations which are rich enough.

Step by step, I suggest that the NDP has wrung out of this government an oil policy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —in the direction of Canadian interests.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blenkarn: What about your own policy?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I interject this: the rules allow me only 20 minutes. My colleague, the House leader of our party, asked the spokesman for the Conservative Party whether my time might be extended to 30 minutes and this request was refused. I, therefore, think that those hon. members should do me the courtesy of allowing me to speak and not use up one quarter of my time with silly catcalls.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the House leader of my party knows nothing about any such request, but I will be happy, and I know my colleagues will go along with me, to accord the hon. gentleman the 30 minutes which he wishes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, without trying to spin the argument out, but not wishing to be called one who does not tell the truth, let me say that I proposed very clearly to the official opposition House leader that the leaders of the smaller parties should have 30 minutes, and I was told the answer was no.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to waste time. According to my understanding, the proposition was 30 minutes for both major leaders and for other speeches, after that, 15 minutes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect, that is not correct.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the deal was not for 30 minutes. However, we are generous enough to give the hon. member 30 minutes, if that is what is bothering him. We, however, want to follow the rules around here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is it agreed that the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and the principal spokesman for the Social Credit shall have 30 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that that was asked for before I had started. I might not need 30 minutes. I want to keep within the rules, if given the opportunity. If hon. members will not give me that opportunity I can try to handle that situation, Mr. Speaker.

I was saying that step by step the NDP has wrung out of this government an oil policy in the direction of Canadian interests. I want to emphasize that important differences still remain. However, the policy announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last Thursday is now pointed in the right direction. It is so pointed for the first time since the Tory national oil policy of 1961.

I remind hon. members that early in the year we demanded export controls on oil and petroleum products and, after some time, Canada got them from this government. Months ago we demanded a two-price system so that Canadians would not be gouged with domestically produced oil in the hands of the multinational corporations. We said that the only way to have a two-price system without the multinational corporations getting huge windfalls was by having an export tax. I remind hon. members that it was the NDP spokesmen who made these demands. Eventually, these became the policies of this country.

We set out in motions, as moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) on May 28 and October 25, a number of items to do with a proper and appropriate oil policy which this country should now have. Those items involved a continuation of the price freeze beyond January 31 and a continuation of the export controls. We said we must have an end to the Tory Ottawa Valley line and bring the pipeline to Montreal. We demanded the establishment of a publicly owned national petroleum corporation, with wide powers to engage in exploration, development, production, wholesale distribution and, if necessary, in retail distribution. We demanded a large public involvement in the development of the tar sands.

Last Thursday, stimulated by a desire to remain in office, the Prime Minister of Canada adopted all the policies which we proposed, in a way which is not entirely satisfactory to anyone who thinks about the future of this country,—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —but in a way which creates for Canada a new national oil policy of importance.

According to the newspapers, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said in Vancouver the other night that he was not following NDP policy. He was merely implementing the report on energy policy for Canada, promulgated last June 28. I think it is a pity that his advisers did not draw the Prime Minister's attention to some of the statements in this report. One of the items which he announced in his policy announcement of last Thursday was the building of the pipeline to Montreal; a second item was the establishment of a national petroleum corporation. With regard to the pipeline, page 14 of the policy statement to which he referred in Vancouver says: "To date, the security threat has not appeared serious enough to justify the very costly arrangements of supplying the region east of the Ottawa Valley with western Canadian crude oil." If he had been following the advice of this report, he would have been against the extension of the line to Montreal, and not for it. He was not implementing this report at all, and he knows it.

With respect to the national petroleum corporation, the same report did a balancing act when it said that there were advantages, which it meekly described, to such a publicly owned corporation. Then, on pages 189, 190 and 191 the report goes on practically to frighten everyone who thinks of it as to the disadvantages of a national petroleum corporation. If there were any conclusion implicit in the report, it was a conclusion against the establishment of a publicly-owned national petroleum corporation.

The Prime Minister cannot get away with that statement. Nobody in Canada will believe anything other than that the NDP in this Parliament proposed sensible, positive solutions to some of our problems and that the government of this country, anxious to remain in office, accepted those solutions. I do not know whether the frustration felt by some people is real, or is put on for the purpose of showing strong activity or belligerence. But in either case I suggest, sir, that the frustration apparently felt or simulated by certain members of the House is understandable. I suggest to you that no objective observer of this parliament could fail to recognize the important influence which our party has exercised in important areas of policy. Making this parliament work has been of immense value to Canada and to Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I know there are some people in this House and in the country who think the only role for an opposition is to oppose—recklessly, negatively and destructively. I have always rejected that idea in theory, and I reject it particularly in the case of a minority parliament. I reject this negative, destructive approach. In fact, the only kind of opposition in this sort of parliament which makes any sense from the viewpoint of the interest of Canada is a constructive and positive kind. I say that the Prime Minister's statement last Thursday was dramatic evidence of the value to Canadians of such a policy of making positive suggestions, and, by the nature of the present parliament, having them adopted even though only in part. This is what has been done since January 4, and this is what has been of value to the country.

We are under no illusions that Canada has yet what we would call an adequate petroleum policy, let alone an adequate energy policy. We know perfectly well that as a result of the behaviour of the federal Conservative and Liberal governments, and of the Social Credit and Conservative governments of Alberta in particular, our resources of oil and gas have been sold out to the multinational corporations, with the result that it is the corporations which have been allowed to set priorities, dominate the oil supply situation and manipulate prices. And as long as the multinationals continue to play a dominant role in the production and distribution of Canada's energy supplies, so long will we continue to lack an adequate energy policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I say there is absolutely no excuse for allowing the multinationals to increase their prices for domestically-produced oil after January 31, and indeed, after March 31, or, indeed, at any time when Canadians use Canadian oil produced without an increase in the cost of production. I say to the Prime Minister no matter how strong the pressures from the corporations or from certain short-sighted provinces, the government, this parliament and the people of Canada must insist that the oil and gas resources which belong to the people should be available at reasonable prices, and that those prices should not be increased unless such an increase is justified by an increase in the cost of production. I really cannot understand why certain members of this House, for whose personal decency I have very great respect, are opposing the continuation of the price freeze after January 31 and, by doing so, are demanding that the multinational corporations be given an opportunity to make hundreds of millions of dollars in windfall profits—profits which they do not need and do not deserve.

I remind hon. members that the corporations have already this year received an increase per barrel of 95 cents. This means billions of dollars added to the value of their reserves, not to speak of hundreds of billions added to their profits. Already, in the first nine months of 1973, Imperial Oil has shown increased profits, as compared with the same period of 1972, amounting to 46 per cent. The increase of Gulf's profits amounts to 45 per cent. How much more are they to be entitled to gouge out of the Canadian people to fill their private coffers? And remember that 86 per cent of those profits do not remain in this country but go south to the parent corporations of these multinational firms.

We insist, therefore, that the decision to continue the price freeze is right, and that it deserves the support of all Canadians who have in mind the welfare of their country and who are not misled into seeking to defend the power and the profits of the multinational corporations.

I want to say that in my view the setting up of a publicly-owned national petroleum corporation is long overdue. The Prime Minister went out of his way to emphasize that he did not intend to interfere with the private sector and that Canada would continue to welcome foreign investment. I want to say on behalf of my colleagues that, as far as our policy is concerned and as far as the interests of Canada are concerned, we believe the time has come for massive public intervention in the petroleum industry of Canada. The time for action to curb the power of the multinational corporations in this country is overdue. This is why we are so anxious about the way in which Canada's tar sands are to be developed. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians ought to learn a lesson from what happened 12 to 15 years ago, when various governments sold out our conventional oil resources to the multinational corporations. The government in existence in 1961—it happened to be a Tory government—not only acquiesced in the sell-out, but accepted the wishes of the corporations and divided Canada into two markets and began the policy which has now resulted in difficulties for Quebec and the Atlantic provinces about which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke so eloquently this afternoon.

I suggest to you, sir, that Canadians, members of this House, and, particularly, the Government of Canada ought to learn a lesson from what has happened as a result of selling out our conventional energy sources to the corporations. Having been in their power, under their domination as to supply and price for all these years, and seeing, now, the consequences of that situation, we ought to determine as a nation that the new and large oil reserves to be found in the tar sands are developed as a public utility under public control and massive public ownership for the benefit of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I spent a day visiting the Athabasca tar sands in Alberta last Thursday and I heard, particularly, from certain people representing Syncrude when our caucus met in Edmonton. At the request of the companies, the caucus met in private; neither visitors nor the press were there. I have learned, in the last little while, something that I did not know before, though perhaps others did.

An hon. Member: A one day expert!

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) knows. I am sure he does. He knows everything about the oil corporations. And he is satisfied with the limits of that knowledge. I did not know that Syncrude was merely a conglomeration of four multinational corporations, namely Imperial, Gulf, Atlantic Richfield and City Services, which is—

● (1620)

Mr. Benjamin: A fine Canadian company.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, a fine Canadian company. I assumed that Syncrude was a company, since it was making all these noises and demands to be exempted from export controls, price controls, export tax and so on. I assumed it was a company that would do work and make profits. I assumed that, particularly since I heard the government and premier of Alberta tell the people of that province and of Canada that he had made a marvellous deal with Syncrude, because after some years the government of Alberta would get 50 per cent of the profits that Syncrude made.

Let me tell the House, Mr. Speaker, that that is not so. I have been informed that Syncrude is not going to make any profits; it is merely a contracting firm. It will do the work and at the end of every period, whether it be the end of a week, a month or three months, it will present these four corporations that make up this conglomeration with a bill. Thirty per cent of its expenses will go to Imperial, 30 per cent will go to Gulf, 30 per cent will go to Atlantic Richfield and 10 per cent to City Services. Then these four companies will pay Syncrude the amount of moneys that have been expended during that period, but the income of Syncrude will be zero. It will have expended x dollars and it will get x dollars from these four companies, but will have zero income.

As synthetic crude is produced from the tar sands, what will Syncrude do? It will put 30 per cent of the bitumen in tanks for Imperail, 30 per cent in tanks for Gulf, 30 per cent in tanks for Atlantic Richfield and 10 per cent in tanks for City Services. God alone knows who is going to make the profit or how it will be calculated. But these companies will have the right to handle the synthetic crude, to sell it anywhere they wish and at any price they like. If ever I have learned of determined attempt by four multinationals to hold Canada by the throat over new and important oil reserves, this Syncrude project is that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: The Syncrude consortium has asked for various exemptions from the government. First, they asked that those exemptions be given them by November 16. When they did not come forth, they extended the time by one month to December 16. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the government is chicken enough to make these concessions to Syncrude, it will betray the interests of this country for generations to come.

As to the Mackenzie gas pipeline, I appreciate that a gas pipeline down the Mackenzie valley does not present the same ecological or environmental danger as an oil pipeline. But I still make two points. First, we ought not under any circumstances agree to a gas pipeline down from the Mackenzie delta unless there is an absolute assurance that Canadian gas will go to Canadian consumers and not be exported to the United States. Second, in his speech the Prime Minister said that the pipeline should be built if it did not "require the lowering of environmental standards or the neglect of Indian rights and interests".

Past government performance with respect to Indian rights and interests does not give one any reassurance that these words of the Prime Minister will become action. If the Mackenzie valley gas pipeline is necessary now to meet Canadian needs—and we said in our resolution in Vancouver last July that that is the time when the building of a pipeline should be considered—then there must be, not any wishy-washy guarantee but an absolute guarantee that Canadian gas from the Canadian north will be available to Canadian consumers on a priority basis that will not be broken either by the National Energy Board or by any other agency of this government.

An hon. Member: Or by the multinational corporations.

Mr. Lewis: Or by the multinational corporations. I did not mention them since any assurance given by them would not be worth the paper it was written on. The fact is that over the last number of months we have, as I have already said, had an influence upon this government to bring forward policies in the area of petroleum and petroleum products which now point us in the right direction. Whether they will in fact turn out to be entirely beneficial remains to be seen. But one thing I do know is that the multinational corporations, and governments and parties which support and defend them, have to be fought by the people of Canada. The people of Canada must take control of our future energy resources in this country without being enslaved by agreements, contracts, undertakings and promises which place the Canadian people in a straitjacket of supply, with dangerous results as to price.

This is the policy that we have put before the government in some positive detail, and this is the policy which, to some extent at least, the government has accepted. But like all Canadians, we in the New Democratic Party will watch the development of the policy announced last Thursday in action. The government has adopted policies which we have proposed and our vote tonight will be governed by that fact.

I want to say to the members of this House that we emphasize and recognize the importance of energy policy, not only for today but for future generations in this country. We will continue to develop as best we can positive policy suggestions, not only in the realm of petroleum but in the realm of other energy sources, in the hope that this parliament and the country may at last have a national energy policy that will protect the interests of future generations as well as the needs of Canadians today.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the opposition motion against the government is clear enough:

That this House has lost confidence in the government due to its incompetent, inconsistent and vacillating energy policy which is bringing economic loss to Canada and hardship to the consuming public.

The content of this opposition motion is true. But at the same time I would like to see what the Progressive Conservative party has to suggest to replace the current policy. It is all right to hear them say: It is incompetent, inconsistent and vacillating. But they should suggest an alternative, we should know where the Progressive Conservatives would lead us.

We know that the government does not always tell the truth about Canada's oil situation. For instance, a minister says one thing and another the contrary. The same minister contradicts himself from one day to another. One day we are told by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that the oil shortfall in the east will reach a daily maximum of 200,000 barrels. The next day he said that 60,000 barrels could be shipped by trucks and trains from Sarnia to Montreal. Our transportation capacity from Toronto to Montreal is estimated at 80,000 barrels a day by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand). He told us that an additional 80,000 barrels could be shipped from west to east through the Panama Canal.

We know that the Come-by-Chance refinery in Newfoundland can supply 100,000 barrels a day which would be shipped by tankers. Two days later we are told by the minister: We cannot ship this oil to Montreal because all storing facilities are full. But he added that later in the winter space will be available because certain storing facilities will be empty. But this will be winter time, and we will not be able to transport this oil. Mr. Speaker, if we can now ship oil, why do we let people freeze? Why do we let Canadians freeze if the oil is already in Come-by-Chance?

Mr. Speaker, we Social Crediters claim that there will be no oil shortage. But they frighten people by saying: We will lack heating oil and gasoline.

I read recently in Le Soleil of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean:

If it appears in some eastern parts that there is already a lack of petroleum products, if is perhaps because the government statements frightened the people who reacted by buying exceptional quantities of oil and gasoline to be ready to face a serious crisis.

A distributor from here, Mr. Gauthier, not our hon. member, but Mr. Gauthier from Chicoutimi, and executive of A. E. Gauthier and Golden Eagle Canada Limited, said on November 30, and I quote:

Some customers would have had supplementary tanks installed which can contain up to 4,000 gallons, much more than the winter consumption of a family.

This is the practice now. Mr. Speaker, we maintain that the oils crisis, is used to frighten people and, as they say bluntly in the United States, it is designed to prepare an economic crisis for 1974 and to condition people to accept it. We already feel the effects of this crisis in Canada. We are told that there is a lack of iron and steel. We ask for increases, for permission to increase the price of milk, because the cost of transport had increased, as energy costs more.

Mr. Speaker, the economic crisis policy has already started in Japan. After Japan, it will be the United States and then Canada. It is funny, sometimes, I ask myself questions.

How come we do not enough oil in Canada, in the western countries, according to the minister, and we do not hear about the oil crisis in Russia, China, Cuba and Algeria? One cannot go on making fun of the population.

A Japanese economist said and I quote an article from the Montréal-Matin of November 18, 1973:

The economy of Japan and other developed countries is heading for self-destruction, for a catastrophy in which the modern civilization will sink.

The frenzied race for industrial development rapidly pushes the world toward a disaster as radical as were then the fall of the Roman Empire and the Middle Age. We are coming the end of the modern era.

This pessimistic point of view is that of professor Haruo Naniwada of Wadsa University in Tokyo, and was published in an article of the "Keizal Orai" publication, economic trends of November, under the title "Let us be ready for the economic catastrophy".

This article was published in November 1973 not in 1914. In view of the artificial shortage of oil, let us be ready because we are not adapting financial means to our physical possibilities, to an economic crisis that will be the artificial shortage of oil.

I quote:

The Japanese economy is the most fragile, according to the professor, who is comparing its high rate of industrial development with the case of a cyclist: if he stops pedalling, he falls.

Mr. Speaker, this is what the minister is doing now; he pedals, and he has to pedal faster because problems are coming more quickly. And I quote the article:

The Japanese Cassandra mentions that the salary increases accelerate every year in Japan: it has gone from 10 per cent in 1966 to more than 20 per cent this year.

In 1973.

In the meantime, company debts have reached unbelievable proportions: the precentage ratio of real funds to borrowed capital is 16 to only one per cent.

All Japanese businesses are knee-deep in debt . . .

Like us, in Canada.

. . . writes the professor, which means that they must earn not only for themselves but also for the banks which supply them with funds. If they fail to manage, they go bankrupt. They are condemned to a mad race or death.

Mr. Speaker, that is what the present government suggests to us: Let us race ever faster, otherwise we die. But, eventually, Mr. Speaker, it is bound to happen. We will die sitting on top of a wealth of products. There is not a single Canadian, a single member of Parliament, not even the leader of the official opposition, who really believes in a shortage of oil in Canada.

That we should adopt a uniform oil policy, we agree. Prices must be the same from east to west. If transport subsidies have to be given, let it be so; that the people in eastern Canada do not have to pay more for oil than those in the west.

Mr. Speaker, let us be honest and place the blame where it lies. When we, in the east, opposed the construction of a pipeline, it was not Alberta's fault but our own: we were paying less from Venezuelan oil. Today, we are told that we must purchase oil from Alberta. Mr. Speaker, we buy hardly any gas from the Arabs.

Most of the oil that we bought came from Venezuela. Once again, it is the same and Venezuela is ready to sell us more oil than ever before. Newfoundland could also provide some oil, but the minister says: Freeze because we have too much oil. We have no transportation means in 1973.

If the government had been farsighted and able to face its responsibilities, we would not now be in this situation, which is not disastrous, but artificial, and which was entirely created by the financial control, that is, for what counts, money and credit control. Some people may laugh when we Social Crediters say—yes it really is funny—say: Let us make financially possible what is physically practical. We have all the material, the manpower, the engineers and the wealth to discover and develop our natural resources. Why not use the Bank of Canada to finance, to make financially possible what we are physically capable of doing? Mr. Speaker, this would be a good and reasonable solution, one which would stop the government from tabling bills that have but one objective, that is to annoy and frighten Canadians by saying that the east will not have enough oil, that the west and central Canada will not have enough oil either. And so it goes in all other matters. My hon. colleague from Abitibi (M. Laprise) told me last week that during the great depression of 1929 to 1939, we had to starve to death while we had tons of wheat and now, we have to freeze, with oil wells so numerous that we have no use for them.

Mr. Speaker, I think a government led by intelligent and responsible people could do better.

Now, as to what the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) declared, his objective is quite simple: to avoid the elections. They have no confidence in the government's proposals but they hope they will keep their seats tonight when the vote has been taken. Because they worry about one think: to save their seats. Let's save our skin, wolves are coming! That is why they are consistently proposing to abolish multinational corporations. If we try to establish a national corporation the result will be the same.

That happened in almost all countries in the world where governments took over private industries. That operation often costs two, three and even ten times more than the normal operation of private industry. I think it is possible for a really private corporation and not a monopoly, where individual initiative is respected, to develop and to expand and by that time, we will be in a position to say that we have a true Canadian government for all Canadians.

Tonight we will vote on the motion. What will be our position? A short time ago I listened to the remarks of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as well as those of the Leader of the New Democratic Party. Other members will also have the floor. The minister will have a chance to address the House in a few minutes and I hope he will not only say: we are facing home heating oil shortages. I hope he will not tell us as the university professor in Japan: Buy yourself a bicycle and start pedaling.

[Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue).]

Mr. Speaker, we will listen to what the people have to say. Some of my colleagues will also comment on that issue and when the division will take place tonight we will vote without anticipating an early election. It is all the same for us. What we want is to get effective results for the Canadian people. What we want is that the government put finance at the disposal of all Canadian men, women and children, and not at the disposal of oil corporations and finance companies. Finance must be at the disposal of each Canadian family and each individual so that he can feel at home in Canada, our own country.

[English]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks I should like to deal with a number of points raised in previous speeches, particularly three points of a substantive character raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in his speech and one of the points on which he coincided with the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis). In the course of his speech, it seemed to me the Leader of the Opposition touched upon really three points of substance, three energy issues of interest, although in all of them, with the possible exception of one, he failed to indicate, as he has for the past months, what exactly his party's policy would be. The three particular questions are: first, that of the price of oil in the Canadian market; second, the Mackenzie Valley pipeline and, third, the National Petroleum Corporation.

The Leader of the Opposition devoted the lion's share, of his speech, however, to talking about the pricing issue and raised particular criticism about the present situation where we have been able to sustain a freeze on crude oil prices from Canadian sources since September 4 and the remarks of the Prime Minister in which he indicated we would seek to extend that until the end of the winter season. I recall that at the time this proposal was put forward by the government, the friends of the hon. gentleman in Alberta, the provincial government there, referred to that action to freeze prices as being one of the most discriminatory actions against a single province in the whole of confederation. Yet, we heard the Leader of the Opposition talking today as though he were in favour of restraining prices so that Canadian consumers would not this winter have to bear the same impact as would be borne by people in other nations of the world. In effect, the hon. gentleman said that he was in favour of a one-price system, but he did not say what kind of a one-price system or by what means or mechanism he would carry it out. The hon. gentleman did not say so today.

He has said elsewhere that the one price system would in effect be a system of a higher prices for everybody, to be achieved by escalating the price of Canadian crude oil by a staged phasing up to the price of the same product in Montreal. The hon. gentleman said that he has found no discernible reason for the government's departure from the reason set out by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and myself in the early fall with regard to attempting to arrive at a single Canadian price based on Montreal. But the hon. gentleman overlooks the fact that between the enunciation of that particular policy and the present time a very significant and fundamental fact has occurred with regard to international pricing, that is that because of political action, an internationally equivalent price for Canadians will be raised by about $1.50 for crude.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) wish to rise on a point of order?

Mr. Stanfield: My point of order is that I said that the amount of the advance of the price had nothing to do with the duration of the freeze, but might very well affect the amount of any price increase that would be appropriate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is an interesting point of order, and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition has some supporters who would be glad to elucidate his position further, but the fact of the matter is that the hon. gentleman was speaking of a one price system, a higher price for all Canadians. He made a spirited speech in which he said that he was against a two level price system, he was against a system which would have left Canadians in the eastern part of the country paying higher prices than those in the western part. If the hon. gentleman meant what he said in Vancouver, he was talking about just such a system—a system whereby over a period of time there would be disparity, albeit a reducing disparity, between the two prices.

I think it is fair enough to contrast the position of the Leader of the Opposition with that of the government, taken as a result of a very substantial increase in prices. The position was taken by the government because of widespread opposition expressed not just by members who sit behind me but also by provincial leaders, including the minister of energy in Ontario, against substantial increases in oil prices in the western part of the country, price increases which, as I said earlier in the question period, have not been related to any cost increases in this part of the country. We propose to take this particular question to the federal-provincial conference to find some means whereby a higher price for the purpose of bringing on higher cost oil resources can be reconciled with the wish of Canadians generally not to pay the high international prices. I do not pretend for a minute that it will be easy to achieve. I do not pretend for a minute that, if we are to have a single price in Canada, there may not be an element of some subsidization one way or the other on the part of Canadians.

When the hon. gentleman put a question to me last Friday about having a single price borne by all Canadians, bearing in mind the fact of higher prices due to overseas oil, I assumed immediately that he was adopting the proposal of cross-subsidization, additional proceeds to be gained from a substantial inventory increase, an increase in the value of inventory in western Canada, which should be provided for the benefit of eastern Canadians. The hon. gentleman was quick to rise to his feet to say that that was not his intention, that he was talking about the general taxpayer in some way subsidizing the price throughout Canada. I was disappointed to note today that, while that is his concept apparently to replace the previous one of a higher price for everybody, he did not take the opportunity to make it clear that that is his position.

Mr. Trudeau: He does not know. He has no position.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The second point to which the hon. gentleman referred was the Mackenzie Valley gasline. I took some care to note down a phrase of the hon. gentleman's, and I would be interested to see it reappear in Hansard. It reads: "We must make the Americans an offer they cannot refuse". This was said in reference to the previous discussions which had taken place with regard to the Mackenzie Valley oil pipeline in which the government had indicated the same conditions that the Prime Minister indicated in his speech on Thursday afternoon, namely, that any decision with regard to that line must, in the first place, respect the regulatory obligations which have been imposed by parliament, respect environmental considerations and, above all, respect the rights of the native people in the valley.

With regard to the Mackenzie Valley gasline, particularly with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), I would have to say that the question for Canadians to answer is whether in this decade we should take the opportunity which the American demand for American gas from Alaska offers, the opportunity which the expenditure to bring that gas up the Mackenzie Valley and through Canada offers, in order to construct a conduit which can also be in position to bring Canadian gas up the Mackenzie Valley. Members of the consortium—and their judgment in this regard will have to be scrutinized in due course by the National Energy Board—have taken the position that a project of this kind has been priced at around $5 billion, and that it would involve the requirement to have both gas from the Prudhoe Bay source and gas from the Canadian Mackenzie Delta.

At this point in time I think one would have to say, based on the estimates of the National Energy Board, that there is no need now for gas in Canada, and indeed until the point when the western Canadian sedimentary basin becomes further depleted there will not be an immediate need for the very substantial throughput of Canadian gas which can go through the line. The need for Canadian gas from the Mackenzie Valley will build up slowly over a period of time. I think that the critical question now is whether we should, as a country, decide to permit the building of a pipeline, permit Alaska gas to cross our territory in conjunction with Canadian gas, and enter into arrangements for a period of time to export some part of the production of the Mackenzie Valley to the United States, subject always to the obligation that as the Canadian demand increases, only gas surplus to Canadian requirements would be available for export.

Mr. Stanfield: Now, you are being honest.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The third of the points raised by the hon. gentleman was with regard to the national petroleum corporation. I must say that the remarks made by the hon. gentleman could not have been more similar to those of spokesmen for the oil industry in western Canada—rather as if the two of them had had the same writers. For example, I refer to a report from the Canadian Press in Calgary quoting Mr. Arne Nielsen, an oilman very able in the exploration field, who said:

> The proposed national petroleum corporation is unlikely to succeed in oil and gas exploration off the east coast or other areas of Canada.

Why is that so? Why must it necessarily fail? What evidence is there that national petroleum corporations are less successful?

Mr. Yewchuk: Mostly because you will be running it.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) might know something about operations in this field. He might know that the French government has been operating in the province of Alberta through its creation, ERAP, through the Canadian company, Aquitaine, and has been one of the most successful searchers for natural gas in that province.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman may know that the British Petroleum Corporation, which is 50 per cent owned by the British government, has had similar success, not only in Canada but elsewhere in the world. Indeed, one of the spokesmen of the Canadian oil industry—he should have known better because he was a former employee of the French company—was at the big find off the coast of Labrador. The EastCan find involved as participants the second of the French nationally owned companies, The Compagnie Française de Pétrole, through its subsidiary Total, and the Italian national oil company through another of its subsidiaries. I would say the position taken by the industry and by the Leader of the Opposition that this is going to be a discouragement to private operations in Canada—

• (1700)

Mr. Stanfield: It depends on the conditions.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. gentleman says that this would discourage private planning. Why is it, Mr. Speaker, by the lights of these gentlemen, that foreign governments through their national petroleum companies can operate in Canada, but Canadians themselves should not be able to carry out the same operations?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: It is because you never had the initiative to go ahead and do it. That is the whole bloody problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Bawden: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to permit a question at the end of my remarks. The substantial point made in the Prime Minister's speech on Thursday last was above all the objective, as a matter of national policy, to develop a greater reliance by the Canadian community generally on domestically produced sources of oil. And in the eight to ten years to come, as these various changes are made in our policy, it will be of the utmost importance to guide the energy policy of the country in such a way as to make sure that that objective can be met.

I think there would be general agreement in Canada not only that the Canadian economy should rely on domestically produced sources for this purpose but that we should not again be put in the situation, so far as we can avoid it, of relying on foreign sources which could be subject to interruption for political reasons. Indeed, the process is already under way to bring about a change in this particular policy. In the province of Ontario, for example, where hitherto a significant proportion of our home heating oil market relied on imported production from overseas, there are now refinery facilities under construction which, within a period of several years, will enable the refining industry in the province, dependent on western Canadian feed stock, to handle the demand of all our home heating oil market in Ontario.

We have proceeded to hold discussions with the province of Quebec and also with the Interprovincial Pipe Line Company on the commencement, within a short period of time, of an extension of the Interprovincial pipeline either by way of Sault Ste. Marie or from Sarnia in order to provide some part of the feed stock for the Montreal refineries from Canadian sources.

We have talked about the possibility of building into that line not only some part of the feed stock from Canadian sources but also a greater capacity so that in emergency circumstances, such as we have at the present time, we would be in a position to deliver larger supplies of Canadian produced oil not only into the Montreal market, but with the possibility of reversibility through the Portland Pipeline of being able to deliver some of that oil to the Atlantic coast as well.

We are in the process of seeing what at one time was stated to be impossible by some of the operators in the business, namely, the substantial shipment of oil through Trans Mountain pipeline and by way of the port of Vancouver through the Panama Canal to east coast ports, and by gradual displacement, because of the Alyeska pipeline, of Canadian crude oil from the Puget Sound market, there should be a greater capability for Canadian oil to meet the demands of the Atlantic coast market in time of emergency.

One of the major questions raised with regard to greater reliance on Canadian sources has been that of the ambitions of at least three of the eastern provinces, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, to develop superport facilities and then, by means of large pipeline systems, to bring oil from the Atlantic coast into the Montreal refinery market. There are really two ways to look at this question.

The first is that from the standpoint of security of supply such a proposal could result not only in enhancing the degree of reliance on offshore oil but, in some circumstances at least, it could lead to greater insecurity of supply. However, there is an advantage to it in the sense that with the very large crude carriers, and the economies of scale which they offer, it would be possible to deliver into the Montreal market with a pipeline either from the lower St. Lawrence or from Lorneville or Canso. There are these three choices—the lower St. Lawrence, the St. John Deep and the Canso port. This is going to be a difficult regional and national decision to make as to which of the three should be the best port for the purposes of a pipeline connection to Montreal.

Of course, there will be a federal-provincial conference held toward the end of January and this, it seems to me, is one of the places in which this particular question should be very fully discussed in order to secure the views of the eastern provinces so that we can decide in turn, in the light of the economic and environmental factors, on the best manner of planning our superport policy for the coming years.

One aspect of the superport policy that I should refer to—incidentally some of the difficulties have now become apparent in relation to the refinery at Come-by-Chance—is that we are talking about substantial superport capacity for the re-export of petroleum products to the American market, following the importation of the crude oil to the Canadian refineries. The hazards of such a policy, although it has the advantage of being one of industrial expansion, arise from the uncertainties of foreign governments abroad. First, there is the uncertainty that of course Canada is facing now in the interruption of crude supplies, and second, there is the uncertainty associated with the evolution of American policy and the decision of the United States to become less dependent on offshore oil.

Some of the very difficult decisions to be undertaken in relation to the development of any major refinery complex depend on the re-export market, and these are questions that will have to be dealt with in the very near future, we hope to the satisfaction of the eastern provinces, even though there may be difficulties for the federal government. Until a substantial capacity can be developed within the Canadian production system, it is clear that some part at least of our production of refined products in eastern Canada must continue to be founded on the importation of offshore oil. This of course involves us in the continued concern about whether or not, for political, or even for economic reasons, from time to time that crude oil supply might be interrupted by a foreign government.

In the past, the Canadian market has been protected by the major international companies which, as part of their side of the bargain of being involved in the world oil business, have provided protection to Canadian refiners, and therefore to Canadian consumers. But one thing which has become clear from the current crisis is that the major companies are no longer in a position to do so. Indeed, the principal determinant in the question of crude oil supply will be the foreign states themselves. It is under these circumstances that I have specifically proposed the national petroleum corporation as the state trading agency to enter into discussions with certain of our offshore suppliers, Venezuela, Iran and Nigeria, for the purpose of attempting to secure for the Canadian market supplies of oil over a period of time, which would not be subject to interruption for political or economic reasons.

Of course there can always be evolutions in the policies of overseas states. I think this is one of the reasons why, as part of the policy of the Canadian government, we should seek, by other policies which are open to us with respect to those particular countries to build in a like consideration from them; in other words, to build in for them an incentive to continue to take Canadian products, to continue to take Canadian technology of which they could be assured of security of supply.

There will be a period of time either because the Atlantic east coast fields, have not come into production or because we will not be able to attain the level of production which would enable us to look after the Atlantic market from western Canada, when we are going to be dependent on international supply. In those circumstances, the best opportunity seems to be by government to government agreement, through the agency of a national petroleum corporation, to try to protect our supplies in this particular way.

One word with regard to the Atlantic east coast, Mr. Speaker, because if one were given the opportunity for one major exploration success anywhere in Canada this afternoon, I think most people in the petroleum business would call for a significant success in the Atlantic east coast, not only from the standpoint of important industrial development in the region but also from the standpoint of security of supply to ensure to Canadians in the eastern part of the country the same opportunity to be supplied with petroleum and natural gas from resources under the domestic sovereignty of Canada rather than having similar supplies coming from abroad.

Mr. Bawden: When do we get the regulations?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The problem with regard to the Atlantic east coast offshore is that there is a very considerable exploration effort there. There has been very considerable exploration effort there whether or not there have been changes in the regulations, and the concern expressed by the private industry has really been one not so much about the legal regime but one with regard to the relative success at the present time. Over 80 holes have been drilled with rather disappointing experience in the Grand Banks, some hope in the Labrador shelf and modest success in the Scotia shelf. With the drilling experience in the last year, we must not be too sanguine about the opportunities of at least the offshore in the more temperate zone being available to assist us in this regard, but we should look for continued exploration to define so far as possible the petroleum potential of that particular area.

With regard to our energy uses, and this was a discussion which was much set out in the proposals of the Energy Policy Analysis Phase I which was made public in June, there has been a proposal that over a longer period of time there should be a substantial shift at least in statically generated electricity from petroleum or hydrocarbons to electricity, and indeed from electricity generated from hydrocarbons to hydropower and also to nuclear power. Both from the standpoint of security of supply and the standpoint of cost control, and relatively speaking from the standpoint of environment, it is preferable to have hydropower and nuclear power to power founded upon natural gas or petroleum.

This has been at the background of the federal policy; in the first place to develop to its present degree of substantial success the CANDU nuclear system, and second, to adopt as a matter of national policy a program to encourage individual provinces to get into the nuclear field by an incentive of financial assistance given to each of the provinces. Therefore, we have had in co-operation with Ontario Hydro the success in the development of CANDU and financing of two units at the Pickering station. We have the construction of the Gentilly II plant in Quebec with hydro Quebec, and we are hopeful that the Atlantic market may soon have the opportunity of developing a nuclear reactor for power purposes with interconnection of New Brunswick with eastern Quebec and Nova Scotia for the purpose of displacing any further reliance on oil for further electrical capacity in that area. We have under study the development of a cable link with Prince Edward Island, which would enable that province to look into this regional need and have greater assurance of supply coming from participation in a larger system.

The remarks of the Leader of the Opposition are a good introduction for the next point because that is a suggestion of a link between Newfoundland and Labrador, not a link as has been suggested by way of a tunnel but rather a transmission link to bring the electric power development on the lower Churchill River onto the island of Newfoundland for the purpose of displacing the electrical capacity there which is now substantially founded upon bunker oil.

In Ontario and Quebec you have two strong highly sophisticated power systems with interconnections between the two and with some interconnection to the state of New York. In Quebec, there is a substantial system connecting with the province of New Brunswick in the Eel River station. There have been indications here—and I think this is a matter for early study and discussion with the affected provinces—about the advantage of putting into effect a strong intertie with all the eastern Canadian provinces between Quebec and Ontario as well as the four Atlantic provinces to take advantage of the different peak periods within the systems of the two and at the same time to offer the greater security advantages which come from having a closely integrated system.

The problem, as so often happens, in our country and occurring further west, is the great expanse of the Canadian shield north of Lake Superior that the current system of technology makes less economic an interconnection between the substantial hydro resources of Manitoba and the heavy power demand of southern Ontario. Manitoba Hydro, with federal assistance, has developed substantial expertise—I think one could describe it as world leadership—in direct current transmission technology. It is this which has made it possible to bring the hydro resources of the Nelson River down to the southern part of the province and make it available for use in Manitoba, in northwest Ontario, for interconnection with Saskatchewan and for export to the United States.

A national policy would very naturally favour some means of a closer intertie not only with northwest Ontario but with southern Ontario as well so that the power demands of that area could be satisfied from these Canadian sources. Indeed, if an economic means can be found of transmitting this power to the southern Ontario market, this should be a priority. As between the choice, as the premier of Manitoba has said, of developing at an early date non-replaceable fossil fuels or hydropower, the preference would be in favour of the latter if we can develop technology which makes it economic to deliver Manitoba Hydro to the southern Ontario market.

In the absence of that, the principal source of power assistance both for a province like Ontario or one like New Brunswick which is approaching the same situation, has come in the form of the development of the Candu reactor. Behind this particular development of the Candu reactor with the development of Canadian technology, lies the important question as to the future development of Canadian uranium. We are now witnessing the end of a period of depression in the industry, a period of depression resulting from world oversupply in recent years, in part contributed to by the relative failure of other nuclear power systems to come into widespread use. We are seeing a revival of the exploration interest in Canada and the revival on the part of foreign producers to acquire Canadian uranium.

In the next session of parliament we should take steps to convert into legislation the 1970-71 policy statement of this government which would ensure Canadian ownership and participation in this particular industry. We are at the point where we can avoid some of the problems which have arisen in the petroleum industry by taking legislative steps now to ensure that when these resources develop, as they are certain to develop in Canada in the years to come, they are substantially under Canadian control.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) I should say that we did not receive the "blues" yet. I need the help of the leaders of all parties to know if there was a special arrangement made or if it is agreed that all hon. members who wish to speak shall have 15 minutes. Was it agreed?

Mr. Nielsen: No, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is 20 minutes.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the key words in the motion proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) today are, "incompetent, inconsistent and . . . economic loss to Canada". I wish to address my remarks to those three phrases, and deal in passing with the remarks of the leader of the NDP as well as those of the spokesman for the government, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

One would think, after hearing the discussion today, that all the events of the last four months had been washed away. All spring we were told in the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, "Wait until the report on energy policy comes out; then we will sit down and discuss these matters with the provinces, with industry and with opposition parties and, working together, evolve a national energy and resource policy."

This understanding broke apart, and all this sweetness, light and co-operative effort for achieving policy died when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) came to this House on September 4 and issued that phony statement about controlling prices in Canada for consumers. At that time I referred to the statement as a gaffe, as a mistake, as a boob; because the facts were self-evident. You cannot control the rising tide. The posturing of the Prime Minister in the special session of Parliament called to deal with railway matters was designed to head off the loud voices raised across Canada about rising prices. The NDP, which had been partners in this undeclared marriage with the Liberals, were among those who raised their voices. They always follow the crowd. The Prime Minister, thinking only how to head off a negative vote in that special session, introduced the proposals of September 4.

Among those proposals was a series coming from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Suddenly, there was a call from the Prime Minister's office, asking the minister to prepare ways in which prices might be kept down in the energy field. Without consulting the people in the government who were knowledgeable, and without consulting the National Energy Board or the industry, the people in the government called on their political friends in the Liberal party and in other parties for advice. At that time there was a popular call for a two-price system. The government did not know how it would work, but they announced it. At that time controlled prices were popular; so, the government announced that.

From that time, from September 4, the minister, who worked hard to learn about the ins and outs of his department, suddenly turned this way, that way and every other way. We now see the image of a minister who has lost the confidence, not only of his fellow parliamentarians but also of the provinces with which he must work in a co-operative way. He must work with the provinces if we are to make a resource policy work, because under the constitution resources belong to the provinces. As well, he must work with industry, which is a partner with the provincial governments in the development of these resources.

Since September 4, for most of the time during the last two or three months, the government has been rushing this way and that way. Therefore, the first question that members should decide in this debate on behalf of the people of Canada has to do with the credibility of the minister. Hon. members heard him this afternoon talking about transmission grids and about the development of nuclear power from CANDU. The Conservative government announced the transmission grid for Canada in 1958. All the plans were ready to be announced in Parliament in 1963. The records of this Parliament will show that that report has been buried since 1963. The minister tried to sneak by this fact by suggesting that there might be a little line from one part of Newfoundland to another part of Newfoundland, and there might even be one to P.E.I. The credibility of the minister has gone. All these changes in policy have destroyed confidence in him not only in this House, but in every province in Canada and particularly in many industries.

It was bad enough when the minister was in the soup, changing policy from hour to hour. Then, the Prime Minister got in the act. One night on television he said publicly that there was nothing wrong; there is no shortage in supplies. The next month he was talking of different policies. He spoke as if he had been born one of the Montreal elite, who in the thirties spoke of the day when those who are superior in intelligence would gain control of this country, as only the intelligentia from Montreal should control it. This man, who thought that way back in those days, is now the Prime Minister. His supporter, the NDP leader, is another graduate of that elite school in Montreal which has complete contempt for the ordinary person in Canada. They do not believe ordinary people can think for themselves on this type of subject. That was suggested today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): The key issue Canadians must decide today is this: we are missing opportunities for Canada, opportunities that Canada never had before. The opportunities were not there 15 years ago or 20 years ago. They were not there ten years ago, but they are here now. I am speaking about opportunities arising globally for our gas and oil. We must also discuss the charade of the government in going this way and that way in implementing policy. Is this an attempt to make people frightened, as the leader of the Créditistes suggested, when there is no genuine shortage of oil in Canada? Is the government doing this because it is trying to hide its failure on the monetary and fiscal side and avoid the question of high interest rates and high prices? That issue ought to be debated today, and I imagine it will be dealt with.

Fourth, we must consider the attack that the minister and the Prime Minister have launched against a very good system of government called federalism. Federalism can only work if the federal government stays within its jurisdiction and if the provinces stay within their jurisdiction. Working together, they can make it work. The attack that has been launched in the last three and a half months on the provinces has not only been an attack against Alberta; it has been an attack against every provinces. That point must be answered.

My contribution to this debate will concern itself mainly with the opportunities for Canada that the present situation creates. It is a fact that Japan, Europe and the United States are short of energy. That is fact No. 1. It is also a fact that the Persian Gulf countries, the Arab countries, as we call them, as well as North Africa, South America and Canada, have a surplus in energy. Moreover, the supply of oil is now being used for political purposes. Not only are the Arabs demanding a fair price for their oil, but they are using production and price as a means of achieving their political ends.

Another fact is that oil movement across the world has in the past been dominated by international companies. Fifty years ago they began to prescribe a rule of law to deal with rising and falling world prices. Markets and prices were controlled. Their policy was plentiful supplies at the lowest possible price. So for 50 years the price of oil around the world has scarcely varied. No group of governments met to decide how markets should be allocated when there were surpluses. There was a vacuum, and the large companies filled it.

Today there is a shortage and oil has become a political issue. We have seen the formation of an organization of oil producing countries, OPEC by name, which is trying to get justice for their people. The oil belongs to the people of Algeria, Nigeria and the various countries of the Persian Gulf. We have been stealing this oil from them by paying very low prices for 50 years. OPEC is determined to get better prices.

When we contrast this picture of shortages in Japan, Europe and the United States with the surplus in Canada, we can see where the opportunity lies. Without going over the list of the 500 billion barrels of oil, the 700 trillion cubic feet of gas, the 100 billion tons of coal, the one million tons of uranium, the hydro possibilities, the potential of the Fundy tides, the Churchill River, coal in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the Maritimes, we have sufficient energy sources of the non-renewable sort to last this country for 500 years or more. There is no shortage. We have power from hydro sources which can be peaked with thermal power at very low cost.

How much do we hear said in this House about the renewables? By the year 2000 the United States will be into fusion at full speed. Where do we hear about research done on the hydrogen cycle? Where do we hear about magneto hydrodynamics? Manitoba sends cesium all the way to Russia because the Russians are doing experiments on magnetic hydrodynamics. But not a peep is heard about this form of renewable power in the course of our debates here. We have all heard of solar power, of tidal power and geothermal power. We have all heard of wind power.

An hon. Member: We have plenty of that.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have even mentioned in this House the word "biomass". If you were to cover the states of Alabama and Georgia with pine trees, which would grow in 20 years, the United States government could provide all the energy it needed from those trees. The energy of the future will be grown on a renewable basis on the farms of North America and other countries. Nothing has yet been done. The people in agriculture say it sounds like energy and the people concerned with energy say it sounds like agriculture; and the environmental people, who are charged with responsibility, say they have not got around to it yet. All my comments add up to this: we are not faced with a shortage of energy in Canada, either presently or in the future. Yet there is no national policy in place; nothing at all.

Transportation has been touched upon by the minister. Where is the policy on a national power grid which was prepared between 1958 and 1963 and left to lie somewhere in his department? Where is the knowledge which the National Research Council, in co-operation with Quebec Hydro, has accumulated? They moved further in the field of long-range transmission of power than any other country in the world. Yes, we knew about the possibilities of DC transmission 15 years ago. But these people have broken down the coronary loss as well as the line loss. There is no mention of it here. I think of the people of the Yukon, the people around the Fundy basin, the people of British Columbia, Manitoba and Quebec: if they do build up any power production, where can they sell it? They have only one market opportunity and that is south, in the United States, this is what the NDP are voting for—the type of government which does not seize an opportunity.

There has been a good deal of debate about price. The reason for this is that neither the minister nor anyone else in his department has a clue about providing lower prices for energy in Canada while allowing enough funds to those who are out exploring to enable them to keep the system working. Because hon. gentlemen over there do not know what to do, they keep pressing us, "Tell us your policy." I suggest that our track record of knowing what to do, and the many years we have spent doing it, are sufficiently convincing: the people will understand that the only party which has a chance of devising a satisfactory energy policy or national resources policy is the party which now sits as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): With all our energy resources, we have enough going for us to enable us to bring processing into Canada without subsidies. The comparative advantage, the opportunity we have sought for so many years, is here. Sure, it means we shall have to do some bargaining. As I have reminded hon. members, Japan, Europe and the United States are short of energy. But when we consider all the things we have going for us, surely the people of Canada would benefit from a party in power that knows how to bargain in Canada's interests, instead of just sitting there and reacting to events day by day.

We, too, believe in the ownership of Canada by Canadians. The difference is that we want Canadians, as individuals, to own it and not follow the fatal route which Russia, China and other nations have taken, as a result of which they have to turn to us for technology because their socialist systems do not enable them to compete with the efforts of thousands of people all trying to do a little better.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, in this argument about credibility I want to deal with the implications of the force majeure clause in oil contracts. When the minister stood up on November 26 in this House and for the first time told the Canadian people they had to expect a shortage of 200,000 barrels a day, my comment was very simple: I said it was a shocking revelation and that the minister would have to be prepared to answer questions regarding it. When those questions were asked by the Leader of the opposition and others, the minister replied that a force majeure clause was included in the contracts with the companies. In plain English, force majeure provides for an act of God, not an act by foreign international companies.

When we questioned the minister about this aspect in committee, he said this was a situation which we could not change. When I asked him to stand up and make a unilateral declaration on the part of Canada that we would hold any Canadian subsidiary responsible for action taken by a foreign parent company in invoking force majeure, all he said was that we must not touch private enterprise. Well, the NDP are supporting this type of thing. I have fought all my life for sovereign control by Canadians over the international oil companies and others have joined with me. But on the crucial issue we are now facing, the NDP has been promised possible reductions in price by the government though they do not guarantee them, and the NDP are selling out Canadians through not making the government stand up to the subsidiaries and tell them that unless they obey the Canadian will, the government will hold them responsible.

I guarantee that as a government we would be prepared to make that statement and to hold the subsidiaries responsible for any phony force majeure provision that is brought into effect. With that kind of statement, Mr. Speaker, you can see the clear distinction between the phony promises that we have had over the last 2 ½ months and all this chest-beating by the NDP that they will throw out the government. The minute they get these phony promises that the government will not raise prices as much as they thought—though there was not a single guarantee in the speech made by the Prime Minister last Thursday as to what the prices will be—the NDP buy these promises. I can only conclude that the members of the NDP are so comfortable in the seats they now occupy that they are too fat to fight and too frightened to run.

Mr. Ian Watson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, rarely in the history of this House has the official opposition moved a motion of non-confidence that is the equal of today's as an exercise in absurdity. If the official opposition had an oil policy, if they had a policy on northern resources, or if they had a policy on off-shore resources, then at least they might be credible. To the adjectives that the official opposition have used in this motion to describe us, I need only add one other to adequately describe their position, and that would be "non-existent". When you have no policy, the best tactics are obviously to create the most confusion possible in the public's mind. I must congratulate the official opposition for having succeeded masterfully in this regard.

This government announced a program for Canadian oil self-sufficiency on September 4 when it announced it would build the Montreal pipeline. This was more than one month ahead of the Arab-Israeli conflict. As for the noise and confusion that we have heard about prices over the past few weeks, I think the Canadian public is sensible enough to understand that east of Ottawa we have been enjoying prices that have been better than those in western Canada and in Ontario west of the Ottawa Valley over the last 12 to 15 years. If over the next few months we have to pay higher prices until western oil comes through, the Canadian public will understand. Despite all the noise and confusion created by the opposition, the Canadian public now clearly knows what is the position in regard to prices and understands it generally.

What are we going to do about future energy requirements? This is where we ask the opposition to come forward with their policies, because they really have not come forward with any clear policies on anything. As far as I am concerned, the three most important matters that affect the future of Canada are these: What are we going to do about our northern resources? What are we going to do about our offshore resources? Whose heritage are these resources: are they the heritage of the Canadian people?

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) has just accused the government of making an attack on the provinces. If we develop the resources of the territories and our offshore resources because they are the heritage of all Canadians, is this going to result in Canada being split up into semi-autonomous regions? No, Mr. Speaker. The position which we as the government have taken on a number of issues regarding the resources of the north and offshore leads to but one conclusion, namely, that we are going to develop these resources for the benefit of all Canadians whose heritage they are.

In talking about the Canada Development Corporation quite a few years ago, I indicated that we needed to get away from the idea that government participation in mineral and oil exploration and development necessarily implied government ownership or control. I indicated I would be happy if the Canadian government were to have only a minority participation in such ventures. Certainly it would not have to be a majority participation; we could become partners to the extent of 30, 40 or 50 per cent. There is no reason why the department responsible for the Yukon and Northwest Territories could not set up a prospecting and exploration division whose functions would be similar to those of any prospecting and exploration division of any of the larger mining companies in Canada. We could tender for geological surveys and a geological firm could carry out the exploitation program.

This is what I would envisage as a natural development for a Canadian natural resources corporation. It would be responsible for searching out deposits and, if necessary, providing a reservoir of capital for minority of majority participation in ventures which had already resulted in proven ore bodies or oil pools. The 35 per cent of the Canadian land mass that forms the Northwest Territories and Yukon has a potential that the experts say will yield at least that approximate percentage of the total resource picture in Canada, both in hydrocarbons and minerals. There is no reason for our not having greater participation in the development of these resources. What is the position of the official opposition in regard to the exploration and development of these resources? Are we going to develop these resources simply for the benefit of the people living there, or for Canadians generally? We have never heard them clearly on that question.

Mr. Bawden: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Bawden: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly a point of order.

Mr. Watson: At the conclusion of my remarks at about ten minutes after eight, Mr. Speaker. The position that I think hon. members opposite fail to grasp in their ignoring of the natural heritage aspect of these resources both in the north and offshore is that the very existence of these resources dramatizes a basis for national unity which too few people in this country, and I must admit in my own province as well, appreciate. We have heard from the government about a national oil company. I should like to see an exploration and development venture along these lines for minerals as well, in those areas which are totally within federal jurisdiction.

There is an additional area to which I should like to refer. This involves a question I have raised in this House on a number of occasions. It relates to an eventual decision on the oil leasing policy of the government. This matter has been under review for a long time, and certainly I have submitted memoranda on the subject before. The basic philosophy that has been followed in the Canada oil and gas regulations is that the permitee should have first choice of 50 per cent of his permit area, and that he should return the remainder to the Crown. His choices are subject to certain restrictions which ensure that with a discovery of a normal size he must return to the Crown some fraction of the land containing oil and gas.

To provide a return to the Crown of part of the discovery, the leases must be separated one from another by a row of sections or, alternatively, selections are made on a chequerboard basis with alternating sections returned to the Crown. In Canada it has been the practice for provinces to offer the Crown sections for auction, and provision has been made for this federally in section 58 of the oil and gas regulations. In the north, the Canadian government decided on an alternative method. It decided that in order to provide additional encouragement, it would be useful in respect of the disposal of these alternate Crown rights if there were provision for the company which held the permit to pay an additional royalty. These additional royalties would be on a sliding scale, depending upon the volume of production from a given well.

This system of secondary leasing with payment of extra royalties was designed to return revenue equal to that which would be obtained in the long run from sales of the rights by auction, and has the advantage of allowing an oil or gas field to be developed under single ownership. Among the practical effects of this leasing policy is the fact that when a discovery well is drilled, a company, by making application for a given area with the reservation for the Crown and paying additional royalty, will have a real advantage in that it reduces what they call in the industry front-end loading.

The thinking behind this was valid at the time. If oil was discovered in the Arctic, the only way it would be competitive on world markets would be if its wellhead costs were extremely low. However, since these regulations were drafted a number of new elements, of which we are all aware, have developed. We have had the Prudhoe Bay discovery and, more recently, the tremendous increase in the world price of petroleum. The hopes which the Prudhoe Bay discovery have encouraged, and the hopes which have now been encouraged as a result of the many Panarctic discoveries, have transformed the atmosphere in the oil business in the Arctic. We must also consider transportation, because transportation developments would now seem to indicate that it is possible to take this oil to the market one way or another.

Because of these elements, I would suggest the question before the minister is whether to revert to a provincial-type system of auctioning off these Crown sections to the highest bidder. I argue that this should not be done, but that we should embark upon a totally new scheme in a new direction. We should retain these Crown sections and dispose of them in a way in which the initiative and the interests of the original permit holder would be protected—but we should dispose of them under some Crown aegis, whether it be a special agency or a special repository of some kind. In this way a multitude of possible arrangements could be made to allow individual companies, preferably the original permit holder but others if necessary, to develop these Crown sections. If the Crown sections prove uninteresting under the terms decided upon, either to the original company or other companies, then I would hope the federal respository would be in a position to act unilaterally. There is a tremendous range of possibilities here, and I would urge the minister to examine them to the utmost.

May I call it six o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member who now has the floor—if he will kindly resume his seat—has about 4½ minutes remaining of his allotted time. I wonder whether the House would be disposed to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks now. This would facilitate the work of the House this evening, since we are running short of time and there are a number of members who would like to take part in the debate this evening. Of course, the hon. member has the right to call it six o'clock; that is his prerogative.

Mr. Watson: To recapitulate, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that it would be possible for the government to give consideration to a mineral exploration and development company in those areas of Canada which lie within federal jurisdiction, and I refer to the northern territories and offshore. I would hope also that it would be possible for the government, in its consideration of changes in oil leasing regulations, to move in a completely new direction, differing from the provinces, particularly the province of Alberta which auctions off its Crown sections to the highest bidder. That new direction would be for the Crown itself to assume responsibility for these Crown sections, farming them out under certain arrangements under some Crown umbrella.

Finally, I want to review very quickly what I feel to be serious deficiencies in the criticism directed toward this government by the official opposition. I think it is wrong for them to assert, as they have in this motion, a number of sins on the part of the government when they themselves have not developed a policy on the matter of offshore resources. Perhaps I am being overly kind to the official opposition, because actually the single policy which seems to come through is that the provinces adjacent to the offshore resources should have total control over those resources. This is the only policy that comes through from the Conservative Party. Certainly it is the one supported by a large percentage of its membership from the Maritimes. I do not know that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) publicly has taken a position that strong before now, but certainly that is implicit in all his public remarks until now, and the Canadian public has a right to know this position in his regard and in regard so far as the northern territories are concerned.

The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) proposes that the Yukon itself be considered for provincehood within five years of a Conservative government taking office. This would affect approximately 20,000 people, the present population, which might grow slightly higher. It would mean that they would have total control of the natural resources of that territory. These are the Conservative Party positions on two major basic issues facing Canada. I submit that the policy they are suggesting would lead to what I referred to earlier as the setting up of practically semi-autonomous regions in Canada.

I would urge the Canadian public to appreciate once and for all what its choice is here. The choice is between a policy of a government which recognizes the natural resources and their development in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon Territory, offshore and elsewhere in Canada, through Canadian government-financed projects, as being a common heritage of the people of Canada, and the policy of the official opposition which apparently does not consider these basic issues for the people of Canada as important. This is the major reason their motion tonight should not be supported by any party in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6.05 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this important debate that is taking place in this chamber today. One interesting question that has already arisen is, why in the world is there such an argument between the members of the Liberal Party and the members of the NDP as to who is responsible for the energy policy that has been brought forward? I would have thought that both parties would be disclaiming any ownership to it whatsoever, because surely no one would want to lay claim to this mish-mash of ideas that has been suggested as a coherent policy, this rehashing of ideas that we have heard so often in the past.

The people of Canada must really be wondering tonight, as they listen to this debate, whether or not they are living on the same planet as all other countries of the world. Surely the Canadian people cannot believe that, in light of what has happened in the world since the Arab-Israeli war, since the Arabs have decided to put an embargo on the export of oil, this government is bringing in an energy policy which centres around the fact that we should be extending a pipeline to Quebec, something that has been advocated by the Progressive Conservative Party for at least four years.

We are discussing the pricing of petroleum products in this country, something we would do in the normal course of events. We are concerned about the way we get our resources out of northern Canada, something that any government of Canada should always be interested in. And we are discussing more Canadian ownership of our resources, which clearly should be the platform of any party and part of its ongoing decision-making. Obviously, any parliament could be discussing these types of thing, at any time.

Certainly, the people of Canada must be wondering what the government is thinking about in terms of the situation that has developed in the past few months, because every country in the world is considering its energy policy in relationship to the changes that have taken place in the last quarter of the year, rather than being concerned about a rehash of ideas which were advanced several years ago and which one would think would come forward in the normal course of events. One wonders whether or not the government is actually aware of the nature of the energy crisis which the world and indeed Canada is facing at present.

One may wonder why the government has not come to grips with these issues in which all Canadians have been interested. But one cannot excuse the government with regard to the current energy problem for compartmentalizing the energy problem and not analysing it along with other problems that Canada is facing today. Surely we must be the only country in the world where the government is talking about the energy policy independent of the economic policy that the government is following.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: No other country in the world is considering the energy question independently of what its effect may be on the economy. When the people of Canada today hear about the energy debate in Canada, hear discussions on energy questions, surely they expect much more than a discussion about whether or not we should have a pipeline to Montreal, whether we should bring our resources from the north and what our pricing policy should be. Surely what every Canadian citizen is wondering about tonight is what is the impact of the energy situation in the world on Canada, and what will happen to Canada as a result of this situation. This is the question the government must answer.

It is inconceivable to me that a government can be faced with the issues that are raised by the change in the energy situation in the world and not have one responsible minister make a statement as to what the impact of this change on the economy of Canada will be. This is what people want to know. This is what they are concerned about. Does the fact that there is an energy crisis in the world today have any impact on the Canadian economy? Does it not make any difference to Canada? And if it does not, why does the government not say so? To discuss energy the way it has been discussed so far by the Government is totally irresponsible.

We have tried to find out from this government what their ideas are and what their analysis suggests the effect of the energy crisis on Canada will be. What have we found out? Very little. We find that not until November 20 did the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce even care enough about the energy situation to ask industries across Canada what the impact of the change in the energy situation may be so far as Canadian industrialists are concerned. Not until that late did they attempt to find out what the impact of the change in the energy situation may be on this country.

What have we discovered from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) with regard to the situation in Canada? What he had to say is reported at page 7129 of Hansard for October 23. He said that the outlook of the economy in 1973 and 1974 is for a strong rate of growth. He is not willing to consider that because of the change in the situation that has developed around the world there may be some impact on the Canadian economy. He is not willing to ask himself what it may do to Canada. He does not even suggest that the present monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policy may be inappropriate following the new developments throughout the world.

I suggest to the House that the people of Canada want to know what the attitude of the government is with respect to the impact of the energy shortage on employment, on inflation and on economic growth. I suggest, further, that the reason the government is not willing to say anything on this topic, is not willing to give us a statement about the situation in the country today, is because of the situation in the Canadian economy today. We have in Canada, in spite of the fact that the Minister of Finance constantly says we are operating at full capacity, an unemployment rate of 5.8 per cent—the highest unemployment rate of any industrialized country in the world. We read about officials in the United States being terribly concerned because the energy crisis in that country may bring unemployment up to 6 per cent. Our government is beginning to believe that 6 per cent unemployment is normal.

We find statements being made in other countries that the energy crisis may have some impact on unemployment levels. But what do we find from the Canadian government? Its members are afraid and unwilling to say what may be the impact of the energy crisis here.

Look at the inflation situation, Mr. Speaker. Only two other countries in the world have a higher rate of increase in inflation than Canada at present—Greece and Japan. What is going to happen to the Canadian inflation rate? This is something that is of great concern to every Canadian. Every Canadian wants to know what effect the change in the energy situation will have on prices in our country.

What about growth in the economy? We have this really incredible situation of a budget brought down last February, the purpose of which was to stimulate economic growth. But what has happened? In every quarter since that budget was introduced, the rate of economic expansion has declined. In fact, in the third quarter of this year we had substantially less than 1 per cent growth in the gross national product, despite the fact that the budget was supposed to stimulate growth.

I have often wondered, why is it that we have basically such poor economic performance in Canada? I think I have found the answer. If you ask the Minister of Finance why it is we have such a rising trend in inflation—as I said earlier, the third fastest rate of increase of any country in the world—he replies, "It doesn't matter, because if you look back six months ago you will find that the rate of inflation somewhere else was higher, and so you don't have to worry about the trend." When we point out that there is no real growth in the economy, he replies, "We had great growth in the first quarter."

Mr. Speaker, the government, in making economic policy, will not look at any trends. It will not look ahead. It always looks back. Now, when every Canadian is asking what will be the impact of the energy crisis, if any, on the economy, again members of the government will not look ahead because in fact they are incapable of looking ahead: they are afraid to look ahead.

In the present debate on energy around the world, Canada is the only country where a senior economic minister has not made a statement on the impact of the energy situation on the economy. In the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury has made a statement that the possible impact of the crisis in that country is a 2 per cent drop in the rate of growth of the gross national product, a possible increase in unemployment up to 6 per cent, an increase in prices of another percentage point, some decline in consumer expenditures and some decline in capital investment. The economic spokesman in West Germany made a similar statement on the impact of the energy crisis in his country. The Chancellor of the Exchequer in Britain said what it is likely to do to the economy of Britain and outlined what they were going to do about it.

Mr. Drury: Look at what happened to the pound.

Mr. Gillies: Even the Secretary of Finance of Iran has said what is going to happen in his country. In Canada, the central issue today is what is going to happen to the Canadian economy in the next quarter. Is unemployment going to rise? Will inflation get worse? Will economic growth slow down even more? But the Canadian government has said nothing.

It is totally irresponsible on the part of the government not to come state what it thinks the impact of the energy change will be. For the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to make a statement and for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) to make a statement about energy without mentioning what it may mean in terms of employment, of prices, and to the economy in general is the height of irresponsibility.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: Before this parliament rises for the Christmas recess it is incumbent upon the government to state what it assesses the impact of the energy situation on the Canadian economy to be. I cannot stress enough, Mr. Speaker, that the questions Canadians are concerned about, when they talk about energy, is the effect of the situation on their jobs. Canadians know that there is a projected decline of the gross national product of the United States, a decline in economic activity in Japan and a decline in economic activity in the European countries. What does that mean to Canada?

The reason the government is incompetent and must be defeated is that it is unwilling to relate the international situation in energy to economic policy in Canada. The government is totally irresponsible in not doing so.

An hon. Member: Talk about energy in Canada.

Mr. Gillies: I go back to the budget of last February. Since then we have had a doubling of the rate of inflation in this country. We have had no substantial drop in unemployment, with little growth in the gross national product in the last two quarters, and a major change in the levels of expenditure by the government, in spite of the fact that the budget was designed to lessen government expenditure. With all this, can anybody sitting on the government treasury benches say that the monetary and fiscal policy and the exchange rate policy that were proposed to this parliament last February are the right ones for Canada today, in view of the changes taking place in the world economy? How can anyone make that case?

How long do Canadians have to suffer? Why can't we get some action from the government? At least, why can't we get an explanation from the government of what it is trying to do?

Mr. Stanfield: They don't know.

Mr. Gillies: What has happened is that in this confusion about energy—whether or not there is a 200,000 barrel shortage in the eastern part of Canada nobody really seems to know—we are forgetting what the real energy problem is for every Canadian. The real energy problem for Canadians today is not whether we are going to get a pipeline built, or whether we are going to get the oil and gas out of the north; the real problem for Canadians is whether they are going to have jobs next spring—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: —and whether prices are going to rise even higher. That is the issue that is before us today. And for the government to give a debate on energy—

An hon. Member: You asked for it.

Mr. Gillies: —and for the Prime Minister to make a statement of the nature of the one he delivered, is to avoid what the energy crisis in the world is all about. I must say that anyone in the United States government, in the United Kingdom government or in the Japanese government interested in what Canada thinks about this situation and reading the speech of the Prime Minister, will wonder what world he is living in. He is talking about things that governments do in the normal course of events, when he should be talking about the things that are really important to the Canadian people now.

The government must tell the Canadian people what the impact of the energy crisis in the United States, in the United Kingdom and in Japan will be on Canada. Some 25 per cent of our gross national product comes from trade. Mr. Speaker, 77 per cent of our trade is with the United States. What is going to happen if there is a substantial decline in the United States market? Have we any policies to deal with such a situation? That is what the question of energy is all about in Canada today and the one which the government has been unwilling to discuss.

We have a situation in the economy, a situation which developed long before the energy question arose, in terms of inflation and growth that is inexcusable. What is going to happen? I would hope that some time today someone in the Liberal Party will answer this question: What is the impact on the economy of the energy situation as it develops all over the world at the present time?

To the hon. members to the left I must say that it seems to me very strange that they are willing to support a government that in the course of this year has managed to bring about the highest rate of inflation we have ever had, that has managed to operate the economy in such a way that our unemployment rate is the highest of any industrialized country in the world, they suggest that they are supporting the government because they got something out of this energy situation when the government, let alone the NDP, does not even know what the impact of the energy situation is going to be on the Canadian economy. Anybody who cares about what is going to happen to the Canadian people could not possibly support a government with such a record.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as I walked into the House and heard the opening words of the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies), I had the eerie feeling that in some way or other I had got into the wrong movie. The hon. member spent virtually all of his time asking us why we were not talking about matters which were in some way or other related to energy but were not specifically on the energy question. He said the great mistake was that we were not dealing with these kinds of economic outfall, as it were, from the energy crisis. May I remind him that for the last week we have persistently and consistently heard from at least some of the spokesmen of his party that they did not want anything else discussed today, that the name of the game was energy and they were going to phrase the motion precisely so that we could not possibly talk about anything else, or anything related to energy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: All one has to do is to look at the wording of this motion. If the hon. member for Don Valley had wished to discuss the economic impact of the so-called energy crisis, it would have been, I presume, a fairly simple matter for him and his colleagues to have drafted a few words that would at least have hung on, like a dory tied to a schooner. But they did not do that. I am not a bit surprised by all this. The hon. member for Edmonton is about to set himself up as the number one flak of the Tory Party, but he is doing it from the second row. If he is not careful, he will be back in row four and this man will be taking over first place. It seems to be occurring, in any event.

Mr. Paproski: Designate "the hon. member for Edmonton." Who are you talking about?

Mr. Jamieson: I apologize for making the wrong comment with regard to the riding. I mean the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). I bow to the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) for having made that mistake.

Dealing with the matter that is before us and not the extraneous matter, Mr. Speaker, at first glance what is surprising about the Tory motion before us is its vagueness. But on reflection this is not surprising. From the start of this parliament the Tories have been content to fall back on generalities in order to criticize the government. Never once have they proposed the alternatives, any more than the hon. member for Don Valley did tonight.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Let me concede that they are under no obligation to do so, of course. But by their actions, or lack of them, they have lost whatever credibility they possessed and their disarray and internal disagreement on every important policy issue becomes more apparent with every passing day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Nowhere is this more evident than on the matter of energy. Incidentally, I want to thank them for the wording of their motion today, for it has given me the three adjectives most suitable to describe their own posture. On energy policy, the Tories have been incompetent, inconsistent and vacillating—all three.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Their strategy has been as transparent as their policy has been invisible. It is invisible by their own admission. They have said, if news reports are correct, that they are working on a policy but it will not be ready for a month. Yet today, at this very moment, they have brought on this narrowly-worded motion which says in effect, "We are prepared to end this parliament, force the country into a winter election and the resultant inevitable inactivity on important issues," while saying to the Canadian people, "Never mind what we think. Have patience. Ignore our incompetence, our inconsistency and our vacillating, and perhaps in a month or so we will come up with something."

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, we are approaching the Christmas season, but let me tell my friends opposite that their particular version of "Oh come, all ye faithful" is not one that will be swallowed by the Canadian people even in their most generous yuletide mood.

This toothless Tory motion is presented as casually and as blandly as if last week had never happened. I can understand why the Tories would wish that it could be struck from the calendar, but it cannot be done. The official opposition cannot ignore the policy statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or try to dismiss it in the casual way that so many have. They cannot avoid declaring themselves clearly and unequivocally. Mr. Speaker, they must surely be prepared to speak with a united voice. Let them stand and be counted. Are they in favour of a national petroleum company, or are they not? Are they prepared to say that the big oil corporations should not reap the profit harvest they had no hand in making? Do they favour keeping consumer prices down as much as possible this winter or, if they want a freeze, should it be at the expense of profits or of people? Where do they stand on the Mackenzie Valley line and on the creation of a pipeline linkage between east and west? On each of these questions, and dozens more, the Tories are the inconsistent party.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: I admire the dexterity of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who so far has managed to keep one foot in Alberta and the other in Ontario; but he invented a third foot today which he tried to plant in the Atlantic provinces. Either they have come down squarely on both sides of the issue or they have vacillated by the use of what ought to be the party slogan of the Tories—Yes, but. The weather-vale through which they seek to read the winds of public opinion is either out of order or, more correctly, it is being blown hither and yon by conflicting currents within their own caucus; and they know very well what I am talking about.

• (2030)

Let me show you a few examples. On the national petroleum corporation, "A death blow to free enterprise", say some. "A meaningless gesture," say others. On the Prime Minister's policy statement, "A bombshell" is one Tory assessment. "Nothing of great moment" is another. Every man, Mr. Speaker, is entitled to his own opinion, but a national political party collectively that seeks to be credible is not.

This government has a policy. It will bring economic gain to Canada and it is benefiting the consuming public. Certainly there are some hardships and dislocations that all of us regret. But even the government's most severe critics fall short of blaming us for the international developments that lie at the root of much of the present difficulty. The responsible course now must be to minimize the immediate difficulties. This the government is doing to the maximum extent of its powers. Every means possible of ensuring an equitable distribution of supplies is being pursued. Prices are being kept down where possible, and those in greatest need are being helped. If other steps are found to be necessary, they will be taken.

The only time today when the Leader of the Opposition managed to sneak in a five-word policy statement was when he was goaded into it by members opposite: he said, "My policy is one price." What did he mean by "one price"? Presumably, because you cannot have it low in the east, we are going to make it high all over the country. That was the essence of his statement today.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Is it the policy of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) to have significantly higher prices for petroleum in the province of Newfoundland, in the maritime provinces and in the slower growth parts of Quebec?

Mr. Cafik: This is not the question period.

Mr. Stanfield: Is that the regional economic expansion policy of my hon. friend?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, instead of lecturing the Leader of the Opposition on energy policy, I might lecture him on the rules of the House. I thought he had risen on a point of order or something of the sort. On the other hand, as he asked a question I will try to answer it at the end of my remarks, if I may.

I was speaking of the current problem in the country, and in that connection I would sincerely hope—I say this by way of an answer to the Leader of the Opposition's question—that everything possible within our power will be done in this energy crisis to ensure that the Atlantic provinces' industry is not harmed. I see a limp handwave from the Leader of the Opposition on that comment, Mr. Speaker, and that about constitutes the total sum of Conservative policy in this area.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I presume all hon. members know the rules. When an hon. member has the floor, he has the right to speak. The Chair is having a very hard time hearing the hon. member. I ask hon. members to observe the rules. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I was saying that the immediate but larger task is, surely, to move now to ensure that present uncertainties will not occur again. This government's policy is a firm commmitment to that objective. The pipeline to eastern Canada will go ahead. To those who now say, with the benefit of hindsight—

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Jamieson: The pipeline will go ahead, as has been indicated, immediately. To those who now say, with the benefit of hindsight—and some of those people are sitting not far from here—that the pipeline should have been started earlier, let me ask how practical such a move would have been a few months ago, in their eyes. How many, now eager to jump on this particular bandwagon, would have condemned the project out of hand less than one year ago? Let me also say this to those people who would have condemned it out of hand.

Let me refresh the very short memories of those who very recently in this House were scoring the government for not being tough enough when the United States would not let us sell as much oil to them as some members opposite wanted,—they asked questions on this day after day in the question period—perhaps even more important, as much oil as some of the major oil producers wanted. It is this memory, among others, Mr. Speaker, that dampens my sympathy for the oil companies and their highly articulate spokesmen. The fact is well known that I am by no means doctrinaire in my opposition to the so-called free enterprise system. On balance I have to say that it has served Canada well. But I am under no illusions that the system was not serving itself well at the same time, and this is what many of us tend to forget.

Big business, whether in oil or any other field, has two great weaknesses that emerge without fail whenever the status quo is being threatened. The first is to cry blue ruin at the slightest provocation, and the second is to forecast the immediate collapse of the economy if anyone tampers with the even tenor of their ways. Well, Mr. Speaker, the occasions are rare indeed when either eventuality has happened. If I have to make any generalization, it is that frequently the opposite is true. As for the blue ruin cry, it simply is not so, nor is it likely to be in a world starving for energy. If these multinational oil companies are prepared, as they are, to deal with some of the most unstable countries in the world, they will remain active in Canada with its much more stable system as long as there are energy sources here to be exploited and to which they have access.

An hon. Member: Who says the government is stable?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, this will be the case as long as it is profitable for them to do so. But this is more than an argument for the continued profitability of the companies: it is also a warning to us and to the Canadian people. These oil companies will not stay if it is in their best interests to go elsewhere. We had seen something of this shift of interest well before the present crisis emerged.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, a national petroleum company is not so much a threat to private enterprise as it is protection—an insurance policy—for the public interest. The decision to create such a company and to move decisively in a number of other important energy fields represents a total repudiation of the motion now before us. May I say this in passing. I little care who claims parentage for these particular measures. I say that they are measures which this government devised, of which it is proud and which in the great record of the Liberal Party in the years ahead, will stand as a watershed reflecting our decisiveness, and not the other way around.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jamieson: Far from lacking a policy, this government has in recent weeks, announced plans that in their totality move Canada a sizeable distance along the road that I am sure the majority of Canadians want to travel, that is, toward the goal not merely of self-sufficiency in energy but of greater control over their national destiny.

Mr. Paproski: Good luck in the next election!

• (2040)

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, when I heard the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion a few moments ago, I had to correct very quickly my impression that this government did not have any energy left; I see that it still has some left, even if only in talk, and in unconvincing talk at that.

Mr. Speaker, I was nevertheless stupefied to see the minister support a policy aimed at dividing the country and adding to regional disparities in Canada. In fact, this energy policy, in the present circumstances is unfortunately becoming a feat of strength of which the government should not be proud, a feat of strenght aimed at obtaining jurisdictions which the constitution forbids the government to have except in a situation of false or real apprehended crisis . . .

An hon. Member: Mr. Justice!

Mr. Wagner: . . . a feat of strength approximately 72 hours before a non-confidence motion and at a time when the government is gathering the scattered elements of its policy in order to project them as elements of a national energy policy, while they are in fact only a Liberal survival policy . . .

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): We have been hearing this for a whole year.

Mr. Wagner: . . . a feat of strength to create two nations in this country: the east and the west.

Mr. Stanfield: This is quite true.

Some hon. Members: What did you do in 1961?

Mr. Wagner: They have been divided, the most underprivileged against the richest, that which is taken for granted because it has always been faithful, namely the province of Quebec which has always been faithful to the Liberals as it takes them for granted and that which must be courted because it is needed.

Such forceful action is unacceptable. If there is one thing wrong with this motion it is the fact that it is much too charitable for the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Of course, of course.

Mr. Wagner: The eclectic performances of the government those last few weeks, the scenario which we are used to witness, the jumps made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the most indecent compromises with the Sir Galahad of the NDP party, the about-faces of government members, mainly those from Quebec—

Mr. Langlois: Let the hon. member speak on about-faces!

Mr. Wagner: —all those contributions—

An hon. Member: Two seats in Quebec!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. Perhaps I should remind hon. members of Standing Order 12, which is quite clear and I quote:

(3) When a member is speaking, no member shall pass between him and the Chair, nor interrupt him, except to raise a point of order.

I hope hon. members will remember this Standing Order until the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe has completed his remarks.

Mr. Wagner: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I only wanted to add that all those contributions from our friends the government members, in addition to their contributions this evening, would have justified much stronger words than those we had to use in our motion, and which underline the incompetence, the inconsistency and irresponsibility that bring economic losses to Canada and deprivations to consumers. We did not use stronger words because we wanted to anticipate the request of the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) and allow the coming festivities to inspire us.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the government, in this oil crisis, did not use any foresight. The government leader in the House said precisely this to the United States, last Saturday: "Canada produces more oil than it needs, but distances make its transport difficult from the oil fields of the west to the highly populated cities of the east; this forces Canada to import foreign oil. Despite everything, Canada continues to supply the U.S.A. with about one million barrels of oil every day, that is, more than ever in the past."

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that Canada has enough oil to meet our demands, provided we take the necessary steps to organize its distribution and improve its shortage facilities throughout our country, which has not been done, is not being done, and is not likely to be done; and yet, the planning for the needs and resources should have been made as early as 1969, immediately after the Six Day War; this is when the government should have demonstrated competence and foresight.

The oil shortage psychosis in eastern Canada turns out to the advantage of the federal government. Nearly phoney, in response to a political stimulus, the oil shortage with which Canadians in Quebec as well as in the Maritime provinces are faced can be used as an excuse by the federal government to take critical steps without allowing those most directly affected enough time for a clear perspective. Quebeckers and Maritimers must be made to feel that Alberta oil at any price is essential to federal salvation.

In all that, at least until further notice, in spite of higher prices, in spite of injustices, in spite of regional disparities that are going to widen, none of the 56 federal Liberals from Quebec dare stand up in this House to decry the lack of any sense of fairness in Ottawa toward Quebeckers. What will be needed, Mr. Speaker, to finally get those people moving one day? What will be needed to make them understand they were elected to vindicate the interests of their fellow citizens in the province of Quebec? The actual or apprehended energy shortage benefits this government on the short term with the complicity of the easy-to-go-along New Democrats. It is now becoming easy to claim, and with very little subtlety, unilateral initiatives and order emergency measures. This same government, incapable of pinpointing the actual causes of a major problem, incapable in the search of adequate solutions of reconciling national interest and regional interests, steps up on the pretense of favoring the public weal the tears in the very sense of Canadian federalism. It would be hoped, Mr. Speaker, that this government would be concerned not only about its survival, not only about adding a few weeks to its political life but that it would be more concerned about the principles inherent in federalism.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to indicate very clearly how the recent decisions made by this government betray the present policy of federalism. I know quite pertinently how Quebec must examine very closely, first the whole question of the export tax, second the whole of the quite numerous and extensive powers given to the central government under Bill C-236 and, third, the whole project indeed required of a Sarnia-Montreal pipeline.

Quebec must fear any unilateral application of an export tax on Alberta oil. Any hasty acceptance of such a precedent could eventually prove very detrimental to the province of Quebec in its prospective exports of resources from James Bay, Manicouagan or any other source. Furthermore, Quebec should find that the proposed board under Bill C-236 will have extraordinary powers that do not seem to be warrented and will cause them to fear the worst. Ottawa must not once again use a particular crisis to appropriate powers that neither the constitution nor the interests at stake confer to it. Finally, if the Sarnia-Montreal oil pipeline has to be built, and in our view it should be and ought to have been for a long time were it not for the unconsciousness of those who govern Canada, we must make sure while there is still time left that Quebec be truly consulted on the size and revertibility of the oil pipeline. Quebec must have a right of control over the opening and shutting of the valve. It must above all stubbornly ensure that its project, its requirement for a genuine petrochemical industry is not thus in any way spoiled, reduced of delayed.

As a Quebecker and a Canadian, one must not allow the Liberal federal government to keep on going so brazenly in the direction that it has itself chosen in the field of energy policy. As a Quebecker, I cannot understand the delay of the usual awakeners in expressing themselves vigourously on this topic. And as a Quebecker, I cannot easily accept that Quebec members in this House think first about their partisanship or their personal interests or their survival in office rather than the real interests of their fellow citizens which should take precedence over the risk involved in an election.

As a Canadian, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to sit within a party and close to a leader—though without any flower in his buttonhole—that are the only ones to date to understand fully the proposed cabinet measures.

I cannot believe that the New Democratic Party, that was formerly so fair and clear-headed, have not seen anything serious in the energy file of the government in office, unless they have seen everything, Mr. Speaker, that is to say their last hope. And perhaps it might candidly be a left-hand turn on the part of the government, and a further state towards centralization that is so dear to them.

If being in the left wing, and the New Democratic party assumes, means accepting injustice for the people of Quebec and the Maritimes, I would rather be in the right-hand wing.

If to be a Canadian, as the Liberal and NDP members claim to be, means accepting that there are two kinds of Canadians, I really prefer, and once and for all, to belong to the Progressive Conservative party.

[English]

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have an opportunity to take part in the debate on this motion of confidence which has been brought forth by the Conservatives. I may say it is rather an interesting discussion that we have had here today. To begin with, the motion reads in this way:

> That this House has lost confidence in the government due to its incompetent, inconsistent and vacillating energy policy which is bringing economic loss to Canada and hardship to the consuming public.

I think it would have read much better had it been worded something like this:

> That this House has lost confidence in both the government and the official opposition due to their incompetent, inconsistent and vacillating energy policies which are bringing economic loss to Canada and hardship to the consuming public.

The amazing thing is that we have just heard the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson) telling us that the decisive policies which the government announced last week, and which I personally welcome, are a watershed in Canadian history. I want to point out to the minister and to the government that they needed some prodding before this watershed in Canadian history came about, and that prodding came from the NDP group in the House of Commons who have been demanding and insisting ever since this first session of the new parliament started on January 4 last that we have changes in our energy policy.

Although we have heard from four Conservative speakers this afternoon and this evening, we have heard no policy put forward by the Conservative Party. These hon. members have the gall to bring in a resolution asking for support to defeat the government, yet they are afraid to stand up and tell the House of Commons and people of Canada what they are going to do in the energy field.

The chief energy critic from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) said, "The people should go on the Conservative's track record". Let us look at some of the aspects of this proud track record which the Conservative Party have in the field of energy. I am not going to go back too far. I am going to take you, Mr. Speaker, to an event that occurred in 1961 when the then prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), on January 17, 1961, signed with President Eisenhower the Columbia River treaty. This treaty has turned out to be the biggest sell-out in Canadian history, bar none. Is this the proud track record that these members talk about?

Our party and other people in Canada fought for a change in the Columbia River treaty. General McNaughton, who was on the International Joint Commission, pleaded with the government for a change in program and policy. But what did we get? The Columbia River is in my riding; I live in the area and know the damage that has been done. Here today, in th midst of an energy crisis, what happens? We could have had many, many times the hydroelectric power that we are getting today as the result of the short-sighted Conservative policy of those days. I say to my Liberal friends that they were not much better. When they replaced the Conservative government in the early 1960s, they went along with this sell-out and they are partly responsible for the situation. They are to a very great extent responsible for the troubles we now see along the Columbia River.

My Social Credit friends talk about an energy policy. We have seen the downstream power on that river sold for peanuts by the Social Credit party in British Columbia—for about one-third of what they could have got for it at today's prices. They talk about an energy deal and they are critical of the NDP today. They were the ones who negotiated the oil and gas giveaway in Alberta. They negotiated the sales to the multinational corporations, and they were backed up by the Tory Party in this House. It is time the Canadian people got these facts, and got them straight.

Let us take another look at the proud track record of this Tory Party. We are in trouble in Canada, and eastern Canada particularly is in trouble because of a policy laid down by the Conservative Party in 1961 when it set up the Ottawa Valley line and refused to build a pipeline into Montreal and a pipeline to the City of Quebec where the refineries were. If such a pipeline had been built, you would not be in the bind you are in today. An energy crisis was coming in any event, but the turmoil, upset and trouble they are having in the province of Quebec and in eastern Canada today would have been largely mitigated. The situation would be better today if that government had had the foresight 12 years ago to build the pipeline. Our party supported the construction of that line at that time. This is not something new; this has been NDP policy right from the start.

Let us take another look at the track record of this proud Tory Party. If we are to judge them on their oil and gas conservation policy, let us look at it. What happened in 1961, when we had a complete review of the oil and gas regulations governing, for example, exploration in the northern parts of Canada? Some of the regulations that were put on the statute books by previous governments are still there; the Conservative government did not change them.

Mr. Nielsen: That is false, and you know it.

Mr. Harding: You did not change some of the key ones, let me put it that way. Let me point out one specific regulation that was made in 1961 dealing with oil leases in the north. At one time under the old regulations, if an individual or a company had an oil lease and found oil, a certain percentage of that lease reverted back to the Crown and was put up for sale by auction. When the Tories were in power in 1961, they changed that regulation and allowed the existing company to retain the other part of the lease by paying an increased royalty.

Mr. Nielsen: Where did the rest go?

Mr. Baker: Tell us the whole story.

Mr. Harding: Let me point out that when the gas and oil field at Prudhoe Bay was proven up by the United States and there were billions of dollars at stake, the Liberal government decided it would do away with this 1961 regulation No. 1. They did stop it for a period of time, but then the oil companies got to the government and, I understand, forced them to withdraw the change.

[Mr. Harding.]

I suggest that this government should take a serious look at all the oil and gas regulations in respect of the northern parts of Canada, because if there was ever a sell-out in the history of this nation it took place right in the north. We have our friends telling us that the oil companies need more money and profit to be able to get along. Every penny they spend in exploration is tax deductible. Just two years ago we had statistics given to this House which indicated that on the total book profits of these companies they were paying taxes on only 5.7 per cent of their book profits. This is absolutely scandalous in this day and age. This is an example of free enterprise—yet the Conservatives tell us to look at the record they presented to the House when they were in government. I tell you that it is enough to frighten anyone. No wonder people shy away from the type of policies they suggest we endorse.

Let me give just one or two examples of what oil royalties in the northern parts of Canada mean to Canadians. It must be crystal clear to everyone that a review has to be made of these regulations. In the north, royalties are 5 per cent for the first three years and 10 per cent afterwards. In the state of Alaska royalties are at a flat rate of 20 per cent. In the event a gas line comes down from Prudhoe Bay picking up half the gas from the Prudhoe Bay area and half from the Mackenzie River basin, at the rates we have today of 30 cents per thousand cubic feet, the oil company which controls the gas—and it might be the same company controlling the gas in both areas—over a ten-year period would pay the state of Alaska $276 million more than it would pay Canada. Yet we are told this is the type of policy that is good for Canada. I suggest to the minister and to the government that they had better take a close look at the set-up in the north, because this situation is bad.

An hon. Member: Tell them in caucus.

Mr. Harding: There are several suggestions the NDP would like to present during this debate. Our leader made an excellent presentation. When we call for a national energy policy we are not thinking just in terms of oil and gas; we are thinking in terms of water, uranium and other types of energy in Canada. When we are thinking in terms of our sources of energy, we must as a nation make up our mind what is to be our Canadian industrial strategy. Are we going to follow the hackneyed and worn-out policies of the Liberals and the Conservatives over the years and sell the majority of our raw materials to other countries, letting them do the processing and taking hundreds of thousands of jobs from Canadians?

An hon. Member: Sell them to Cuba and Chile, I suppose.

Mr. Harding: Ever since this party has been in the House of Commons we have been urging that more of our raw materials be processed in this country. Once we get the processing of raw materials within the boundaries of Canada, I suggest we will triple or quadruple the requirement for all types of energy. We must make plans for this; programs have to be laid down. We must know where we are going before we commit our precious oil and gas resources to other countries. One of the difficulties we face today results from the fact that we have committed these resources without sufficient planning. Right now there is an application by Ontario Hydro before the National Energy Board for the export of a fantastic amount of electricity to the United States.

We in the NDP say that if we had had a long-range program years ago in respect of our national energy, we would now have a grid stretching from the eastern part of Canada to the west and we would be able to export the surpluses from provinces east and west, instead of selling it all to the south and along with it the jobs we believe should rightfully belong to the people of Canada. We do not hesitate to press for this program. We shall continue to press for this type of national energy policy so far as Canadians are concerned.

Now I shall go back for a few moments to outline for members of this House the activities of our group since we came back here on January 4 this year. We are rather happy with the results we have achieved over this short period of time so far as having the government put into effect our energy policies. Since January 4, 1973, when this session started, the NDP group has seen many aspects of our energy policy accepted by the government. We pressed hard for a series of changes because they were in the best interests of Canadians generally and because there was increasing need for action in many areas. As a result of our efforts we have seen the beginning of a national energy policy for Canada. We will continue to press for action until a fully comprehensive policy has been laid down to ensure that the future of our country in this key energy field has been fully protected.

A number of our proposals have in fact been accepted by the government. We have seen the imposition of an export tax on oil. It has been a factor in keeping down inflation on oil products in Canada while ensuring that our Canadian exports are not undersold in the international market. It also makes certain that the windfall profits from soaring international prices come back to the Canadian people where they rightfully belong. No action has been taken in the province of Alberta, under a Conservative government, to ensure that these windfall profits are retained for the people of that province.

The cries of anguish over this export tax from members of the official opposition in the House show very clearly where they stand. We called for a price freeze and fought to have it extended past the end of January, 1974. Once again the government has accepted a proposal which means many millions of dollars of savings to the people of Canada. Other proposals are the removal of the Ottawa Valley line which divided Canada, energywise, into two sections; the building of a reversible oil pipeline to Montreal to ensure continuity of oil supplies to that area in the event of an international emergency; the proposed setting up of a national petroleum corporation. Also, the proposed public development under Canadian ownership of the oil sands and of activities in the north are clear indications that our NDP group has been successful in putting our case on energy development before this House. It also shows that we were years ahead of the policy planners in the two old-line parties.

Mr. Speaker, there is just one more point I should like to make before I complete my comments. This has to do with the conventional oil reserves we still have in Canada. Again, I do not think Canadians should be fooled by the myth that somehow or other we have energy which we can get at immediately. It will take time. I do not think we will have the lead-time to develop other sources of energy and the tar sands unless we have a close look at the export situation so far as our oil and gas reserves are concerned. Many Tories are very anxious to see the price freeze come to an end in January. They have indicated they are in favour of a graduated increase in price until it ends up possibly a little below the international price. This is the penalty the people of Canada will pay if we have this type of Tory policy foisted upon us.

From November 1, 1972, to August 1, 1973, there was a 95-cent increase in the price of oil received by the oil companies. This gave them profits of $700 million over the full run of a year. If the $1.90 export tax is lifted, this will mean double that amount for the international oil corporations—and we say no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, this motion we are debating today, and upon which we will vote later this day, certainly describes very accurately this government's performance in attempting to formulate an energy policy for Canada. "Incompetent," "inconsistent" and "vacillating" are certainly accurate adjectives in describing this Liberal-NDP policy which we have. They are not the only adjectives which could be used. Vacillating and inconsistent, certainly this government has been; but it has been much more. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) have done an about-face and have gone back on their word so often that they can only be described as incredible.

Let me remind the House of just a few instances where this government has said one thing and then a short time later has said something quite different, and in some cases the opposite. Consider the general question of Canada's energy policy. A year ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said a new energy policy was being prepared and would shortly be forthcoming after an already prolonged gestation period. With each passing month the labour pains grew increasingly severe—but still no policy. Finally, with an admission that it was not a policy but rather an analysis which would be forthcoming, a green paper eventually appeared in the latter part of June. To give credit where credit is due, this so-called green paper on energy contained much useful information and advice. For example, on page 9 of the green paper the government states:

> Federal and provincial responsibilities and interests in the energy field are intimately related. No national policy can be contemplated without the fullest of intergovernmental consultation and consensus.

Good advice! But just two months after this statement the Prime Minister, on September 4 and then on December 6, announced what amounts to a totally new national oil policy, with essentially no consultation with and certainly no consensus from the provinces. Consider this government's action in empowering the National Energy Board to control the export of crude oil. In an exchange of letters between Mr. Getty, the Alberta Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources during the latter part of January—which letters, incidentally, were tabled in the Alberta legislature—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said:

> I too hope that the matter of ensuring priority for Canadian oil requirements can be handled by the industry itself. In this regard the National Energy Board is keeping in close touch with individual companies and the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board during the current critical period.

He went on to say:

> Should a voluntary scheme prove unworkable despite all our efforts, it would clearly be essential for the two boards to consult closely over method, procedures and implementation of a control system.

"Essential" was the word the minister used, Mr. Speaker, yet without that consultation the minister announced to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works, a little over a month later, that effective March 1 the National Energy Board would license all crude oil exports. In his statement to this committee, the minister also said:

> The National Energy Board will shortly hold a public hearing in order to provide opportunity for interested parties to be heard as to the appropriate methods for protecting the public interest in respect of all oil exports over the longer term.

No such hearings have been held. I call this inconsistent and vacillating. Consider the question of the Montreal pipeline and the government's vacillations on this subject. In the correspondence between Mr. Getty and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to which I have already referred, the Alberta government again made the case for a pipeline to Montreal. In his reply, the minister pooh-poohed the idea. In the green paper on energy tabled in June, the government again indicated their decision that a pipeline to Montreal was undesirable.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member has referred to correspondence with the Alberta minister. Would he give the precise dates and indicate when the document was made public?

Mr. Andre: I have already done that. It is right here. The documents were tabled in the legislature of Alberta.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the minister table them here?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member's assertion that I pooh-poohed the idea of the Montreal pipeline is entirely false.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: If the minister cannot remember what he wrote, I will lend him the documents.

Mr. Paproski: Did the minister sign that copy?

[Mr. Andre.]

Mr. Andre: On page 14 of that report the government states:

> To date the security threat has not appeared serious enough to justify the very costly arrangements of supplying the region east of the Ottawa Valley with western Canadian crude oil.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Did Lougheed give the hon. member that?

Mr. Andre: Then, just two months later, before the outbreak of hostilities in the Middle East and therefore with no change in the world security situation, but quite a change in the security of the Liberal government, on September 4 the government did another about-face and, contrary to their own advice, decided to build a pipeline to Montreal. We do not quarrel with this decision. It has been the position of our party since October, 1969, that a pipeline should be built to Montreal. Had our advice been taken, we would not be in the situation today of having potential supplies to the Montreal market curtailed.

Consider the question of the short-term supply of crude to eastern Canada, to the area east of the Ottawa Valley. As a result of Arab action, the minister informed the House that Canada could expect a shortfall of possibly 75,000 barrels a day. Shortly thereafter, the minister informed the House that this shortfall could be as much as 200,000 barrels a day. The reason apparently was that some force majeure clauses would result in Canada sharing the over-all world shortage. When pressed for clarification on this point by members of this party, the minister's reply to us can only be called equivocal and evasive. Then we found later that the Shaheen refinery at Come-by-Chance will have 100,000 barrels a day of product available to the Canadian market which, when combined with the extra production that can be squeezed out of western Canada, takes care of the whole potential shortfall in this area.

One can only conclude that the minister was either deliberately creating a smokescreen for his own particular purposes or he is so incompetent that he did not know what the situation was. I submit that this country cannot tolerate either situation.

Some hon. Members: Resign.

Mr. Andre: These examples of the inconsistent and vacillating behaviour of the government pale in comparison with the government's incongruous actions with respect to the price of Canadian produced crude oil. On September 4, the Prime Minister announced that the price of Canadian crude oil would be frozen at that level until January 31, 1974, a decision taken with absolutely no consultation in spite of the government's pledges to hold such consultation. Then, because of section 83(c) of the National Energy Board Act which stated that the NEB could not permit any exports at less than fair market price, the government introduced a 40-cent per barrel export tax. Here, again, there was absolutely no consultation. The producing provinces and the industry were understandably angered and the minister, apparently seeking to calm the situation, assured the province of Alberta and the industry, as well as members of this House, that this was all temporary and that western Canadian crude would be priced at the same amount as some amount related to the average price for foreign crude laid down in Montreal.

In a meeting between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources and ministers of the Alberta government in the latter part of October, the Alberta ministers were led to believe that because of the distortions created by the Middle East war, the freeze on western Canadian crude was soon to be lifted. Instead, in his announcement to the House on November 1 the minister announced an increase in the export tax to $1.90 a barrel for the month of December. Apparently, even when this minister does consult the provinces and an apparent consensus in reached, he feels free to change his mind within the next two or three days.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Andre: During the month of November, on several occasions the minister assured the House, the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, as well as industry representatives and provincial governments, that the freeze was definitely to be removed on February 1. In reply to a question by my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden), who asked the minister whether he was irrevocably committed to removing the freeze on February 1, the minister replied affirmatively. In this he was backed up by the Prime Minister who, demanding a half-hour of prime time on television, stated among other things that this freeze was coming off on February 1. Yet in spite of all these assurances, last Thursday the Prime Minister came to the House and participating in the debate for the first time, to my recollection, stated that the freeze on Canadian crude oil would remain in place after February 1. That statement undermined any last vestige of credibility that the minister, the Prime Minister or this government might have retained with the producing provinces or with the industry.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: The words "indecision" and "vacillating" are almost too mild to describe this government's behaviour in this regard. In fact, "dishonest" is more appropriate.

The Calgary Albertan of Saturday described the statement as follows:

> Above all it is morally and politically craven—a sickeningly ignominious concession to the New Democrats' political blackmail.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

An hon. Member: Read it again.

Mr. Andre: The editorial continues:

> By changing, at the NDPs demand, a course which his government had clearly signalled, Mr. Trudeau has prejudiced the credibility of his entire energy policy. He may find, in due course, that he has also forfeited the respect of the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I am new to politics, but I have always believed that a publicly stated commitment by a minister of the Crown on a subject as fundamentally important as this was second only to a written contract in terms of binding the parties concerned. I also believed that under our British parliamentary system, if such a commitment was broken the minister concerned had absolutely no alternative but to resign.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Otherwise, the veracity of all other ministerial commitments is subject to doubt and we would lose one of the fundamental pillars of our system. I would have thought that a minister with even a modicum of self-respect or concern for the office he holds, rather than have his promises, his commitments and indeed his integrity destroyed in that manner, would resign.

● (2130)

At this point in history, with the necessity for the federal government, the provincial governments and industry to co-operate and work together to solve the problems facing us, it is essential that Canada have a Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who is credible. Is it at all reasonable to expect that any provincial government or any industrial representative could accept the word of this minister as being in any way a true reflection of government attitudes, or in any way a commitment by the government?

In view of his sorry history of vacillating, inconsistent, incongruous behavior in respect of the energy situation, this minister has no credibility with the provinces, with the industry or indeed with the Canadian public. There are too many important decisions to be made which require the co-operation and confidence of all concerned segments of our society to have this minister continue to hold the position he does.

This "two nations" oil policy has already caused considerable economic damage. All members of the House, and certainly the minister, know full well that industry cannot operate, cannot plan, cannot work when the rules are changing week by week. They must know what the situation regarding prices, taxes and exports will be before they can initiate their exploration and expansion programs. When the rules are changed they must be able to ask the minister what his intentions are, and have some confidence in his replies. None of these circumstances exist today and the industry is being hurt as a result.

I want to make it abundantly clear that I am not expressing my concern for these companies or their shareholders. There are probably more shareholders in these oil companies living in the constituencies of Mount Royal and Rosedale than there are in Calgary Centre, and if these shareholders and owners do not like what is happening, let them complain to their members of parliament. I am expressing my concern because of the tens of thousands of my constituents who make their living and who work in this industry. These are ordinary working people—labourers, secretaries, draftsmen, drillers, welders, and so on. They are not experts on the energy situation, but they do recognize that they are the ones who will be hurt most if the oil industry is damaged.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: The owners and the executives can move on to other locations, other occupations: they can adjust. But these ordinary working people cannot, and they will suffer. I have seen the attitude of these most affected workers in the industry change during the course of this year. They started the year with a feeling of optimism, as being part of an industry that had a glowing future. They could expect some security and some promotion. Now their attitude has turned from one of optimism to one of concern, to one of anger and finally to one of fear for their jobs. I do not suppose there is anyone on the treasury benches who knows what it is to be out of work and to fear for the financial security of one's family. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do. I lived with a father who was unemployed, and I know what that can do to a family. That serves as the main basis for my disgust at the government's performance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Also, sir, I have no respect at all for members of the NDP who hypocritically claim to be the friends of the working men. They couldn't care less for the working man in the oil industry. I would like them, before joining in this hallelujah chorus of praise for the Prime Minister's policy, to pause a moment and think about the ordinary working man and woman whose jobs are now in jeopardy or whose jobs have already been lost. And if they ever do stop to think of anything beyond their own political survival, I would ask them to consider for a moment the working people of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces who are getting the back of the hand through this policy that the NDP endorses.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. The hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey).

Mr. Nielsen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I took careful note of the time the hon. member started, and he still has two minutes to go.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I would remind the hon. member that he is not the timekeeper of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: I quite appreciate that I am not the timekeeper of the House, but I thought that perhaps Your Honour failed to recognize the fact that the hon. member had two minutes to go.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I had recognized the hon. member for Verdun.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, a mere five minutes is hardly enough time to do credit to a subject such as the energy policy. I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. gentleman who preceded me, who spent 20 minutes reading a very scurrilous attack on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: Then, Mr. Speaker, he had the audacity to say he was concerned about the working people of Alberta, although he did not have the courage to get up from his seat to complain when the government of Alberta lacked the courage to impose the type of tax that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources put on oil exports.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member did not have the courage to get up from his seat and point out that the government of Alberta was quite prepared to see the crude oil that belongs to the people of Alberta sold at bargain prices, as a sop to the big industry interests. When he talks about the minister not having courage, I would remind members of the party opposite who feel upset that they are unable to get the NDP to support them tonight, that their moment of truth came on July 4 last when they could have supported the NDP on a tax bill and defeated the government, if they had had a mind to do so.

Mr. Baldwin: Talk to Jack Davis.

Mr. Mackasey: The hon. member had 20 minutes to talk about hypocrisy. I will say something plain and simple. Even if his party ever formed the government, I do not think the hon. member would have the capacity to be even in that cabinet. Earlier in the day the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said the Quebec members had sold out their province. I would remind him that it was the Quebec members who, in the last 12 years, had to fight in this House for greater French Canadian participation in the public service, for a greater say in national decisions; and then when they went home on week-ends they had to fight against the separatists in their own province.

● (2140)

We had the courage to go home after the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) speech the other night knowing full well that the price of gasoline in the east would be higher than in the west. We also had the courage to tell our constituents that for many years it was just the opposite—the people on the west of the line had to pay a higher price for their fuel. Once again the people of Quebec accepted, as Premier Bourassa mentioned today, a premium for the people in the west for the sake of national unity.

Mr. Speaker, we can talk about Quebec members and about Alberta members such as the one who just sat down, who is a typical example. Neither he nor any other member of the Alberta delegation can deny that that province was quite prepared to sell its crude oil at bargain prices, to the point that the National Energy Board threatened to cut off the export of oil from Alberta to the United States.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

An hon. Member: You are wrong.

Mr. Mackasey: When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has the courage, by placing a border tax on that gasoline, to divert the windfall to the Canadian people and the working people of Alberta, the anger of hon. members opposite is beyond all bounds.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. As it is 9.45 in the evening, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58 (10) to put forthwith successively, all questions necessary to dispose of the present item of business relating to supplementary estimates (A), the opposed item in the estimates, and for the passage of any bill based thereon.

[English]

The question is on the motion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Call in the members.

Disposition of Supply Motions

● (2210)

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost. May we have order, please. The hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order similar to one I have raised before in this House. On this occasion I say that the vote of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) should not be allowed to count because he was not in his place when the vote proceeded.

● (2220)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the Chair is required to make a ruling at this stage. Hon. members know the Standing Order, which is clear, to the effect that a member should not move around, come into or leave the chamber—

Mr. Forrestall: Take the vote away from him; then there is no problem.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. A member should not come into the chamber or leave the chamber while the vote is taking place. I should not think that because, while there is cheering on one side or the other, an hon. member leans over to talk to another member it should disqualify his vote.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, time permitting—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have a long procedure ahead of us, and if hon. members want to pursue this course of action I suggest we will not move ahead very quickly.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Time permitting, Mr. Speaker, I could turn up a number of precedents which would suggest that we delete the vote of the President of the Treasury Board. If he wishes to deny the accusation, I will apologize. If he is willing to say he was in his place, I will withdraw what I am saying now.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): If what I have suggested is wrong, I should think the President of the Treasury Board would rise and say he was in his place.

Some hon. Members: Order.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN VOTE 20A, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion on our next item of business perhaps the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) would like to refer to the point of order raised this morning. This might be a good time to hear from hon. members in this regard.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel).]

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) proposes to move as follows:

That vote 20a, in the amount of $1,009,000 of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for Earth Sciences—program expenditures in Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, be concurred in.

Hon. members will remember that when we reached the item of supply this afternoon, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) raised a point of order with reference to two notices which appear on today's notice paper, standing in the name of the hon. member for Yukon, at which time he proceeded to give his views about the procedural validity of these notices. The Chair suggested that perhaps it might be better to wait until later in the day or in the evening to hear argument on this interesting point. I would be willing, of course, at this point to hear from the hon. member for Yukon or any hon. member who wishes to guide the Chair on the point raised earlier today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Nielsen: Since the point was initially raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Speaker, perhaps he should be allowed now to complete the argument he started, and I will participate later.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that with the few words I uttered this afternoon I think I made the case. There are two notices on the notice paper in the name of the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The first one is put down as a notice of opposition, presumably under Standing Order 58(4)(a). It is my contention that such a notice is not a notice of opposition to an item unless it is opposition to the entire item. However, the notice put down by the hon. member for Yukon expresses opposition only to $16,999.99 of that item; therefore, it is not a notice of opposition to the entire item. Furthermore, I submitted this afternoon that the notice is misleading and does not make the sense a motion before the House is supposed to make because it is identified as an attempt to cut out the salary of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I indicated as a minor point that the hon. member for Yukon was asking to cut that salary to $1, but then he proposed to make a reduction of $16,999.99 which has the effect of cutting the salary of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to one cent.

An hon. Member: Very generous.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would point out, first of all, that the minister's salary is not $17,000. The minister's salary is $15,000 and he gets a $2,000 car expense allowance. The first is taxable and the second is not. The fact is that the $15,000 salary is provided under the Salaries Act and the $2,000 car expense allowance is provided under the Senate and House of Commons Act. Therefore, these amounts are not in the estimates at all, and any attempt to ask this House to vote against the salary and car allowance of the minister by dragging it into this notice, I submit is improper. If we were to succeed in reducing item 20a by roughly $17,000 the minister would still get his salary and would still get his car allowance and the motion of the hon. member for Yukon would then have been thwarted.

The other notice put down by the hon. member for Yukon is in the form of a proposed amendment to the motion of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) for the endorsement of item 20a. It is quite clear under the rules that at this stage of the game, after 9.45 at night, an hon. member is not permitted to speak to the motion for the adoption of the estimate. The time to have done so was during the 25 allotted days or when the estimates were before the committee. I submit that if a member cannot get the floor to speak to the motion, he cannot possibly move an amendment.

Therefore, I would submit that both proposals by the hon. member for Yukon fall to the ground. The first one falls because it is faulty, and the second one because it proposes an amendment at a time when no amendments are permitted. Lest anyone think that the House of Commons has no control over its own management of expenditures, the fact is that in committees on estimates we have the right to reduce any estimate we wish, but our rules provide that at this point the vote is for or against the item as it has been reported to the House.

I feel that it is not necessary to press unduly my opposition to the first notice because it does not get voted on anyway. What it attempts to do is reduce the amount stated in the motion of the President of the Treasury Board, the motion which we vote for or against, namely, item 20a in its entirety. When we do so, we are not in any way, shape or form expressing an opinion about the salary or the car allowance of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. That issue is not before us, whatever we may think of the minister.

I would think that the second proposal, namely, an amendment at a time when the hon. member cannot get the floor to speak to the motion, is clearly out of order and should not have been allowed to appear on the order paper.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Well, sir, the seduction is now complete. I sat here and listened with astonishment to an opposition member of many years in this House deny the opposition the right to control supply, as the hon. member has just done. I can well understand his embarrassment in not wanting to support a motion which would in effect express no confidence in the minister, and that is exactly the effect it would have, but the arguments advanced by the hon. member in support of his submission are specious and hollow.

If we cannot proceed in the manner in which I have proceeded with a notice of opposition and the amendment, then there is no way in which the opposition has an opportunity to reduce an estimate except on an allotted day. I ask Your Honour, where does that leave the opposition? We are on our last allotted day in this session. This is a traditional day set aside for the purpose of voting non-confidence in the government. What the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is saying is that either one must use that allotted day for a non-confidence vote or choose to use it for estimates. Either way strangles the effectiveness of the opposition. The hon. member is defending the government on this question simply because the government does not want to be embarrassed and caught with a vote which in essence is a vote of confidence in the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: The intent both of the notice of opposition and of the amendment is clear. There was a typographical error in the filing of the notice of the amendment in that it purports to reduce the salary of the minister by the whole amount less $1. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed to the fact that in effect the figures do not tally with the words, and therein lies the typographical error. But the intent was to reduce the salary to $1. I must confess, however, after listening to the minister and members on the government benches in this debate, that he does not deserve more than one cent. So I would prefer, if it meets with the approval of the Chair, that the intent be read into both the notice and the amendment that in effect the vote be reduced to one cent.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre makes a great deal about the point that because the $15,000 and $2,000 are contained in separate acts of parliament and represent a statutory appropriation, there is no way the minister's salary can be attacked by the manner in which the notice of opposition and amendment attempts to do. Nothing could be more specious. I always thought the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre took a little more care in reading these motions, but he is stumbling all over himself these days to support this stumbling and bumbling tribe opposite.

In effect, what the notice of opposition and motion does is reduce the amount in vote 20a, and it just appears to be coincidental that the reduced amount equals by one cent the minister's salary; and that is all he is worth, in my respectful submission, sir. The question is whether the amendment to the motion which appears in my name is permissible under our Standing Orders. The second sentence in Standing Order 58(10), which is the applicable Standing Order, reads as follows:

> If the motion under consideration at the hour of interruption is a no-confidence motion, the Speaker first shall put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of that proceeding, and forthwith thereafter put successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to interim supply, main estimates, and supplementary or final estimates, the restoration or reinstatement of any item in the estimates, or any opposed item in the estimates, and, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 72, for the passage at all stages of any bill or bills based thereon.

Specifically, sir, in question—and this, I submit, is the question the Chair must decide in respect of the amendment—are the words "without debate or amendment" as they apply to "every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to ... supplementary ... estimates ... or any opposed item in the estimates ..." I have paraphrased the appropriate words. The Chair must ask itself what is debate or amendment.

My friend from Winnipeg North Centre suggests that a member can move an amendment only if he gains the floor. I submit that is not the case. With regard to what is meant by "debate" or "amendment," if the word "debate" is given its normal parliamentary meaning, then in my submission it includes the moving of a motion. This parliamentary meaning was approved as recently as last Tuesday, December 4, by Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair. It is interesting to note that in the debate on the protection of privacy bill, at page 8405 of Hansard the following statement by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is recorded:

> There is another rule which says that when an hon. member moves a bill even without speaking, or even if he only tips his hat, he is regarded as having spoken; that is his last chance—

Mr. Speaker, in response, said:

> That is the position the Chair adopted in this instance—

Standing Order 37(1) provides:

> No member may speak twice to a question—

Beauchesne's Fourth Edition, 1958, contains the following at page 137 in citation 165(1):

> The member who makes a motion may give the name of his seconder who will, if necessary, lift his hat as evidence that he had intimated his consent, and the seconder will then be allowed to speak on the question. But if the seconder should rise and say only a word or two—for instance, 'that he seconds the motion'—he is precluded from again addressing the House.

Bourinot's Fourth Edition at page 345 states:

> But if a member who moves an order of the day or seconds a motion, should rise and say only a word or two—that he moves the order or seconds the motion—he is precluded from again addressing the House according to a strict interpretation of the rules.

These citations are in accord with a ruling by Mr. Speaker Lemieux on March 14, 1928; Journals, 1928, volume 65, page 154. In my submission, it is obvious that the word "debate" in the normal parliamentary sense extends to the moving and seconding of a motion. If this sense or meaning is applied to the word "debate" in Standing Order 58(10), then the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) cannot move any motion with respect to the supplementary estimates because the moving of the motion, by the reasoning as set forth, is debate and surely the rules were not intended to preclude the President of the Treasury Board moving the motion now before us.

It follows from that, sir, in my submission, that no one could move or second an amendment to the motion which, as stated, cannot be debated, and it is debated in the parliamentary sense if it is moved and seconded. If that incongruous interpretation were accepted, not only would I be out of order but also the President of the Treasury Board would be out of order in moving the motion. There is nothing in the Standing Orders or the precedents or Mr. Speaker's ruling which holds that "debate" as used in Standing Order 58(10) is to be given a special meaning.

The explanation whereby Standing Order 58(10) becomes workable in this regard, I submit, is one of timing and is of importance. The words "without debate or amendment" are applicable only after Mr. Speaker has put the question which you, sir, have already done. In my submission, the reference to "debate" or "amendment" does not apply before the question is put by the Chair. In fact, further, it cannot apply because there would be no question to put, since to refuse to permit members to move and second a motion would be to preclude the moving of any question or any motion.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

This sentence in Standing Order 58(10), in my submission, must be interpreted to mean that members can move a motion that properly can be put. Mr. Speaker must then forthwith put such questions without debate. It is the word "forthwith" which I draw to the attention of the Chair, which precludes debate on the motion at this stage: it does not, however, preclude amendment. There is nothing in the Standing Orders to preclude amendment at this stage. I suggest this is so even though no notice of amendment is filed under Standing Order 58(4)(a). In support of that suggestion I should like to read from Beauchesne's Third Edition, 1943, at page 47, citation 86 which sets out as follows the procedure on the putting of a question by Mr. Speaker:

● (2240)

> When the debate on a question is closed, and the House is ready to decide thereon, the Speaker says: "Is the House ready for the question?" If it is evident that no member claims the right of speaking, the Speaker proceeds to put the question by reading the main motion, and then the amendment or amendments in their order as the case may be.

Under the procedure set out in Standing Order 58(4)(a), 48 hours' notice of a motion to concur in supplementary estimates is required. That notice has been given. At the proper time the motion is moved and seconded, and debated to that extent. At this point—and there is no provision to the contrary—the motion may be amended by a motion duly moved and seconded. The motion to amend may be amended. The question to be put by Mr. Speaker is not the original motion, but the motion as amended.

It may be that notice is required of any amendment: there does not appear to be any Standing Order or rule to that effect, however. In any event, notice has been given in the case of the amendment standing in my name on the order paper. That very fact destroys, in my submission, the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. A notice has been given similar to that required by Standing Order 58(4)(a) in respect of the main motion to concur. Only when the amendments, if any, are in may Mr. Speaker forthwith put the question, in my submission. If the motion has been amended, Mr. Speaker puts the question: the motion as amended or even subamended. In this way, following the words of Standing Order 58(10), he forthwith puts successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to supplementary estimates or any opposed item in the estimates. That is the case here.

Your Honour will recall that when the last supplementary estimates were before the House we were confronted with an inability to do anything with respect to the reduction or control of those expenditures. Your Honour has intimated in the past that there was a way to do it, and I took it from your previous ruling that it was a matter that could be achieved without necessarily sacrificing one of the allotted days to do so, especially an allotted day of such importance as this one where the choice would have been invidious if we had been put to the choice of dropping our confidence motion in favour of proceeding to test an item in supply.

Therefore, we are at the point that if this procedure is denied us, if the Chair does not agree with my submission that it is one of the ways in which the Chair intimated that items in supply could be tested, then we in the opposition—and this appears to be what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and those who support him want—are denied the opportunity for the very reason that this place exists, namely, to control expenditures of public funds. I am sure that that was never the intent of any rule change.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the procedural argument advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I looked at the notices put down on the order paper by the hon. member: they were available over the weekend. It seemed very clear that they had no place within the procedure that we are following at present. Procedurally, the denial to accept these motions does not take in any way away from the House of Commons or the standing committee the ability to control the supply of the House. We disposed a few moments ago of a motion that was the determining one in the ability of the government to proceed further with the question of supply. So there rests fully within the House the ability to control, to withhold, to offer supply to the government, and we have completed the first part of that process already.

Under this proceeding, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is permitted to put down a notice to oppose an item in the estimates. That has been well established by a ruling of Mr. Deputy Speaker found in the Journals of the House of Commons for June 22, 1972. The point of order was exhaustively argued, and Mr. Deputy Speaker ruled that it was possible to put down a notice to oppose an item in the estimates; and once that notice to oppose was put down, it was then possible for the president of the treasury board to put down a motion to support the item in the estimates against which the notice had been put, and that the vote would take place upon the motion and not upon the notice to oppose. But in this case the hon. member for Yukon has done something that is somewhat bewildering because it does not fit into the understanding of what is to take place here. He has not put down a notice to oppose; he has put down a motion to amend.

Mr. Nielsen: That is not so.

Mr. MacEachen: It is:

That the motion be amended by striking out the period—

Mr. Nielsen: There is also the notice to oppose.

Mr. MacEachen: I am dealing with the notice to amend. There is no way in this proceeding by which a notice to amend the motion can be put. It is just not possible. My hon. friends must know that. But more than that, if it were possible I would suggest that the amendment is totally irrelevant. As a matter of fact, I suggest that it is not possible at this stage to get at the vote to which the hon. member has referred in the way in which he wishes to get at it.

The way in which he should get at it is either in the supply bill or in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. But here it is a somewhat different situation. We are asked to deal, in a bogus, irregular amendment with the salary of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) which is supposed to be contained in vote 20a. We are asked to reduce the motion put down by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) by a particular amount, the amount equivalent to the salary of the minister.

What is vote 20a? It is a vote that is related to the amount of $1,009,000 covered in total by four items: field and air surveys, mapping and aeronautical charting, geological research and surveys, research in geophysics, Canada Centre for Remote Sensing. One would have to really be equipped with the ability for remote sensing to relate the minister's salary to this particular item because, as we know, the minister's salary is not even mentioned in the supplementary estimates. You can look from the beginning to the end; it has nothing to do with it. The minister's salary is covered in the main estimates, and nowhere else. It is certainly not covered here. It is in the statute, but the statutory items are covered in the main estimates. So we are both right.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Therefore I just say that this is the kind of intellectual conundrum with which one should not be expected to deal at five to eleven at night, especially after the week we have had and the day we have had. It is just nonsense and mature men should not be dealing with it, especially at five to eleven at night.

● (2250)

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) raised a particularly important problem. On a number of occasions, at the time of consideration of supplementary estimates in this House, I objected to the outdated method which prevented hon. members from expressing their views on the consideration of these estimates.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the hon. member's arguments and I studied Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms as well as the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, if my Liberal colleagues could have the courage to be less political manoeuverers and play more frankly their role as members of this House, if they would be kind enough to listen to me, then, I may be able to express myself freely. I accept the principle and the request of the hon. member for Yukon, but I will have to agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and with the hon. President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). In fact, with regard to works relating to estimates as well as to ways and means, Standing Order 58(9) reads in part as follows:

. . . the Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and forthwith put, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of the said proceeding.

If we refer to Standing Order 58(10) subsection (10) of the same section, Mr. Speaker, we find once more the same formula, and I quote:

> ... the Speaker ... shall put forthwith successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to interim supply, main estimates, and supplementary or final estimates ...

Unfortunately, that is precisely the situation in which we find ourselves.

The hon. member had the opportunity, under procedures which I consider antiquated, to demonstrate his opposition to the estimates in committee. In the House, however, at the final adoption stage, considering the precedents set in this House, particularly the one on which I was the victim, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you should rule such amendments out of order.

The members of the opposition can use the days made available under Standing Order 58(3), for example, relating to the business of supply. They are free to object to the adoption of estimates, but not with the means used tonight.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, regretfully but honestly, I must lean towards the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the President of the Privy Council, although in my heart I would share the opinion of the hon. member for Yukon.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether hon. members are satisfied that the Chair has been satisfied with the enlightening arguments which have been submitted for its guidance. It is hardly necessary to go back into the details to which I referred earlier this evening. The fact is that earlier today the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose on a point of order and indicated that he took exception to the notices which have been mentioned during the last few minutes, one being notice of an amendment to a specific item in the estimates and the other being a notice of opposition to a specific item in the estimates.

Hon. members who have taken part in this argument, particularly the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), referred at length to the fact that hon. members in the past have sought to question part of a vote rather than the whole item itself, and attempts have been made from time to time to have the House divide on a reduced item or on part of an item in the estimates.

I think that each time we have reached this situation we have had the argument made that the rules as they stand—the rules which were amended in 1968 and which came into force in 1969—did not make it possible for hon. members, as they had been interpreted in any event, to have the House divide at any time on a part of an item, or to move by way of amendment to reduce an item in the estimates. However, as hon. members will understand, I have to go by the Standing Orders as they are now.

I have said on many occasions that perhaps this procedure which we have adopted in relation to estimates may be weak and perhaps it should be changed. Obviously, it has caused so much difficulty that we should as soon as possible, in due course, look again at that procedure and find some way to consider estimates which will be more satisfactory to hon. members. But the Standing Orders are there and it is pretty difficult for the Chair to ignore them. The Standing Order which is relevant is, of course, the one to which hon. members have referred, Standing Order 58(10) which reads in part:

> If the motion under consideration at the hour of interruption is a no-confidence motion, the Speaker first shall put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of that proceeding, and forthwith thereafter put successively, without debate or amendment, every question necessary to dispose of any item of business relating to interim supply—

The hon. member for Yukon has referred to citations and precedents which, as I understood them, predate the rule changes of 1968. Standing Order 58, which is part of the new rules, determines clearly what questions and motions can be put as part of the supply proceedings. The hon. member said a moment ago that there was no procedural way in which part of an estimate or an item can be put to the House for a vote. I have suggested on previous occasions that this could be done but, with respect, I do not think the way in which he has attempted to do it this evening is the way to do it. Indeed, I believe that on a previous occasion the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) on a supply day brought into question a number of specific items. These items, since they were motions before the House, could be debated and they were subject to amendments attempting to reduce them. But that is not the situation we have before us at the present time.

It seems to me that the Standing Order is very clear, that there can be no debate at this point; and if there can be no debate, there can be no amendment. The hon. member, it seems to me, is attempting to do indirectly, by giving notice of his intention to move an amendment, that which he cannot do directly, and that is to have the floor at this time and at this point to debate the motion and move an amendment thereto.

We are left, therefore, with the notice of opposition itself. I am trying to make a distinction between the amendment, which is the first part of the hon. member's procedure, and the notice of motion. I suggest to him that the amendment is entirely irregular and I do not see how the Chair, even by stretching a point, could say it could be put to the House at this time. As I say, we are then left with the notice of opposition.

I must say that I have serious reservations about the nature or the wording of the notice of objection filed by the hon. member as it appears on the notice paper. The hon. member seeks, through this notice of objection, to reduce an item by $16,999.99. Actually, the notice of objection has to be a notice that should not include argument and should not attempt indirectly to reduce an item which is not actually before the House. The Chair is willing to overlook that aspect of the notice of objection filed by the hon. member for this very reason, that by the fact that the notice was received and was filed it compelled the inclusion in the notice paper of a motion in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), so that we have in fact before us now the motion of the President of the Treasury Board. I might rule that the motion is irregularly before us, but I think that might perhaps be stretching the point because we are still, even after a few years, working our way around the understanding and the interpretation of these rules, particularly Standing Order 58. If it is the understanding of the hon. member that his notice of objection does not create a precedent, then it is not the motion that is put before the House—but what is put to the House for a vote, if hon. members wish to divide, is the motion of the President of the Treasury Board. Certainly I do not want to be so difficult as to object to putting the minister's motion. The House can vote on that, not on the hon. member's amendment, not really on his notice of objection but on the minister's motion itself.

I have no objection to stretching an interpretation of the rule to that extent and to do what I was about to do 30 or 40 minutes ago, that is, put to the House the motion which stands in the name of the President of the Treasury Board.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) moves:

That vote 20a, in the amount of $1,009,000 of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for Earth Sciences—program expenditures in Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, be concurred in.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite clear from the wording of the notice of opposition and from the amendment that what we were trying to do was to affect the salary of the minister because we have lost confidence in his ability.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: However, we certainly do not wish to vote against the whole of this item in the supplementary estimates, so we would be quite happy, if Your Honour and the House agreed, to pass the motion to concur in that one item, on division.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the item carry, on division?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion (Mr. Drury) agreed to.

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (A)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, laid before the House November 7, 1973, except the item disposed of earlier this day, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen).

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have another serious point of order to raise.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nielsen: That is typical, sir. They do not want to go by the rules over there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: Whenever anyone rises on this side of the House, I suggest to you, sir—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please. The hon. member for Yukon has the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: I suggest to you, sir, that if the braying donkeys over there are patient, they will find that even their own House leader will agree that the point of order which I am about to raise is a very valid one indeed.

Mr. Jerome: That will be a change.

Mr. Nielsen: Not at all. The hon. member says that will be a change. He is one of those who oppressively runs his committee of this House to prevent members of the opposition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Jerome: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I just mention that if the hon. member would be good enough to consult some of his colleagues who showed up at all of the meetings of the justice committee, he would find that his last statement was false.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of chairmanship we have in the committees staffed by Liberal members, rising on spurious points of order or questions of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: At this time we take objection to and raise a point of order respecting the motion which reads as follows:

... to concur in Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, laid before the House November 7, 1973, except the item disposed of earlier this day.

The item disposed of earlier this day, of course, is vote 20a. The basis of this point of order, sir, is your own ruling of March 10, 1971, for any hon. members opposite who want to gain even a scintilla of an insight into the rules of this House. On that occasion objection was raised on a motion under Standing Order 59 to send supplementary estimates to certain standing committees. The suggestion was that this included certain books that were in fact intended as amendments to certain statutes. Mr. Speaker ruled on that occasion that in view of the situation created by the new rules, two items were not before the House in proper form, that the legislative proposals in them should be brought before the House by way of a bill. On that occasion that is exactly what happened.

The ruling of the Chair is contained in the Journals of the House of Commons for March 10, 1971. At page 396, the Chair outlined the difference in the situation with respect to a statutory item and those items that were non-statutory. Briefly, it was concluded at that time that the House itself had the right to deal on the floor with statutory items. The items in question were 35c and 10c. I will quote the ruling of the Chair at that time:

I must come to the inevitable conclusion that, in view of the situation created by the new rules, these items are not before the House in proper form.

It should be stressed that we are dealing now with an entirely new situation and with an entirely new set of circumstances. If it could be said that since the adoption of amended Standing Orders in 1968 the House had already accepted as part of a continuing practice the consideration of dollar items intended to amend statutes, then the argument might be made that the procedure proposed in respect of these specific items conforms with a new practice and is supported by precedence. But that is not the case.

Your Honour went on to find that those items that were statutory items had to be brought in by way of bill. The government admits, in a document entitled "Explanation of one dollar items in Supplementary Estimates (A), 1973-74", that there are three one dollar items which specifically amend existing legislation other than appropriation acts. This document was supplied to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates which considered Supplementary Estimates (A) and it is part of the evidence given to that committee.

There are outlined there in the estimates, the Department of Justice, vote 1a, which had the effect of providing for the payment of a maximum travelling allowance of $500 per annum for district court judges in Ontario, and so on. The next department was the Department of National Health and Welfare, vote 50a, to authorize an increase of $2 million in the statutory aggregate amount of payments that can be made under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act. Then lastly, the Department of Veterans Affairs, vote 30a, to authorize an amendment to the Pension Act so as to enable the Canadian Pension Commission to accept and administer property and money bequeathed and donated in trust to the commission for the benefit of pensioners and their dependants. All three votes in all three departments are statutory votes and have the effect of amending statutes, in my submission. That is admitted by the government itself.

On the basis of your ruling, and the government's admission, all those three one dollar votes specifically amend existing legislation other than appropriation acts. The motion standing in the name of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), in my submission, must be ruled out of order in so far as that motion purports to include these three improper items, unless the House unanimously consents to an amendment of the motion by the President of the Treasury Board. That was the procedure followed on the previous occasion. Standing Order 51 is there relevant. It says:

Whenever Mr. Speaker is of the opinion that a motion offered to the House is contrary to the rules and privileges of parliament, he shall apprise the House thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon, and quote the Standing Order or authority applicable to the case.

I know that not many members opposite are concerned about following the rules of this House. As it is, have very few of the privileges of opposition with respect to the control of supply. I am sure that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen), having been in this House for as long as he has, knowing the validity of the point which I raise and that it is on all fours with the situation of March, 1971, would be, and should be, the first to agree that we should follow the same procedure today as we followed on that occasion.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has taken exception particularly to three items which appear in the supplementary estimates. Apparently he wants to exert influence on these proceedings and delete from supply a sum intended for fitness and amateur sport in Canada.

Mr. Nielsen: Not at all.

Mr. MacEachen: That is the first objective. The second objective is to remove the authority, set by the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald), with respect to administering, on behalf of the veterans of Canada, trusts and estates.

Mr. Baker: Claptrap!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacEachen: Then he wants to remove the possibility that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang) shall administer, and permit the judges of this country to administer, our judicial system more effectively.

Mr. Baker: Balderdash!

Mr. MacEachen: By attempting to block these items in the estimates he is saying, "Let us cut out the sum for amateur sport. Let us reduce our services to veterans. Let us cut out the ability of judges to administer the courts of this country".

Mr. Baker: That is a shabby argument.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If that is what my hon. means by controlling supply—

Mr. Bell: It is not.

Mr. MacEachen: —I hope he will never have any influence in this House over controlling the supply of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I propose to show in my argument that the items in question are well-founded on precedent. If we examine very carefully the important ruling to which my hon. friend has referred, I submit we will find ample precedents, since the change in the rules, which would justify the inclusion of these particular items in the supplementary estimates. As my argument may be long, may I refer to just one example, to be found at page 96 of Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, under the Department of National Health and Welfare fitness and amateur sport program. Vote 50a reads:

Fitness and amateur sport—program expenditures—to extend the purposes of National Health and Welfare vote 50, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1973, to increase from $9,850,000 to $11,850,000 the aggregate amount that may be paid in any one fiscal year under section 10 of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act for the purposes of that act.

This vote seeks to extend by about $2 million the purposes of the fitness and amateur sport program. We want to increase the amount of the program.

Mr. Nielsen: But you are amending the section.

Mr. MacEachen: And now my hon. friend wants to delete it. The question is, is that irregular in any way? May I now turn to the main estimates for 1971-72, Appropriation Act No. 3. Vote 40 reads:

Fitness and amateur sport—operating expenditures and authority to increase from $5,000,000 to $6,200,000 the aggregate amount that may be paid in any one fiscal year under section 10 of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act for the purposes of that act... $998,000.

May I refer also to Supplementary Estimates (A) 1971/72, Appropriate Act 4. Vote 63a reads:

To increase from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 the statutory limit set up under section 18(1) of the Canadian Film Development Act—

I have a list of supplementary estimate items which have been carried by the House which I could probably take until midnight to read if I wished. These are items which are on all fours with items to which my hon. friend has taken objection. I believe we must at some point lose patience with the kind of games the hon. member for Yukon is playing with this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: If my hon. friend had a valid point of order, the time to raise it was the moment these estimates were tabled and referred to the standing committee. As Your Honour may recall, it was on a very similar occasion when these estimates were referred and not after the estmates had gone through the committee that the ruling was made to which both of us have referred. I say that if these items are deleted, not only will we take away essential services from the people of Canada, but that action will conflict, abridge and oppose precedents which have been well established in this House since the rule changes of 1968.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, even for me, we have had enough procedure tonight. However, I believe that a few more words ought to be said with respect to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). I share the sense of impatience expressed by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) and I share his concern for the programs which the hon. member on a point of order seeks to attack. Even so, if it were true that the House is being asked to do something contrary to previous rulings and contrary to our own rules, I would say the hon. member for Yukon has done us a service by raising the point of order.

I point this out because I was on the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates when we dealt with veterans affairs and I am very much aware of the dollar items we agreed to at that time. I want to say that in none of the cases, as far as I have been able to determine by looking through the books, do those dollar items amend original basic statutes. They amend previous appropriation acts.

Mr. MacEachen: Exactly.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not sure what was before us on March 10, 1971, the date to which the hon. member for Yukon referred, but I have a notion it was certain veterans legislation and that the minister of veterans affairs of that date was seeking to amend the basic acts, the War Veterans Allowance Act and the Pension Act, by the use of dollar items. Your Honour ruled that this was not proper since an attempt was being made to amend the basic statutes in which the provisions were set out. But if one looks, for example, at one of the dollar items with respect to veterans affairs, the item on page 156, we see it reads as follows:

Vote 30a—pensions—operating expenditures—to extend the purposes of veterans affairs vote 30, Appropriation Act No. 4, 1973, to amend section 3 of the Pension Act by adding thereto the following subsection—

That decision had already been made under a previous appropriation act, and I submit it is quite different from an attempt to amend the basic statute. This one happens to relate to a request of the Canada Pension Commission to be able to administer, on behalf of veterans, certain funds which had been left by veterans and others. This was completely agreed to, and my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) wants it on record that he agreed to it as well. But apart from the substance, which is a matter of some concern, I submit that the procedural point does not stand on all fours with the ruling by the Chair on March 10, 1971.

On another aspect of the matter, I agree with the statement made by the President of Privy Council that if this point was to have been raised, it should have been raised when the estimates were first tabled or in the standing committee which dealt with the estimates. To raise it now as a point of order is, in my submission, a way of importing into the House, at a time when debate is not possible, what is really a debate on substance. We are not, in fact, debating a point of order; we are debating a contention by the hon. member for Yukon that the government does not have the right to use dollar items.

I have made many speeches on the use of dollar items, and I believe those speeches have helped in curtailing the use made of them. But I stated categorically in the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, when we were dealing with veterans affairs, that in my view the dollar items in those estimates were drawn quite properly and that I was pleased to support them, as indeed were all the members of the committee, including all the Conservative members who were there that day. I submit this is not a point of order. It is, really, a point of debate in the guise of a point of order. The example given is not on all fours with the case which was the subject of previous a ruling by the Chair, and I submit the argument should not succeed.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, even though I am far from being a procedure specialist like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I have noted one thing, that is that for the second year in a row, some hon. members have played the same little game when we have come to the debate on supplies and items like those which we are discussing tonight. I believe that tonight the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) is showing bad grace and a purely negative attitude. Last year, more specifically on June 26, 1973, the same reasons and explanations were given. I think that it is time for the hon. member to put an end to this hoax and to go on to concrete action.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): To use the words of a prominent member of the government recently, the government has been caught with its pants down. I do not intend to go into the question of the merits. No matter what decision Your Honour may make, the fact remains that the House of Commons has lost the power to check government spending. Shades of C.D. Howe—"Who is going to stop us?"

Irrespective of the specific points raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), the fact remains that here are three statutes which are amended in such a way that in the absence of such amendment the ends which the estimates seek to achieve could not have been attained. The former auditor general made it quite plain: he said the House had lost control over expenditures. A statement has been made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). He knows better. That statement, one which to my amazement was supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), simply goes to establish the auditor general's point.

I shall not take up any more time. My hon. friend from the Yukon has made his point. Hon. members across the way do not care what happens to expenditures. As far as they are concerned we should amend statutes and let the items go. They are the powers that be, and nothing else matters. That is why I rose, not to deal with specific points but to rebut the improper position taken by the minister and supported by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their guidance in relation to the important point raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). The House will understand that the Chair has sympathy with the ruling which has been quoted by the hon. member for Yukon. At the time the matter was first raised in the House in March of 1971, the Chair was allowed to reserve judgment. After giving serious thought to the points raised by hon. members on that occasion—and my recollection is that as many as eight or ten members took part in the debate—the Chair made the ruling which was quoted earlier this evening. One of the relevant parts is the following:

> Since the adoption of the new rules, it seems there has been only one item with direct and specific legislative import that has been included in supplementary estimates. This particular item, included in the estimates for the year 1970-71, was allowed to go unchallenged and no point of order was raised in respect thereto. Thus, no practice has yet been established except perhaps that particular items proposing to amend directly and specifically a statute have not been included in supplementary estimates since the rules were changed in 1968 but for the lone exception just mentioned. The House therefore has not had the opportunity at this point to reaffirm the proposition that such proposals, when they are clearly intended to amend existing legislation, should come to the House by way of an amending bill rather than as an item in the supplementary estimates.

I think this was a good principle to guide the House in its consideration of legislation and estimates, and I think I have to reaffirm the principle at this time. The three items to which the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has alluded are clearly one dollar legislative items. My understanding is that the precedent to which he referred, particularly the one of June, 1973, was not a dollar item. My understanding is it was a $2 million legislative item. This is the difficulty, because the dollar legislative item is just that—it is just legislation by way of a dollar item in the estimates and I think it is not a practice which ought to be condoned and supported by the House.

The President of the Privy Council said that there are a large number of so-called dollar legislative items in the estimates. My understanding is that these are not actual dollar items which specifically amend existing legislation, but they are items which amend a previous Appropriation Act. There are many of these. In particular, before us now there are nine such items, but there is no suggestion made by the hon. member for Yukon, or indeed any member of the House or by the Chair, that these are irregular.

Hon. members might like to look at a precedent to the extent that it is relevant from the eighteenth edition of May, at page 731:

> The question has repeatedly arisen in the past whether, in a particular case, the authority given by the Appropriation Act is an adequate substitute for authorization by a specific bill.
> On the one hand, there is, so far as this question is concerned, no legal restraint on the discretion of the Crown in presenting an estimate, or on that of parliament in authorizing the expenditure provided by such an estimate by the Appropriation Act. On the other hand, the Appropriation Act is a general measure, containing a great many items, and is not adapted to defining the conditions, etc., of expenditure. Also, this Act only gives authority for a single year, and is therefore not appropriate for expenditure which is meant to continue for a period or indefinitely. There have been cases, too, in which the Appropriation Act has been used, not merely as a substitute for specific legislation, but to override the limits imposed by existing legislation.
> The Public Accounts Committee have repeatedly drawn attention in their reports to cases of what they consider the misuse of the Appropriation Act in either the above-mentioned ways, and the Treasury, in answer to such comments, have justified the practice on grounds of emergency rather than of principle.

I suggest that if such justification were put forward, it would have to be based on emergency rather than on principle. The Chair has to make a ruling on principle, and on this basis I would have to say that these three specific items are not properly before the House.

My understanding of what the hon. member for Yukon says is that the matter to be considered is this. As was done on a previous occasion when the principle was recognized by the Chair that no attempt should be made to legislate by way of dollar items, the matter was still put, and an inquiry came from the Chair whether there was consent to proceed with the item in any event, and that consent was forthcoming. If that is my understanding of the situation this evening, then I would inquire from the House whether it is the sense of the House that we allow these three items to be included in the estimates and in the motion which would be put to the House at this time.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, we want to make it abundantly clear that in raising this point of order we are in no way opposed to any of the three items. But we do want to make it equally clear that the rights, prerogatives and privileges of the opposition and of parliament itself must be preserved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nielsen: We wholeheartedly welcome your ruling in this regard. We are prepared to consent to the inclusion of these items in the Appropriation Act on the basis of the citation that Your Honour has given us from the eighteenth edition of May, page 731. I suggest that is the way the government should proceed, and they will have our consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will put the motion again.

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) moves:

That Supplementary Estimates (A) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1974, laid before the House November 7, 1973, except the item disposed of earlier this day, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-239, for granting to Her Majesty certains sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, be read the first time and be printed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

Mr. Drury moved that Bill C-239, for granting to Her Majesty certains sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1974, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. McCleave in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Scarborough West rising on a point of order?

Mr. Harney: Mr. Chairman, I hope we have not had a surfeit of points of order tonight. Mine will be very, very brief. I have raised it before and some hon. members know what it is about. When I raised the point of order previously, on an occasion very much like this, there was general approval of the point but so far nothing has been done about the matter. My point is simply this: in every list presented to the members of this House, the alphabetical arrangement, as in the present schedule, is according to alphabetical order as the titles appear in English.

An hon. Member: So what?

Mr. Harney: "So what", an hon. member says. The "so what" is this. For a member whose only language is French, there is no order to the schedule. He has to go to the English schedule to find the item he is looking for. I think that once in a while, Mr. Chairman, we should at least alternate the procedure or provide a listing which would make it as easy for the French-speaking members to find an item as it is for the English-speaking members. At the very least, if we proceeded occasionally in French we would have "affaires" first where they properly belong.

• (2340)

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, concerning this point of order, I would like to support vigourously what the hon. member has just said.

I remember that a number of months ago, at the very time that the same ridiculous procedure was being considered, the Social Credit Party of Canada was fighting in order to get a copy of the legislation. We know that for more than 100 years, members had not even been entitled to such a copy so that they could not follow what was going on in the House. Now that we are entitled to it, they keep on writing the table of contents of the appendix in the English alphabetical order so that French-speaking members are once again being penalized. This is why, Mr. Chairman, I want to support vigourously what the hon. member has said so that at last we really get to follow in the House a bilingual procedure in keeping with Canada.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would be prepared to support the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Scarborough West, but I would suggest that we do not bother with the list at all. There is no discussion on them and there is no real reason to find any of these items, so what the hell difference does it make whether they are in the bill or not?

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Chairman: Carried on division.

Mr. Nielsen: I believe I heard the Chairman say that the bill was carried on division. There is no division on this side of the House.

Bill reported.

Mr. Drury moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass. Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask what the business is for tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: The business for tomorrow was announced last Thursday, namely, continuation of the energy supplies emergency bill, to be followed by the Canada Pension Plan bill.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, the business might have been announced, but this government is changing things so fast that it does not even know what it is doing. Therefore, we have to keep an eye on things around here.

On motion of Mr. MacEachen the House adjourned at 11.49 p.m.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED HEAD TAX ON TRAVELLERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the administrative difficulties that will arise from the implementation of the head tax on travellers that has been proposed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand), I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the House instruct the Minister of Transport to delay the implementation of the proposed airport charge in order to allow time for consideration of alternative methods of financing airport expenses, and to allow further consultation between industry representatives and officials of his department.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion is proposed under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

FOOD PRICES REVIEW BOARD

PROPOSED TERMINATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I rise to propose a motion in a case of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the costly irrelevance and ineffectiveness of the Food Prices Review Board in regard to the problem of the Canadian consumer who is struggling to feed himself and his family against a 1.2 per cent increase in the consumer price index in the last month alone and a staggering 18.5 per cent increase in his food costs over the last 12 months. With consent, Mr. Speaker, I therefore propose to move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That his House recommends that the term of appointment of the five commissioners of the Food Prices Review Board be terminated by the government on December 31, 1973, instead of the present date of December 31, 1974, and this House urges that the consequential savings in public money of over $1 million be used to assist those Canadians who are unable to buy adequate and nutritious food at present food price levels.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has procedural reservations about the form of a motion of this kind. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley knows, as do other hon. members, that Standing Order 43 is used in very special circumstances and that if members choose to use the provisions of Standing Order 43 they should not take advantage of the rules to put argument on the record which, under the practice of the House, cannot be answered by hon. members who may not agree with the argument put forward in support of the motion. Having said that, I will ask whether there is unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There does not appear to be unanimity. Therefore the hon. member's proposed motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX INCREASE—REQUEST FOR CLEAR PICTURE OF GOVERNMENT'S ECONOMIC POLICIES AND NEW MEASURES TO COMBAT INFLATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the increase in the consumer price index of 9.3 per cent from November, 1972, to November, 1973, I should like to ask whether he is going to come out of hiding before the recess and present a clear picture to the House of the government's economic policies with regard to this enormously shattering experience ordinary Canadians are undergoing?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been visible but the hon. gentleman has chosen to direct his question elsewhere in recent weeks. I am glad to reply to him at this time and say that of course price rises continue to be disturbing, but the recent figures again reflect a rise in food prices which is the result of an imbalance again in supply and demand. I have dealt with this issue—

Mr. McGrath: Hogwash!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I have dealt with this issue thoroughly at every opportunity we have been given in the House of Commons. The government's policies have been well illustrated to the House.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the continuing escalation in the rate of inflation in this country on a year to year basis, and month by month, with the rate increase now at almost 10 per cent, is it the intention of the minister to announce any new measures? As this condition is spreading throughout the whole economy and is not simply confined to food as the minister would like to suggest, is he going to introduce any effective measures or is he going to let inflation run away in this country?

● (1410)

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the thrust of inflation continues to be an imbalance in supply and demand in food commodities, in non-food commodities and in fuel, none of which, as I have indicated to the hon. gentleman and his colleagues, is subject to the type of policy he has been advocating. What the government has done instead is to introduce policies that will increase the supply and thereby render more chance of an equilibrium in prices in this country and, second, moderate the erosion of prices on the purchasing power, and the savings of Canadians by buttressing their incomes. More cash has been made disposable by commodity tax reductions, and by protection of families in the lower and fixed income scales by raising and escalating old age pensions and raising and escalating family allowances and that type of measure.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. When is the Minister of Finance finally going to be prepared to recognize that the policies he is following or not following are leading the country and ordinary Canadians to disaster?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings on a supplementary.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX INCREASE—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF SPECIFIC TAX INCENTIVES TO INCREASE PRODUCTION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister advise the House when the government intends to introduce specific tax incentives aimed at inducing an increase in production which will bring it up approximately to the level of the increased demand present today so that inflation may be controlled and so that the skyrocketing cost of living may be stopped?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is some substance in the hon. gentleman's question to the extent that he recognizes that the problem at the moment in the economy is not on the demand side but on the shortage of supply. He recognizes quite properly that we must increase productive facilities. What he fails to remember are the measures brought forward by the government and enacted by parliament by way of corporate tax incentives to manufacturing and processing industries which have had the effect of increasing capital investment intentions in this country by 15 per cent in 1973 over 1972, by an estimated 20 per cent in 1974 over 1973, and in the manufacturing and processing industry by over 40 per cent.

[Mr. McGrath.]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the measures which the minister has mentioned—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hees: —obviously are not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether the hon. member was going to make a speech rather than ask a question. I know the hon. member never does that. The Chair will, of course, recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, then the hon. member for York South and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue who have supplementaries, and then we will continue with further supplementaries on this very important subject. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Hees: I was simply saying that as the measures mentioned by the minister are not working and as it is now evident that the government does not intend to introduce these very necessary taxation incentives, will the minister advise the House when he is going to replace his present indolence with action and get the economy of this country moving? When is he going to do that?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX INCREASE—REQUEST THAT THERE BE NO FURTHER TAX CONCESSIONS TO CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since the tax concessions which he introduced and which were passed by the House with the assistance of Conservative members obviously have not worked and cannot work, will the minister assure the House that he does not intend to present the corporations of this country with another half a billion dollars that will again be wasted?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I could not disagree more thoroughly with the hon. gentleman's preamble.

INCREASE IN COST OF HOUSING—POSSIBILITY OF NEW MEASURES UNDER NATIONAL HOUSING ACT TO MEET NEED OF PEOPLE ON LOWER INCOMES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary on the general issue of the cost of living to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Based on the fact that the cost of housing went up about .8 of one per cent and the statement by the president of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation appealing to builders in this country to build homes for lower income people, may I ask the minister whether this urgent need in Canada will be met by any new and more effective measures by his department under the National Housing Act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the assisted home ownership plan which parliament passed is designed specifically to fill the needs of low and moderate income people.

An hon. Member: Is that all you have?

Mr. Basford: It is beginning to take effect and it is working extremely well in most parts of the country. The statement to which the hon. member referred concerns the metropolitan Toronto area where the president of CMHC was making a very special appeal to builders to take advantage of the program.

INCREASE IN COST OF HOUSING—SUGGESTED FISCAL ACTION TO STOP GOUGING BY DEVELOPERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I put a final supplementary question, again to the Minister of Finance. It has been pointed out in statistics and in statements by leaders of the building industry that the price of houses is almost totally unrelated to the cost of land, to the cost of labour or to the cost of materials because of the way in which home builders and developers are taking advantage of the immense demand in this country and are gouging home buyers beyond reason. May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he will give consideration, if he has not already done so, to an effective fiscal measure to stop this housing gouging of people who try to buy homes by developers?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I take into full account the statement that the hon. gentleman has just made and of course I will continue to consult my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

SUGGESTED DISTRIBUTION OF DIVIDEND BY BANK OF CANADA TO OFFSET FOOD PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance.

Since food prices have increased by 9.3 per cent while wages have risen by 3 to 5 per cent, would the minister seriously consider the distribution of a national dividend by the Bank of Canada in order to gear the workers' purchasing power to the actual cost of living?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the remedy suggested by the hon. member is the appropriate one.

[English]

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION TO BRING IMMEDIATE RELIEF TO CANADIANS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the annual increase in the cost of food is 18.4 per cent, which represents the highest increase since 1951, and in view of the fact parliament may adjourn for the Christmas recess very soon, may I ask the Prime Minister what steps the government will take to bring immediate relief to Canadians by lowering the price of food in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question was already given.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the Prime Minister's answer. Perhaps I can redirect my question or perhaps the Prime Minister might want to answer it now. I will put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether his government intends to act to do something about the disgraceful rise in food prices in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is showing contempt for the most serious problem facing this country today. Notwithstanding the fact he may have received the support of the NDP last night, that does not relieve him of his responsibility to do something about inflation in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: It is his responsibility to answer this question right now.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. member that I have answered both his questions but that the shouting on his own side has prevented him from hearing the answers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: I just want to add, Mr. Speaker, that it is not my habit to raise my voice, as the hon. member does, to cover the shouting as he has to do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I want to say with regard—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crouse: Who's shouting now?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Now who's shouting?

Mr. Drury: Hees!

Mr. Stanfield: They have done their job over there. They sold out their province the other day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I just want to say to the Prime Minister that I watched him very carefully and he deliberately—

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Stanfield: I am speaking on a point of order. He deliberately just said one or two words very quietly. I was listening with my earphone on—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —and I would not have been able to hear him with my earphone if the House had been quiet. He did it deliberately to affront the House and to try to create a situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will not attempt to rule on the points of order that have been raised, but certainly there is a great deal of noise. I am not sure whether it comes from my left or my right or from where it comes, but it is difficult to hear both the questions and the answers that are given. I think hon. members might want to give members a chance to ask their questions and ministers an opportunity to reply so that we could all hear what is being said.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order. We have already spent five minutes on this matter, trying to get on with the first question. I would think that with a bit of good will we might be able to continue now with the question period.

Mr. Hees: My point of order is that if the Prime Minister would answer the questions put to him by the representatives of the people, serious questions wanting to know what the government is going to do to stop the rise in the cost of living we could get on with the question period a lot farther than we have. He sits in his chair and he sulks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: He is an absolute disgrace.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Hees: If any of you guys want to step outside, I am ready for that too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not a very valid point of order. Obviously it is a continuation of the dispute. I suggest to hon. members that they should forget about points of order for a moment and return to the question period which is being exhausted slowly but surely by these points of order.

Mr. Benjamin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is a request to you, Sir, to be good enough to deduct one question to be asked by a member of the Official Opposition each time they rise on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: You are not making the decisions.

Mr. Speaker: I will deduct one point of order from the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, perhaps if you deducted the New Democratic Party from the opposition you might be doing this country a real service because they show no interest whatsoever in the people of Canada and this inflationary situation. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, who sits there smugly and complacently, if he can now give the House and the country the assurance that the government is prepared to act immediately to bring relief to Canadians who are suffering as a consequence of the 18 per cent annual increase in the cost of food?

Mr. Hees: Come on, little Lord Fauntleroy. Get on your feet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I believe the House and the country are entitled to know, especially on the eve of the adjournment of parliament for perhaps a six week recess, just exactly what this government proposes to do about the most serious problem facing the country today, namely, the 9 per cent runaway rate of inflation and the 18 per cent annual increase in the cost of food.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway has been recognized by the Chair.

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF EXCESS PROFITS TAX

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I have no intention of trying to outshout other hon. members, although I could.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): In view of the dramatic increase in profits in the food industry so far this year, for example, the 260 per cent profit increase on a 16 per cent in sales recorded by Ogilvy Flour Mills for the past six months, instead of the proposed handouts and incentives—

An hon. Member: By the Tories.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Yes, by the Tories—does the minister intend to introduce legislation to institute an excess profits tax to prevent further exploitation of the consumer?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is the type of budgetary measure that, if introduced, would be announced at the appropriate time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Joliette wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. La Salle: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER ACTION IN TERMS OF MONETARY, FISCAL AND EXCHANGE RATE POLICIES TO EXERCISE CONTROL

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that OECD studies now show that about 70 per cent of Canada's inflation is domestically induced and as the research department of the Bank of Montreal has stated that in their opinion a large part of inflation in Canada is homemade, does the minister still contend that there is nothing that can be done in terms of monetary policy, fiscal policy and exchange rate policy in Canada with regard to the rate of inflation that is taking place?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is the government's position that the fiscal and monetary policies are about right in the present state of the economy and that the prime thrust of inflation is still induced by forces on the demand side from world-wide source.

Mr. Hees: And the weather is bad.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In all sincerity I wish to ask the Minister of Finance how he can possibly contend that our monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies, which are the levers that determine inflation and employment in this country, are correct when we have the inflation rate that we have and when it is now said by most students that two-thirds to 70 per cent of our inflation is coming internally and not externally?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I disagree with the hon. gentleman's contention that most observers of the economy have the same opinion as he has.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question would have been for the Prime Minister but in view of the fact he is not taking questions today—

An hon. Member: He is sulking.

Mr. Trudeau: You are not taking the answers.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —I will direct it to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion who I hope will be concerned about this problem because it affects the Atlantic provinces. In view of the report today from Statistics Canada that the unemployment rate in the Atlantic region now stands at 9.6 per cent—

An hon. Member: Almost as high as inflation.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): —seasonally adjusted, and in view of the fact that as of December 31 this year the special development incentives provided in the minister's Regional Development Incentives Act will expire under section 9(3)(a), is the minister giving serious consideration to reviewing that expiration and has he initiated consultations with the appropriate provinces in order to consider whether action can be taken to alleviate the very serious situation in the Atlantic region?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, the provinces and I have had such discussions. While I do not want to upstage them in terms of any announcements that ought to be made jointly—I think I have been consistent in making all announcements that have to do with the provinces jointly and have not tried at any point to upstage them—and do not want to be specific, I can hold out hope to the hon. member that the extension he is referring to with regard to the Regional Development Incentive Act probably will be announced before the end of the year.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER LOCAL INITIATIVES PROJECTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for that assurance and I hope I will have additional success, in view of the short term measures that might be taken, with a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the minister has said consistently that the allocation of local initiatives grants was related to the unemployment situation in the country, is his department giving serious consideration to the need for further projects in the Atlantic provinces because of the very large growth in unemployment there contrasted with other parts of the country?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that obviously would depend on the decision whether or not to provide additional funds for the Local Initiatives Program, which decision has not yet been taken.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISPOSITION OF UNUSED PORTION OF GEORGE DERBY HOSPITAL SITE, BURNABY—PARTICIPATION BY MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIVES IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the fact the minister is now in the process of disposing of over 200 acres of prime property formerly owned by the municipality of Burnaby, and in view of the fact this property was acquired for a nominal amount because of the world war II emergency, would the minister at least invite representatives of the municipality to participate in those negotiations with a view to returning this land to the municipality?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have met people from the municipality in question and discussed what the hon. member is suggesting. Negotiations have been in progress now for possibly two years and are still being carried on. No decision has as yet been arrived at.

Mr. Leggatt: As the Department of National Defence returned the Jericho defence property in Vancouver for a nominal sum, would the minister now consult with others in the cabinet, particularly with the Minister of National Defence, with a view to developing some kind of consistent government policy in returning these world war II emergency properties to the municipalities?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, there is no comparison between the George Derby institution which looks after veterans and the munitions dump to which the hon. member has referred. There is no comparison.

PROPOSED SUPERTANKER PORT ON ST. LAWRENCE AND IMPORT OF OIL FROM SAUDI ARABIA—DISCUSSION WITH QUEBEC

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Prime Minister?

Can he tell us whether he has approached the Quebec government with a view to dissuading it from reaching an agreement with Saudi Arabia on the construction of an oil supertanker port, and the purchase of the oil required for consumption in Quebec?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN EMBASSIES IN ALL ARAB OIL PRODUCING COUNTRIES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Andras.]

Can he tell the House whether he intends to open Canadian embassies in all Arab oil producing countries in the near future since Arab countries without oil already have them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBILITY OF NEW POLICIES TO RECTIFY DISLOCATIONS INVOLVING INTEREST AND MORTGAGE RATES AND RENT INCREASES

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, as we seem to be getting some results from the Prime Minister, I will try this question on him. Is the government at least considering the introduction of policies designed to rectify the many economic dislocations in this country involving escalating interest rates, mortgage rates beyond the reach of many Canadians and rent increases that are at the origin of many domestic concerns, all caused by permitting a high rate of sustained inflation and encouraging a high level of unemployment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to consider every measure that will permit us to improve the economic situation.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED PASSENGER HEAD TAX—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the inflationary impact and the administrative difficulties which the proposed airport head tax will create, may I ask the minister if he is giving any consideration to the request by the Air Transport Association of Canada for a delay in the implementation of the proposal in order to provide sufficient time for the consideration of viable alternatives inasmuch as the proposal as outlined by the minister is administratively unworkable under present conditions?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think this request is not reasonable. This subject was discussed at length in 1969. The problem was, at what time should this new tax be implemented. We think it is about time, if we do not want the general public to support the burden of the new tax, to put it on right now.

Mr. Mazankowski: Has the minister received a telegram from the Air Transport Association of Canada outlining their objections to this new proposal and, if so, can he indicate the nature of his reply?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have received this wire. I saw it about an hour ago. The reply has not been sent, but it will be sent today.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—SUGGESTED BETTER CO-ORDINATION BETWEEN DEPARTMENTS INVOLVED TO ACHIEVE MORE UNIFIED ACTION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can we anticipate any announcement by the government which will result in better co-ordination between departments whose policies have a direct bearing on inflation—I am thinking of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Treasury Board, the Department of Finance and the Department of Manpower and Immigration particularly—so they can act in a more unified way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we are very concerned about the importance of consultation between all departments. We discussed this matter again today in the cabinet committee. I cannot say that there will be any announcement made in this regard, but I do hope we will be showing more and more that the government's various policies are interconnected and interdependent.

Mr. MacLean: I thank the Prime Minister for his reply. Has the Prime Minister established a cabinet committee to deal with the problem of inflation and try to contain it?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, this is dealt with in the cabinet committee which deals with all the aspects of economic policy because we want to make sure that in the ways in which we deal with inflation we act in full awareness of the other aspects of the economy.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Two weeks ago the minister said in the House that he was considering the possibility of granting additional funds to counter the lack of money for local initiative projects. Today being December 11 and the unemployment situation having grown even worse, can the minister tell us whether he has made a decision and, if not, when he will be able to tell the House if there will be additional funds or not?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I answered a first question a few moments ago. No such decision has been made but I expect that to be done shortly.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED COMPLAINT BY MINISTER OF THE ENVIRONMENT CONCERNING COVERAGE GIVEN GOVERNMENT IN BRITISH COLUMBIA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Peter Reilly (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Is he now prepared to make public, of his own volition, the text of the letter he wrote to the Prime Minister on November 8 complaining about CBC coverage of his government in British Columbia and demanding discipline and to indicate precisely what kind of discipline he had in mind?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of the Environment): No, I am not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, first, I did not hear the minister's answer; second, I have a supplementary. My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is he prepared to assure the House that it is not the government's policy to interfere in the affairs of the CBC because it criticizes or allows criticism of government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I must apologize. I missed the previous question to which this one is now related.

Mr. Stanfield: Was it because there was too much noise on the Prime Minister's side of the House?

Mr. Trudeau: No, it is because I was speaking to the minister sitting next to me about more important things.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do wish to assure the hon. member that it is not our practice to interfere with the CBC.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Reilly: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I want to ask the Prime Minister precisely what it is in his view that transcends the importance in this country of freedom of speech?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer that, let me point out to the House that the previous question was not addressed to me and therefore I felt entitled to talk to the minister by my side while that question was being asked and answered. That is why I said I could not refer to the previous question. As far as the statement in general that was made is concerned, I did give the answer.

Mr. Hees: The Prime Minister is leaning over and speaking to the reporter instead of talking to the House.

Mr. Nielsen: The old arrogance is still there.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to be accused of arrogance because I refuse to shout in this House to cover the noise that the hon. member is making.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AIR TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO DIRECTIVE TO MINISTERS AND DEPUTY MINISTERS TO USE COMMERCIAL AIRLINES IN ORDER TO SAVE FUEL

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In the interest of saving aviation fuel, has the minister, his department or any other agency of government issued a directive asking ministers and deputy ministers to use commercial airline services rather than government planes?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. All ministers were required to use Department of Transport aircraft only when necessary.

USE OF GOVERNMENT PLANE BY PRIME MINISTER FOR TRIP TO VANCOUVER

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my supplementary to the right hon. Prime Minister. By what authority was the government Jetstar plane used last weekend to fly to and from Vancouver, consuming 6,000 gallons of gasoline? Why was it used rather than other services?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I established the practice five years ago, and I intend to continue applying it unless the House decides to censure me, of using government aircraft for my travels within this country and, when possible, abroad in order to ensure that the inconvenience which would be caused to public users, if I were to use public transportation, would be avoided. There are many other reasons for doing this, Mr. Speaker, but I want to underline the one which is of particular importance to the public. When I have occasionally used public carriers it has happened that the carrier was delayed, sometimes for many hours, because when it is known that I am going to make a flight it does happen that there are bomb scares and it is necessary to keep the aircraft on the ground for a matter of hours. It has also happened that certain citizens have complained and have even asked the government to pay them damages for the time they have been caused to wait because of the fact I was to fly on that aircraft.

Mr. Hales: I thank the right hon. member for his explanation, but it is reported the aircraft was used so the Prime Minister could attend a Liberal rally in Vancouver. Will the cost of the use of this plane be charged to the consolidated revenue fund or will the cost be paid out of the Prime Minister's own travelling expenses?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, as a matter of putting the record straight I would want to indicate that I not only attended a fund raising dinner, which was extremely successful and which caused a lot of funds to be raised for the Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Trudeau: —but I also attended a public function, which had nothing to do with the party, at the city hall in Vancouver having to do with the Jericho Beach transaction and also having to do with the trip of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —to China as a result of my very successful trip to China.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Finally, I attended another public function in Chilliwack the next day, namely, a Santa Claus parade, which was important to the community of Chilliwack. If it had the by-product of helping our friend, Jerry Pringle, I am happy about that too.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will have noted that the question period will expire in about two minutes. It has not been a very productive question period.

Mr. Tom Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister about the criteria he has laid down regarding the use of planes and so on for the office that he holds. Will the Prime Minister now say that in the present emergency he will be practicing conservation in the use of energy?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, before taking this trip to Vancouver I did suggest to my staff that we should go commercially. They verified that with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who gave me a direct preference on their part that I not go commercially because it was well known that I was going to Vancouver. As I indicated a moment ago, the dinner had been widely publicized. When it is well known that I am travelling on a commercial aircraft, this is precisely the time when there are bomb scares, generally by crackpots because none has actually gone off under my feet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are in Scarborough rather than Edmonton.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF WAIVING OF SALES TAX ON PURCHASES OF EQUIPMENT BY PUBLIC TRANSPQRTATION COMMISSIONS

Mr. John Harney (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the need to conserve energy resources dictates in part the use of public transit should be encouraged over the use of the private automobile where practicable, is consideration being given to waiving the federal sales tax as it applies to purchases of equipment by public transportation commissions? If not, why not?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in view of the representations the hon. member has added to his earlier remarks in the House, that is something I will take into consideration.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

QUEBEC AND ATLANTIC PROVINCES—IMMEDIATE MEASURES TO COMBAT INFLATION AND UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is based on the figures for inflation issued this morning and is directed to the Prime Minister. As the rate of unemployment and inflation is incredibly high in Quebec and the eastern provinces of Canada and is affecting low income people in particular in those areas, apart from the government's two-price policy for petroleum products what immediate measures are to be taken by the government to come to the aid of citizens in Quebec and the rest of eastern Canada, especially low income people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how immediate the hon. member means, but if he refers to the record he will see that just last week the government proposed and introduced legislation to ensure that the five eastern provinces in particular, to which the hon. member referred, would get the overwhelming share of the $190 million which was added to the budgets of the provinces by the federal government through our new equalization formula.

Some hon. Members: Oh oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham on a supplementary and then call orders of the day.

REQUEST THAT AGENDA OF FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE IN JANUARY BE WIDENED TO INCLUDE ECONOMIC MATTERS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the continuing utterances of the Minister of Finance in the House every month that the economic situation is disturbing to him, which is tantamount to admitting failure of the government's policies, and in view of the fact there are obviously no ideas coming from the government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should ask a question rather than make a speech. We have reached the end of the question period. The hon. member was recognized as we reached the end. He should ask his question because I will have to call orders of the day.

Mr. Lawrence: Because energy supply and energy prices will inevitably affect the inflation and unemployment mess, will the Prime Minister consider widening the scope of the first ministers' conference in January to include a comprehensive study not just of energy but of the whole economic mess this country is in at present?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with that question in a positive way, but I would first point out to the hon. member that there is another interpretation, which is the right one, of the stance of the Minister of Finance, that no matter how much better Canada is performing compared with other countries, he still wants us to improve.

● (1450)

As for the suggestion that has been made, it is a very valid one. I must say it has been anticipated by the government in the sense that the energy conference dates I have proposed are immediately before the conference of Ministers of Finance to be attended by the federal Minister of Finance and provincial Ministers of Finance. They will, of course, be wanting to discuss the very matters suggested by the hon. member, at which time the federal minister will give the usual leadership to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might ask a quick supplementary, following which I will call orders of the day.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this suggestion comes, of course, from one of the premiers and I understand that more are on the way. Can the Prime Minister tell the House if he has replied to the telegram he has already received about this matter from one of the premiers?

Mr. Trudeau: There must be a misunderstanding here, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. member is referring to the meeting on energy matters, he is, of course, correct in the sense that the provinces at the interprovincial meeting last summer decided to put this matter before us and to ask for a federal-provincial conference on the subject.

My response was twofold. First of all, I said that we had indeed asked that the subject of energy be put on the agenda of the Western Economic Opportunities Conference but this had been refused by the provinces themselves. Second, I said that we had already scheduled a meeting of the ministers responsible for energy. This was held a few weeks ago in Toronto and I think I wrote to the premiers—perhaps this is the letter the hon. member is referring to—who had asked for meetings at the first ministers' level, suggesting that as soon as the Toronto meeting was over I would be prepared to hear their suggestions regarding a date and an agenda for the first ministers' conference. I think I established a deadline of around December 7 to have responses from them. I have now written to them formally proposing the dates of January 23 and 24, and I am waiting for their response as to those dates and as to the agenda.

An hon. Member: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of additional supplementaries have been asked and in allowing the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham to ask his question and supplementary we have gone five minutes past the end of the question period. Perhaps we might pursue this matter tomorrow when I will recognize hon. members. Orders of the day.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Friday, December 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the debate on Friday afternoon of Bill C-236, I had spent some time indicating the great difficulty that had been created by this government's so-called oil policy because of the increasing division in this country, not only over assurance of supply of petroleum products but also over the cost of those petroleum products to the Canadian people. When the debate concluded on Friday afternoon I expected, as I think did many hon. members, that many of the questions that had not been answered by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), who unfortunately was not with us at that time, or by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), arising from the statement he made on Thursday, would make themselves clear over the weekend or possibly during the debate that took place yesterday. As all hon. members of the House and all Canadians now realize, not only has the situation not been clarified, but in some way the confusion and anxiety has increased.

Even a minister so directly responsible for the economic and social development of eastern Canada, Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), was unable to say anything more except this, and I quote from his speech as reported at page 8590 of Hansard, the second column:

> Prices are being kept down where possible, and those in greatest need are being helped. If other steps are found to be necessary, they will be taken.
> [Mr. Trudeau.]

That, as I read it, is the sum and substance of this minister's response to the very great economic and social hardships being faced by the people of eastern Canada. As I said on Friday, since September of this year the cost of home heating fuels for those living in the Atlantic provinces had increased by early December by some 20 per cent, and the increase shows no signs of abating. With respect to the present price differential that exists between eastern and western Canada, on an average basis it is something like 40 per cent. Consumers of home heating fuels in Quebec and Atlantic Canada are paying 40 per cent more for those fuels than their fellow citizens who are able to make use of domestic petroleum products. I want it to be abundantly clear that in the days and weeks to come this government will have a great deal to answer for in the perpetuation of this inequity. It is one of the most disturbing ironies that, in introducing his remarks on Thursday, the Prime Minister should refer to this kind of oil policy as a one Canada oil policy. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Let me just give the House an example of the situation as it existed a few days ago compared with the situation existing in eastern Canada in September of this year. Beginning in St. John's, Newfoundland, which for some time now has had unusually high heating oil costs, the cost of a gallon of home heating fuel in September of this year was 31 cents; by December it had risen 3.7 cents to 34.7 cents a gallon. In Halifax, the price in September was 27.3 cents; by December the price had risen to 33.2 cents, an increase of 5.9 cents a gallon. The situation in Saint John and Fredericton I explained on Friday, so I will not repeat it. In Charlottetown, the price in September was 29.4 cents; by December it had risen to 35.3 cents. In Quebec City—I hope some of my colleagues opposite are listening closely—the price in September was 28 cents even; by December it had risen to 33.9 cents, an increase of 5.9 cents. In Montreal, the price was 27.5 cents in September; it has increased to 33.4 cents in December, an increase of almost 6 cents a gallon.

By comparison, the price of home heating fuels in Toronto, almost at the end of the distribution line for domestic oil, was 26.3 cents in September; by December it had risen exactly one cent, to 27.3 cents. The present cost of home heating fuel in Winnipeg, as reported I think by the Mohawk Oil Company, stands at 24.7 cents a gallon. If that does not represent one of the great inequities of recent time in a two Canada oil policy that has been proclaimed by the government, then I do not know what does. That this government, which has such a large number of members representing an area that is going to suffer increasingly this winter from high fuel costs, should be supported in its policy by my hon. friends to my left is just inconceivable. I wonder how much longer the country can accept the rationalization of this government that this policy makes good sense for the people of this country.

We have in effect two oil policies in which the price of domestic oil is now being ostensibly frozen for the duration of this winter, but the government says basically it is helpless to do anything about the cost of home heating fuels in eastern Canada. I know the Prime Minister said there were two things in particular his government had done that would be of great assistance, and he mentioned specifically the Canada Assistance Plan. He talked about the benefits which would be there for the provinces which found it necessary to expand their programs to assist those people who were receiving welfare. We know only too well, in the first instance, that the very provinces which are faced with low income and aid-receiving families are the ones that are even less capable of increasing their own 50 per cent share in order to provide any valid assistance in this day and age of rapidly increasing costs.

Not only that, we know too that in this whole area of Quebec and Atlantic Canada, a great many of the people who will be very directly affected are not the people who would normally benefit from receiving Canada Assistance Plan payments. They are the people on very low incomes, marginal incomes one might even describe them, and I have noted no comment from the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources or the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion indicating in what way these people would be assisted.

Mr. Stanfield: And small industry.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Yes, small industry, as my leader suggests, is in exactly the same position. Perhaps no place is more adversely affected than Prince Edward Island which has a total reliance for its energy on petroleum production. All the electricity used in Prince Edward Island comes from thermo-generating plants at the present time, and up to this date the cost of electricity in Prince Edward Island alone has increased by some 25 per cent.

The response of the government is not good enough. It is not good enough for the Prime Minister to talk about the way in which indexing of the guaranteed income supplement, old age security programs or even family allowances will be of particular benefit when we know in the first instance that indexing is not carried out on a regional basis but on a national one. For the life of me, I find it is almost impossible to believe that the Prime Minister would talk about indexing as being an equitable way to deal with these rapidly rising fuel costs for one part of the country when indexing will automatically be done on a national basis.

More than that, the whole concept of indexing means basically that in the index as it is produced every month there will be a significant factor as a basis for adjusting these various social assistance programs, but such is not the case. In the first instance there is certainly a lag time in these indices which would mean that by the time there was any response whatsoever on a quarterly basis we would be long past the point of basic need. Second, because it occupies only a very small proportion of the over-all consumer price index, some 5.3 per cent, and because the establishment of that amount under the consumer price index took place at a time when home heating costs were a much smaller proportion of the domestic budget, it would take literally years for Statistics Canada to make an adjustment in the home heating costs component in the over-all consumer price index. I wonder who the Prime Minister thinks he is fooling when he says that indexing of old age security and other social security programs will be of some direct benefit to those affected by high petroleum costs, particularly home heating. This is virtually an impossibility, and I would suggest to you that if the Prime Minister has given it any thought at all he knows that it is.

What is his final response? His final response is, and here I quote from his speech of last Thursday:

> The federal government recognizes that all these higher payments will not in themselves in all cases offset the increase in oil prices, especially in the eastern provinces.

What a generous recognition! What a perceptive remark! He went on to state:

> Something more may well be required. This is a further matter I will raise at the meeting of first ministers.

That is the Prime Minister's final solution to the rapidly rising costs in eastern Canada. He is going to lay this matter before a federal-provincial conference sometime in the latter part of January. That will be quite a comfort to the millions of men, women and children who live in eastern Canada and who may find it increasingly difficult to meet their home heating fuel bills. This is the response of this government with regard to this major situation in eastern Canada.

I think it is high time this government woke up to its real responsibilities. This is not just an issue which divides political parties in debate in this Chamber. In recent days we have seen, and if people have been following the newspapers they have read, that the concept of doing something now is supported by the premiers of other political parties as well. The Premier of Nova Scotia said in a speech to the legislature a few days ago:

> I agree, as I have said, that there should be price support, but I feel very strongly that it should come from the national level.

Even more recently, the Premier of Nova Scotia, responding to the Prime Minister's remarks of Thursday, is reported to have said that:

> —he regretted there had been no indication the federal government would use its "tremendous resources" to prevent fuel prices in the five Eastern provinces from further increasing.

I believe the government has a basic responsibility, and the leader of our party indicated some weeks ago what action it could take rather than just raising its hands and saying it is helpless to act in this situation. The government has indicated that it was a prisoner of international economics and political wheeling and dealing over which it had no control. There should be a realization, in the first instance, that it has a basic responsibility to all this country and not just a part of it, and a realization that as a result of the very rapid rise in the cost of petroleum products in eastern Canada the government is increasing its own tax revenues. This is surely one of the shameful aspects of the situation. On the one hand, it says it can do nothing and it is helpless in this situation, except to use some kind of general moral suasion, yet on the other hand, it is quite willing to take increasing federal tax revenues because of the rapid rise in the cost and the necessary utilization of these products.

If this government does not have the imagination to use some of these excess profits, and even forgo some of its tax revenues until it has adequately prepared a pricing policy for this country, then it certainly should no longer set itself up as having some kind of national oil policy. The national oil policy it is inflicting on this country at the moment will cause increasing economic hardship and, what is even more unfortunate for this country, a great deal of disunity and division.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (York North): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and thank you colleagues. Much of what has been discussed in this debate so far reflects our prime concern in respect of the control of our resources, keeping our homes and institutions heated and maintaining an adequate supply of gasoline for our cars. These are important and overriding considerations which I understand, and I share hon. members' concern, but we dare not overlook or treat lightly the other problems and opportunities presented to us in the manufacturing and processing sectors of our economy.

● (1510)

I bring forward this aspect of the subject at this time because of my background in this field, and more particularly because the petrochemical industry has perhaps the most significant growth factor and one that is future oriented. This involves hydrocarbons and fossil fuel derivatives extracted from oil, and gas and coal, which have resulted in new industries and revolutionized others. The potential of this industry for future growth is almost limitless, and we are now entering a unique position in which we can be world leaders because of our relative abundance of basic fossil fuels. These are not without limit, but if carefully and intelligently allocated will provide a multiplier effect because of byproduct or downstream processing and manufacturing which is perhaps unmatched by any other resource we possess. The gross product of this industry is currently $580 million, employing some 7,600 people, mostly skilled and highly paid people. Indirectly, employment and dollar volume is many times that. The multiplier effect of the basic derivatives is very high. The figures I have show a multiplier effect of 139.9. That is the multiplier of the dollar product from the basic material which in this case would represent a market value of $8.1 billion.

On ethylene alone there is a market value of $4.5 billion. That is at the market place level. This does not include some $220 million of imports to this country which are still somewhere in the range of 40 per cent for the petrochemical industry. Therefore, those multipliers are extremely great in this particular resource field and this resource which we have. The projection is that by the year 2000 the dollar volume of the petrochemical industry will reach $20 billion, which could be theoretically $200 billion or greater in the market place. The ingredients for pharmaceuticals represent a relatively small volume but are substantial in dollar terms and critical to world supply and health services.

The development of synthetics or plastics has opened up entire new fields for us. The day of the cheap plastic toys is behind us. Engineered plastics are high quality, efficient and usually of lower cost than conventional materials. Even when more costly, they offer design, fabricating, engineering and marketing advantages that far outweigh the per pound cost. In the automotive industry alone, plastics have replaced some 600 pounds of metal with something over 100 pounds of plastics per vehicle, reducing the weight of cars and usually performing their function more safely, more efficiently, and markedly reducing assembly costs and the costs of replacements and repairs.

The same applies in packaging, lighting, furniture, housing and commercial construction, agriculture, electronics, and a myriad of other activities which affect our lives and our economy. Synthetic fibres have had a major impact on our clothing and textile industries. Carpeting, drapery, furniture and floor coverings are just a few examples of their use. We take them for granted around us, but we do not realize what they are. We are not inclined to think of our oil, gas and coal reserves when we see a fibreglass boat or a snowmobile, or when we buy a suit or a shirt, or when a doctor injects a life-saving antibiotic into our arm, but that is where it all begins in the hydrocarbon reserves which we have in such abundance.

The growth of our petrochemical industry has outstripped all expectations. Even before the current energy crisis, facilities were not keeping up with demand and some 40 per cent of our needs were still imported, leaving us in a vulnerable position, vulnerable at that time but far more vulnerable now with the shortages that are worldwide, meaning that the countries from which we have been able to import some of these needs will be more restrictive in their exports. The current shortage is worldwide, not because of the energy crisis but because of the fantastic acceleration of demand as a result of new discoveries as well as new and better uses of established technology and products. It is now seriously aggravated by acute shortages which will exist for at least three years, for it takes at least three years to design and build a complex plant and laboratories to produce the products.

In Canada today, we have the feedstock, or feedstock potential, to produce ethane, ethylene, polyethylene, benzene, styrene, polystyrene, polypropylene, and others with longer names which my seat mate mentions, not to mention polytetraflurethylene as well as the many other petrochemical by-products desperately needed by ourselves and our trading partners. The more we process ourselves, the greater and faster will be the return to our economy and the skilled jobs created. I strongly urge that we take advantage of our potential and develop a world scale, integrated petrochemical industry that is second to none, first, to give our secondary industry an assured source of domestic supply at competitive prices, then spawning thousands of large and small business opportunities that will challenge the ingenuity and the initiative of the existing business and industrial community and the young men and women entering the labour market in increasing numbers.

At the same time we will be creating an immense export potential for our resources at a more refined or sophisticated stage of process for which there is an almost insatiable demand. We have the resource and we have the technology, or if we do not have it precisely we have access to that technology. We will not be alone in this race for jobs and markets. It is thus essential that we move quickly and imaginatively. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) with the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) I suggest should immediately establish a task force, largely comprised of representatives of the petrochemical industry itself, because they know what this is about—I know that some of my friends opposite will say, "But they are corporations". Corporations run businesses and seem to run them successfully. That is their job and they are the people who should be on our side in this case. This task force should establish priorities and allocate projects for the maximum benefit of all. We should then give every encouragement to them and make every reasonable facility available to engage in a crash program to shorten the leadtime to build new facilities in order to get a jump on our international competitors.

This is the time to take a leaf from Alvin Toffler's book "Future Shock" in which Toffler says:

> It is more important to be imaginative and insightful than in trying to be 100 per cent right.

Polysar, in the constituency of my friend from Sarnia-Lambton owned by the Canada Development Corporation—and thus the Canadian people—offers a unique opportunity for growth. The Dow-Dome project to deliver Alberta-produced ethane to the giant petrochemical complex at Sarnia should proceed with all haste. The Sarnia Olyfins and Aromatics, or "SOAP" project, should also get underway without undue delay. Further integration of the petrochemical industry in Alberta and Saskatchewan can and should bring new and large scale economic benefits to western Canada. The Montreal refinery and petrochemical complex, plus another proposed near Quebec City and the potential from the refineries of the Atlantic provinces, should be integrated into a rationalized and regionalized industry.

Staging of these developments will be essential. Details, sometime small details, such as the training and availability of key tradesmen, such as highly skilled pipefitter-welders that are needed in building chemical plants, can be stumbling blocks but, with proper planning, can be overcome. Other than Polysar, the giants in this field are major multinational corporations, most, but not all, United States based. They have the know-how and existing world markets, plus capital to invest. I think this is one time that we should give them every reason to invest this capital and know-how in Canada rather that elsewhere. The degree to which they permit Canadian equity participation should determine the extent of the extraordinary incentives or assistance we provide. Indeed, I would suggest that we look carefully at joint ventures under Canadian control, something in which they frequently engage in other countries without nearly the resources, stability or markets available to them in a Canadian venture.

In speaking to these people from multinational corporations in their New York and other bases, we find they are not afraid of going in where there are strong regulations. They do this in every other country in the world. They want to know what those regulations are and they cannot afford to stay out, particularly since we have the fundamental resources. So long as it is profitable, they will come in. Other countries have much more stringent regulations than do we. The opportunity is a current and unique one. In its ultimate form, it will not always be an available and viable option. We will always have markets for our oil and gas, both domestically and in the United States. Japan will likely be an ever present market for our coal. We will likely be able to sell all the available benzene and ethane as feedstock in the more sophisticated petrochemical and secondary manufacturing industries of other countries. We might not have another equivalent opportunity to build an integrated, viable petrochemical industry and downstream process and manufacturing industries here in Canada controlled by and employing Canadians. I suggest that we have that opportunity now but not for too long.

There are other factors with which we must deal in concert with such a program. The question of tariffs is a key one. We will have to negotiate these with skill and toughness in the current GATT round of tariff negotiations. Even a carefully staged program done on a crash basis might see huge plants completed when markets are not precisely phased in. Short term but large investments can be costly if the product is not immediately saleable. Indeed, this is part of the reason that there has been some reluctance to expand adequately in the past. Another reason is that in some cases too much production awaiting markets drove prices down to the point where the profitability did not justify expansion.

No one can foresee all of the possibilities and as this program must be a bold one, some chances must be taken and backup support in the form of credits and tax relief on temporary unused capacity should be negotiated between the industry and the government. My friends in the NDP will, of course, think that this is heresy, but I can guarantee the professor from Oshawa-Whitby—whom I do not see here today—the one man band player from Fraser Valley West, my friend the poet from Scarborough West, the parson from Winnipeg North Centre and that barrister from York South, that it cannot and will not be done by any government alone or without creating the atmosphere or incentives to make it work. Certainly, there will be profits. There had better be. But the majority of these will be reinvested in new plants, more research and development, better wages for more skilled workers, and dividends for shareholders on which to pay taxes and reinvest in still more development.

The biggest share of profits will be paid in corporate taxes for better education, better health services, better housing and pensions for senior citizens which will allow them to live in security and dignity. Without profits, or with a socialistic type of managed or mismanaged economy, these things are not likely to happen. Indeed, I would guarantee that they will not happen on as great a scale and with the same speed and efficiency, if at all. I know it makes my NDP friends furious to think that someone with ability might make some money, more money than someone without the drive and dynamics to make things happen.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: Well, that is a downstream by-product that produces many things, including the green envy of the NDP. They think that profits are sinful. A greater sin, in my view, is ineptitude, inefficiency, and no profits. Excessive profits, ill-gained profits, undue wealth without social responsibility are indeed sinful in my view. There is no reason why we cannot increase Canadian equity participation in this process which I suggest. I think we should encourage it, even insist upon it, and perhaps buy at least leverage control, such as we did in Texas-Gulf through the Canadian Development Corporation. At least we would have control of something good rather than ownership of something that does not exist.

As a matter of fact, I am getting a little tired of the insufferable self-righteousness and arrogance of some of my NDP friends and their crowing, strutting and posturing. Their claims that everything done by this government is because of them make me tired. They cover the waterfront of things we are likely to do, and when we do some of them, they say "we showed them; we forced them to do it." I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that recent moves in the energy field have been Liberal moves from start to finish. No set of policies has more reflected the expressed views of our caucus, both in concept and in detail. Now the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), I hear, is strutting around the countryside threatening to withdraw his support if we do not do things we might very likely do even if he were back in his classroom. His leader is so inflated with delusions of power that he is telling the people that he has not finished with us yet. If we were not in the House of Commons and I was not such a gentle and polite soul, I would call it what it is in eight letters.

Those pious gentlemen think they are the sole repository of virtue, that they are making parliament work and that they are keeping the government in office. Well, it is our views, our policies and our actions supported by the divisions and ineptitude of the Conservative Party that are keeping that small band of NDP in parliament at all. They support us because they find it in their own self-interest to do so. I will grant that they recognize the fact that even a minority Liberal government is far better for Canada than any Tory government, but they also know that an election will decimate their ranks. They are divided between their leader, their caucus, and the various factions of their party, very much like the Tories. It is this government with this Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that is carrying the responsibility of government in this most difficult of times, but we are doing it with thoughtfulness and determination in what we believe to be the best interests of Canada and the vast majority of Canadians.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: I challenge the NDP to defeat us in favour of that sad band of Tories over there made up of refugee Liberals and bewildered Social Creditors, plus a hardcore of Neanderthals—that is where fossil fuel comes from—who cannot figure out which way is up or who really speaks for them. I know that we are a unified party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Danson: We are ready to take them on in any election, winter, summer, spring or fall. But I would rather get on with doing the serious job that needs to be done now, and that Canadians want us to do in this most serious of times, and which we wish to do in the best interests of all Canadians.

[Mr. Danson.]

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, before I comment on the bill before us may I say that I listened with interest to the remarks of my friend, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson). I wondered why he was smiling during the last few minutes when he was talking about the unity of his party and the Liberal policies. I suspect he got flak from his constituents about the Liberal's capitulation to NDP demands.

We have before us Bill C-236 to provide an emergency allocation of energy supplies in the event of a crisis. It seemed before Monday that certainly this country was in for a crisis of the ineptitude of the government and the lack of any concrete energy policy. To some degree, that has been changed by recent events and by the demands of the NDP being met by the government to a large extent. We are still in a rather critical situation in this country so far as energy is concerned. We talk about an energy crisis. Really, what we mean is a crisis with two aspects, one of supply and one of price. The supply aspect cannot be solved overnight. We cannot wave a magic wand and make it disappear.

Because of the oil policy initiated by the Conservative government in 1961, the country was divided into two regions, east of the Ottawa valley line being dependent on imported foreign oil, and west of the Ottawa valley line being dependent on western Canadian oil. But, Mr. Speaker, much of that oil was being exported. In fact, at present we are importing a million barrels of oil a day and exporting an equal amount.

Now, people in the oil industry who previously overestimated our supplies of conventional crude are admitting that we have only about ten years' supply of conventional crude left in Canada. Yet, we still continue to export oil at the fantastic rate of one million barrels per day. Because we have only ten years' supply of conventional crude left in Canada, we must seriously look at the Athabaska oil sands. Their development will have to take place soon if we are to avoid a supply crisis ten years hence.

The second aspect of the so-called energy crisis is that of price. Over the past few months we have witnessed a government being dragged, kicking and screaming, into an admission that there was no justifiable reason for an increase in the price of western Canadian crude oil. If we look over events during the past few months we find that the stand taken by the New Democratic Party has been vindicated. The Liberal government, faced with the threat of an election, was forced to accept our policy, and it has won widespread support from the Canadian people.

What did the NDP demand? Months ago we asked for export controls to be placed on crude oil. As I have said, we were exporting oil at a fantastic rate, and the United States was demanding even more of our oil. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) admitted a few days ago in his televised speech, our exports of oil this year to the United States had increased by 18 per cent. Because we foresaw this problem, we demanded that there be a curtailment of further large increases in exports to the United States, and the government acquiesced. Hopefully, some time in the future this will result in further oil supplies from conventional sources being available.

The other thing that we foresaw was that as the world price rose at a tremendous rate the oil companies would make a fantastic windfall profit if the government did not step in to create a two-price system. We demanded that an export tax be put on crude oil so that, while the Canadian price in western Canada would be frozen, the difference between the domestic and export price would not fall to the oil companies but would fall to the federal government in the form of this export tax. We agreed that the producing provinces should be compensated for the loss in royalties that they suffered because of this export tax, and we said that surplus funds accrued through this export tax should be used to develop oil resources in the producing provinces.

We also demanded a continuation of the price freeze. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, we have a price freeze on oil in western Canada and a voluntary freeze in eastern Canada. Of course, as the cost of imported oil increases there has to be some adjustment to the price in eastern Canada. I will have more to say about that later because I am rather suspicious of the way in which that price has been adjusted. But, as I say, there is no reason why domestically produced oil should rise to the inflated world price, and on behalf of the Canadian consumer we demanded that this price freeze be maintained. Finally, the government acquiesced.

Much earlier in the year, in fact in previous years, we also demanded an extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal in order to bring western Canadian oil to the eastern market. That extension would guarantee us security of supply. But we wanted something else. We wanted a reversible pipeline so that we could have true competition between the two energy markets in Canada. Without the concept of a reversible pipeline we would have another protected market. That was the case under the old oil policy, and the oil companies had a field day so far as price was concerned. If we had a reversible pipeline, and if for some reason supplies of oil from discoveries off the Atlantic coast became less expensive than other Canadian oil, then we could have true competition, and the consumers in western Canada would benefit because the producers there would have to market their oil at a competitive price.

We also asked for an ending of the Ottawa valley line which prohibited oil from coming into Canada from any other source. In the light of the growing crisis in supply, the government recently announced the removal of that line.

We asked for a national petroleum company. To me, it is very strange that countries like Italy and France can have highly successful petroleum companies working in their interests, and in fact working very successfully in western Canada, engaging in exploration and production there. How many people realize that the French have a very successful well in western Canada, and also are doing exploration work off the Atlantic provinces? The proposed national petroleum company should get into the oil market and start regulating all aspects of the industry in Canada. Here, I am thinking not only of exploration but also of production, distribution, marketing and retailing at the wholesale level. It seems to me that the best way to do this would be for the government to take over one of the existing multinational oil companies, thereby acquiring the expertise and the reserves in the ground, and through the national petroleum company sell oil at a price slightly above cost, a price from which the Canadian consumer could benefit. As a result, all other oil companies in the country would have to sell at that government price.

In addition to a national petroleum company, we also need to undertake development of the oil sands at Athabaska in Alberta, where there is a huge reserve of oil. We do not have to worry about exploration costs. The oil is there, and we know it is there. The technology has been developed. It is economically feasible to mine those oil sands. But here we are at a point where it seems to me the Alberta government, and to a large extent the federal government, are again willing to let private industry have a free hand with respect to this valuable resource. If we allow that to happen we shall be committing the same mistake that we committed a decade ago in 1961, when we did not have the kind of planning to protect the public interest that was necessary in deciding on a Canadian oil policy.

What I am saying is that because of NDP demands, because of our position in holding the balance of power in this parliament, we have forced the Liberal government, although reluctantly, into a new direction with respect to energy policy, a direction that will require public involvement, and into an acknowledgement that there is a fundamental role that the government should be playing, a role to protect present and future consumers of oil produced in this country. I think to anyone with an unbiased mind this has been a very positive role that our party has played.

I listened with interest yesterday to the Conservative motion of no confidence, and the speeches of members of the Conservative Party deriding the government for having a vacillating, inconsistent and incompetent energy policy. That sounded to me very much like the Conservative policy, or lack of it, itself. If anyone has been vacillating as far as energy is concerned, it has been the Conservative Party. They admit that they have no energy policy. They hope that Santa Claus will bring it to them for Christmas, although I hear it is already in its fourth draft. It seems to me that they are having problems with their cowboys from Alberta, their oil interests and other members from the consumer oriented parts of Canada.

The Conservative party has also been quite inconsistent in proclaiming recently that they wanted the pipeline extended to eastern Canada as far back as 1969, and they trot out the Niagara policy convention. I thought that resolution was buried very deeply in that thinkers' conference. It was not taken seriously and indeed during the last federal election campaign when it came, time to announce their platform about extending the pipeline we found that that resolution was watered down to such an extent that they would only "consider the advisability of extending the pipeline to Montreal".

I hear them referring very often to the hardship to the consuming public. I hear, too, that the Conservatives were against the concept of the export tax, which would have allowed prices to increase, the windfall profit to the private oil companies and the government, if we had no price freeze, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday afternoon, I heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) say that the policy of a price freeze was discriminatory against eastern Canada, but if we did not maintain that price freeze in western Canada then all Canadians would face higher prices, at least $100 more in expenses this year as far as heating their homes and running their cars and it could have gone higher. Where is the interest in the consumer if that is the kind of policy they are advocating? Surely, if we had a national energy policy and a national petroleum company, we could have the petroleum company set one price for Canada and equalize it until we get the pipeline through by combining the higher cost of eastern Canadian oil with western Canadian oil. That would be much more fair than the policy advocated by the Conservative Party.

The other thing that worries me about so much of past policy, both of the Liberals and the Conservatives, is the degree to which their policies sound like the chairman of the board of some of the large oil companies. If the price of oil goes up in this country by even a dollar a barrel, because we have reserves of some $10 billion in the ground, that is a windfall profit to the oil companies of some $10 billion minus, say, one-fifth for royalties. There is no increase in the cost of production. There is just the simple fact that the oil is there, trapped in reserves, and that world price is going up. If we allow the domestic price to rise that results in an unconscionable windfall.

Already the price of oil increased by 95 cents per barrel in this year before the government was forced to put on a price freeze. This meant a profit of 37 per cent to the oil companies, and still they are crying about low profit figures. I challenge anyone to look at the recent reports of the profit figures of the oil companies. They range from 40 per cent to 80 per cent higher than for the last quarter. All the Conservatives could do as far as controlling price was to advocate—and I do not hear them advocating it very much any more—their old policies of a 90 day price freeze. They know what would happen as soon as the price freeze was lifted.

Mr. Baker: Such socialist claptrap!

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, another oil executive has just spoken! I hear the argument from the oil companies and the energy spokesmen for the Conservative Party very frequently that we must allow the price of crude oil to go up so that the oil companies will have an incentive to explore for oil. Mr. Speaker, we find that in Alberta alone there is an outflow of money to the tune of $1 billion to the oil companies in that province. Where does it go? Does it go for exploration in Alberta? No, sir. Some $300 million goes up to the Arctic and $700 million to places outside Alberta and outside Canada. We have no guarantee that if the price allotted for a barrel of oil goes up, the oil companies will spend their money looking for oil in Canada. We have no guarantee whatsoever.

Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? In 1957, American oil companies in Canada earned $600 million and spent $176 million in exploration. In 1972, the same oil companies earned $2.5 billion and how much did they spend on oil exploration? They spent $195 million. In other words, there was an increase in profits of some 400 per cent, but only an increase of 10 per cent in their exploration activity in the province of Alberta.

I also see the advertisements in magazines of oil companies to the effect that they need higher prices because labour costs have gone up by some 400 per cent in the last decade. I think Imperial Oil has a glossy chart showing this in many magazines. But I should like the Canadian public to note that between 1962 and 1970, the cost of operating oil wells decreased by some six cents per barrel at the same time as the oil price went up by some 38 cents per barrel. These statistics can be found in the Canadian Petroleum Association statistical year book. The oil companies say they need more money for exploration, again and again. Let us look at what they have and what they are doing with this money.

In 1969, the last year for which we have statistics, out of 681 oil and gas companies in Canada, 556 paid not one cent of federal income tax—not one cent, Mr. Speaker. For the period 1965 to 1971 Imperial Oil, with net earnings of $1.5 billion and with a tax rate of only 19 per cent—that is the tax rate for a man with two children who earns $11,000 a year—that company had a cumulative total of some $170 million in deferred taxes, taxes they did not have to pay, because of our very biased tax laws. That was like a loan of $170 million to that company, yet they cry that they are not making enough money. When we look at the money they do make, and again I use Imperial Oil, 70 per cent of their dividends, the money they make in this country, is sent to the parent company Exxon Corporation. How much does Exxon return to Canada in exploration expenditures? Are you ready for it—one per cent. The parent gets 70 per cent, and sends back one per cent of that money for exploration. Where is this argument that oil companies need so much money for exploration activity in Canada? It holds absolutely no water, or should I say, oil.

The pricing of oil and gasoline products in eastern Canada concerns me greatly. Since the voluntary price freeze has been imposed in that area, it is argued that as the cost of imported oil goes up the oil and gas companies should be able to pass on the increased cost to the consumer. The cost of home heating oil and gasoline in eastern Canada has increased by seven cents per gallon. I have asked the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), both in the committee and in the House to make available the formula under which the federal government has accepted Imperial Oil's claim that costs have gone up by some seven cents per gallon. I can only test our figures if the minister does what we ask. Of course, he could question the figures his own officials give him. According to my figures, costs to the oil companies have increased not by seven cents per gallon but by four and a half cents per gallon. That is how much costs should have risen, I submit. If my figure is correct, it means that oil companies in eastern Canada have been getting windfall profits of about $400,000 per day. I say the increase should be only four and a half cents a gallon.

Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? The bulk of oil imported to eastern Canada comes from Venezuela. The government of Venezuela has a system under which it sells oil to the oil companies which, in turn, sell the oil abroad. The government of Venezuela has decided to tax these companies on the basis of what it calls the tax reference price. In other words, that government says to the oil companies that they can take oil from the ground of Venezuela, but they must sell it to the Venezuelan government for the tax reference price and the Venezuelan government, in turn, will give it back to them. The point of the tax reference price is this: no matter what the price is, the government of Venezuela will tax the company at the rate of 60 per cent. I hope hon. members will be patient with me; I shall refer to many figures, but the point is important. In mid-October the tax reference price on Venezuelan oil shipped to Canada was $4.65 a barrel. Recently, that price went up to $7.25 per barrel, the increase being $2.60 per barrel. If that $2.60 increase per barrel is taxed at 60 per cent, it means that the companies should be paying an extra $1.56 per barrel.

Let me explain what has happened. Exxon Corporation has a subsidiary known as Imperial Oil operating in Canada and another subsidiary known as Creole Oil. Under a cozy arrangement, Creole Oil buys Venezuelan oil and then sells it to Imperial Oil of Canada. I think Creole Oil has not raised the price of Venezuelan oil sold to Imperial Oil merely by $1.56 per barrel, in line with the tax increase; the company has raised its price by the full $2.60 per barrel. In other words, a windfall profit of $1.04 per barrel is accruing to the parent, Exxon Corporation. So, here is a case in which the parent has one subsidiary selling to another subsidiary for a higher price. Imperial Oil can, therefore, go to the government and say, "Our costs have gone up by X dollars, therefore the price must go up by X dollars." Really however, the profit is going back to the parent company. This is a neat and cozy arrangement. That is why I wish to see some of the facts. I want to make certain that there is justification for the seven cents per gallon price increase. According to my figures, an increase of four and a half cents per gallon would be justified. Because the private oil companies control and manipulate the oil market in Canada, government agency such as the national petroleum company must be involved in the market in buying and selling, so that oil is sold at a fair price.

If I may move my attention from the East coast to western Canada, may I speak of another frustrating development. As I said, because our conventional crude oil resources are being depleted, we shall have to develop the Athabasca oil sands. We must consider the question of lead time. If we are to run short of conventional crude oil in ten years, we ought now to be making plans to bring into production the Athabasca oil sands, so that ten years from now we shall have those oil producing plants on stream. That will entail the constructon of at least one plant per year, each plant costing about $1 billion.

Mr. Paproski: That should be $1.7 billion.

Mr. Symes: If we allow the proposal regarding Syncrude in Alberta to go ahead, I maintain that we shall embark on a $2 billion sellout to that consortium under existing terms of reference. If the old Alberta royalty scheme were used, there would be a net gain to Alberta of some $4 billion over the lifetime of the project. Under the present formula of Syncrude, Alberta and the public of the province will receive a maximum of $1.8 billion. That figure is calculated at an interest rate of 8 per cent over the next 29 years.

What are some of the particulars of this deal? Mr. Speaker, our caucus went to Edmonton last week and had a private meeting with some of the directors of Syncrude. What a revelation that was. The cost of the plant will be some $800 million, some additional $200 million being spent for pipelines and supporting facilities. Debenture capital will finance 75 per cent of the cost of this plant.

Mr. Paproski: I thought it was a private meeting.

Mr. Symes: All these details are public knowledge. The government of Alberta will put in $200 million, and the company itself will put in $50 million. What will the syndicate called Syncrude get in return? It will, in return for putting up 20 per cent of the equity, gain 100 per cent control of the project and 50 per cent of the profits. The government will put up 80 per cent of the equity, without getting any control; the public of Alberta has been told that the public will get 50 per cent of the profits.

According to the Syncrude people we met in Edmonton, Syncrude will not make any profits or losses. It will not even pay income taxes, because Syncrude will merely be a transfer company. The four multinational oil companies which are the parents of Syncrude will get from Syncrude the synthetic oil and Syncrude, in return, will get from those companies the money to pay operating expenses.

How do the tax laws apply? How does one define profit? If we were defining book profits, the story would be different. But as we may be considering taxable income, as I suspect, then the four multinational companies will apply against the synthetic crude produced by Syncrude all the tax writeoffs in the existing law and all the available depletion allowance formulas. Therefore, there is no guarantee that the people of Alberta will get a fair portion of the profits. That is an example of the kind of sellout that we cannot allow to be continued in this country, if we are to protect future generations of energy consumers in this country. It is obvious that we need joint federal-provincial government development of these vast resources which belong to the people of Canada and should be exploited in the interests of the people of Canada, not in the interests of the multinational oil companies which are there to make a fast buck and, when the resource is depleted, leave Canadians high and dry.

As I have said on many occasions, we have reached the crossroads of energy policy in this country. We have taken a significant step in the right direction with the adoption by the government of many NDP proposals. At the same time, if we are really concerned about the future of this country and its people, we must do more. We must have more public involvement. Only in that way do we guarantee the people of Canada will be best served by the resources they own, and which should be available to all future generations.

Energy Supplies Emergency Act

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, we have heard some strange statements today. A few moments ago, I listened to the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) making a speech he would not have made the day before yesterday. After the NDP propped up the government in the vote last night, the hon. member for York North gave them a gentle slap on the wrist, and then waxed eloquent over the unity in the Liberal party. That was the first thing to cause a little wonderment in our minds.

We then listened to the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) make some strange comments. He referred to the Progressive Conservative party and what he termed the changes in policy or lack of policy. I remember a number of occasions when the leader of that party went out west and squared off, stating this government had had it; the NDP were not going to support them any longer; they had the government on the ropes and when he got back, he was going to deal a knock-out blow. When he returned, he said that because the government had taken a tiny step, his party would continue to prop them up. Instead of dealing a knock-out blow, he hit them rather gently, then wrapped his arms around them and held them up again.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie referred to the situation in Alberta, and the fact there is going to be an increase in the cost of fuel there. However, he did not say anything about the increase in the cost of natural gas in the province of British Columbia, where it was announced that the cost of natural gas had increased by 81 per cent. The NDP somehow neglect to make reference to that because it does not fit in with their story.

In addition, we hear the members of the NDP talk about the monsters called multinational corporations. One day I tried to count the number of times they used the words "multinational corporations", but I lost track. I will not comment on multinational corporations except to say that I read in the paper the other night that Premier Ed Schreyer of Manitoba said some very kind words about them. Therefore, I find it extremely difficult to reconcile statements made here by members of the NDP with statements made across the country by both their national leader and premiers of the various provinces.

I am reminded of an incident that happened some years ago when I had an opportunity to attend a commonwealth conference in Jamaica. A delegate from Western Samoa stood and very sincerely but gently said something like this: In my country when a speaker gets up to make an address, he starts off by giving thanks to the Heavenly Father for all His goodness. Perhaps today we should give thanks to the good Lord for the moderate weather we are experiencing this fall, which will somehow offset or counterbalance the problems we face because of the ineptitude of the Liberal administration.

As we think of the statements that have been made in recent days, and the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—outlining the program he classed as a new national policy, it seems as though he gave a Christmas present to the New Democratic Party, promising that in the working of this program he would go to some length to meet the desires and demands of that group. This makes us think of somebody playing the tune and somebody dancing. I am not quite sure who is playing the tune and who is doing the dancing. The government said they are stating their policy and that it is a purely Liberal policy. However, a member of the NDP says the government has swallowed their proposals and therefore it is doing alright.

We cannot help but feel sorry for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). When we consider his statements in light of the statement made by the Prime Minister, it seems as though the Prime Minister pulled the rug from under him. Those statements have, in almost every respect, negated everything the minister told the House during the past two or three months. I will not take time to quote Hansard for the past two months or so to try to reconcile the minister's answers with the statement made by the Prime Minister just the other day. For example, what the Prime Minister said on December 6 pre-empts the bill before us at the present time. By the way, we are dealing with a bill that is before the House. The Prime Minister said, as recorded at page 8478 of Hansard:

> We are confident that no Canadian need fear serious shortages of oil and fuel this winter,—

I wish the government would tell us and the Canadian people whether or not there is an energy crisis in Canada. We hear that eastern Canada is going to freeze this winter. Then, in a gross miscalculation on the part of the government, we hear that the refinery at Come-By-Chance will be able to supply most of the oil that is needed. Next, the government tells us it will not be producing products in time for this winter because it cannot get crude oil. Friday morning we heard that it already has stored some 3.5 million barrels and there are two supertankers on the way. This government has so confused the issues that they have somehow, intentionally or otherwise, alarmed the people of Canada for their own political ends. I do not think this increases the confidence that was expressed in the House last night.

I should like to say a few words about the proposed price freeze to which reference has been made. This myth was started by the Prime Minister on September 4. I grant that there may have been some price freeze in western Canada, but whatever freeze there was in eastern Canada was very difficult to visualize or comprehend. Is the government so forgetful that it does not realize that since the price freeze supposedly took effect gasoline prices rose nine cents a gallon here in the capital city of Canada? When the minister was questioned after the first increase by a member of this House and was told that there did not appear to be a price freeze, the minister replied: "Oh, yes, there is a freeze; it is just frozen at a different level". That seems rather strange logic, Mr. Speaker.

I should like now to make a few comments on the background to the situation we are currently facing. There are few, if any, Canadians who would disagree with the widely acknowledged fact that a global energy crisis presently exists. You never miss the water till the well runs dry is a proverb that holds true as well with regard to energy supplies. We have moved forward into the use and enjoyment of each successive type of energy on the assumption that we need not be too concerned about the past or about the future. For in the ongoing progression of technical and industrial discoveries, mankind is destined to achieve an ever easier and more satisfying way of life. I think this attitude has caused us to consider former energy sources as obsolescent and unneeded, and has also closed our eyes to the need for new sources and types of energy for the future. We are now awakening to the fact that the supply of fossil fuels is not inexhaustible. If we are to continue to enjoy an adequate energy supply for the future, it must be through wise and all-inclusive use of all resources presently known, with research into sources which are at the moment just bursting into view or are yet beyond the horizon.

The world energy problem is not caused by a shortage of energy resources at this moment, but rather by political power plays in an endeavour to achieve national objectives. While the right to such action cannot be contested, I suggest that from the moral and ethical point of view it is neither humanitarian nor excusable. The Shah of Iran is reported to have told the Arab world: "Oil is like bread. You cannot cut it off during a time of peace. Why do you want to look as if you want the world to starve?"

As has been stated many times, the current unease in Canada is not over the question of over-all supply. My colleague from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) last evening presented the picture quite clearly when he referred to the vast supplies of energy that we have in Canada. I should like to refer to his remarks at page 8584 of Hansard. He referred to the 500 billion barrels of oil, the 700 trillion cubic feet of gas, the 100 billion tons of coal, the one million tons of uranium, the hydro possibilities, the potential of the Fundy tides, the Churchill River, coal in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and the Maritimes, and went on to say:

—we have sufficient energy sources of the non-renewable sort to last this country for 500 years or more.

So, again I say that the current unease in Canada is not over the question of over-all supply, but rather the production and transportation of this supply to all areas of the nation in volumes adequate to meet consumer requirements.

In this connection we have before us Bill C-236. I should like to associate myself with a statement made by my colleague from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). Last Thursday, speaking prior to the speech of the Prime Minister, the hon. member had this to say, as reported at page 8477 of Hansard:

I hope the Prime Minister will attempt to indicate to us what case they have for stating that there may be an energy crisis in Canada this winter and for their belief that this crisis warrants the wide powers which the government wants under Bill C-236.

My colleague's hopes were not realized, for the Prime Minister sidestepped the issue completely. He did not explain the nature or the extent of whatever crisis might exist. In fact, as I indicated earlier, he stated outright that no Canadians will face shortages this winter.

I believe that Bill C-236 is another intrusion into business. This government, above all, has not indicated any overwhelming proof that it has the capacity properly to administer anything. Private enterprise has done a magnificent job of developing this nation, and if there is fault to be found, and if there have been areas in which that development has failed to benefit Canadians as a whole, it is because government has failed to create the proper climate and to lay down proper legislative guidelines to achieve the highest good for the nation. I do not think that we can place the blame on private enterprise.

There may be notable exceptions, but in the majority of instances government enterprise has shown up rather poorly against the combined and experienced expertise of those engaged in private enterprise activities. It has not been government bureaucracy that has provided the impetus, the initiative and momentum that have propelled us forward in the various fields of scientific research and technological development; rather it has been those individuals with initiative and determination that have blazed the trail and opened up new vistas.

Not only do I suggest that Bill C-236 is an unwarranted intrusion into business; it is also an intrusion into the provincial domain. May I suggest that this government is a government of confrontation. It is obvious that the administration is attempting to tell the people of Alberta something. Since the Liberals do not have one single member from that province, they feel they can say whatever they want or do whatever they want. It seems to me that in a sense this is blackmail. The government is, in essence, saying "You did not return any of our members so now you will pay for it". How else can we explain the politics of confrontation in which the Prime Minister and the energy minister have dabbled during the last two to three months?

The government has been guilty of a lack of consultation with Alberta, of breaking agreements, albeit verbal agreements. Now, during the last weekend we find it engaging in slander. Let me ask how the government can justify the kind of speech that its leader made in Vancouver on Friday night. No one can tell me that he had national unity at heart when he slandered a provincial premier in the way he slandered Mr. Lougheed. This is completely unacceptable behaviour for someone who occupies the position of Prime Minister of this nation. I ask, where now is the great champion of federalism? Where now is the great champion of participatory democracy? Where now is the great champion of national unity?

Then we see the lesser of the two coalition government leaders standing up in this chamber last week and involving himself in the game of name calling, calling the Premier of Alberta "Sheik Lougheed". He forgets all the while, as I have mentioned before, that the Premier of British Columbia has increased the price of natural gas by 81 per cent. Perhaps he should be called Sheik Barrett, as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) so rightly points out.

As for the view that we can blame the NDP for forcing its policies on a reluctant Liberal government, as stated by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), this is difficult to accept. I believe the NDP has lost too much credibility across this country to have such great power on this government which sits opposite at the present time. I think, as stated in an article by Mr. Charles Lynch, that perhaps there is something more important behind the position taken by the Liberal government in this connection. I suggest that, rather than being forced to accede to the requirements and demands of the NDP, this is an outcropping of the Prime Minister's essential political philosophy, the emergence of his true colours and a large step on the road the NDP want him to follow. Mr. Lynch quotes from the writings of the Prime Minister on the seeds of radicalism and the path of socialism. I do not know whether it took Mr. Lynch quite some time to realize just what was going on, but I think possibly what we have seen in the past few days is not essentially NDP policy but rather new Liberal policy, and really there is not too much difference between the two. I wonder, therefore, why the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson) emphasized this point so much, because really there is not too much difference.

This bill would permit the government to override any provincial legislation and regulation. The national petroleum corporation he announced could take away from the provinces the only bargaining point they have with the federal government—their natural resources. This country, thanks to the work of that gentleman since he took over in 1968, is moving steadily toward a unitary state, and I do not think Canadians want this type of situation. I suggest that the provinces must be left with control over their natural resources, and must have complete autonomy within their fields of jurisdiction. The encroachment on their rights as proposed by the bill, unless amended, are completely unacceptable.

Let me refer to a speech on this subject made in the House by the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean (Mr. Lessard). Apparently he is one of the few Liberals in this House who does do some very careful thinking on the subject of provincial rights. He stated, as recorded at page 8533 of Hansard:

> However the establishment of such an over-all Canadian energy policy compared to the former one which was partial should not be set up for the second time while ignoring the priority interests of the provinces and mainly of Quebec in this field.

That is perhaps too limiting, as I feel it should apply to all the provinces. Surely, my hon. friend would agree that if it applies to Quebec it should apply to Alberta, Ontario, Nova Scotia, my own province of British Columbia and any of the other provinces I have not mentioned by name. Later the hon. member for Lac-Saint-Jean said, as reported at page 8534 of Hansard:

> But I would like to sound a note of warning to all provinces: the federal government should not take advantage of the situation to assume a right which it does not need. This applies to Alberta as well as to the province of Quebec. I am pleased to find restrictions in the legislation before us, particularly the one year limit, because otherwise I would not accept it as a Quebecker. Some of my colleagues are in the same position. As members representing various areas of Canada we all are in the same position. Then we should not agree to place it under federal control unless there is a completely new understanding and distribution of powers and responsibilities between both government levels.

I wish the hon. member was able to get this point across to his leader, as it does not seem the government understands this particular principle.

In addition, this bill vests an appointed body with absolute authority in certain areas. What will happen to the already downgraded power of parliament and the circumvented and undermined role of the elected member of this House? This government has already tried to strip the members of any real role in parliament.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Patterson: You ask me to explain; I will do just that. This situation has been compounded by using defeated government members as advisers, executive assistants and consultants rather than using the people's choice—the elected member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Patterson: This bill in its present form is a denial of the supremacy of parliament, the abdication in favour of bureaucracy and the surrender of its responsibility to a body with no accountability to the people of the nation, but solely to the government. So we have a nice, neat set-up and a real energy czar in our midst. The bill has far-reaching powers in overruling other jurisdictions and other departments. I could refer to a number of sections which give this body the authority to overrule decisions under the National Energy Board, the Combines Investigations Act, environmental legislation, the Canadian Transport Commission, the Canada Shipping Act, the National Transportation Act and I am not just sure what else. I would suggest that this is too much power without the board having some responsibility to this House.

Mr. Béchard: What about in cases of emergency?

Mr. Patterson: We have seen the use of powers in so-called emergency situations in the past, and I do not know that we want to see them used too often in the future.

This bill is far-reaching as well in its power to manipulate the economy. I know many of my colleagues and many government members would agree that control over energy at this time implies economic control. Thus the Prime Minister, disguised as the energy supplies allocation board, would have a free rein to manipulate the economy of Canada. The way this government has incompentently handled the economy in the last few years without a free rein, I wonder what we might expect in the future if this board is set up?

For instance, this bill allows allocations to be applied selectively. Let me just give an illustration of how this could be a most powerful weapon in achieving national economic policy ends. Were the government to desire the establishment of a synthetic textile industry in the Maritimes, and I use this as an illustration, it would be a simple matter to declare a shortage of certain petroleum by-products necessary to such a textile production, except in the Maritimes. So, we can see that whether the shortage was actual or declared would be a matter of opinion, and the possibilities of misuse are endless.

Certain domestic industries or commercial concerns depend upon petroleum products as part of the content of their manufactured output. Other industries rely on what is classifiable as an alternate fuel or fuel product as part of output. The supply of these materials required for production is regulated under the provisions of this bill which is currently before us. Complete control over the transportation system of the country is also provided, both through fuel allocation and allocation of its use. The number of industries directly affected by allocation measures may be seen or understood perhaps, when one realizes that almost 20 per cent of real domestic product can be directly controlled by the Governor in Council under this particular bill. So, we see the wide powers that can be exercised through the use of this measure.

● (1630)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the powers of this bill are far too great. They are far-reaching. I do not see how they could be justified under current circumstances. The government, if ever given some of these powers, should be given them only if it has been established that Canada will in fact suffer a major energy crisis. The Prime Minister has stated again and again that we are not faced with this energy crisis in Canada.

Mr. Roy (Laval): When did he say that?

Mr. Patterson: He said that. You do not listen to your own leader. If you would listen to someone you might learn a little bit. The only power the government may need now is authority to ration. The government has at its disposal adequate legislative authority to deal with most of the other energy problems facing Canada today. We must ask ourselves this question—and I include government members—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has not expired, but I would ask that he be permitted to finish his speech. I have allowed some considerable latitude. He certainly provoked a large number of other debates in the chamber at the same time because of his remarks, but I would ask that he be heard in conclusion.

Mr. Patterson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Hon. gentlemen opposite were not disturbing me at all. I can usually shout anyone down if I have to. However, I was just drawing my remarks to a conclusion. I would say we must ask ourselves this question: Should the far-reaching powers of this bill be given to a government that has shown itself to be incompetent and incapable of handling even the situation which exists at the present time?

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Patterson: I am very happy to speak for myself, and I say I do not believe we ought to give the government the authority it is requesting in the bill as it presently stands.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for recognizing me. By taking part in this debate I wish to enlighten some closed minds from Quebec, in particular that of my hon. colleague from the constituency of Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner)—

Mr. Wagner: Talk about the bill.

Mr. Olivier: That's nothing. It's just the beginning. Wait a moment.

I want to point out the meanness of the hon. member's attack on his colleagues from Quebec irrespective of their party. In fact, he suggests that he can show us how to govern and especially how to assume our responsibilities towards Quebec. I will call the attention of the House to the manner in which—

[English]

Mr. Paproski: You should listen.

Mr. Olivier: You, too, should listen.

[Translation]

As I was saying, I will call the attention of the House to the manner in which this hon. member attempts by all means possible to make us forget what fate people like Borden and Bennett inflicted on the province of Quebec. I think that this is indecent behaviour on his part, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wagner: Talk about the bill.

Mr. Olivier: Yes, but I also will talk about the Borden line that the Progressive Conservatives forced upon us in 1961. Where was the hon. member in 1961, when that happened? What was he doing at that time? He was going from one "chair" to the other. He was getting ready to watch his positions in order to become judge, come down, move up again, come down again.

Mr. Wagner: Talk about the bill.

Mr. Olivier: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Wagner: No. Only that the hon. member returns to the bill.

Mr. Olivier: I see. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe would be kind enough to listen; I think that he would be happy to hear someone who is able to give a speech without letting show any partisan feelings. If you refer to his vocal diarrhea of last night, you will note that what he is getting today is a direct consequence of his flow of words.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. members who took part in this debate have shown a great deal of interest in the bill which we are now debating.

From the speeches made hon. members representing the Progressive Conservative Party, it is obvious that they have not been able to tell us what would be their policy if they were in our place.

An hon. Member: They have none.

Mr. Olivier: I certainly did not hear one. Does the Progressive Conservative Party have a policy as concerns this issue? No one can say.

An hon. Member: It has none.

Mr. Olivier: I cannot ask the Progressive Conservative members from Quebec to tell us about this policy. There are two of them, and they never agree, Mr. Speaker. For the solution to their problems they called upon Mr. Masse. They conclude: We shall be three, so we might perhaps agree.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this matter brings out the true nature of the Canadian fact. Inasmuch as we fail to understand as a whole all the factors involved in this, the farther we get from real solutions. I tried to show—

Mr. Wagner: The hon. member should come back to the subject.

Mr. Olivier: Right, I should come back to the next, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe suggests, but I would like to point out also that it is because I simply do not wish to waste anybody's time.

Mr. Wagner: The hon. member manages well in the laborious reading of his text.

Mr. Olivier: Yes. I am doing alright and I will continue.

Mr. Wagner: To me that is shorthand. I do not want to read it.

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member does not want to read it he can either leave or stay, one or the other. I could also remind him to read the discussions he had on bilingualism. Several members of his party disowned the French language in this country.

So, Mr. Speaker, to try and illustrate that complexity suffice it to mention first the differences in economic interests. On the one hand, we have the producers who are caught between the depletion of their resources, the necessity to ensure quality and quantity in trade supply, and the responsibility towards all Canadians.

On the other hand, consumers see prices skyrocket and are looking for a substitute to oil products. Finally, what needs to be done to solve the problem?

Second, we have the aspect of international relations where recent changes in all international trade networks certainly played a capital role in the present situation. Needless to go over the events in the Middle East and it is certainly not with the explanations from the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe that we are going to understand anything to what is happening there. However, Canada is at a road crossing where the interest of its citizens must be balanced against the need to preserve strong international friendships.

Third, the federative nature of this country adds to the complications. We are actually touching an important subject as well as the complex problem of every area in this country.

Fourth, the question of enterprise is indeed questioned. Some suggest that resources so vital as these should not be left at the mercy of a competitive market. On the other hand, others are crying pitifully for the state not to meddle with commercial activities regulations. In fact, this is the position of the Progressive Conservative Party which merely wants to protect the interests of big business and does not give a damn for consumers.

We must realize that our government, while taking into account every aspect of the problem, is constantly faced with an opposition which enjoys trying to topple the government. They crave for power in a sickening way, these people. They play at threatening the existence of this government. One can appreciate the usefulness of this bill and especially the value of the minister who sponsored it.

Mr. Wagner: Which one is it?

Mr. Olivier: Apparently the Leader of the Opposition and hon. members of his party have fallen victims to the temptation of taking advantage of this problem to improve their credibility with the public.

• (1640)

I think that they did the opposite, Mr. Speaker, and that their utterly ambiguous position and their lack of policy have involved an ever increasing downgrading of that party's credibility. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, they blame the government for its attitude towards the United States and they do not understand that this government is primarily concerned by the needs of Canadians, and they blame the minister for what they call a lack of national policy, while they have nothing at all to propose.

Mr. Wagner: Shame!

Mr. Olivier: In a situation where a shortage is taking place, can we satisfy both the interests of foreign countries, however friendly they may be, and home requirements? And after that we are accused of not being flexible enough, both in our positions towards the United States and with regard to Canadians.

This means calling for priority consideration of two matters that are incompatible. In that regard, I suggest that the government—by the way, Mr. Speaker I would like to outline that I do not necessarily have $200,000 or $300,000 to have my speeches prepared in order to take the floor every day and make myself known by everybody—was right to opt for the Canadian people's interest. This choice was shown at the level of the security of supplies and of the price stability. These gentlemen would like to see prices increase everywhere throughout Canada. They said eastern Canada is not going to be the only one to pay a little more, the west must pay even more. That is what they want. That is their policy.

As for supplies, the minister announced a series of steps that will certainly contribute to ease the situation in the eastern part of this country. These are short-range measures that will have some results as early as this winter. Rationalizing of oil industry, long-term planning will not solve the immediate problems of the people from Quebec and the Maritimes, should a heating oil shortage occur this winter.

And the government, far from losing itself in intellectual arguments, was fast to respond. It has encouraged the voluntary saving of energy by consumers. In addition, it has made sure that all possible means will be taken to send maximum reserves in the east. I do not think that the members opposite have made more constructive suggestions up to now. I have not seen any. When one reads the speeches which have been delivered, one realized that it is merely politicking.

Mr. Wagner: The reading of that text is laborious.

Mr. Olivier: As for price stability, this is where the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has performed his best stunts. Indeed, giving his moral support to the oil magnates of Alberta, he tries to show some concern for the interests of Canadian consumers. Is that attitude of the opposition ascribable to an unconditional allegiance to the Alberta government which seems to be strictly devoted to the interests of the great oil companies and which does not care a bit about eastern Canadians.

This question remains ambiguous and in my opinion, it is the duty of hon. members opposite to state their views. What is their position? I would like them to let it plainly known. I would also like to know what they tell the people when they go in Alberta. I would like to find out their position when they go in eastern Canada. What do they say? They constantly change their version as they move from one province to the other.

Mr. Baker: That is not true.

Mr. Olivier: Further to the problems that we meet, our political system, the very nature of our country, brought together regions whose aspirations are often contradictory. The importance of the activity of Parliament and more particularly of the members stems precisely from the existence of inequalities in the distribution of goods and the mentality of every person that we find here.

Mr. Wagner: It is written in shorthand, he cannot even read it.

Mr. Olivier: This is very well written. Of the viewpoint—

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe that when he was a judge he would not tolerate any noise in court. Today, he is one of the two Progressive Conservative members elected in Quebec. He was complaining yesterday of the fact that some Quebec members were not speaking. I would ask him to be at least courteous enough to listen to the hon. member for Longueuil.

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I suggest to the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy) that when I was a judge, people pleading before me were much more gentlemanly and respectful. But this is not what happened when I listened to the first words of the hon. member who is now holding his speech and trying to read it. If that hon. member wants to be gentlemanly, honest and straight toward his colleagues, then we will allow him to read his speech as well as he can.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For some reason, the debate on this bill seems to have generated a number of subdebates, more particularly during the last hour. But I do not think they really give cause for points of order because most of these exchanges have been in subdued voice between distinct parts of the chamber. I do not have to point out where most of this is coming from, but I would ask that the hon. member who is recognized by the Chair, and who does have the floor, be allowed to speak.

[Translation]

Mr. Olivier: Mr. Speaker, I was never ashamed of what I said. I can repeat what I said at the beginning, I can keep on and he can keep on acting like a clown, I was never interested in that.

In any case, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe can try to prevent me from telling the truth, I will tell it just the same. He can send his police officers with their truncheons, I will tell the truth just the same. He could quote the Scripture or the words of an archbishop in 1900, I will keep on telling the truth, Mr. Speaker. I am not ashamed of what I say.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to try to make certain things clear to my illustrious colleagues. I would like my Alberta colleagues to understand that in emergencies, one must think first not of the province, but of the country one represents here in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: That is fine.

Mr. Olivier: When there is an apparent emergency at the national level, Mr. Speaker, one should put aside local pettiness and think rather of the Canadian people as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, what we were told fully justifies the action we want to take. Moreover, it must be kept in mind that our parliamentary system is made up of several parties and that in an emergency, we must support fair and reasonable ideas in the face of an actual situation. Mr. Speaker, what would happen this winter, if people ran out of oil in Montreal? If the same thing happened in Saint-Hyacinthe? People would get up in arms and cry shame. They would tell us we made no plans, we did not act. What would happen if lives were lost because we did nothing, and did not foresee the situation?

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe would not be cold.

An hon. Member: He is never there.

Mr. Olivier: Someone said that the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe would not be cold because he is never in his riding. I wonder if he ever goes there. He can answer me when he wants to; in any event, he is always talking.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of the debate today—

Mr. Wagner: One is so smart at that age! If only he grows older!

Mr. Olivier: I am not through: I have just started.

One thing is sure: even if I do grow older, I will not let anyone buy me off; I will not change party ten times.

● (1650)

Mr. Speaker, the Progressive Conservative party, through the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, is taking this crisis lightly. He is merely trying to restore his fortures in Quebec. I think also of the manner whereby the Progressive Conservatives try to present their views. In addition to the numerous frustrations we have suffered due to their position in respect of language, they are now trying to divide the country even further, they are willingly trying to divide the country rather than unite it, in order to reign, that being the only way for them to attain power some day, if ever—

Mr. Wagner: You were better with your text.

Mr. Olivier: I don't need it. Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, the proposals in Bill C-236 are reasonable considering the conditions we have to face. I prefer, Mr. Speaker, criticisms at the administrative level or at the political level from one or more provinces, in order that this winter our children will be warm everywhere in Canada.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I recognize the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) may I advise the House that pursuant to Standing Order 40 the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Need for increased personnel trained in geriatrics—Government position; the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt)—Disposition of unused portion of George Darby Hospital, Burnaby—Participation by municipal representatives in negotiations; the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp)—Energy—Nuclear reactors and heavy water plants—Date of expansion in western Canada—Possible increase in research and development funds.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION FOR SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on Bill C-236. I certainly do not intend to make a speech similar to the one of the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Olivier) who has just spoken; he managed to do something quite remarkable, that is sticking his tongue in oil. In such a time of crisis and when there is talk about oil shortages, we should not waste any.

Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting to note that the government does not handle major problems till there is a crisis. That is the point I wanted to make at the outset of my remarks. The government's role is to foresee, to give directions, to make sure to meet the people's essential needs such as food, clothing, and housing and, indirectly, fuel and energy. It is, according to the very definition of a government, what it must do. It is therefore stunning to note that at a certain moment there is a crisis, or that there is the possibility of a state of crisis, since the government and the minister did not make us aware in precise terms of the successive situations which were likely to develop in recent months. As a result, we do not know precisely what is going on.

Last week, we had the impression that the oil companies were merely dictating what to do to the minister, whereas it would be the contrary for a responsible government. And last week the minister candidly admitted that the possibility of an emergency was based on reports made to him and not on specific studies and figures which could be used to assess the situation accurately. He went so far as to say that the Montreal storage facilities were completely full and that it was difficult at present to bring too much oil supplies to Montreal since no storage facilities were available. An oil shortage is unthinkable after the price of petroleum products has skyrocketed.

We are told that regular oil supplies to Quebec will raise a problem this winter because of ice conditions which will make it difficult for some tankers to reach Montreal. It will not be the first time in 1973 that we have a winter in Canada. How is it that this problem did not exist last year or the previous year? How is it that it is only in 1973 that there are transportation problems because of winter conditions? And yet, the minister simply told us that the transportation of winter supplies will be difficult because of ice conditions.

One would think that they want us to freeze and to stay icebound. I think the government has a policy of trial and error, a hit and miss policy, a policy dictated by high finance, so that for the last few months and weeks we have been paying extravagant prices for products that did not cost one cent more than six months or a year ago.

It is our duty to denounce this situation and to show to the people, as mentioned in yesterday's motion, that the government has proven that its policy of the last few weeks is totally inconsistent.

Should we therefore carry on with an energy policy that does not take into account any of the basic elements of any government policy? It is to be wondered whether this is an artificially created shortage designed merely to increase prices. It would be shocking, Mr. Speaker, if such were the case and yet, to date, nobody has been able to state that there was a shortage. And how could they when our own country is an oil producer? How could they when the circumstances which led to the present international oil crisis have hardly anything to do with us? Because in fact, the Arab countries which are now turning the tap off and on as they see fit ship very little oil to Canada, 2 per cent of our imports at the most. Then we are almost not affected by the political action of the Arab nations against the whole world regarding the distribution of their oil resources.

Mr. Speaker, Canada is virtually not affected by this problem. Then, why do we have a crisis situation when we have no reason to be affected by this problem? We should get some explanations. But now we can see only one. All this area is controlled by oil corporation trusts. It seems obvious as we should not have such an oil crisis when we have in Canada the oil we need, when it seems there is no reduction in the supply in eastern Canada and particularly in the province of Quebec. Yet we know very well that Arab nations are blackmailing many countries in the world and that in any case, they provide us with little or no oil. All this gives us doubts about the way this government is administering the country.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reason for such a crisis. Let us consider our situation as would a Frenchman, an Englishman, a Spaniard, a Belgian who would look at our situation. What do they see? They see, Mr. Speaker, that we are an oil producing country, that we export at least 50 per cent of our production. They would find absolutely stupid an oil producing country which exports more than half of its production and has a crisis situation.

Canada must then be stupid since it finds itself in this situation. We have oil, we sell some to the Americans, and some people have the gall to suggest a freeze. Such a policy is incredible. Anyway, if the problem was one of transport, we would have to wonder how come no adequate policies have been developed in this field. Why, for instance, has no effort been made to create what we have long advocated, namely our own merchant navy? This has never been done. Why is it that, in the field of transportation, we have provided no facilities for supplying oil to eastern Canada?

Once again, we are faced with the fact that this government has forgotten what the government of any self-respecting country should do. But if we have been confused by the intricacies of this pseudo-crisis, Mr. Speaker—

● (1710)

Mr. Speaker, did we want at all cost to avoid offending the Americans? At times, the government is so conscious about this that it says: you, easterners, freeze a little! Turn down the heat and close the windows. Do not use your snowmobiles this winter. Do without a lot of things because we will send our oil to the United States.

Mr. Speaker, this is almost funny. In spite of everything, supposing that it became necessary for the government to supply the United States and granted that there is a transportation problem in this country, this is no reason why Canada could not find other supply sources than Arab countries and why we should freeze here to please the Americans, because we do not want Arab oil.

Mr. Speaker, in Quebec especially, people are becoming quite familiar with that problem. We know very well that Arab countries are willing to supply us with the oil we need in the East but, of course, we must understand that they are not interested in selling this oil in order that we can tranship it to the United States. It is quite understandable. This afternoon, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), during the question period, answered a question by my colleague from Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) asking whether the government was considering the possibility of establishing embassies in the Arab countries who have oil, with a barely audible no.

Mr. Speaker, is it conceivable that at a time when an oil shortage is foreseen and oil producing countries are willing to sell us some oil, the government is not even thinking of opening embassies in those Arab countries, when we have some in other Arab countries that do not produce oil? It is unbelievable but that is the situation.

In his last election campaign, the Quebec premier talked about superports to be built with Arab capital. How do you explain that the whole scheme fall through when Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Massé meet with their federal counterparts? There are strange coincidences and I would be inclined to think that the federal government, in order to save somebody or other—maybe its little brother in Quebec—refused to enter into agreements with Arab countries. It is always the same policy, to freeze everything, but the potential is there. Let us not develop it.

How is it that our country is involved in international disputes like the Israeli-Arab conflict. What business is it of ours? Why should we create bad blood between both sides and why could we not be considered a friendly country by Arab countries? I can make nothing of it. Maybe we want to freeze everything?

Mr. Speaker, those facts may be hard to take but they are true. And because they are facts, they must be brought out in order that attempts be made to find the means of remedying the present situation.

Mr. Speaker, if something positive and concrete is to be done, in view of the situation we are witnessing today, it is high time we cease to allow companies, trusts, monopolies, pools to do as they please and decide whether there is a shortage or not. It is up to us to find the means of ensuring a much more stable consumption of the energy required by all Canadians. We must put a stop to mysterious goings-on, to hesitant policies, and see things as they are: then we can remedy the situation appropriately.

Mr. Speaker, there are certainly various ways of eliminating waste in the field of energy so as to determine the action to be taken in order to live in a minimum of comfort. I think that these problems always arise from an unrealistic basic policy having nothing in common with a natural economy that can really enable all Canadian consumers to take advantage of this country's potential. I believe we have here an excellent opportunity of showing that only a government inspired by economic policies such as those we advocate could avoid these crises.

Even if someone once again argues that we are harping on the same theme, Mr. Speaker, I will answer that when we have a potential of physical natural resources as we do in Canada and when we rely on these resources that we find all over the country it is scandalous. However, with the kind of system that the Social Credit would apply, Mr. Speaker, such a situation could not exist since we would have a daily inventory of our possibilities, of our capacities. We would know exactly where we stand in such and such a field, where are our petroleum and hydroelectric resources, what are the possibilities both in quality and quantity for our energy resources and this would ensure our stability. There would never be a crisis since, in a system materially based on our real physical possibilities, a crisis is impossible.

In the present system everything is based exclusively on profit instead of needs. We wonder why we have not already begun developing the tar sands in western Canada, Mr. Speaker. It is scandalous. We should not ask this question. We have failed to do so because it is too expensive. We should ask ourselves: Do we need that? If we do, we have only to issue a line of credit. Consequently, we have a human policy. We have needs and we have the physical possibility to satisfy these needs; all we have to do is to take action. It is as simple as that! The right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the government cannot contradict such a thing. Mr. Speaker, we say that our suggestions are mathematical and scientific; we would like somebody to attempt to contradict them, not to make fun of them, it is too easy, because some people usually summarize all arguments against our policy in two words—the money machine. We are far from it but we talk about oil and energy in general.

Mr. Speaker, we do have this energy. We are too stupid to develop it. We wait for capital and investments; how many times have I repeated in the House how stupid it is to rely on investments, on foreign capital and especially on foreign products? We see what that brings with it. And this country still bases its policy on trade, and exclusively foreign trade. We have the proof that we are on the wrong track. When we estrange foreign oil producers we see that when they do not operate neither do we.

If we have an economy based on our potential and our own needs and if we develop our physical potential according to our needs we will never have to call upon Arab countries or Venezuela. And God knows that in the great majority of areas which provide for consumer needs Canada is a totally independent country. We would always be ready, Mr. Speaker, to go and bargain with other countries to get lemons, bananas, pears, oranges and grapefruits since those are the only things missing in Canada.

It is therefore always ridiculous for a country capable of supporting itself, producing everything it needs, not too populated, with nearly infinite reserves, not to be able to develop coherent and stable policies. That is unacceptable. And no matter how hard the government tries to protest by saying that it is doing as good as the others and the latter would not do better, when suggestions so clear, so explicit, so mathematical and so scientific are made, they have no other choice but to accept them.

We understand this government not wanting to accept that. It would seem to displease those who actually control this country—high finance. They are not ready to accept those reforms. If that happened we would actually see this country develop and progress on the sole strength of our real credit and not on the goodwill of foreign investors. Evidently, this is not acceptable to those who have the financial means but such is the situation.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I think that Bill C-236 may help improve conditions. In spite of the various ways to obtain imports, if nobody wants to sell us oil, we will look stupid. This is not the solution to the problem. It has been stated that through that legislation, the matter will be entirely settled, as if production and goods depended on a legislation.

I do not hope so, but in spite of the goodwill shown in the bill I hardly think that something can be done about it. The real solutions should strike at the root in order to make what is financially possible materially feasible.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-236, the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, in its proposed form and the way it is worded is, in my opinion, just one more retrogressive step this Liberal government is taking to eventually deprive the Canadian people of the effect of the principles of representative government, principles which this government has continuously and progressively eroded over the years it has been in power. If this erosion is not soon abated, the people of Canada will be saddled with a government that will be as effectively totalitarian as some of those now evident in some unfortunate countries around the world.

Immigrants like myself who came to Canada from areas and countries where democratic government is anathema, came not only to better themselves economically but, more important, to regain lost civic and personal liberties and to once more breathe the air of free men. No words of mine would be adequate to describe the emotions of these people when they are no longer challenged in their every day living by bureaucratic dictatorial stooges—there is no better name—who are responsible to no one but themselves. You only have to ask groups like the Hungarians and Czechoslovaks who fled from Soviet military subjugation in their homelands, and the Ugandans who fled the dangerous and volatile General Idi Amin, to confirm first-hand accounts of the terror these people went through. That is why we must be ever vigilant and ready to uphold democracy in Canada, whether an attack originates from sources within or without.

It is imperative that this government take stock of itself if it is to extricate itself from its apathetic approaches to solving the problems of this nation, and its apathetic approach to the important needs and desires of the people of Canada. It is quite evident that this government has not lived up to its mandate, a mandate which is being violated more and more each day this government remains in power, ably aided by the conditional support of the New Democratic Party. The New Democratic Party of Canada, by their actions in supporting this inept government, is doing a disservice to the people of Canada by depriving them of their right to choose their own government and not be governed by confrontation, as is now being witnessed.

When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) opened the debate on Bill C-236, he spoke very casually, even more casually than he does when giving his hazy replies to the many questions on energy put to him during recent question periods. The casualness of his delivery is reminiscent of one of my professors in university who had long passed his academic usefulness and had long lost not only his own interest but that of his students and, therefore, was not of any use to himself or his students. I suspect the minister had an underlying purpose in this type of delivery. It was a lame attempt to lull the members of this House into passing this bill by playing down its dictatorial aspects if passed, this bill would give dictatorial powers to five people to allocate and govern all aspects of energy in Canada. These five people, all omnipotent, would not be responsible to the people of Canada. They would have a power that should be foreign to any country which calls itself a democracy. The word "democracy" does not mean dictate to the people, as this government would like it to mean. It means rule by the people, as advocated and established by my forefathers almost 2,500 years ago.

The way Bill C-236 is worded, with its innuendos and soft-sell approach, compares very much with the fine print one often hears about in connection with some shady contractual dealings conducted by people whose only interest is to dupe their victims for the sake of the almighty dollar, giving no thought to the aftermath of such action in terms of suffering and deprivation.

It is not my intention to dwell on this bill clause by clause. This will be done by the committee. However, I say most emphatically this government has not made a case to justify the wide-reaching powers of this bill. The only power the government may need now is the authority to ration. The government has already at its disposal adequate legislative authority to deal with most of the energy problems facing Canada today.

Perhaps the most serious energy problem we face today is that of price and price increases. This bill does not provide for a realistic policy that would alleviate fuel prices which work to the disadvantage of Canadians east of the Ottawa valley. One of the most devastating provisions of this bill is that which would give the government authority to negate provincial priorities relevant to an energy crisis. In fact, some of the powers are so far reaching that the federal government can invade areas of undisputed provincial authority.

This bill, if passed, will give all power to a board to supersede and over-rule all legislation now in effect relating to the control of pollution and pollution problems affecting our country nation-wide. Legislation that may have taken years of preparation to protect our environment would be ruthlessly swept aside, perhaps never to be enforced again, or if re-enforced, would only be in a diluted version. This bill is not a temporary measure to deal with a specific crisis and then expire. It is intended to be permanent. It does not come into effect on proclamation like the War Measures Act. It is in effect from the day Royal Assent is granted and can be used by the governor in council at any time. A much more careful look will have to be given this bill. Many changes will have to be made before it will win the respect of the majority of the members of this House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-236, the energy supply emergency bill. Surely, there can be no matter of greater importance at this time, to not only this country but other countries around the globe, than energy supplies. This bill will give the government wide-ranging powers to allocate the supplies of energy which we have available in Canada. Indeed, we are probably one of the most fortunate of all nations on earth in that we are blessed with large supplies of all forms of energy, including hydroelectric power, coal, oil, gas and, perhaps the most important in the long haul, uranium.

The problem is that these resources are not all arranged geographically so we can take complete advantage of them at the present time. This is why this bill is brought before the House giving the government the power to allocate these resources during the next couple of years while we construct an oil pipeline from western Canada to supply markets in eastern Canada—Montreal and the maritime provinces.

Last Thursday the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke in this House and outlined a series of steps that will provide the basis for a national energy policy. These include the maintenance of the price freeze on crude oil until the end of the heating season this winter. The effects of this will be felt in parts of Ontario and western Canada which receive petroleum products from Alberta and the prairie provinces.

As might be expected, the immediate reaction to the maintenance of this present price freeze from the multinational oil corporations was a strong one, since they see the windfall profits that might otherwise have been theirs slipping out of their hands. However, the benefit of the freeze will accrue to the Canadian people who require oil products in the part of Canada west of the Ottawa Valley line. In spite of the loss of these windfall profits which the multinational corporations had their eye on, they have not done badly in that the price of their products has gone up at least 30 per cent during the past year.

That is not to say, however, that the price of crude oil will remain constant or frozen for any length of time. The Prime Minister made it clear that in the long haul we must raise the price of our crude oil products if we are to develop the Alberta tar sands, the oil reserves in the Arctic and those off the east coast on our continental shelf. Indeed, I have heard it said that in order for the tar sands reserves to be developed at current prices and cost of production, the oil companies would have to receive something like $6 a barrel.

The Prime Minister also made it clear in his speech last Thursday that the federal and provincial first ministers would be meeting in January and looking at the problems caused by increased prices east of the Ottawa Valley line, especially the cost of heating oil for Quebec and the Maritimes. He indicated that some solution would be found for low-income families. I, personally, think we should be considering some form of direct assistance, whether a direct payment to compensate low-income families for the additional heating costs they are going to encounter this winter, or some other form of assistance. The Prime Minister made it clear that the old Borden-Ottawa Valley line was to be eliminated, and with the co-operation of the premiers of the provinces there would be a one-price and one-petroleum policy for Canada. However this is worked out, whether through an oil marketing board or some other mechanism, the idea is sound and the only one suitable for Canada. We must have a unified pricing system across the country, with some differences in respect of the various areas to compensate for transportation costs.

I also welcome the government's plan to establish a national petroleum corporation. This will have definite benefits for Canada in that the government will be able to acquire supplies of petroleum products from overseas by dealing directly with the state concerned, which it cannot do at the present time, at least not in a manner that will ensure adequate supplies.

I was also pleased to note that in the government's new policy the national petroleum corporation would be given certain powers. One of its responsibilities would be to hold oil reserves for the future needs of our nation. I welcome this announcement. Most important, I feel this national petroleum corporation should be looking at the development of the tar sands. There are something like 500 billion barrels of oil locked in these tar sands, and acquiring the technology and know-how for removing it should be made one of the responsibilities of the new national petroleum corporation. Indeed, I would like to see the federal government become involved in at least one public work in the tar sands for extracting this oil. This could take place either in co-operation with the government of Alberta, as I hope will be the case, or if that is not possible I believe the federal government should go ahead and establish at least one mining and refining program in the tar sands. This would enable the federal government to develop the necessary know-how.

I was pleased, as well, that the Prime Minister said the government is giving top priority to the development of our nuclear technology and the use of uranium by electric utilities. Perhaps the nuclear technology which Canada now has is one of the greatest success stories in the country in view of the development of the CANDU reactor. Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and Ontario Hydro with their development at Pickering, Ontario, have developed a system for bringing on stream tremendous reserves of electrical energy. The federal government has made it clear that it will provide half the financing of additional plants to be developed in New Brunswick and other provinces. The success of the CANDU reactor can be seen from the sales of the reactor to countries such as Argentina and South Korea which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) announced last Friday.

Representing the uranium capital of the world, Elliot Lake, may I say we view the position of the government on this matter with a great deal of satisfaction and pleasure. The township of Elliot Lake has certainly suffered a great deal of economic upheaval during its brief lifetime. However, with the recent announcement of a sale by Denison Mines Limited of some $800 million of uranium, representing over 40 million pounds, for delivery during the 1980s and early 1990s, combined with the recent sale of reactors to other countries, and the announced lifting of the embargo by the United States Atomic Energy Commission in 1977, to be fully implemented by 1983, the future stability of Elliot Lake is ensured.

[Mr. Foster.]

Apart from my own interest in this matter as the elected representative for the community of Elliot Lake in the Parliament of Canada, I believe we should be moving more of our electrical utilities toward deriving their energy from uranium. It seems wrong to me that Ontario Hydro is at the present time building the Lennox generating station that will utilize petroleum products which might have to be brought in from overseas, in that we cannot be sure of adequate supply, when it could have been designed to utilize the uranium mined here in the province of Ontario. Surely uranium is the principal source of energy we now have in the province of Ontario since most of the accessible hydro dam sites have been developed.

● (1740)

Similarly, last summer Ontario Hydro announced an electric utility station to be developed in the next few years in northeastern Ontario, leaving it open whether it would utilize petroleum, coal from the United States, soft lignite coal which is located near Moosonee, or uranium. It is time that a province such as Ontario, so rich in uranium, came out forcefully and in a decisive way and said it will build future electric utilities designed to use the uranium with which it is so richly endowed.

Although the matters I have mentioned are important, perhaps the most urgent announcement last week concerned the pipeline to be built to supply crude oil to Montreal and the eastern provinces. We now have a pipeline system running from western Canada to Manitoba and then to Sarnia through the United States. This line passes through northern Michigan and crosses the Straits of Mackinaw at St. Ignace. It is my opinion that a pipeline to Montreal should be built from this location at St. Ignace, Michigan, to Sault Ste. Marie and from Sault Ste. Marie through northern Ontario to Montreal. That would be a preferable route to the Sarnia to Montreal route over United States soil. In the first instance, the distance for the transmission of this oil via the route through Sault Ste. Marie would be approximately 200 miles shorter, and the majority of the pipeline would be built through Canadian territory rather than through the United States.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Using Hamilton steel.

Mr. Foster: The hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) suggests that Hamilton steel should be used. I thought the minister was very kind in his response to him last Thursday or Friday when he said that the Canadian Commercial Corporation would look into the prospect of purchasing some Stelco steel. There has always been a friendly rivalry between Algoma Steel, in Sault Ste. Marie, and Stelco in Hamilton, but it is quite obvious that if the pipeline is built from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal we would save a great deal in shipping costs if the steel and the pipe were obtained from Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie; and I know the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth would not want to see these extra shipping charges added to the cost of the pipeline. I am sure a great deal of the pipe will come from the Algoma Steel Corporation in Sault Ste. Marie.

In his announcement last Thursday the Prime Minister indicated that the federal government would proceed as soon as possible with a natural gas pipeline from the Alaska, Prudhoe Bay area, through the Mackenzie River delta to Edmonton having due regard to environment considerations and native rights, and would seek a reciprocal agreement with the United States for the continuity of supply for both countries. Surely this is a wise proposal.

The majority of our pipelines supplying crude oil pass over United States soil. We have the Portland pipeline from Portland, Maine, to Montreal which supplies something like 500,000 barrels a day. We have the Interprovincial pipeline from Manitoba to Sarnia which carries large volumes for the Ontario market, and we also have pipelines on the west coast. Surely we should make arrangements to build a pipeline from the Mackenzie River delta to Edmonton to carry natural gas. But if the United States decides to transship its gas in a liquified form, it is questionable whether we will have large enough volumes to justify the establishment of such a pipeline, at least for many years.

On the other hand, if a common carrier pipeline were developed which would carry United States and Canadian natural gas, the reserves in the Mackenzie River delta would be available to southern Canada. While I think the reciprocal agreement to ensure continuity of supply, proposed by the Prime Minister, is wise, in the long-run we should be looking toward the building of a maximum amount of the pipeline on Canadian soil using the Sault Ste. Marie route, thus having the greater percentage of our oil travelling over Canadian soil.

Another advantage to having the pipeline from Sault Ste. Marie to Montreal is that the long-term transmission costs of pumping would be greatly reduced because the line would be 200 miles shorter. In addition, the construction time would be shortened. Most of the territory of Northern Ontario is rural, and the difficulty of obtaining right of way would be considerably reduced. Much of this area is Crown land, and the acquisition costs are less in rural areas than in urban centres. The urgency of constructing the pipeline, and the fact that it can be built more rapidly through this area of northern Ontario, are obvious and decisive factors.

It is my understanding that the proposed pipeline would be of the 30-inch size and would have an initial capacity of some 300,000 to 400,000 barrels a day. It could be expanded by adding additional pumping stations, perhaps increasing the number from five to ten at some later date. This would provide the possibility of supplying the Montreal market via a Canadian pipeline. I understand the market in Montreal is in the nature of 500,000 to 600,000 barrels a day. This is a mommoth project amounting to an expenditure in the neighbourhood of $150 million. To put it in perspective, this is somewhat less than one-third the cost of constructing the St. Lawrence Seaway—and prices have gone up since that construction.

The advantages to the area in which the pipeline would be located are mainly related to the number of jobs created during the construction phase. From this point of view it would be most welcome in northern Ontario, where we have areas of high unemployment, especially in the northshore area of the Algoma constituency. But there may be other long-term advantages such as the possibility of a refinery to serve northeastern Ontario. It has been proposed at various times that a refinery should be constructed in the Algoma or northshore area. The location of a pipeline through this area would make this possibility even greater.

Since 1969 the federal government has been trying to diversify the economy of northern Ontario with incentive grants for regional development. The availability of an oil pipeline offers the possibility at some future time of a petro-chemical industry being established in the area, such as we now have at Sarnia—where the main Interprovincial oil pipeline terminates. If this were to occur, the location of a crude oil pipeline through northern Ontario would be one of the most important instruments of regional development that the federal government could provide. The area has many natural assets to lend itself to the development of secondary manufacturing and processing industries or the petrochemical industry, such as the availability of several locations for deep water ports along the north shore of Lake Huron.

If a refinery capacity were to be located in this area of northern Ontario, it would eliminate some of the expensive back-haul costs which now exist in bringing back refined products from the Sarnia and Toronto areas to points in northern Ontario such as Sault Ste. Marie, Thunder Bay and Sudbury. For many years the people of these areas have paid higher prices for petroleum products than those paid in southern Ontario. Perhaps the availability of a refinery capacity in northern Ontario would eliminate some of the transportation costs from the refineries located in southern Ontario.

It is my understanding that the major oil companies are now moving to establish a refined products terminal at Superior, Wisconsin, which is designed to provide the upper Great Lakes region with refined petroleum products. It would be nice to see some of the refined products for northern Ontario made in northern Ontario. If the pipeline is to be located through northern Ontario, this becomes a distinct possibility. I think the government should give serious consideration to having this pipeline located in northern Ontario. This would provide a shortened distance for transmitting oil and would reduce further the transportation costs in respect of moving crude oil to Montreal. Also, there would be a shortened time in respect of the construction of the pipeline if it were to be located there. There is, in addition, the possibility of lower prices of petroleum products in northern Ontario and some future diversification of the economy in this region.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Pursuant to Standing Order 60(1), I should like to lay on the table of the House notice of a ways and means motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The Standing Order provides for this procedure. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I do not have much time before six o'clock, but perhaps I could take a moment or two to say, in rising to speak on Bill C-236, that I am very conscious of the fact that coming from eastern Canada I do not have the degree of expertise of some of my western colleagues. I think this House of Commons and my party are very fortunate in having the benefit of so many people from that part of the country who have a pretty good background in the petroleum industry.

Frankly, I am amused by the many one-day wonders on the government side, who all of a sudden have been making weighty pronouncements in the House about petroleum and all the ramifications this so-called crisis has in store for us all. I am particularly apprehensive that some of these policies may affect in a very detrimental way the part of Canada I represent.

I think the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) made an excellent speech last night. It was a thoughtful speech in which he dealt with a great many aspects of the problems involving energy. It is a great pity he did not make this speech even a year ago, because had he done so it would have been not only a great credit to himself but of immeasurable benefit to this nation. I wish he had had a bit of foresight rather than the hindsight he now has.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is getting close to six o'clock. Perhaps I might be permitted to call it six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, at six o'clock I was in the process of saying that I thought the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources made an excellent speech yesterday in which he dealt at some length with the pertinent aspects of this country's energy policy. He mentioned some of the potential of a nuclear power strategy, he made passing reference to the potential involved in the long-range transmission of hydro power in Canada, and he dealt with possible subsidies to alleviate some of the difficulties that people in various parts of Canada will encounter. Since he is here this evening, may I point out again how much better it would have been, and how much more credit his speech would have brought him—although, granted, hindsight is easier to come by than foresight—had he made it even a few weeks ago, preferably a few months ago.

I was interested also in the intervention in this debate on Bill C-236 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I think that all too often the Prime Minister chooses not to intervene in the debates in this House. Of course, we are all the poorer when the prime minister of a nation does not come forward with a definitive statement of what his feelings are on important pieces of legislation.

Speaking as a member from eastern Canada, I wish to say that I was not overly comforted by what the Prime Minister had to say or, I should say, what he had to read, but it does seem clear that he has found it necessary to admit that a pipeline should have been built and, hopefully, will be built in the not too distant future. He mentioned that initiatives must be taken to develop the Athabasca tar sands. He also mentioned that if conditions in the Atlantic region deteriorate, he is prepared to discuss some sort of welfare or social measures under the existing framework to help people in that region. I commend him for all these things, but I cannot help saying—and I do not say so with malice—that I wonder where the right hon. gentleman has been and where his government has been for the last few years.

Surely if what we have now in Canada is a crisis, it has to be, at least in some measure, a crisis of neglect. I cannot help but think, since I am a new member of the House of Commons, that in the so-called good old days, which were not that long ago, when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) headed the government, he took a lot of abuse, as all prime ministers must, for some of the economic conditions that prevailed in Canada. However, at that time his administration introduced the concept of the Ottawa Valley line, and in so doing provided a useful climate for the Canadian oil industry in which to develop. Also in passing, since there has been a lot of comment made about general economic conditions, he has been recognized, at least in my part of Canada, as the first prime minister really to recognize the need and necessity for and the desirability of some meaningful measures to reduce regional economic disparities. He also controlled inflation.

The Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), one of the most able ministers in the government and a man for whom I have a great deal of respect, gave his usual speech that was full of bombast. It was a good speech, as his speeches always are, but one thing that was not characteristic of the hon. gentleman was that he appeared to deliver it from a text, as is the invariable custom of the Prime Minister. That is very unusual for that very talented minister. I could not help but think it did not quite sound like him and I had the feeling that, while he gave the speech in his usual forceful manner, his heart wasn't in it.

Nowhere in his speech did he express any reservations about what is likely to happen, in terms of the measures for which he is responsible, in attempting to reduce regional economic disparities. Nowhere did he express determination that he was going to stand up and try to persuade the Prime Minister and the cabinet that the present energy situation, by its very nature, was bound to have a serious effect upon eastern Canada. I am surprised he did not do this, because he is too astute an individual not to know that nowhere in this nation will an industry of any magnitude settle when there is a shortage of energy or any difficulty in obtaining a guaranteed source of energy.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources also made note of the necessity, as I said earlier, of possibly subsidizing the consumers in eastern Canada. Obviously, this will mean the expenditure of a great deal of money. I am not qualified to pass judgment on how much, but if a million barrels of oil per day are required for eastern Canada, and if the price differential is as great as it appears to be, say around $3 a barrel, then even a partial subsidy of $1 a barrel will mean a total of $365 million per year. If that is the effect this will have on eastern Canada and our national budget, I cannot help but wonder where the administration was, in not being able to foresee the situation, and why in heaven's name it did not build the Montreal pipeline a year ago when it had been given every indication by people who knew, including the much maligned Premier of Alberta, that this situation was likely to occur.

Although it is easy to point the finger at this side of the House and say it was the Tories who implemented the so-called Ottawa Valley line, surely in fairness it must be said that economic and social conditions have changed tremendously in the last 11 or 12 years. When the Prime Minister said on September 4—and he has made at least two subsequent pronouncements—that the pipeline is going to be built, surely that was one of the greatest obviosities ever uttered by a prime minister. Of course it must be built. I only wonder why it was not built a long time ago as conditions changed and the industry evolved. I see that the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) is in the chamber. He, too, knows that what is aggravating the energy crisis is a transportation problem, a distribution problem. And while this is understandable, I think it is more forgiveable than the omission by the government to take the ordinary preventive step of building the pipeline. Surely this is so obvious that it is incredible that the government did not do it.

But returning to the transportation aspect, Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the priorities in this nation are such that if we move any great amount of petroleum products it will seriously interfere with badly needed facilities to move other basic commodities such as wheat, apples, lumber and any number of things that have to be moved. To impose this burden on our transportation system at this time makes it difficult to understand how it can be done.

It seems pretty clear that the Prime Minister in imposing this policy is not to be criticized so much for doing one thing or doing another thing as for being inconsistent in what he is doing. At least the NDP policies on this matter are fairly clear. They would like to see the petroleum industry brought under government control as much as possible. That is their policy; and whether we agree or disagree with it, at least in this regard they have been fairly consistent. But the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have not been consistent. They have been saying one thing at one time and another thing at another time. And regardless of whether or not you agree with them, if one is to respect them and give them credit for having the courage of their convictions, one has great difficulty in doing so when one looks at the contradictory and rather inconsistent policies they have been advocating.

When the Prime Minister talks about conditions in eastern Canada he is not being consistent. I well remember, as the newest member of this House when I came to Ottawa in 1971, that the very first question I asked in this chamber was of the Prime Minister. He had just come back from the Victoria conference. I asked whether the question of offshore mineral rights had been on the agenda or had been discussed. As I recall his answer, the right hon. gentleman indicated that it was not on the agenda but there had been something done about it. Since that time I and other members from eastern Canada have asked him what he intends to do to resolve the impasse between the eastern provinces and the federal government, which was actively impeding and which continues to impede the exploration which oil companies must undertake if they are to build up our reserves.

In my opinion, the Prime Minister has tried to put the onus back on the provinces, but the Premier of Nova Scotia has been very quick to put the onus back on the Prime Minister. The latest announcement indicates that there will be an early resolution of this impasse. I am very skeptical, and hon. members will have to be a little indulgent with me because I see no reason, based on the past policies of the government, to suggest that either the federal administration or, for that matter, the province of Nova Scotia, is taking steps at this moment that will finally cure this ridiculous situation which, at a time of national energy crisis, is impeding the search for the very substance we require so desperately in that part of Canada.

This debate is on Bill C-236 and, while I understand it is not proper to go into the bill clause by clause at this time, I would like to deal with some of its provisions in a general way. In this regard I would like to say at the outset that I see no reason for any member to withhold support of the bill provided the government is willing to modify some of the very sweeping and almost dictatorial and coercive powers that are embodied in it. I have not had much time to read the bill, but from the cursory way that I have been able to go through and compare it with another piece of legislation brought forward by this government, Bill C-181, commonly known as the War Measures Act, I find they have quite a bit in common. Just as the War Measures Act, in retrospect I think, is universally regarded as one of the sorriest aspects of civil liberties in this country, I feel I am not being unfair when I ascribe the feeling to the government that if they had to do it over again they would not invoke this type of measure. I think they are indulging in the same type of overkill when they try to persuade members to pass this legislation, Bill C-236. I think it is obvious that because of the government's neglect it is necessary, if not desirable, to give them the power to allocate and ration, but I cannot see why it is necessary to have the tremendous, sweeping powers that they are asking for in this piece of legislation.

We have just finished a major debate on Bill C-132, the foreign investment review act, and in that piece of legislation we were given a very good example of how intransigent the government has been when it comes to giving the provinces of this country some sort of consultation in deciding their own destinies and in dealing with some things that under the BNA Act may be under their exclusive jurisdiction in less troubled times if time were taken for a judicial determination.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation transcends or makes a nullity of some major bills. It supersedes the National Energy Board Act; it appears to supersede the Combines Investigation Act in part; it appears to ride roughshod over environmental statutes; it supersedes the Transportation Act, the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, the Export Act and the Export and Import Permits Act which has been in effect since 1947.

Mr. Speaker, one wonders why at this particular time the government seems to be in such indecent haste to pass this bill holus-bolus without, as far as I know, having any meaningful opportunity for knowledgeable people in the industry and the provinces to come before the relevant standing committee to testify and give advice. At least in Bill C-132 the government gave the provinces and the other interested parties an opportunity to do this. The hearings were quite lengthy and everyone who wished to do so had the opportunity to speak and to put their feelings on the record.

For the balance of this winter, unless the crisis is a great deal more serious than the minister has led us to believe, I do not see why the simple power to allocate and ration would not suffice for this government. I hope when this bill is sent to committee that the government and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources will pause and reflect on the advisability of taking a more tolerant and less dictatorial and totalitarian attitude toward this whole legislation and will give a little attention to some of the amendments that I am sure will be forthcoming from all members of the House interested in civil and provincial rights.

Since much has been said about the position of the province of Alberta, Mr. Speaker, I think the editorial in today's Ottawa Journal seems to stand up very well as far as it concerns reaction to the Prime Minister's remarks in Vancouver. I think it would be only fair to point out that far from being the selfish, oil-grabbing sheik that he has been portrayed to be by certain members opposite, the Premier of Alberta has given every indication that he is making every effort to achieve the maximum production, for the general good of Canada, of Alberta's petroleum resources. In fact, if he were to take a more selfish view and curtail production and leave some of the oil in the ground, thus taking a narrow, provincially-oriented view, probably in terms of future dollars and cents his province would be much better off. I think it is time that people in the House of Commons recognized this, and I think it ill behooves the leader of the federal government to go out of his way to malign the Premier of Alberta. I hope this will not happen as often in the future-hopefully, never in the future—as it has happened in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Looking briefly at some of the provisions of Bill C-236, it is very interesting to see what clause 34 says. It is a very short clause and appears to be designed to make certain that the provincial administrations are bound beyond the shadow of a doubt, because all it says is:

Her Majesty is bound by this act.

Mr. Baldwin: Anti-monarchy!

Mr. MacKay: It may well be, as the hon. member says, that it is an anti-monarchy act. If it is not, it is anti everything else. When looking at the powers given under this piece of legislation, one wonders what the minister has left out. They can practically do everything but sell fish and chips and mine gold under this act and do so at the expense of the province.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. MacKay: I notice that the head office of this proposed body, that will have the great power to allocate and ration and do everything else that they would like to do, appears to be designed to be in Ottawa. That is hardly surprising in view of past experience, but one would wonder why they could not put the head office where the main supply of energy is, whether it is hydrocarbon or petroleum—that is, in the western provinces. Why must it be in Ottawa?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Surely there should be some minimum standard on the qualifications of the people who are to sit on this board. I see that they may hold office at pleasure. There is no particular measure put in there to limit their term of office, and there does not appear to be any qualifying standard or measure of administrative, technical or procedural ability either. It would be easy to say, I believe unkindly, that it is another refuge for defeated Liberal candidates or partisans of the government. I hope this does not occur. I do not mean to be unkind by suggesting this, but surely if there is to be any amount of expertise generated particular qualifications should be laid out for the people who hope to sit on this very important board.

Mr. Patterson: Most of the defeated Liberal candidates have already got jobs.

Mr. MacKay: There is another aspect of this so-called crisis that has been dwelt upon in passing by some hon. members, but I think it should be mentioned again. There does not seem to be any unanimity amongst members of the treasury benches as to whether there really is a crisis in this country in so far as energy is concerned. If there really is a crisis, I am sure no hon. member would wish to quibble in any respect with the government's request that it be given emergency powers. We have the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) saying, in effect, that we never had it so good and we are going to have a great, great year next year and there will not be any adverse effects at all; or if there are, somehow it will all turn out to be good for us. Then we hear the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources saying at various times that there is going to be a shortfall of "X" thousand barrels, or there is likely to be a curtailment of supply from Arab sources because of political ramifications. In such a situation you wonder who to believe.

• (2030)

Is there a crisis, or is there not? The much heralded technical advisory committee to which the minister referred seems to be—I do not want to be unfair and malign his committee—like that mythical dagger in Hamlet. The quote, as I recall, is as follows: "Is this a dagger that I see before me, with its handle towards my hand? I have thee not, yet I see thee still. Or art thou a dagger of the mind, a false illusion?" That about sums up what we know about the committee. We do not know very much about it. It is neither heard directly nor seen clearly. Why, some cabinet ministers are not even able to name their representatives on the committee.

Mr. Blenkarn: At least four of them.

Mr. MacKay: This applies to at least four of them. Again, one wonders what is going on and if the government really knows.

Mr. Blenkarn: You know the government doesn't know.

Mr. MacKay: My hon. friend from Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) says that the government does not know. I accept his suggestion but I hope he is wrong. I hope the government knows what is going on because, after all, it is our government. It would be a sad commentary on Canada if the government really were as incompetent as it now appears. I hope for all our sakes that it is not.

An energy crisis has been proclaimed. However, as inflation will soon increase by almost double, if the rise in December is at all significant, and as food prices have increased by 18 per cent, it is evident that there is a crisis. I suggest, however, that the crisis is a governmental and credibility crisis rather than an energy crisis. I believe the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is determined, and well he should be, to take steps for curing the problem in so far as those steps lie within his power. He realizes, I think, that we need a national power grid in this country. I hope he will bend every effort in making sure that such a national power grid is built and that the blanks in our energy picture are filled in. He will encounter enormous problems in this regard and it is unfair to expect him to cure these overnight. I believe he is making a sincere attempt to do something.

I wish that in his statement the Prime Minister could have indicated what tangible steps are being taken to build a pipeline. Does the government not realize that rights-of-way must be acquired, surveys done and expropriations carried out? How is the pipeline to be built? Will it be built on a cost plus basis, or otherwise? Will it be built by a consortium from the private sector, or is the government going to build it? How will this be done? It would be reassuring to know if the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) has made sure that there will be enough steel for the pipeline. Concrete action would reassure the people of Canada more than high-sounding announcements. I trust that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who has been under a lot of strain and a lot of fire lately, will bring forward something concrete and, will, either in the committee or in the House, reassure the people of Canada that something tangible is being done and not just being talked about.

It would be encouraging if the Minister of Finance would bring forward positive proposals, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) suggested in a recent speech, for giving fast write-offs to companies and individuals erecting storage facilities so that we can have at least a 90-day oil supply in eastern Canada, instead of literally wondering where next month's fuel is to come from.

It is evident that if any board of directors or any executive of any labour union in Canada had gone before the shareholders, or before the rank and file and presented the sorry record of performance which this government has presented to the people of Canada, that board of directors or that executive would be turfed out so fast that they would not even be given the chance to say, "Thank you for giving us the privilege of serving you."

If the government is sincere in wanting to cure our problems, if it will give assurances that when this bill is sent to committee it will be receptive to constructive suggestions and sound amendments from Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, if it does not appropriate unto itself, at the expense of the provinces and the people of this country, more power than it actually needs for dealing with the crisis for which the government itself is responsible, it will not find it difficult to get the support of most members of this House.

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take my full time in speaking on Bill C-236. I just wish to make a few comments. First I wish to discuss some of the inequities which I see evident in the bill and then I shall turn to what I consider possibly a more important question, the over-all world situation as it relates to energy and to food. I say that because food and energy are interrelated questions. Then I shall refer to what may happen if the present Liberal government does not make any effort to do any long-range planning with regard to the situation in Canada.

In our discussion of Bill C-236 we must first ask ourselves this question, "Is there really an energy crisis in Canada at this time?" because that is really what the government asks us to decide. I submit that Bill C-236 is premised on the belief that Canada has a serious national energy crisis. It appears this way, certainly. While it is undoubtedly true that Canada is experiencing regional supply shortfalls of Arab oil and imported products, it is also true that much of the country is not faced with an energy crisis similar to the crisis in the United States, parts of Europe and Japan.

While the Middle East dispute undoubtedly accelerated some domestic price characteristics, many of the aspects of Canada's crisis have their roots in longstanding domestic problems which have been brought on by the present government. The principal cause, therefore, of our crisis today—if it can be termed a crisis—is not Arab cutoffs or oil embargoes but lack of federal leadership in anticipating and settling problems in an orderly and co-ordinated manner.

For example, in March this year the government stated that it saw no need for a pipeline to Montreal. By June, when the government energy "non-policy" as it has been called, was tabled, this pipeline was about the third priority. Yet on September 4, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the decision to build such a pipeline. Now, over two months since that announcement, nothing has been done, no plans have been announced and the project may yet be delayed because there may be a lack of steel and other commodities which are needed for building this pipeline which is essential if Canada is to meet its total energy requirements. As I have said, we are not even sure at present if we can get the necessary steel piping. According to Premier Lougheed of Alberta, the federal government could have built the pipeline in a crash program this past summer. By now the pipeline could have averted the most serious supply shortfalls in eastern Canada. In my opinion, at present we are experiencing serious supply difficulties, but I do not consider these difficulties as being the same as a serious energy crisis.

May I make the following comments about the bill. First, I do not think the bill is a temporary measure which will deal with a specific crisis and then expire. I think it is intended to be a permanent measure. It does not come into effect upon proclamation, such as the War Measures Act. It is in effect from royal assent and can be used by the governor in council or the cabinet at any time.

In talking specifically to the bill, its scope extends over petroleum products manufactured in whole or in part from petroleum, natural gas, coal or electric power. The scope of the bill is not confined to an emergency that is Canada-wide but can cover one that affects only a region of Canada; so we could have the government acting on pressures from one region, which certainly could be to the detriment of the long-term interests of the country. The scope of the bill not only provides for control of the products mentioned, but railways, pipelines, ships, Canadian and foreign, and extraprovincial motor transport. The entire power is in the governor in council. This is something we should be aware of, not only in this House but throughout the country.

The declaration of an emergency measure, actual or anticipated, is at the sole discretion of the governor in council or, in this case, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald). I consider this to be a sham. As long as the board acts on the instructions of the governor in council, it can be used in any way the governor in council wishes.

Another area that has to be considered is where powers are given and appear to be restricted, as with the declaration of an emergency and the regulatory powers that go along with it. It will be observed that these restrictions will be apparent only since the restrictions are subject to the discretion of the governor in council or the board. Another point should be kept in mind as we are debating and eventually coming to a vote on this legislation. Once again, this word runs through virtually every clause in the bill. It is the same kind of regulation that one detected in the old Bill C-176, the national marketing legislation, which gave the governor in council virtual domination over a large segment of the agricultural industry.

The bill would give the governor in council power to enter the provincial constitutional field of legislation, to affect provincial energy revenue sources, provincial industries manufacturing products in whole or in part from petroleum and, as well, provincial primary and secondary industries through control of railways, pipelines, ships, and extraprovincial motor transportation. If this bill were implemented, the side effects upon the provinces, apart from the direct effects, cannot be foreseen except in the darkest terms. This bill is unnecessary and unwarranted. The powers of the bill are too far reaching and cannot be justified under current circumstances. The government should only be given these powers after it can be established that Canada will in fact face a major energy crisis, and not a major transportation or distribution crisis. The government to date has not made a case to justify the wide-ranging powers of this bill. The only power the government may need now is the authority to ration. The government has at its disposal adequate legislative authority to deal with most of the other energy problems facing Canada today, certainly if it acts on consultation with the provinces, which is something it has not done up to this point.

There is another point that should be remembered: Should the far reaching powers of this bill be given to a government that has shown itself to be incompetent and incapable of handling the current situation? I say no, Mr. Speaker. These kinds of powers should not be given to the present government. Perhaps the most serious energy problem we face today is that of prices and price increases. This bill does not make provision for a realistic domestic energy pricing policy. No provision is made for the post-freeze period or for the replacement or removal of the export tax on oil.

Once again we see the government reacting to short-term expediency. The bill has the authority to negate provincial priorities relevant to any energy crisis. In fact, some of the powers are so far reaching that the federal government can invade areas of undisputed provincial authority. For example, the Manitoba Hydro corporation could set a rate and the federal government could invade that provincial right, changing the rate if it deemed this to be necessary.

With regard to recommendations, the legislation would certainly be more palatable if two areas were touched on, and two areas alone. First, an inquiry should be launched into aspects of Canada's energy crisis to determine the true extent of the crisis we face at the present time. Second, we would go along with this legislation if it contained an offer to grant the government the powers needed to allocate fuel supply at the wholesale level and rationing at the retail level, if that was the limit. As I mentioned previously, that is not the case. As I stated in my opening remarks, two important areas, from a global point of view, are not touched upon by this bill. There has not been any move by the government to even recognize the possibility of the kind of situation we could be getting into as far as food and agriculture are concerned.

I have been asked how this so-called energy crisis or supply problem we are experiencing in Canada is going to affect agriculture. I think it is safe to say that because of the inaction of the government in not extending the pipeline into the Montreal area when they had a chance, east of the Ottawa Valley line there may be some shortage of fuel for agricultural purposes. If nothing is done, the over-all effect will certainly be higher prices to the consumer, as the costs incurred by the primary sector will have to be passed on. We are looking at areas directly related to the whole petrochemical industry. We are considering fertilizer, for example, in which we will see an increase in price. We are talking of 15 per cent increase in the price of fertilizer for this year, and goodness knows what will happen in the future. Gasoline and diesel fuel, oil and grease will also be going up drastically in price.

There are side industries such as tire manufacturing to be considered. Plastics are used in a good many agricultural machines at the present time. There are also the implements manufactured in the United States for large tractor and manufacturing facilities. They could not only be in short supply, but the price could increase substantially. I think these are the kind of questions to which the government must address itself.

What is the government going to do to deal in the long term with food prices in Canada? As I mentioned before, I should like to talk for a few moments about the use of food and fuel on a worldwide basis and how these commodities will ultimately affect Canada. There has been no indication that the government is going to take any steps in this direction until we face what might be termed a very serious situation. Fuel and food shortages on a global basis interact to increase the effect of each. It is safe to say that rising fuel costs will discourage increased output of food, thus escalating the cost of food. This in turn will force up wages and other production costs, which once again will force up energy costs. I do not intend this to be a warning to the public that higher food prices are in store for us all, but certainly the fact is that the Canadian public, as people throughout the whole world, will experience higher and higher food prices unless steps are taken now to safeguard against this.

Commodities derived from oil and grain are central to the needs of all mankind. As I have said, their production is interrelated. In various forms they are so essential to the entire human economy that their relative scarcity and their price affect and will affect the availability of all commodities. Because they are traded on a worldwide scale, the effects of scarcity and the price of these commodities will be international. Therefore, it will be difficult or impossible to shelter the economy of any nation from the effects of sudden price increases unless governments are prepared to introduce policies to offset these increases.

Because price increases have been sharp to date, and because these new high prices will prevail, sudden and sometimes startling economic disruptions can shortly be expected on a worldwide scale. One of the first effects of these disruptions will be the creation of pockets of unemployment. One industry likely to be sharply affected in North America, certainly in the United States, within the next 12 months is for example, the automotive industry. If gasoline rationing is imposed, sales of standard cars with a V-8 or six-cylinder motor will be sharply reduced and the output of automobiles will decline. This will have tremendous side effects on related industries, thus damaging the economy.

We will also see a reduction in tourism and recreation. Two effects of this will be rising costs and fuel shortages that will cut back the distance travelled as well as the number of people travelling. Carrying this assumption to its conclusion, the consumer durables industries will also be affected. If unemployment rises—and there is certainly no indication that it will not do so once we get into the new year—and if prices continue to escalate, consumer buying very likely will decline. Since the effects I have outlined are likely to spread to all of the industrial world, a major economic disruption of a new and little understood form would appear likely. I think as early as June, 1974, we can expect a good part of the world to face major problems.

So far as domestic policy implications in Canada are concerned, if we continue on our present course, applying stop-gap measures, I think we will see widespread economic disruption on an international scale, the effects of which will spill over into Canada in the form of price instability and diminished markets for manufactured goods, consequently bringing about unemployment.

Canada produces large, exportable surpluses of most of the commodities in short supply. We are self-sufficient in others and in still other cases, such as oil and natural gas, we could expand production to make surpluses available for export. In this context I think it is imperative that the nation understands that international terms of trade have undergone astonishing changes in the last 18 months and that these new terms of trade are going to be more or less permanent.

In essence, the balance of bargaining power has shifted to favour those regions or nations that have available for export supplies of food, fuels, hides, paper, wood and natural and synthetic fibres. The balance has shifted away from those countries or regions that have had available well-made or low-cost manufactured goods. The mere capacity to produce steel, automobiles, aeroplanes, colour television sets or cameras is of little value if food is short throughout the world and energy is scarce. Indeed, rapid increases in energy and food costs may make price structures so unstable as to reduce the capacity to manufacture, and may also tend to diminish markets. The terms of trade have changed not only among nations but also among regions. The regions with oil and grain and food products for exports are favoured by such terms of trade as exist at the present time. In Canada, the west and the north are so favoured, really to the disadvantage of the industrial heartland of Canada, and certainly this is a change.

Unless the government gives direction to the country and consults the people of Canada, instead of simply bringing in ad hoc and short-term measures to deal with the situation, I think we can assume four or five different eventualities. First of all, I think the price of most foodstuffs except fruit and vegetables will remain high. In fact, if nothing is done by the government to increase production—and the government has not been able to increase production significantly up to this time—the price of most of these items will probably increase. I think it goes without saying that the price of oil and natural gas will remain high. I think, also, that inflation, food costs and energy shortages will ultimately generate unemployment, leading to what could be considered an economic recession. I think lumber and paper prices will remain high for some time to come, and the price of manufactured goods will be forced down by diminishing demand.

With energy and labour costs going up and general inflation increasing, prices are likely to be erratic and confusing. Consequently, prices are likely to be very erratic and uncertain for the consuming public not only in Canada but in the total global sphere in which we are talking.

• (2100)

During the question period today a very valid question was asked in respect of consultation to begin in January when the federal and provincial energy ministers meet. I suggest a conference should be called to discuss the overall consequences of economic policy in order to determine what might happen and how it will affect Canada. Such a conference should discuss measures we can take to soften the blow for certain groups in Canada, if not for all consumers. It should decide on a policy designed to help all the nations of the world and to alleviate the plight of some of the more unfortunate nations. At that time the question was sloughed off as being irrelevant and not having much meaning.

Mr. Baker: The government doesn't have any answers; that's their problem.

Mr. Murta: In view of the situation we will be facing, unless we have meaningful consultation at this kind of conference on the broad economic base, we will face more difficulties. I think such consultation is essential if we are to experience any kind of general prosperity during 1974 and beyond.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta) began his speech by asking whether there is an energy crisis in Canada. Then he proceeded to tell us there is no real crisis.

An hon. Member: We heard him.

Mr. Orlikow: He said that what we had in Canada was a shortage of oil in Quebec and the maritime provinces, and that in fact western Canada—which means all of Canada west of the Ottawa River—has more than enough oil, and the difficulties which Canadians are now experiencing are the result of the failure of this government to build a pipeline.

An hon. Member: Along with yourselves.

Mr. Orlikow: What the hon. member failed to say—he did not tell the whole story because if he did he would convict not only the present Liberal government but former Conservative governments—was that the decision not to build the pipeline to supply eastern Canada was made in 1961 by a Conservative government. That government decided it would be better for the oil companies in western Canada to leave the eastern market to the tender mercies of the multinational corporations.

An hon. Member: Oh, go back to your socialist party.

Mr. Orlikow: I presume the reason for this baying from the Conservative backbenchers is that they realize the difficulties we are in today are a result of a Conservative government's decision in 1961 that the maritime provinces and Quebec should be left to the tender mercies of the multinational corporations which would supply the needs of those provinces with crude oil from Venezuela and the Arab countries. Now that we have a shortage because the traditional suppliers cannot bring in oil, or if they can they are bringing it in at very substantially increased prices, we observe a sudden desire on the part of the official opposition to have this pipeline built. We have been calling for a pipeline for years.

An hon. Member: You have been having a pipe dream for years.

Mr. Orlikow: We have been calling for the construction of a pipeline under both Liberal and Conservative governments.

An hon. Member: You haven't called for one, really, at all until now.

Mr. Orlikow: I suggest that had this pipeline been built, we would not now expect the shortages in the eastern provinces which undoubtedly there will be this year. The hon. member for Lisgar joined his leader and the Conservative Premier of Alberta in urging increased prices. Let me put on the record what the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said a little over a week ago when speaking in Vancouver.

Mr. Paproski: It's on the record, baby.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Stanfield suggested that the federal government should be meeting with representatives of the oil-producing provinces with the idea of increasing prices in stages and working out arrangements leading to a Canadian price ceiling somewhat below the international level. The hon. member for Lisgar repeated that in a slightly different way.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member said that when the price freeze comes off at the end of the winter season, the federal government should discuss the question of prices with the provinces. I suggest he made a slight mistake in that he did not mean with all the oil-producing provinces; he meant the government should consult with the one province, Alberta, whose premier wants an increase.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Orlikow: Certainly.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the hon. member aware that the province of Saskatchewan has just imposed, or made preparations for the imposition of a tax of $2.20 on oil leaving Saskatchewan?

An hon. Member: What about B.C. and its socialist government?

Mr. Orlikow: I am glad the Leader of the Official Opposition asked me that question, because I want to spend a substantial part of my time putting on the record the policy of the province of Saskatchewan embodied in its new legislation, and the policy of the province of British Columbia in regard to gas, comparing that with the policy of the province of Alberta whose premier wants to increase the price of oil and gas not just in respect of exports to the United States but for all Canadians. The bulk of that increase will not go into the coffers of the provincial government but will go to the oil and natural gas companies. That policy is exactly opposite to the one adopted by the governments of British Columbia and Saskatchewan, and I will prove that by putting on the record exactly what are their policies.

Mr. Paproski: You are just another phony socialist.

Mr. Orlikow: I want to put on the record—

An hon. Member: Put something on the record, will you?

Mr. Orlikow: I want to put on the record the views of a very radical, revolutionary socialist cabinet minister in the largest province of Canada.

An hon. Member: How about the socialist cabinet we have across the floor?

Mr. Orlikow: I want to put on the record the views of the Minister of energy for the Conservative government of the Province of Ontario.

An hon. Member: That well known red, Darcy McKeough.

Mr. Orlikow: Yes, that well known red, Darcy McKeough.

Mr. Paproski: Just speak about the provinces that are NDP-oriented.

Mr. Orlikow: Did you say that he is NDP-oriented?

Mr. Paproski: No, I said speak for the provinces that are NDP-oriented, because that's all you guys know about.

Mr. Orlikow: If the hon. member for Edmonton—

Mr. Paproski: Centre.

Mr. Orlikow: —Centre (Mr. Paproski) would stop interrupting me, I might have time to put on the record not only the views of Mr. McKeough, whom I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton West will not agree with, but—

Mr. Paproski: Edmonton Centre, please.

Mr. Orlikow: Let me quote from a report of a speech which Mr. McKeough made in, of all places, Edmonton, to that very radical organization, the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce, on December 4.

An hon. Member: Why don't you talk about Don Macdonald from Rosedale over there.

Mr. Orlikow: This is a report concerning what Mr. McKeough said:

• (2110)

"If we bump the price by $5 a barrel—and there are plenty of people that are talking about $9 oil in Canada at the wellhead—there'll be a windfall for somebody of $50 billion," he said.

The report continues:

"The highest price ever paid for crude oil in this century—$16.40 a barrel—has been accepted by the Nigerian government. The price is nearly double the official posted price for Nigerian crude."

Then further:

We have in this country of the order of 10 billion barrels of proven conventional oil reserves. If we bump the price by $5 a barrel—and there are plenty of people that are talking about $9 oil in Canada at the wellhead—there'll be a windfall for somebody of $50 billion. This will be a direct transfer from the citizens and industries of this nation and obviously, it will reduce the effective earnings of many wage earners. It may well drive certain enterprises out of business and this will further prejudice the earnings of other citizens.

I notice the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) has been trying to get the floor. I hope he will follow me and deal with some of the arguments put forward by Mr. McKeough. Mr. McKeough is also reported to have said:

"So we've got to say $9 is too high. Well, what isn't too high?

"In this whole matter of price and given any kind of national leadership, it should be possible for Canadians to design policies that will serve Canada. And it can be done without taking it out of the pockets of the people of Alberta . . . But it makes no sense at all to attempt to accomplish the strengthening of the economy of Alberta simply through upping the price of petroleum when, with every dollar we add to the price of a barrel of oil we create a windfall profit of $10 billion, and the bulk of this goes to the oil companies that have that ten million barrels in their inventory. The government of Alberta will get extra income from royalties, but why would the Canadian consumer give up $1 to put some 20 cents into the general revenues of Alberta. It doesn't make sense."

I hope members of the Conservative Party are listening.

An hon. Member: We will answer you.

Mr. Orlikow: Don't answer me; answer Mr. McKeough. Mr. McKeough further stated:

"I submit that there are two alternatives in the matter of the pricing of petroleum. We can hold the price on our conventional oil and gas and protect nation and people—all of the nation and all of the people. That price, by the way, should be one which more than covers the cost of production—which in terms of Alberta oil and gas will and properly so escalate."

I think I have quoted enough from Mr. McKeough to show that a very important Conservative, one speaking on energy for the largest province in this country, is opposed to an increase in the price of oil for existing stocks. That speech of Mr. McKeough last week is virtually the same speech made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) when he warned the government that if it increased the price of oil it would face defeat yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Official Opposition asked, "What about Saskatchewan?" Let me summarize what the Saskatchewan legislation, which was introduced yesterday, proposes to do. Incidentally, the bill of the Saskatchewan government was attacked by the Canadian Petroleum Association as being probably the most vicious piece of legislation ever enacted in North America.

An hon. Member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Orlikow: I like to know who opposes me, because very often when I know that I know whether I am right or wrong. If the Canadian Petroleum Association is opposed to the bill, then in all likelihood we can assume it is a good bill. The government of Saskatchewan proposes that the present wellhead price in Saskatchewan, currently about $3.38 a barrel, will continue to be the maximum the oil producers will receive. The price of Canadian oil in the United States at the present time is $5.58 a barrel, the $3.38 which the government of Saskatchewan proposes to continue to pay to the oil producers plus the federal export tax of $2.20 a barrel.

The Premier of Saskatchewan says that the oil producers will be allowed to continue to receive the current wellhead price, but that the government of Saskatchewan proposes to take all increases in price over that figure and add them to the provincial revenues. An exception would be allowed in the form of incentives for exploration and development. Industry minister Kim Thorson said that the revenue from the special tax—which could produce $160 million a year if the tax is $2 a barrel—would be used for subsidies to keep consumer oil prices down, for financing the operation of Crown-owned Saskoil, for research and other steps to improve energy supplies and for bolstering general government revenue. He went on to say that the $3.38 maximum price for oil producers could rise if their costs rise, and added:

> Twice a year we will review the costs of producers and operators in Saskatchewan and where we are satisfied that those costs have actually increased, then the operator will receive a rebate or exemption. His basic price will go up.

That is what Saskatchewan is doing. Let us compare that with the proposals of the Premier of the province of British Columbia under which price increases would apply to all the people in Canada as well as the users in the United States, and under which the major portion of the price increase would go not to the government or to the people of the province of Alberta to help pay for the services they require but to the producers of the oil, the multinational corporations which control virtually all the oil and natural gas in Alberta.

Yesterday when my friend the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) was speaking he was asked about the increase in the price of natural gas in British Columbia. I wish to place on the record what has happened. Let us look at the situation with respect to British Columbia and see who is to be affected and who will pay more money for natural gas in British Columbia, and compare the situation there with the situation in Alberta. The British Columbia government will collect $100 million a year extra through the sale of petroleum resources, particularly natural gas. The government of British Columbia has set up a Crown agency, the B.C. Petroleum Corporation, which has the power to produce, market, distribute and transmit petroleum products in British Columbia. Through this agency the government has taken over the role of middleman in the natural gas industry, which role formerly was performed by Westcoast Transmission company. Producers will now sell their gas to the B.C. Petroleum Corporation, which will then resell it at a profit to Westcoast Transmission for distribution to the domestic and foreign markets.

The government of British Columbia urged Westcoast Transmission to raise the price being charged for natural gas so that it would more accurately reflect the real value of that resource to the province's economy. Westcoast Transmission received approval from the National Energy Board in Ottawa to increase the price of natural gas to 58 cents per thousand cubic feet from 32 cents. Who is paying that increase? That is the important question. More than 60 per cent of the natural gas produced in British Columbia is exported to the United States.

Mr. Taylor: Shame.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Taylor) says "Shame". I say, more credit to the government of B.C. which is making the American consumers pay the same price for natural gas as they would have to pay if they got it from any other source in B.C.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: The remaining 40 per cent of natural gas in B.C. is consumed by commercial and industrial operations and by residential consumers in the province. In some cases it would be difficult for gas-using home owners to escape the effects of so drastic a price increase as that imposed by Westcoast Transmission. But in British Columbia a Crown corporation, B.C. Hydro, distributes the vast majority of natural gas to residential users, and this year B.C. Hydro has enough surplus cash left over from sales of electricity to the power-hungry northwest United States to subsidize the increased cost of natural gas.

In other words—and I hope members of the Conservative Party are listening—the government of B.C. will get substantial increases in their revenues but the B.C. consumer will not pay more for natural gas than he has been paying. The net effect is a profit from the sale of natural gas to Westcoast Transmission, the collection of an increased corporate income tax as Westcoast reaps the benefit of higher prices, and no price increase to the public.

I suggest to members of the Conservative Party, and particularly to members from Alberta, that they should consider how the terrible socialist governments of British Columbia and Saskatchewan have dealt with the problem and compare it with the solutions to the problems of oil and natural gas that have been suggested—

Mr. Epp: That is a socialist rip-off.

Mr. Orlikow: I want to tell the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) that I, and I am sure all my constituents, would be very happy with a rip-off the benefits of which go to the people of the province concerned, rather than a rip-off the benefits of which go to the corporate, multinational corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: I make an offer to the hon. member for Provencher. I am willing to have him debate this subject at a meeting in my constituency, and I will debate the subject in any town in his constituency that he wants to name.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Orlikow: This is the kind of policy which we believe should be followed, a policy which brings the benefits of the resources with which this country has been blessed to the people, rather than giving the benefits to the multinational corporations as has been argued by members of the Conservative Party in the House and as has been argued by the premier of Alberta. We say that there is no excuse for an increase in the price of the oil which we now have. That oil has been searched for, drilled for, discovered, tapped, piped and collected. It is still oil that can be obtained whenever wanted. The oil companies were selling oil a year ago at $2.50 a barrel and were making a legitimate profit. Today, they are getting $4 a barrel and they are not satisfied; they want more.

We do not say that the price of oil which is yet to be discovered should cost $2.50 a barrel or $4 a barrel. We know that the price of oil discovered in the Arctic will be much higher than oil found in Alberta and Saskatchewan, and the smaller amounts in Manitoba, in years gone by. We know that the price of oil to be extracted from the tar sands will probably be substantially higher than the present price. I will not repeat the argument in detail tonight, but we have said that we believe it would be more efficient and cheaper for the people of Canada if the oil which we need was searched for an developed by Crown corporations organized jointly by the federal and provincial governments. But whether that happens, or whether we develop future oil by the traditional method of permitting private companies to search for it, discover and develop it, the oil will cost more money. We do not question that and we do not question that whichever way oil is found, the new oil will cost more than the oil we now have.

What we are saying, and what we will continue to say, is that the oil which Canada now has belongs to all the people of Canada, not just to the multinational corporations which have title to it. Since it belongs to the people, it should be delivered to the people to meet their needs, at a fair price. We say that the price of oil is high enough—the oil which is now in reserve. As I said a few moments ago, the oil companies were making money a year ago when the price was $2.50 a barrel. We are saying that they are making more money now that the price is $4 a barrel. It has been estimated that the increased revenues of the oil companies in a full year, as a result of this increase of $1.50 a barrel, is in the neighbourhood of $700 million, which is added to the more than adequate profits which the oil companies were making a year ago.

Mr. Blenkarn: Who determines the profits, the NDP?

Mr. Orlikow: No, the shareholders of the oil companies who were very happy when they were making the profits which the oil companies showed in 1971 and 1972.

Mr. Blenkarn: Do you think the shareholders were happy? Were you a shareholder?

Mr. Orlikow: I was not a shareholder and it is immaterial whether I or the hon. member for Mississauga are shareholders, although I am inclined to believe, without any other evidence, that such is the vehemence of the interjections of the hon. member in defence of the oil companies that he is in fact a shareholder of Imperial Oil. If he is not, because he is so vehement in their defence perhaps they ought to make him a gift of some shares, because nobody could be more avid in the defence of the oil companies than is the hon. member for Mississauga.

● (2130)

The fact is that the profits of the oil companies went up by some 37 per cent in the last year. As I said, Mr. Speaker, this is an increase of $700 million. If you calculate the increase in the assets of the oil companies just on the basis of the oil which they have in their proven reserves, we are talking about an increase in this one year, on the basis of $1.50 a barrel, of $9½ billion. And the Leader of the Opposition and the other oil sheiks from Alberta want to double that price: they want to give the oil companies increased profits in the neighbourhood of $40 billion to $50 billion.

That figure of $50 billion is not one which I conjured out of the air. I assume that the very competent, cautious Conservative, both with a small "c" and a large "C", the Minister of Energy in the province of Ontario, was not talking through his hat, as members of the official opposition think I am doing, but was talking on the basis of adequate and detailed research when he made the speech to which I referred earlier in which he said that an increase to $9 a barrel would be a windfall of $50 billion. He did not say to whom it would be a windfall, but obviously it would be the multinational corporations. Who would pay for this windfall, Mr. Speaker? It would be the western Canadian consumer. My constituents would pay for it in increased costs of gasoline for their cars. They would pay for it in the increased cost of oil for their homes.

The hon. member for Lisgar talked about how it would affect some people. His constituents would be affected in the same way as I have already indicated. In fact, his constituents would be hit much harder than mine because they operate farms; they have tractors and combines. They are the ones who would be hit with an increase in their operational costs of something in the neighbourhood of $500 to $1,000 a year. Yet, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lisgar forgets about his constituents and their needs: he thinks about the oil companies and joins the Leader of the Opposition in calling for an increase in the price of oil. It is obvious that Mr. McKeough was thinking about the Ontario citizen, the Ontario consumer, the Ontario farmer, the Ontario businessman.

Mr. Blenkarn: Are you campaigning for us in the next Ontario election?

Mr. Orlikow: If I thought you meant it, I might. Mr. McKeough knew how much the Ontario manufacturer will have to pay in increased costs for the fuel to operate his factories, and how much the consumer will have to pay for the by-products of the petrochemical industry which, to a large extent, are processed and manufactured in the province of Ontario. He is worried, and that is why he goes to Edmonton and uses the opportunity of speaking to the Edmonton Chamber of Commerce to appeal to the Premier of Alberta, his fellow Conservative, to be reasonable, to be moderate and not to demand the pound of flesh which that premier is demanding, the bulk of the profits of which will go to the multinational corporations rather than to the people of Alberta.

Mr. McKeough understands what is at stake here. He takes the trouble to think through the problem. He takes the trouble to think through what are the needs of the people of Ontario. He calls on the federal government and the government of Alberta to keep the price of conventional oil where it is at the present time.

Mr. Blenkarn: And Mr. McKeough calls for the people of Ontario to vote Tory.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. Is the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) rising for the purpose of asking a question, or on a point of order?

Mr. Stevens: To ask if the hon. member would permit a question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): This could only be done with the consent of the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Orlikow: Certainly.

Mr. Stevens: I was wondering if the hon. member could inform the House when he intends to speak specifically on Bill C-236, and specifically why he thinks that bill is needed with respect to any energy crisis in Manitoba.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the hon. member that I am as much in order as was the hon. member for Lisgar, or as was the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), in that what I am doing is discussing the question of oil, including the price of oil and the allocation of oil.

I am going to vote for this bill because there is an emergency that must be met. It is an energy crisis caused by the failure of this Liberal government and of the former Conservative government to adopt a national oil policy which would build the pipeline to Montreal. It is the lack of that pipeline which is creating this crisis. Of course, the hon. member for Mississauga is uncomfortable because I am quoting the words of a Conservative minister.

The discomfort of the Conservative Party with respect to its position on the question of oil involves the impossibility of its meeting the desires of the Ontario Conservatives, so ably expressed by the Ontario Minister of Energy, and the stand of the Alberta members of parliament, all of them Conservatives—all 19 of them—who are here to back up the unconscionable, unjustified demands by the Premier of Alberta who has one objective and that is to increase the profits of the multinational oil corporations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in almost 12 years as a member of parliament I cannot remember ever being interrupted or heckled as much as I have been tonight. It does not bother me but I ask, what is the explanation? Is it a coincidence, or is it because the questions I have raised are touching some very sensitive nerve? Is it due to the fact that the Conservative members still have not figured out how they are going to explain to their constituents why they are supporting the Premier of Alberta when he demands, in every way he can, an increase in the price of oil, which will be paid for by every resident in this nation if he has it his way?

As I said a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, I am going to support this bill because although I recognize that the crisis is the result of the negligence, the criminal negligence of the former Conservative government and of this and past Liberal governments, the fact remains that we have this crisis. The people of Quebec, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and P.E.I. are facing oil shortages. As long as they face possible oil shortages, I am going to support this proposal which the government has introduced so late. But, Mr. Speaker, better late than never. This proposal will give the Canadian government, even this incompetent government, the legal means to deal with the shortages which may occur. That is why I am going to support the bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, support of this bill does not mean continued support of the government. The hon. member says, "Careful, careful". I say to him as my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said last Wednesday, that members of parliament in the New Democratic Party will not agree to a price increase. We would not have agreed to it yesterday; we would have brought the government down.

Mr. Blenkarn: You don't have the guts.

Mr. Orlikow: And you did not have the courage. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Mississauga and I hope the Hansard reporter has been able to—

Mr. Blenkarn: You give it out, baby. You don't have the guts.

Mr. Orlikow: I hope the Hansard reporter has been able to get the interjections made during my speech by the member for Mississauga, because I hope the record will show—

Mr. Blenkarn: You love the Liberal bed.

Mr. Orlikow: —how these interjections are a continued defence of the Conservative government and the Conservative Premier of Alberta in their demands for an increase in the price of oil. We have said that we are opposed to an increase in the price of oil and I say tonight, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands said last week, that if and when this government moves to remove the freeze on oil prices, whether it be at the end of March or the end of April—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I regret that I must interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired.

An hon. Member: Continue. It is a good speech.

An hon. Member: Oh, sit down.

An hon. Member: Now we will never know what will happen.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) wishes to ask a question, but because the time of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has expired it can only be done with unanimous consent. Does the House agree that the hon. member may answer the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I would remind hon. members that this would automatically give extended time to the hon. member.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the hon. member a question. He said that the Conservative caucus was supporting the Premier of Alberta. I should like to know, as a fellow Manitoban, how he reconciles the statement of the Premier of Manitoba and the Minister of Industry and Commerce, Mr. Len Evans, who have said that there is no energy shortage in Manitoba and that Manitoba should use all the energy it can.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction between what the Premier of Manitoba or the Minister of Industry and Commerce said and what I said. I said there is no crisis—

An hon. Member: You said there was. You would vote for this bill.

Mr. Orlikow: I said there was no shortage of oil west of the Ottawa River, and that is precisely what the Premier of Manitoba and the Minister of Industry and Commerce of Manitoba have said. There is, or there may be, or there will be a shortage in the provinces east of the Ottawa River. It seems very strange to me, as a member of parliament from Winnipeg and as a member of a party that does not have a single member east of the Ottawa River and is concerned about the possible shortage in those provinces, that members of parliament from the official opposition who have a majority of the members from Newfoundland, all but one of the members from Nova Scotia—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Orlikow: —and half the members from—

An hon. Member: There will be some from Winnipeg the next time, too.

Mr. Orlikow: —and even two members from Quebec, do not seem to think there is a crisis. They do not seem to think there is a possible shortage. They do not seem to be very concerned at all about whether on not the citizens of that part of Canada are going to suffer this winter. Mr. Speaker, let me conclude by saying that I am concerned about the welfare and the needs of the people of Canada from whatever area they come.

An hon. Member: Even Alberta.

Mr. Orlikow: Even Alberta, Mr. Speaker. And if there is a possibility of shortages in those provinces, if there is an possibility that rationing is required, if there is a possibility that allocation of supplies will be necessary, I am more than willing to give the government the authority to do the job which is necessary. I do not think it would be in the interests of the people of those provinces to leave the allocation of oil to Imperail Oil, to Shell, to Gulf or even to the former resident of New Brunswick, K. C. Irving. If some agency must take the responsibility for allocation of short oil supplies, I would rather trust the government of Canada, even an imcompetent government like this, than the multinational corporations.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, as one of my hon. friend says, an answer like that deserves a speech. I am sure it is apparent to all hon. members this evening that there is a crisis in Canada. The crisis is certainly not in gas; the crisis is one of confidence in this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Haliburton: The crisis is mainly concentrated in the area to my left. This is quite apparent from the speech we have just heard. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) supported this government last night. Tonight, Mr. Speaker, he rises to condemn the very policies of this government which were the subject of a vote of confidence yesterday. Listening to the speech just made, one would think that the debate tonight was not about any crisis in relation to energy in this country or any crisis in relation to oil or petroleum supplies; one would think we are dealing with a resolution to put the oil companies of Canada in their place. That is not the question before the House, Mr. Speaker. The question before the House is whether this House can endorse what the government would have us believe is the initial opening volley of some kind of oil policy for Canada, of some kind of energy policy for Canada that would have some meaning, some continuity which would assure the people of this country of reasonably priced energy during years to come.

The performance of the government to date, and I speak of the party from 1963 to the present, is such that one cannot have any confidence whatever in the ability of that party on the opposite side of the House to make the policy that would benefit Canada. Why should we support such far reaching powers as are contained in this legislation? The powers contained in the legislation are as great as any that were contained in wartime measures, powers that will give the government absolute control, absolute discretion to choose between companies, to favour regions and otherwise to interfere with the normal operation of the oil market. What is the basis for their request? Is there an anticipated shortfall this season of 75,000 barrels? There was one day, but another day it was an anticipated shortfall of 200,000 barrels.

One day, Mr. Speaker, we had the situation where there was no blacklist as far as Saudi Arabia and Canada were concerned. According to my information derived from an oil company, officials of the company were advised by officials of Saudi Arabia that although Canada perhaps was not on any Arab blacklist, there would not be any oil shipments to Canada from that country. So although it may be suggested that we are not on any blacklist, we would be fooling ourselves if we took that suggestion seriously, as our consumers need relief.

We are suffering from lack of foresight on the part of the government. The government should have foreseen difficulties this year. We barely escaped difficulties last year when it was apparent to the world that energy was running out. Certainly, for several months this year members on my side of the House suggested that energy may be running short. Even the Liberal government should have foreseen three years ago that certain measures were needed to preserve energy supplies in this country.

I wish to make a couple of suggestions which I have made before. These things could have been done by the government to alleviate the situation. For instance, the government might take advantage of certain storage facilities in various areas, especially in the eastern part of the country from which I come, and thereby make limited amounts of oil available in time of need. We have salt mines in Nova Scotia. I understand, from my slight knowledge of the west, that there are abandoned gas wells there which could be used to store oil and gas. I suggest that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) should consider using the salt mines in Nova Scotia which could hold tremendous quantities of oil. I do not think we can expect commercial companies to store the quantities I am speaking of; however, I do not see why the government should not build up significant inventories of oil which could be of substantial help in times when supplies are temporarily disrupted.

Another suggestion I wish to make, which perhaps is not new, relates to oil pipelines. Surely the advantages of an electrical grid are now apparent. The need for a national electrical grid system is apparent to all. I do not see why some kind of national grid for transmitting oil and gas should not be built as well. That ought to be investigated. The grid should be designed, not to supply all the needs of any market but to supply the top end of the market which the commercial companies seem reluctant or unable to supply. It is apparent that all commercial companies fulfil their supply commitments in a similar way. Therefore, what is required, I suggest, is some sort of publicly-owned system which would provide a supply cushion in the event of shortfalls.

May I mention something else. I have heard it suggested a number of times in this chamber and elsewhere that eastern Canada, which to my mind includes the maritime provinces, has for some years enjoyed cheap oil while parts of Canada west of the Ottawa Valley line have been required to pay higher prices for oil in order to foster the Canadian industry. I do not know of the experiences of other hon. members; however, if my experience of oil prices in the maritime provinces is the same as that of other hon. members, I suggest that that allegation will not strike a responsive cord in the hearts and minds of consumers in those provinces. There may have been some slightly cheaper prices in the eastern provinces; I am not qualified to comment on that. According to my information, in Nova Scotia the price of heating fuel has been one cent lower, at the maximum, than the price in Ontario. By the same token, for the past five or ten years since I have driven a car I have found when driving through Ontario and the western end of Quebec that gasoline has been between 10 and 15 cents cheaper in Ontario, or in the area west of the Ottawa Valley line. It was much more expensive in Nova Scotia, where I have done most of my driving. That higher price may be a distortion resulting from federal or provincial taxes: there may be some very good reason for it. I merely say that the suggestion that eastern consumers have benefited for some years from the expenditures undertaken west of the Ottawa Valley line will not bear examination in my area.

What moves has the government made in this alleged energy crisis? It has instituted a price freeze. Again, speaking as a consumer from the maritime provinces, may I suggest to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) that the price freeze which he endorsed a few moments ago in fact is not a price freeze in the maritime provinces. If the government has imposed a price freeze, certainly the consumer in the maritime provinces is not overly aware of it. We are told that oil companies have been asked to freeze prices and not increase the margins under which they operate. At the same time, the consumer in eastern Canada is being asked to shoulder the full cost of increases of petroleum products imported into the country. There is no price freeze, then, east of the Ottawa Valley line; there is only a price freeze west of the Ottawa Valley line and, as I suspect, it is more apparent than real.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—NEED FOR INCREASED PERSONNEL TRAINED IN GERIATRICS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I bring up this subject of aging and its problems in order to focus attention on the need for increased knowledge in the field of aging, its prevention and treatment. Many people, many of them professional, believe our knowledge is entirely inadequate to meet the demand. The need for this knowledge has grown because of the greater number of people who have avoided the pitfalls of acute diseases from infancy to 40 years of age as a result of the discovery of vaccines and serums. Diseases have been prevented by innoculations and the treatment of acute diseases has been controlled by sulphas, penicillin and antibiotics. For those principal reasons people now live longer. Actually, accidents now are the principal causes of death up to 40 years of age and over. That is why today the average span of life is nearly 75 years, as compared with just over 40 years at the turn of the century.

About one person in ten today in Canada is 65 years old or over. There are nearly two million such people in Canada. Hospital admission rates for those 65 years and over are three times greater than for younger people. Today, Mr. Speaker, 60 per cent of all deaths are owing to chronic diseases such as cardiovascular disease, respiratory disease, cancer, diabetes, arthritis, etc. We run into these chronic diseases after 40 years of age. Therefore it follows that with the increased life expectancy and the falling birthrate there will be an increase in chronic illnesses.

Perhaps in future we shall need to provide, not so much schools and recreational facilities for the kids as work for the aged who are able to work and homes and hospitals for them when needed. Therefore, medically the problem is to prevent the onset of chronic disease as long as possible and to rehabilitate people if possible, even those 65 or over who have suffered from disease, if it can be done. As I said just now, sicknesses and hospital admissions are three times greater for older people than for younger persons. I suggest to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) that economics demands that more research be undertaken in the field of aging. Chairs in geriatrics should be established in medical schools and should be similar to chairs in pediatrics established just over half a century ago.

Research should be carried on from childhood to old age. When, and why, does arteriosclerosis set in? What can be done to delay its progress by treatment and diet, and that of many other diseases? When studies show that 50 per cent of a group of young men 20 to 30 years of age who were killed in action had evidence of arteriosclerosis, it is time research endeavoured to find out what we can do about it, what is the cause and whether it can be prevented. Geriatric medicine must stimulate research to prevent illness, suffering and loss of manpower. We lose many people at the peak of their earning power because of coronaries and so forth. Within the past two months in my home town we lost two dentists, both around 50 years of age.

I am sure the minister is aware of this problem. I urge him to make available the money and the leadership to establish geriatric chairs of medicine so that we may prevent, not only the huge economic loss of men and women at the peak of their earning power in their forties and fifties but we will meet the challenge of an aging population. I say to the minister or to his parliamentary secretary, give the necessary leadership and the funds to establish with the provinces the necessary teaching and research so that people may continue to work and enjoy good health, even well beyond their retirement age, happily adding to the resources of their country in the sunset of their lives.

It is not enough for the minister to say this is a provincial matter. He knows that the whole economics of this social structure may be threatened. This social structure has been built up by the federal government and no one else. There is not only that, but the increased costs of medical care and hospitalization fall in the national medicare field. This he knows. Action and leadership must be given or we will find ourselves floundering in a sea of enveloping social discontent and unrest, unable to meet our social liabilities to those we have promised to look after.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard). There is no question of his concern for the aged of this country and the problems that are unique to their particular group in society. The health resources fund is being used to build high quality educational and research facilities from coast to coast for the training of all types of health manpower. The greater part of this national investment is being used to develop our 16 university health sciences centres. These centres include, of course, teaching hospitals and ambulatory care centres where training in geriatrics is possible.

Since 1966, when the health resources fund became operative, the total output of physicians from Canadian medical schools has risen and is rising dramatically. In 1966 we produced 881 physicians, and in 1972, 1,292 physicians. Plans for 1978 indicate an output of 1,904 physicians. Furthermore, increased immigration has added to our supply of physicians in Canada to give us at the beginning of this year a total of 34,508 active physicians, which is equivalent to a physician-to-population ratio of 1:633.

The decision as to the use of our education institutions is, of course, for provincial governments to make, and I believe they are making good decisions. We are endeavouring to help them make their decisions by determining what the actual requirements are for physicians of all types. A task force in our department, making use of the unique information arising out of the medical care program, is working closely with a committee set up by the national physician manpower committee, and with each of the specialty associations, to come to a more precise understanding of requirements. This would include, of course, requirements for physicians with specialized training in geriatrics.

Probably the best person to care for older people is the family physician. We are fortunately experiencing in Canada a change in attitude and a swing of the pendulum away from the traditional specialities. More and more of our new graduates are moving into family practice after taking a two-year residency training program in family medicine. We should be grateful to the College of Family Physicians of Canada for its leadership and dedication in this important area and to the faculties of medicine for developing the residency training programs. With all these things happening in Canada through the collaborative method of governments and other concerned agencies, I believe we can look forward to better care for our older people. Our department is cognizant of the tremendous needs in terms of the health care of and the unique problems faced by our elderly people in Canada, and as a federal government we are doing everything within our jurisdictional power to solve these problems.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—DISPOSITION OF UNUSED PORTION OF GEORGE DERBY HOSPITAL SITE, BURNABY—PARTICIPATION BY MUNICIPAL REPRESENTATIVES IN NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I asked a question of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) which was really in two parts. First of all, I asked whether he would see fit to invite the municipalities of Burnaby to participate in negotiations for the transfer of a very large area of land, some 200 acres, in that municipality. I also asked whether he would consult with the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) in view of the precedent this government set in the transfer of the Jericho lands in Vancouver, lands which were returned to the city of Vancouver for the price originally paid by the federal government.

Let me give a very brief history of this Burnaby property, for in order to see the injustice that is probably being rendered to the municipality of Burnaby one has to look at the history. When this land was acquired in 1945 for $70,000, about 75 per cent of its market value, it was acquired because of the war emergency and the many veterans who were returning and in severe need of rehabilitative facilities. At that time the facility was very successful, but in course of time, of course, the number of veterans who needed this facility diminished. Therefore, negotiations were commenced for the acquisition of the main veterans hospital on the lower mainland, the Shaughnessy hospital, and with that went the George Derby site.

The problem is simply this, that in its negotiations with the municipality the federal government incurred either a legal or a moral obligation to include the municipality in the transfer negotiations, and the government has a moral obligation, I submit, to return a substantial part of this property. I think it is key to the position that I take that we are not asking that the whole site be returned. What we are asking is that the site exclusive of the hospital area itself, the Derby site, be returned to the municipality.

Why is this desirable? It is simply that this area is one of the fastest growing areas, in terms of population, on the North American continent. It is absolutely bursting at the seams and the need for recreational and park facilities is simply tremendous. If this land does not go back for that purpose, there is no doubt that the municipality will have received a severe setback, not only in respect of its planning but the whole lower mainland will receive a severe setback in terms of providing green recreational space for the one million population of the lower mainland.

Somebody once said that confederation set things up so the federal government had the money, the provinces had the jurisdiction and the municipalities had the problems. With the present attitude of the minister, he is not doing a great deal to solve the problems of this particular municipality. I can understand that the minister has difficulty. He is being pressured by the municipality and the province and in a sense he is in the middle. I can appreciate that it is a sensitive and a difficult problem for him; but with the greatest respect, the solution is staring the minister in the face. The solution is to subdivide the Derby section of that site and include the municipality in the negotiations for the retransfer of this land back to the municipality at the price the federal government paid. Only in that way, it seems to me, can we solve this situation.

It is interesting to note that in 1959 correspondence was exchanged between the municipality and the Department of Veterans Affairs and in one of those letters this was written:

> Certainly during the negotiations Mr. Ker intimated to the council that in the event of the government abandoning any portion of the land this corporation would be given first opportunity to repurchase at approximately the price per acre finally agreed upon.

That was contained in a letter from the municipality to the ministry. That was never rejected and never commented upon, and certainly the municipality at that point was left to believe that would be the kind of treatment accorded the municipality; but in the long run this has not been the case. There is either a moral or a legal duty, in these circumstances, to return this land to the municipality. We are talking in terms of $5 million in property, so it is a matter of vital concern to the whole lower mainland area and not merely to the municipality of Burnaby.

I would urge the minister to reconsider the position he has taken. That position, by the way, was set forth in a letter from the minister to the municipality on November 9 in which it was stated:

> We have also agreed that the departmental property, both in Vancouver and Burnaby, will not be partitioned in any way as long as negotiations are in process for the transfer of Shaughnessy Hospital.

What I am asking through you, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister reconsider that somewhat inflexible position, involve the municipality in negotiations and agree to the partitioning of the Burnaby site so the hospital itself can go along with the Shaughnessy complex, obviously a logical conclusion, and that the rest of the site, being in the neighbourhood of 160 acres, be returned to the municipality. The municipality cannot afford to burden the people who reside there by increasing taxes in order to obtain more recreational land. We can no longer treat municipalities as poor cousins of confederation. This government should set forth a decent and consistent policy in respect of the disposition of surplus Crown lands acquired in this way so that municipalities are no longer discriminated against as they have been in the past.

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in talking about George Derby centre I think it must be made clear at the outset that we are talking about Shaughnessy Hospital since George Derby is considered as a wing of that hospital even though it is located a few miles away. The George Derby property was acquired by the federal government after the war, and the municipality and other owners were then paid the full market price for it. As hon. members know, a decision to transfer veterans hospitals to the provinces was made ten years ago. So far three hospitals have been transferred and negotiations are under way as far as some of the others are concerned.

Negotiations with the government of British Columbia have been going on for a number of years concerning the transfer of Shaughnessy Hospital. Ever since negotiations have been under way it has been made clear that the George Derby property was offered as part of the negotiations. Of course, as was the case in other transfers, the value of any property that is attached to the hospital transferred will be fully taken into account.

ENERGY—NUCLEAR REACTORS AND HEAVY WATER PLANTS—DATE OF EXPANSION IN WESTERN CANADA—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT FUNDS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I should like to thank the minister for his presence tonight to speak on the topic of heavy water. In respect of the energy crisis, which we have all come to know possibly more as the delivery crisis, one matter which gives me satisfaction and which has come to the attention of many Canadians is the potential of Canadian use of nuclear reactors as an energy force.

Many people, possibly unknowingly, have had a feeling that nuclear energy brought with it many dangers. In many respects such a view is unfounded. One thing which seems to have developed from this energy crisis is that it is necessary to have adequate research and development in the area of nuclear power in order that Canada can take leadership in the world in respect of nuclear development. In this regard we have the capability and are well on our way toward this goal. I think that is one of the positive things resulting from the energy crisis.

The question of heavy water has been with us for some time. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) has been quoted as saying that he would even find it difficult to live in the cabinet if the next such plant did not come to western Canada. Last Friday, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) made a statement to the effect that the sale of a CANDU reactor had been made to Korea and that an option had been taken out by that government for a second one. This followed on the heels of continuing discussions in respect of a sale to Argentina.

In order to make the CANDU reactor it is necessary to have heavy water. In Canada we use a system involving heavy water and natural uranium, whereas in the United States conventional water and uranium is used. On the international scene, countries are directing their attention in respect of self-sufficiency with regard to supply to the CANDU reactor. I am thankful for this situation. On Wednesday, November 21, we find the following in an article which appeared in the Ottawa Journal:

> Federal nuclear experts have predicted Canada will need three of four more heavy water plants during the next 15 years if Canada's fledgling nuclear industry is to continue expanding domestically, let alone on the international market.

The question of a fourth heavy water plant, specifically in western Canada, is one of very great interest to western Canadians as well as to Canadians generally. In Manitoba, specifically eastern Manitoba, unfortunately many people are unaware of the tremendous expertise that is available there and the research that has taken place concerning the CANDU reactor and the research that has taken place in respect of the development of the hardware for the CANDU reactor. In western Canada, specifically eastern Manitoba, the deuterium content in our water, particularly in the Winnipeg River and that area, runs at approximately 140 to 145 parts per million. This is very adequate in light of the amount of deuterium we would use. The content generally is 20 parts to the million. Canada has enormous uranium deposits, and various countries have asked us to enter bids in respect of the CANDU reactor. I commend the government for presenting this international theme.

One problem exists in relation to the CANDU reactor. If this program is to expand, specifically in respect of CANDU reactors, then we do need a larger supply of heavy water. Presently, along with the Gentilly announcement possibly we have sufficient heavy water production capability for the immediate future, but the minister is well aware of the lead time that is needed. If the CANDU reactor receives greater international acceptance, plus the fact that in Canada we are starting to look more and more to nuclear reactors because of the success at Pickering, I suggest to the minister that the decision as to where a heavy water reactor will be placed in western Canada should be made relatively soon because of the lead time that is necessary to make the decision, finish the research and build the plant. If the decision is made relatively soon, it would be to the advantage not only of Manitobans but also Canada's international trade and the development of CANDU.

● (2220)

Eastern Manitoba has excellent water resources, and this is the number one requirement. The other one, of course, is energy. The Saskatchewan site does have energy, but there are various energy sources that we could use in Manitoba and personally I would like to see research done regarding the viability of the movement of adequate energy supplies for the eastern Manitoba market in relation to the building of a heavy water plant. Another aspect that has concerned me somewhat is that we must have adequate scientific support capabilities in that area. There has been a question from time to time in the installation at Whiteshell as to whether or not the government was really concerned with regard to directives—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for his continuing courtesy in phrasing this question in particular. He has touched upon a number of significant aspects of the heavy water program, not the least of which is the importance of giving adequate lead time for the construction of additional heavy water plants to meet the expanding demand.

As I mentioned to the hon. gentleman the other day, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited has been active in seeking both domestic and international business for the highly successful CANDU nuclear reactor. As the hon. gentleman has mentioned, we have received a letter of intent for one and possibly for two reactors from the Republic of Korea. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie), along with the president of Atomic Energy of Canada, has been active in attempting to persuade the British government to adopt the CANDU system for its nuclear program, and there is considerable optimism in the company about the possibility of setting up in Italy the CANDU system in partnership with an Italian firm.

All of this indicates, along with the prospect of the additional use of the CANDU system in Canada, that there will be an oncoming increased demand for heavy water in this country. It has been the government's decision that when the time comes for an additional heavy water plant—that is to say, additional to the one at Gentilly—it should be placed either in Manitoba or in Saskatchewan. The choice of a heavy water plant site is dictated by two economic factors: first, by the deuterium content of the water supply which, as the hon. member has mentioned, is favourable from the standpoint of Manitoba, and second by the cost of the power that is available for extracting the deuterium from normal water systems, which is an advantage that the Estevan site has in Saskatchewan. But the Estevan site is subject to the difficulty of not having adequate water supplies.

Under the circumstances, I think it will be interesting if, through programs administered by my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Jamieson), there is an extension of the water supply from the Saskatchewan River system down to Estevan where there is a possibility of a plant. But the site mentioned by the hon. gentleman, I think I am correct in saying, in the Winnipeg River region of eastern Manitoba is indeed a very competitive one and will receive very active consideration by Atomic Energy of Canada and the government of Canada at the relatively early date when we expect an additional heavy water plant will be required.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.28 p.m.

IMPRISONMENT OF THOMAS SERJEANT IN TANZANIA—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

In view of the fact a Canadian citizen, Thomas Delair Serjeant, while flying from Tanzania to Cape Town, South Africa was forced to land by Tanzanian officials, and subsequently imprisoned for more than two months before any action was taken against him, and in view of the fact Mr. Serjeant suffered considerable mental and physical frustration as well as financial loss, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this government instruct the Canadian High Commission in Tanzania to undertake immediately a full investigation concerning this matter, and upon completion of its report table it before the House; I further move that this government instruct the Tanzania government to pay compensation in full to Mr. Serjeant for mental and physical hardships suffered as well as the financial losses incurred during his imprisonment.

Mr. Speaker: This motion proposed to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 requires unanimous consent. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BY CABINET MEMBERS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to request permission of the House to move the following motion which would be seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That it is the opinion of this House that the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet in the interests of curtailing fuel consumption should use wherever possible regular scheduled airlines when travelling on official government business rather than government owned aircraft, and it is also the opinion of this House that the Prime Minister discontinue the use of government owned aircraft for travelling to and from Liberal Party gatherings at public expense and that the Liberal Party of Canada should be billed for the cost of all such trips made by the Prime Minister since October 30, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires unanimity. Is there unanimity?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTOMOTIVE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity is the revelation today of trade figures under the Canada-United States automotive agreement which show that Canada now has a $182 million deficit so far this year. The motion I am going to propose has the consent of the Official Opposition and I am sure it expresses the views of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might indicate what the motion is rather than argue in support of the motion, since the practice does not permit him to do so.

Mr. Broadbent: I just say that, Mr. Speaker, to remind the minister's cabinet colleagues because he is not here. I would move the following motion:

This House expresses the view that the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement should be changed by including in it a requirement that the purpose of the agreement is, among other things, to ensure over a three-year period that both Canada and the United States produce in the dollar value of automobiles and parts that percentage of the North American production which they actually consume.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

SUGGESTION THAT QUEBEC BE PERMITTED TO BUY OIL FROM ARAB COUNTRIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to discuss an important and pressing matter.

In view of the present oil shortage, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this government seriously consider the possibility of allowing the Quebec government, if it so wishes, to negotiate with Saudi Arabia and any other oil producing country to ensure that Quebec people will have sufficient oil supplies at reasonable prices.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the terms of Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimity?

SUGGESTED INQUIRY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the mounting criticism and concern being registered about the effectiveness, cost and role of unemployment insurance, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That the House recommend that the whole question of unemployment insurance be subjected to an inquiry or at least be referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in order that it examine the existing act, regulations and cost with a view to bringing about amendments and report thereafter.

DESIGNATION OF ORDER OF THE DAY TO DEBATE WAYS AND MEANS MOTION

Hon. Donald S. HEALTH

ALCOHOLISM—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Reg Stackhouse (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the terms of Standing Order 43, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes), to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact there are in Canada 750,000 persons suffering from alcohol addiction, in light of the fact the annual cost of hospitalizing cases related to alcohol abuse amounts to $1 billion, in light of the federal revenue from alcoholic beverages being $426 million a year in excise duties alone, exclusive of federal and provincial sales taxes, and in light of the federal government now spending only $335,235 a year on programs combatting alcoholism, although the LeDain Report—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member but it seems to me the hon. member is making a speech and presenting argument in support of a motion. That is irregular. I appeal to all hon. members who have motions to present from day to day under Standing Order 43 to ensure that these motions are motions and not speeches or arguments in support of a proposed motion which requires unanimous consent. I am sure the hon. member will want to take that under advisement and indicate what the motion will be.

• (1410)

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I will come directly to the motion. The previous information was by way of a preamble explaining the requirement. The motion is as follows:

Be it resolved that this House recommends that the government give a higher priority to programs aimed at reducing alcohol addiction.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Scarborough East. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent and the motion cannot be put.

OLYMPIC GAMES, 1976

STATEMENT ON OLYMPIC COIN PROGRAM

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, of all mankind's collective endeavours, few offer such concrete expression of the universal brotherhood of the peoples of the world as the Olympic games. In providing the only arena where all nations, classes, colours and creeds can come together on an equal footing in fierce but friendly competition, the Olympic ideal is thus at once the great forum of international co-operation and of individual development.

Over the past few decades, however, an inevitable upward spiralling of costs has accompanied the physical expansion of the games themselves. The unfortunate result is that the staging of the Olympics is becoming increasingly the prerogative of large and wealthy nations which can absorb the costs of the event without placing an undue burden on the taxpayer. Needless to say, such restriction because of financing runs contrary to the basic Olympic tradition of equality of opportunity for all. This is why Canada's initiative in the field of financing the games of the twenty-first Olympiad in Montreal is of such crucial importance to the survival of the entire concept. Nations across the world will be keeping a close watch on the developments in this country between now and the summer of 1976.

In this context, therefore, I am particularly happy today to submit to the House a report on the progress of our Olympic coin program which, as hon. members know, is designed to provide revenues to meet the major portion of the costs of the staging of the twenty-first Olympiad in Montreal and Kingston.

[Translation]

Since Bill C-196 was passed by this House July 27 this year work has been going forward steadily to establish the production, marketing and distribution systems for our Olympic coins both in Canada and throughout the world.

I am at present engaged in a series of personal visits to key centres across the country, with the dual purpose of disseminating information about the Olympic Coin Program and of assessing initial reaction from opinion-leaders, the media and the public in general. In this latter area, I am very happy to be able to report that enthusiasm everywhere appears to be running high and all indications are that our Olympic Coin Program will be an immense success. As a matter of fact we may have difficulties in keeping up with demand. It is against this background that I can now inform this House that the 1976 Olympic Coin Program was officially launched at noon today with the presentation to His Excellency the Governor General of the first set of coins to be released.

That this self-imposed deadline has been met, despite scepticism and many difficulties, is a tribute to the dedication of all those involved in getting the program under way.

I would ask hon. members to join with me in offering the olympic coin team our hearty congratulations. I would like to mention the name of Mr. Austin Page, Managing Director of the Olympic Coin Program. Mr. Page was recruited from private industry where he was a senior partner in a leading Canadian management consulting firm. Assisting him are André Morin, Director of Marketing for Europe and a former Vice-President of a large Quebec-based manufacturing firm; Christie Arnold, Director of Marketing for the United States and Mexico, a senior civil servant with wide experience in international trade; Mr. Henk Hoppener, Director of Marketing for the Pacific regions, a corporate planning consultant from private industry.

[English]

The coins on sale today represent the forerunners of some 60 million to be minted between now and the close of the games in 1976. The entire operation involves international marketing and distribution on a scale never before envisaged by this country. The coins are to be made available in all of the countries sending Olympic athletes to Canada, some 130 in all.

[Translation]

I would like to draw the attention of hon. members to another very important related aspect—spin-off benefits to Canada.

As the momentum of the entire Olympic Coin Program grows, it becomes increasingly evident that it will generate a whole host of additional advantages, destined to have a considerable long-term impact on this country.

The immediate benefits arise from the stimulation of activities related to the direct production, packaging, distribution, communications and similar operations over the next three years.

The longer term benefits involve an enormous wealth of experience in international marketing which Canada will accumulate in connection with the program.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, there is, of course, the intangible but very important aspect of the enhancing of Canada's image abroad. In the eyes of the other nations, our Olympic Coin Program represents an imaginative innovation, attesting to Canadian resourcefulness and pointing the way for others to follow. This is something of which, I am sure you will agree, we can be justifiably proud.

In the light of all this, Mr. Speaker, I would ask all members of the House to join in offering unanimous support for Canada's 1976 Olympic Coin Program.

I might add that hon. members will have an opportunity to offer concrete evidence of this support. When they return to their offices, they will find order forms enabling them to acquire a complete set of coins from the first issue which is on sale today. I urge them to be the first to take advantage of this opportunity to show their own confidence in the future of the olympic spirit across the world and in this country's role in helping to keep it alive.

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, in response to the minister's statement, I join with him in offering the Olympic coin team the heartiest congratulations for their achievements so far in getting this program under way. I want to assure the minister that I will be filling out my Olympic coin application upon return to my office.

Olympic Coin Program

Congratulations are due to the Olympic coin team for its efforts to date, particularly when one considers the government's constant delays and the surrounding confusion and secrecy which the government has permitted in the entire Olympic program from as far back as 1969 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) first extended Canada's acceptance of the idea of hosting the 1976 Olympics in this country. Had the Prime Minister realized from the beginning that his signature on that letter of acceptance was a financial commitment, there can be no question that we would not have been subjected to the difficulties and contradictions which subsequently arose not only during the debate on Bill C-196 but also prior to and since the passage of the bill.

Because of the government's tactics and inaction, the Canadian public is still confused as to the financing of these games. Had the Prime Minister and the government come out in the open at an early stage as well, we might have had the opportunity to decentralize the Olympic games. This gives me an opportunity to repeat what I said in the House as far back as January of this year. On January 16, 1973, I said in this House:

> We all know that today's magnitude of the games could become a costly proposition and thus, most probably, a problem with far reaching consequences. I suggest that the government . . . has been most obvious in trying to evade this issue, and therefore I should like to make some suggestions regarding this matter through this House.
> Realizing the possibilities of incurring high costs, we must look for some options or alternatives. The Olympic games in recent years have become much too large and complicated, both in regard to facilities and the number of participants, to be held in any one city. They are no longer the games consisting of a small scattering of individual athletes . . .
> I believe that Montreal is the city best able to cope with the multitude of problems that would be faced by staging the games in Canada. However, because of the costs and added possible benefits to our country, we should consider partially decentralizing the games somewhat along the lines of the Munich Olympics, which in fact took place in as many as seven different cities, one as far away as 550 miles from Munich.

It is too bad that because of the government's lack of action and interest in this matter there will not be any coast to coast physical facilities in the wake of the Olympic games in 1976. I am convinced that future Olympic games will incorporate the idea of decentralization in the host country, and by so doing curb exorbitant expenditures and eliminate the high risks of financing the games through such programs as the ones we are now facing. I might add that the risk does exist, particularly when we notice that at this late date the minister still states that a face value of $450 million of coins will be needed to net a profit to the Olympic organization of $250 million.

Since Bill C-196 was passed this July, the inflationary problems that we are currently facing will certainly have an effect on the originally planned seigniorage, which ultimately will effect COJO. It is because of this party's amendments to the bill that the House will have an opportunity to study the program and to make any necessary adjustments between now and 1976 to further protect not only COJO but the taxpayer.

There are still many unanswered questions regarding the Olympics as a whole, such as the proposed expenditures by the CBC, the proposed expenditures by CMHC, additional security, immigration costs, and many others.

While we admit to our complete support for the Olympic games and for the benefits that will accrue to Canada and Canadians—and, as the minister said, they will be many—we also do not hesitate to point out our intention to remain watchdogs for the taxpayer and I shall be the first to attack any unnecessary expenditure of public funds.

I shall also, on the other hand, attack at every opportunity those individuals or groups of individuals such as the NDP who would seek to discredit the Olympic movement for the sake of personal or party gain by appealing to bigotry and envy and by trying to play one section of this country against another. The Olympics, Mr. Speaker, belong to Canada. They will reflect Canada to the world and will bring to Canada a sense of pride and unity.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by thanking the minister for making copies of his statement available to opposition parties some time before he presented it in the House. I feel this is very important because it gives us an opportunity to put our arguments in order, even if we have to re-order some of them, as the hon. member did who spoke just before me.

I suggest that although the minister spoke about the Olympic ideal, which he did in suitably reverential, if not counterfeit tones, he should be reminded that the original Olympics were not confined to athletics only but included poets, rhapsodists—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Musicians.

Mr. Rose: —yes, musicians and other exciting people. I therefore urge the minister and those people who are responsible for this presentation, such as COJO, to make certain that Canadian cultural aspects in their broadest sense are properly presented and made manifest at the 1976 Montreal Olympics.

I also remind the minister that, although at this moment we are considering $250 million for what has been described as a carnival of sweat, the Montreal Symphony Orchestra is begging all over North America for money to ensure its survival. I hope, therefore, that some of the seigniorage from this program will spin off for the benefit of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rose: I and the members of my party welcome the statement made by the Postmaster General Mr. Ouellet launching the Canadian Olympic Coinage Program. I say this despite the fact that my party fought vigorously against this method of financing, both in committee and in the House of Commons. We fought the scheme not because our party is anti-sport or—I say this incidentally since it was brought up—bigotedly anti-French; we fought the scheme because we believed that the method of financing the Olympics through coins and lotteries, while perhaps appealing to two basic human instincts, hoarding and gambling, was not satisfactory. We felt the idea was worth fighting because we could not see how the sales target could be met, and it followed that any shortfall in the sales of these coins would have to be met by those Canadians who are among the most economically deprived in our country, Canadians living in the province of Quebec.

Through a deal involving complicity, I might say, concerning amendments concocted by the government and the Official Opposition over one weekend, committee hearings on the bill were hurriedly closed without any opportunity being provided for the committee to examine any witnesses other than those two hon. gentlemen, the Postmaster General, and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury). Because of that deal in which the Tories were found in bed with the Liberals, the committee hearings were concluded with undue haste and the bill was reported back to the House.

● (1430)

Our misgivings about the Olympic financing proposals were outlined in detail at that time. I do not believe they need repeating on this occasion. We believed then and still believe that $250 million spread across the country for fitness and amateur sport to build rinks, swimming pools, coaching facilities and track and field outlets would have had far more spin-off effect than putting millions in one spot. In terms of four years, Canada could not only have expected to be host to a world athletic extravaganza but Canadian athletes would have had a genuine opportunity to win a suitable number of events for a change.

That argument is now behind us. Our party lost the fight on the Olympic bill, although the NDP track record on other energetic policies has improved considerably lately.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rose: We lost out on the Olympic bill. We do not intend to cry about that today. On July 26 I concluded my third reading remarks by saying:

> I would love to have been in cabinet and overheard the discussions on this bill. I hope the optimists will be accurate and the pessimists will be wrong. If we are going to have the Olympics, we want them to be a success.

Having said those words on July 26, I can say no less today. We, of course, want to be assured that, should there be a shortfall in the $250 million coinage expectation, the federal government will not, I repeat not, accept further responsibility beyond the $100 million already committed for security, housing and broadcasting.

There is little more that can appropriately be said at this time, except to extend our unequivocal best wishes to the minister and his promotional staff.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that from the beginning when Montreal authorities took the first steps regarding the Olympic Games and coins, the Social Crediters in the House have given all their support to the proposals of His Honour the mayor of Montreal and His Excellency Mr. Rousseau, who are at the origin of the Olympic Coins Program for the 1976 Games.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the members who supported Bill C-196 and also the minister, who has just said that hon. members will be able to give concrete support to this program. I would like him to note that for the 16 employees on my staff I will order Olympic coins for the coming Christmas season.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are always contradictory details in the projects submitted to us, contradictory not for us but for the minister. When he said, for instance, that the Olympic Coins Program will increase revenues to $500 million, this means half a billion dollars of new credits, which greatly resembles the theories of the Social Credit, which the minister does not want to recognize ordinarily, but which he recognizes for the Montreal Olympic Games.

The minister also said:

> I am at present engaged in a series of personal visits to key centres across the country, with the dual purpose of disseminating information about the Olympic Coin Program . . .

Next Sunday, the minister will be at Nédelec, in my riding, to deliver a political speech or distribute olympic coins to my electors.

Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that this undertaking will be highly successful in Canada and throughout the world and are happy about it.

OPERATION OF SUBMERSIBLE VESSELS INSIDE THE JURISDICTIONAL PURVIEW OF THE GOVERNMENT

Question No. 2,328—Mr. Forrestall:

1. To the knowledge of the government, how many submersible vessels of all types, and by such types, have operated inside the jurisdictional purview of the government, in each calendar year since 1963 inclusive?

2. Does the government have knowledge of the approximate locations and courses of the United States submersible vessels that might from time to time come into waters that would normally be considered under the jurisdictional purview of the government and, if so, through what other department or agency of the government than the Department of External Affairs would such information be handled and available?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of National Defence as follows: 1. The following is a list of military submersible vessels of all types operating with Maritime forces in the years in question: 1963, 1964: 1 U.S. Submarine on loan, 2 R.N. Submarines on loan; 1965, 1966: 1 U.S. Submarine on loan, 1 'O' Class submarine; 1967: 1 U.S. Submarine on loan, 2 'O' Class submarines; 1968: 1 U.S. Submarine on loan, 3 'O' Class submarines; 1969, 1970: 1 former U.S. submarine, 3 'O' Class submarines; 1971, 1972, 1973: 1 former U.S. Submarine, 3 'O' Class submarines, 1 SDL-1.

2. In so far as U.S. Naval submersibles are concerned, this information is known to the Department of National Defence.

Order Paper Questions

HARBOUR MAINTENANCE COSTS—ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF GREY-SIMCOE

Question No. 2,826—Mr. Mitges (Supplementary)

How much money was spent for maintenance and repairs of harbours in the electoral district of Grey-Simcoe for 1969, 1970, 1971, 1972 and to October 1, 1973?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Ministry of Transport expenditures on maintenance and repairs of harbours in the electoral district of Grey-Simcoe were: 1969, $334. 1970, $144. 1971, $1099. 1972, $323. 1973, $767. (to October 1).

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,890—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Unemployment Insurance Commission on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. 1972-73: $142,872.00; 1973-74, to date: $388,832.08.

WIARTON AIRPORT

Question No. 3,090—Mr. Mitges:

1. What is the total acreage of the Wiarton Airport?

2. Has any consideration been given to increase the facilities for national and international air traffic stopovers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. The total acreage of the Wiarton Airport is 794.5.

2. To date no indication has been received by the Ministry that additional or expanded facilities are required at the Wiarton Airport. Therefore, no new or expanded facilities are presently planned for this location.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—AIRCRAFT EQUIPPED WITH EMERGENCY LOCATOR TRANSMITTERS

Question No. 3,156—Mr. MacLean:

Are all aircraft operated by the Department of National Defence of a class or kind required to be equipped with emergency locator transmitters (ELTS) by July 1, 1974, now so equipped and, if not (a) how many such aircraft are so equipped (b) on what date will the remainder be so equipped?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Since 1957 all aircraft operated by the Department of National Defence have carried emergency locator transmitters (ELTS).

[Mr. Reid.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CL-41 TUTOR AIRCRAFT

Question No. 3,163—Mr. McKinnon:

Of the 190 CL-41 Tutor aircraft purchased by the government (a) how many (i) are in storage (ii) are in use (iii) have crashed (b) what became of the balance, if any?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Of the 190 CL-41 Tutor aircaft purchased by the government: (a) (i) 59 aircraft are in storage (ii) 25 aircraft are currently being transferred into active operation from storage; (iii) 73 aircraft are in use as pilot trainers; (iv) 20 aircraft have crashed and been deleted from inventory. (b) The balance of 13 aircraft are used for technical training purposes. Twelve of these aircraft, located at Canadian Forces Base Camp Borden, are used to train aircraft technical tradesmen in their basic training for jet aircraft maintenance. One aircraft, located at Canadian Forces base, Moose Jaw, is used for on-the-job training of technical tradesmen employed on Tutor aircraft maintenance and for familiarization training or aircrew trainees.

DREE GRANTS IN CONSTITUENCY OF BELLECHASSE

Question No. 3,173—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. In the period April 1 to October 31, 1973, how many applications for grants did the Department of Regional Economic Expansion receive from the constituency of Bellechasse?

2. What were the names and addresses of persons, corporations or companies who made such applications?

3. How many grants were allocated during that period?

4. Who were the persons, corporations or companies who received such grants and in what amounts?

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. From April 1 to October 31, 1973, six applications were received for industrial projects in Bellechasse constituency under the Regional Development Incentives Act.

2. The identity of persons, corporations or companies who apply for grants cannot be revealed without breach of agreement between the department and applicant to maintain such information confidential until such time as an offer, if made, is accepted by the applicant.

3. Six offers were accepted during the period.

4. The names of the persons, corporations or companies who accepted offers and the amount of each offer are as follows: Abattoir Gosselin Limitée, $32,440; A. Bélanger Ltée, $642,000; La Coopérative de Dorchester, $28,586; Laiterie Etchemin Inc., $33,576; Les entreprises Désourdy Inc., $68,599; O. Fortier Limitée, $51,340. As grants are not disbursed until a new, expanded or modernized facility has reached commercial production, payments of the above grants have not necessarily been received by the concerns involved.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION LOANS—ELGIN CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 3,192—Mr. Wise:

1. How many applications were filed by farmers in the constituency of Elgin for Farm Credit Corporation loans for each year 1970, 1971 and 1972 and, of these, how many were approved?

FIRENZA AUTOMOBILE DISPUTE WITH GENERAL MOTORS OF CANADA

Question No. 2,954—Mr. Atkey:

1. Does the government intend to intervene as a friend of the court in the class action No. 3495—73 now before the Supreme Court of Ontario against General Motors of Canada on behalf of Helen Naken, Stephen Cranson, William Pearce, Robert Vandiera and all others who purchased new 1971 and 1972 Firenza automobiles?

2. Were Firenza owners forced to rely almost solely on the Automobile Protection Association for aid in their attempt to obtain redress of their grievances from General Motors and, if so, is the government considering the permanent provision of funds to APA, which now operates under a LIP grant, to guarantee its continued existence or the provision of funds to other similar automobile consumer groups?

3. What criteria were employed to select the seven Firenza automobiles chosen for the study by the Department of Transport, Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch of July 16, 1973?

4. For what reason did the Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch consider that seven was a sufficient sample on which to conclude that the safety of the highways was not endangered by the Firenza automobiles?

5. Has the government considered increasing the powers and facilities of the Accidents and Defect Investigations Division of the Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch of the Department of Transport to avoid a continued reliance on the defect monitoring system in the United States and, if not, for what reason?

6. Has the Accident and Defect Investigations Division of the Road and Motor Vehicle Traffic Safety Branch suggested that the electrical system of the Firenza is a cause of concern and, if so, does the possibility of such defect justify the safety recall of all 1971 and 1972 Firenzas?

7. Has the Minister of Transport considered broadening the interpretation of and/or introducing amendments to the Motor Vehicle Safety Act to provide for the safety recall of those automobiles which display a reasonable probability of endangering the safety of Canadians on the highways?

8. Does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intend to propose any legislation or exercise any powers to prevent the importation of defective automobiles into Canada in the future and, if so, what steps are being or will be taken?

9. Did an independent vehicle engineering consultant examine a sample of Firenza automobiles for the Department of Transport and find that all vehicles had deficiencies which he concluded did not constitute a grave and immediate hazard to the safe operation of the vehicles and, if so, does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intend to take any action concerning such performance-related defects?

10. What action, if any, does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intend to take against automobile dealers who allegedly incorporated the $250 note of credit offered by General Motors to Firenza owners into their trade-in offers?

11. Does the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs intend to lay charges against General Motors under the provisions of the Combines Investigation Act for misleading advertising on the basis of the failure of the Firenza automobile to fulfil General Motors' advertised assurances of stout performance, sustained reliability, rugged durability and all-round GM engineering?

Return tabled.

SUSPENSION OF PART XV OF CANADA SHIPPING ACT

Question No. 2,982—Mr. Forrestall:

1. In how many instances has Part XV of the Canada Shipping Act been suspended pursuant to sections 663 and 665 of the Canada Shipping Act, on what dates, affecting what vessels for what length of time since January 1, 1970?

2. What were the reasons for such exemptions granted in each instance?

Return tabled.

Mr. Stackhouse: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since last January I have had question No. 420 on the order paper. I have drawn this to the attention of the parliamentary secretary. As this is the month of December, I think it is high time that a question asked last January was answered. I appreciate that the information may be embarrassing to the government; nevertheless, it should be made available to parliament.

I am impressed by the parliamentary secretary's defence against criticism of this kind on other occasions, namely, that he and his colleagues have answered 87 per cent of the questions asked. However, we are also interested in the other 13 per cent. Impressed as we may be by their success to the extent of 87 per cent, I wonder what the government's reaction would be to anyone who paid only 87 per cent of his income tax.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's point is well taken. I expect to have the answer next week.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to certain unanswered questions on the order paper. On June 19 I asked question No. 2316 concerning the details and cost of trips made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) at public expense since October 30, 1972. I can see no valid reason why approximately six months later there should still be no answer to a very legitimate question asking for information to which a member of parliament is entitled.

I also refer the parliamentary secretary to questions Nos. 2598 to 2601 inclusive asking for details of public expenditures at both Harrington Lake and 24 Sussex Drive. These questions were placed on the order paper about threee and a half months ago. It seems to me the government should no longer delay in making quite clear whether or not we have in Canada our very own Key Biscayne and San Clemente.

● (1440)

Mr. Forrestall: I very seldom do this, Mr. Speaker, but I rise on a similar point of order. I can understand the reluctance to answer some questions, but I wonder whether the question standing in my name, dated June 11, which has to do only with expenditures within the National Museum of Canada, could be answered before Christmas. Perhaps you could find out, Mr. Speaker.

OIL—SUGGESTION THAT GOVERNMENT SEEK AGREEMENT WITH SASKATCHEWAN ON TAXATION BEFORE FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Walter Baker (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On Thursday, December 6, as reported on page 8480 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said in reference to oil prices: "The federal government will continue to levy a tax, or, after February 1, a charge, equal to the difference between our domestic price and the export price as determined by the National Energy Board." In light of the recent announcement by the Premier of Saskatchewan that beginning next year Saskatchewan will dispose of provincial oil at prices which are essentially export prices, is the minister prepared to seek an agreement with the province of Saskatchewan to resolve any possible differences which may arise between the two levels of government on this issue and, if so, is he prepared to try to reach such an agreement before the first ministers conference in January?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): It seems to me the January conference provides an admirable opportunity for Saskatchewan and any other province interested in oil to discuss these important questions of taxation and pricing.

OIL—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PROPOSALS ON PRICING POLICY—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION AND CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCES BEFORE FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Yesterday, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Moose Jaw about a specific government proposal for a domestic pricing policy, the minister said: "We shall be bringing forward some alternative proposals in this regard to the conference". Will the federal government announce these proposals now, and will the minister hold consultations with the provinces before the January conference in an attempt to achieve a consensus on options for a domestic pricing policy before the conference takes place?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): There may well be exchanges between officials but it seems to me, if I understand what the provinces have in mind, that the conference is concerned precisely with consultation.

Mr. Baker: Has the federal government made any specific proposals for a domestic pricing policy to the premier of Saskatchewan and, if not, will the government now make such proposals having regard to the pricing policy proposals of that government?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I have made no proposals to the premier of Saskatchewan. As I say, it may very well be advisable to have our officials consult in preparation for the conference, but probably the most effective way of dealing with this question would be to discuss with all ten provinces the difficult question of oil pricing in Canada.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—ACTION TO ACCELERATE PROJECT TO ENSURE COMPLETION BY 1975

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Can the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources tell the House what action the government has taken to accelerate the Montreal pipeline project in order to ensure that it will be completed before the 1975 deadline?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): We have been in consultation with the Interprovincial Pipeline Company and with the government of Quebec on the factors involved. For this purpose we have constituted a special group within the government of Canada to be led by the Deputy Minister of National Defence, Mr. Sylvain Cloutier, who will be seconded from his present post and given specific responsibility for the pipeline project.

Mr. Paproski: When will the government announce definite plans in connection with this project?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): At a relatively early date, I would hope.

POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES PRIOR TO FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises from the statement by Premier Blakeney of Saskatchewan—

Some hon. Members: Sheik Blakeney!

Mr. Douglas: —that if the federal government wants Saskatchewan oil to be sold in Canada at less than its international value, the government of Saskatchewan will co-operate. The premier went on to say that if Saskatchewan were prepared to do this, the federal government, in its turn, ought to be prepared to deal with the matter of discriminatory freight rates against western Canada, the development of secondary industries and agricultural stability—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder if the hon. member wishes to ask a question?

Mr. Douglas: I want to ask the minister whether it is the intention of the government to hold discussions with the provinces prior to the first ministers' conference in order to deal with some of these matters which are of such vital concern to the western provinces.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As I indicated in reply to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, I would expect there would be consultation between officials and it might well be desirable to consult at the ministerial level before the meeting, but it does seem to me that the most appropriate level for such discussions would be at the conference when all the provinces are there. If Saskatchewan is indeed in favour of lower prices for Canadian consumers I would hope these would be available unconditionally. In any event, as I understand our constitution, the question of trade and commerce being under federal jurisdiction, it should not be a matter of condition as to whether any commodity is offered for sale on the Canadian market or not.

Mr. Fairweather: Blackmail!

OIL—DISPOSITION OF REVENUE FROM POSSIBLE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In his speech to the House on December 6, as reported on page 8480, the right hon. gentleman indicated that if and when the freeze on oil prices expires it is not intended that at any time the price should go beyond what is needed to ensure the development of the Alberta oil sands and other Canadian resources. If there is any increase in the price of oil, will this money go to the provinces or is it his intention that it should go to the oil companies in the hope they may use the additional revenue for the purpose of developing the oil resources of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am surprised that the hon. member, a member of the federal parliament, should have forgotten the third possibility, that some of it might go to the people of Canada through the federal treasury.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OIL—PRICE INCREASE BY IRAN—IMPACT ON CONSUMERS OF EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Inasmuch as Canada imports 117,000 barrels of crude oil per day from Iran, and noting that Iran has increased the price of crude to between $16 and $17 a barrel, can the minister state what is likely to be the impact of this price increase on the consumers of eastern Canada, and whether he has any relief measures in mind to recommend to cabinet?

● (1450)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that the recent price was an oil auction price for participation oil from Iran, and the oil imported into Canada from Iran comes on long-term contracts with various Canadian refineries. I have had no indication yet that this auction price will find its way into the general price for crude oil in this country.

OIL—LEVEL TO WHICH GOVERNMENT WILL ALLOW PRICE TO RISE BEFORE TAKING ACTION TO ASSIST PEOPLE OF EASTERN CANADA

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary for the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman tell the House whether he has yet determined to what level the government will permit offshore prices to rise before considering the implementation of some sort of domestic pricing policy to protect the people of eastern Canada, perhaps some sort of partial subsidy or measures of that nature?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I may have misunderstood the question, but surely offshore prices are not determined by the federal government but by the producers of oil offshore.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Central Nova on a supplementary question and then try to complete the first round of questions by recognizing representatives of the other two parties. I will then return to the number of hon. members who wish to ask supplementary questions on this matter.

Mr. MacKay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will be brief. I am sorry if I did not make my question clear to the Prime Minister. I realize, of course, that offshore prices are not determined by the federal government, but I am wondering whether the Prime Minister has in mind any unacceptable level beyond which he will not permit the people of eastern Canada to be victimized by these prices? Does he have any plan that, if necessary, he will eventually introduce some sort of relief measures such as a partial subsidy or other domestic assistance?

An hon. Member: Like removing the federal sales tax.

Mr. Trudeau: Again, Mr. Speaker, we may be on different wave lengths. It seems to me that the federal government can in no way determine the price—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: No policy.

An hon. Member: I could get you a bumper sticker to describe that policy.

Mr. Trudeau: We cannot determine the price at which Venezuela decides to send the oil to us. The only remedy we or the provinces have if we do not want to pay that price is not to take the oil.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Wait till Premier Reagan hears that.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

An hon. Member: Now we will hear from Sheik Lewis.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—INQUIRY WHEN APPLICATION WILL BE MADE AND BY WHOM—FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish that some hon. members would stop elevating me. I should like to ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources one or two questions about the pipeline. When does he expect an application to be made to the National Energy Board with regard to the extension of the pipeline, and by whom?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, one thing I promise not to call the hon. gentleman is a blue-eyed Arab.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Explain.

An hon. Member: How cosy can you get?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that an application for the pipeline will be made to the National Energy Board early in the new year. I would anticipate that the best way to achieve the construction of the pipeline would be by an extension of the Interprovincial line and therefore the application would be made by that company.

Mr. Hees: Say it with flowers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I as a blue-eyed Canadian—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: My wife has told me I have blue eyes.

An hon. Member: How sweet it is!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You make beautiful love together.

Mr. Hees: Oh David, you are just darling.

Mr. Crouse: Oh, my blue-eyed baby.

Mr. Bell: This is getting unparliamentary. You should go behind the curtains.

Mr. Muir: It is getting a little nauseating.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the financial arrangements have already been completed, whether the financing of the extension of the pipeline will be done entirely by Interprovincial or will the federal government participate, and if there is any financing by the federal government, will the federal government have any equity in that part of the pipeline?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the financing details of the pipeline are not yet determined. Indeed, that is one of the questions under intensive discussion at the moment.

POSSIBILITY OF GUARANTEE THAT ARAB OIL WILL NOT BE EXPORTED BY CANADA TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the minister of what energy we have left, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Since Arab countries are willing to supply Canada with all the oil products it needs, provided those products are not exported to the U.S.A., does Canada intend to continue refusing that guarantee to the Arab countries in the face of the new reductions in Arab exports to Canada from January 1, 1974?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned to the House a few days ago, we made inquiries in Saudi Arabia in order to know their opinion and policy with regard to exports to the U.S.A. As yet, we have not exported Arab oil products to the United States but we will continue to export oil products coming from the other countries.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT OIL PRICE WILL NOT BE HIGHER THAN OFFSHORE CRUDE

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Joliette.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Since the construction of a pipeline is taken for granted, in his negotiations with the Quebec government, has the minister asked for the assurance that the prices of western oil products will not be higher than those of products from abroad and if not, can he assure us that Quebec will obtain prices similar to those of imported products?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have discussed with the Quebec government the price of imported oil and it is one of the main questions which will have to be solved before the construction of such a pipeline.

REQUEST THAT DISCUSSION OF ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY BILL AND TAX MEASURE BE POSTPONED UNTIL FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, agreeing with the minister's statement that the first ministers' conference is the proper forum for discussion of these matters which are of joint interest to both levels of government, in light of the effect of Bill C-236 and the bill founded on the ways and means motion he designated today, will he give very serious consideration to postponing further discussion of these bills until the first ministers' conference for the sake of promoting national unity and in an attempt to arrive at a reasonable settlement in a congenial atmosphere on January 23 and 24?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): With regard to Bill C-236, Mr. Speaker, we cannot fully anticipate all the events that may occur in the near future, but certainly one of the grave concerns is that there may be a sufficient interruption in the supply of oil coming to the eastern Canadian market that the customers in that market may, indeed, be prejudiced later in the winter. On that basis, rather than delay the bill I think it would be in the interests of all members from all parts of the country, perhaps even the hon. member for Peace River in particular as a member from Alberta, to make sure that some of our fellow citizens do not suffer because of events beyond our control.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to say that the member for Peace River, like most people in Alberta, is far more concerned about doing something for the people of eastern Canada than is the Prime Minister who is willing to let them freeze.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1500)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I am very happy that the member for Peace River is indicating that the Alberta members are interested in assuring a supply of oil to Quebec and eastern Canada. I wonder if he could assure a supply of Alberta members to Quebec on the bilingual policy.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSSIBLE EMBARGO ON OIL EXPORTS FROM UNITED STATES TO CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of statements made in the last few days in the United States that the government of that country is prepared to impose embargoes on the export of petroleum products from the United States to Canada, and in view of the importance to our energy supply of those exports to this country, has the minister been in touch with the United States government to find out whether or not that is the intention of that government and, if so, what effect does he think it will have on the energy supplies of this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it has been a matter of concern that supplies of certain refined products, particularly those going to the lower mainland of British Columbia, not be interrupted by any United States domestic policy. We will make certain that viewpoint continues to be indicated to the United States government.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT OPERATION OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION BE STUDIED BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister regarding unemployment insurance. In light of the mounting criticism and concern about the cost and the effectiveness of the whole plan, and in view of conflicting statements by ministers on this matters, would the Prime Minister seriously consider having the whole question of the Unemployment Insurance Commission directed to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration so it can delve into the act and the regulations in order to bring about suggested amendments which perhaps could make this act more acceptable?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the House leader has indicated to the House of Commons, we hope we will be able to end this part of the session before Christmas and I think it would be unwise at this stage to charge the parliamentary committees with more work than is already assigned to them.

SUGGESTION THAT QUALIFYING PERIOD BE INCREASED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact the Prime Minister has evaded that question, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the fact that many concerned persons and experts have indicated that the qualifying period of eight weeks is too short, would the minister seriously consider bringing in legislation to increase the minimum qualifying period?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, any contemplation of legislation regarding the Unemployment Insurance Act surely must be based on a much more profound and comprehensive examination than singling out one small aspect. I point out that there was ample opportunity in the spring to deal with these matters when the supplementary estimates were before the committee on estimates, and there will be ample opportunity when the main estimates are again before the committeee. I for one will welcome that opportunity to dispel some of the myths being spread by many.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver South and the hon. member for Hastings seek to rise on supplementaries and will be recognized for that purpose. Then I will see the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby.

REINTRODUCTION OF BILL RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister advise whether it is the intention of the government to reintroduce Bill C-125 concerning the administration of the Unemployment Insurance Act now, or in 1974?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government was stated by me on November 11, as recorded at page 7611 of Hansard. If the hon. member will read it in full, I think he will find that is the position of the government, which has not changed.

Mr. Fraser: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. The minister is aware of the statement made by the Minister of the Environment. Is the minister in agreement that is government policy?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I discussed this with my colleague. I think the reports are incorrect. There is no disagreement. The statement I made as recorded at page 7611 of Hansard is the policy of the government.

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO RELUCTANCE TO PAY INCREASED PREMIUMS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, about a month ago I asked, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, his stand-in for that day whether or not, in light of the growing number of employees and employers who are reluctant to pay the excessive increase in benefit premiums, the government would undertake an inquiry into the matter. In view of the Prime Minister's answer today, I again ask that question of the minister since I have not yet received an answer.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has had an answer to that question several times, also augmented by the answer the Prime Minister gave a few moments ago.

[Mr. Andras.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS TO CHILEAN GOVERNMENT TO EXTEND DEADLINE FOR APPLICATIONS FOR SAFE CONDUCT

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that apparently there are 45 Chilean refugees at the Canadian Embassy in Santiago, and that the Chilean government apparently has fixed a deadline for applications for safe conduct as of yesterday, which has been met in respect of the 45, does this ruling exclude new applicants and, if so, will the Canadian government make representations to the Chilean government to extend the deadline so that the humanitarian policies announced by the Canadian government in respect of refugees may be fully implemented?

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm to the hon. member that indeed 45 Chileans are in the Canadian chancery in Santiago. As for the second part of his question the Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs conveyed yesterday to the chargé d'affaires of Chili here in Ottawa the feelings of the Canadian government on the matter.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO OPERATION OF COMPUTERS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister assure the House that the computer systems of the Unemployment Insurance Commission pay centres have been upgraded to eliminate the errors and over-payments that have been so prevalent in the past?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the overpayments, contrary to some distorted information given by some people, were not due to computer error but were identified by control measures which discovered, for example, that some people were drawing unemployment insurance when they already had jobs and should not have been drawing benefits. That is the sort of situation that was corrected on the basis of interviews. The computer was not, as indicated by one hon. member, the guilty party. The answer to the general question is yes, the computers are performing just as well as the people who put the information into them.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

GRANVILLE ISLAND, VANCOUVER—DESIGNATION FOR PUBLIC USE—REASON FOR APPOINTMENT OF LIBERAL AS PROJECT MANAGER

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of statements made by the minister that Granville Island, Vancouver, will be designated for public use, and in view of the fact that some industrial leases on this island have over 20 years to run, will the minister explain to the House why this property has already been transferred to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, since there will be no mortgages and no housing involved, and would he further explain why the former president of the British Columbia Liberal Association has been hired already as project manager at a salary of $25,000 per year?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps that question could be placed on the order paper or considered at the time of adjournment.

NUMBER OF PEOPLE DRAWING BENEFITS IN LIGHT OF REPORTED JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that in Toronto and elsewhere throughout the country employers say they cannot get workers, how does the minister explain the tremendous number of people who claim they cannot get work and who are receiving benefits which will cost the country well over $2 billion this year?

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member will agree with the Chair that a question asked in those terms is debate and invites argument. Certainly, a question asked in such terms cannot be accepted from the point of view of procedure.

ENERGY

MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS IN JANUARY, 1974—INQUIRY AS TO TELEVISING AND ACCESS FOR PUBLIC

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Can he inform the House and the country whether or not the first ministers' meeting in January will be open to the public and perhaps even televised on the French and English channels all across Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would hope so, but I cannot make any decision without consultation with and agreement by the provinces.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Is the right hon. Prime Minister's office carrying on that consultation now to ascertain the wishes of the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: At this stage I am just beginning to receive replies from the provinces on the dates that I propose, on the subject matter for the agenda and on the form of the conference. When I am in a position to gather all these replies, perhaps I will then be able to assist the hon. member by replying to his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member, but one of his colleagues is rising on a question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A few minutes ago the right hon. Prime Minister made a remark which tarnished Alberta members of parliament as bigots on the bilingual issue. I have deliberately let a few moments go by in order to cool my emotions on hearing that remark which was an outrageous slander on members of parliament from Alberta who are second to none in their desire for true national unity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member would resume his seat for a moment. I think I must remind the hon. member that he has risen on a question of privilege and he himself mentioned that it relates to a statement made earlier.

Mr. Fairweather: Yes, two minutes earlier.

Mr. Forrestall: What is wrong with letting your temper cool off when something like that riles you?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I said, I would invite the hon. member to resume his seat for a moment while I caution him that a question of privilege should be raised at the moment when there is occasion or reason to bring it forward. I am sure the hon. member has that in mind.

Mr. Roche: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I simply wanted to think about the matter for a moment or two and allow my temper to cool. My question of privilege, which I repeat to you, is that the Prime Minister is trying to isolate Alberta as the villain in the energy crisis in order to cover up his own lack of policy and programming in securing energy supplies.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Roche: Finally, I am hesitant to dignify the slander on Albertans that we have suffered by a question of privilege, but we are not going to sit quietly in this chamber and be called bigots by the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, it will be up to you and the House to decide whether there was indeed any slander, but I must indicate to the gentleman opposite that my reference did not in any way indicate that he or his colleagues from Alberta are bigots. What I did indicate was that in their value judgments it is more important to Quebec to have acceptance by Canada of the bilingual policy than to have a gallon of oil from Alberta. I would hope the hon. member would support that along with all his colleagues.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's West.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I apologize to the hon. member for St. John's West. Before the Chair recognized the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona on a question of privilege, the hon. member for Compton had the floor.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS—FORMULA FOR ALLOCATION OF GRANTS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Would he advise the House whether local initiatives projects will be maintained and, if so, whether additional funds will be made available? Otherwise, will the LIP policy be abolished?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Local Initiatives Program is, of course, current now. Money is being allocated and projects approved. If I have missed the point of the hon. member's question, I apologize. Most certainly it is alive, well and living in Canada and it is being vigorously pursued at the present time.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Compton wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, have the hon. minister and the government reviewed the LIP formula which they have established over the past few years? Does it meet real needs? Is it warranted? If so, why are as many as 90 per cent of the projects turned down?

[English]

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Things are becoming somewhat confused.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Roche.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was going to suggest to the hon. member for Compton that the question might be placed on the order paper in both French and English in view of the difficulty with the translation service.

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN TO COMPENSATE FOR LOSSES DUE TO SEVERE ICE CONDITIONS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. It concerns the statement made by him on November 9 in which he announced a program of assistance for Newfoundland fishermen who suffered losses because of ice conditions last spring. In view of the fact this program discriminates against many hundreds of Newfoundland fishermen in that those who do not live within the defined areas will not receive assistance although they suffered the same type of losses under the same conditions, would the minister give an undertaking to have this program extended so that all fishermen who have suffered losses because of the ice conditions in Newfoundland will be compensated?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to give the hon. member that assurance. However, I can also tell him that, prior to the announcement of areas in which the benefits will be paid an analysis was made of the catch of the fishermen. The hon. member will be glad to know that in Newfoundland as a whole the value of the catch was up by 20 per cent.

Mr. Carter: I am aware of the formula used by the minister and his officials in arriving at this decision, but in view of the fact the formula discriminates against inshore fishermen, will the minister reconsider and extend the program to these people?

Mr. Davis: Our financial support is aimed primarily at inshore fishermen.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

STUDY OF RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN NUMBER OF JOB VACANCIES AND NUMBER OF PEOPLE RECEIVING BENEFITS

Mr. Ian Arrol (York East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration whether he is studying the relationship between the high job vacancy rate and the increasingly high unemployment insurance benefits and, if so, when might we expect the results of such investigation?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this problem is under constant examination. I have announced before the miscellaneous estimates committee the several steps which we are taking. I might say that the unemployment insurance claim board is diminishing in relation to the diminishing unemployment. If the hon. member would care to examine the statistics, he would find they support what I have just said.

ACTION TO FIND JOBS FOR UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact the whole of the country does not just circle around big "TO"—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He does not know his geography.

● (1520)

Mr. Muir: —would the minister make special arrangements to see that the Manpower Offices in many other parts of the country, where many people are unemployed and where unemployment is drastically high, will do their utmost to find jobs for people who cannot find jobs? Would he also entertain the idea of bringing before the cabinet more plans and efforts to provide industry in those areas where there are no jobs and people are desperately and seriously trying to find jobs?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as to the first part of the question I think I did indicate, again in my statement, before the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee our plans to convert all the CMC's to job information centres by early 1975. As to the second part of the question or representation, I have total confidence in my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, and in the many other programs that are trying to do exactly what the hon. member wishes to see accomplished.

AVERAGE BENEFIT AND PERIOD OF PAYMENT

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In light of the suggestion that unemployment insurance is in some way contributing to the inability of employers to obtain workers—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: —has the minister any statistics as to the average income per hour of the unemployed and the number of weeks they are on unemployment insurance?

Some hon. Members: Order paper!

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as is well known, the average weekly pay from unemployment insurance benefit is $68, and the average person is on unemployment benefits for between 17 and 18 weeks. I do not think there is any doubt by virtue of that average, with the top ceiling of $107 per week only involving about 13 per cent of the claimants, that the money is going to the people in the lower income bracket.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Fraser Valley West and the hon. member for St. John's East, and perhaps then call orders of the day.

LEVEL OF BENEFITS COMPARED WITH MINIMUM WAGE AND WELFARE PAYMENTS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he has statistics to confirm that the minimum wage level, welfare payments and unemployment insurance benefits are all about on the same level and that level is the poverty line?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would be very interested in examining the details of that question. Right now I do not have readily available in my mind statistics that would support or deny the hon. member's suggestion.

POST OFFICE

ALLEGED HOLDING UP OF DELIVERY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he can tell the House whether any post offices across the country are holding up December family allowance cheques because the envelopes also contain references to the new Family Allowance Act which has not yet passed through the full parliamentary process, and can he tell the House when these cheques will be released by the post offices?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, post office employees deliver mail as soon as it is received. I can assure the hon. member that it is not the custom of the Post Office Department to delay intentionally mail delivery.

[English]

Mr. McGrath: In view of the fact that I know of one post office in the country where family allowance cheques have been held up for three days on the instructions of the Minister of National Health and Welfare—I am talking about St. John's, Newfoundland—may I ask how long these cheques will be held by this post office, and can he tell the House when in fact the cheques will be delivered?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I shall inquire on this case, but I have serious doubts as to the accuracy of the hon. member's remarks.

TRADE

CANADIAN DEFICIT UNDER CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—STEPS TO ACHIEVE EQUALITY

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce may I direct this question to his parliamentary secretary. Can he advise the House of the reason for the nine month $181 million deficit under the Canada-United States auto pact, and what steps the government is taking to establish equality and equity under that agreement, as is stated in the agreement?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the shift in trade balance is attributed in large measure to the large demand for North American type vehicles in Canada compared with the United States. We examine these figures regularly, and if changes are to be made in policy or anything else we will make them.

Mr. O'Connor: Further to that non-answer, Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise when the long delayed talks between United States and Canadian officials on the auto pact are going to get back on the track and when some positive steps will be taken?

Mr. Breau: I will transmit the question to the minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POLICY ON AID TO THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES

Mr. H. T. Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but in his absence I shall put it to his parliamentary secretary.

During the report on Ethiopia on "Format 60" last night, it was announced that unfortunately the federal government has decided to reduce aid to third world countries. May I ask why it has decided to adopt such a policy?

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this report on TV and in other media is absolutely false. If one federal body has been the subject of special attention from the government, it is indeed CIDA which has benefited from an annual increase of about 17 per cent in its budget for the past four years and which will get a substantial increase next year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

ALLEGED DELAY IN DELIVERY OF FAMILY ALLOWANCE CHEQUES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I wish to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Have the baby bonus cheques that were to go out on December 10 been cleared by his department?

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether they have been cleared through the department or not. I can say it has been traditional that they go out on the 10th or 11th, and we will do everything in our power to see that they go out as soon as possible.

Mr. Rynard: Why are they being held up?

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to be able to answer that question, but I will see that an answer is given at the first opportunity. An investigation will be conducted.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order having to do with page IV of the Order of Business and Notices Paper for today where notice is given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources of introduction of a bill entitled "an act to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada", also involving a ways and means motion.

My point of order is that there may be a typographical error in this notice. I hope it is that rather than a misrepresentation on the part of the minister. I read the following from the accompanying recommendation:

> —there shall be paid out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to defined provinces for a prescribed period, a proportion of 50 per cent of the revenues to such provinces calculated in the manner set out in the measure.

The minister has said over and over again, not only at the committee level but also in the House, that 100 per cent of that tax would be returned to the provinces that produce the resource. Either we have a typographical error where it says that only 50 per cent will go back to the producing provinces or this is one of those cases where the minister once again has deceived the House and the people of Canada.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would again point out to the hon. gentleman, as indeed I have pointed out many times, that I indicated we would return to the provinces the royalties that they otherwise would have had and the federal government would then invest the balance of the tax in the producing provinces. Therefore these federal funds would go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund and be appropriated for investment in the producing provinces.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Like the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) I was allowing my temper to cool, and was not aware that the rules required that a question of privilege be raised immediately. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration earlier made reference to the fact that the problem was not with the computers but with the people feeding the computers. I cannot accept that. I can prove categorically that the computers did not work at any time last winter and the people were not responsible.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with the business set down for consideration today. Because of a longstanding arrangement made with the External Affairs Committee I am to appear before that committee this afternoon to discuss the Law of the Sea, and as a consequence I have asked the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to move Bill C-236 on my behalf when it comes up for a vote.

Mr. Bell: We will keep it going until you get back.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, December 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or marked disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Charles E. Haliburton (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, last night when I began speaking on this subject I was attempting to review some of the measures taken or proposed by the government in light of the apprehended crisis—or, should I say, apprehended insurrection—in the oil industry. What moves has the government made in face of that situation? There have been some efforts made to convince the people of Canada that the government should initiate some apparently conservative measures. Those measures have met no doubt with some success, although in light of the lack of credibility which the minister and the government have on this issue it is likely that those voluntary measures will not have as much effect as might be desired. In any event, the benefits of such conservation measures will be in the short run.

We have, after all, in Canada an increasing population and we have the tradition of increased disposable income in the hands of every Canadian. With increases in the population and increases in the gross national product, obviously the same amount of energy will supply the people of Canada this year as supplied them last year. Next year the situation will be much more aggravated to the extent that known reserves of oil are only sufficient to last the world for the next 20 years. I suggest that the government needs to go a great deal further than offering to the people of Canada some suggestions on means of conserving energy, if we are to have any long-term solutions.

One of the things that the government initiated is a price freeze—a freeze which is not a freeze. I mentioned earlier that there was no freeze in eastern Canada: there is no freeze for the consumers of the Atlantic provinces, where I come from, either in heating oil or gasoline. In fact, what we are faced with as a result of this freezing policy of the government is a two-price system in Canada. We have two Canadas again—one with adequate and cheap energy, and one without. The one without is that other Canada, the one from which I come, east of the Ottawa Valley line. Apparently that eventually is in keeping with the Prime Minister's attitude which he confirmed just a few moments ago, that not only are prices in eastern Canada going to be frozen, but if we cannot afford to pay the price of oil, we do not have to buy it. That comes very close to paraphrasing the motto which we read on the bumper stickers of cars from some parts of western Canada and is not the type of thing we would expect from a statesman of this country.

Last night I spoke about the alleged price advantages that had applied hitherto in eastern Canada. Since then I have obtained a few statistics from Statistics Canada although I am cautioned that their reliability is not certain. However, I think they are sufficiently in keeping with my recollection of prices that I should put them on the record. The price of grade one gasoline, that would be premium gasoline, in Halifax in October, 1960, was 50.9 cents. In Toronto at the same time it was 44.9 cents. In October, 1965, in Halifax it was 51.4 cents and in Toronto it was 49.4 cents. In October in 1970, in Halifax, it was 56.1 cents and in Toronto it was 56.2 cents. That is the only date I have on which the price of gasoline west of the Ottawa Valley line exceeded the price east of the Ottawa Valley line. In October, 1973, in Halifax it was 66 cents and in Toronto it was 64 cents. Furnace oil follows a little different pattern: for some inexplicable reason it was slightly cheaper in the Halifax area. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, on the basis of those statistics, that it was not as cheap as has been suggested in this House and not so cheap as to prompt the argument which has been raised so many times that Atlantic Canada has been profiting from cheap offshore oil. At one stage, for a short time, the price of heating fuels in Halifax was almost three cents cheaper than in Toronto. Now the trend has been reversed, just as it was reversed prior to 1965. The one period which was different was 1970.

What else has the government done by way of enunciating policy or taking decisions that would justify this current request for arbitrary and sweeping powers? They have had a reconversion to the view that a Montreal pipeline is needed. That is a step in the right direction, but that conclusion was not reached until this alleged crisis arose. It seems that Canada has lost out on the opportunity to construct a Mackenzie Valley pipeline. Nobody in the industry now believes there is any possibility of salvaging this project because an indecisive, vacillating government with no energy policy except that provided by the NDP did not have the courage to move.

An hon. Member: Do you have a policy?

Mr. Haliburton: We have a policy, do not worry about that. That lost opportunity for the Mackenzie Valley pipeline will have very long-range ramifications. It may mean that the gas will stay on the northern slopes of the northern territories forever. After all, alternative sources of energy must be found, and unless steps are taken at the right time that petroleum will remain too expensive until it becomes outmoded.

What else has the government done? We had the nebulous promise of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last week that a national petroleum company will be formulated with a capitalization of $50 million. That is not an impressive figure, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister announced a proposed expenditure of $40 million for research into the development of the tar sands over the next five years. The Alberta government is already committed to developing the tar sands and Syncrude is committed in respect of production. The only real cloud on the picture was whether federal tax measures would permit the project to become viable. Over the next five years the proposed expenditure of $40 million will obviously be of some help. I suppose you might call it pocket money, in the context of the amount of money involved in the project. It is a little like carrying a toothpick to a baseball match and thinking you are going to hit the ball, or going into battle with a popgun.

In energy matters, this government should be thinking beyond traditional sources of energy. It should be looking at the needs for the next 25 years and beyond, when it appears that petroleum supplies will be rapidly running out. We should be thinking beyond nuclear sources of energy to some other types of energy being developed in other countries. But in the meantime it is essential that we have access to petroleum.

An article appeared in yesterday's Globe and Mail which took my fancy, Mr. Speaker. It seemed to indicate that Canada has missed the boat on international trade in oil. The headline was "French group to build steel plant in Iraq". Apparently, under a contract between France and the government of Iraq, the French government has agreed to provide what is called technical aid in exchange for being exempted from the Arab oil embargo and, in addition, to have a two-year contract to buy oil at low prices. Where was our government when that kind of deal was going on? Where is our government when it comes to protecting our interests in international trade? We should be moving in such a direction on short-term supplies of oil. If the government can make Canada self-sufficient in energy in ten years, clearly the petroleum problem is not a long-range one, assuming the government's program to be sensible.

We are an industrialized country. We have technical expertise. We can show the producing countries how to make the most, economically, of their natural resources. We have no right to rape them and demand from them their petroleum and give nothing in return except a few Canadian or American dollars. We should anticipate their demand for quid pro quo, just as Saskatchewan and other provinces are entitled to quid pro quo. The conclusion of such a technical and trade agreement would go far toward solving petroleum and energy problems, problems which the government has put forward as the reason for this bill which is nothing more than a grab for power and provincial natural resources.

After all, the OPEC countries are not really interested in our dollars or American dollars. They already have more than they can use. They want improved standards of living for their people, an enlarged industrial base and perhaps some measure of self-sufficiency. If we help them to achieve that goal, I believe we shall encounter no difficulty in making short-term arrangements for oil at cheap prices, as France has done. Having reviewed the context in which this bill has been presented, I ask, what is the government asking us to do? I refer to an article contained in the Halifax Herald of December 4 which reads in part:

> A bill that would give the government authority to act in almost any petroleum emergency was introduced in the Commons by energy minister Donald Macdonald, who called for quick approval.

The government always asks for quick approval for something which it has delayed bringing forward. The article continues:

> —the allocation board could supersede provisions in a number of federal statues and overrule other federal agencies such as the National Energy Board.

The bill is to give the board power to take charge of railcars, ships and pipelines to move petroleum supplies to areas where they are needed most. The board could press even foreign ships into service. Pipeline companies would come under the jurisdiction of the board. They could be forced to build new branch lines and other facilities deemed necessary by the board. Presumably, the board could even force pipeline companies into bankruptcy. In other areas, the legislation would allow for relaxed anti-pollution standards and permit modification of contracts. It provides for individual rationing of petroleum and the issuing of ration coupons, and also for the power to ration electricity. The bill gives the board great powers. What has become of private enterprise? What has become of profit and loss?

Members last night said, "Oh, oh!" when I talked of this bill as being as far reaching as any wartime measure. For example, some industries which would be directly affected and indirectly controlled involve uranium mines, mineral fuel mines, rubber industries, synthetic textile mills, carpet, mat and rug industries, petroleum refineries, petroleum and coal products, manufacturers of plastics and resins, paint and varnish, fertilizer and agricultural products. Even if we disregard the fertilizer and agricultural input, this board will control areas of Canadian industry which account for just under 20 per cent of the total Canadian gross national product. This board will be very, very powerful.

In wartime, the emergency is clear; there is no question about there being an emergency. Certain powers must be exercised by one central authority. At present there is no evidence of an emergency. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the Prime Minister have not given us any facts and figures on which to establish an emergency. They cannot even tell members in this chamber from whom they are getting this advice or who sits on the technical advisory committee. Who are the people who tell us what sources of oil there are in Canada and what allocations need to be made?

We have encountered a situation in which prices are rising. There is an apprehended possibility of a crude petroleum shortfall ranging from a high of 200,000 barrels a day to a low of between 10,000 and 15,000 barrels. It has become evident during the past few weeks that the 200,000 barrel shortfall is an upward limit; it is not a realistic figure or one we can anticipate realistically. The low figure seems much more reliable. Is this the type of emergency, uncertain as it is, which should move this House to give such sweeping powers to a five-man board, powers to supersede any law which might conceivably interfere with their discretionary powers? Is that sufficient reason for this House to vote confidence in the governor in council and in its five picked men who will control and, in effect, administer industries using petroleum, petrochemicals, plastics and coal? Perhaps Nova Scotia will lose its right to sell coal to the highest bidder, just as Alberta and other producing provinces will perhaps lose their right to direct the sales of petroleum.

The board would also control electricity. Perhaps development of Fundy tidal power and allocations of other forms of power would come under the board. More important, for that matter, the board would have power to override provincial constitutions and provincial interests. Mr. Speaker, this board would have power to enrich one company at the expense of another, one province at the expense of another. It would have power to override federal and provincial environmental laws and other federal statutes passed by this House. It would have power to do this under regulation passed by the governor in council.

That is not the worst of it. The legislation is open-ended; it will remain in force as long as the governor in council chooses to continue the program. Do we need this program, Mr. Speaker? Is the government entitled to ask for it at this stage of the game? My answer is no. The government is not concerned about international prices, because if it were it would have embarked upon a program of alternative sources of energy to replace petroleum, before petroleum runs out. We are looking at an expenditure of $40 million to be used in research and development of tar sands. Where is the research and development of solar energy, on hydrogen energy and other energy forms? The United States is setting aside $600 million for research and development with regard to solar energy. That is how important they think the petroleum crisis is.

This government thinks the present petroleum crisis is serious enough, true, and it wants to take short-term measures to increase supplies of forms of energy now being used. However, there are no measures before this House, and none have been suggested, for increasing the production of petroleum in Canada. The only measures put before us so far have to do with the allocation of existing oil supplies. Government planning and foresight is restricted to this winter and to making sure that Canadians have enough heat this winter. What has been said so far in this debate, I suggest, bears me out. The government's major concern is to make sure that Canadians have enough energy to heat their homes through the winter. It wants to make sure it retains the support of the NDP during the current heating season, if I may use a phrase used last week in a public pronouncement.

I have not heard of any programs, either in place or anticipated, relating to uses of other forms of energy such as solar or wind energy which might be used to boost our electrical supplies. I have not heard of the development of technology for the harnessing of hydrogen energy, solar energy or a combination of solar and hydrogen energy. Canadians have a right to expect the federal government to be involved in these areas and to look to the future in order to protect us against some future energy crisis. The present crisis is one simply of rising prices. That, essentially, is the crisis we face in Canada. What will happen when the crisis becomes one of lack of supply? We will not be able to replace our supplies through the use of short-term, ad hoc measures which we have become so used to seeing brought forward in this House.

I shall conclude by quoting extensively from an editorial which appeared in the Chronicle-Herald. In large measure it sums up the attitude which is natural to an easterner in the situation facing this House and this country and the manner in which the government has seen fit to deal with it. The editorial deals with the national oil policy brought forward last week by the Prime Minister. It reads:

> Is it good "national" policy to offer firm price-freeze protection to consumers in the central and western regions but, at the same time, to hold out only "hope for the best" wishes for those in the east?
> Does it help promote the cause of national unity for the government to tell the people in two-thirds of the country not to worry about price hikes any more this winter, but to offer no similar safeguard to the rest of us who live in the east where the price crisis is more severe?
>
> Does it really mean very much to promise "early construction" of an extension to Montreal of the trans-Canada pipeline system—which travels only a fraction of the breadth of the country—at a time when there is a world shortage of pipe?
>
> Will the proposed national energy corporation be able to do very much by way of playing its promised "significant role" in exploration for new oil—including that locked beneath the water off the east coast, and the Alberta tar falts, and the Arctic ice mass—with a penny-ante budget of only $8 million in each of the next five years?
> What has emerged as Ottawa's answer to the energy crisis is a paste-up, patchwork piece of abstract with indefinite and undefined lines of approach, instead of a clear, readable, realistic blueprint to make Canada self-sufficient in energy production and delivery.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) said, Bill C-236 is a gigantic intrusion into the life of Canadians. We have to recognize this for what it is. It gives the government tremendous powers of allocation, pricing and distribution. As someone said, it is the War Measures Act on economics or the War Measures Act on energy. The question we have to ask ourselves when giving a government this power is not whether somebody should have this power, because somebody already has it; it is whether we would prefer the government of Canada to have this power or to have it wielded, as in the past, by the multinational corporations of the world.

I have some suspicion of power, but I know one thing, as do most Canadians: if we do not like what the government does, we can vote them out of office. We do not have that privilege with the multinational corporations of the world. I have no vote on the boards of Shell or Exxon. I have no say in their operations. They do not have to consult with me or please me in any way. There is no opposition to them. In the parliament of Canada, regardless of the power exercised in this bill, there are people who respond to the public will, and the public will make itself felt in this place.

I wanted to use that as a preamble and to indicate that on this side of the House we are not unaware of the kind of power it is possible to exercise under this bill. Whether the legislation is good or not is really going to be a matter of how interested the government is in exercising the legislation on behalf of the people. There can be a good bill before us with wide powers in it. Those powers can be used well, badly or not at all. It therefore becomes the responsibility of those of us who vote on the bill, and it is my intention to vote for it, to ensure the government is made aware of its responsibilities and is accountable to this House for what it does.

It has always been said in the private sector that oil is politics. Now, in the public sector, oil is politics. It will have to respond to the public will. There is an increasing need for governments to negotiate directly with governments. This bill will enable the government of Canada to negotiate directly with the government of Venezuela and make long-term agreements. Recently the government of Venezuela changed and they have a new attitude. What they are saying, and correctly so, is that oil is a depletable resource and they do not intend to continue sending it around the world until they run out and there is no future for their people. They intend to use oil as a bargaining weapon, not for political purposes or to further the foreign policy of Venezuela but to further the economic interest of their country and to ensure that when the oil runs out there will be some job-creating industry in its place.

You cannot get this kind of agreement by negotiating with the multinational oil companies. Venezuela does not wish to continue leaving its future in the hands of the multinational oil companies. It is willing to continue selling oil to Canada, but it wants to deal directly with the Canadian people. Admittedly, there are problems. The shipping is not in place; we are still heavily dependent on the multinational oil companies for shipping and transportation generally, as well as the marketing of oil. But that, too, can change.

If this bill does not do anything except make it possible for governments to deal directly with governments of other countries in order to further the mutual interests of those governments and their peoples, it will accomplish a great deal. It is worthy of support on that ground alone.

There is a great deal at stake in this entire business of energy. Obviously, there are differences of opinion as to how we should proceed. There are conflicts between the federal government and the provinces, between the provinces themselves, between private industry and the various governments and between nation and nation. This energy crisis provides Canada with a great opportunity to strengthen confederation. It also carries with it the danger that it may weaken and strain confederation. Whether it does one or the other will depend in large measure on how we in this House respond to the energy crisis. There is a necessity to go beyond just discussing energy; we have to deal with many of the increases that have plagued this country and many of the increases that set one part of the country against another. When the government meets with the various provincial leaders I am sure that will be a subject of discussion. I hope that when the federal government goes to that meeting it will be prepared to go beyond the question of energy and look at the other matters that have to be settled in conjunction with energy. It is a great opportunity for development, and distribution of the rewards of that development to the Canadian people.

Canada is one of the most fortunate countries in the world. For a long time we thought it was the second most fortunate country in the world, the United States being the most fortunate: it had everything a little bigger than what we had. At the moment we have everything, including some things the United States does not have. If we want to take inventory or look at it in terms of raw materials, we certainly have them. If we look at it in terms of food supply, we are fortunate to have one of the most productive agricultural economies in the world.

While our industrial structure is not the greatest, it could become the greatest because we possess what is now an extremely rare commodity—energy. It may take a year or two to link this energy with places where it can most effectively be used, but this prospect, used as a bargaining base for expansion, could enable this country to develop in a way open to few other nations in the world. When I talk about development, I am not talking about unrestrained development as though development in itself was a perfectly satisfactory goal. I am talking about sensible development, controlled development, development which will provide not profits for corporations but benefits for the people of this country; opportunities for redistributing wealth to older people, people who are sick, people who need assistance and people around the world who are less fortunate than ourselves.

I do not think we should ever be tempted to say that we have the energy, we have the resources, and to heck with everyone else; everyone else can go away. The rest of the world will not go away. We have no right to make the world so envious that eventually this envy may turn to something unpleasant. We who are in a fortunate position have a responsibility to take care of ourselves and to provide a decent society for our citizens, it is true; but we also bear responsibility for assisting less fortunate people around the world.

The bill before us directly challenges the jurisdiction of the provinces in the use of energy. Under the terms of the British North America Act, the provinces own the resources within their boundaries. They own the nickel, the iron, the oil, the gas. But the minute those resources cross either provincial or international boundaries the question of jurisdiction becomes debatable. At the moment, the provinces are saying they not only own the resources but they have the right to move them anywhere they wish.

The federal government must challenge this concept. I am not saying it must immediately take provinces to court, because I hope this will not be necessary. But this concept ought to be challenged around the negotiating table and resolved, like most constitutional challenges, by agreement without necessarily sticking to the exact letter of the law. The BNA Act must surely be one of the most flexible constitutional instruments ever created. If an agreement is desired, it is always possible to reach one within the context of the act. I hope agreement will be reached around the negotiating table as a result of bargaining, the offer of quid pro quo. But if the difficulty cannot be resolved in this way, the issue is so serious to the country that the federal government must assert its authority and, if necessary, have the matter resolved in court. Bill C-236 directly sets up a situation which will result in such confrontation. I do not think resolution of this question can be deferred. It is not at all clear where the authority for this bill originates. It could be argued that since energy supplies are of critical importance to the health and well-being of our people, if not to their lives, the federal government could declare all energy sources to be for the general advantage of Canada or for the advantage of two or more of the provinces, and thus act under section 92(C). Alternatively, the bill could be brought to the House of Commons under the constitutional authority of the trade and commerce section, 91(2), or it may be, and this is probably the case, the federal government has brought it in under the emergency section. The assertion would be that an emergency situation exists in Canada and legislation is therefore possible under the section providing for action to ensure the maintenance of peace, order and good government.

Such an assertion could probably not be challenged as long as the bill was related to a specific time period. It seems to me, though, that this is an emergency which will not pass away in a few weeks' time or in a year from now. The whole issue of energy supplies and distribution is one which promises to involve this country in important decisions of far reaching consequences for many years to come, and for this reason it needs to be resolved soon to the greatest extent possible.

I shall leave it to historians to decide why the Liberal party has moved in connection with energy in a way few of us expected it to do. Many of us thought we would be concerned with an election this week instead of debating energy policy here. Looking at the situation today, it seems to me one of the reasons is that Canada was fortunate enough to have a minority government at a crucial stage in its history. Had there been a majority government, I doubt very much whether we would have seen as good an approach to the energy issue as now seems to be the case. The unhappy situation in the Middle East has certainly created difficulties for Canadians as well as for many other nations. However, it may turn out to be one of the occasions which caused Canadians to wake up to the need to do something about energy.

Looking over Canadian history, I have often been persuaded that the Canadian tendency to be affable and easy-going is a positive disadvantage at times. Canadians are seldom moved to do great things unless a crisis obliges them to take action. The Middle East situation has created a problem not only for us but for the entire world, since oil is now being used for diplomatic and political purposes. But in the end this may turn out to be a good thing for Canada. It may, as the expression goes, smarten us up to the need to make plans for our own future.

It is easy for members of the House to be critical of the Liberals. I know that members of my own party, and I myself, have been extremely critical of the Liberals for failing to build a pipeline to Montreal. Members of the Conservative Party have risen on numerous occasions to criticize the Liberals for not taking action in this field. I suppose one could go back to 1961 and say that the prime minister of that day lacked sufficient foresight. The point is, though, that Quebec did not want this pipeline. It would have been impossible to build a Montreal pipeline, given the attitude of the people of Quebec; there must be at least some willingness on the part of the people who reside in a province before a pipeline can be built there.

Members of my party have for years, in discussions with their colleagues in Quebec, urged upon them the need to build a pipeline. Only six or eight months ago, when we formed a special committee on energy to discuss this question with people in the provinces, I remember saying to one man in Montreal, "You may have trouble about ensuring a supply. A pipeline really should be built in Quebec." To which he replied, "I would rather trust the Arabs than Lougheed." That was the feeling at the time. We know the west has grievances. We know the people there are upset about bilingualism and some of the things they believe parliament is doing for Quebec and French Canada. But Quebec, too, has very real grievances.

It is an unfortunate fact in our history that these mutual suspicions have prevented us from doing what should have been done a long time ago, and that is to build a pipeline into Montreal. I think the time has passed for this kind of recrimination as to who thought about what first, and who warned whom about the crisis. The pipeline has to be built now: I think everybody would agree with that statement, including the people of Quebec.

I am sorry the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in his comments today during the question period tried to equate bilingualism with getting oil to Quebec. They involve different kinds of problems, and in some way this obscured his answers rather than contributed to a solution of the problem. While bilingualism is important to the people of Quebec, as they have a right to feel comfortable in their language in this country which is theirs and mine, they still need oil. One does not live by language alone. Oil is still important and we should see that we get it to them.

It may be that speculative speeches of this kind with reference to history and what history might think about us is of some value. If we consider the debate during the last couple of days, we will note it has been very difficult for speakers to be heard above some of the background music of various members. At least I am able to be heard; perhaps not listened to, but at least heard. I do appreciate not having to scream my words over the heads of all those around me. There may be some value to a speech of this kind that does not attempt to hack away at who is right and who is wrong in respect of this situation.

This may be sort of political heresy because the Mackenzie King argument which has always been made in this country—I say this with the greatest respect to the late Mackenzie King—is that the ideal political situation is a one-party situation. I am sure that when Mr. King spoke about one party he had in mind his own party as the chosen instrument. The ideal situation was for one party to in fact have some kind of strong presence in every single province, that there should be no visible division or confrontation in politics and that whatever differences existed, they should be ironed out within the peaceful, quiet confines of the cabinet room. In other words, you do this by negotiating while holding hands, letting no one see that the interests of Manitoba are not quite the same as the interests of Nova Scotia. The idea was that we must never let this happen.

Let me refer to the result of that kind of policy and then I will come back to the present situation. The result was that nothing was done. During this process of holding hands and bargaining with each other, no one was willing to do anything lest somebody's feelings were hurt in the process. The result was that all the problems were buried for us to deal with at a later date. Nothing was solved, the problems were simply postponed; and by postponing them they became exacerbated until we had to deal with them openly and realistically.

I wonder what might have happened if the situation had prevailed in which the Liberal Party had half the seats in Alberta or, if you want to really stretch the imagination, we had two or three seats in Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Saltsman: What would have been the consequences of that situation? The consequences might have been a very moot approach to the whole question of energy and there would have been no confrontation. The winners in this kind of situation would have been the multinational oil companies, because it would be very easy to lay the blame as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) tried to do in respect of the force majeure clauses. He tried to say that if this diversion took place, it was not because the Canadian government wanted it that way but, rather, because the multinational corporations wanted it that way.

He tried to suggest that the force majeure argument was total nonsense and that in fact the multinational corporations have so much at stake and depend so much on the good will of the Canadian people and the Canadian government that they would not dare to oppose the will of the Canadian people if the government insisted. That is the kind of scenario we might have seen. The situation might have been a lot more visible in this country and some of the angry words said in this House might never have been expressed. Had that been the case, the nation would be much worse off. This is a much better way, that is, to see things as they are and try to deal with them in realistic terms.

I have no doubt that before long, in spite of some of the words that have been said, there will probably be a cartoon in one of our national newspaper showing the blue-eyed leader of my party with his arms around the blue eyed leader of the party in Alberta. The page will have a lot of blue and a lot of lovely words.

We will resolve this difficulty. We are not going to get into a crisis that will be so severe that confederation will fail. Some of the words being said now are frank and open, and they are necessary. They have needed saying for a long time, and we are saying them. We will resolve the problem, because the feelings of the people in my party toward the people of Alberta are certainly very friendly. We have a gentleman by the name of Grant Notley who makes sure they continue to be friendly. I am sure the people of Alberta do not really dislike us nearly as much as we have been told.

Mr. Bawden: You are one of the nicer ones, anyway.

Mr. Saltsman: You see, that is the beginning of the détente when a big oil-driller says: "Well, that socialist is not all bad."

Mr. Bawden: I didn't say that.

Mr. Saltsman: I will give you another few weeks, and perhaps we will be fortunate enough to hear that as well.

Mr. Bawden: I said you may not be as bad as the rest of them.

Mr. Saltsman: I am suggesting that because there has been a minority parliament, because of the crisis in the Middle East, because of the fact that representation around the country has been lopsided and political situations in each party are somewhat different than they might otherwise have been, we have been able to grapple with the problem of energy in this country.

Today we have heard some lethal things from members of the Conservative Party, some of which seem to have echoed from the Liberal Party, about statements supposed to have been made by the Premier of the great province of Saskatchewan. An attempt is being made to sort of equate the words of the Premier of Saskatchewan with those of the Premier of Alberta. This cannot be done because the words are not the same. There are very distinct differences between the positions of those two provinces, which I think have to be stated at this time. I think anyone who has looked at the two statements or who has followed the debate will see that there is in fact a very considerable difference.

It is obvious that the first responsibility of the premier of any province, whether it be socialist or conservative, is to the people of his province. He must try to do the best he can for them. That is not an issue and no one is questioning or challenging that role. The question is, how does the premier envisage his role in the province in connection with confederation? Does he, as we have unfortunately seen in Alberta, have a willingness on behalf of the province to treat other Canadians as though they were another group of foreigners? The question is, does the premier say that because he can get $7 a barrel in Chicago, the rest of the people in Canada must pay $7? Does he suggest that he will do the rest of the country a big favour by making sure they get first choice; or does he say, as the Premier of Saskatchewan has said, we are going to try to get the maximum amount for the oil we export out of this country. We are going to establish a corporation that will in fact buy the oil at a set price designed to provide a profit and a good return to the oil companies, but the difference between that price and the international price will go to the people of the province rather than end up as a windfall gain to the multinational corporations?

When we talk about depletion allowances, I remember a conversation I had with the Hon. Ed Schreyer, Premier of Manitoba. We discussed depletion allowances and I said that we must get rid of them. He said no, we must get rid of them for the multinational corporations because they are not entitled to them. He said the people of the province were entitled to the depletion allowances; their resources were being depleted. If there were to be depletion allowances, that is where they should go.

I wish to refer to what the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has said on many occasions in speeches in the House when referring to the export tax. He has repeatedly said that the revenue from the export tax should be returned to the province in which the resource originates, so that it could be put back in the form of exploration and development in that province and not be put into the coffers of the multinational corporations so that they can decide, if they wish, to go to Texas to do their exploration work because someone has given them a better deal than we have. That is what the Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan is doing. He is saying that for years the multinational corporations have taken their profits out of Saskatchewan and have not carried on exploration in the province. It is important that this exploration be carried on, not only for the people of the province but for the rest of the country. The premier is now saying that the windfall gains will in fact be used for further development. To do otherwise would be to turn the province over to the mercy of the multinational corporations which have no mercy. They have never forgiven Saskatchewan for being the first area of North America which saw the light and decided to act in the interest of its people rather than in the interest of the establishment.

That province challenged the structure of that society, and it needed a great deal of challenge. The multinational oil companies proceeded to buck that province on every occasion. If the province wanted to get a return to which it was entitled in the form of royalties or taxation, they said they would go to Alberta because Alberta would give them a better deal. They did roughly the same thing in British Columbia, but they ran into a pretty cool cat who raised the royalty 80 per cent and said to them that if they wanted to move out then that province would take the money and do its own exploring. The day of blackmailing provinces is over, as it should be over. It may not be over in all provinces, but it should be.

I want to go further into what the Premier of Saskatchewan said. He said that he understands the need for a two-price system in Canada, and recognizes there is a responsibility to treat the people in his own country somewhat differently than by extracting the world price from them. But he is also sensibly saying to the various jurisdictions and governments that although they are willing to do this, they have some grievances which must be recognized. He points out that the oil in the province will not last forever and that they will need to find other jobs for their people.

I think Saskatchewan has been doing quite well in terms of prosperity. The administration of the province has been good. I understand that agriculture has been coming along quite well but that a very severe problem is faced by Saskatchewan which will be faced by other provinces. While the prosperity may be there, this means bigger and bigger farms and more and more mechanization. It means the breaking down of small towns and the lowering of the population.

What sense does it make if Saskatchewan is on its way to becoming a rich province and does not have the population to sustain the basic infrastructure that is necessary? The Premier of Saskatchewan knows this. He is saying to the rest of us in Canada that they need industrial development—they need some but they are not looking to making it in southern Ontario—to sustain their cities and towns. It is more than just prosperity or revenue; it is a way to keep the sons and daughters of Saskatchewan at home and give them some opportunities, instead of their having reluctantly to leave because the prosperity which is being created and the jobs which are being created wind up somewhere outside of Toronto. That is sensible. He is asking for an adjustment in the transportation rates. I think that argument is highly exaggerated. I think when we get down to it we may find that the grievances are greatly exaggerated although in general they are deeply felt whether or not they are greatly exaggerated.

We should be sitting down with Saskatchewan to work out a new freight rate structure that the people there would consider fair. I think this can be done at relatively small cost. I believe it would be a price that the people of this country should pay and would be willing to pay if they are saying to Saskatchewan and to Alberta that they want lower prices for the resources in those provinces and want to be treated somewhat differently than those provinces are willing to treat foreigners. In such a case those provinces have a right to say, "Well, you treat me as though I am one of your own instead of a far-off brother or sister, and let us sit down and get some of these things worked out".

It seems to me that this statement of the Premier of Saskatchewan is very different from the kind of things we have been hearing from other sources. I think this is the kind of approach which we should grasp and the federal government should immediately start to meet with the people of Saskatchewan and begin working out these problems.

Then there is the question of farm price stability. We know that the sort of increases we have had in respect of farm prices have receded slightly. Food costs less now than it did a few months ago, and we have not had the kind of attitude that prevailed at that time. At the height of the food price increases the country would gladly have said to the farmer, "We will give you stability. Now keep the price from going up and up." The minute food prices start to drop, they forget about giving the farmer the stability he needs and the stability which every workingman wants and usually gets if he belongs to a trade union. Now is the time to start talking about farm price stability. This is what the Premier of Saskatchewan is saying. He does not want a boom and bust economy. I think they are entitled to an answer on this matter: it is one area with which we must deal.

I wish to go for a moment into an area which I love very much but with which I am afraid I am not too familiar. Recently I had an opportunity to visit Newfoundland and to talk to the minister of mines and resources there. The other day a brief came to my desk that said, "To all Newfoundland members and to Max Saltsman". So I assume that my visit gave me some sort of honorary status in that particular ministry.

The federal government has done a very bad job in developing the resources off the east coast. I do not want to go into a recital about how little we have given the land away for, or how little we have charged for acreage rights or drilling rights. The point is that the government has not co-operated. It is not a question of whether the share should be 50-50. I do not think the people on the east coast are really arguing the jurisdictional question; they are arguing the development question. The people on the east coast see an opportunity to improve their way of life, not just based on the royalties they will get from the oil but on the time it takes to develop it.

They want their universities to be given the jobs instead of, let us say, the engineering being sent to some place in Texas. They want the computer work to be done in their province—and they have the people who can do it—instead of being shipped off to New York for analysis. If there is a need for experts, it may take a little longer to train the people on the east coast because their familiarity with oil is recent; but they have shown their ability to be trained and they want their people trained. They want the rigs built there.

That is the value of development, not the fact that you will pull oil or gas out of the ocean and ship it somewhere else. That is valuable also, but it is rather similar to what John Maynard Keynes told Roosevelt with regard to ending the depression. He told him about deficit financing, and Roosevelt was a great advocate of a balanced budget during the 1930s. They say that Keynes was on his way back to England and Roosevelt said to him, "Surely you have something to say to us. You have been in this country for some while. What can we do?" Keynes said, "You know those abandoned coal mines in West Virginia? If you want to get rid of the depression, get together a number of tin cans, put a one dollar bill in each tin can and put them down at the bottom of the mine. Then hire many people who will fill up the mine and hire many people to dig out those dollar bills. When they get to the dollar bills, your depression will be over". That is a half-funny story with a great amount of truth attached to it.

In some ways the development of oil, the actual process, the training and the creation of facilities that goes on in the course of finding the oil, may do more for the development of the maritimes than the finding of the oil itself. This is the point, one that the federal government has been ignoring: the federal government should arrange meetings with the people of Newfoundland and people of Nova Scotia in order to come to a resolution of this matter.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Speaker, I see that my time is nearly up, and if you will restrain yourself for one moment may I conclude by thanking hon. members for listening to what I have had to say. I often enjoy interjections which provide me with an opportunity to exchange a few well-chosen or ill-chosen words with other hon. members. But this is one occasion on which I wanted to lay out what I think is a very hopeful program and a great opportunity for not only resolving the energy crisis in Canada, but also resolving many of the other difficulties that have been hanging-fire, in the process of doing something significant for the cause of confederation.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Verdun): Mr. Speaker, my first words are to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) for what I was going to say was an attempt to spread oil on troubled waters, but that is not an appropriate phrase at present. I might say that I hope his speech set the tone for the rest of the debate, which I think most of us want to come to an end because regardless of how we arrived at our problem, I think we all agree that there must be some system of allocation during the coming winter months to make sure that the people who need the oil we have will get priority in obtaining that oil, and not simply those of us who may have some access to the black market or some form of influence and in that way obtain priority to fuel oil to which the silent majority, particularly in the east of Canada, are entitled.

In essence, the allocation board concept is nothing more than simply to make certain that the supplies, if they have to be in short supply are allocated to the people who should have that type of priority, namely, the underprivileged, the under-employed, the people who need oil for heating, ahead of those people who want gasoline for pleasure driving.

Last night I heard a very thought-provoking speech by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). Although I did not agree with very much that he said, I was impressed by the manner in which he delivered it and by the very reasonable tone which he adopted which indicated that he understands the House of Commons and has the ability to make a point without becoming personal, which is, I hope, one of the characteristics of a good parliamentarian.

I think that the hon. member for Waterloo, in making his speech on national unity, at the same time quite astutely tried to rectify some of the impressions that may have been left by the Premier of Saskatchewan in his statement last evening. This is the way it should be, because those of us who have been around for 13 years know that in 1960, 1961 and 1962 this problem of national unity had a different connotation. At that time we were concerned with the question which the hon. member for Waterloo treated so eloquently, namely, the matter of national unity.

My role has been rather unique in the sense that I am one of a handful—a very small handful—of English-speaking members from the province of Quebec. We found ourselves in those days in the rather unique and sometimes lonely position of defending the federal point of view in the Quebec caucus and/or the Quebec point of view in the federal caucus all in the same morning. This is not the easiest role in the world for a member of parliament, nor has it been mine exclusively. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) is another member of parliament who in a way has always had one foot in each of the two solitudes that McLennan wrote about so eloquently more than 30 years ago.

It seems to me that what hurts Quebec members in this debate—in fact, not necessarily only in this debate; I say this in a spirit of friendship—is the constantly repeated charge that possibly Quebec members have sold out their province. Some hon. members opposite asked me during the lunch hour why this upsets Quebec members. "After all," they said, "it is a debate and we are only making political points". However, to be charged with selling-out the province has a particular connotation for a Quebec member that may not be quite apparent to people who do not come from that province.

For so many years those of us from Quebec, particularly the French-speaking members from Quebec who have sat in the House of Commons, have been charged with precisely the same thing, that they are selling-out the province. They have been charged with that by the separatist movement in Quebec. This rankles French-speaking Canadians who, despite the taunts of the separatists, chose to run for federal office, whether they were running for the NDP, for the Créditistes—as many of them have—for the Conservatives or for the Liberals. One thing we had in common is that we had all opted for federalism rather than separatism, and we did not think we were selling-out our province by standing in the House of Commons and endorsing the federal system, despite the fact that we had to stand this kind of abuse and vilification from the separatists in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mackasey: So the connotation that we sold-out our province in those days was related to something entirely different, but not so different. Frankly and bluntly, it was related to the fact that many French-speaking members in this House opted for federalism despite the fact that working conditions in 1962 and 1963 were entirely different. This was at a time when presidents of Crown corporations might have said there was no room on their directorships for French-speaking Canadians, with the implication that they did not have the necessary intelligence or knowledge.

We knew differently, and they knew differently. It was difficult for them, despite these unintentional insults, to remain faithful to federal principles at a time when the wave in Quebec was diametrically opposed. So they have a right to feel a little proud of themselves, and not only the Liberals but the French-speaking members of the Conservatives and the Créditistes. When the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, last week said that to all intents and purposes the separatist movement is on the wane and that the French Canadian population have opted for federalism, I would point out that it was due in no small part to the participation of Quebec members in the parliament of Canada. And when they are accused, in another context, of having sold-out their province on the energy policy, they get a little angry.

Really, Mr. Speaker, what have they done? Once again they have had to go back to their province and say, "For the sake of national unity and federalism we must accept this energy policy, even if it means that we pay more for our fuel oil this winter as compared with the rest of Canada, particularly west of the Ottawa Valley line. But once again we are prepared to make this compromise because above all we are Canadians first and Quebeckers second."

Of course, it is difficult for a member to go home to a riding in Quebec or the Maritimes and say, "Look; we have really had the best of it for many years." And, Mr. Speaker, we must not take anything away from the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) whose oil policy meant the development of oil reserves in the west. Without the captive market created by that policy, with cheap oil coming into the eastern provinces and filtering back into the western provinces, the oil industry in the western provinces could not have been developed. We understand that. We also understand how in 1969 the Conservatives recommended an extension of the pipeline to Montreal on the recommendation of Mr. Nichol, a former member of this House. It was not recommended because of any energy crisis that might arise; there was a desire to broaden the market for Alberta oil because of the quotas placed by the United States on the flow of oil from Alberta into the United States. This is logical and understandable. In other words, the time had arrived for it. The oil industry in Alberta had matured to the point where it could be competitive in supplying all the fuel oil needs for all of Canada and not just a part of it.

In other words, the protection provided to the oil industry in Alberta by the Ottawa Valley line was no longer necessary and people asked why oil from Alberta should not be exposed to a larger market. I agree with that concept. That is why there was agitation in those days to extend the pipeline. It was not because of concern that Quebec and the Atlantic provinces would be short of fuel, but in order to provide a larger market for Alberta oil which was restricted from flowing into the United States by the quotas set on the number of barrels that the United States would allow to be imported.

Earlier today the hon. member for Cambridge-Waterloo spoke very eloquently and with deep emotion, as he is quite capable of doing, being one of our better members. I may say that my participation in the debate the other evening was motivated by a discussion I had with a relatively new Canadian, someone who arrived here as a landed immigrant six or seven years ago and who has since taken out his citizenship papers. He has become a very wealthy businessman, and he appreciates this country more than most of us do. He talked about the fact that his business necessitated his travelling right across Canada. He talked about the magnificent coastline of British Columbia, which resembles the coastline of Norway. He talked about the tremendous experience he felt the first time he flew over the Rockies and saw the magnificent sight of that wonderful mountainscape. He talked about seeing the wheat in the prairie provinces just before harvest. He went on to talk about the industrial might and greatness of Ontario, and about the strange independence of the people in the Atlantic provinces.

He wanted to know why we did not protect our country better against assimilation. I was able to tell him that in reality we had done that. He was unaware of what we had done. I told him that because we had two official languages, and a wonderful culture in Quebec that was unique and different, these in themselves were protection against assimilation by our friendly neighbours in the United States. I told him that although we were exposed to U.S. television, magazines, radio and newspapers there was no way in which our magnificent culture would disappear, and as Toynbee once said, it would be the last, along with the Chinese people, to remain on the face of the earth. Mr. Speaker, there is no way that the French culture will ever disappear or be assimilated because of our proximity to the United States; and it should not, because that would be not only Quebec's loss but Canada's loss as well. It is one of our safeguards against assimilation by the English element in the United States.

I was able to explain to this relatively new Canadian that Canadians tend to have an inferiority complex and that we move very slowly. Other hon. members have commented on this. But it is significant that we have placed on the statute books legislation that for all time prevents our newspapers and magazine publications being sold to non-Canadians. I said that we had made it impossible for radio and television to be controlled by outside interests, and that we made it impossible for the banks, finance companies and other financial institutions to be controlled by non-Canadians. So, Mr. Speaker, slowly but surely we have protected ourselves. We have protected our Canadian identity. Now, suddenly, people in other countries are looking at Canada with a tremendous degree of envy and respect.

Just the other night there was an article in the Globe or the Montreal Star telling of Canadians who had left this country 10 or 15 years ago and who had returned for a visit. They expressed their amazement at the maturity of the country, not only at the joie de vivre of Montreal but also finally of Toronto, thanks to the new Canadians who made that once bland city more exciting.

Having said all that, Mr. Speaker, I do think that as politicians we tend to forget and underestimate the intelligence of the average Canadian, not only the man in the board room but the man who fishes out of a dory off the Atlantic provinces or Newfoundland, the man who goes into the coal mines in Cape Breton, the French-speaking Canadian who works in the woods, the iron worker at Blairmore, the man digging coal in the interior of Alberta, all of whom are not unaware that there is a serious problem. They seem a little more concerned about the energy problems than the normal problems we talk about daily in the House of Commons. We tend to forget that everything we consider a crisis is not a crisis 15 miles or 15 minutes away from the House of Commons. We become very disruptive and bitter in our exchanges, and periodically Canadians do pause and look at the House of Commons and wonder whether or not we are concerned about the vital things.

That is exactly what is happening in this energy issue. The people in the Atlantic provinces are concerned and fearful about whether they will have oil at all this winter, if the winter happens to last long or if events beyond our control take place, such as escalation of war in the Middle East. That is what this allocation bill is really all about. This is also true of the people of Quebec. Then there are the people who are most unfortunate, the working poor and the underprivileged who are worried about the price of oil even if it is available. They are looking to us in Ottawa for leadership.

Whether the NDP supported our policy or not, I can say that we would not have worried about an election on the energy issue in February. There would be no better issue for a government to go to the people on and to be able to reply, "We were forced into an election on the energy crisis by a majority in the House," when Canadians would ask, "Why aren't you in parliament looking after our problem, instead of running around the country trying to get re-elected?" This election would not have been a problem even if thousands would have been disenfranchised by blizzard or snow. Whether the New Democratic Party supported our energy policy or not was immaterial, because politically speaking it would have been a great issue for the Liberal Party to say they were forced to go to the country rather than stay in the House of Commons and do what they were elected to do some months ago—that is, look after the rights and problems not only of the people of the west or of Quebec but of all Canadians.

We Canadians are not particularly concerned about the constitution; indeed, many have never read the constitution. All they know is that there is something wrong with energy at the moment, that we are short of it; and they want to know if they are going to get it this winter and if they are going to be able to pay for it. This is the fundamental question that the House is seized with. Some might ask what this has to do with national unity. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we have waged one war in the last ten years in this House that was the stumblingblock to real unity in this country.

As I have said, we are different from Americans but we are not anti-American. I do not think anybody in this House would want anyone as a neighbour but the Americans, despite their problems. That does not mean to say that we want to be American, and being pro-Canadian does not necessarily mean that we are anti-American or anti-anyone. We have our own identity. We are a country that in a sense has developed the wrong direction—from west to east rather than from north to south. We have the problems of a vast country three or four thousand miles in length; we have regional differences and cultural differences. In this country transportation means as much as it does in Russia. But basically—and probably this confuses political scientists all over the world—we stay together.

There is something unique about the people who live in this country, and we want it to remain that way. Nobody wants to remain in Canada more than the people of Quebec. They have made that clear in this House and in the provincial election in a virtual referendum. They are saying, "If the price of remaining in Canada means we have to be a little more tolerant, a little more patient toward obtaining equality in the public service, equality in language, equality in job opportunities, if we have to wait a little longer for the rest of the country to understand that what we are asking for is not special advantage but equality in the areas where we are different, we are prepared to wait if it is the price of remaining in Canada."

Mr. Speaker, what has worried me in the last week has not been the attitude of Quebec; there has not been a flare-up over separatism which Premier Bourassa has said is fairly well controlled, and I think we all agree with that. It is not even because we have been accused of selling-out our province, which is an insult which I hope is never repeated by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who is a tolerant and decent man, or his lieutenant, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) who should know better. We have never sold-out our province on the question of federalism and we are not about to do it now. If we were to do that, we would be straining national unity because there is no answer to equality of fuel prices in this country without raising the price of fuel to the west. That is hardly a progressive policy and it is not one that we are asking for.

We are asking for two things, and I think the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge touched on them very eloquently. We are terrified at the growth of regionalism. It is one thing for the premier of a province to say, "This is our iron ore," if it is Quebec; "This is our potash," if it is Saskatchewan; "This is our oil," if it is Alberta; "This is ours under the constitution, but we are prepared to share it with other Canadians only if they are prepared to negotiate for what is ours". These minerals and resources are not the governments', not the premiers', but the minerals and resources of the people of Saskatchewan, the people of Alberta and the people of Quebec who are Canadians first and provincial residents second.

That has been the whole story of Canada for 100 years or more. If we had not been able to meet various crises, we would not be together today because naturally, geographically and in every other way, we should not be a country. It does not make sense economically. We get our satisfaction from the fact that we are a unique nation, a tolerant nation and one that has never had to kill in order to be a nation. These are the things that the average Canadian understands and appreciates, perhaps more than the politicians.

The threat to federalism and national unity, as I understand it, has virtually disappeared in so far as any problems are concerned about the role that French-speaking Canadians are to play in confederation. But there are new strains that should not be there—the strains caused by people who presume that they are speaking for everybody in their province when they say, "This is our energy, our mineral wealth, our iron ore and you can have a share provided you negotiate". This is the kind of talk you might get if you negotiated with the United States. But we are talking about Canadians negotiating with Canadians. If this were carried to its absurdity, we would not be a federal country; we would be a loose connection of ten different countries, some rich and some poor. This is not what we are looking for, a loose federation of ten states or countries. We are one country and we want to stay that way.

It is much more logical for the premiers of the provinces to say, "Look, we have a transportation problem and it is time, 100 years after confederation, that it was solved. "I can understand that. But in the next breath they say, "If you will not solve it, you will not get our oil." When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) describes that as blackmail, he is right.

An hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it was said. If I wanted to, I could cut that member down in about 35 seconds but I do not have the time to waste on him. If we are going to remain as a country, we do not want to remain as ten loose states very, very loosely joined together by some sentimentality. All of us have to, as they say in French, "Put a little water in the wine". The proof of this will come at the end of January when the premiers have a chance to sit down and discuss the problems common to all Canadians and to make this a better country in which to live. If that conciliatory attitude does not prevail, then we run the risk of balkanization. But Canadians in every province—the man I mentioned in Blairmore, the logger in French Canada, the industrial worker in Ontario, the fisherman in the Atlantic provinces and the enterpreneur in the Atlantic provinces—will tell their premiers, "You may stand for balkanization, but we do not. We stand for one country, and if necessary a strong central government in this particular area".

That is the threat to confederation at the moment, Mr. Speaker—people who have illusions of grandeur and do not represent the mandate under which they were elected. We on our side must not misunderstand our role either. Our role is to be the mediator between the provinces—the have provinces and the have-not provinces—so that the solution arrived at means that everybody gains. Private industry has a chance to prosper and get a decent return on its money and thus be encouraged further to develop. If it had not been encouraged in the past to develop and explore, we would not have the oil in Alberta now. There has to be a happy balance maintained between an honest return to private industry, a fair price to the Canadian people and an understanding of what federalism is all about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that the following communication has been received:

Ottawa, December 12, 1973

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the

Energy Supplies Emergency Act

Senate chamber today, December 12th, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Brigadier General
Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

The communication is addressed to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in hearing the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey). The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), who spoke earlier on this bill, suggested that this bill represents a gigantic intrusion upon the rights of private business which goes far beyond just control of oil companies. It will intrude upon the rights of paint companies, plastics companies and will control, possibly, even the Mississauga hydroelectric commission which serves my constituents. It constitutes a total invasion of the rights of almost all business as it is difficult to imagine any industry or occupation in which fuel or energy, to use the word now in vogue, is not required.

Sir, the only possible ground for emergency legislation such as this would be a real and serious emergency. I feel strongly that the alleged emergency is being created as a result of lack of leadership, lack of direction, and possibly has been induced, as the hon. member for Verdun suggested, to make many Canadians feel that there is a problem in this area. It is about time the government said that we have all the oil we can possibly use in this country and that the only problem in amount concerns delivery; that we have all the nuclear energy we need—indeed, mines are being closed down—until the next century; that we have so much coal we do not know what to do with it and are shipping it boatload by boatload to Japan at prices which do not really pay. There really is no shortage whatsoever of energy in this country. There may be a problem with regard to petroleum pricing and with regard to petroleum delivery, but that does not constitute a national emergency.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Sir, I suggest that there really are not great difficulties with regard to delivery of supply either. The minister has said that perhaps we will be short by 200,000 barrels of crude oil per day, at the maximum. Yet suddenly we find that Mr. Shaheen can come up with 100,000 barrels of product, that we can ship 85,000 barrels a day through the Panama Canal and that we can ship between 40,000 and 60,000 barrels per day, depending on what day's figures you use, by ship and train—

An hon. Member: Nuts.

Mr. Blenkarn: —to the Montreal market. It strikes me that the problem does not involve supply so much as price. Certain countries in the world are taking advantage of the Arab-Israeli war and attempting to get blackmarket prices for their product. We are big enough in Canada to handle that situation without emergency legislation which would give the minister and the governor in council, on the basis of a suspected difficulty, the right to engage in this iniquitous, gigantic interference which would involve the activities of almost all private businesses in this country.

When we grant War Measures Act-type priorities to a government we must be very careful. Earlier this year, when there was a railway strike, it took members about 48 hours to return to the House, to get down to business and solve that problem. Not long ago, when a certain country decided to embark on the DISC program, members of parliament were rushed to this place to handle that problem. We returned pretty quickly and debated that measure. We should give the government only those powers it needs to handle specific instances involving specific problems. Must we give it carte blanche power over every business in this country merely because the government says there might be an emergency? In any event, the emergency seems to relate to price, and only to price in certain parts of the country.

Speaking of prices, my party has advocated in this House an incomes policy which would attack our real difficulty, the monster inflation caused by a government that does not care. When it was suggested to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that the people of eastern Canada would not want a price freeze, he suggested they could freeze.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: We advocated a comprehensive policy to cover inflation. We will not get that, sir, merely by giving power to some board which happens to sit in Ottawa, which is to be made up of five nameless individuals who will have the right to dictate how private business and industry in this country shall be carried on. We shall encounter difficulties involving the auto pact. As shortages of petroleum will induce people not to buy so many cars, we shall encounter difficulties with our neighbour to the south. We ought to anticipate those difficulties. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) ought to go to the United States and head off those problems before they arise or before we are hit with United States emergency legislation or some change in the auto pact.

We might have difficulties with other trading partners. We might be concerned about dropping stock market prices and the feeling that perhaps business conditions in the United States, our greatest trading partner, will not be too good next year. But that is no reason for establishing an emergency energy allocation board. We need leadership. We need government assurance to the effect that, yes, there are some trading problems in the world and, yes, there will be some price problems, but Canada is self-sufficient in every conceivable form of energy right now. We need government assurance that energy has a top priority for Canadians, that we are going to use that energy to develop Canada for Canadians, and Canadians will not go short. We should be told that while Canadians may have to pay a little more in price, in some cases, that price increase can be mitigated by a government which is concerned about its people's problems.

● (1710)

One of our problems is that we have not yet determined an all-Canada oil policy. On September 4 the Prime Minister finally suggested a pipeline to Montreal. In this House, on December 6, he again talked about that pipeline. Today and last week in this House we asked about that pipeline. We want to know how big it will be. The government has not yet even determined where the right of way will be. Have they ordered any steel? Not on your life! We heard about possible discussions with the Interprovincial Pipeline company. There has not yet been an application to the National Energy Board to build the pipeline. The most basic preliminary work has not yet been done—and these fellows to my left voted for this government because they thought they had a national oil policy.

If the refineries are going to get organized, drilling is to begin and people are starting to work, there must be some incentive. One incentive to the oil industry must be a clear declaration that within a firmly limited period of time the Canadian oil industry will have a monopoly on sales in the Canadian market, that we are going to deliver Canadian oil to Canadians and we will at least have a base market for Canadian producers. That is one thing that had better be said soon. Can a company be expected to build a pipeline to Montreal today, ship oil there, and tomorrow when the world price drops find there is no market for what comes out of that pipeline? Of course you cannot expect that. That is why there is a problem in connection with who will finance the pipeline.

Would anyone finance a pipeline to cover a problem that will last a year or two, and then let the pipe-line rust? Under all conceivable circumstances surely we must build a pipeline that will solve the Canadian market problem, and that market should be assigned to Canadians. It is time we had such a leadership decision from this government. Unless we get leadership decisions, the problem will not be solved in terms of delivery.

We can tell people in Alberta not to turn on their lights. We can tell people in Saskatchewan not to drive their cars over 50 miles an hour. We can do what the province of Saskatchewan has done, namely, keep more oil in the ground for the reason they cannot sell it as it cannot be delivered. Isn't that intelligent? That is the kind of leadership we have been getting. That is one of the serious problems Canadians are facing.

I visited my constituency on the weekend. The people there wondered about this government. I, too, wonder about them. This bill not only controls petroleum but every other source of energy that is said to be a substitute for petroleum. It controls electricity, coal and nuclear energy. We have no shortages of those sources of energy at any point in this country. I do not know of any company that is short of coal and cannot buy all it wants. I know of no hydro power commission that is short of uranium and cannot buy all it wants. Indeed, we will be selling it to Japan for the next umpteen years.

I know of no problem in connection with natural gas. The information we have is that there is plenty of capacity in the pipeline for the delivery of that product. There is a pretty fair reserve of that product, yet this government insists on saying in this legislation that these other items of fuel are also to be controlled. When there is no conceivable shortage, no price problem and no delivery problem, how can the government have the audacity, unless it has much more on its mind, to even suggest that these alternate fuels be controlled?

I want to speak for a moment about pricing. For a number of years before coming here I was involved with Scout work. I remember running a camp in Muskoka for many years. The first time we went to that camp there was a lot of firewood around. As camp cook, it was very easy to chop down a tree and cut it up for firewood right on the spot. Not much energy was involved in that. However, after several years it was necessary to bring in firewood from about a mile away. That is very much like the situation in the oil industry. We have had cheap oil for a number of years. We probably have enough relatively cheap reserves to last us for the next ten years. We could do what the New Democratic Party suggests and freeze the price at the actual cost of production from these relatively cheap sources. We could have controlled cheap prices for Canadians for probably the next eight to ten years.

However, during that period there would be no research; no money would be spent in developing the heavy oils of Alberta and Saskatchewan; no money would be spent on the tar sands; no money would be spent elsewhere. The oil companies involved would have no incentive to go out and find high-cost oil. Their prices would have been frozen so they would make a profit on their present reserves. They would lose money if they explored and developed high-priced reserves because of the freeze. We must have a policy that encourages companies to develop these high-priced possibilities.

We may well need to have a situation where staged increases are allowed in all prices of oil products providing they are used in the course of developing further reserves. It may be we will have to use the only thing that business will understand, profit—and I see nothing wrong with that word—to allow most companies the freedom of movement to start developing new sources of supply, and on that basis perhaps be able to charge a little higher price at this time to encourage them.

One of the major concerns which I have is that the bill binds Her Majesty in the right of the Crown and, I suppose, binds the provinces. I can see no other reason for that clause in the bill. One of the questions raised here goes to the whole issue about which the hon. member for Verdun spoke. It is the question: What kind of Canada do we expect? Today I was ashamed to hear the Prime Minister say something in this House of Commons about the attitude of the members from Alberta toward bilingualism. I note, Mr. Speaker, that one Alberta member formerly occupied your chair as Speaker of this House. That member is fluent in both official languages.

● (1720)

I would remind the Prime Minister that many members from Alberta and, indeed, from other parts of Canada who, like myself, live in areas where very little French is spoken, are making such efforts as are possible to speak and understand both languages. For the Prime Minister, a man who should know better, a man who should be concerned about the unity of this country as a national leader, to make a comment of that kind shows an insensitivity which I deeply resent. I call attention to the speech which the right hon. gentleman made in Vancouver over the weekend in which he castigated the Premier of the province of Alberta. It has been suggested the Premier of Alberta acts like a sheik. We have seen other sheiks since then in this country.

I say the province of Alberta would be much better off today had it cut back production. The price of oil is going up, and perhaps Albertans should raise theirs and do something to make the rest of us feel the pinch. But hon. members opposite know as well as I do that far from taking action of this kind, Alberta has encouraged further production, further pumping of its wells. It has encouraged the shipment of more oil than is necessary for the British Columbia market so that tankers can be filled for delivery to the east coast of Canada, all at a time when the price of oil to the province has been frozen at approximately $4 a barrel.

If the Premier of Alberta were not a Canadian, if he were really operating in the interests of the multinational corporations, his first action would be to cut back production of oil in the province to last year's levels. He would ensure that any further deliveries were paid for at the full market price. And if there were a price freeze in this country, as there seems to be—and I will say more about that later—he would refuse to sell any more oil until that freeze had been lifted. But the Premier of Alberta is a Canadian first. He is the kind of person who, by his leadership in western Canada, will do a great deal to make this country one Canada. The attitude of the federal government in seeking to be divisive, in seeking to destroy the unity of Canada, can only be described as despicable.

Some time ago it was suggested there was a price freeze in this country with regard to oil. In fact there has never been a price freeze in connection with oil. What we see is a voluntary arrangement between the leading oil refineries to keep their prices within certain realistic limits: that is all. There is no freeze. There is nothing which would prevent Imperial Oil, for instance, raising its price in Toronto tomorrow. There is no legislation which would prevent such action. There is no incomes policy or prices and incomes board which determines what the retail price should be. It is true there is a tax which is supposed, indirectly, to keep the price of crude in Canada lower than the world price, but there is no certainty that this arrangement results, in fact, in lower prices for Canadian consumers.

On my way to Ottawa on Monday morning I was talking to a person from Detroit who happens to be organizing the world energy conference which is to take place in Detroit in September. I spoke to him casually about the price of gasoline. It turned out that in Ontario, in Mississauga, I am paying approximately the same price for gas as he is in Detroit. I wonder what is really happening. I suspect that in Detroit he is buying gasoline extracted from Canadian crude. I suspect, too, that he is burning gasoline in respect of which an export tax has been paid. But it seems to make no difference when it comes to what I have to pay for gasoline at my Imperial pump.

I wonder when the government is going to turn honest and apply a real price freeze at the retail level as part of a total incomes package which will, at least, attempt to halt the present rampant inflation and benefit consumers instead of clinging to a tax which, though supposed to be to the advantage of Canadians, does very little, if anything, to assist them. Advocates of the tax have suggested its purpose is to recapture windfall profits made by oil companies. We are dealing here with a most important matter. Surely, Canadians should receive the full world price for their oil; surely the price structure must be such as to enable Canadians to take advantage of the fact that they are Canadians by buying Canadian oil products at prices cheaper than world prices. This has been recognized both by the sheik from Saskatchewan and by Peter Lougheed, the Premier of Alberta.

I, too, am disturbed, as was the hon. member for Verdun, by the suggestion that a province could use its resources to bargain for other advantages through confederation. I thought this was a bad precedent. Nevertheless, the reason for this attitude is, I suggest, the way in which the government has treated the provinces in the past, not only in the energy field but in the transportation field and on the issue of industrial development. The government does not really care about those provinces. It has simply told them what it intends to do: it has operated on a principle of confrontation.

Mr. Speaker, in a situation like that, when one person declares unilaterally that he will tax the resources of your province, the next thing that happens is that the person who has been treated in this fashion acts, or reacts, in the same fashion. It is impossible to develop a spirit of community in Canada on the basis of the concept of two lawyers engaged in a lawsuit, or of two businessmen competing with each other at an auction. This whole atmosphere of confrontation in dominion-provincial relations is one which ought not to arise and did not arise before this Prime Minister became Liberal leader. This has been the climate over the past four years and it is about time it changed because it is not doing Canada any good.

● (1730)

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) suggested today in a question that this bill and the matter of the tax on resources be postponed until after the January 21 to 23 conference. I think that was a sensible suggestion. This bill and the tax have set in motion taxes and legislation by the provinces which to some extent, or perhaps completely, control these resources. So if we go ahead and pass this bill, at that conference table the Prime Minister will say to the provincial leaders," I will tell you what I am going to do. I am going to take over your resources."

That is no way to solve the problems of confederation. Heaven knows, this country, with its five separate regions and its economic differences, is hard enough to govern anyway; you certainly cannot govern it with confrontation, by tweaking noses and with no consultation. To pass this measure and the ways and means motion on the order paper, and not to have this conference, is to say, "This is what you are going to do boys. That is the way it is. We have taken over." If we do that we will have problems. Those problems will not just be in western Canada; they will be in eastern Canada, because no settlement has been made in respect of the claims by eastern Canada as to who has the right to give permits for drilling off the Atlantic shore, or who is entitled to the royalties. This whole question is compounding the problems of our nation, and we will not solve them by the Prime Minister writing to the premier and telling him what he is going to do, or by standing in this House stating policy and making tax announcements without consultation in respect of provincial resources.

I say to you, sir, and to this House that it is about time we got with it. We realize there is a lot of good will on the other side and that the premiers of the provinces which have petroleum are quite prepared to have this petroleum sold to all Canadians at one price, a price that is considerably lower than the world price.

An hon. Member: They don't have any choice.

Mr. Alexander: Where did you come from?

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you go back to bed.

Mr. Blenkarn: We are not going to solve these problems by confrontation. If we continue to tweak their noses, and continue to push the interests of central Canada against the resource provinces, we are not going to keep confederation together—and that is a pretty serious matter. Therefore, I suggest to this House that this bill be deferred. Let us stop the debate on it, adjourn the House and come back after that meeting. If there is urgency why can the meeting not be held a little earlier than January 21 or 23?

When we come to the question of this whole energy or supply problem and the development of a petrochemical resource industry, about which there is no problem right now, we have been told by environmentalists and everybody else that if we keep pumping out oil the way we are now, we will not have any. We have already been told that we have enough oil in the tar sands, which we have known about for 200 years, to last this country into the indefinite future. But those resources cannot be developed until we get rid of some red tape. Let me refer particularly to the Syncrude deal. The province of Alberta, together with private interests who know something about how to extract the oil from the tar sands, made an arrangement to split the profits. I know the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has said there will not be any profits and he is probably right. There probably will not be any profits until the machinery and the exploration costs are paid off. I understand that the oil sands company has lost $90 million so far, so there have not been any profits.

In any event, the province of Alberta and the Syncrude group have made arrangements to split the profits when there are some, instead of there being so many cents royalty per barrel. That is a pretty fair deal. But unless you get it out of the ground, put it in barrels or put it in a pipeline and make gasoline from it, it is not worth a darn. We have known about these tar sands for 200 years, but in their present state they do not represent money. You cannot put the tar sands in the bank any more than you can have money in terms of payroll taxes, sales taxes or corporation taxes to pay for some of the social legislation in respect of housing problems, crowding in cities and slums, and the rest of it, unless you get at this problem and use our resources for the betterment of Canadians. Oil in the ground does not do a thing for us any more than does the uranium in our closed-down uranium mines.

There is another matter we must consider. In respect of a petrochemical industry we must have a total industry. Here again we need leadership from the federal government. At the present time there are tariffs against our products going into the United States, and I have in mind plastics, resins and things such as garbage bags. The United States is happy to take our crude, but not too happy to take our other products unless they are subject to tariff. It is about time we had some leadership from the federal government to the extent that it should be said to the United States, "If you want our oil, you will also have to give us a pretty good deal in respect of tariffs, or indeed no tariffs at all on our petrochemical products." That is the kind of action we should have from the federal government.

We should have a federal government which understands that there are undeveloped parts of this country where people want jobs, and that those jobs can be created by using the commodity resources of this nation. With a world desperately short of oil and with a country which buys more oil from us than we in fact consume, why should we sell it as crude? Should we not be negotiating for the development of a petrochemical industry in this nation, particularly in the western provinces? It requires federal leadership to encourage the development of the oil resources of this country, but we have not heard a word from the Prime Minister as part of his oil policy in respect of that issue. I notice the time is getting on, but I should like to continue for a minute of two.

Mr. McKinley: You have three minutes yet.

Mr. Blenkarn: Oil companies in this country are pretty mobile outfits. I was quite interested the other night to hear on the national news that a Canadian oil company is exploring for oil in Viet Nam. I know that Canadian oil companies are exploring for oil in the United States and in the North Sea. One of our problems is to develop a business climate which will encourage these Canadian oil companies to come back to Canada to explore here. But what do we get from this government?

Mr. Paproski: Macdonald.

Mr. Blenkarn: That is what we get, Macdonald. We get the suggestion of an export tax that goes up and up, but we get no suggestion about a guaranteed market or less corporate taxes. We get uncertain policies and the concept of the government going into the oil business with a national oil company. You know, they are even going to drill. Really, what do we get out of this? I suggest we get confusion and uncertainty in the business community, particularly in the oil industry. They do not have to drill in Canada. There are great markets for oil in Europe. They can go to the South Seas and drill and take their money, their crews, their knowledge and technology out of Canada and away from us. This is no way to build Canada: it is the way to destroy it. This is the kind of policy we face with a government and an oil policy which is really an NPD policy.

• (1740)

I am told about all the enormous profits these large international oil companies make, so today I decided to look at the stock market because I figured that maybe that is the place to put one's money. I find in respect of that terrible company, Gulf Oil, with its rotten American president, that its stock was selling for $40.25 earlier this year and now, with this terrible emergency and with prices going up and up, it is down to $31.25. This is such an enormously big company that it pays a 70 cent dividend for a return on an investment of 2.15 per cent. The same kind of thing applies to Imperial Oil. It pays 2.14 per cent.

Sir, a lot of this stuff is verbiage that we get from this side which seems to control the other side. It is nonsense. If they are making too much money and this is the greatest place to be and to invest, I am shocked to see that their stocks have been dropping so much. I wonder how much of the stock is held by members of the New Democratic Party, because they have lots of talk but when it comes to working, producing and creating wealth in this country we do not get anything from them except national socialism. We also get the kind of legislation which has come from the government in the form of this bill. Sir, I notice it is just about the witching hour, so before I sit down I should like to read to you the kind of regulation and statute this is.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member. I am sure he was about to place on the record something all hon. members would like to hear, but in order to do so he would have to have the unanimous consent of the House because his time has expired. Even for one minute the hon. member requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

I do not think hon. members heard me very clearly. I inquired whether there was unanimous consent, and there did not appear to be. In order to be fair to the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Blenkarn) I will inquire again. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will assume there is consent.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House. I just wish to refer the House to page 10, subclause 2 of clause 16 which provides:

[Mr. Blenkarn.]

A regulation under this act may be conditional or unconditional, qualified or unqualified, and may be general or restricted to a specified area or a specified controlled product, a specified supplier or wholesale customer or a specified mediate or immediate use of a controlled product.

This is the kind of thing we must prevent. This really cannot be honest, worth-while legislation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VACANCY IN ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF BATTLE RIVER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Harry Kuntz, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Battle River, by decease. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we have heard in the last few minutes about jobs in Canada. I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that there are a great many jobs in this country that are dependent very directly on the oil and gas industry. Many of these jobs are concentrated in the province of Alberta. However, they are not restricted to the province of Alberta. The people employed in this industry are spread out right across Canada. This includes British Columbia, Newfoundland and Nova Scotia. As a total sum, 275,000 people are employed directly in this industry. In addition to this direct employment, there is a ripple effect which indirectly covers a considerable multiple of this basic figure.

Just this past week I had a call from a resident of the town of Inuvik who told me he was very concerned about the policies of this government. He was concerned about employment in the Inuvik area in the Mackenzie delta. His concern was that the native people, the Indians and Eskimos of that area, were very restless because they were concerned that with the backward policies of the government their jobs in that remote part of Canada would be adversely affected. So I say that jobs are very much a result of the oil industry and its exploration and development in this country.

Now, in respect of the comments we heard in the last few minutes concerning the prospect of filling a Montreal pipeline, really this question boils down very much to one of confidence in the country, because if we are to have oil to fill this pipeline later in this decade, and particularly in the eighties, we must have confidence on the part of the investors, we must recognize that it takes five to ten years to develop the oil reserves and that there is a very long lead time in the oil and gas business.

The question then is, what is our prospect of filling this Montreal line and indeed meeting Canadian needs over the longer period? In February of this year the National Energy Board presented to the standing committee a report entitled "The potential limitations of Canadian petroleum supplies". At that time they projected that the tar sands of Alberta would be producing 400,000 barrels a day by 1980. Last week, in answer to a question in the Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, a representative of the National Energy Board pointed out that the figure would now fall some 25 per cent short of that. In fact, I should correct the figure. It was 510,000 barrels a day according to the National Energy Board last February, and now they are saying there will be a 25 per cent shortfall on that figure. This particular report also said that by 1980 there would be 293,000 barrels a day of oil flowing from the Mackenzie delta. This will increase substantially, in the order of 50,000 barrels a day each successive year. They also projected that the western provinces of Canada would be producing, at that time, 1,954,000 barrels a day.

● (1750)

We have already been told that the tar sands at present can be projected to fall 25 per cent short of the estimate. That was as recently as last February. The 293,000 barrels a day from the Mackenzie delta is pure fantasy. This is a very popular word these days because we are getting so much fantasy from this government. I think the minister will admit that that is fantasy. As for the production from the western provinces, which is so critical, as pointed out in the report of the National Energy Board where it is stated that that is the principal source of supplies in the foreseeable future—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They've come for you.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

● (1800)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-224, an act to amend the Canada Pension Plan (No. 2)—chapter 41.

Bill C-228, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—chapter 42.

Bill C-232, an act respecting the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act—chapter 43.

Bill C-211, an act to provide for the payment of family allowances in respect of children to supplement the income of Canadian families and for the payment of special allowances to provide for the care and maintenance of other children, and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof—chapter 44.

Bill C-233, an act to amend the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1972, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Revision Act, 1964 and the Income Tax Act—chapter 45.

Bill C-132, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons and of the establishment of new businesses in Canada by certain persons—chapter 46.

At 6.06 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

BANK ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING LOANS FOR HOUSING AND MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-240, to amend the Bank Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this and the next four bills is to make the relevant change in the Bank Act, the Loan Companies Act, the Trust Companies Act, the National Housing Act and the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act to make it possible, indeed, mandatory for the government to put mortgage money out at a maximum interest rate of 6 per cent. It seems to me that this would go a long way toward making housing available to the vast majority of the people who can no longer afford it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING MAXIMUM INTEREST RATE ON RESIDENCE LOANS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-241, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act (residential mortgages).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Broadbent: I will not repeat the explanation for this bill. The same sensible and logical reasons prevail for this one as for the others.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ENERGY

OIL—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO ASSIST PEOPLE OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES TO MEET HIGHER PRICES THIS WINTER—STUDY OF REGIONAL IMPACT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact the Prime Minister, having been asked yesterday what the government was going to do to help lower income Canadians in the Atlantic provinces to deal with higher petroleum prices this winter, suggested that the only solution was to stop buying oil if the price became too high, I would like to ask the minister today whether the government has any more realistic proposal to put forward to provide some sort of remedy for the problems these people face this winter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I recall, the Prime Minister referred previously in the House to a number of measures that have been taken under the Canada Assistance Plan and in relation to other programs which should put additional funds into the hands of those who need them most in that part of the country. In addition, the Prime Minister in his remarks a week ago today indicated that the question of disparity in prices and relief to those who need relief would be one of the questions that would be put before the federal-provincial conference.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my impression was that the Prime Minister indicated it might be necessary to do more than is being done to help those on low incomes. In view of the fact that unemployment and inflation are already at severe levels in Quebec and the Atlantic provinces, can the minister indicate whether the government proposes to take specific measures with regard to this problem of very sharply escalating crude oil costs and petroleum product prices in the Atlantic provinces? What specific measures is the minister prepared to indicate that the government is prepared to put before the conference of first ministers?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to indicate that today.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister or to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the House was told by the Prime Minister on November 20 that the government was studying the effect the energy situation would have on the economy, and the regional impact of these increases in particular, can the Acting Prime Minister, or the Prime Minister for that matter or, indeed, any minister indicate whether this study of the regional economic impact of higher petroleum prices had been completed before the two-Canada pricing policy was announced by the Prime Minister last week and, if so, when is the government going to indicate to the House what this study has reported and contains?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce have indicated that there have been assessments under way in their departments with regard to the possible impact of increased international prices and, indeed, of increased international shortages on the economy. These assessments have been under way, and I gather are still under full consideration.

OIL—DIVISION OF PROCEEDS FROM EXPORT TAX

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to clarify an answer he gave yesterday as reported on page 8676 of Hansard since it seems to differ to some extent from previous answers he has given. Do I understand him correctly that the division of the proceeds of the export tax will be as follows: 50 per cent of the moneys collected will be paid to the provinces in lieu of the royalties they have foregone and the other 50 per cent will be used by the federal government to invest in the development of oil resources in the oil producing provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it was actually energy resources in the provinces that produce oil, and this would not necessarily be confined to oil alone. It would depend on the option of the province in particular.

Mr. Douglas: There is one point I would like to have clarified. Yesterday the minister said, "the federal government would then invest the balance of the tax in the producing provinces." Will all of the 50 per cent the federal government is going to collect be spent in the oil producing provinces or does this apply to all provinces using energy—electric power and so on?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, sir. It is with regard to the oil producing provinces alone. In other words, a province which at the moment does not have production could not expect to receive any part of this sum by way of federal investment in energy resources.

DOMESTIC CRUDE OIL—DISCUSSIONS WITH ALBERTA ON MAINTENANCE OF PRICE AND SECURING OF AGREEMENT BY OIL COMPANIES

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. The Prime Minister said on December 6 that the government "will, therefore, undertake new discussions with the government of Alberta and with the oil companies to secure their agreement to maintain the price of domestically produced oil." Will the minister say whether these discussions have taken place with the province of Alberta and whether the government has secured agreement from the oil companies to maintain the present price levels on crude oil?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the oil companies, there has not been universal agreement. Some companies have indicated they would like to come and discuss the full implications of the request. With regard to Alberta, I think it is fair to say there is not agreement at the moment by that province.

Mr. Bawden: Have any discussions taken place on this question with the province of Alberta since December 6?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have been involved in the House and I personally have not been able to pursue this question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are a number of members seeking supplementaries, the hon. member for Athabasca, the hon. member for Dauphin and others. Perhaps we might complete the first round of questions and return to supplementaries immediately thereafter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEGREE OF CONSULTATION BETWEEN CANADA AND EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I have not had a chance to obtain a copy of the communiqué he tabled as it was not yet available. I should like to ask the minister whether the report that there was some agreement on an informal, unstructured basis or something or other regarding consultation between Canada and the European Economic Community makes any change whatsoever in the status quo in relations between Canada and the European Economic Community? Was there any advance from what we have had until now?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have received suggestions from the European Economic Community that they would be prepared to issue a declaration dealing with economic relations between Canada and the community. We have said that in principle we are interested, and we are having discussions along these lines. We have also been able to make some informal arrangements for consultation, so I believe we are making advances on both fronts.

Mr. Lewis: I understand that one of the objectives of the government was to have a representative of the European Economic Community in Ottawa so that there could be direct relations between our government and the community. I understand also that so far this has not been agreed to by the community. Under these circumstances, is the community taking the position that their ambassador or representative in Washington is also assigned to Canada, or is there further discussion about a representative in Ottawa?

Mr. Sharp: The hon. gentleman will remember that we have established a mission to the community. For the time being our ambassador to the community is the main link between the community and Canada. I also suggested to the commissioner responsible for international affairs, Sir Christopher Soames, that the Community should reciprocate by establishing an office in Canada. This is under consideration.

● (1420)

Mr. Lewis: In view of the obvious importance of the trade relationship between Canada and the European Economic Community, and as the minister emphasized in a recent statement to the Canadian Institute of International Affairs that the European Economic Community is by far our second largest trading partner, would the minister indicate what obstacles there are in the way of a direct representative from Brussels to Canada and a more formal arrangement for relations between ourselves and the community? What are the obstacles that stand in the way?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there is no obstacle, of course, to formal arrangements since we have an ambassador accredited to the community. I repeat what I said before. This is the main link that we have with the community at the moment. We have been urging upon the community a reciprocal arrangement under which they would have an office in Ottawa. I understand that, like so many other things, it is financial considerations among others that stand in the way.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—AVAILABILITY OF ADDITIONAL FUNDS

Mr. Jean-Marie Boisvert (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since cutbacks in the LIP budget for most ridings are as unexplainable in view of unemployment as the delay in announcing their official acceptance, does the minister intend to increase estimates in the ridings?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that matter has been considered by myself and my colleagues. In light of all the other demands upon the government in the fiscal framework, it has been decided not to make a further allocation available to the Local Initiatives Program for this winter.

[Translation]

Mr. Boisvert: Mr. Speaker, can the minister indicate whether there are political reasons behind the non priority classification of some projects, like six out of 17 day care centres in Montreal?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will agree that his question, asked in those terms, is not in keeping with our Standing Orders and is therefore out of order. However, the hon. member may wish to rephrase his question.

Mr. Allard: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rimouski.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF CERTAIN PROJECTS

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Is the minister prepared to advise the House of the date on which certain projects will be announced for the Quebec ridings where they have not yet been announced, while others for a number of ridings with Liberal MPs have already been announced on TV?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe there are just as many projects for Liberals that are not announced as there are for members of other parties that have not been announced.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might return to the subject of the first question. I will see the hon. member for Don Valley after we have had a few supplementaries to the question asked originally by the Leader of the Opposition.

ENERGY

OIL—METHOD OF DISPOSING OF PORTION OF EXPORT TAX PROCEEDS TO BE USED FOR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Could he clarify a bit further the form that the 50 per cent of the export tax to be used for investment in the producing provinces will take? Can he indicate whether the money will be appropriated to the national petroleum corporation that the government intends to set up or will it be given directly to the provincial government if it should come up with some kind of development project, or is it the intention to allocate the money to private industry if it indicates a desire to explore for or develop energy products of some sort?

[Mr. Andras.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, very likely it would be appropriated to the national petroleum corporation, although there might be other federal entities, for example, Eldorado Nuclear, which might have the benefit of this.

OIL EXPORT TAX—PORTION OF PROCEEDS TO BE PAID TO PRODUCING PROVINCES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is it the intention of the government to see that the provinces that produce the oil resource will continue to receive any money obtained under any form of mechanism by the federal treasury wholly or in part under the proposed formula? What I am saying is this. As the world market for crude oil appears to be increasing in price, under any mechanism which applies to our exports of crude petroleum to the United States and other countries, if any, will the export tax or charge, being the amount representing the differential between the frozen price and the world price, payable to the federal government be paid to the province wholly or in part that produces the resources in question?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman is specifically referring to the export charge, the manner of the division of that charge will, of course be subject to discussion at the federal-provincial conference. With regard to the export tax, as the hon. member will see from the motion, that will be available in the terms which I have described a number of times in the House.

REQUEST THAT OIL PROBLEMS NOT BE DEALT WITH UNTIL FIRST MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In light of the fact there are many problems in reference to energy, particularly crude petroleum, one example being that Saskatchewan has set up a mechanism whereby it will take 100 per cent of the tax, which will of course cost the consumers of Ontario and other users of that crude petroleum a considerable amount more than if the oil had come from the province of Alberta, will the minister agree, because of these economic problems and the energy crisis as it exists due to transportation, that all these problems should be left to be worked out at the first ministers' conference so there will be uniformity across the board and equity and fairness to all provinces?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the export tax, it seems to me that the policy is clear. I think parliament should go ahead and enact the authority to collect the tax and redistribute it as I indicated. With regard to the emergency allocation of supplies, this is something that should be dealt with at an early date in case of prejudice to consumers in the eastern part of the Canadian market that may occur.

Mr. Speaker: I see the hon. member for Don Valley, but perhaps I should have allowed the hon. member for Athabasca a further supplementary. After that I will recognize the hon. member for Don Valley.

OIL EXPORT TAX—AVAILABILITY TO PROVINCES OF PROCEEDS TO BE USED FOR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As the minister indicated the tax will most likely be given to the national petroleum corporation, does this mean the corporation will be restricted to this field of activity in Alberta and to some extent Saskatchewan, or how will he ensure that this money will indeed go to those provinces if given to that corporation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, these funds will be available, probably through that corporation or other federal entities, for that purpose in those provinces. Of course, there will be substantial additional funds available to the corporation for its operations elsewhere.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INFLATION—POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER ACTION IN TERMS OF MONETARY, FISCAL AND EXCHANGE POLICIES TO EXERCISE CONTROL

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is really to get clarification of some of the answers the minister has given in the past few days. Is it the position of the government at the present time that nothing can be done to ameliorate the rapid rate of inflation we are experiencing in the country through adjustments in monetary exchange and fiscal policies, which have been the traditional tools for dealing with this problem?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gillies: If that is the case, can the minister please explain to the House why the government is not doing something to ameliorate inflation through adjustments in the monetary, fiscal and exchange rate policies?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to explain to the hon. member on several occasions. It is.

Mr. Gillies: If that is the case, given the fact we have so much uncertainty in Canada's economy at the present time, as represented by the changes in stock market prices and new forecasts going on all over the country, will the minister undertake to make a statement in the House before the recess indicating what in fact the monetary, fiscal and exchange policies of this country are at the present time?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if there is an appropriate opportunity I will be pleased to do that in the House. The hon. member can look at past debates. He has had an accounting on a regular basis when opportunities in the House allowed. He just has to read those speeches again.

POSITION OF MINISTER RESPECTING GROWTH

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of forecasts of most western nations that economic activity will be reduced, is the minister still confident the Canadian economy will continue to grow at his previous forecast rate in view of the petroleum shortage?

● (1430)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that the potential energy shortage may have some negative effect not only on the growth of the Canadian economy but also on other major industrial economies, but at the moment there is no way of knowing the extent of the effect because there is no way of predicting in economic terms what the extent of the shortfall will be. The threat to the economy should not be minimized but, on the other hand, it should not be exaggerated, because the situation is still volatile. I have already said, and I repeat, that conservation directed toward the use of petroleum by individuals and by industry could be practised in such a way as to minimize the effect on the economy. I repeat that the underlying strength of the economy is still good, based on the potential of very heavy capital investment.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, can the minister identify any sectors that might be adversely affected?

INDUSTRY

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT—REASONS FOR CANADIAN DEFICIT—INVESTMENT BY COMPANIES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Considering that the deficit reported yesterday in Canada-United States auto trade amounted to $129 million, representing a turn around over the same period from last year of over $300 million in favour of the United States, can the minister inform the House what reasons his department has found for this deficit and what he intends to do to correct it?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yesterday my parliamentary secretary answered a somewhat similar question, pointing out that the main reason was the unprecedented growth of demand in Canada, something like 31 per cent over the same period a year ago compared with a growth figure of 16 per cent in the United States. A secondary reason is that there has been a particularly heavy growth in the sale of commercial vehicles in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that this increase in Canadian demand for North American cars should be reflected in the purchase of cars produced in Canada rather than in the United States, the minister's answer would appear nonsensical. May I ask the hon. gentleman, keeping this in mind, what he is doing to change the pattern of investment in the auto industry, 95 per cent of which has taken place in the United States in the last two years?

Mr. Gillespie: On previous occasions I have indicated we are following a regular and continuing process of consultation with the presidents of the automobile manufacturing firms in Canada. One of the points I have raised with the presidents is precisely the point just raised by the hon. member—the need for new investment in Canada. For this reason I was particularly happy this morning when the Chrysler Corporation announced a major new plant facility for the production of commercial vehicles in Windsor.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POLICY RESPECTING ISRAEL AND ARAB STATES

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. It arises from the continued effort by Arab oil producing states to force their demands on Israel by refusing oil to nations considered sympathetic to the State of Israel, even though such nations may desire friendship with the Arab states. Can the minister advise us whether this situation has in any way caused Canada to change its position with regard to either Israel or the Arab oil producing states?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The answer to that question is no. There has been no change in the policy of the government, since I spoke in the House on October 16, as a result of pressure by the Arab states or otherwise.

Mr. Fraser: Can the minister assure the House that, while recognizing there are differences that must be settled between Israel and the Arab states, Canada continues unequivocally to support the right of Israel to exist within secure and recognized boundaries?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The right of Israel to exist within secure and recognized boundaries is fundamental to the policy of Canada in the Middle East.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—REPRESENTATIONS TO COMPANIES TO HOLD DOWN PRICES IN ORDER TO COMPETE WITH IMPORTS

Mr. Terry O'Connor (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce supplementary to a previous question. In view of the fact that the comparable deficit figures for foreign imports other than United States cars under the auto pact show a deficit of $373 million for the first nine months of this year, has the minister considered approaching the car companies with a view to holding down prices as he did last year so that North American cars will be in a better position to compete with offshore imports?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): May I say first of all as far as the deficit is concerned that one can expect there will be fluctuations from year to year; sometimes they will be in our favour and sometimes not. A second point, and one which I think is very important, is that the commitment I obtained from the automobile companies just about a year ago pertained not only to the 1973 models but to the 1974 models. I would expect the automobile companies to honour that undertaking, that is, that any price increases which take place in Canada will narrow the price gap.

Mr. O'Connor: Can the minister tell us whether a date has been set for resumption of negotiations with the United States on the auto pact, which have been delayed from time to time over the past year?

Mr. Gillespie: We are prepared to meet with the United States authorities at any time.

Mr. O'Connor: The answer is no, then.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT IN DECISION BY CHRYSLER TO CONSTRUCT NEW TRUCK PLANT

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It arises from the welcome announcement by Chrysler this morning—

Mr. Bell: Stick to wiretapping.

Mr. MacGuigan: —of a new manufacturing plant for light trucks in Windsor. In light of the fact the press announcement referred to the requirement of the production-sales ratio under the auto pact, can the minister advise the House what role he or his department played in bringing about this desirable decision?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please, I would think that to do this the minister would have to revert to motions.

Mr. Bell: It was force majeure.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ABILITY OF COMMISSION TO REMAIN WITHIN HEADQUARTERS BUDGET FOR 1973

Mr. Bill Frank (Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Having regard to the fact the Unemployment Insurance Commission headquarters budget has increased from $6 million in 1972 to $17 million in 1973—the figures are for the first six months of these years—can the minister tell the House whether he expects this alarming acceleration to continue for the balance of this year?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have indicated that the Unemployment Insurance Commission, both headquarters and field operations, will meet the budget which was discussed and placed before the main estimates committee early this spring.

Mr. Frank: I am not sure I understand what the minister means. Would he inform us whether headquarters costs have increased in comparison with last year and, if so, by approximately what percentage?

Mr. Andras: I cannot give the hon. member the percentage. All that detail was available to the committee and to all members who attended the committee this spring when the estimates were considered.

REPORTED OPPOSITION TO INCREASE IN PREMIUMS—POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to a poll which was reported in the Toronto Sun of November 30. Some 4,779 people were canvassed and the result indicated that 98.3 per cent of them felt that the recent 40 per cent increase in premiums was unjustified and 95 per cent of those polled believe there should be an inquiry into the whole workings of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. Does the minister believe these figures are serious enough for him to bring in amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act, as requested by his colleague, the Minister of the Environment?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): There have been two or three very interesting polls in the last few days, as a matter of fact—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andras: —and these may be giving rise to some of the anxiety shown by hon. members on certain other matters. But the answer is no different from the information I have given in the House in the last several days, which is that the whole question of the Unemployment Insurance Commission, its budgets and the benefits paid will in the ordinary course of events be before hon. members when our main estimates are placed before the House.

Mr. Alexander: Having regard to the anxiety felt by many Canadians, and expressed by the people of the city of Toronto, surely the minister is not saying now that we must wait until February or March of 1974?

URBAN AFFAIRS

OTTAWA-CARLETON—POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS ON VANIER ARTERIAL ROAD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Could the hon. minister tell the House whether the negotiations between the National Capital Commission, the Ottawa-Carleton regional municipality and the City of Vanier concerning the Vanier arterial have been concluded and whether this road will be more like a drive than like a highway?

[English]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bell: Order paper.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister might reply briefly to the question. I am sure the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier appreciates that, so far as the second part of the question is concerned, it is the kind of question that should be placed on the order paper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply briefly to the first part of the hon. member's question, after which I will see the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, last spring I refused to allow NCC property to be used for the Vanier arterial, which was then designed as a speedway. Negotiations have been going on ever since and I am now prepared to recommend to my colleagues use of the NCC property for development to NCC standards of a four lane parkway for the Vanier arterial which meets the satisfaction of the city of Vanier and residents of the Edinburgh district. I appreciate the help and support that my hon. friend—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ROLE OF CANADA IN DECISION-MAKING PROCESS WITHIN NATO

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at the recent NATO conference to the effect that all NATO members must be accorded equal status in the decision-making process, would the minister outline to the House just how long Canada expects to be able to maintain that position for this country in view of the fact that following our cutback of 50 per cent of our commitment five years ago the Minister of National Defence just recently announced that there was no intention of replacing the worn out and obsolete tanks which were supposed to be the main component of our contribution in Europe?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will answer briefly. The position I took in the NATO council on the equality issue was supported by many of our friends, and I suspect that we will continue to be a very welcome member of NATO indefinitely.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I owe it to hon. members to mention that there are only a very few minutes left before the end of the question period and there are still a number of distinguished members who are not frontbenchers waiting for a chance to ask questions.

Mr. Hees: In view of the very severe cutback that Canada has made in its military commitment to NATO, is it government policy that in the eventuality that armed conflict breaks out in Europe at some time in the future it will be Canada's policy to fight to the last American?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

SOCIAL SECURITY

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—TAXABILITY OF PAYMENTS UNDER QUEBEC PLAN

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the noise, I understand that you have recognized me. I should like to direct a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since the government of Quebec has decided to implement its own family allowance plan, that apparently the rates will vary from $3 to $9 according to the number of children in the family and that youngsters from 12 to 17 will receive a supplementary allowance of $5 a month, can the minister tell us whether the family allowances paid in Quebec will be considered as taxable earnings by the federal government, like the allowances paid by Quebec itself?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I believe I have already answered that question. Since Quebec has cancelled children exemptions for income tax purposes, it was decided that allowances paid by the provincial government to children living in that province would naturally not be subject to federal income tax.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the confusion in another field, will the federal government contribute financially to the payment of family allowances as instituted in Quebec, and if so, to what extent?

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Lalonde: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The amounts earmarked by Quebec to that end will come out of Quebec's own funds. The money paid by the federal to Quebec will be exactly the same as that paid to all the other provinces, that is an average of $20 a month for every child.

CANALS

PLANS FOR BUILDING NEW WELLAND SHIP CANAL

Mr. Trevor Morgan (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question was originally going to be addressed to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will direct it to the Acting Prime Minister since it involves some matters dealing with external affairs. In view of the fact that millions of dollars have been spent on expropriating some of the most valuable farmland in the Niagara region supposedly for a new Welland canal, and in view of the fact the United States Corps of Engineers has made a report to the U.S. government to the effect that unless an enlarged seaway is developed by Canada before 1980 they will do it on their own, what plans does the government have, if any, to build a new Welland ship canal and to enlarge the dockage and the flow of ships? If the government has no plans, why not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a report or statement which I suggest to the hon. member very respectfully, ought to be made on motions.

Mr. Morgan: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

ENERGY

ORDER STOPPING EXPORT OF MEDIUM CRUDE OIL FROM SASKATCHEWAN TO UNITED STATES—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister received any objections from producers of medium crude in southwestern and southeastern Saskatchewan against the order stopping their exports of medium crude to the United States?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe I would be correct in saying yes. The decision, of course, was that of the National Energy Board. I have contacted the board for their advice in this regard.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I ask another question for information. In view of the fact Saskatchewan has no refinery capacity to handle this medium crude, would the minister consult with the National Energy Board and see whether they would give reconsideration to this order?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, sir, I will be glad to do so.

GRAIN

FEED GRAIN—INQUIRY WHETHER MINISTER WILL ATTEND MEETING ON PROVISION OF SUPPLIES TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I ask a question of the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the statement by Mr. Dernier, vice-chairman of the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, that there is only ten days' supply of feed grain on hand in eastern Canadian positions, is the minister going to comply with the request that the Canadian Wheat Board, the grains group in Ottawa and the railways meet with the Federation of Agriculture in Moncton to discuss this situation, and is the minister himself going to attend that meeting?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the decision to have such a meeting was partly that of the grains group as well as the Canadian Livestock Feed Board, and I anticipate that the others who have been invited to attend will be at the meeting. I anticipate that the meeting will proceed at the official level.

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have about come to the end of the question period. Perhaps the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar might be allowed a supplementary, and then I will see the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and the Leader of the Opposition before calling orders of the day.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact these same people have made the statement that the shortage of boxcars is desperate, and in view of the repeated assurances by the minister in charge of the Wheat Board and the Minister of Transport that they have a commitment from the railways to move adequate amounts of grain, can the minister say when either he or the Minister of Transport will make a definitive statement to the House in regard to how this is going to be done, instead of just passing the buck?

• (1450)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member, I am sure unintentionally, has once again misstated the exact nature of the commitment which was to supply a basic number of cars for the movement of grain. The railways have been responding to the urgent requests from the people who require grain and have been meeting special needs as they arise. It is, of course, a difficult situation as long as the backlog which has occurred in this country is not made up and as long as there is tremendous pressure on the railways to move many other products. But within those difficult circumstances every effort is being made to ensure that the most urgently required supplies arrive.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rather take exception to the minister saying I am making a misstatement of the facts either intentionally or unintentionally when anyone who reads the record of the questions and answers in this House knows there is a shortage of transport.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recognizes the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR REDUCTION OF OBLIGATORY SERVICE PERIOD FOR ROTP PILOTS IN LIGHT OF VACANCIES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the recently announced cross-country advertising campaign by the Canadian Armed Forces to fill vacancies, and in particular because of the shortage of aircrew in the Canadian Armed Forces, why was the period of obligatory service required of ROTP pilots reduced so that they now have to serve only five years from date of commissioning?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would need to make inquiry into the detail in order to be able to reply to the hon. member.

Mr. McKenzie: Why was the period of obligatory service not similarly reduced for direct entry officers who joined after graduating from university at their own expense whereas the ROTP officers received their university education at public expense?

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

ENERGY

OIL—POSITION OF SASKATCHEWAN ON MAINTENANCE OF PRICE FREEZE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the indication that the government of Saskatchewan will impose a tax of $2.20, I believe, on each barrel of oil leaving the province, whether or not it is going to other parts of Canada, has the minister received any assurance from the government of Saskatchewan that the freeze will be maintained beyond December 31 on oil leaving Saskatchewan? Has the minister been in touch with the government of Saskatchewan about that?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we have not received a copy of the legislation but we would intend to have it at an early date and form an opinion upon the proposed legislation, following which undoubtedly we will be in touch with the Saskatchewan government.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I will first recognize the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell) who is rising on a point of order and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the usual question. Can the government House leader tell us what the business is to be up to and including Christmas?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, my plan had been to clear a number of the remaining bills before suggesting an adjournment or prorogation. These include the oil allocation bill, the bill in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) which is to be given first reading tomorrow, and the election expenses bill. It would be desirable if we could complete all these by the end of next week. I certainly would be agreeable to a suggestion concerning additional hours and days of sitting between now and the end of next week.

ENERGY

EXPORT OF OIL BY GOLDEN EAGLE CANADA LIMITED TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, my point of order could probably have been raised through a question in a few moments, but I have just received a report.

I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) to a report published in the newspaper La Presse that Golden Eagle Canada Limited of Saint-Romuald continues to export oil to the United States at the rate of 2.5 million barrels. Is the minister aware of that situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue will admit, I am sure, that this is not a point of order, but with the consent of the House the minister might perhaps answer briefly the hon. member's question. And then I shall have to call orders of the day.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is with a permit issued by the National Energy Board that such exports may be made. I believe a certain type of oil products produced by the Golden Eagle Canada Limited refinery are surplus to Canada's needs. At the present time the Quebec market cannot absorb all these products, which is why this permit has been granted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That seems to dispose of the point of order.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Atkey: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I wonder whether the government House leader would indicate when the government intends to bring on Bill C-176, the protection of privacy bill, which today was referred back to the House by a vote of the Senate Committee on Justice and Constitutional Affairs with an amendment to delete the notice provision.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the bill has come back. If it does it will be added to the list I have already mentioned.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I have a similar point of order dealing with the business of the House. I want to ask the government House leader this question. In view of the fact the Minister of Justice appeared before the judicial committee of the other place and apparently persuaded the other place to flout the will of the House, or at least return the bill for reconsideration, is that bill still considered a priority measure and will the Minister of Justice be given another opportunity in this House?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether that is a point of order. The hon. member rises on a question of privilege. It seems to me that hon. members—I have taken the liberty to mention this before—from time to time use points of order to ask questions that might have been asked during the question period. I appreciate that some hon. members were not recognized and did not have an opportunity to ask questions, but these are not points of order. No member has referred me to a citation or to a Standing Order in relation to the alleged point of order. The Minister of Justice on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a matter of privilege since the hon. member has suggested I have in some way flouted the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: As usual, hon. members opposite, in complete ignorance of the facts applaud. The fact of the matter is that I made very clear in the other place that I hoped they would not in any way change the bill because of my strong desire to see the bill pass into law as fast as possible and my concern that it might be delayed as a result of an amendment. Whatever my view of the particular amendment was, I made that clear and did in no way flout the will of the House. I would ask the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, to apologize.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat. This whole matter arose, out of a point of order which I ruled was hardly a point of order. The minister rises on a question of privilege. I doubt that we should pursue the matter. The hon. member for New Westminster rises on the question of privilege.

● (1500)

Mr. Leggatt: In dealing with the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of Justice to advise the House clearly whether or not he has changed his own opinion with regard to the notification section in the wiretapping bill, and whether he made any recommendation to the committee of the other place in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT

On the order: Notice of a Ways and Means motion:

December 12, 1973—Consideration of a motion to concur in a Ways and Means motion with respect to the Excise Tax Act, (laid upon the table, December 11, 1973)—The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We understood that this Ways and Means resolution was to come forward tomorrow.

Mr. MacEachen: No, today.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That goes through on motions.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to this motion on the ground that there are two questions involved in it. I would request, therefore, in accordance with the procedure of the House, that you order that the motion be divided into two questions, namely, the question on paragraph 1 and the question on paragraph 2. I assure you that my purpose is not to delay the consideration of this matter by the House and, if my point of order is found to be well taken, I wish to co-operate in seeing that the matter is put before the House in the form of two resolutions as rapidly as possible.

The authorities with regard to the two questions being involved in the resolutions are contained in the judgment of Mr. Speaker Macnaughton relating to the flag debate found in the Votes and Proceedings of June 15, 1964, volume 111, at pages 427 to 431. I am not suggesting for a moment that the question before Mr. Speaker Macnaughton was the same as the question I am raising today. I simply refer to that as a judgment in which the principle and the precedents are considered.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the principles contained in paragraph 1 of the motion, and the principle in paragraph 2, are so different as to constitute different questions upon which a member may vote "yes" on one and "no" on the other. If the motion is adopted in its present form, Standing Order 60 (11) provides that the vote should be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion. I assume that the purpose of having the two different principles incorporated in this motion is to justify one bill being brought in. Indeed, the title of the motion is "Notice of Ways and Means to amend the Excise Tax Act" which is referred to in paragraph 2, and paragraph 1 is on an entirely different matter.

I raise my point of order at this time because I feel it would be rather late and inconvenient, and would cause unnecessary delay to do it at the time the bill is before the House. It is true that the bill would provide an opportunity for debate, but the opportunity to amend a tax bill is limited at best. In the present case, the opportunity to amend in a limited way has been pretty well forestalled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), who has combined the bill with an appropriation provision and has extended the royal recommendation to cover not only the appropriation of public revenue but the Ways and Means provisions as well. The Chair will appreciate that, under numerous Speakers' rulings, such an umbrella recommendation precludes almost any amendment by a member of this House who is not a minister of the Crown.

So, I say that paragraphs 1 and 2 contain different principles which should be put before the House separately. The principle in paragraph 2 is the one indicated in the heading of the motion—the taxing provision to amend taxing legislation, the Excise Tax Act. The principle in paragraph 1 of the resolution is quite different. Under this paragraph the House is asked, or will be asked in the bill, to delegate to the Governor in Council power to impose a charge, within a ceiling of $4 per barrel, on crude oil exported from Canada in any month commencing with February 1974, the charge to be paid by the person holding a licence under Part VI of the National Energy Board Act to export the crude oil, the charge to be administered, enforced and collected by the National Energy Board. In other words, this paragraph No. 1 relates to the National Energy Board and not to standard taxing legislation such as the Excise Tax Act dealt with in paragraph 2.

For example, the following principles are implicit in the consideration of the part of the bill which will result from this part of the motion. They are propositions upon which members of the House may hold an opinion directly opposed to the opinion they might hold with respect to paragraph 2. First of all, a member may be opposed to the proposition that this House should delegate to the Governor in Council the power to impose a charge. I hasten to emphasize I am not debating the merits of the charge, I am just indicating the range of considerations.

Second, a member might be opposed to the proposition that the Governor in Council should be delegated the power to vary a charge or to choose not to impose a charge in any month. Third, he might be opposed to the proposition that the Governor in Council may impose a charge but, coupled with the right of the Governor in Council under section 17 of the Financial Administration Act to remit any tax, impost, duty or toll, vary that charge by remitting it totally, partially, conditionally or unconditionally in the case of some person or persons but not in the case of other persons.

Fourth, a member may be opposed to the proposition that the National Energy Board, which is a court of record under subsection 10(1) of the National Energy Board Act and, therefore, one of the constitutional courts of judicature established under section 101 of the BNA Act, should administer, enforce and collect a tax.

Fifth, a member may oppose a principle that appears to be contrary to our constitution with respect to the Consolidated Revenue Fund and our statute, the Financial Administration Act, which provides for the control of public revenues. Section 102 of the BNA Act provides that all duties and revenues shall form one Consolidated Revenue Fund. The member might well ask: Where does this charge, arising from paragraph 1, when collected by the National Energy Board, go? Is it public money within the definition of the Financial Administration Act? Is it money paid to Canada for a special purpose under the definition of the act?

● (1510)

I just mention these points to indicate the extent of the difference in principle involved in paragraph 2, which is a simple amendment of the taxing statute, the Excise Act, and the principle involved in consideration of paragraph 1, which is an amendment to the National Energy Board Act and which raises, among others, the questions that I have indicated here this afternoon. In short, the resolution and any resulting bill contain two principles, one the amendment to a standard tax act and the other, as I say, involving a change and an amendment to the National Energy Board Act, two principles upon which hon. members may wish to vote differently.

Omnibus bills are always difficult, but I suggest they are quite unacceptable in the area of taxation. Surely, Sir, we have to be particularly strict and careful with regard to measures relating to taxation. I repeat that my purpose is not delay. My purpose is to see that the two principles are put before the House separately, so that the House can properly take a choice with regard to each principle.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make just a very brief comment on the point of order raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) which, in its essence, suggests that the House ought to be given an opportunity to deal separately with items in a notice of a ways and means resolution.

It seems to me that frequently in this House we have had a notice of ways and means that covered a variety of changes, a variety of tax issues. I believe if the hon. member will refer back to the most massive changes in tax law ever made in Canada, he will find that the notices of ways and means upon which it was based covered a variety of issues upon which a member could differ. As a matter of fact, all that this motion does, if accepted, is to form the basis upon which the minister can bring in a bill, or bills, as the relevant Standing Order suggests. Then, when the bill comes forward it is possible for the House of Commons, either sitting with the Speaker in the Chair or, as this bill would imply, in the committee of the whole House, to deal with each item separately.

It would seem to me that the House then would have an opportunity, if it wishes, to differ in its opinion with respect to any item. But I would go even further and say that while the Leader of the Opposition has argued that paragraph 1 represents one principle, and paragraph 2 a second, it would be possible in paragraph 2 for a member to differ about various items within that paragraph. Certainly, one might take a different view as to what one might be able to support, for example (a) in the month of October the rate is 40 cents per barrel, so it is conceivable that one could look at (d) and say $2.20 is really too much. He could divide his opinion in that manner.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I could conceive all kinds of speculative reasons why members would want to divide their opinions on a matter within two paragraphs—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It isn't a matter of principle you are arguing.

Mr. MacEachen: If the hon. member for Edmonton West is talking about a principle, I would point out it is precisely the same principle that is involved in both.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I beg your pardon.

Mr. MacEachen: And I beg the hon. member's pardon, but that is my view.

All that is implied in paragraph 1 is that because it is impossible to predict circumstances that may prevail after the end of January, an upper limit is set on the charge or tax, and that the Governor in Council is asking authority for subsequent months to establish a charge. That is asked for, not because there is a different principle involved, but because it is impossible to predict what the circumstances may be in subsequent months. It is the application of precisely the same principle, and because we are not perfect forecasters we do not know what may be the situation at February 1.

It is precisely the same over-all principle involved in both paragraphs. There is a different application of the same principle in paragraphs 1 and 2, if that is the foundation that the hon. member alleges. If the argument of the Leader of the Opposition is accepted we would be confronted with a situation in which every single sentence, every single item, every single thought in any bill ought to be put in the form of a single notice of ways and means. I must say that this is a very surprising proposal to split a ways and means motion. I do not know what that obliges anybody to do. Does it oblige the minister to bring in two bills or one bill? It seems to me that it does not solve anything. If the point is to be raised, it certainly ought to be raised when the House knows whether there will be one bill, two bills or three bills, and it does not know that yet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say just a brief word on this point of order, and perhaps in the process I may raise another one.

I confess that I am not concerned about the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), namely, his objection to the two subjects that are set out in the notice of ways and means motion being included in one bill, or at this moment being before us in one motion. It does seem to me that there is a relationship between the kind of charge that is to be levied in October, November, December and January, and the kind of charge that is to be levied from February 1 on.

However I rose, Mr. Speaker, because although I do not see any objection to that I am concerned, and I think we should be told what is going to happen, over the fact that there is on today's order paper a notice of a bill to be introduced which seems to cover everything that is in this ways and means motion, but has something more in it. The something more is a provision for an arrangement under which there is allocated certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax.

As I say, I do not feel I can support the case of the Leader of the Opposition for separating this notice of ways and means motion into two parts, but it does seem to me that if we pass this notice of ways and means motion, the bill that is introduced ought to be confined to what is in that ways and means motion.

May I draw Your Honour's attention to Standing Order 60(11) which says:

> The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a bill or bills based on the provisions of any such motion.

That seems pretty clear. In other words, if we vote for this motion, this notice of ways and means motion, as we shall, then it is in order to bring in a bill, or bills, based on the provisions of that motion. It would seem to me that one bill could do, although the Leader of the Opposition might argue for two. But apparently waiting in the wings is a bill, according to today's order paper, which reads:

● (1520)

> The Minister of Finance—Bill intituled: "An act to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada, to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act—

It does not stop there; it goes on to say:

> —and to allocate certain of the revenues derived from the oil export tax".

Then, the recommendation of His Excellency the Governor General spells this out a little more by indicating the fact that 50 per cent of the revenues so obtained are to be transmitted to the provinces concerned.

I hope Your Honour will not feel that I am raising a different point of order, for we are in the same universe as it were. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) feels that there should be more than one bill based on this resolution. I do not support that argument. But I am not concerned about the fact that if we pass this motion apparently we are going to get a bill with something in it that is not in the ways and means motion. I would suggest that either the ways and means motion should have been amended in reference to the allocation of the revenues, or this matter should have been in a separate bill, one that will provide the formula for allocating the revenues obtained from the charges and taxes.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I just want to reserve my right to argue the second point of order whenever it is relevant to have it raised.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On that point if I may, Mr. Speaker, surely we have the right to know what the government's intentions are in view of the fact that we have the ways and means motion in front of us and we have this notice of a bill which talks of one bill, not two, which seems to say that the bill is going to do the things in the ways and means motion but is going to do something else as well.

I have no quarrel with one bill covering everything that is in the ways and means motion, but I think that the formula for allocating the anticipated revenues should be in a separate bill.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that hon. members would want me to rule immediately on the interesting points which have been raised by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). A number of different points have been raised by hon. members and one of them, to which the hon. Leader of the Opposition has alluded, has referred to the royal recommendation. I have looked at the royal recommendation, and while part of it may not be relevant to the ways and means motion and I recognize that this may give rise to some difficulty, perhaps it would be the part of wisdom to have the royal recommendation drafted in such a way—if His Excellency would agree—so that it would be clear what the bill intends to do.

In so far as the ways and means motion is concerned, my understanding is that the hon. member's difficulties are perhaps not so much in connection with the motion but are in connection with a bill which will come before us as a result of the motion. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has suggested that there should be two bills. The advice I have is that we have had bills which were designed both to tax and to apportion the revenue, and that there are a number of precedents to this effect. I wonder where the Chair would get the authority to say at this point that we should split the bill.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker MacNaughton in relation to the resolution on the flag debate. Of course, we had before us at that time a resolution and not a bill. I am not quite sure either that there is no precedent for splitting the bill, but I would hesitate to rule at this point and I wonder if we would achieve anything by splitting the motion, to have one bill coming up later based on two motions. That is the point I would like to look into briefly if hon. members would allow me to do so.

The point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is entirely different. He felt that the bill as proposed might go beyond the terms of the proposed ways and means resolution. I had not looked into that aspect of the problem, and I would be disposed to look at it a little more closely if hon. members would allow the Chair to consult all these documents, the ways and means resolution, the notice of the bill which is before us and the royal recommendation to see what we can come up with that might satisfy hon. members. As I said a moment ago, based on the precedents which I know, it would be very difficult for the Chair to make a decision now which would bind us to a conclusion that the bill which will come before us should be split so that we would have two different questions in two different bills for the consideration of the House.

I thank hon. members for the advice they have given the Chair and the suggestions they have made that the matter be looked into. This is what I will do as soon as I can and perhaps later this afternoon I can indicate to hon. members what my conclusion is after having studied citations of the rules and precedents. Perhaps, we might go on to the next order of business for the moment.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand your desire to have time to reflect upon this decision. The House may wish to divide on this motion. I am not sure. But if there is no interest in dividing, then I am not as concerned about when your judgment will be delivered. If there were an indication that the House was to divide, I think I would have to cancel some committee meetings and that is why I wanted to inquire.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if we were going to be divided we are so chivalrous that we would not force the government House Leader to cancel any commitments. In any case, as far as I know there is no intention to divide as far as the resolution is concerned or to raise any objection in that way. I made my point and we are in the hands of the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight).

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I believe my friend the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) has the floor. If you would keep me in mind when he has finished, I would certainly give way to allow him to finish his speech.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) had the floor when we adjourned.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, December 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or marked disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Peter C. Bawden (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, If I may continue from last night, I should like to say that on looking at the world energy picture, energy is the vital question of our day. It is a subject that today is being debated by governments and by the public in virtually every country in the world. Indeed, energy supplies are now a matter of prime concern to forecasters, to governments and numerous international bodies who are concerned with future social and political development and with the problems of economic growth.

To find a starting point for oil policy considerations in Canada, one must turn to the world energy scene first to see clearly where this country fits into the world picture. The most significant, and perhaps most unfortunate, aspect of the energy situation in the world today is that the determination of events and the entire course of the energy decision-making is motivated by political expediency. I am sorry to say that Canada now finds itself in exactly that mess, too.

In the longer term, and perhaps even in the shorter term, that situation can only work to the detriment of the Canadian people, because in the end it is always the people who pay. I doubt, however, if many Canadians today wish to pay, or indeed can afford to pay, any more taxes for the mistakes of this government. To focus on the highlights of the world energy scenario, perhaps I might refer this House, Mr. Speaker, to the very clear and vital message which was delivered by a number of recognized specialists to the conference on world energy which was convened in London, England, this autumn.

The highlights to emerge from this conference were as follows. First, the world has only eight years to get ready for a fall in oil production. The industry is not finding oil in sufficient quantities to keep up with soaring demands. Second, there seems no doubt that there has been a genuine decline over the last six or seven years in the gross finding rate, and also that there has been a decline over the last decade or so in the discovery of supergiant oil fields, although many large fields by world standards remain to be found. Third, it is difficult to see any significant increase in finding rates over the next ten to fifteen years. Fourth, the conference concluded that in the late 1970's or early 1980's, by which time world oil production will be about twice what it is today, world production will begin an inevitable and slow decline.

The grounds for concern outlined in the conference were that with the inevitable increase of demand, supplies of conventional oil may start to decline before alternate sources of energy are developed. Eight years or so is not very long in which to plan and implement the provision of various alternate sources of energy. While there are perhaps certain of the world's resources for which substitutes are not easily available, this is not so with regard to energy as a whole. By applying our present technology to fossil fuels, we can deal effectively with the needs that lie ahead by phasing into nuclear energy and other supplies for the next century, as those sources will be as prolific as those provided from hydrocarbons during the last few decades. The era of cheap energy which we have experienced for the last 20 years is behind us. We shall have to become used to less prolific and higher cost energy, and learn new ways of using these basic resources more efficiently.

The conference in London concluded, further, that of prime importance is the collaboration between producer and consumer, as their common interests are of much greater importance than their differences. In other words, both should get together in an effort to solve their problems. Both are equally dependent on the effective development of energy for their present and future prosperity. Their differences should not be resolved by confrontation, but through negotiation. Further, crude oil and natural gas will meet an essential and critical portion of the world's energy needs until the end of the century. Huge sums of capital investment will be needed to meet this production demand. It is estimated that oil expenditures will be in the area of $480 billion over the next ten years, an average of $132 million per day.

The conference concluded that industry and government policy was called for in four principal areas. First, it suggested that there must be avoidance of a competitive scramble for oil by consuming countries, which could be done by the creation and maintenance of agreements for apportioning supplies against possible shortages. Second, there must be assistance in the economic development of the producing countries. Third, there must be avoidance of energy waste, through more efficient use of energy. Fourth, the conference called for urgent development of new and alternate energy sources. Those were the conclusions, or at least the highlights, to emerge from the conference. Those conclusions apply as much to Canada as they do to every other country of the world.

The principal exporting countries of the world formed an organization in the 1960's known as the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, generally referred to as OPEC. The countries making up that organization consist of Iran, Iraq, Algeria, Kuwait, Venezuela, Indonesia, Saudi Arabia, Libya, Abu Dhabi, Qatar and Nigeria. Saudi Arabia, Mr. Speaker, is today the country which for the next few years, more than any other, will be the fulcrum for energy supply in the entire world. Saudi Arabia will produce oil, and just enough oil, to keep the world supply at a level just at or below world demand. One can appreciate the ability of Saudi Arabia to command this position when it is appreciated that its present proven reserves amount to something in the order of 160 billion barrels, and that its daily production of oil is in the order of between 7 million and 8 million barrels a day, and that country has the largest potential oil producing capacity in the world.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister Yamani stated in London recently that even when Israel's withdrawal from Arab lands is completed, production will be restored only back to last September's level. Mr. Speaker, that represents less than current oil requirements and would not allow for the needed growth in oil supplies. In addition, the minister stated that only on their own timetable would the Saudi Arabians restore, gradually, production to the levels of September, 1973. The sheik also said the Arab states will "be more than happy to sit with consuming nations to discuss reasonable decisions on oil prices and production to preserve the world's economic system". He went on to say, however, that "buyers are knocking on our doors" offering higher prices and that it would be illogical to expect the Arab to say, "No, we don't want $10 a barrel for our oil; please make it only $7 per barrel."

I have brought out these details, Mr. Speaker, so that members of this House can appreciate the international factors in the world today which for the next few years will determine the supply and therefore the price. The handwriting is on the wall and the name of the game in the foreseeable future is continued shortages and escalating prices. Even if one assumes that the world will return to a more balanced situation, this will only take place when, according to Saudi Arabia's oil minister, "the Israelis have withdrawn from the territories they have occupied since 1967". I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that considering conditions in that part of the world and the probability that these negotiations will not move quickly, the Arab cutback will continue not just for a few weeks or a few months, but, more than likely, for much, much longer. It seems to me that we cannot look realistically to that part of the world in future for security of supply.

Analysis of future world energy supplies shows three different sets of problems; these relate to timing. The first problem is that which we face now and in the immediate future. The second is the problem which will confront us up to the end of the century; and, lastly, we must consider the problems in the very long term. The immediate short-term energy problem stems essentially from the present tightness in oil supplies, both products and crude. Under today's conditions, when oil constitutes over 50 per cent of energy demand in most countries, the problem is much worse than it was following a similar problem in the late 1950's and again in the late 1960's. Then, there was a good deal of surplus producing capacity in other countries of the world. This surplus does not exist today and will not in the foreseeable future.

Many of the large producing countries in the world have recognized that their reserves are finite. They have, as well, during the last couple of years doubled or tripled the take on a barrel of oil. The result is that while at present they are selling much less oil, the returns on less oil sold are much greater than they were.

An extremely significant factor in the world energy situation is that the energy problem of the United States, of Britain, of Japan or of any other country is not limited in its effects to that one country alone. An energy shortage in a key area today is likely to have world-wide repercussions and effect virtually every other country. Most unfortunately, the people of developing countries will be the hardest hit of all as they, least of all, can afford the high cost of energy which is so critical to their industrial growth. It was this very point that the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) made earlier this week. Canada's economy is inextricably bound to the economies of the United States and the other major trading nations of the world.

A consideration of the energy problems which will affect Canada is no way complete until this critical international component is brought into the mix. All economic planning must now look critically at the short-term and long-term impact. We are headed for continuing energy shortages in the world for the next 10 to 15 years and this will affect the standard of living in many countries. These shortages could translate into economic recession, high unemployment rates and, finally, competition for energy could lead to serious confrontation between nations. This would add nothing to supplies and would have the effect of skyrocketing prices.

● (1540)

For Canada, it is necessary to re-evaluate trade patterns, both of the past and for the future. Canada's abundance of energy presents great opportunities for the long-range future, but also some very disruptive times in the short-term. The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Gillespie) has told us very little about the activities of his department in this important area. Are we to presume that the action is as minimal as his words? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) meanwhile has said very little and when he does speak, he contradicts everything that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) are saying.

Canadians can hardly comprehend the sweetheart position in which they find themselves in today's world. It is essential, however, that Canada, which today is truly at a vital crossroads, takes the decisions and adopts the policies which maximize the advantages which we truly have and to the advantage of all Canadians. I regret to say that if the actions taken by this government in recent months are any indication, we are not going to maximize the advantages to Canadians. We are going to minimize them. Indeed, if the present short-sighted policies continue, one of the great opportunities in Canada's history may have been lost.

I wish to say something about Canada's oil and gas reserves. Utilizing the probability approach to future oil and gas reserves, the geological survey of Canada's assessment of the mean probable oil potential for Canada from conventional production is about 100 billion barrels. About 16 billion barrels of this have been found. A substantial portion of these additional reserves lie in the frontiers of the Canadian Arctic and the offshore areas. In this hostile environment, and with related logistic problems, it must be anticipated that the cost of finding each barrel of oil and each cubic foot of gas will be a great deal more expensive.

In view of the fact that Canada has today some 10 years' supply of oil reserves at projected producing rates, it is imperative that a massive and aggressive search activity take place. In the Prime Minister's speech on Thursday last, he said the government's first priority was to assure necessary fuel supplies to all Canadians this winter no matter what developments took place abroad. This is an essential goal, Mr. Speaker. However, the actions of this government and at times the government's inaction has gone a long way toward threatening the security of supply to Canadians in the future which surely must be an important consideration in long term energy planning.

The Prime Minister on Thursday, December 6 set out what he called his government's new national oil policy. One of his first statements was that we are confident that no Canadian need fear serious shortages of oil and fuel this winter, provided each one of us plays his part and contributes his share. I presume that for the average Canadian this could only mean cooperation by reducing consumption and saving where possible. If the Prime Minister is confident that this is the case, why has the government asked for extreme wartime type powers as provided for in Bill C-236? Of course Canadians will play their part. They always have. Why then is this government, on one hand, saying Canadians need fear no shortages and, on the other, spreading panic and crisis by demanding extreme and excessive power? Is it because the government itself does not know what are the facts? It is no wonder that Canadians are confused by the information they are getting from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

All that Canadians really want to know are the facts. Because this government is not doing its homework, and because the minister continues to be befuddled, all Canadians have lost confidence in the minister and the government. How could it be otherwise? One day we are on the Saudi-Arabia embargo and the next day we are not. One day the Shaheen refinery crude imports are said to be included in the minister's calculations and a few hours later the minister says they are not. One day we are told that deliveries from the west coast to the east coast are 50,000 barrels a day. A week later, they are 50 per cent higher. The minister told us one day he did not know what volume could be delivered through Ontario to the Quebec market. Two days later he said 40,000 to 60,000 barrels per day could be delivered in this way. Indeed, a few days later informed transportation companies said that movement of this quantity of western crude oil by land is pure fantasy.

One week the minister is telling the country that the international oil companies are invoking force majeure clauses so they can divert supplies of Canadian crude to other countries. The next day the majority of the importing companies are making it clear that force majeure can or will only be invoked when oil is cut off by the producing country. I believe that many Canadians are now convinced that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is either terribly stupid or he is deliberately trying to mislead them. Canadians are confused. They do not know the situation. They want the facts. They want the truth. They do not want fantasy. They want to be able to understand the extent of the potential oil problem in this country this winter.

In his remarks in the House on December 6, the Prime Minister made a number of references to prices of petroleum on which I wish to comment. The Prime Minister made reference to maintaining the price of domestically produced oil at the current level at least until the end of this winter. He implied that the price of Canadian crude may very well be frozen permanently. The Prime Minister in his remarks also said, however that the days of cheap energy for Canadians must come to an end. All too often his statements do not seem to agree. He said that, in the long run, we must allow the price of domestically-produced crude oil to rise toward a level high enough to ensure development of the Alberta tar sand and other Canadian resources, but not one bit higher. Who shall determine what is "not one bit higher"? We do not have any information on price from the Prime Minister that will give guidance to Canadians nor to the potential explorers for Canadian resources. If the Prime Minister believes what he says, I wonder how he reconciles this with the position taken by his brothers in the NDP who have said that the price of Canadian crude should never rise. The Prime Minister has given no indication, of whether he agrees nor does he seem inclined to do so.

On the question of crude oil pricing, a few short weeks ago the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources told Canadians that the government would be prepared to have them pay world prices for western crude oil priced at the Montreal point, but they would not be forced to pay the inflated price in the United States. I wonder whether anyone has explained to the minister that United States prices are now starting to trend below world prices and this difference will likely increase. Is the minister now going to tell us Canadian prices will be tied to United States prices and not world prices? The situation becomes more confusing by the day.

In his speech last Thursday, the Prime Minister gave some indication of understanding that prices, reserves and ultimate supply, are very much inter-related. This leads me to the most critical aspect of the entire energy question. This applies to Canada as well as any other country. Adequate reserves as well as ability to produce and transport those reserves is vital to Canadians in the future. One of the accepted facts in the world search for oil is that large sums of risk capital are required. Total expenditures in Canada at the present time are running at a rate of almost $2 thousand million a year—some $5 million a day—half of which is being spent in exploration. It is vital, notwithstanding the government's plans for a national oil company, that the volume of present investment is maintained. The Prime Minister said last Thursday that the pace of exploration had not been as rapid as we would wish. In this, I agree with him. If, however, the Prime Minister really means what he said, why has the government dragged its feet so badly when it comes to providing offshore and Arctic permit and leasing regulations? How can the government expect increased activity or, indeed, any activity at all, when those who are expected to risk large sums in the search have been without rules of the game for almost four years? Action, not words, is what is required. If the Prime Minister truly wants to see increased exploratory activity, let him put some rules and incentives where his mouth is.

In the course of his statement, the Prime Minister placed considerable emphasis on the need for participation by Canadians in the development of their own resources. Canadians and members of this party have been urging the government to make this possible for many years. On January 11 I asked the Minister of Finance whether he would consider introducing fiscal changes designed to enable Canadians to invest in the oil and gas industry on the same basis as citizens of foreign countries. Until now, I presume the government has never thought the ownership of our resources was of any importance to Canada or to Canadians. But instead of letting individuals make their own choices, the Canadian taxpayer is now to be taken to the horse races with the national oil company choosing the horses and placing the bets.

When the Prime Minister spoke of the establishment of what might now be known as the Trudeau petroleum company, he told us nothing about the budget of this company. He mentioned an insignificant sum of $40 million for research. We shall need to know a lot more about the government's plans for a national petroleum company before anyone can assess what he has in mind. The Prime Minister did say, however, that one of the functions of the company would be to assist and participate in the operations of small Canadian companies. What the Prime Minister completely missed is the fact that today there are more than 150 independent oil and gas companies searching for hydrocarbons in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and most of the maritime provinces. Since the requirement for risk capital is very great, and since the reserves found relate directly to dollars spent, these independent companies depend on financial partners if they are to continue their search. By reducing confidence among all investors in Canada, the actions of the government will eliminate a viable and important factor in the Canadian oil business, one which is already in place. In fact, the independent oil and gas companies have accounted for more than 80 per cent of wildcat or exploration drilling in Canada in recent years.

I want to say something about the price of oil in eastern Canada. In the speech he made on December 6, the Prime Minister said the government did not wish to discontinue Canadian exports and that it did not wish to reduce imports from reliable suppliers. He said nothing, however, about the price of these imports. Members opposite may not have told their constituents that because Canada would have to pay the world price for foreign oil they will be stuck with higher prices in Quebec and the Maritimes than the rest of Canada will be called upon to pay. This situation is made worse because of the expected price increase of nearly 10 per cent by OPEC countries in January. As a result, the people of Quebec and the maritimes will be paying up to nine cents a gallon more for gasoline and heating oil than people in the rest of Canada, and will continue to do so. It may not have been made clear to the people in a large portion of Quebec and the maritimes that the government does not intend to reduce imports from reliable sources. Had the Prime Minister gone on to say that people in those provinces will be paying the world price, and would thus be for ever committed to paying more than the rest of Canada which, it now becomes clear, will be living under some kind of price shelter from now on, their reaction might have been different.

[Translation]

I hope that hon. members on the other side of the House have understood and clearly explained these facts to their electors.

[English]

As to Bill C-236, may I say it is a massive overkill directed to a problem whose existence, or possible existence in the future, has not yet been satisfactorily established by the government. The country has only the government's dubious word that a crisis is developing or could develop. But it is appropriating for itself this vast new authority, ostensibly on a temporary basis. Nevertheless, it is extremely difficult to imagine a government such as the one which presently occupies the treasury benches relinquishing such delicious power should the presumed emergency pass.

I urge the government to get their facts straight and come clean with the Canadian people. Let them make clear to the people of Canada that the price of energy is going to rise. Let them tell the whole story of their pricing policy. I ask the minister of energy to stop trying to fool some of the people all of the time—or is it all of the people some of the time? Canadians are prepared for hardships if they become necessary. But tell them the true facts so that they can decide for themselves.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would also urge the government to recognize the vital role energy has played and can play in shaping the future of our country, and stop attempting to play politics with this essential resource, a course which in the end will prove disastrous and greatly to the detriment of all Canadians.

Mr. Duncan M. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the bill we are debating was tabled on Wednesday of last week with much fanfare and hoopla. Since then, we have become convinced of something we have suspected for a very long time. We are now convinced that the government knows no more about the energy situation in Canada today than it did last month, or even last year. In fact, judging from the conflicting statements which keep coming from the government on this subject, they will not know any more about it in one month or one year from now.

I was intrigued by the statement from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) when he spoke on this bill last Wednesday. Early in his speech he said that as long ago as December of last year, the government had received an assessment of our crude oil situation from the National Energy Board. He went on to state, further, that the government had then taken decisive steps to protect Canadian supplies of gasoline, middle distillates, heavy fuel oil and propane. That was an interesting claim, especially in the light of the present supply position of these products. As we all know too well, there are shortage in all the products, the supply of which the minister told us the government had taken steps to protect. Canadians who are today suffering shortages, especially shortage of home heating oil, may be forgiven if they wonder whether the government deliberately allowed the present energy crisis to develop.

If we accept the government's own statements on the energy situation, we must conclude that they were caught completely unaware by the world-wide energy crisis in spite of the fact that advance warning was given several months ago, if not long before then. On the energy minister's own admission, the government was given an assessment of crude oil supplies and reserves in Canada one year ago. I can only assume that this assessment by the National Energy Board also contained recommendations as to what might be done and what ought to be done to ensure that Canadian consumers would have access to their own oil. I would consider the making of such recommendations to be part of the responsibility of the Energy Board, and if it is not, it certainly should be. It is obvious that information of this sort has not been forthcoming from anyone else in the government.

Mr. Speaker, I sent out a news release last February calling upon the government to acknowledge the fact that an energy crisis was developing and urging that steps be taken to head off a major shortage in Canada of fuel oil and gasoline. This news release was printed in the newspapers in my constituency. I pointed out that there had been longstanding difficulties with respect to the transportation of oil products throughout Canada and that this situation could result in shortages of fuel oil in eastern Canada should supplies from other sources be cut off. Finally, I called on the government to take steps to ensure that Canadian oil would be supplied to all Canadians.

● (1600)

It is a sad commentary on the type of government we have had in the past eight or ten years that I can still make the same recommendations today. I said at that time, and I say now, that what we need right now is a national energy policy, not stop-gap, ad hoc policies designed to get us from one emergency to another. We have been governed for several years in a manner that suggests that we should be satisfied with policies that will get us through crisis after crisis. Every time we turn around, Mr. Speaker, we are called upon to debate crisis solutions and emergency measures, and in every case we have had ample warning to implement policies to head off emergencies and crises. How much longer must we go on in this way?

[Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain).]

The energy minister was in his usual form when he introduced the government's latest energy legislation last week. He talked as though he and his colleagues actually knew what they were doing, but we in this House know better. This bill is just more of the same, more of the stop-gap, short-range, non-action that we have seen over and over again since this government sold out to the NDP in a desperate attempt to hold on to power. Not power with which to govern, Mr. Speaker, but power for the sake of power. As I listen to the energy minister from day to day, I cannot help wondering whether he has been given too big a job. It could be, and it certainly appears to be, a case of giving a person a job that is over his head. When we watch the energy minister backtracking, vacillating, contradicting himself and his colleagues, and generally fumbling his way around in the energy mess, then we can be forgiven for feeling that he is out of his element.

Perhaps the minister has been given too many portfolios combined into one. It could be that energy, mines and resources should be broken up into three portfolios, but even that would not be any guarantee that those departments would fare any better. It is obvious that the minister has been devoting full time to energy, and that mines and resources are being left to their own devices. This poses another threat, Mr. Speaker. This could be the makings of the next crisis. As we know, emergencies and crises tend to overlap these days, and we should be taking steps now to head off a major crisis in the other departments in the energy minister's portfolio. I think the plain fact is that energy minister should pack it in. We have his number on this side of the House, and, squirm as he likes, he will not be able to fool anyone here any longer. The legislation we are debating is clear evidence that the tenure of the energy minister has been a total disaster.

There is another aspect of the energy crisis that troubles me just as much as the alleged shortage of fuel oil and gasoline, and that is the matter of inflation. It appears to have been overlooked in all of the hoopla over the energy shortage, but inflation continues to climb, and indeed it continues to gallop. Again, those people who are hardest hit by inflation are also those who can least afford to absorb the higher costs involved in the fuel shortage. When buying power of the dollar declines and fuel prices climb, it does not take an economist to know that some people this winter are going to be denied adequate fuel supplies to keep warm. Some people in lower income brackets use fuel oil for cooking as well as for heating, and it can easily be seen that for those people the present fuel crisis is very real.

This government is using the energy crisis to play one party against the other in the House, for purely political purposes, and it is callous and inhuman. It is strange, indeed, that this government would ignore good advice from the official opposition at a time when the energy situation could have been kept under control, and to then play games with the NDP in order to try to squirm out of accepting responsibility for the mess they got us into. The government is in fact playing games with the Canadian people. It is playing games with the health and welfare of the Canadian people, and it is no wonder that it was afraid to risk a vote of confidence this past Monday.

Just as the government has repeatedly misinterpreted the signs in the energy situation, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that they also misinterpreted the mood of the NDP. I do not believe that the NDP would have voted against the government, even if this monstrosity of a bill that we are debating had not been tabled. The NDP does not have any more stomach for a confrontation with the electorate than the Liberals have, and it would surprise me greatly if they ever followed through with their hollow threats. It is easy to threaten when you know that you will never have to follow through. The NDP threat is a myth, Mr. Speaker. It is a fable, just as the other child's story of the man who cried wolf was a fable. This government is not only afraid and confused; it is also terribly naïve to believe the fable of NDP terror. That will be proved without a shadow of a doubt in the next general election.

In the meantime, we are forced to sit and wait for the government to tell us just how serious the energy situation is, and to tell us what steps it plans to take to restore some semblance of order. This bill is not the answer. As all of us well know, this is a sop to the NDP, a piece of socialistic nonsense that will not do any more in the way of solving the energy crisis than the government has already done. If this is the best that the energy minister can recommend to his colleagues and to this House, then he should step aside and let someone else take a shot at the problem. I do not believe anyone else can do worse, and there is just some slight chance that someone else can do better. I have to suggest that one of the reasons for the present energy crisis is that this government cannot seem to get its priorities sorted out. Part of the reason of this failure stems from the power vested in some ministries, and the lack of power and authority of others.

The statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) yesterday that bilingualism was more important than getting Alberta oil into Quebec shows clearly that he has his priorities turned upside down. The Prime Minister has a hang-up on bilingualism, and it keeps him from seeing many of the important issues with which he should be dealing. If all of the country should suddenly become bilingual, which it will not, what then, Mr. Speaker? Surely, the Prime Minister can find something else to obscure his vision and prevent him from seeing the problems that keep us going from crisis to crisis. Marie Antoinette said that starving people of France should eat cake. The Prime Minister says that the fuel starved people of Canada should become bilingual. What a travesty; what nonsense, Mr. Speaker.

Hundreds of millions of dollars have already been spent on bilingualism programs, and hundreds of millions more have been committed. And yet we have been told that the trans-Canada pipeline bringing oil from the Canadian west could not be extended to Montreal and points east because we could not afford it. I do not accept that shallow excuse, and I hope that my colleagues on this side of the House will not swallow the Prime Minister's bigoted statement.

The energy question in Canada has been a priority item for many years, and yet here we are today debating whether to allow the government to implement a measure born of panic. This is a panic solution in spite of the fact that we have had years of warning. We have almost unlimited resources as far as our own requirements are concerned, and we have had the know-how to do something to minimize the effects of the impending world-wide energy crisis.

The government has protested that it could not have foreseen that the Arab oil producing nations would ever cut back on shipments of crude to the refineries of Quebec and the Maritimes. This is utter nonsense. Even as long ago as 1967 this threat has been hanging over us, and yet six years later there is no indication that this government has ever considered this eventuality. No provisions were made to ensure that the eastern provinces would be able to get Canadian crude if the crude imports from Venezuela and the Arab nations should be cut back or shut off altogether.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated recently, Mr. Speaker, in one of his many contradictory statements on the energy crisis, that the shortage of fuel oil in Montreal this winter could run as high as 30 per cent, and that in the eastern provinces it could go as high as 25 per cent. This is far more serious than the government has indicated in the recent past, and yet the Prime Minister has said that there should not be any serious hardship for any of us. How can the Prime Minister make such a statement when people are already suffering as a result of shortages, and as a result of the rise in fuel prices? Tens of thousands of senior citizens, and others on fixed incomes, have already begun to feel the pinch of increased fuel prices. In some cases these people have to budget carefully even to afford such luxuries as meat and sweets, and those only on occasion. As it stands now, many of those people will not even be able to eat the proper foods if they are forced to pay more for heating and cooking oil.

We could go on for hours about the side effects of the oil crisis, Mr. Speaker, but it would not impress this government. This government is not impressed or shamed by the human suffering it has caused by its inaction and bungling. Unemployment is already a problem in this country, for example, but we could be faced with even more serious unemployment as a result of the energy crisis.

Our plastics industry has its back to the wall because of a shortage of vital resins. With the shortage there has been a sharp increase in the cost of the resins, most of which have to be imported. If the supply of resins is reduced any more the plastics industry could be placed in real jeopardy. In addition, all of the industries that depend on the plastics industry for parts will also be in trouble. This situation is largely the result of the failure of the government to encourage expansion in our refining and petrochemical industries. Most of the by-products of the refining and petrochemical industries have to be imported because we do not refine enough of our own crude.

These are some of the aspects of the energy crisis that must be dealt with at length in this House, Mr. Speaker, and the sooner the better. If we could convince the government that the day of ad hoc and temporary solutions has passed, then perhaps we could get down to serious discussion of these pressing problems, and possibly come up with some solutions. In the meantime, we will be forced to sit by and watch the government play the political game with the NDP and watch the Prime Minister fiddle while Canada burns. It is hard to say which of the two parties is more afraid to face up to reality, the Liberals or the NDP. But one thing is certain, neither the Liberals nor the NDP has the faintest idea how to cope with the present energy crisis. One faces the issues with faint heart and little or no idea of how to cope with real issues. The other preaches pseudo-socialism, with the knowledge that it will never have to face up to its own preachments, and with the clear knowledge that it will never have to accept the responsibility that goes with running the government.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say that the situation I have outlined is a sad one indeed for the Canadian people to have to live with. I had thought that the Canadian electors would have been given an opportunity to express themselves after last Monday. However, when political parties abandon principle for purely partisan gain, then the people are forced to wait. But they are only putting off the inevitable, and if the bill we have here is the best that two parties can come up with to solve a serious human problem, then they are scratching around in the bottom of the barrel. Let us get out of the barrel and get to the business of running the country. The best time to do that is right now.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-236 is no more no less than the confirmation of the government's temptation to generate a psychosis among people that there is an energy shortage. By the sound of my voice, you realize that this psychosis has certainly generated some energy to make us live in the cool of Parliament. We freeze in the restaurant, in the House, we catch a cold or we lose our voice.

Mr. Speaker, the psychosis generated among the people is having results. Throughout Canada, we witness reactions which, it seems to me, ought to alert Parliament, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the government.

At noon, I was talking about some news published today in the newspaper La Presse of Montreal in an article by Robert Pouliot which reads as follows:

Quebec exports oil despite crisis.

Quebec is told that there is a crisis. Everyone recalls hearing Premier Bourassa say during the electoral campaign that there was no danger of an oil shortage in Quebec, that we had supplies for 52 days and that there was absolutely no danger of not getting the oil we needed. Four days after the elections, Premier Bourassa met with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau), and the same night he came out of the Prime Minister's residence, he said on the radio: It is just possible that we might have an energy or oil shortage.

To come back to the news published today, Mr. Speaker, I go on with the article:

Quebec exports oil despite crisis. At the time—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

[Mr. Beattie (Hamilton Mountain).]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Yes, to make a point of clarification if I may.

[Translation]

I feel that the article to which the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) refers concerns only the exportation of heavy oil and not of heating oil. This is different. It is an extremely important qualification in the present debate. The situation is such that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has mentioned it during the oral question period this afternoon.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): If the hon. member wants to be patient enough to listen to the whole text, he will realize that this is exactly what I mean. I continue reading the article for the information of the member who has just risen:

At the time when the province of Quebec is threatened with a petroleum shortage this winter in view of the intensification of the Arab embargo, some refiners in the province, including Golden Eagle in Saint-Romuald, keep on exporting large quantities of heating industrial oil to the United States.

I do not know if the hon. member calls this heavy oil but I know that it is industrial heating oil.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Heavy oil.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, I will continue with my remarks and the hon. member will understand. This oil may be further refined to get ordinary heating oil. This is for the information of the hon. member. If he is not aware of this, I will take him to Golden Eagle Canada Limited so that he can see for himself.

From October 15 to November 26, Quebec was in first place—

—not in second or third—

—in first place among provinces exporting refined products to the American market with shipments of 2.5 million barrels or the equivalent of 87.5 million gallons.

These are refined products.

After the allocation ordered by Ottawa on industrial oil exports—

—not heating oil but industrial oil—

—last October 15, Quebec until October 31 supplied nearly half of the Canadian exports to the United States.

I read: half from Quebec. I do not know if the hon. member understands.

During the next weeks, however, these refined oil exportations should come down not so much to answer the needs of Quebeckers in low sulphur bunker fuel but to supply British Columbia via the Panama Canal.

I would like hon. members to know that this does not come from the office of the member who interrupted me earlier but directly from energy officials in Ottawa.

The federal government is getting ready to convince eastern Canada refiners to help British Columbia which this winter will suffer from a serious shortage of industrial oil. In the coming weeks, the National Energy Board will have to issue fewer export permits to the United States to divert the bunker to the Pacific coast.

We can now realize the logic of what is going on. The quotation goes on:

Traditionally British Columbia used to receive two-thirds of what it needs in bunker fuel from Washington state refineries but owing to the Arab embargo and the American market pressures, an important part of this supply has disappeared. According to spokesmen for the B.C. Petroleum Association the Pacific province will have to turn to Singapour refineries and refiners in Quebec and the Maritimes.

In other words Quebec refiners will import crude from Alberta via the Trans-Mountain pipeline connecting Edmonton to Vancouver; they will then transport the crude via Panama, process it in Quebec and send back part of the refined products via Panama to Vancouver.

Mr. Speaker, can you imagine the transport operations all this will set in motion? First, we have the Trans-Mountain pipeline connecting Edmonton to Vancouver; there part of the oil is refined and put on ships travelling via Panama; when it arrives in Saint-Romuald Golden Eagle Canada Limited or other companies refine the product and ship it right back to Vancouver via Panama.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The hon. member may say no, but that is exactly what will happen. The National Energy Board decides, and not the hon. member, who is not even aware of it.

To go back to the quotation:

In Ottawa, civil servants justify Quebec exports to the U.S.A. claiming a shortage of storage tanks in the province.

The NEB and the civil servants justify those exports saying there are no tanks. How intelligent in 1973! Now back to the quotation:

"As stocking is possible, explains a civil servant who refuses to identify himself—

He does not want to give his name because it seems this is another leak, not of oil, but of government information.

—since Ottawa issued, only this week, severe rules to check information leaks—

The civil servant has been afraid of identifying himself since then.

● (1620)

—refineries must operate at full speed and quickly sell their products."

That is why they must send their products as quickly as possible to the United States. We have not enough oil tanks in the province of Quebec. Here is another extract from that article:

That open door to experts for which they get good prices on the American market is however a factor to reduce the production of heating oil for private use in Quebec.

If we had the necessary oil tanks we would be able to refine industrial oil to produce first quality standard heating oil but we have no such storage facilities. Then the people are told: All you need do is freeze. Here in Parliament they have even created a psychosis among hon. members. We are told: As there is a shortage of oil we have nothing to do but freeze.

When I came in the restaurant of Parliament this morning for breakfast, all the waitresses were wearing woollen sweaters. In fact one of them took the liberty of lifting her skirt and show me her little red shorts to prove that she was indeed freezing. They are shivering and the excuse is that there are no tanks to store heating oil.

Mr. Speaker, it is horrible to be taken for a ride like that. I see the minister standing over there. He should listen to me carefully so he will realize the terrible fraud and lie that have created that psychosis due to the so-called shortage of heating oil and gazoline. And the day when we will have to pay $1 or $1.10 for a gallon of gasoline and 75 cents for a gallon of heating oil, they will say that those products are plentiful and that we can get as much as we want throughout Canada. Their only purpose is to increase prices. Nobody dares say that but when they will impose it on the people it will be said: Look now, we have been forced by the international market.

Mr. Speaker, as to oil storage facilities in Quebec, it is nearly impossible to get a complete picture from the federal minister or the Quebec minister. The latter was in Ottawa yesterday, Mr. L'Allier, I believe. He is Quebec's energy minister, isn't he?

An hon. Member: Mr. L'Allier indeed.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It is indeed Mr. L'Allier. In leaving, he said—

Mr. Portelance: It is Mr. Massé.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): So, it was Mr. Massé who came yesterday?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Well, Mr. Massé then. In any case, he came and returned freezing. He said: I met with the minister in Ottawa and he had me convinced that I must freeze. So he went back and stated on television last night: "We will have to freeze because Ottawa told me so yesterday."

Mr. Speaker, Quebec does not know what storage facilities are available and Ottawa has no idea either. The report goes on as follows:

The most lucid analysis comes from Washington. On November 15 last, the deputy under-secretary of State for international resources—in Washington—Washington knows our storage facilities better than the Canadian Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Quebec Minister of Energy. We have to go to Washington to find out what are our storage facilities in Quebec or anywhere else in Canada for that matter. And the deputy under-secretary of State for international resources said to the Canadian committee on intergovernmental affairs, and I quote:

—that the stocks in Montreal were too low in comparison with the size of the metropolitan market.

Even if the stocks in eastern Canada reached about 40 consumer days, most of the crude oil and refined products are stocked in the Maritimes and Quebec . . . making it much more difficult to supply Montreal in a hurry in case of crisis.

Mr. Speaker, how is it that ten years ago our governments did not foresee that? Why did this crisis not happen last year? And why are we told now that we do not have enough storage facilities? Everything is full to the bursting point. In Come-by-Chance, Newfoundland, 3 million barrels of oil are stored and they are offered for sale to Montreal. The companies of that province are told: we cannot buy your oil because all our tanks are full yet we are condemned to freeze!

We find ourselves in that predicament because of the carelessness of the government which does not dare take its responsibilities although it is fully aware of the situation. Unfortunately it is through the red phone—not the red phone in Moscow but the red phone in Washington—that orders are given to the Minister of Energy in Canada and to the Canadian government and we are afraid of displeasing the Americans. So we tighten our belts and we freeze because our friends from the south, the Americans, order us to freeze.

Mr. Speaker, I said in the very first days of this crisis that they were trying to create a psychosis to lead us to an economic crisis. Let us consider the results so far. We have witnessed an increase in the cost of living. Yesterday and the day before we talked about higher prices for food, clothing and particularly cars, for which an increase of $150 has been announced. As far as food is concerned, we see an increase of 9.3 per cent. Mr. Speaker, shipping companies say they pay more for gasoline and oil are more expensive, so they have to post stiffer rates for transport.

The whole Canadian economy is headed for an economic crisis. We are not the only country to do so. It is a common practice in all countries that are said to be democratic, that is western countries.

NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns stated in Brussels on December 10—and his statement appeared in Le Droit of December 11, 1973—that the shortage created by the Arab countries in the whole world was the premonitory sign of an economic recession. But it is not the Arab problem that is prejudicial to us in Canada, for only 2 per cent of our oil supplies come from Arab countries. Most of our imported oil comes from Venezuela. The newly elected president said yesterday or the day before that there is no oil shortage in his country. However he said: "We are ready to bargain with Canada or the United States, provided some advantages be granted to Venezuela. This is quite normal and we would do the same for Canada. But there is no oil shortage in Venezuela and the new president of that country is willing to come to an agreement with us.

But the Arab countries are under pressure from the USSR to deprive countries that import oil from Saudi Arabia or any other oil-producing Arab state. And Mr. Luns said bluntly about the Arab oil embargo, and I quote:

—therefore the threat against western countries goes beyond the military.

● (1630)

While NATO people are talking about warfare, troops and national and international defence, the Secretary General says: Militarism is not the only reason to prevent Arabs from making a compromise with the western countries.

I quote what I have on hand:

Everyone knows that the present economic welfare of our countries is in serious danger of being hurt badly by the oil embargo enforced by Arab countries and that an economic recession could very well be on its way.

This is exactly what I said to the House about ten days ago. We are developing the new economic crisis, as we developed the one from 1929 to 1939, and once again I shall repeat what I said recently: We have had to put up with a 10-year crisis when we were sitting on mountains of wheat in Canada, when the Canadian production was destroyed, when misery was tolerated in the midst of abundance. Under the pretext of a world crisis, we were letting Canadians literally die of hunger at home.

Mr. Speaker, under the cover of the economic crisis, of the international oil crisis, while we are not lacking in anything in Canada today, they leave us in the cold. Yet, we can swim in an ocean of oil anywhere in Canada, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. Speaker, what amazes me is that—

An hon. Member: You are right!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Of course I am right! I can see a number of hon. members from the province of Quebec who are French Canadians like me and who find it funny—

An hon. Member: One could reply to that!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes, hit me, and I'll hit you right back!

Mr. Speaker, these guys do not even have the guts to stand up to defend their people who are being punished, while tanks in Montreal are filled to the lid with oil.

Golden Eagle Canada Limited refuses to deliver home heating oil in Rimouski, Mont-Joli and Lac Saint Jean. Distributors are told, we have quotas to meet, we set quotas for you. Quotas are imposed when we do not even know what to do to empty the tanks in Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, I will not swallow that political filth of asking people to make sacrifices, to tighten their belts when we already do not know what to do with the welath that exists in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am not the only one talking about an economic crisis. In the United States, the Congress is talking about it. The Secretary General of NATO is talking about it in Brussels. An economic crisis is being set up and we, in Canada, are getting ready to deal with it because that is what is happening in other countries. We are going to suffer because it is said of others that they are in distress.

Did we commiserate so much with the Third World, those who really suffer? Do we necessarily have to make Canadians suffer when we can guarantee security and wealth to our people besides extending massive aid to other countries that are in need of our help?

Mr. Speaker, Social Crediters do not accept the oil crisis, they do not accept that sudden change on the part of the government at a time when everybody, in both western and eastern Canada, is crying that we have wealth, that we have reserves for three centuries while a former premier of Newfoundland states that we are drowning in seas of oil in Newfoundland, in the Atlantic oil wells.

Mr. Speaker, all those resources can be tapped. We have again been told that the number of unemployed just increased by 30,000 or 35,000. Why not use this labour and get them interested in the development of our resources and oil to face the situation? One must help the others but let us begin by helping ourselves! An old saying goes: Charity begins at home. By "ourselves" I mean our constituents, the Canadian people. Let us provide them with security and freedom. Let us not have any surplus but at least security and freedom. Let us use our surplus to help the most underprivileged countries but for Heaven's sake let us begin by helping our fellow citizens, our disabled people, our families in need and all those who need assistance from the federal government and from the provincial, municipal and school authorities. Then as federal members we shall have served the best interests of our country and people.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question so as to clarify a point?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Go ahead.

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I was quite interested in listening to the hon. member for Témiscamingue but it seems to me that we have been served a demagogical speech. I went through the article published in today's La Presse and line 7 precisely deals with the export of "bunker fuel", of industrial heating oil. The hon. member did not give this detail.

You are aware that the home heating oil is extracted from the industrial heating oil or «bunker fuel» which leaves only a very small amount of lower quality heating oil. The Quebec region is not short of industrial heating oil but of home heating oil. One more, I repeat that heating oil has already been extracted from the heavy oil. I suggest that this detail is most important.

● (1640)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not know if there is question that should be replied to, but I will allow the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) to reply.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, there was no question but rather a statement from the member.

[Translation]

I read exactly what the hon. member has just said: "bunker fuel"—

An hon. Member: It is still a residue.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Yes it is. Now we speak about oil. We can produce fuel oil in Quebec or buy it already refined from Newfoundland. All our tanks in Montreal are full. For that reason, they say, we cannot buy the oil that the Sheahan Corporation in Newfoundland is ready to sell us.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That corporation is not producing yet.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): It doesn't produce oil but it offers to sell to the province of Quebec three million barrels of oil and we say that we cannot buy it because our tanks are full. This winter we shall say: We would buy it but the transportation facilities cannot be used in winter time when the minister knows perfectly well that the Atlantic ocean is full of salt water that does not freeze in winter and where ships can continue to navigate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We have just enough oil now. The hon. member is talking about surpluses of refined oil.

[English]

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take some of the time left before private members' hour to begin to deal with the supply allocation bill related to energy products that we have before us and its relationship to the province of Saskatchewan, particularly the area of Assiniboia which I have the honour to represent. I am pleased to have the opportunity to make known some of my opinions with regard to energy in Canada.

We in the New Democratic Party agree in principle with the energy supplies emergency bill. If there is going to be a crisis there is a need for a board with the kind of power, through an order in council, that would enable it to make a co-ordinated effort to alleviate any undue hardship that may hit Canadians in the area east of the Ottawa Valley. There is no question about that. Some parts of the bill still need amendment, and one area is in the lessening of environmental requirements and standards within Canada. I believe that part of the bill needs to be reviewed.

Second, in the allocation of oil supplies one must take the independent wholesalers into consideration. I want to make an appeal to my colleague from Regina East (Mr. Balfour) who has taken on some of the responsibility of attempting to co-ordinate the energy policy of the Conservative Party, whatever it may be. With reference to the party's recent statement that they are going to filibuster this legislation, I wish to say to them that though they may have changes to recommend—I think that is good and we, too, may have some changes to recommend—the filibustering of this bill with have very serious implications for Canadians east of the Ottawa Valley. I point to an example that has been brought to my attention by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) of a situation that has developed in Toronto which illustrates the need for strengthening the allocation provisions of this bill in order to ensure that the smaller companies can get their supplies from the major companies.

The hon. member pointed out that a company called Cotain Plastics Products Limited in Toronto, which employs 36 people and manufactures plastics, is dependent for its supply of polyethylene, necessary in the manufacture of their product, on Dow Chemical of Sarnia and an American company known as Allied Chemicals. At this point in time, Dow Chemical and Allied Chemicals have cut off oil supplies this company needs for the manufacture of plastics. This small company has been forced to close its doors, thus creating a hardship for many ordinary workers in Toronto this coming winter. If we are to deal with this legislation let us, even though it may need amending, deal with it expeditiously, in order to meet any crisis which certain Canadians may face during the harsh winter months.

● (1650)

In the last few days, provinces which usually are not in the forefront of the national scene have come to the fore because it has been recognized at the national level how important are the commodities, oil and natural gas, which are produced in those provinces. Therefore, I shall talk about the oil situation in Saskatchewan, and its implications for Canada. I want to discuss the impact on Saskatchewan of the provincial government's oil policy, as this was discussed in the provincial legislature of Saskatchewan this week.

Speaking on behalf of many citizens of Saskatchewan, may I say that I was astounded at the misinterpretation of the remarks made by the premier of Saskatchewan to the people of Saskatchewan earlier this week. I shall deal with the situation in Saskatchewan. Then, I shall deal with the kinds of policies enunciated by the government of Saskatchewan to meet the situation. Then, I shall refer to the possible effects of that policy on other provincial governments, and, indeed, on future energy policy in Canada.

The present oil reserves of Saskatchewan are some 800 million barrels. Our rate of discovery of new reserves has levelled off in the last seven years. Although our rate of discovery of new reserves has levelled off, our production rate continues at 80 million barrels per day. At that production rate, the oil fields of Saskatchewan will have a life span of at least ten years and, at most, of 15 years. Of course, if we discover more reserves through exploration, the life span of Saskatchewan fields will be extended.

Let me say that the private interests, the oil corporations, which have developed our oil resources have been well rewarded for developing those oil resources. May I add, in parenthesis, that natural gas in Saskatchewan has always been under the charge of the Saskatchewan Power Corporation, a public body. Natural gas is one area where there has not been a price increase in Saskatchewan, mainly because gas comes under public ownership and the resource has been utilized in a proper manner.

The oil companies have been well rewarded. Let me quote some figures relating to Saskatchewan. By 1964, the oil industry collectively had found and sold enough oil to recover the costs of exploration and production. Since 1964, Mr. Speaker, $800 million in profits have been taken from Saskatchewan. Until recently, prices ranged between $2 and $2.50 per barrel. Compare that price with present rising prices. In view of high world prices, multinational oil companies operating in Saskatchewan, and in Alberta, now have an opportunity to amass massive profits from Saskatchewan. They can use that capital for the development of oil elsewhere in Canada, that is true. On the other hand, the multinationals can use those capital funds for the development of oil fields anywhere in the world. They can take millions upon millions of dollars from Saskatchewan by way of profits from oil and other natural resources and invest that money anywhere they like. That cannot be tolerated by any level of government be it the provincial government of Saskatchewan, the federal government of Canada, or the government of any country.

We must make sure in the public interest that resources derived from development in Saskatchewan and massive profits taken from oil produced in Saskatchewan are used for development, expansion, exploration, research and refining in the province of Saskatchewan. The multinational corporations should not be allowed to take their money out and invest it anywhere on the globe, as they see fit. May I call it five o'clock? I wish to expand on my remarks at eight o'clock.

[Mr. Knight.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform this House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-176, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Crown Liability Act and the Official Secrets Act, with an amendment to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Send it back.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 40 I must advise the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter)—Fisheries—Proposed licensing policy for east coast fishermen—Social implications in Newfoundland; the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)—Regional economic expansion—Proposal to establish regional offices—Position of northern Ontario; the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon)—Air transport—Head tax on passengers—Suggested change for passengers using feeder airlines.

[English]

Mr. Lefebvre: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that negotiations have gone on between the parties and there would be agreement to spend the first few minutes of the private members' hour giving third reading to Bill S-7, standing in the name of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) and, following that, to consider notice of motion for the production of papers No. 91, standing in the name of the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier).

WAYS AND MEANS

EXCISE TAX ACT—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps, before we reach private members' hour, I might be allowed to make a brief ruling following the point of order which was brought up. Earlier today when government orders were called, the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) raised a point of order as to the validity of the notice of ways and means with respect to the Excise Tax Act tabled in this House on December 11, 1973. The Leader of the Opposition sought to persuade the Chair and the House that the notice of ways and means should be divided on the ground that it contains more than one proposition, so that hon. members should be given an opportunity to vote on each separate proposition, if that be the wish of hon. members. I refer specifically to the opportunity to vote since, according to the Standing Orders, there is no debate on a motion such as this one but only an opportunity to divide.

Hon. members were generous enough to allow the Chair some time to consider the arguments advanced by the hon. Leader of the Opposition and the views expressed at the same time by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). As hon. members know, I am sure, the authority of the Chair in respect of the division of questions is extremely limited. It has never been exercised in relation to the notice of a bill.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition did cite as a precedent a decision of Mr. Speaker MacNaughton who divided a motion dealing with the adoption of a national flag on the ground—and this was the finding of Mr. Speaker MacNaughton—that there were two separate questions for the House to consider. The House will appreciate that on that previous occasion the House had before it one single question to be decided in one single step. Members were not considering a bill, or were not considering one of the several steps in the legislative process. However, in the proceeding before us now, the House is asked to consider a formal motion preceding the introduction of a bill or bills founded on the motion.

An examination of precedents confirms that there is no previous occasion when a motion preceding a bill was divided. The hour or more which was allowed to the Chair to look into precedents, citations and standing orders was used, with the assistance of the Table, to try to determine whether there were any precedents which might guide us to reach the decision the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) would have liked the Chair to reach.

Hon. members know there are records of many ways and means motions which contain varied and diverse propositions in respect of taxation. There are a number of precedents I could quote. One or two were reported in the Journals of the House for June 19, 1971 where Mr. Benson, a member of the Queen's Privy Council, laid upon the table notice of ways and means motion to amend the Income Tax Act and other acts and later a notice of ways and means motion to amend the Excise Tax Act and Old Age Security Act.

I can assure hon. members there are a large number of similar precedents which indicate that a notice of ways and means motion refers to not one single question, but to diverse and different and complex questions. On the basis of long established practice, therefore, the Chair would find it very difficult to rule that this particular ways and means motion ought to be divided.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) suggested that in effect there are not two questions contained in this notice. He argued there is but one proposition stated in two parts, but both dealing with the imposition of a charge or tax on the exportation of crude oil from Canada. I am sure there is much to be said on either side of this argument, that is the point of view expressed by the Leader of the Opposition and the point of view expressed in opposition thereto by the President of the Privy Council.

Without going into the substance of the question, and without going into this aspect of the matter, looking at the situation from a strictly procedural standpoint and bearing in mind the precedents, the Chair would have to rule that it is not competent to divide the question before us at the present time.

The point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is also very interesting, but perhaps premature. His point will no doubt be raised and argued more fully at a later stage.

I can assure hon. members that with the assistance of the Table officers, I have given most serious consideration to the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition. I recognize it is a very important point, one which ought to be taken most seriously. However, as I said, I do not think I would be justified to establish a precedent by accepting the argument that was advanced by the Leader of the Opposition and I have to rule accordingly.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that earlier today the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) did not intend to divide the House on the resolution, but merely sought to divide the resolution. In other words, he does not want to divide the House, just the resolution. On the basis of Your Honour's ruling, I wonder whether the resolution could now be called.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance) moved:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to impose a charge on the export of crude oil from Canada and to impose an oil export tax under the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That a charge be imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of crude oil exported from Canada during any month commencing with February, 1974, in such amount, not exceeding $4.00, as may be prescribed in a tariff of charges for that month made by order of the Governor in Council after considering the recommendation of the National Energy Board, and that the charge

(a) be paid by the person holding a licence under Part VI of the National Energy Board Act for the exportation of oil from Canada and under whose licence the crude oil is purported to be exported, and

(b) be administered, enforced and collected by the National Energy Board.

2. That in respect of the export of crude oil from Canada during the period commencing on October 1, 1973, and ending on February 1, 1974, the Excise Tax Act be amended to provide among other things that a tax be imposed, levied and collected on each barrel of crude oil so exported to be paid by the person holding a licence under Part VI of the National Energy Board Act for the exportation of oil from Canada and under whose licence the crude oil is purported to be exported, and that the tax on each barrel of crude oil so exported from Canada

(a) in the month of October, 1973, be at the rate of forty cents per barrel,

(b) in the month of November, 1973, be at the rate of forty cents per barrel,

(c) in the month of December, 1973, be at the rate of $1.90 per barrel, and

Dental Examining Board

(d) in the month of January, 1974, be at the rate of $2.20 per barrel.

3. That crude oil for the purpose of the said measure be defined as

(a) any crude oil or other hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbons recovered in liquid or solid state from a natural reservoir in Canada, and

(b) any natural gasoline or condensate resulting from the production in Canada, processing in Canada, or refining in Canada, of gas within the meaning ascribed to that expression by section 80.1 of the National Energy Board Act.

and includes any hydrocarbon or mixture of hydrocarbon that is produced by extraction from oil sands and is not on October 1, 1973 a refinery oil product within the meaning of section 24 of the National Energy Board Part VI Regulations.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members business. The hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Lefebvre) indicated a moment ago there is agreement as to the order of business to be considered. The first item stands in the name of the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton).

THE NATIONAL DENTAL EXAMINING BOARD OF CANADA

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH NAME, EXPAND POWERS AND OBJECTIVES

Mr. S. Victor Railton (Welland) moved that Bill S-7, respecting The National Dental Examining Board of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Railton moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I not only have to thank you, sir, but also the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier) whose time I have borrowed. I hope today's business will not take too long. I just wish to say that Bill S-7 was initiated in the Senate. I am simply the sponsor of the bill. The bill received first reading, second reading and went to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders. It was duly amended by certain motions which were brought before the committee and reported to the House.

As the bill states, it is simply to change the examinations of dentists and dental specialists in order to have uniformity throughout Canada so the standard will be kept high and there will be portability. The deletion of dental auxiliaries was done by motions or amendments which I will present with the bill. I ask Your Honour's permission to have third reading of the bill.

[Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton).]

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I do not plan to speak very long on this bill, mainly because I can now accept it as amended. It is a much better bill than the one approved earlier by the other place and sent to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders.

It was my pleasure to sit on that committee for my party, and to take part in the examination of Bill S-7. I expressed concern at that time over some of the provisions of the bill that would place what I considered to be excessive authority in the hands of the Royal College of Dentists of Canada and in the hands of the National Dental Examining Board.

In the original bill, it was intended that the National Dental Examining Board, with the approval of the Royal College of Dentists, would be vested with the authority to examine dentists, dental hygienists, dental assistants and auxiliaries to dentistry. These examinations would be given to determine the acceptability of such people to gain licenses, without which they would not be able to practice their professions.

The powers implicit in that wording were unacceptable on at least two counts. First, such powers would be excessive and I would be apprehensive of the tendency of people who hold excessive power to abuse that power. In the second place, some of those professionals listed in the category of auxiliaries to dentistry come under the jurisdiction of the various provincial licensing agencies.

I could not agree to this transfer of responsibility and authority from provincial to federal jurisdiction unless I could see written approval from each of the provinces to such a transfer. Some provinces tend to take their jurisdictions very seriously, and rightly so. I do not see how we could contribute to good order and stability in the dental profession by creating ill will between provinces and the federal government over which has licensing jurisdiction throughout the profession. If there are to be changes in this process, it must be done through negotiation, not by legislation.

I mention these things, Mr. Speaker, not because there is a danger in the present bill that such authority will be granted to the National Dental Examining Board, but because it had been in the original bill, and obviously the originator of this bill had such blanket authority in mind. By mentioning this, I served notice that I would oppose any move in the future to use this legislation as a door opener. It would be very easy for someone to propose an innocent-appearing motion to amend the legislation that would result from the passage of this bill. We often deal with bills in this House that seek to make a simple amendment to existing legislation, and they are rarely defeated.

The clause in the original Bill S-7 sought to have auxiliaries to dentistry included with dental practitioners for licensing purposes, and when it was in committee I raised the question of denturists and asked if they were considered to be auxiliaries to dentistry. I learned that they were in fact considered as such. However, as the bill now stands, with these amendments and the word 'auxiliaries' being deleted, we in this party will lend support.

• (1710)

In closing, may I say I approve the provisions contained in this bill? They will lead to a streamlining of the responsibilities and functions of the Royal College of Dentists and the Royal Dental Examining Board. This is a good step, and it could lead to other measures which would benefit both the profession and the people at large. I am pleased to lend the support of my party to the bill and to assist in its speedy passage.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It is my understanding that the House will now proceed to consideration of Motion No. 91 in the name of the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR COPIES OF PROGRAM FORECAST AND BUDGETS A, B, X

Mr. Terry Grier (Toronto-Lakeshore) moved:

That an order of the House do issue for a complete copy (including budgets A, B, X) of the program forecast (program review) by the department of Transport for the latest year for which parliament approved departmental expenditures.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is yet another in a series of discussions in the House of the principles which underlie this motion and which underlie a number of similar motions standing in my name. I do not propose this afternoon to repeat the arguments I have put forward in previous weeks. I wish, however, to reply to some of the contentions which were made last week or the week before by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) who replied on behalf of the government party to my representations.

In the first place, the hon. member for Nipissing stated, and I quote him:

The government has kept confidential the documents which assisted it in arriving at decisions because its responsibility to parliament and the people is to answer only after decisions have been taken.

The hon. member is correct in the technical, constitutional or legal sense when he makes that statement. But in the statement I have quoted he referred to the taking of a decision, and I want to suggest that the decision the government takes in respect of legislation is not a decision to act but a decision to propose measures to parliament. Until parliament approves the legislation the government lacks authority to act. So, what I am seeking in my motion is information which would acquaint members of the House as to the basis upon which the government made its decision to propose a particular piece of legislation. I suggest that the verdict of parliament upon such legislation would be the better for being better informed as to the reasons behind the government's proposals.

I am not questioning the government's right to act in an executive capacity by order in council or its undoubted right to implement legislation of which parliament has approved. I am suggesting, however, that the reasons for deciding to bring a particular proposal before parliament may validly be presented to members of parliament, not merely in speeches by ministers and government supporters, but by means of supporting documentation which was available to the government itself as it took its original decision.

In the second place, the hon. member for Nipissing, and I quote him again, stated:

Under the committee system, after decisions have been made, opportunities are available to Members of Parliament to demand explanations and to ask why certain things have been done.

Again, the hon. member for Nipissing is correct in a technical sense. It is true that in the committee we have an opportunity to demand explanations. But in the first place we do not always get those explanations and, in the second place, when we do, they are seldom adequate. Then again, valuable committee time which is now taken up as members seek information which could already have been given to them might then be more constructively used to examine the purpose and implications of a proposal in greater depth.

The hon. member for Nipissing went on to say of me:

He wants to push this matter further . . . so that parliament has the power over decision-making prior to decisions being made, by reviewing administrative documents submitted to the cabinet by individual ministers.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking the power to judge decisions which have not been taken. I am seeking reasons for decisions which have been taken.

Supporters of the government, and I include the hon. member, acknowledge the complexity of the decision-making process, the complicated system of committees within the Privy Council structure, and so on, and they have admitted that in arriving at a final determination the government must go through a lengthy and involved procedure. Why should members of parliament not be allowed access to at least part of the information which the government itself believes to be essential in arriving at a course of action? If the government, in order to arrive at a decision, requires volumes of information, evaluations and so on, surely it follows logically that parliament, which is asked to approve proposals placed before it, should be in possession of some, at least, of that information?

May I again quote the hon. member for Nipissing? He went on to say of me:

• (1720)

He wants the whole kit and caboodle; and he wants it all produced to individual members of parliament before the decisions are made. What is even worse, after decisions are made by the government, he wants to have the power of hindsight in respect of all those documents so he can review the decision-making process and try to pick holes in it.

I suggest that that comment betrays a certain partisan defensiveness and a misinterpretation of parliament's role.

We are not here to pick holes for the sake of picking holes. But we are here to correct mistakes before they are visited upon the public.

The hon. member for Nipissing then suggested that my proposal would be delaying the whole parliamentary process. I suggest, on the contrary, my proposal might speed it up. Because if at least part of my proposal were followed through, we could avoid hours our partisan wrangling and sparring over basic information that commonsense dictates should already be in our possession. The hon. member for Nipissing then went on to say:

> When we look at the whole process of government and the way ideas are fed into the system, we can see how impossible it becomes to expect that all this information leading to government policy could be analysed, classified and fed to someone who has trouble with the blue book.

By the "blue book" I assume the hon. member is referring to the estimates. It seems to me that that comment cultivates and encourages the mystique, which in turn, leads to the obsession with secrecy that surrounds not only this government but, I suspect, all governments in this country. It cultivates the mystique that we are amateurs unable to cope with the professional and expert documentation that the government has at its disposal, that somehow we are incapable of assimilating a lot of information. If that is true of us, then surely, Mr. Speaker, it is true of the members of the cabinet themselves, some of whom are not long into their portfolios, and the behaviour of some of whom portrays at the very least a certain amateurism.

Since government supporters of recent weeks have implied that the cabinet or ministers cannot only decide on the basis of the kind of information that is made available in the estimates, then why should we be expected to be able to decide? The trouble with the estimates blue book—I mention this because this is the basic source of reference that members have available to them in considering government expenditures and proposals—is not that it contains too much information but that it contains too little real information. A sea of figures is not necessarily a sea of facts, and in no sense is it a sea of wisdom.

I suggest that the comments of the hon. member for Nipissing betray what I might call an over-all patronising tone, that somewhow the complexities of government are rather beyond ordinary backbenchers and members of opposition parties, and that if we leave it to the government they will provide us with all we really need to know. I assume that the inference to be drawn from this is that the sooner we give our approval to legislation and expenditure proposals, the better.

To be fair about this, I do not suggest that this is a disease that is common only to Liberal governments. I know it to be true of the Conservative government of the province of Ontario, and I should not be at all surprised if New Democratic governments in their jurisdictions incline toward the same point of view. My concern is with a principle that I think ought to be established more fully in our parliamentary system. I emphasize this point because I am really not here to score partisan points. I am trying to assert—though I may say it is difficult in this parliament, which is nothing if not partisan—that there is an important principle here and it is a principle to which I do not think enough attention has been paid.

Having taken issue with a number of the points made by the hon. member for Nipissing, I want to express my appreciation to him for the way in which he dealt with the central principle none the less. Although he does not agree with me, he at least devoted his entire speech to the basic subject, and I appreciate that.

I have one final point to make, Mr. Speaker. I want to contrast the volume of information that is available to ordinary members of the elected assembly, both nationally and in the provinces, with the amount of information that is available to ordinary elected members of council at the municipal level of government. I admit that we are dealing with a different structure when we talk about municipal decision making. But at the same time we are talking about a wide range of far-reaching decisions, decisions with great implications for the future of our society which are made by elected, rather ordinary men and women, involving the expenditure, in this country globally, of hundreds of billions of dollars a year.

I know that when members of municipal councils come to decide upon a course of action, it is not a question of one or two members of council secreting unto themselves the documentation underlying a certain proposal and telling the other members of council to take it or leave it. It is a question of each member of council having available to him or to her all the information that is available to any member, be that member the mayor or a member of board of control or a member of the executive council, depending on the precise structure of that municipal council.

I suggest there is no evidence whatever that the provision of this kind of information to the municipal councils of Canada has inhibited the proper consideration of proposals, that it has worked against the public interest, that the confidences implicit in this information have been betrayed. None of this has happened and there is no evidence that it has. On the contrary, I suggest that the decisions that are taken at municipal council meetings are probably as well informed as, and I suggest in my many cases better informed than—I speak here of the amount of knowledge shared by all of the eld elected members on that council—decisions that are taken either in this House or in the provincial legislatures. Whatever be the merits of the decision that is taken at the municipal level, in my experience it is most often a decision based on a very large input of information and a very substantial contribution from most members. Each member is privy to the same considerations, evaluations and documentation as the proposer of the proposition.

Without drawing too broad an analogy between the municipal levels and the provincial and federal levels of government, I suggest that we have seen the principle of maximizing information at work, particularly in recent years, most successfully in the more sophisticated councils, and it has worked well. The citizen has benefited. The citizen is better informed because his representatives are better informed, and in the end the decision itself is the better for it.

I think that in sessions to come—and I would hope in the next session of parliament—the government should seriously consider reviewing its procedures and criteria and should the range of documents and information made available to members of parliament. In my colleagues names there stand on the order paper scores of motions calling for evaluation studies. There are at least 22 more motions, in my name, of a similar nature. Hon. members may be pleased to hear that I do not propose to quote them seriatim. All these motions, mine and those of my colleagues, point toward the same principle that decisions are being made at the executive level which involve billions of dollars, the wisdom of which we have to take largely on the say of the ministry.

The ministry would not be unique if it did not put its own activities in the best light. But the role of the opposition, the role of parliament, is not merely to act as a "clack" for the executive. I suggest that if we had more information at our disposal we could carry on our traditional function more effectively. I suggest, for what it is worth, that if we had more information some of the political snarkiness and partisan backbiting might recede so that we could do a good job on some of the issues which the public would like us to deal with.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it must be pointed out that this is the fifth time the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier) has had this House debate the matter of departmental program forecasts.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Good for him.

Mr. Turner (London East): Good, yes. I am still not perfectly clear, however, whether the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has raised these motions as a matter of principle or as a dedicated search for knowledge. The Treasury Board calls for the program forecasts of departments so that a wide array of potential program matters can be assembled at one point in time and examined on an integrated basis. These program forecasts are tentative plans only: they are proposals developed by public servants within the particular mandate of an individual department. When they are being prepared, few restrictions are made on their scope and individual departments submit their proposals without any full appreciation of the total policy, priority or financial parameters that the Treasury Board will use when selecting appropriated resource allocations.

Invariably, the total amount proposed in the program forecasts of all departments collectively greatly exceeds the available resources that the government can direct to both new and ongoing programs. The program forecasts are prepared many months in advance. I believe departments begin work late in the year on forecasts that lead to the main estimates for a fiscal year that will not even begin until about 18 months later and will end about 30 months after the initial planning. The projections that are included in program forecasts for additional future years would, of course, be even less well defined. Prior to the Treasury Board's examination of the program forecasts, the cabinet must review both their longer-range and their short-range objectives and priorities. Revenues from taxes and other sources must be estimated and the general economic situation for Canada during the year under study must be evaluated.

Transport Budget Forecast

Within this framework, selections must be made from the many competing proposals, and most departments will be disappointed by the number of their plans which do not receive support. After extensive consideration by cabinet ministers, the results of the program review are reported to the individual departments. It is my understanding, however, that departments are not required to edit or correct their program forecasts after the decisions have been reached. As they were only tentative proposals in the first place, their primary usefulness has been served and the departments shift their attention to the details of preparing their main estimates submissions in accordance with the results of the program review.

The end product, of course, is the annual blue book. This is one of the main reasons the program forecasts of departments are treated as internal documents. Proposals prepared by public servants so far in advance of the date of execution, and without full awareness of total government considerations, should not be subjected to intense review by members of parliament using the wisdom of hindsight. This, surely, would tend to discourage the development of imaginative proposals in the future.

In addition to this principle of confidentiality there is a practical flaw in what this motion proposes. Information is a delicate commodity and it is only useful if it fits the purpose. It is easy to have too much information and not enough knowledge. I believe that the adoption of this motion would produce an excess of information but very little additional knowledge or understanding. I am sure we all agree that the confidentiality of the government's spending proposals is such that no information concerning main estimates could be generally released to all members of parliament prior to the tabling of the estimates. This occurs in February, and our standing committees then have until the end of May to study the estimates in considerable detail.

The blue book each year contains over 600 pages of detailed information in each of the official languages, or over 1,200 pages in total. It is my opinion that the availability of many times that amount of information, which still would have to be studied within the same time-frame if the operations of government were to continue, would be more of a distraction than a help in our search for knowledge and understanding of the estimates. And this would be the situation if each member of this House received a copy of the program forecast for every department and agency.

We all have full schedules: we must divide our time wisely between our constituency duties and our work in the House. Appropriation acts are important, but there also is a large amount of other legislation that we must study and debate intelligently. In considering the main estimates, I doubt whether many members would have the time to study this additional information or, in fact, would need it to enhance their understanding. Our standing committees provide ample opportunity for detailed examination of particular programs in the estimates, through the questioning of ministers and officials. Additional written information can be obtained from these officials if a committee member so requests. But selectivity is the key to knowledge here, not tons of information.

It may be that the real problem for the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore is that he has not yet learned to make full use of the information that is already provided to him. I noted in Hansard for last May 24, when the hon. member spoke to an identical motion concerning the program forecasts for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, that he made some remarks concerning the blue book, the estimates. He referred to the blue book as a "veritable sea of figures". He pointed out that he was a new member in this House and "perhaps a member who has been here for a generation or longer may be able to find his way through them". He conceded that the presentation of estimates had been altered somewhat in recent years, but he still found that the blue book's program descriptions and outlines of objectives shed no light on the expenditure programs detailed in its pages. Frankly, I find this difficult to understand.

The hon. member seems to believe that the way to comprehend this "sea of figures" is to dilute it by adding 10 or 20 times as many figures. He wants to count the branches on the trees and forget about the forest. As the hon. member has indicated that he does not understand what the blue book is all about, perhaps a few words of guidance would be appropriate. Of the 600 pages in the blue book, the first 50 provide valuable summary information. There is a description of the contents of the book and the method in which the information is presented. This is followed by a number of statistical tables. These tables provide total information by department covering both budgetary and non-budgetary expenditures, and also show breakdowns in terms of operating, capital and grants and contributions' spending.

Another table deals with man-years by department. There are presentations of the estimates by the various functions of government and by standard objects. Another table presents major budgetary items showing the division between estimates to be voted and those that are statutory. In these tables, the new estimates are compared to the estimates for the present year. There is a wealth of information for a new member to digest in just these first 50 pages of the blue book. They provide comparative data which indicate clearly the major areas of importance established by the government.

The blue book then presents considerably more detail on the programs of each department and agency. The estimates of the Secretariat of State, for example, run to some 60 pages in the 1973-74 blue book, and those for the Ministry of Transport cover 50 pages. Each departmental section begins with a general summary. This is followed by a subsection for each program. The various votes, statutory amounts and non-budgetary items are shown for the program. Then the program's estimates are displayed against the component activities, showing expenditures for operating, capital grants and contributions and non-budgetary items. Any revenues or free services received by the program also are displayed.

There is a brief written description for each program, including a statement of its objectives and sub-objectives. Expenditures also are displayed by standard objects. There are details on the manpower planned for the program. Grants and contributions are itemized. In all cases the new estimates are compared to the current year, and in several tables the actual expenditures for the previous year also are shown.

The subject of the motion today is the production of the program forecast for the Treasury Board. Section 28 of the 1973-74 blue book contains 13 pages of information on the Treasury Board, including the National Research Council of Canada which reports through the President of the Treasury Board. I will not go into full detail, but I would like to point out that the Treasury Board's estimates are displayed under three programs: central administration of the public service, government contingencies and centrally-financed programs, and employer contributions to employee benefit plans. The program concerned with the central administration of the public service is broken down into six activities: expenditure, management; personnel management; evaluation and planning; administrative policy; departmental administration; contributions to superannuation accounts. The expenditure, management, activity has an authorized level of 100 man-years. I would like to read the description of this activity that is contained in the blue book. It reads as follows:

> Expenditure, management—On the basis of the analysis of departmental plans and programs to recommend to the government the acceptance or modification of specific expenditure proposals in order to: reflect the priorities which the government assigns to the objectives; increase the effectiveness of existing and proposed programs; increase the efficiency with which the manpower, facilities, equipment, materials and supplies are used in the operation of programs; and to develop the estimates for the approval of parliament.

I understand that the 100 man-years in this expenditure, management, activity—with considerable help from the other 555 program man-years in activities such as planning and evaluation, personnel management and administrative policy—are devoted full-time to the examination of the various expenditure plans of departments and agencies, not the least of which are the program forecasts.

If the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore is having difficulty comprehending 600 pages of blue book information, I doubt that he could do a better job with 10 or 20 times that amount of supporting program forecast data. A large number of man-years at the Treasury Board are devoted to integrating the program forecasts of individual departments into a comprehensive package that is related to the over-all objectives of the government and to the available resources.

I would think that the departmental program forecasts would only be meaningful when they were examined in such a total context. Efforts by opposition members to select isolated proposals for scrutiny would not be a contribution to the better understanding of the government's intentions; and clearly it would be impossible, given the volume of data and the time available, for any member of this House to make comprehensive use of all the program forecasts.

The hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore suggested in earlier remarks on this subject that he would settle for some form of edited version of the program forecasts. I submit that such an edited version already exists and is presented to all members of parliament and to the public. It is called the blue book. This is the book that individual members of parliament should in their studies deal with proposed government expenditures. It is not a perfect document and it could stand improvement, but it is of considerable value when properly understood.

I think that if this motion were adopted it would result in a large waste of public funds in terms of thousands of printed pages of material delivered to members of parliament and probably the Senate that not only would not be read but would probably fill up half the office space on Parliament Hill. Surely this is not what we would consider as progress in our examination of the government's expenditure proposals.

In closing, I wish to state again my objection to this motion and recommend to the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore that he earnestly study the contents of the blue book and then ask himself whether he need take up any more of the valuable time of this House in seeking information that he does not really need.

Mr. Grier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member who has just spoken referred to a speech that I made in May when I admitted that, as a new member, I had difficulty in finding my way around the blue book and I was questioning whether it had all the values that the hon. member ascribes to it. I want to tell him that I am now a few months older, a little less new, and I find the blue book even less helpful than I had thought it might be.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I have difficulty in accepting that kind of point of order. In effect, the hon. member is answering the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner), and I think he should not seek the floor unless he has a real point of order which concerns the proceedings of the House.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Grier), when he raises motions and inquiries of this sort, is in effect filling one of the roles of an opposition member. I think they have an obligation to speak out and to secure as much information as they can, no matter whether it eventually ends up in the waste-basket or in their closets as material which they can read when they are no longer serving as members of parliament. There is a large amount of information available to all hon. members. I think the hon. member, in presenting the motion in this way, has indicated that he wants information of a special type on a particular subject—and I think, frankly, that he is entitled to ask for it.

It has been my experience, in the very short time I have been here, that this government is probably the least secretive government that we have ever had in this chamber. I think the opposition parties weaken their own case when they sincerely seek information such as the hon. member has done here and then put on the order paper not five, ten, fifteen or twenty questions, but 259 motions for the production of papers. It is pretty difficult, then, to take them seriously and to believe they are sincere. It seems to me they should zero in on areas where they really want papers and where the government would be hard-pressed to come up with arguments as to why they should not be produced. Perhaps the debates would then be better debates. I am somewhat suspicious of the sincerity of opposition members when I see on the order paper 259 motions for the production of papers.

Second, on cursory examination today I noted that 3,424 questions have been placed on the order paper this session. The Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Reid) has indicated that 80 per cent to 85 per cent of them have been answered. However, the opposition still say, "We want answers to the other 15 per cent." It may be precisely those questions which are the ones that should have been placed on the order paper in the first instance and should not have been smothered and buried under 3,424 others. It seems to me that if members of the opposition concentrated on questions to which they legitimately wanted answers, they would not weaken but would in fact strengthen their position. It is very easy to answer many questions.

● (1750)

Mr. Gleave: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cullen: Yes.

Mr. Gleave: Is the hon. member trying to leave the impression that there is any operation of government which is not legitimately subject to the scrutiny of members of this House?

Mr. Cullen: No, Mr. Speaker. I think the hon. member was probably talking to his colleague rather than listening to my comments. I made just the opposite point. I think each department is subject to scrutiny, questioning and motions for the production of papers; but I do not think this scrutiny requires 3,424 questions and 259 motions. The point I am making is that members of the opposition parties, by putting that number of questions and notices of motions for the production of papers on the order paper, in fact weaken their case.

From my experience as a former parliamentary secretary, I can say that when we looked at many of the questions which came to our department we found them extremely easy to answer; and if we found that one out of 15 questions was difficult to answer, it was very easy for us to say we would answer 14 but would have to delay the answer to the fifteenth because it was too difficult, because we did not have the information, because the information was confidential or for some other reason. I say that you weaken your own case, when you are going after a particular department, if you ask too many questions and put on the order paper too many notices of motions for the production of papers.

Every department should be subject to the most careful scrutiny by members of the opposition and by members of the government party. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that before a minister produces a bill or a policy he has to clear it with his backbenchers. This is an area where we can focus on the things we are interested in, rather than blanketing the minister with 50 questions, of which only five are tough, with the result that he answers the other 45 first.

I think hon. members opposite could make better use of the money that has been made available to opposition parties for research and in that way find out what, in effect, is in the blue book of estimates. If the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has difficulty in that respect, I sympathize with him. However, I suggest that opposition members should make use of their research staff to zero in on their particular fields of concern without trying to become experts on the whole book, because that is impossible even for members of the Treasury Board. By making proper use of research facilities and staff we can find out what we want and then put questions on the order paper that make more sense. This would put the government in a position where it would have no other course than to answer those questions because it would look ridiculous if it allowed them to remain on the order paper.

As I have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, this government has been the least secretive of any. It was on this government's initiative that funds were made available to opposition parties so that their members could do better research, become better informed and be in a better position to question ministers.

I agree with the removal of estimates from committee of the whole and referring them to the appropriate standing committees so that members of those committees can become experts in particular fields. I defy any member of this House to say that he can become an expert in every field for which we have responsibility in parliament; but by having a special standing committee dealing with particular estimates, by using the blue book and the research staff and by doing a little digging on his own, a member of parliament need not feel frustrated. Also, the information he needs can be obtained from the minister during committee hearings. I am proud of this government for making money available to opposition parties so they can do a better job in carrying out their responsibilities. However, Mr. Speaker, I must say it was much more fun in the previous parliament when I was sitting opposite the NDP benches and could hear their interjections.

I listened very carefully to the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore. I thought he made a rather weak analogy when comparing city councils to this chamber. City councils work to develop a particular project and budget. I point out that all the information in the blue book is available to cabinet ministers, but I do not think each of them reads all the material that has to do with another minister's responsibilities. However, the principle suggested by the hon. member has some merit.

The hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) has pointed out that it would be very costly to circulate all this information. It seems to me that if the opposition parties each selected one of their member to serve on a shadow cabinet—as I understand is done unofficially at the present time—possibly all this information could be made available to that particular expert, so that if he were questioning the Minister of Transport, for example, the member also would have all the information available to the minister. This is an approach that could be considered. In this situation I suggest that not only would selective material be made available, but in fact all the information that was available to the minister. But, of course, we would run into the difficulty of finding enough members of the NDP to form a shadow cabinet, as will be the case particularly after the next election.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are not shadows; we are real.

[Mr. Cullen.]

Mr. Cullen: I would have much more to say, Mr. Speaker, but time has run out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. The hour appointed for consideration of private members' business having expired, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity just before private members' hour of beginning my remarks related to energy policy in Canada. In the short time I had, I suggested I would deal with the present situation in the province of Saskatchewan, a riding of which I have the honour to represent, and with the situation related to the oil industry in Saskatchewan. Also I propose to deal with the proposals of the government of Saskatchewan, its implications and suggestions for policies on a national level or, indeed, for any other province of Canada. I was pointing out at five o'clock that the Saskatchewan oil reserves are some 800 million barrels and that our rate of discovery of new resources had levelled off in the last seven years. However, our production rate continues at 80 million barrels per year. This means a lifespan for our oil fields of only ten years. If we discover more reserves, then obviously the lifespan of our oilfields will be extended.

Our oilfields were developed by private interests, and those private interests were well rewarded. By 1964, the oil industry collectively in the province of Saskatchewan had found and had sold enough oil to recover the costs of exploration and production. Since 1964, $800 million in profits has been realized in the province of Saskatchewan from oil only worth at that time between $2 and $2.50 per barrel. I emphasize the figure of $800 million in profits, Mr. Speaker.

In the world situation of escalating oil prices we now face the possibility of private interests—in terms of the large multinational corporations and oil companies operating in the province of Saskatchewan—having the opportunity to gouge massive profits and windfall gains from the province of Saskatchewan. If they take that profit and those windfall gains, there is no guarantee that one cent will be spent on research, development and exploration for new fields and new sources of petroleum in Saskatchewan. They could spend it, because of their multinational interests, in any part of the globe where they have business interests. Therefore, the government of Saskatchewan last week introduced legislation to prevent these private interests in the province gouging the rightful heirs to the resources—that is, the people of Saskatchewan. The government of Saskatchewan will not allow them to take windfall profits and invest them anywhere the private interests like: it has moved to a program of public control. This action of the government is related to almost every field in the oil industry of Saskatchewan: it is related to exploration, to production, to refining, to profits, to utilization and, indeed, to conservation.

Mr. Speaker, I have heard a lot of comment to the effect that this proposal of the socialist government of Saskatchewan is somewhat congruent with the position of the government of Alberta. I think we could test this contention best if we examined the remarks of the president of the Canadian Petroleum Association when he had read the legislation introduced in the provincial legislature. He said that the legislation proposed by the Saskatchewan NDP government that in effect takes control of the province's oil and natural gas is probably the most vicious piece of legislation ever enacted in North America.

Of course, we have heard similar contentions before. We heard them in connection with the government auto insurance and in connection with hospitalization and medical care. Yet those programs were expanded across the Dominion of Canada. I predict that the kind of policies enunciated by the government of Saskatchewan will become the criterion for public action by governments and people who will be concerned in future with the development of our energy resources. The petroleum association did not attack the activities of the Alberta government in the same way that it attacked the activities of the Saskatchewan government. That alone should show any member the difference between the action taken by the province of Saskatchewan and that of the province of Alberta.

What are the powers being established by the government of Saskatchewan? The legislation is to establish an oil conservation board which is to phase-in production controls. That government is moving in the direction in which I believe every level of government concerned with this matter ought to move. It is doing something to conserve our resources and to make sure they are properly utilized in order that future generations will have enough energy for the production of the primary commodity, food. The province of Saskatchewan has not been satisfied just with establishing an oil conservation board: it has already established a potash conservation board. The jurisdictional rights of that conservation board have been challenged by the government of Canada and by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lang). The federal government has said that natural resources such as potash should be left in the private hands of the potash industry.

Therefore, in dealing with a natural resource such as oil, Saskatchewan has moved not only to establish its constitutional right over natural resources but to establish the province's legal holding or legal right with regard to oil within the province. It has done this to avoid the kind of challenge that was encountered regarding the potash conservation board. Although the oil and gas freehold rights within the province of Saskatchewan are in the hands of large private companies, the provincial government has moved to assume control and ownership of these freehold rights. Before the introduction of the legislation the province held 66 per cent of these legal holdings; now, however, it will be in control of 90 per cent of all reserves. The only people to be exempt from the provisions of the legislation will be farmers operating the many small holdings throughout the province. The multinationals, the holdings of the CPR and of the Hudson's Bay Company are to be challenged.

As the legislation relates to windfall profits, the province is moving to make sure that the difference between the wellhead price of $3.98 a barrel and the domestic or international price will not go into the hands of the private oil corporations who can invest the money anywhere they want, but will go to the province of Saskatchewan which will use it for investment in Saskatchewan—for exploration, research and the development of oil supplies and reserves. This investment will meet the needs of Saskatchewan and of the people of Canada. There is a fundamental difference between the actions of Alberta and of Saskatchewan in that regard. Further, there is a price, called the base wellhead price, of $3.08 and there is also the barrel price of $3.38. Under the legislation, the oil companies will be allowed to keep the 30 cents, with the proviso that they spend it on exploration and development in Saskatchewan. If they do not, the moneys accrued will go to the province and to the people of Saskatchewan.

The tax on non-producing mineral land is to increase from 20 cents per acre to 50 cents per acre. If this tax is not paid, the mineral land lease is to revert to the Crown, the only exemption, again, being for farmers who hold some of these lands. There is provision for the production costs of oil companies in Saskatchewan to be reviewed twice yearly. This provision is included in case there is need to revise the wellhead price, in order to meet any legitimate increase in production costs. Further, there is provision for companies to receive a rebate from the treasury of Saskatchewan for exploration and development carried on within the province. If there are new findings, the province is to be given the right to gain an equity in those findings. The legislation also allows for control of wholesale pricing within the province.

So, Mr. Speaker, the democratic (socialist) government of the province of Saskatchewan has said that our non-renewable resources are not to be handed to the private interests: these resources are to be utilized as a public utility for the benefit of the province and the people of Canada. I submit we ought to follow that government's lead and treat and develop our non-renewable resources as public utilities. What are the implications of this policy nationally and for other provinces? I believe the province of Saskatchewan, in announcing this kind of policy, has shown a guiding light in the cold winter blizzard. It is introducing the kind of program which will mean that in the province there is to be public control of our resources and that they are to be developed in the interests of the people, and not of private capital.

Further, I believe the provincial government has done something fundamental which any national government, regardless of political philosophy, will need to consider. What do I mean? A province with less than one million people, whose major business is agriculture, has said that the multinational corporations can no longer be a law unto themselves, that they have a moral obligation to the people of the province with regard to the manner in which they extract the resources, sell them and make profits from them.

The province is saying that no longer can multinational corporations adjust the free flow of capital across boundaries or provincial borders without being obligated and accountable to democratically elected governments, provincial or federal. The province has outlined the kind of approach which national governments must take to all sorts of multinational corporations, not just to those operating in the oil industry. Therefore we, the people's elected representatives, have gained the right to plan and organize the utilization of a non-renewable resource for the public interest. The multi-national corporations are being called forth for public accountability.

In the move related to revenue from oil leases and lease rights, by increasing that revenue from 20 cents to 50 cents an acre the province of Saskatchewan has shown the federal government the manner in which they can move to increase their revenue from some of the many leases that are now held across the Northwest Territories. In order to have the right of lease, these corporations must be prepared to pay for it.

We have a public corporation, Saskoil, in the province of Saskatchewan. Saskoil will gain some of the funds related to the windfall profits that might have gone to the multinational corporations. These will be used for exploration, development and control of wholesale pricing. Through its experience in the activities in which it is involved, that public corporation can offer an outline for the kind of power and jurisdiction which the national petroleum corporation as suggested by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) ought to have.

The kind of policy enunciated in the province of Saskatchewan means there is a move toward something very fundamental to the national interest, namely, a government is openly saying to its people that it is not going to sell or to allow its oil products to be plundered from the ground and sold on the market for a fast buck. That energy source, because of its non-renewability, will be dealt with through a conservation board. The flow of the product from the fields will be done in an organized and planned manner, not according to the freewheeling of a few private corporations. This is the natural resource about which the provinces feel most strongly in terms of their right to have some control. This power was only gained by the western provinces in 1930. It has allowed Canada an opportunity to seriously reconsider the basis of our confederation. The national policies outlined by Sir John A. Macdonald and carried on by each successive federal government is surely, in these fast changing times, being called into question and calls for massive review of our energy resources. The Prime Minister and his ministers should now begin seriously to examine the economic and social foundations related to confederation. I believe very strongly that we will hold this country together and that there is no question of western or eastern separation. I believe we can do this by making some fundamental changes in the economic arrangements of this country.

Western members from all parties have talked about the freight rate structure and its inequities. We have talked about some of the policies relating to the marketing of wheat and domestic feed grains. We have talked about the need for revision of the eastern tariff structure as it relates to protection of the eastern market at the expense of the western producer. We have talked about income stability for western producers. Perhaps now, in a less emotional situation, the first ministers of our country will consider the need for revision of the economic and social basis of a national policy that has become outdated. The federal government has an opportunity to learn from the actions of the province of Saskatchewan how to gain public control over a very essential resource, as well as how to develop it offshore and in the Northwest Territories.

When the Premier of Saskatchewan appeared over provincial-wide television he said there should be some accommodation, because of economic issues, for a province which in principle agrees to a domestic price that is different from the international price. We have faced a two-price system for other commodities and we have not hollered about or condemned all of confederation. Every day of the week farmers in the province of Saskatchewan, which is our greatest wheat producing area, subsidize domestic wheat for the consumption of the Canadian population at a rate of 50 to 60 cents a bushel. That is a subsidy by the farmers of Saskatchewan to the people of Canada that should not be forgotten.

The Minister of Justice who is in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board has by edict, not by resolution of this House or by change in legislation, introduced a kind of domestic price on feed grain. What province is the greatest producer of feed grains? Saskatchewan. We have taken issue with that policy far more emphatically than the domestic price of our wheat.

We have a commodity called oil. We are relating it to domestic prices. The premier suggests an accommodation, a revision for some of the economic and social ills which Saskatchewan feels strongly about. The Premier of Saskatchewan has not gone as far as the Premier of Alberta. That is why I resent remarks such as "blackmail". The Premier of Saskatchewan said he is prepared to agree to the principle of a two-price system for oil in Canada, with an accommodation. That is not the case with the Premier of Alberta. I want to quote to this House the opening remarks of the Premier of Saskatchewan when addressing the people of his province. This ought not to be forgotten in the sequence of events. He said:

> Tonight I want to talk to you about our new oil policy in Saskatchewan. Before I do, let me first say that the Saskatchewan government approves most of the moves toward a national energy policy announced last week by the federal government.
> We support extension of the oil pipeline to Montreal and other efforts to make Canada self-sufficient in oil. We support the announced intention to set up a national oil corporation to help find and develop new Canadian oil and gas. We support the intent of the federal government to hold down the price for Canadian consumers of western Canadian crude.

He went on to say they did not accept the method in which export tax funds will be handled. Therefore, on many economic and social issues there is room for accommodation. I usually enjoy cartoons, but the kind of petty and ridiculous cartoon that appeared in tonight's Ottawa Citizen will not in any way, shape or form help to resolve this question.

● (2030)

The minister, in his answers, referred to the export tax. However, he did not clear the air in relation to the way in which the money would be turned back to the province. I believe that if he were to clear this matter up, accommodation would be far easier.

I support without hesitation the principle followed and the action taken by the government of Saskatchewan. A government of Saskatchewan is saying once and for all that a non-renewable resource is a public utility which cannot be misused by multinational corporation but has to be used in the best interests of the people. That is a legitimate policy, the kind of program which ought to be considered by other provinces and by any national government, regardless of party.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, listening to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight), I found myself wondering whether we were in the House of Commons or in the Saskatchewan legislature.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: I do not feel it is the role of a federal member of parliament to attempt to defend a policy introduced in a provincial legislature. I thought we were supposed to be talking tonight about a federal bill.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): A two-policy party!

Mr. Cullen: It would seem to me that if the action taken by the premier and government of Saskatchewan is as good as the hon. member would have us believe, the premier and his supporters are the ones best suited to put that message across not only in their own province but thoughout Canada. They do not appear to have got through to the Ottawa Citizen—

An hon. Member: They were wrong about medicare, too.

Mr. Cullen: I don't know if it is a good policy as far as Saskatchewan is concerned, but I must say it worries me, as a Canadian, because it seems to me to be another example of a tendency to balkanize this country. But whether the Premier of Saskatchewan accepts a policy or not is not the point. His policy should stand on its own feet. If he agrees with our policy, he should say so loud and clear; and I believe the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) should say exactly the same thing. I am concerned, because if one province begins to use the natural resources it happens to own as a means of bargaining with the federal government, what is to stop each and every province doing exactly the same thing and saying, "We shall go along with a national policy, But..." Mr. Speaker, that "but" does not fit in with my idea of a national policy.

The bill before us is a weapon the government must include in its arsenal if it is to attack energy problems. The debate on second reading has been wide-ranging, touching on all aspects and leaving it open to all hon. members to express varying points of view. But if what I have read in the press is true, and if what I have heard around the corridors is true, and if the official opposition intend to filibuster this measure as they are threatening to do, I say they are adopting an irresponsible posture, endeavouring to create a phony issue. The issue is not this bill; it is not the subject of this bill: it is, rather, the setting up of a national petroleum corporation, pricing, the construction of a pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, the export tax, wellhead prices, the ownership of resources including those discovered offshore, the distribution of windfall profits, exploration, and so on. To filibuster this bill is to adopt a posture beneath the dignity of what one would expect form Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition.

When I spoke of an opposition filibuster I heard voices from across the way telling me to sit down. I gather that no one on this side of the House is supposed to participate; we are not supposed to attack the opposition. This afternoon the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Bawden) spoke, and the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie) wanted to speak after him because he had other responsibilities to meet tonight. I do not fault him for that. Many members of parliament have similar engagements, so we had no objection to letting a second Conservative member speak. We wanted to be reasonable. But there comes a point at which government supporters have to stand up and let it be known they are proud of a policy to which they made a substantial contribution, and proud of the minister who currently bears such a heavy responsibility.

The tragedy about a filibuster at this time is that it may very well deprive the federal government of the authority it will need to cope with an emergency situation in the future. If the opposition filibuster this bill, they may well endanger the people in the eastern part of the country whom the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) says he is endeavouring to protect, if we are to believe press releases coming out of Halifax today.

There may never be a necessity to allocate supplies on a national scale. I hope it will not be necessary. However, my information is that some degree of allocation is already taking place and that the corporations are themselves deciding who shall get supplies as gas stations find they do not have enough to meet the demands of their customers. It seems to me that if there is to be allocation, it is the responsibility of the government to take such action and not the responsibility of the multinational corporations.

I say to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) that we are prepared to sit here over the holiday if necessary to pass this bill. If we are obliged to sit here, I think we can award the official opposition the title "The guys who stole our Christmas". Make no mistake, the spirit of Christmas is here. This bill, which is for the general benefit of Canadians and for the particular benefit of those who live in eastern Canada, will get third reading even if we have to stay here during the Christmas season.

The Leader of the Opposition says we have a two-price system and that he and his party are in favour of a one-price system. Well, one price would mean a higher price for all Canadians. The interesting thing about this stance is that it is in direct contradiction to the policy adopted in 1961 by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). In order to encourage the development of Alberta resources, the country was divided into two regions in accordance with national policy. I have no quarrel with that decision; I think it was necessary and right. But one of its consequences was that prices in the west were higher than they were in the east. Now the situation is reversed and the east will pay more than the west until the pipeline is available to guarantee a supply of western crude. Then, maybe, a one-price system will be possible.

One of my recommendations to the minister will be that we set up a pricing agency: possibly the national petroleum corporation could fill this role. All the oil would be pooled and the price would be the same all over Canada except perhaps for a proportion reflecting the cost of transportation. When the Conservative Party talks about one price at the present time it is not facing up to reality. Fortunately, the Canadian public is too intelligent, too sophisticated and too well-informed to approve a one-price system today, especially when the suggestion comes from a party which concedes it has no policy or, at least, a party which has yet to produce one.

As to the pipeline proposal, I am parochial enough to hope that it will run from Sarnia to Montreal, but if it is in the best interests of Canadians that the pipeline should go through Sault Ste. Marie, so be it. I say that the heartbeat of the chemical industry in the Sarnia-Lambton area is prepared to concede that a pipeline going to Sarnia may not be crucial. I feel it is incumbent upon me as the member for that area to point out that the distance might be shorter, that we might need more steel than necessary for a northern pipeline, but I also recognize that it will create jobs if the pipeline goes through the north: it will be going through areas not as densely populated. So, Mr. Speaker, there are plusses on the side of both groups; but it seems to me that we in the heart of the chemical industry valley can certainly use that pipeline and tap into it to the benefit of the growing petrochemical industry in the Sarnia-Lambton area.

Why do I say we need more, Mr. Speaker? It is contemplated at the present time that a large, world-scale plant will be built in the Sarnia-Lambton area, the Sarnia olefins and aromatic project which has become known as the SOAP project. It is a project worth $230 million, and at the present time there are four partners looking into the feasibility of building such a world-scale plant. So feedstocks to the petrochemical industry are an absolute necessity.

Many people do not appreciate what the chemical industry manufactures. They have a tendency to think of it as being pretty well localized. I say, with respect, that a healthy chemical industry is healthy for all of Canada. We have heard about the petrochemical industry and the chemical industry building itself up in Quebec. Certainly we have it in Sarnia, Ontario, and now we hear of a large-scale plant being planned for Alberta. As I say, a healthy chemical industry is very definitely healthy for all Canada. The chemical industry has a multitude of raw material sources. It uses these materials to manufacture products which are numbered in the thousands, most of which lose their identity in the finished product that the public sees. For example, the raw material, propylene, which is derived from crude oil ends up as foam in an automobile dashboard. This differs markedly from industries which have many raw materials and a single product, such as the automobile industry, or an industry such as petroleum which has a single raw material and many products. The extent of its linkages with other manufacturing industries is evident. For example, four major industrial groups—agriculture, mining, forest products and textiles and clothing—have a major and direct linkage to the chemical industry. So a supply of crude oil to this particular industry is an absolute necessity.

A strong and growing chemical industry is in the national interest because it is a high-technology, high-value added industry which has a large multiplier effect in creating employment in other industrial groups. While the industry currently consumes the equivalent of only 3 per cent to 4 per cent of the crude oil refined in Canada, this roughly $70 million in feedstocks is upgraded to produce resins, synthetic fibres, organic chemicals and fertilizers with a final consumer value in excess of $2 billion. This value added effect, or ability of the chemical industry to generate wealth, is illustrated very vividly if one considers the case of ethylene, the world's largest volume organic petrochemical. Take the case of ethylene made from ethane. It takes $5.8 million worth of ethane to make $40 million worth of ethylene, which can then be converted into $140 million worth of first-line derivatives, such as vinyl chloride monomer, $300 million worth of second-line derivatives, and $800 million worth of third-line derivatives.

While it is obvious that a country should always strive to upgrade its raw material, it is critical that Canada do so with our petrochemical feedstock at this moment in time. Ethylene currently is in extremely short supply in Canada, as it is world-wide. In this situation, foreign producers or countries will invariably choose to upgrade products like ethylene in their own country and export added value products rather than export ethylene itself. As second-line derivatives become short, they will export third-line derivatives, and so on. Let me draw the attention of the House to these statistics. When we in Canada export $6 million worth of petrochemical feedstock, we face the prospect of importing back $800 million of third-line derivatives. The adverse effect of this on the Canadian economy in terms of jobs, taxes and balance of payments is obvious.

The chemical industry provides high-quality employment for Canadians in its 1,200 plants. Scientists, engineers and managers with university-level education comprise some 15 per cent of our total work force of 76,000 people. The level of wages within the industry is 20 per cent above the national average. One study recently completed indicates that had the $766 million of chemical imports into Canada in 1971 been replaced by domestic production, this would have meant a permanent increase in employment in Canada of between 40,000 and 50,000 jobs. If we just balanced the trade, then 27,000 to 35,000 additional jobs would have been created.

Small plant size, small markets, low tariff walls, the upward-valued Canadian dollar, lack of integration, high transportation costs, global overcapacity and dropping prices gave the industry real problems. In effect, they were fighting products from world-scale plants which were built to serve markets ten times larger than their own, coming across some of the lowest chemical tariff walls in the world, and they were fighting with small plants sized to the Canadian domestic market.

It will take the petrochemical and the oil industries working together three years to establish a sound chemical feedstock position. During this three-year period a continuing co-operative attitude must be maintained between the two industries for the good of secondary industry. Where is the chemical industry going today, Mr. Speaker? For the following I am indebted to Mr. Elliott, vice-president of marketing at Dow Chemical. He has this to say. On the plus side of the industry are the expectation of good, over-all economic growth in Canada; the expectation that government will continue to encourage the development of secondary industry and the processing and upgrading of more primary products at home; rising world level of demand in chemicals, plastics and man-made fibres; currency alignments which have resulted in a devaluation of the Canadian dollar versus other world currencies, excluding the U.S. dollar; tax reductions for manufacturers which will help overcome the severe problem of low profitability in the industry, and the rising prices of chemicals. So the future is bright.

The Canadian government's policy of "Canada first," guaranteeing security of supply to a plant such as the proposed SOAP plant, is the correct policy. I heard the hon. member for Assiniboia talk of multinationals. When the members of his party talk of multinationals they never talk about their good side, only their bad side. I realize there are some groups that do have to be watched and regarding whom we must be cautious; but I should like to suggest to the House that hon. members also think a little about the plus side of the multinational corporations. After all, where else in the world could we get world-scale technology, capital and a global marketing organization hungry for products upgraded in Canada?

If we can marry this expertise with Canada's abundant raw materials, I suggest that we in Canada will have it made. It is a time to be bullish. I think the markets are there, both export and domestic. Canada has the raw materials and the skilled labour required. We have a sound base and a global scale technology. Capital is no problem. It is time to "go," Mr. Speaker. We have before us a bill to meet an emergency situation. I suggest that to kill or to filibuster this bill would be to create a phony issue.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member for La Salle . . . for Joliette rather.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In any event, in Joliette it's as if it were the riding of La Salle!

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take advantage of the few minutes at my disposal to comment this important legislation, Bill C-236.

All hon. members recognize, as such, the importance of this bill in our present situation, and I doubt that I am exaggerating when I say that the Canadian people are very much concerned about the problems with regard to our oil policy.

We also recognize, Mr. Speaker, and this is of great concern to the people, the price increases in recent months. Of course, it is surprising that we should face price increases and feel concerned. But the problem does not seem to be one of production. Production seems adequate but, because there is no planning policy, transportation and supplies would seem to be the real problem. For lack of a policy, transportation and supplies are responsible for higher prices.

In view of the situation, it is clear that Canadians are very much worried about the next few months. We are all hoping as members that the government and Parliament will find ways to ensure that consumers are provided with the essentials. We hope that we will not be subject to rationing.

Of course I must admit quite objectively that no one could foresee the Middle East crisis which is surely of no help in solving the present problem.

I would like first of all to acknowledge the efforts made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in the last few months. One hon. member has put the price of $1 a year on the value of his services and his competence. Well I would like to be a bit more objective. We must admit that the present minister has made some efforts and has shown concern in the current crisis.

Bill C-236 seems to be aimed at giving this government some rather extraordinary powers and it is proper to ask ourselves if we are not infringing some provincial jurisdictions. The federal government has perhaps an opportunity to seize some powers, considering the present crisis. It would be embarrassing for the provinces to justify themselves with regard to those problems by keeping those powers.

Last week I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who assured the House that he was in favour of the establishment of a National Energy Board. We do not know exactly what will be the powers of that board. In my view, it is extremely important to know all of them and to be able to measure their consequences.

It seems that the establishment of a national energy corporation is required in view of the present influence of oil companies. It is clear and I think that everybody agrees that if the government was forced to accept certain price increases, the oil companies now have a marked influence on government policies, which is unfortunate.

Because of the lack of a long term policy which should have, I think it must be said, been initiated a few years ago, we are led to recognize more and more the marked influence of these companies and the need to establish a national energy corporation.

Once again, what will these powers be? We hope to find out as soon as possible. We hope that they will enable this corporation to restrict the influence that the oil companies have always had.

We have also heard the wish of the right hon. Prime Minister that the Borden line be abolished, that a pipeline to Montreal be built and, in short, that a national energy policy be developed.

Because of this oil policy, Canadians think that a national policy is the same as a national price. The price freeze for all Canada, except of course the eastern provinces, was announced in the right hon. Prime Minister's speech.

I think that we must wonder about the announced policy which provides for two prices, one for the east and one for the west.

We, in the east, have long deplored, Mr. Speaker, a feed grain policy which has been very costly, not only for Quebec, but for all eastern producers. We have denounced this policy for approximately 30 years and because of all our efforts and the support of the responsible agencies we have succeeded in urging the government to adopt its recent national policy, a policy which aims at, and should normally bring, equality between eastern and western producers.

● (2100)

I think that westerners have shown very great patience towards this policy which has been quite costly for western producers. And today we are considering a two-price national policy for oil products. I would urge the minister and the government to consider equal prices for easterners and westerners. It is unconceivable that we should accept this legislation which is favourable to easterners who have to face competition on the world markets and which, at the same time, provides for westerners a price freeze for the months to come namely the most difficult ones.

I would hope that the Prime Minister who announced a federal-provincial conference would first enable us to take stock of the provincial position about this policy. I wish that this federal-provincial conference will take place before this bill is passed. I do not mean that it should not have been submitted to the House. On the contrary, I find it necessary because of the current serious crisis and of Canadians' concern.

However, should we pass this bill during the next few days, being aware of the January federal-provincial conference, how could the provinces refuse to abide by orders accepted by Parliament? Why were not provincial officials first called and apprised of the principles of this legislation and of the powers we are going to grant the federal government and to which extent will the provinces be prepared to admit those powers?

The House is unaware of all the negotiations which have taken place between the federal and provincial governments especially the Quebec government. I have every reason to believe that the government of Quebec intends to make some suggestions and also to maintain some jurisdiction in oil matters. But as the federal-provincial conference will be held in January and chances are this bill will be adopted before Christmas, I wonder how we can count, for example, on the respect of the provinces while asking hon. members to adopt a bill before this federal-provincial conference has been held?

I think that this is an important aspect to point out because I do not quite see how this federal-provincial conference can be held only in January while we are being asked to pass a bill which should provide powers to the federal government. I do not suggest that these powers are unrequired, but I wonder how the provinces will react to these powers that the federal government wants to give itself, if it really wants to respect the wish of the provinces and listen to the suggestions that they could make.

Therefore, should we delay the passage of this bill? Should we ask the federal government for a federal-provincial meeting as soon as possible so that we may know exactly and specifically what the provinces want? As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, this is a most important matter, particularly when there is talk of granting increased powers to the federal government in the field of energy. Again, without doubting the goodwill of the responsible minister and taking into account the current crisis, I have proof that he made very great efforts to correct the situation and give some assurance to the Canadian people.

Of course, as a Quebecker I could not fail to emphasize a particular aspect.

In fact, we have the privilege of being administered by a government in which more than half the members come from the province of Quebec. The people in Quebec expect those members to bring enough pressure to bear so that prices will be equalized between eastern and western Canada. In my opinion, the people in Quebec are absolutely right in hoping that government members from Quebec, who are a majority, will see to it to make the minister aware of this problem and obtain through this bill price equalization between eastern and western Canada.

Last Monday, during the debate on a non-confidence motion, I noticed that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) even asked whether the Quebec members were selling out their province. The question may have been relevant, Mr. Speaker, but as this bill has not yet passed third reading I take the liberty of calling upon members from the province of Quebec to make more pressures than ever before and urge the minister to give that guarantee that all eastern Canada and not only the province of Quebec will not have to pay more for its products than western Canada. It is extremely important to point out that aspect of the problem because the people of Quebec have a right to insist that representations be made by their members in that respect. Members from Quebec have the duty to answer that question as well as meet the aspirations and desires of the Quebec people.

What the leader of the official opposition had to say might have seemed harsh but I think they were right on. I point that out to invite government members as well as other members from Quebec to impress on the minister the importance of ensuring that equity between eastern and western Canada and not to apply again that practice on the feed grain policy which proved very costly to the province of Quebec and eastern Canada and created some measure of economic separatism.

Quebec did not invent it because I remember reading an article on that not too long ago. Mr. Gérard Filion stated that economic separatism did not originate in the province of Quebec but had been invented 30 years ago by the Canadian Wheat Board which through its policy unfortunately practiced discrimination against eastern producers. We have before us a legislation which may have the same results.

Allow me, as a member from a constituency concerned with the problem, to remind the Quebec members that it is important instead of blaming or criticizing the minister to urge him to understand. I think he is open to any suggestions made in the House. We must make those suggestions objectively, and this is what I am trying to do. I ask the minister to ensure this price equalization between the East and the West. So, nobody in the East would be inclined to think that the federal government attempted to protect the West to the prejudice of the East.

I do not think at all that the minister intends to establish such a policy. I must say that even Quebec or eastern members must strive to obtain such an equalization from this government. Indeed, this must be said in this House. All members agree on the possibility of establishing a uniform price both in the East and in the West. I listened to the remarks of other members, even western members, who are clearly in favour of a single price across Canada. Thus, we will have obtained from this government the necessary respect and objectivity.

I want to take this opportunity to point out that the Quebec government still has a long term policy for the petrochemical industry. For many months people have been talking about the building of a seaport for giant tankers. Rumors were even heard about a possible agreement between Quebec and Saudi Arabia providing for the building of refineries. To what extent will this bill allow the province of Quebec to fulfill its ambitions?

I do not know yet the powers that the federal government will be yielding in the field of energy. We are talking about a federal-provincial conference. Now, I believe all those questions could have been discussed before the bill was introduced in this House. I am not saying this piece of legislation is not needed. But, I would have liked, Mr. Speaker, this federal-provincial Conference to take place well before the introduction of this bill. To what extent will this bill allow a province like mine to undertake anything worth while? Of course, other members will want to emphasize the interests of their own provinces and that is normal. If they did not, they would not be performing their duty in an objective way.

As far as I am concerned, I am keenly aware of the importance for my province to have its petrochemical industry developed further. I am anxious to see my province get ahead with certain projects relating to refineries, supplies, and security where petroleum products are concerned. The extension of the pipeline to Montreal will have Quebeckers pay more for Canadian petroleum products than for off-shore products. Considering the price situation on the world market, it could very well be that for some time, the oil coming from Alberta will not be more expensive in the East than the one coming from foreign countries. It is also possible that, in view of the fact that the crisis may well cease to exist, people in Quebec could be forced to pay higher prices because we will still have been provided with supply facilities.

We know perfectly well that if we build this oil pipeline, there will be compulsory minimum consumption. What will be the price of the products coming in from Alberta? How far is the government willing to go with its pricing policy which would enable us Easterners to take advantage of a resource coming from Alberta, a Canadian resource. I am not against our consuming Canadian resources. On the contrary, I think we should consume products coming from a Canadian province. But I think it is equally important that we guarantee Easterners prices which will not be higher than the prices they can get abroad. It has been suggested that the government absorb any excess and I think this is very good. The government should guarantee to people of both the East and the West, the benefit of identical prices.

I believe that my remarks are very objective and I hope that hon. members will think of securing this equity to both eastern and western Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard various comments. There are objections, arguments and criticism on both sides of this House. I think that as a whole, members of various parts of this country have made excellent suggestions and I hope that the minister, who paid great attention to the debates, which is heartening for us hon. members, will consider these suggestions and that Quebec members will take advantage of the fact that they are in large numbers to force this government to answer my suggestions, that are also put forward by members from Quebec.

Besides I am convinced that Quebec members are quite interested in satisfying as much as possible their constituents. Before I conclude, I would like to refer to the lead article I was reading recently in a Montreal weekly paper. It was written by Claude Lavergne and calls for reflection. This is what Mr. Lavergne said:

> The energy policy announced this week by the Trudeau government is a step in the right direction. On a short range basis, it prevents Canada from suffering a crisis in the uncertainty of a general election, then it secures the short term allocation of our western oil throughout Canada.
> Nevertheless Ottawa did not go all the way in its efforts toward Canadian security in terms of stability in the field of energy.
> Having decided to maintain the oil price freeze throughout Canada, with the exception of the eastern provinces, including Quebec, the federal government is not afraid to create two classes of citizens within one piece of legislation and within the same boundaries.

This was not said by me, Mr. Speaker, but by a very objective editorialist. He has often praised this government, criticized it from time to time. I think that his article was worth being read in this House.

Therefore, having decided to maintain the oil price freeze throughout Canada, with the exception of Quebec and the eastern provinces, as I said, in fact the central government has given this responsibility to the provinces while it is the only one to profit by the present price increase. And I go on:

By shifting this responsibility upon provincial governments, he is making fun of people, and in order to understand this fully, one must take a close look at the oil tax structure.

On the other hand, Ottawa takes full advantage of the rising market because it applies its tax in terms of a percentage of the sales price to the wholesaler, a tax which is, of course, in any case, passed on to the consumer. This means, therefore, that Ottawa should be the first to help the consumer, which, of course, does not prevent the provinces from also giving him a helping hand.

There is no doubt that this situation will be considered at length at the federal-provincial conference on energy—

According to me, this conference comes too late.

—which will bring together all the premiers in Ottawa in January, but all the same, in the meantime, nothing will be done to help the taxpaying consumer who is condemned in addition to remain helpless in the face of a further spiralling inflation brought about by this galloping increase in the prices of energy.

It must be noted also that Ottawa is the only level of government to tax heating oil which is not a luxury in Canada, needless to say.

The Minister of Health and Welfare emphatically stated that he saw to it that welfare recipients will not have to suffer hardships because of this price increase. However, the fact remains that by taking such action, he is giving them a Greek gift.

He is giving with one hand while getting twice as much in the other and in many cases, from the very people to whom he is giving a bonus.

It seems that if the New Democratic Party—

I regret that there is no member of that party in the House at the present time. I continue the quotation:

—which will support the Liberals tomorrow on the non-confidence motion, sincerely wants to help primarily the poorer Canadians, it will have to make the full weight of the balance of power felt in favour of a remission of oil charges.

It would be a beneficial measure for the consumer!

Mr. Speaker, that editorial deserves some consideration. The government is not necessarily blamed, but urged to consider the seriousness of the present crisis in Canada as well as the difficulties and worries it is causing for all Canadians. Every weekend in our constituencies, many ask us what will happen and if the government will provide the needed supplies. Therefore production is not the issue. It seems that we produce enough oil products to keep us warm this winter. It seems that the problem is one of transport and supply. The lack of long term policy is causing concern to the Canadian people, and rightly so. A world crisis also distresses the government. To be sure, our role consists in making recommendations and helpful suggestions to the government with the hope they will be taken into consideration. I believe my remarks have been very practical. I am quite willing to co-operate for a national policy set up which would be equitable throughout the country, but if this measure did not ensure equal prices for both east and west, I would not be able to support it.

[Mr. La Salle.]

I would have wished that the provinces be invited to a meeting before the bill is introduced. I doubt that the bill, if passed, will meet all the criteria and all the aspirations of the provinces. The lack of prior consultations with the provinces still leads us to believe that the government is mistaken and in spite of that we are still called to take a position on a crisis, a problem that it is urgent to settle. I trust that Quebec members will assume their responsibilities by getting from the government equal prices in the East and out West so that Quebec citizens do not pay more for their products than westerners.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, could I put a question to the hon. member for Joliette?

Mr. La Salle: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette has referred to a division, to two parts of the country, East and West. Does he remember that the Borden line was the work of a progressive conservative government of which he was once a member and to which he has sworn that he would not belong anymore? Furthermore, does he know that it was the previous progressive conservative government which divided the country in two parts? He also referred to the feed grains policy. Does he know also that this discrimination between East and West concerning feed grains was encouraged by progressive conservative governments and especially by that of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)?

● (2120)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the question regarding the so-called Borden line is a legitimate one pertaining to this debate, but it seems to me that matters regarding feed grains might be raised at another time. I recognize hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) for his response.

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have tried to state very objective opinions. Whether this policy was adopted by the Progressive Conservatives or the Liberals is hardly any concern of mine. I urge this government not to repeat the same mistakes. Whether they were made by this or that government—and I feel perfectly free to talk about this—is irrelevant. I only say to the government that if the Progressive Conservatives have made mistakes, it is not forbidden to think that so have the Liberals. That we do not always repeat the same mistakes is what matters. I only urge this government not to make mistakes, to make the necessary corrections to the bill it introduced and which does not guarantee price parity between eastern and western Canada. And if the Progressive Conservatives are responsible for such mistake, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) will see to it that the Liberal government does not make the same mistake.

Mr. Béchard: I would ask the hon. member for Joliette whether he was in the House last Thursday when the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made his speech announcing the oil policy. Has he forgotten that the right hon. Prime Minister then said that he wanted to make Canada one country by abolishing the Borden line, and that the policy was for oil to run at the same price throughout Canada? It is a six-year program.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have listened carefully to the speech of the right hon. Prime Minister. I had gathered from his speech, Mr. Speaker, just what the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine understood, and in view of the declarations of the minister in charge, that the east is far from being assured of benefitting from prices as low as those in the west. To my mind, the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine should study the consequences of this bill, because it does not do much to guarantee equal prices. I am very happy the question was put to me: it gives me a chance to tell the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine that I am willing to co-operate with him so that all Quebec members insist that the minister set the same prices for the east, and specially for Quebec.

Mr. Béchard: Does the hon. member for Joliette know that there is—

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. If this is the last question, I will allow the last reply.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Could I ask a question to the hon. member for Joliette, Mr. Speaker?

I heard the comments that the hon. member just made, but is he aware that there is no pipeline yet between Sarnia and Montreal? Is he aware of that? And does he know that until there is, we shall have to get oil from somewhere?

Mr. La Salle: I am certainly aware of it, Mr. Speaker, but is there any need to ask such a stupid question? It certainly must be a stupid question, Mr. Speaker. It is obvious.

I should like to tell him that the hon. member for Joliette is aware there is not yet any pipeline between Sarnia and Montreal and that he understands that this policy was aimed at extending the pipeline to Montreal and I said clearly in my speech that I was not against the idea. I only wanted that the province of Quebec be assured of getting a fair price. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine did not give me the assurance that his government would promise Quebec equal prices with the west. And this is what the Quebec population would like to learn not only from the hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles de la Madeleine, but from all other members of the province who are in majority in the government. As for the French power within the Liberal party it is time, Mr. Speaker to make maximum use of it.

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some suggestion that the Conservatives are filibustering this bill. May I just point out to you that the last four speakers have been non-Conservatives. If I could put a title on my speech it would be this, "Don't try to turn the rest of Canada against us, Mr. Trudeau". That warning appeared in an editorial in the Edmonton Journal two days ago which began with the following words:

> Prime Minister Trudeau's attempt to portray Albertans and Premier Lougheed as the ogres in the energy crisis is surely a cheap and barefaced cover-up. It ill becomes him.

That sums up the feelings in Alberta today about the energy debate. Something is happening in Canada today that I do not like. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is playing with national unity in order to demonstrate to Canadians that his energy policies—and only his—are saving unity; and, of course, that Alberta is looking out only for Alberta and thus hurting Canada The Prime Minister shows signs of wanting to pit the rest of the country against Alberta so that he will have a ready-made election issue. The strategy is becoming clearer all the time, and it is in this context that we are now debating Bill C-236, the energy supplies emergency act. If it needs saying, I will vote against this bill on second reading because I am opposed to its principle.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) have given lengthy explanations of their opposition. I am in agreement with their views and add the following reasons for my opposition: the government comes to us with an act that would—> —provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada—

Acknowledging that it cannot prove that an emergency exists, the government tells us that the bill is for insurance against an emergency. No wonder the hon. member for Peace River called into question the integrity of the "insurance broker". Let us not forget that the proposed energy supplies allocation board would have immense powers and that, as clause 10 makes clear, the board would act under the instructions of the government. Again, all this might be acceptable if there were a genuine national emergency. But, Mr. Speaker, there is no energy crisis in Canada. As the Prime Minister himself noted when he spoke in the debate on this subject in 1972, Canada imported 770,000 barrels a day, while at the same time exporting 950,000 barrels. During the same time we produced 1.7 million barrels of oil per day, while consuming 1.55 million barrels. Eighty per cent of that production came from Alberta.

The Alberta government has made it clear that it will not allow Canadians to suffer from an oil shortage this winter. In a policy statement on the use of Alberta energy, Premier Lougheed set security of supply for Canadians as the first of five priorities for the Alberta government. The premier said:

> Eastern Canada is confronted with a possibility of shortages this winter because of action by the Arab oil states—and I want to make it clear that Albertans feel a genuine concern about this situation. We have indicated our willingness to assist in every way possible to help ease this problem. In fact, national security of supply has been an Alberta concern for many years. In 1959, and again in 1969 and again in early 1973, the Alberta government attempted to persuade the federal government that a pipeline to Montreal was and is in the national public interest. The response in the past to this suggestion has been negative. If the Montreal pipeline was in operation now any shortages of energy in eastern Canada could be avoided.

Mr. Speaker, we do have severe transportation and pricing problems, but these could be solved by federal-provincial consultation provided that an atmosphere of good will can be maintained. At the very least, we should give no thought to passage of Bill C-236 until we see the outcome of the federal-provincial conference of first ministers on energy in January. The preceding member, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), elaborated on this point at length. The atmosphere of that conference will be crucial in achieving joint federal-provincial policies and programs on the use of Canadian energy. If this bill passes before the conference is held, it will produce more confrontation rather than the consultation which is so desperately needed to solve energy problems.

● (2130)

I believe that the extreme coercion involved in Bill C-236 could only be justified under exceptional conditions, and then subject to the consideration of justice. Thus, we come to this question: In the absence of any clear demonstration of a national emergency, why does the government want such a club in the form of an energy allocation board? One answer to that, a deeply troubling one, is the predilection of this government for authority.

With the benefit of hindsight, Mr. Speaker, we know the government overreacted to the crisis of October, 1970, which led its taking exceptional powers under the War Measures Act. The government did indeed trample on individual liberties and civil rights. It depicted the crisis as greater than it was, then stepped in to save the country with dictatorial action. Many members were later sorry that they had given their consent to the War Measures Act. If the public had known at the time the limitation of the crisis, it would never have supported the sweeping deprivation of civil rights.

I point out to you, sir, and to members of the House that the wording the government used when it sought these powers in 1970 is very similar to the wording used in seeking the present powers. On October 16, 1970, speaking in the House when he introduced the War Measures Act, the Prime Minister said:

> The government recognizes that the authority contained in the act is much broader than is required in the present situation, notwithstanding the seriousness of the events.

He went on to say:

> To those who will voice concern at the extent of the powers assumed by the government under this procedure, I can only say that I sympathize with their attitude, and applaud them for speaking out. I hasten to suggest, however, that the legislative record of this parliament in the field of individual liberties contributes unequivocally to its credibility and good faith.

We know what the credibility and good faith of this government have been like in the intervening years. May I draw your attention to the words used by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) in introducing this bill last week. As recorded on page 8442 of Hansard, the minister said:

> In spite of its efforts, the technical committee is unable to advise the government of the precise extent to which international crude oil deliveries to Canada will be reduced. However, the committee has recommended that the government plan for possible curtailment as great as 20 per cent for these areas which are dependent on overseas oil.

Thus, we see the government once more coming to us with an evaluation which is not supported by facts. Actually, in the present situation the facts have not been outlined which led the government, in its extremity, to seek these powers. The government's swift and unnecessary use of extreme powers in 1970 makes it imperative that before we ever again give such powers to it, or one of its created boards, it must prove to us that a crisis really exists. Denis Smith, one of Canada's distinguished political scientists, has summarized the situation in the following way:

> At the moment of decision, when it has been forced to choose between participation and the exercise of the state's authority, the Trudeau government has always opted for authority.

There is a second and even simpler explanation for the government's motive in presenting this bill. We have seen how the political balance in this House has sent the government scurrying leftward to start a national petroleum company. We have seen the vigour of the Prime Minister's attack on Premier Lougheed in Vancouver last Friday in which the Alberta premier was depicted as an oil baron blackmailing his fellow Canadians. We saw the strange performance of the Prime Minister yesterday in linking the record of the Alberta members in this House on the energy question to, of all things, the language issue.

Responding to the assurance of the member for Peace River, that Alberta members want to secure the supply of oil for the people of eastern Canada, the Prime Minister said "... I wonder if he could assure a supply of Alberta members to Quebec on the bilingual policy." When I objected to this tarnishing of Alberta members as bigots on the bilingualism issue, the Prime Minister responded"... it is more important to Quebec to have acceptance by Canada of the bilingual policy than to have a gallon of oil from Alberta." Linking bilingualism and energy is a feat of political legerdemain that can only divide Canada. To pose the energy question in these terms is an outrageous, irresponsible act of the Prime Minister.

Over the past few days and weeks, Mr. Speaker, we have seen the strategy of isolating Alberta forming in the minds of the Prime Minister and those Machiavellian figures who stalk the east block. That strategy is: Alberta versus Canada on energy; Alberta versus Quebec on language; Alberta squeezing or freezing the Maritimes; Alberta the bad, Trudeau the good. What an election issue! What a dream! Let us not be so naive as to dismiss the idea that this government would try to create such an election issue. This is a government that uses, and abuses, national unity for its own political survival.

Mr. Lalonde: Don't confuse Alberta with Alberta tories.

Mr. Roche: But the Prime Minister should take note of a basic fact: Albertans are Canadians first. We have contributed our share to the development of Canada and we will continue to do so. As the Edmonton Journal remarked:

> Albertans do not back the witless slogan, "Let the eastern bastards freeze in the dark". Albertans recognize that the national oil policy of a federal Conservative government which gave us an Ontario market benefited us. It benefited Ontario too, and that is how Canadians who are also Albertans, would want it. Don't try to turn the rest of Canada against us, Mr. Trudeau.

Whether we are talking about language or energy, Mr. Speaker, Albertans are the brothers of eastern Canadians. We will not be the tools in a ploy to set up an energy dictatorship. We will oppose policies inspired not by the needs of Canada but by Liberal desperation.

● (2140)

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, as my contribution to this debate tonight I propose to tell the House of the particular significance of energy in my constituency of Medicine Hat and, more specifically, the city of Medicine Hat and the close town of Redcliff. These two locations, only five miles apart, comprise approximately one half the total population of my constituency of Medicine Hat. In addition, I propose to try to indicate to my colleagues the impact of our present energy debate on myself as a native Albertan from the viewpoint of a rural agricultural land owner of both surface rights and mineral rights. May I first point out that southeastern Alberta's interests are mainly concerned with the production, use and export to other parts of Canada of natural gas. While there may be some oil deposits and production, it is our natural gas that I will be commenting on in particular this evening.

First, a brief history of gas discovery and development in the constituency I represent. Natural gas was first discovered in 1883 by the CPR when boring for water at a point 40 miles west of Medicine Hat. Gas was struck at about 700 feet and was used to light and heat a railway section house. Later, in 1891, Sir William van Horne, then president of the CPR, offered to loan a drilling outfit to the town of Medicine Hat to be used to locate coal beneath the townsite. No coal of any importance was located, but a strong gas gusher came in at 660 feet. This became Medicine Hat's first gas well. Gas from this well was used in commercial operation by Charles Coulter to burn limestone and manufacture lime for his building operations. In addition, I should point out that this particular gas well was also the first gas well in the province of Alberta.

In 1892 the CPR drilled a second gas well adjacent to their railway station. This well was used primarily to entertain visiting dignitaries who came through on the railway. They did this by rather spectacular blowoffs that were fired to illustrate this tremendous natural resource below the city of Medicine Hat. One such blow-off for the benefit of Rudyard Kipling prompted the author to describe Medicine Hat as the city "with all hell for a basement". Later, in 1899, Mr. Coulter drilled a well in his backyard and used the gas for lighting and heating not only his own home but a number of his neighbours homes as well. In about 1900 or 1901 the town drilled five gas wells that were used by their waterworks plant and supplied all residences. This was the start of a city-owned utility system that still operates most successfully for both gas and electric power.

About this same period an enterprising promoter from Sarnia, Ontario, came west and settled just south of my own post office of Walsh, Alberta. His name was J. A. Grant. He established a very large ranching operation called the Sarnia Ranching Company. It was financed, of course, by risk capital from the Sarnia community. Grant had considerable know-how in the drilling industry and was probably the first commercial gas well driller in southern Alberta. Of course, he picked up this knowledge from his experience around Sarnia.

In the late twenties and thirties a series of wildcat oil wells were drilled east of Medicine Hat, all using ponderous hand-erected wooden towers and walking beams for the drilling action. It is worth noting that all these earlier wells were drilled in the expectation of finding oil and that the gas found in all of them was of very little practical and commercial use. One such well, known as the Draisin oil well, ran wild and burned for years in the Many Island Lake community just north of my ranch where it acted as a landmark and beacon when we trailed cattle across that open-range country.

As a schoolboy in Medicine Hat, two features involving natural gas have become solidly etched in my early memories. First, while learning to skate on the Saskatchewan River in winter, we were able to locate gas bubbling through ice cracks and light it to warm our hands and feet. Second, all our streets in Medicine Hat, even in my own school days, were lighted by gas street lights that were never turned off. From that beginning, Mr. Speaker, gas production has come a long way to the present day state of development. To illustrate this, I would like to bring members up to date with some figures. Here are some production figures for a 75-mile producing area centring at Medicine Hat. That is a block 75 miles west, south and north, but only extending 30 miles east to the Saskatchewan border. To the end of October of this year, 2,597 gas wells were producing 248 billion cubic feet of natural gas. There are 718 oil wells producing 18.9 million barrels of oil. Percentagewise, this represents about 10 per cent of Alberta's gas production and 2 per cent of our provincial oil production. In addition, this production comes from 60 per cent of Alberta's gas wells and 5 per cent of our oil wells.

The large percentage of gas wells is related to closer spacing and lower drilling costs of these wells due to relatively shallow production depths. These depths range from 1,000 to 2,000 feet. Not included in any of these statistics, supplied by the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board, is the tremendous potential of natural gas reserves under the 1,000-square mile Suffield defence research reservation just a few miles north of Medicine Hat.

Only this morning the Globe and Mail in a special report commented with some startling observations on these reserves. These observations are important enough that portions of this news item should be quoted for the record. This is a quotation from an article in this morning's Globe and Mail headed "Suffield gas prospects prove up."

● (2150)

The 1,000 square miles of the Suffield military reserve in southeastern Alberta are proving up a substantial natural gas potential following exploratory drilling under the auspices of the provincial government.

Petroleum industry experts have already suggested that the Suffield range could ultimately become the largest gas field in Canada, at least until gas finds in the Arctic islands or the Mackenzie River delta are developed.

"South of the sixtieth parallel it will probably remain unrivalled as the largest single gas field in Canada" says a petroleum industry man long active in the southeastern Alberta region.

In market terms it could increase Alberta's known gas reserves by 10 per cent, the equivalent of eight years' supply at present consumption rates in Ontario.

According to preliminary estimates, eventual proven fuel reserves in the Suffield block could surpass an estimate made earlier this year by Premier Peter Lougheed that the area could hold four trillion cubic feet of gas worth at present wellhead prices at least one billion dollars.

Contractors have drilled 26 wells in the first round of the current winter exploratory program. All confirmed gas discoveries. Another 51 wells have been licensed to be drilled during the remainder of the 1973-74 winter season. About 78 wells will be taken down to an average depth of only 1600 feet to reach potential gas bearing zones to complete the evaluation phase of the military range.

Subsequently, private industry would develop the Suffield reserve in conjunction with the Alberta Energy Company which has among its portfolio of investments title to all the gas which might be found under the prairie land north of Medicine Hat and in the vicinity of the Medicine Hat gasfield, until now the largest proven accumulation of gas in Canada.

The Suffield gas is less costly to develop than fuel from the equally prolific foothills belt which because of difficult drilling conditions could be as expensive to explore as Arctic gas prospects. The Suffield gas, according to industry information, is probably the last of the easy-to-get reserves in western Canada. In addition, it is free of most impurities, dispensing with the need for expensive processing plant.

The article concludes by saying:

Pipeline connections to transport fuel from the Suffield block are readily available, too.

This concludes the portion of the Globe and Mail story that I thought was most timely and pertinent. As might be expected, this relatively recent energy development in my constituency has had some very satisfying results. First, the population of Medicine Hat, which has remained almost stationary during the ten years from 1961 to 1971 at about 25,000, has increased dramatically. Since 1971 it has increased by well over 4,000 to 30,500. In addition, the agricultural community served by Medicine Hat and Redcliff—essentially the same area as I described in my comments about natural gas production—has enjoyed a long overdue bonus as a result of well drilling, pipeline construction and related service activities which have benefited the entire agricultural area. This agricultural community is one of the most sparsely settled areas in populated Canada due, of course, to its semi-arid climate with the ever-present threat of drought.

Here are some tangible results of the energy boom. First, the expansion of a longstanding ceramics industry and more recently a thriving fertilizer plant taken over from United States control by Western Co-operative Fertilizers Limited, a Canadian, farmer-owned corporation. I should mention, also, the establishment of a Goodyear Tire and Rubber plant. In the petrochemical field, a new carbon black industry known as Cancarb came into production only about a month ago. Also under construction in the petrochemical field is our $55 million Allarco plant.

All these developments, and many more, including sprinkler irrigation using natural gas for power, are the end result of generous reserves of relatively cheap natural gas. All Canada would benefit from these activities quite apart from the value to central Canada of exported surpluses. It is no exaggeration to suggest that both the city and the rural communities serviced by Medicine Hat and Redcliff have waited some 20 odd years for this pay-off.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order deemed to have been moved.

FISHERIES—PROPOSED LICENSING POLICY FOR EAST COAST FISHERMEN—SOCIAL IMPLICATIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Walter C. Carter (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, in a statement to the House on November 14, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) outlined the government's new policy with respect to the registration and licensing of all fishing craft, skippers, crew, traps and all other fish-catching units. The effective date of these new licensing regulations is January 1, 1974.

The minister's statement in this connection has given rise to a great deal of uneasiness and concern on the part of a large number of Newfoundland fishermen. The hon. gentleman failed to answer a number of important questions which are obviously in the minds of the fishermen affected. Tonight I should like the minister's parliamentary secretary to answer some of the questions which have been put to me by some of the fishermen in my constituency and in other parts of Newfoundland.

For example, how does the minister intend to define a bona fide full-time fisherman? The nature of the Newfoundland economy is such that people living in the rural areas must fish for certain periods of the year and must also, of necessity, get a job on shore, in construction, on the highways or whatever else offers, so as to earn sufficient money to exist. What will happen to such people? Will the minister's new licensing policy prevent them doing what they and their forebears have been doing for centuries, that is, earn a partial living from the fishery?

Another important question that I hope the parliamentary secretary will answer is this: How will the new licensing regulations affect the payment of unemployment insurance of fishermen? For example, will UIC benefits be restricted to full-time fishermen a defined by the minister and his officials? Or will they apply to fishermen who of necessity fish for part of the year and then work on shore for the rest of the year to earn sufficient money to exist?

Another important question that comes to mind is, how will these new licensing regulations affect many of our young people who have to fih during the summer to earn sufficient money to enable them to go to school or university during the winter? How will these regulations affect many of our disabled veterans and others who suffer form disabilities that prevent them from becoming full-time fishermen? Will these people be permitted under the new licensing regulations to carry on as a they have been doing now for a number of years, and as their forebears in the province have for centuries?

These regulations as we see them, in the absence of any detailed information given by the minister, could very well have the effect of changing, perhaps destroying, a whole way of life in Newfoundland that has existed since we first settled in the fifteenth century. We believe the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) and the government have a responsibility to make sure that the people are affected by these regulations have them fully explained to them. I venture to suggest that all the people of Newfoundland will be affected by them, because the fisherman of Newfoundland also affects the entire population and economy of the province. We believe that these regulations are of sufficient importance to warrant hearings being held in the province, say by the fisheries committee or some other type of wide consultative body, in order that the fishermen become fully acquainted with the implications of the new regulations and their possible effect on their way of life.

I have had several public meetings with the fishermen in my riding since the minister announced these regulations on November 14, but I have been unable to find one who could tell me what they were all about. Obviously, the fishermen are in the dark, as it were, with respect to the possible effects of these regulations and I think this is grossly unfair on the part of the minister and his officials.

We have had a history of fishing in Newfoundland without licensing for nigh on 500 years. I contend that if the minister decides to defer the implementation of these regulations for six months or a year in order to give the fishermen a chance to find out what they are all about, this will not have any drastic effect on the future of the fishing industry. The least the Newfoundland fishermen expect is that they be told what the regulations are about and hopefully given the chance to express their opinions and views on the question of licensing and the future of the fishing industry.

I suggest it is unheard of for a minister of fisheries to stand in his place in this House and in a very dictatorial way declare by way of ministerial decree that the fishermen of Newfoundland will be required to be licensed as of January 1 next. We are not against licensing, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of gathering statistics on the industry. But certainly I and my colleagues on this side of the House feel that in a matter of imposing restrictive licensing on our people, especially at such short notice, we are entitled to know all the facts and implications of such a policy. For this reason I hope the parliamentary secretary will enlighten me tonight and will tell the people of Newfoundland what are the possible effects of these new licensing regulations.

Mr. William Rompkey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have three minutes in which to answer about ten minutes of questions. I shall do my best. I think there has been a misinterpretation which has led to some confusion. Let me try briefly to make some points. The basic reason behind the licensing program is simply that it is an inventory: I think that is the best way to describe it. It is an inventory or stocktaking.

The hon. member, who has been in the building trade, will know that if one is to build a house, one must know what materials are available to work with. We do not know how many boats we have, and we do not know how many fishermen we have or where they are. It is a stocktaking, inventory or head count so that we will know what we are dealing with. Then we can go on to manage and improve it. That is the first point.

There will be no restrictions. Those who have fished will continue to fish. Anyone who has a history—I think the policy says this in so many words—in the fishery and has fished for seven years, eight years or more will be able to do that. There is no restriction on the number of fishermen. Anyone who wants to fish will be able to get a licence.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rompkey: I have only three minutes: you will have to let me continue. So far as the registration is concerned, it will start with the offshore fleet, the trawler fleet. It is a head count. It will gradually move inshore. It will be about 18 months or more before we get to the inshore fishery. In the meantime, while it says that the policy will come into effect in January, 1974, by the time that policy is applied in respect of the inshore fleet there will have been adequate time for consultation.

We will be setting up very shortly committees in the Atlantic area which will have on them a majority of fishermen and people from the industry, federal fisheries people and people from the provincial government. These people will be looking at the policy of registration and licensing. They will decide how it could be applied to their particular area. I think that is the answer to the question concerning what is a bona fide fisherman. I think we have not stressed enough the committees that will be set up on which the fishermen will serve. They will be consulted. We would like to leave to them the question of the definition of what is and what is not a bona fide fisherman.

For those who do not fish commercially there is absolutely no restriction in respect of small boats 35 feet and under. There is absolutely none, and the policy so states. Anyone who wants to fish or jig for cod or set a herring net, or whatever, will be able to do so. There is no thought to deny the birthright of Newfoundlanders, as I think has been suggested from time to time. People who want to fish to provide a few meals in the winter time, or who want to put some fish away, or the pensioners whom the hon. member mentioned, will be able to do this. There is no thought of applying this policy to that type of person.

Let me deal with a few other points the hon. member raised. So far as unemployment insurance is concerned, I agree with him that changes should be made. We are working toward making those changes. I agree with him wholeheartedly that the plan as it presently exists is unfair to fishermen. I think it should be changed. I believe what we would like to see is possibly some sort of catch insurance eventually. We cannot do that without this licensing policy because unless we know who the catch insurance policy is to apply to, how can it operate? It cannot operate; it is impossible. So we must have the licensing policy in order to put into effect a proper catch insurance program. I think this is what many people would like to see. I think they would like to get away from unemployment insurance but, as a sequel to unemployment insurance and as an improvement on unemployment insurance for fishermen, have a catch insurance program.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I am very sorry but I must interrupt the parliamentary secretary because the time allotted to him has now expired.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH REGIONAL OFFICES—POSITION OF NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on April 10, 1973, in the Standing Committee on Regional Development an exchange took place between the minister and myself in respect of decentralization. I should like to remind the House of some of the things the minister said to me at that time. At that time I asked the minister whether the government was decentralizing in Toronto, and he replied that they were not. I asked whether northern Ontario was not ready for decentralization, and the minister replied:

I am sorry, I have not been asked the question about how we are going to decentralize because I am afraid we got sidetracked onto a few other issues. But I will be very glad to say to you that we are not decentralizing to Toronto. That would not be decentralizing at all; it would be recentralizing in another place, and that is not what we intend to do.

Then on July 17, 1973, as recorded at page 5699 of Hansard, I asked the minister the following question:

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the minister's announcement that DREE will be decentralized and four regional offices established, will he inform the House whether northern Ontario is to be the recipient of one of these regional offices?

HON. DONALD C. JAMIESON (MINISTER OF REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION): Mr. Speaker, it will not only be the recipient of a regional office; there will be other regional offices established in Ontario and there will be a very special office established in northern Ontario.

Then lo and behold, on November 26, 1973, the Regional Economic Expansion Department issued a press release in which the following statements were made:

The new organization plan provides for a major decentralization of the staff and activities of the department and for the establishment of regional headquaters in Moncton, Montreal, Toronto and Saskatoon. It also provides for the strengthening of the departmental offices in provincial capitals, which are to be headed by a senior official at the director general level.

It is fairly obvious that there is a great discrepancy between what the minister says will happen and what actually is taking place. The minister displays a complete insensitivity to the feelings and needs of the people in northern Ontario. What is in effect taking place is the recentralizing of the department's bureaucracy in Toronto, and if anyone knows how the people of northern Ontario feel about that kind of thing, how they view Toronto in the perspective of northern Ontario, they will know that it means for them "business as usual" so far as DREE red-tape and the people of northern Ontario are concerned.

I raised this whole matter of what the minister euphemistically calls the decentralizing of DREE in the miscellaneous estimates committee hearing on November 28, 1973. I asked the minister about the cross-purposes of these two regional offices which he annouced, one in Toronto and the other at the Lakehead, and the myriad smaller offices in other parts of the province. The minister is never at a loss for words and he was not at a loss on this occasion, because this is what he said:

Well, a continuous monitoring service is built into the decentralization through which on a regular basis—and by regular, I suppose in most instances, it would be daily—advice is provided to a co-ordinating centre here in Ottawa on just what is happening, what offers have been made and so on within the various parts of the country.

The whole operation boggles the mind and sets the stage for even more confusion than before. Gulliver described some of these situations in his travels, and it seems to me that we in northern Ontario will experience that all over again. What the minister should be doing is setting up, in addition to the regional office in Thunder Bay, a regional office in Sudbury to service northeastern Ontario and eastern Ontario. He should be setting up a co-ordinating office in Toronto, not an office of the kind he describes in his press release which is in effect decentralizing the bureaucracy from Ottawa to Toronto.

Let Toronto have the co-ordinating office. Let them fiddle around with the statistical evidence once the approvals have been given and offers taken up in the areas that need them. It seems to me that the minister can uncomplicate things and can make them much smoother for the people in areas such as mine in northern Ontario who have applied for incentive grants under the DREE program.

Mr. Charles Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, following the announcement in the Speech from the Throne in January, 1973, that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion would be decentralized, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) made public on July 16 a copy of a memorandum from his deputy minister to the staff of the department which described in detail the objectives, the basic plan, the principal functions and regional variations of the department's new plan of organization. The document stated clearly that the new plan would provide for a genuine decentralization of the department's analytical, implementation and administrative units.

The department's new plan of organization is aimed at providing for improved integration of departmental activity, for a better capacity to administer existing programs and for improved interdepartmental co-ordination. It also provides for more comprehensive analytical work and for co-operation with provincial governments in the identification and pursuit of developmental opportunities.

On August 10 the minister announced the locations of the regional offices of the department, and in the case of Ontario the announcement mentioned that the regional headquarters for the Ontario region would be in Toronto and that there would be an office in Thunder Bay. At the time of that announcement the minister also indicated that consideration would be given to the establishment of other departmental offices in northern Ontario.

When appearing before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates recently, the minister further stated that this matter would receive priority consideration once the department's initial decentralization is completed. The Toronto office will be headed by an assistant deputy minister, who was appointed on October 19, and the Thunder Bay office will be under the direction of a director. The decentralization of the department is now well in progress. The six assistant deputy ministers have been selected and their appointment was announced on October 19 and on December 3. The appointment of four of the ten provincial directors-general was made public on November 20, and further appointments are to be made soon.

I think that from my comments the hon. member will conclude that no time is being wasted and that this department is rapidly putting into place the administrative machinery to implement its new programs. Detailed consultations about these new programs have been held over the last months will all provincial governments and these have now reached the final stage. The minister will be making announcements about the objectives and features of the department's new development thrusts in all provinces over the next few weeks as soon as agreements are reached with individual provinces.

In the case of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, it can be said that the consultations have been very effective and it is hoped that the signing of a general development agreement covering the federal-provincial developmental effort in Ontario will take place soon.

AIR TRANSPORT—HEAD TAX ON PASSENGERS—SUGGESTED CHANGE FOR PASSENGERS USING FEEDER AIRLINES

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I see with regret that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Marchand) is not in the House tonight to participate in this debate, but as I look over the serried ranks of the government benches it comforts me to realize there is someone there to speak with all the awesome authority of the Minister of Transport. I asked the minister on December 6, as recorded in Hansard at page 8471, if he would consider making changes in the new head tax of $2.80 on air passengers that would make it less discriminatory against people who live on islands or reside in cities and towns on feeder airline routes. His answer was no.

Victoria airport has been vastly overcrowded for a considerable length of time. I asked a question, that was answered on September 19 this year, concerning the crowding of a variety of airports and received a list of seven airports which showed that Victoria was far more crowded than any of the others. This is a very handsome airport but far too small for the number of people crowding through it, particularly in the tourist season. I need only say that Victoria airport in the tourist season is a little more than twice as crowded as Toronto airport was before the opening of terminal No. 2, and anybody who had the experience of passing through Toronto airport before they opened terminal No. 2, which drained off hundreds of thousands of people, will realize just how crowded our pretty little airport is.

I might say in passing that it is very well staffed and managed and the people who are employed there, like all the people engaged in welcoming tourists and visitors to Vancouver, are noted for courtesy and efficiency. I understand there is a compromise solution that has been offered to enlarge the airport, which I welcome; but I would have preferred that they had moved their plans two years ahead to a more appropriate date of 1974 and had gone ahead with the original plan to enlarge it. However, I do not want to upset anything that will alleviate the overcrowding situation next summer.

On the question of the $2.80 head tax, Mr. Speaker, it would be hard to design a more iniquitous and unfair tax than this when you relate it to the people who are going to use it. It is not related to the length of the trip or the ability to pay, or first-class or economy fare or old age pensioners; it is just a kind of bludgeon and everybody is hit with $2.80 no matter how far they are going or no matter how long they will be in the airport. I understand a change has been made now and that people will not have to pay $2.80 every time they change on a single trip.

Just looking at the trip from Victoria to Vancouver, that comes to $13 now. I might recall for the parliamentary secretary that 11 years ago we used to travel from Victoria to Vancouver for $5. It was subsequently raised to $8 and it is now $13. This tax will make a total of $15.80, a 21 per cent increase. At the same time there is a subsidized ferry route which takes you to Vancouver for $3.25 midweek and that includes the bus to the ferry and to downtown Vancouver. The fares for air travel do not include bus fare, so that adds another $4. People are going to be discouraged from using air travel from Victoria to Vancouver, and 80 per cent of our passengers go to Vancouver. It is not only bad business and unclear in its execution; it is also likely to cost them dearly in passengers in the long run. When they enlarge the airport they might find that passengers have dropped off.

We have no proof that the department is in need of this money. Airports have always lost money; airports always need money. I suspect someone has come up with this idea for raising money perhaps after travelling in a foreign country where they have seen a sales tax or a head tax. A sales tax would be more fair than this type of tax. Somebody probably came home and said to the Minister of Transport, "Let's charge everybody $2.80 for using our airports". Probably they do need the money, but they have not explained to this House or anybody else that they need it. They would do well to look at the submission made by the Air Transport Association of Canada. This group, of course, is not disinterested but they ask that the proposed airport charge should wait.

At the present time, although it is due to start on or after January 1, there is no inkling whether the tax is to be collected with the ticket, whether there will be cash registers in the airports, whether the commissionaire is going to collect it, the tax collector, or who. This is a disgraceful display of bad administration, Mr. Speaker, and it should be halted until they find out, first, why they need the money and, second, how they are going to collect it and whether they can figure out a system for people travelling short distances which would be more fair. People who travel short distances, other than people on the west coast, are usually the people from the east coast, the most depressed area in Canada.

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the problem the hon. member faces. He has explained it very well and the problem with regard to short flights. May I begin my answer by reading the press release put by the Department of Transport on December 4, 1973. It reads:

> The $2.80 airport charge announced yesterday, which is to be levied on air carriers, will be applied only once regardless of the number of planes a passenger embarks on in the progress of a continuous one-way trip, transport minister Jean Marchand announced today.
> In his news release of yesterday, Mr. Marchand announced that the airport charge will be levied as soon as the administrative details can be worked out. To clarify questions which have arisen, Mr. Marchand said there will be only one charge regardless of how many planes a passenger embarks on in the course of a continuous one-way trip.

This answer obviously affects to a major degree people flying on shorter airline routes. It is true that achieving reasonable equity in the collection of this charge, while at the same time minimizing the impact on any particular group who use the airport facilities, is a difficult task. The earlier proposal for an air transportation tax had the advantage of being directly related to air fares and thus in relative terms it appeared less onerous. However, while the impact of the transportation tax may have appeared less severe, in terms of equity based on use of facilities it had obvious undesirable features. The current airport charge which is to be collected from the air carriers at the rate of $2.80 per enplaning passenger is in fact almost directly proportional to passenger use of airport facilities.

The airport charge is levied on the carriers. It is not yet clear how they will choose to recover the costs involved. However, in the competitive air travel market it may be that strategic pricing will require the adjustment of any particular air fare by more or less than the amount of the airport charge. Until carriers have obtained approval for any revisions to tariffs it will be difficult to know what the final impact of the airport charge will be.

It is intended that the levy on air carriers of $2.80 per passenger will remove a portion of airport facilities' costs from the general taxpayer and will have them borne by those who choose to travel by air. This, in my view, is a significant step in achieving equity and fairness in the allocation of airport costs.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

CLOSING OF HAWKER SIDDELEY FORGE OPERATION—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the action presently under way by the management of Hawker Siddeley Canada Limited to dismantle their forge at Trenton, Nova Scotia, the largest such operation in Canada, in view of the great strategic and industrial importance of this unique facility to Canada, and in view of the possible efforts that this course of action will have on the work force of Hawker Siddeley's Trenton operations, as well as the interests of the industries which have grown to depend on the capacity of this forge for special projects, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce forthwith instruct the management of Hawker Siddeley Canada Ltd. to immediately cease the dismantling of this unique forge and the machine shop used in connection therewith, until suitable alternatives have been discussed and arranged.

GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion to move under Standing Order 43. Because of two recent actions within the Department of the Secretary of State, the shifting of Opportunities for Youth to Manpower and the failure to complete an evaluation of all summer youth programs, both indicating a major government policy shift, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That this House urge the Secretary of State to make an early statement outlining the reasons for the abandonment of any youth policy despite glowing promises by the Prime Minister two years ago and the spending of millions of tax dollars on this aborted policy.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DOMESTIC OIL PRICING—STAGING IN OF INCREASES NEXT YEAR—MINISTER'S POSITION ON DISCUSSION WITH SASKATCHEWAN PREMIER BEFORE FIRST MINISTER'S CONFERENCE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and I will give him an opportunity to return to his seat. I should like to ask the minister if he is now prepared to hold consultations with the premier of Saskatchewan with a view to resolving any differences between the two levels of government on domestic oil pricing arrangements before the first ministers' conference next month and in particular, has the minister undertaken to seek out the views of the province of Saskatchewan toward staging in oil price increases next year?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have had the opportunity of talking to the premier and I suggested to him that in advance of the federal-provincial conference it might be desirable to postpone the application date of his new legislation at least until February 1. He took that under advisement.

INCREASE IN CRUDE OIL PRICE PROPOSED BY SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PERSONALLY INTERVENE WITH PREMIER

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the comment of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that the question is under advisement concerning the proposed increase in the price of crude oil in Saskatchewan, and bearing in mind that such an increase might result in an extra cost of $100 million to the consumers of Canada, will the Prime Minister personally intervene with the premier of Saskatchewan on this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure in what sense the suggestion is constructive. I know it is understood that we are going to discuss this matter at the January conference of first ministers. The principle on which the government is going to proceed was put before the House in my statement last week, and we will discuss on this basis with all the premiers. I imagine there will be some consultation in advance, but I see no purpose at this stage in talking personally to Premier Blakeney.

STUDY OF IMPACT OF PROPOSED INCREASE BY SASKATCHEWAN IN CRUDE OIL PRICE

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a further supplementary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has his department completed or do they have under way any study of what in fact will be the impact on the consuming public and industry in Canada should Saskatchewan increase the price of its crude oil as suggested by about $2 per barrel?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the impact of further price increases at the instance of any of the producing provinces is a matter that has been under study.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—STEPS TO AVOID DELAY IN COMMENCEMENT OF CONSTRUCTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of a story in this morning's Montreal Gazette that the president of Interprovincial Pipe Lines, Mr. Waldon, appears to be of the opinion that work on the extension of the pipeline to Montreal may not be started or will not be started until the spring of 1975, with the result that there will be another year's delay in the pipeline coming on stream. Is the government taking energetic steps to avoid the delay which the president of Interprovincial Pipe Lines apparently expects and perhaps even welcomes?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that Mr. Waldon's comments were related to the length of the regulatory proceedings that would precede construction and the possibility of telescoping the time frame of those proceedings without doing prejudice to the public interest required by the National Energy Board Act. This is something that we have had under discussion with the board.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister what precise steps, if any, have been taken to make sure that the hearings by the National Energy Board will not take the time that Mr. Waldon suggests they might, and whether in fact the two sets of hearings might not be held simultaneously by panels of the board in order to avoid the rather dangerous delay suggested by the president of the pipeline company?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we will want to respect the responsibility of the board toward its procedures, but we are bringing to the board's attention the general public concern that there should not be undue delay in this regard.

REPLY TO DEMANDS BY SYNCRUDE CONSORTIUM

Mr. David Lewis (York South): The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is, of course, aware of the fact that Syncrude made certain demands on the federal government. They first asked for a reply by November 16 and then decided to extend that a month to December 16, which is next Sunday. What demands has the Syncrude consortium made and has the federal government replied to any of those demands?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague, the Minister of Finance, has dealt with the response in relation to the taxation problem. I think a brief summary of that would be that the parties to the transaction have amended the nature of the transaction so that it would fit within the federal income tax law as it exists rather than requiring an amendment or some kind of special exemption. With regard to the question of pricing in particular, the companies had inquired as to the prospects of there being an assured price for the Syncrude product at a level which would enable the development to go ahead. We have indicated to them, in line with the comments made by the Prime Minister in his statement of last week, that a pricing policy would be envisaged which would enable higher cost resources to be brought on stream. One further element would be the risk of the project having to be run at less than optimum capacity because of shut-in requirements. We have agreed that the tar sands project, because of the necessity to have an optimum operation, would not be subject to the same risk of being shut in as would, for example, a conventional well.

MANPOWER

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM—REPORTED KIDNAPPING OF TWO PUBLIC SERVANTS IN RIMOUSKI

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the delays of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in accepting local initiatives programs, because of which two federal employees were kidnapped in Rimouski this morning, does the Prime Minister intend to intervene directly with the department to get those projects approved on the double?

[English]

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the department is aware of this matter. The minister is returning from Toronto to give personal attention to it and in the meantime all proper steps are being taken.

ENERGY

OIL—MEASURES TO ASSIST EASTERN CANADIANS TO COPE WITH HIGH PRICES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the right hon. gentleman's advice to eastern Canada two days ago, "If you cannot afford foreign oil, don't buy it," I wonder if he could indicate briefly what plans the government has for this winter, perhaps in conjunction with provincial administrations, to provide some alternative source of fuel, or does he have any policy in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has misconstrued my remarks.

Mr. Hees: You said it. We heard it. It is that simple.

Mr. Trudeau: The question seems to have been, what would we do to make sure that the price of offshore oil would be lowered, or something along those lines. With regard to the consuming end, we have indicated various responses. I summed them up in my speech. I would refer the hon. member to it. I would also remind him that we suggested that in January we would be discussing with the provinces the measures or approaches we might take jointly to meet any further problems that might subsist.

Mr. MacKay: I thank the Prime Minister for his very interesting answer. I do not want in any way to be unfair to him, but he did say a couple of days ago, as recorded at page 8669 of Hansard, that the federal government can in no way determine the price at which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might not try to have questions rather than debate. Perhaps the hon. member could ask the question directly rather than referring to a prior statement. It might be easier for the Chair if that were done.

Mr. MacKay: All right, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman could indicate to us what specific measures he has for the short term. I indicated to him before that I wondered whether he was considering a short term subsidy or some other means to protect the people of the five eastern provinces of Canada from the very critical situation which is compounded by problems of transportation and supply from offshore sources. Surely he must have some specific measure so the people of eastern Canada will know how they are going to heat their homes this winter.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. In an earlier statement I indicated that the Minister of National Health and Welfare had communicated with the provinces, for instance, to ensure that our Canada Assistance Plan payments would be adequate to help those who are on welfare. I also indicated the escalation of various payments, family allowances and so on, which are now going toward offsetting the higher cost of living.

Mr. Hees: Give them a little welfare and hope they make it.

● (1120)

Mr. Trudeau: If the hon. member is arguing that the federal government alone should bear the responsibility for these higher prices, I would just say that is not our view. Those provinces have for many years benefited from lower world prices compared with the people west of the Ottawa Valley line.

Mr. Hees: So let them freeze now.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not a question of letting them freeze. It is a question of who should pay the subsidy. I do not think the federal government should assume, as hon. members opposite are, that the taxpayers of all Canada should alone subsidize the people of certain provinces. I think the provincial governments themselves have some responsibility in this regard, particularly in view of the fact for years they have levied higher taxes on that cheaper oil in their provinces.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Because of the fact that for a number of years there has been a balance in favour of Quebec and the eastern provinces in terms of the price of crude which never exceeded 50 cents a barrel, is it the Prime Minister's position that this justifies a national policy which involves the five eastern provinces paying perhaps an additional $3 a barrel? Is it the position of the Prime Minister that, because there has been a balance, sometimes as much as 50 cents a barrel, in favour of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec in terms of the price of crude, those provinces should be left to bear the cost of crude oil running as much as $3 or more a barrel more than the rest of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. It is the government's position that the provincial governments have some responsibility in assisting the citizens of their provinces, that the federal taxpayer, that is to say, taxpayers from every part of Canada, should not be asked to subsidize a loan to the eastern consumers in this particular circumstance. The government intends bringing forth propositions to the federal-provincial conference—

An hon. Member: What are they?

Mr. Hees: There are six very cold weeks ahead.

Mr. Trudeau: If members opposite would support us in a unilateral declaration policy, I would be glad to state it now, but they have often been urging us to consult with the provinces.

Mr. Hees: You have not got a policy.

Mr. Trudeau: George, I think you should go back to the time when you just contented yourself with looking like Gorgeous George.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I am getting to him. The Prime Minister says, let them burn wood. That is his policy.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Prime Minister might be allowed to repeat his reply. There are a few supplementaries by the hon. member for Central Nova and the hon. member for St. John's East. We will then try to move on.

Mr. Hees: I didn't know I could get under your skin so well.

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member does not get under my skin with the knife he put under the skin of his former leader.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You are frightfully funny this morning. Let's get back now to your wood burning policy.

Mr. Trudeau: I must repeat that I do not assume that the federal government must in every case subsidize citizens of some provinces when the provincial governments themselves have just received $190 million in equalization funds over and above the amount received in previous years. They have received this as a result of a change in the equalization policy. I believe they have some responsibility toward their own citizens, and I am a little surprised that federal Members of Parliament sitting opposite have no more concern for the federal taxpayers than they do.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have what I hope is a reasonably non-argumentative supplementary for the right hon. gentleman. I am not suggesting to the Prime Minister that the federal government bear the entire responsibility, but I should like to ask him whether he is prepared to consider on a short-term basis a measure, for example, reducing to some extent the federal sales tax on gasoline, or something else to help us, because it was the neglect of this government to build a pipeline that put us into this position in the first place.

Mr. Hees: We suggested it four years ago, and you know it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I certainly accept the representation made by the hon. member, but I put it to him and, indeed, to the provincial governments that they, too, might consider reducing their gasoline taxes.

Mr. Hees: And if they did, would you?

An hon. Member: Give your backbenchers a chance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Prime Minister might be allowed to reply to the question. There are a number of supplementaries. For the moment the Prime Minister has the floor.

Mr. Trudeau: This is the kind of subject we shall be discussing at the federal-provincial conference. I hope the provinces will come to that conference prepared to pay some money. The easy solution of equalization would mean we would take all the money from Alberta and redistribute it to the eastern provinces. I see the hon. member is shaking his head. I hope he and his friends will indicate whether they have some alternative approach which might be useful for the federal-provincial conference in January.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): In view of the fact the five eastern provinces have taxed their people to the limit of their capacity to pay and in view of the additional expenditures these provinces have to undertake because of excessively high unemployment, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he is prepared at the federal-provincial conference in January to increase equalization payments to these five provinces so they can reduce their taxes on gasoline?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the House should realize that as the revenues to Alberta go up because of eventual increases in the price of petroleum the consequences in regard to equalization payments will be of very great magnitude, and that through the very operation of the equalization system these massive new revenues to Alberta will be redistributed through that system to the have-not provinces. This should be kept in mind by members over there who are always urging the federal government to place an even heavier burden upon federal taxpayers so as to help their own provinces. I must urge them to act as representatives of all Canadians and not only of one particular province.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might have a last supplementary on this subject, after which I will see the hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

• (1130)

APPLICATION OF EXPORT TAX TO DOMESTIC OIL SHIPPED VIA PANAMA CANAL TO EASTERN CANADA—PRICES AT WEST COAST AND MONTREAL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct two questions to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will he give the House an assurance that both export charges and export taxes on crude oil moving from the west coast through the Panama Canal either to Portland and into the pipeline there or to Halifax or Port Hawkesbury will in fact not be included in the final price of the oil when it winds up on the consumer's doorstep, and at the same time will he indicate the difference in the price of oil as it comes out of the Trans Mountain pipeline on the west coast and the price when it comes out of the pipeline at Montreal?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question, the export tax would, of course, be applicable in respect of exports to foreign locations only. To the extent that oil was received through the Portland pipeline the tax would not be applicable or would be subject to a drawback. It would seem to me that the hon. gentleman's second point was not a question. Could he reformulate it? I did not quite follow him.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister whether he could advise the House as to the cost of oil per barrel or ton coming out of the pipeline on the west coast as opposed to the cost of oil coming out of the pipeline at Montreal? I would suggest that you do have to pay an export tax in order to move oil through the Panama Canal.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You do not have to pay a Canadian export tax for this purpose.

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, you do; you are collecting it now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With regard to the question of cost, Mr. Speaker, the cost difference depends really on the tanker charges through the Panama Canal, which vary from tanker to tanker. I cannot give the hon. gentleman a figure this morning, but it would certainly be possible to compare the tanker charges from Sarnia and Toronto to Montreal with the tanker charges through the Panama Canal.

Oral Questions

YOUTH

ALLEGED ABANDONMENT OF PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State and is related to my motion under Standing Order 43. I should like to ask whether the minister intends to make an early statement outlining the reasons behind the abandonment by his department of youth programs?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there has been no abandonment by my department of youth programs, and I think the hon. member knows that. I think what he really wants to know is when an announcement will be made about the student summer employment program. There will be an announcement made in that regard, I suspect, sometime in January.

Mr. Rose: In view of the fact that after two years there has been no youth report and the Opportunities for Youth Program is about to be transferred to the Department of Manpower and Immigration and therefore there is no youth policy or program, will the minister please indicate whether the problems in this regard have to do with in-fighting in his department, incompetence on the part of the minister or both?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Do you still beat your wife?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is obviously not in order.

FINANCE

MONETARY REFORM—INFLATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONSIDERATION BY INTERNATIONAL BODIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Would he be prepared to make a statement to the House this coming week reporting on the progress or lack thereof being made by the Committee of 20 in dealing with international monetary reform? This is a longstanding problem and the minister has been particularly silent on it. In addition, will he see what efforts are being made in relation to the World Bank, and whether there is some formula for combatting inflation other than extraordinarily high interest rates because in Canada we have had a further increase in the bank prime rate?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the latter point first, I made that point at the last meeting in Nairobi, that is, the effect of high interest rate structures of certain major industrial nations on other countries. As the hon. gentleman will recall, I made a report to the House when I came back from that meeting. The next meeting of the Group of 20 will be in Rome on January 17 and 18, and I would think the appropriate time to report to the House would be at the earliest opportunity after that date.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN POLICY RESPECTING ISRAEL AND ARAB STATES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

As all Commonwealth countries except Canada have already rejected Israeli claims to Arab territories taken over through violence, can the minister tell us whether he intends to apply, in the near future, a Canadian policy that agrees with that of the other countries of the Commonwealth?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday in the House of Commons, the policy of Canada with respect to the Middle East conflict was expressed by me in the House on October 16, and I have no intention of changing it.

ENERGY

REQUEST THAT SALES TAX ON FIREWOOD BE ABOLISHED

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

As is reported on page 8670 of Hansard, he said last Wednesday, in reply to the question asked by the hon. member for Central Nova, that if the people in Quebec and the other eastern provinces find the cost of oil too high, they do not have to buy it. Mr. Speaker, will the right hon. Prime Minister then recommend to the Minister of Finance that he abolish the sales tax on firewood?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has certainly misunderstood the reply and the question. The question was: What will the government do to lower offshore prices? I replied that we could do nothing to prevent the Arab countries and Venezuela from selling us their oil at the price that they judge adequate. As for the hon. member's request, I shall put it down on the agenda of our discussions with the eastern provinces, and I repeat that the equalization system will be of great help to the provinces. They will also profit from the income tax on the new family allowances and I believe that this will bring them about $125 million.

So, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. member that he be more considerate towards federal taxpayers and not try to lay on them the burden of the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify the situation I rise on a point of order. I point out very briefly, and without being contentious, that the right hon. Prime Minister said, as found on page 8670 of Hansard for Wednesday, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Central Nova:

> The only remedy we or the provinces have if we do not want to pay that price is not to take the oil.

That is little comfort to the people of eastern Canada, and I would ask the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a supplementary question he will be recognized for that purpose.

Mr. Hees: He said, let them burn wood.

Mr. Grafftey: That being government policy as announced by the Prime Minister, what specific recommendations or plans does the government have for eastern Canadians this winter, especially those on low incomes? This is why I suggested quite seriously that the Prime Minister might suggest to the Minister of Finance that he abolish the sales tax on firewood and wood heaters.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have just spoken to the Minister of Finance and he tells me there is no sales tax on firewood.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: So now they can follow the Prime Minister's instructions and burn wood.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre, but the hon. member for Central Nova rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to you, Sir, for rising on a point of order, but I am sure the Prime Minister would not want to be unfair to me by attributing a different connotation to the question I asked. I did not suggest to the Prime Minister—upon reflection I am sure he will agree—that there was anything he or his government could do to prevent foreign governments from raising the price of oil. I am sure he will agree with that if he looks at Hansard. The purport of my question I thought was quite clear. What did he intend to do when the price of oil reached a certain level making it very difficult for people of eastern Canada to afford it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Oral Questions

TRANSPORT

REQUIREMENT THAT RAILWAYS PROVIDE PROVINCES WITH INFORMATION ON COSTS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of news reports that the minister has given the Canadian railways ten days to open their books to the governments of the four western provinces in order to provide financial and other statistical data regarding rail transportation costs, and in view of further reports that failure by the railways to comply will result in legislation compelling them to do so, will the minister advise when he first made the request for such information following the Western Economic Opportunities Conference, have the railways since then refused to provide such information, and when was the ten days' grace given to them?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the provinces have asked us that the costs be disclosed in July. This request was immediately forwarded to the Canadian Transport Commission. The commission has felt that there could be some legal objections to the disclosure of costs. I then communicated directly with the railway companies two days ago asking them to cooperate by advising me of all the costs concerning the establishment of the tariff and I have given them till December 21, some ten days to answer yes or no. If the railway companies refuse to disclose the costs, obviously for legal reasons and if those reasons are valid, there will be no other alternative than to ask the House to compel the railway companies to disclose them.

[English]

Mr. Benjamin: In view of the fact the four western provinces are to be provided with this information, whatever it takes to get it from the railways, and in view of the rail transportation problems in the rest of the country, would the minister advise whether the government is now prepared to require the railways to provide the same information to all provinces, particularly the Atlantic provinces where rail transportation difficulties are also apparent?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this policy applies throughout Canada and that we are prepared to provide, on a confidential basis, all components of rail transportation costs.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to a question previously put to the Minister of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair thought the hon. member had a supplementary to the question now before the House. I understand the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar has a supplementary to the question just asked.

● (1140)

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that last night before the standing committee the Commissioner of the Canadian Wheat Board said it would be necessary for the government to buy a total of 20,000 hopper cars over a period of years in order to move western grain efficiently, will this cost investigation cover rolling stock as well as track and roadbed costs? In other words, will the railways be asked to provide information on rolling stock costs also?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the type of cars that the hon. member is referring to were paid in the past by the federal government and not by the railway companies.

Now, concerning what will happen in the future, I can really not answer because this is a hypothetical question.

[English]

Mr. Gleave: A further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary, followed by the hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Gleave: Since the cost of rolling stock, including motive power, and roadbed costs are all integral parts of operating a rail transportation system, will this investigation extend to the cost of purchasing and maintaining the necessary rolling stock to run a railroad?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, the initiative of requesting cost distribution belongs to the provinces. In fact, the Prime Minister has offered to the provinces to provide confidentially the required information concerning costs. Now, I could not say what type of information the provinces are going to request. And if they request the type of information that the hon. member indicates, they will get it, of course.

ENERGY

OIL—AUTHORITY FOR GOVERNMENT TO SHARE IN REVENUE FROM EXPORT CHARGE AFTER FEBRUARY 1 NEXT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. He has indicated that the export tax will be returned to the producing provinces and also that after February 1 next the export charge will be a matter for discussion between the federal and the provincial governments, which can only be interpreted to mean that the federal government intends to take a share of that revenue after February 1. Could the minister indicate under what authority the situation will change as of February 1 that will entitle him to a share of that revenue to which he is not entitled at the present time?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I would turn it the other way around, Mr. Speaker. On the assumption that the export charge is collected, it would all go into the Consolidated Revenue Fund unless parliament decided to appropriate it for the provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are less than five minutes to go before the end of the question period. We should try to move on before the end of the question period.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER ON POSSIBILITY OF COMPLETING OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION BY END OF 1975

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister as soon as he gets back to his seat. It is based on his statement of November 22, I believe, in which he said in part that "I am now confident that we can complete the pipeline to eastern Canada by the end of 1975." Would the Prime Minister advise the House whether in fact, as a result of the statement by Mr. Waldon, he still stands by that statement, or will he now state he was misinformed and in error?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had been in his seat and listening he probably would have heard the answer given by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to a question along those lines earlier in the session today.

Mr. Alexander: I did not ask a question of the minister and he did not answer me. I am asking the Prime Minister this question: Will he now state that he is confident the government can complete the pipeline to eastern Canada by the end of 1975, built on the confidence he had on November 22? Does he still stand by that statement? That is all I am asking him.

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether the Prime Minister said yes or no.

Mr. Stanfield: He said yes.

Mr. Alexander: He is nodding his head so he said yes. He is petulant again.

Mr. Sharp: Grow up.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I asked the Prime Minister a simple question and he tried to fob me off to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Now we know that the pipeline will be built by the end of 1975. My supplementary is this, my dear Mr. Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should direct his question to the Speaker. May I remind hon. members that there are now only three minutes left before the end of the question period.

Mr. Alexander: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask the Prime Minister a simple supplementary. I have information to the effect that steel will not be available until February or March of 1975, which is somewhat in line with the statement made by Mr. Waldon. Can the Prime Minister indicate whether that is a fact, or does he know whether in fact sufficient steel will be available prior to that time in order that the pipeline can be completed by the end of 1975?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that steel would not be a problem that would be incapable of resolution. I think this line of questioning just points out that the Tories always stand for gloom and doom.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I dislike taking the time to reply to the Prime Minister who seems to have found his old form in the past couple of weeks. We are asking questions because of the conflicting statements coming from the government in the last couple of weeks, which have left many of the people of Canada in confusion. All we are trying to ascertain on this side of the House are the answers to very important questions that have nothing to do with gloom and doom and are asked only to get sufficient information in order that the people of Canada can know what the hell is going on around here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

RESPONSE TO REQUEST OF NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK PREMIERS FOR ASSISTANCE IN MEETING HIGH OIL PRODUCT PRICES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister yet responded to the request of the premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to provide some form of direct assistance or equalization with respect to the very rapid increase in the price of petroleum products in eastern Canada, particularly heating fuel where there has been an increase of 20 to 25 per cent since September? Would he indicate what response there has been by the government to the request from those two premiers in particular?

● (1150)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have invited them to attend a federal-provincial conference where these matters will be discussed and, hopefully, solved by getting the taxpayers of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta particularly to pay supplementary taxes in order to help the province of the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In light of the fact that earlier today the Prime Minister indicated that proposals would be put forward with respect to the very serious situation in eastern Canada—I hope he is not attempting in some facetious way to minimize the impact of that situation—I wonder whether he, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and other appropriate ministers would be willing, since this conference will not take place for six weeks and presumably it will be some time after that before a definite decision can be arrived at, and in view of the increasing difficulty in eastern Canada now, to have a meeting before Christmas with the five eastern premiers or their responsible ministers to try to work out an interim plan in the same way as the government has agreed to an interim plan for the remaining part of the country?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the Prime Minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would repeat in another form the answer I gave previously, that if the premiers of these provinces are doing their homework, and I assume they are, they will realize that they will receive through the equalization grants massive sums of money—

Mr. Hees: That old, cracked record.

Mr. Trudeau: —arising from the higher prices which will eventually go to the Alberta petroleum producers. These massive sums of money will be available through the redistribution formula to the so-called have-not provinces, the five eastern provinces. I just put it once again before the members of the Tory opposition that they should consider that a further undertaking by the federal government to raise taxes across Canada once more in order to help these provinces should certainly be held in abeyance until after the impact of the equalization grants is understood by hon. members opposite.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are reaching the end of the question period. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for South Shore on a supplementary and then call orders of the day.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member rises on a point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I think that consistently throughout the question period this morning the Prime Minister has deliberately misrepresented the function of the federal government.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is not good enough—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is not good enough to have this kind of misrepresentation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think I have to bring to the attention of hon. members that during the question period we have had argument and points of order but very few questions during the 40 minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: We are at the end of the question period, and with every question and every answer we have had debate. I am not referring only to questions but to answers also. Let us say that every exchange has been a debate more than a series of questions and answers. This may be very interesting and fascinating from the point of view of the Chair and hon. members, but we reach the end of the question period without the Chair having been able to see as many members as I am sure all hon. members would want the Chair to recognize. That is why I thought I would invite hon. members to reflect on this aspect of the question period. I am still trying to see the hon. member for South Shore.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the hon. member on his point of order.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I agree with you, Sir, about the lack of progress that has been made in the question period, but I would hope Your Honour and other hon. members would analyse the impact of the Prime Minister insisting continually during the question period on dealing in a facetious way with essential questions on important matters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's comment is not helpful at all. I think we should try to finish the question period on another note. I am sure the hon. member for South Shore will have an entirely non-controversial question to ask, and following the answer I will call orders of the day.

GRAIN

STEPS TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE OF FEED GRAIN IN ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I do have a question dealing with an urgent and pressing problem of the people of Atlantic Canada and I should like to direct it to the right hon. Prime Minister. Having regard to persistent reports that many feed grain users in eastern Canada now have only one week's supply of feed grains or less, can the Prime Minister tell the House what specific plans the government now hopes to implement to help in this serious situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of that question.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, and I hope the government House leader will not walk out.

An hon. Member: Come back here, Allan, and sit down.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My point of order arises out of comments I have heard from members in all parties during the last 24 hours. In view of the fact that at four o'clock today we shall be dealing with public bills, I wonder if there could be agreement to a House order that at that time we proceed to order No. 86 which is my Bill C-10 calling for the abolition of the Senate.

An hon. Member: Do we have one for the abolition of Stanley?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed from Thursday, December 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or marked disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, last night when I called it ten o'clock I was commenting on how important historically and currently energy in the form of natural gas is to my constituency of Medicine Hat and in particular to the city of Medicine Hat. I had given some specific examples of what natural gas had done for my city, and I had concluded at ten o'clock by saying that all of Canada will benefit from the end product of this activity plus the export of surplus natural gas to central Canada. I added that it is not an exaggeration to suggest that both the city and the rural communities served by Medicine Hat and Redcliff have waited some 70 odd years for this pay off.

I want to give hon. members a personal glimpse of what energy means to me as a landowner. Thanks to the foresight of my grandfather and my father I have been most fortunate in that I presently own the mineral rights to a section of my cattle range. The deed or title to this land not only signifies my right to the surface, but with respect to the minerals under that surface it reads something like this, and I am paraphrasing here from memory. It gives me the rights to all mines and minerals except gold and silver which may be found to exist within upon, or under, and includes precious stones but excludes all coal, which is reserved for the Canadian Pacific Railway.

That is the way in which a deed reads in Alberta with respect to the mineral rights on lands which some of us who are fortunate still own. For 42 years, since our natural resources were returned to the province, mineral right taxes have been paid on this land just like the surface land tax, both payable to the government of Alberta.

There is a very important and fundamental issue at stake here that strikes at the very roots of private enterprise. This is a pillar of my own personal way of life. I refer to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that that land title gives me the right to develop and produce agricultural products from the surface, and in addition I am entitled to the benefits of production from below the surface, subject only to the restrictions in the deed.

● (1200)

I say to this House that these fundamental rights of the individual, and indeed the rights of the province of Alberta, are in serious doubt due to the very far reaching and severely restrictive powers suggested in this energy allocation bill. Alberta's energy supplies allocation board will be acting as a Crown corporation and it will be their constitutional right to regulate energy production and price. This bill in many respects is somewhat comparable to the first C-176 bill of over two years ago, the federal farm products marketing bill, and is similar at least to the first drafts, with its very restrictive supply-management concepts. Bill C-236 provides for an allocation agency as powerful and far reaching as the wartime prices and trade board.

The supreme power of the minister under this bill surely must be subject to review and revision. The bill as proposed would allow for control of production and pricing of Medicine Hat's utilities that have been operating since 1900, including, of course, its electrical utility. Surely such a prospect will cause grave concern to Medicine Hat's industries and in particular to the new petrochemical industries.

In my opening remarks I went into some detail to point out the significance and importance of natural gas development to my riding. All of this development came about as a direct result of a free and private enterprise system. It should be noted that nearly all of the gas development has been done by that group generally known as the independent petroleum group, owned and controlled mainly by Canadians. This same development was possible because of the risk capital made available by the independents. It was made available, of course, in anticipation of reasonable profits. I say "reasonable" profits and not so-called "windfall" profits. This term, thanks to the NDP-Liberal coalition, is becoming almost as offensive in its connotations as the term "corporate ripoff".

I ask these questions, Mr. Speaker. Was it windfall profits from the United States that first supplied the risk capital to start Alberta's oil boom in pre-Leduc days? Was it windfall profits that helped develop the ranching industry at Walsh, with Sarnia Financing, for the Sarnia Ranching Company? Was it windfall profits that prompted the governor and company of adventurers of England trading into Hudson Bay to invest in the future of Northwest Canada 300 years ago? The same can be asked of the backers of the Northwest Company. Was it windfall profits from the United Kingdom and France that led to the early development of the New England states and French Canada? No one can properly describe the $90 million operational debt of great Canadian oil sands, over and above its capital costs, as windfall profits! In all these cases, of course, there was a genuine profit motive, but surely there was something more that can only be explained by the desire of enterprising men to accept a challenge to develop a new country such as Canada.

There are too many suggestions and insinuations these days that there is something immoral about making a profit. I for one will never be ashamed of any profits I make. And they have not been windfall profits. The cattle industry in western Canada for 20 years, from 1951 to 1971, was without adequate profits and very often incurred losses.

As one of Alberta's 19 members of parliament, I am sure I speak for my constituents when I say that we in the Medicine Hat constituency are very mindful and concerned about central and eastern Canada's energy distribution problem. We will willingly share our excess natural gas on a preferential basis with you, but do not ask us to do it as a handout, and do not ask us to allow the proceeds of the export tax to be used for this purpose. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must be continually reminded of their statements in this House and to the media that the total proceeds of this tax will indeed go back to the province of origin.

In its present form, Mr. Speaker, I cannot support Bill C-236. This is not to say that there is not an energy problem, perhaps even a crisis, in Canada today. It is my personal opinion that there are enough federal government agencies right now to properly deal with the current situation. There were clear signs of this current energy situation long before we got into the heating months. The very important first ministers' conference called for next January should surely have been organized the day after the Middle East war began. Further to this bill, when it does go into committee, the highest priority must be given to a detailed and accurate accounting of our oil shortfall, if indeed there is one.

As I conclude these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it very clear that I am completely opposed to using taxpayers' money to buy or otherwise take over an existing oil company that was established within a competitive, private enterprise system. Nor can I see the current need for the creation of another Crown corporation as an alternative to a takeover of an oil company.

In most of our large scale Canadian developments we have had to rely on foreign investment to get the job done due to three basic considerations. First, as a young nation we simply did not have enough total dollars available. Second, after more dollars were available, for reasons that are somewhat obscure Canadians were not prepared to invest in their own country. Third, we did not have enough of our own know-how.

Today I suggest that the first and third considerations no longer exist. We do have the dollars and we do have the know-how. In particular, in Alberta we definitely have the know-how for oil and gas development. As to Canadians being ready to invest in Canada, perhaps this is the right time and opportunity to find out. Certainly Alberta found out some years ago that Albertans were more than willing to invest in their future when the Alberta gas trunk line was formed. I have every confidence as an Alberta citizen that there will be a rush to oversubscribe the new proposed Alberta energy company. If we must have a new Crown corporation for energy, why not a Canadian energy company without a single tax dollar in it? Why not give Canadians a chance to subscribe to it on a voluntary basis? The results could be surprising. Who knows, there might even be some windfall profits.

● (1210)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I cannot close these remarks without a comment on the recent personal attack on Alberta's first minister by Canada's Prime Minister. Prior to the Prime Minister's Vancouver speech, there were clear signs of a new co-operation beginning between Alberta and central and eastern Canada. Certainly there was a feeling that Ontario and Alberta were resolving their differences over natural gas supplies by quiet, behind-the-scenes discussions. The Prime Minister's ill tempered outburst against our Alberta premier sets a new low for federal-provincial diplomacy and indeed lends credence to the suggestion now prevalent that the government has written off Alberta politically.

I said earlier there can be no trade-off regarding the export tax remittance to the provinces. I say further that surely there can be no trade-off involving Alberta oil and the bilingual issue. The member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) was right on when he said last night in this debate that this is a government that uses, and abuses, national unity for its own political survival.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes to express one or two thoughts on the bill before us, to deal with some of its principles, and to comment on what is happening during this debate on this bill.

The bill proposes that, in light of the possibility of a genuine and serious energy crisis in this country, a crisis more serious than now, some authority shall be vested in the government—the authority is vested mainly in the government and not in the board—to allocate supplies of energy to regions and to activities which need it most and which are at the centre of Canadian life and welfare.

I emphasize that anyone who reads the bill carefully will see that it is not the board, really, which will have these powers. Any actions of the board are always to be subject to approval by the federal government. Frequently those actions are to be initiated by the governor in council. The government is responsible to parliament for any action it takes. Furthermore, if one reads the bill carefully, one will note that no allocation program can begin unless the conditions in Canada are such as to justify the government's declaring a national emergency.

The government seeks to take powers under this bill to do a number of things which are normally under provincial jurisdiction. In order, constitutionally, to be able to exercise those powers or, putting it more cautiously, in order to be able to make a case for exercising those powers, the government would declare a national emergency and rely on the peace, order and good government provision of the British North America Act. Therefore, the program of allocations cannot even start, and the regulations under the act can have no effect, unless the conditions with respect to energy in this country are so serious, so critical, that the government has reasons, which it can substantiate in court, for declaring a national emergency. That being so, I cannot understand some of the arguments which have taken place, in view of the framework of this bill. I will return to that in a moment.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

Certainly there is great need for clarification of a number of the proposals in the bill. Certainly there is great need for a number of amendments, because some of the powers are unnecessarily large or unnecessarily wide. There is need to amend the bill. There is therefore a need for the parliamentary committee to consider this bill as quickly as possible, since that is where the amendments can be brought forward.

Amendments cannot be brought forward in these generalized speeches in which we are now indulging on second reading. They cannot be brought forward so long as second reading is dragged out for some purpose that I cannot for the life of me understand. The actual, substantial changes to the bill can only be made in committee, once the bill is before the standing committee of parliament. There members can see if they can persuade each other to make changes for improving the bill, both as to the breadth of its powers and as to the way in which its provisions may function later. That is why I cannot for the life of me understand why the Conservative members have apparently taken the decision to drag out this debate on the bill.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true.

Mr. Lewis: Well, they might not call it a filibuster, but that is precisely what they are doing.

Mr. Paproski: They are speaking because they have something to say.

Mr. Lewis: Some Conservative members are saying that they are merely using their right to speak.

Mr. Paproski: That is right, and so they are.

Mr. Lewis: That is an old excuse for filibustering a bill.

Mr. Paproski: That is not true in this case.

Mr. Lewis: That is an old excuse for filibustering a bill. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that those members on the Conservative benches who for days have been demanding action with respect to Quebec and the eastern provinces and who have sought to declare themselves the champions of the people of those provinces are now preventing passage of the very bill which might be of help to those people in those provinces.

Mr. Paproski: That is not correct, and you know it.

Mr. Lewis: This is the only piece of legislation before this parliament which gives somebody the power to allocate supplies to places that are most seriously in short supply. This legislation wants to make certain that people in areas of this country experiencing a particularly difficult energy situation may at least get some of the energy supplies they need in order to carry on their work and their lives. It would make certain that hospitals, schools, old age pensioners' homes and the like would get supplies that are available elsewhere in this country. This is the only piece of legislation which makes that possible.

As I said, it can and should be improved, and no doubt will be improved in committee. But it is perfectly obvious that for some political reason that God alone knows—certainly I don't understand it—the shortsighted Conservative members in this House are going to prevent this bill from getting to committee where it might be improved, after which its provisions could become available to parts of the country which need assistance.

I can understand that the Conservative party might try to hold up something which deals with the export tax, which apparently it opposes, or the division of the income from the export tax, which it opposes. But why in the name of heaven should Conservative members hold up the only piece of legislation which may be of value to Quebec and the Atlantic provinces if those areas run into serious shortages of supply?

The only reason I can think of, Mr. Speaker, is that Conservative party members are so wedded to the idea that the oil corporations must not be interfered with under any circumstances that they are prepared to put Quebec and the Atlantic provinces in jeopardy by holding up this bill. If I am wrong about Conservative intentions, then I appeal to them to stop the filibuster on second reading. Let us get this bill to the committee. Let us work there to improve it, so that the powers are not broader than those needed and so that they may perform the functions that are intended. But for heaven's sake let us not put Quebec, eastern Canada and other parts of this country in even greater jeopardy by acting as irresponsibly as the Conservative members are acting.

• (1220)

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, if all that the leader of the New Democratic Party has to contribute to the debate on this very serious piece of legislation is what he said the last 10 or 15 minutes, he could well have stayed in his seat and kept his mouth shut.

Mr. Lewis: Eight minutes.

Mr. Coates: All he said is that they are so upset about the sweetheart deal they have negotiated with the government to save their own skins from the electoral catastrophe they are going to face sooner or later, and for the sake of the people of Canada it should be sooner rather than later—

Mr. Lewis: Rubbish.

Mr. Coates: Everything he said for the past eight minutes was rubbish, unadulterated rubbish. Maybe if he listened to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton), he could produce some sort of energy.

The leader of the NDP talked about a filibuster. Before doing that, he should look at who is making the contributions to the debate. Yesterday five speeches were made on this bill. Two were made by members of the Progressive Conservative party, one by a member of his party, one by a Liberal member and one independent. Where the devil do you get a filibuster from that kind of a breakdown?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: At the same time this great democrat and protector of the people says that this bill gives the government all the power of a Caesar. That is what he said after sitting through a question period today where we watched the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) act in the most irresponsible manner possible. It is fortunate for the Prime Minister that the debates in this chamber are not televised, because the real crisis in Canada today would be his leadership if people across this country saw the way he acted here today.

An hon. Member: Tell us about the Gallup poll.

Mr. Coates: I will tell you about the Gallup poll. Any time you want to use the Gallup poll as a measure of your popularity, just pull the plug and let the people of Canada show—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems we are getting on to the Gallup poll and away from the bill before us. Now that we have heard the hon. member's introductory remarks, I invite hon. members to return to the bill.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I can well appreciate your concern about the debate and what has transpired, but I will not stand here and allow any member to impute motives as to why a debate is going on in this House in the way the leader of the NDP did without any interruption of his comments. There was no interruption of his attack on me and all other members who might enter this debate to say what they feel is happening and should be happening in this country. As a result, maybe I did digress for a few moments.

I will take Your Honour's admonition to heart and proceed to some of the aspects of this debate that concern me as a member of this House. I am quite willing to apologize to Your Honour for anything I say, but I am not willing to apologize to any member opposite for anything I say.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: As a member for Atlantic Canada I am naturally very concerned, not only about what is going to happen this winter, but what will happen in the days ahead. Our people are facing an energy crisis which has resulted from the decision that has been made by this government in so far as the supply of fuel is concerned for the people in that part of Canada.

I am very concerned about the attitude of the Prime Minister. Not very long ago he made a visit to Halifax to participate in a testimonial dinner given for the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). It was a gala affair. At that time the Prime Minister cited some very pleasing examples of progress in that part of Canada in so far as regional economic disparity is concerned. He did not encounter any criticism from any member on this side of the House about the statistics he was placing before the people of Nova Scotia, because we recognize there has been some progress made through the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and other federal departments in producing equality of opportunity across this nation. While we did not argue the point, we believe progress could be made faster if some of the policies we presented to the government and the people of Canada were implemented.

At the same time, in one fell swoop the Prime Minister allowed a policy to go into effect that will do much to eradicate the hard work that has been done by many dedicated people in the federal government, namely, allow an escalation of prices that our people are just not capable of handling.

On numerous occasions my leader has enunciated ways and means of eliminating this problem. The Prime Minister said we will remain at the mercy of the "Sheiks of Araby" as far as the prices of gasoline and home heating fuel are concerned. We in this party do not believe that is good government. The Prime Minister also said that because we enjoyed a lesser cost of petroleum products coming from offshore and, according to his estimate, have had a net dividend of some $500 million, we should not now complain because we have to pay $3 a barrel more for oil than other people in Canada. He forgets two things. First, in order for the poor governments of the Atlantic provinces to produce a highway system equivalent to the system across this country, it has had to tax our people a great more throughout that period of time.

● (1230)

When the Diefenbaker government was in office, assistance was provided to ensure that the trans-Canada highway was as good in Newfoundland as it was in British Columbia. But at no time did the users of petroleum in the maritime provinces enjoy supplies at a price lower than anybody else in Canada. In fact, they always paid more. And they paid more because taxes were higher. It was as simple as that.

An hon. Member: Provincial taxes.

Mr. Coates: Provincial taxes, that is right. Taxes to look after a highway system which is now as good as the highway system in Ontario, British Columbia or anywhere else. But worse than that, in this illogical argument about $500 million, is the fact that the whole of Canada has paid to central Canada a subsidy for many years by allowing the establishment of a tariff system which protects industry in the centre of the nation to the detriment of the east and the west. Every province except Ontario and Quebec has paid that bill year after year. We have accepted it because we felt it was the only way in which to keep this nation together.

At the same time, do not pull out bogey men and say one part of Canda has derived great benefit because of a decision which resulted in oil being supplied from overseas at a cheaper rate than oil produced in Alberta. If we had not made the decision we made in 1961 to divide Canada into two zones there would be no oil industry in Alberta today. If, since 1961, there has been no change in policy, it is not our fault. The Liberal party has been in office for a decade, since 1963. Why would they not have made a decision to upgrade the valuable, successful and realistic policy adopted in 1961 so that a crisis would not arise in the country today?

An hon. Member: So there is one?

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Coates: It is not one related to fuel supplies, as far as I can see. It is related to government planning and its inability to think ahead.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: The root of our difficulty is that the government appears able to react only when there is a crisis. They go from one crisis to another.

An hon. Member: We solve them.

Mr. Coates: You have not solved anything. As far as I am concerned, the government is trying to manufacture a crisis where no crisis exists, except for price.

An hon. Member: Make up your mind.

Mr. Coates: Then, later on, members opposite will tell us they have solved the crisis. As far as fuel supplies are concerned, it is a phoney crisis. But as far as price is concerned it is a real crisis in Atlantic Canada, and the government had better solve it for the people of eastern Canada. When I refer to eastern Canada, I include the province of Quebec.

The leader of the New Democratic Party says we should pass this bill because the government needs the powers contained in it in order to allocate supplies. Listening to him one would think this was all the bill contained—provision for the allocation of supplies. But the government wants in this bill all the power which could possibly be given to a dictator in any nation in the world.

The leader of the NDP refers to the peace, order and good government clause in the constitution and says it is all right to use it. As far as I am concerned, when the government asks for power which could be used to take over all provincial responsibilities, we had better take a long time looking at the proposal so as to determine whether or not the government should have that kind of power. If there is a crisis in the country, either now or in the future, all the government has to do is to resort to the peace, order and good government clause in the constitution and take action on that basis. If it can act without the power it is seeking by way of legislation, it has the best of both worlds. It need not worry. But this government wants power above everything.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) is to be applauded for the foresight he has shown ever since he was appointed to be our energy critic. He has displayed an appreciation and understanding of the energy situation not just in Canada but throughout the world. He has been consistent in his approach. He is aware of the dangers that could develop. Time and time again he has enunciated what should be done. Unfortunately, the wisdom he has been willing to impart to the House, to the government and to the country has not been acted upon. As a result we now find ourselves adopting far too late the policy which he was recommending a long time ago.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain was one of the leaders at the Niagara Falls conference which our party held on October 12, 1969. Among the resolutions presented on that occasion was the following:

The tremendous increase in potential oil and gas reserves in recent years means that very large supplies of capital will be required to develop and prove up these reserves. This means that economic incentive to maintain the constant flow of development money into this industry is absolutely necessary in Canada's interests.

So the conference moved that measures be taken to—

Strengthen the national oil policy by constructing a pipeline to Montreal to serve a minimum of one quarter of Quebec needs as a security protection against the interruption of oil supplies from politically unstable areas.

The conference also recommended:

Federal aid in financing power development; the development of a coordinated power grid; implementation of the Fundy Tides power proposal; construction of a gas pipeline along the north shore and south shores (from Sorel East) of Quebec; consideration of the importation of Venezuelan natural liquid gas.

● (1240)

If we could get that Venezuelan liquid gas today at prices that were available in 1969, we would be the happiest people in the world and the people of Atlantic Canada would not be facing the kind of cost of fuel that unfortunately they face today. We have a very serious problem in eastern Canada. One of the things that upsets me, and has upset me over the years, about the Atlantic provinces is that all too often Canada seems to stop at the Quebec-New Brunswick border; people forget there are four provinces that lie beyond, where live Canadians who also have the right to the facilities and the protections that other Canadians enjoy.

When building a pipeline to Montreal, I suggest there is no reason that I can see why that pipeline should not continue at least to Nova Scotia. Someone will probably suggest that if we did that it would create a lot more expense, and make the fuel taken from that pipeline at Halifax much more expensive, but I would put forward two answers to that. If we in the Maritimes are Canadians just as everyone else in Canada, and I think we are, then this government should subsidize the difference in cost in order that we have security of supply in times of crisis, regardless of price.

Secondly, I think we could build a pipeline that could be used in reverse, so that the potential supplies of oil and gas off the coast of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland could be pumped into that pipeline and directed to other parts of Canada in need of the supplies we might be able to provide in the days ahead.

Mr. Corbin: Where are you going to build the pipeline, through Maine or New Brunswick?

Mr. Coates: We would build it through New Brunswick, of course.

Mr. Corbin: All right, thanks.

Mr. Coates: You buy that?

Mr. Corbin: I sure do.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, we have two Maritimers talking together, both feeling the same way about the same thing regardless of party affiliation. I think this indicates that we in the Maritimes all feel the same way. We feel we have made a tremendous sacrifice over and over again just to be part of Canada, that Canadians should not think economics must always play a part when our security is in doubt. Certainly it is at the present time, because we do not know what the Arabian sheiks are going to do in respect of our oil supplies. We do not even know what the Venezuelans are going to do, except that they are going to charge as much as they can possibly get for the oil they send us.

We in Atlantic Canada must have a policy that will guarantee us supplies of fuel at the same cost as Canadians everywhere else pay, since we of all people in Canada are the least able to afford to pay the tremendous increased costs we have been hit with recently, especially in respect to our home heating fuels.

We must also have—and we do not have this now—storage capacity in order to make sure that we have fuel oil available in times of winter crises brought on by weather conditions. We just cannot depend on the supplies we have now without additional storage capacity. I do not care how it is done, but the government should see that there is sufficient storage capacity available in the Atlantic provinces, and particularly in Newfoundland where the weather can cause havoc at any time, so that these people will know from day to day they are going to have sufficient supplies of fuel to maintain themselves and their families in the comfort that should be available to every Canadian, no matter where he lives.

This is a very dangerous piece of legislation, the type out of which dictators are made. I would not like any parliament, even one without a party holding a majority, to be given the kind of powers this government is requesting in this legislation. The government has the right to ask for legislation for the allocation of energy in the event of an emergency, but when it seeks the power it is seeking in this bill it is looking for something far beyond what it should have, and I will not support the bill unless that part is withdrawn.

This government could at any time invoke the peace, order and good government clause of the British North America Act in order to allocate energy in the event of a crisis. I suggest the government has everything it requires in this clause, and it is not going to get from me the kind of power it is asking for in this particular bill.

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate on Bill C-236, which is an act, to quote its preamble——to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada, and to amend the National Energy Board Act.

I will not take time to go into world politics, the gyrations of which have been the main cause of oil marketing shortages in most of the western countries today. These are shortages in the face of plenty because, although we know our world reserves are not as great as originally estimated, there are still reserves in this old mother earth, whether they be in the Arabian desert, under the North Sea or on the Arctic slope of North America. Even though some Middle East countries are witholding oil supplies from their western customers, I believe some day soon the tables will turn and they will come hat in hand soliciting business.

From the primitive beginnings leading up to and forming our Canadian confederation, energy has been our chief concern and our chief servant. There is scarcely a waterfall with power potential in southern Canada that has not been harnessed in the past. I point out to the House that even our smaller rivers have been harnessed in the past to saw lumber and grind grain, though many of these flumes, penstocks and wheels have been abandoned. In a good many instances these waterfalls could be rejuvenated and restored in order to contribute a small, I admit, but appreciated supply of electric power in the future.

I have many examples of these power potentials in the riding of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington which I represent. These are small power potentials on rivers such as the Madawaska, which is heavily harnessed already but which still has power potentials that could be harnessed, the Bonnechere, the Mississippi, the Skootamatta-Moira, the Salmon and the Napanee.

Our attention during the past 50 years has been deflected from the smaller waterfalls to those with larger potential, but now I certainly recommend that to offset other shortages of energy, mainly oil, our attention should be turned to the use of these abandoned hydraulic sources.

I can say to you and to the House, Mr. Speaker, with some measure of satisfaction and pride that this type of hydraulic energy and conservation put me into politics. Having been on municipal council since 1953, I ran for the office of mayor of Napanee on a platform of more and better water for the municipality, which was obtaining its municipal water supply from the Napanee river. At that time the river had degenerated into a polluted trickle in the summer months. My policy was strongly supported by the people, and in conjunction with the provincial and federal authorities the Napanee Valley Conservation Authority built the second Depot Lake dam 30 miles upstream in Hinchinbrooke township. We conserved our winter snows and our spring run-off in this reservoir, and we restored to a great degree the mean flows of the river.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I think it is incumbent on the Chair to remind hon. members that a minimum effort should be made by those who take part in this debate to relate their remarks to Bill C-236. I am sure all hon. members are interested in the remarks which the hon. member is making now. They are interesting and relevant to his constituency and perhaps relevant in general to the matter of the conservation of water, but I wonder whether they are relevant to the principle of the bill before us.

I do not want to be unfair to the hon. member because I recognize that many members who have taken part in this lengthy debate until now have digressed, and I would not want at this point to establish a rule of relevancy which has not been applied to other hon. members. But in a general way I invite hon. members to keep in mind that there is a basic rule in debates which is relevancy. Therefore, I invite all hon. members to make an effort to relate their remarks to the principle of the bill which is now before the House on second reading.

I appreciate the fact that perhaps the interesting remarks of the hon. member are introductory in nature. If they are, we will continue to listen to him with great interest.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the fact that you have pointed this out to me, but I wish to state with all due respect that this debate is on a bill entitled the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, and I am referring to the energy supplies that serve the purpose of replacing some of our depleted oil energy resources.

As I was saying, we restored to a great degree the mean flows of the river. We also helped industry along this river which badly needed more water. Since then, another dam has been built on the third Depot Lake. This policy of conservation of hydraulics and energy and everything that goes with it has paid off handsomely in our area and will continue to do so for posterity. But that alone has not been found sufficient for our requirements.

I have always been cognizant of the need for more energy. In 1963, which was my second year as a member of this House of Commons, in recognition of the fact that we required more industry in our area, that we cannot all be farmers, that we cannot all go to university and be professional people, that a stable majority of us must work with our hands and in technology and industry, I approached Mr. J. L. Gray, president of Atomic Energy of Canada, who was here in Ottawa at that time, and Mr. W. Ross Strike, then chairman of Ontario Hydro Commission, with the purpose of recommending that a nuclear power thermo-electric generating station be built in my area. That was on August 21, 1963.

Some hon. Members: What about keeping to the bill?

Mr. Alkenbrack: I wish to put on the record my written words to them on that day, over 10 years ago, August 21, 1963. I wish to do this now to record permanently the energetic origins of the $500 million Lennox generating station now being built by Ontario Hydro in South Fredericksburg township six miles west of Bath on the Lake Ontario strand.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I was going to remind the hon. member who has the floor a second time that in spite of his suggestion that talking on energy brings a member within the terms of this bill is simply not correct. What we are dealing with is not a bill concerned with energy but an act to provide a means to conserve supplies of petroleum products within Canada, and that is the essence of the bill. Again I appreciate the interesting remarks of the hon. member and perhaps the matter might be considered further when we return at two o'clock, but I remind the hon. member who has the floor and all hon. members who feel that there should be a debate on this bill, that they should find something to say about the bill which is before us.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Speaker, just before lunch I was talking about the need to conserve energy in order to contribute to the economic stability of Canada, and I was about to read a letter that I sent over ten years ago to the Atomic Energy Commission of Canada and to Ontario Hydro, aimed at that goal of bringing about better economic stability in Canada. This has resulted in the construction of the new oil-fired Lennox generating station in my constituency. At the time we thought that the generating station might take the form of a nuclear power station, but due to problems and difficulties in the 1960's with nuclear-powered stations the decision finally taken was to erect a thermal station using oil for fuel. The letter reads as follows:

Ottawa, Aug. 21, 1963

Dear Mr. Gray:

Pursuant to the appointment which you kindly granted me today, during which we discussed the merits, physical and geographical, of the constituency of Prince Edward-Lennox as the location for a Nuclear Power Thermo Electric Generating Station, I wish to outline the following points in favour of this area.

It is true that a site for a plant of this kind must have the following requisites:

(1) A solid rock foundation of understratum not subject to seismic movement or disturbances of the earth.

(2) A deep and limitless supply of cold clean water.

(3) The site should be in a preferably undeveloped area, sufficiently isolated to be of a minimum hazard to persons and property, and in an area not likely to soon become crowded by urbanization.

(4) The plant should be located where the Provincial and National power grid can be fed by the shortest possible transmission equipment from the plant to the point where it feeds the grid. This makes for maximum efficiency of transmission and minimizes the natural loss of voltage which increases in ratio to distance in the transmission of electricity.

(5) Economically, it is well for a site of this kind to have a suitably developed and well serviced housing area in convenient and safe proximity. This dispenses with the necessity of Government or Hydro having to make huge investments in townsites and services to accommodate their personnel.

Both Prince Edward and Lennox Counties possess all these vital requisites for a plant of this kind. May I point out to you that facing directly on Lake Ontario the Townships of Ameliasburg, Hillier, Hallowel, Athol, South Marysburg, North Marysburg, in Prince Edward County, and South Fredericksburg and Ernestown in the County of Lennox could all readily qualify to accommodate this type of utility. The location of the area as a whole is strategically sound, in that a transmission line from Prince Edward County would feed the power grid in the vicinity of Trenton which is less than 100 miles east of the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto. If located on the Lennox shores of Lake Ontario, the plant would likely feed the power grid at, or near Napanee, which is only nine miles straight across country from the north shore of Lake Ontario.

Furthermore, it is my firm opinion that a generating plant in this area could most efficiently supply the ever-increasing needs of that fast-developing area of which it is a part, the diversified and productive triangle lying east of Toronto, south of the Ottawa, and north of the St. Lawrence River. I also point out to you that in this latter area, along the lakefront of South Fredericksburg and Ernestown Townships, we have ideal deep water facilities for the economic handling of fuel from large ships in case the generating station may take the form of a coal or oil fired installation rather than of nuclear power.

I thank you for your attention in this matter, confident that in the deliberations Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and Ontario Hydro will give all due consideration to my request that you explore the sound potentialities of Prince Edward-Lennox in your search for a proper site for this utility.

I am,

Yours respectfully,
Douglas Alkenbrack, M.P.
(Prince Edward-Lennox)

I thought the House would be interested in that letter since it resulted in a project that is certainly going to contribute to the economic stability of Canada, one of the subjects and purposes of this bill.

The date of that letter was August 21, 1963. In December, 1968 Ontario Hydro announced its intention to build the Lennox . generating station in South Fredericksburgh township, utilizing facilities conducive to economy of production of electrical energy from petroleum fuels.

This energy supply project is now well advanced in construction, with its 600-foot stack already a towering landmark in the Lennox countryside. As I said, this station will be oil-fired, using a bunker 6-C fuel, a residual oil which will come from Venezuela. This plant will be the most modern of its type. It has the largest oil storage in North America, three tanks 360 feet in diameter and 48 feet high, each of them larger than a football field. Each one of these tanks holds 833,000 barrels of oil. This plant at full load could burn 3,120 barrels per hour. Its four boilers each can produce 3,600,000 pounds of steam per hour, turning four turbine generators to provide a total capacity of 2,300,000 kilowatts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

The hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I hate to be nagging but it seems to me that the Chair twice called the hon. member to order this morning and invited him to address his remarks to the bill that we are presently examining, Bill C-236. I have noted that the hon. member has not paid heed to the invitation of the Chair. I wonder if Your Honour would care to comment on my point of order.

Mr. Baker: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I must say I have listened very carefully to what the hon. member has said since he started this afternoon. It seems to me that if one looks carefully at Bill C-236 one will find that it does have within it potential for the allocation of electric power. Surely if that is within the bill the government must have something within its contemplation with respect to it. I put it to you with respect, Mr. Speaker, that it is quite relevant for a member who has an electricity producing installation within his riding, who has adjacent to or close by his home a Crown corporation that may play a large part at some future time in his affair, to state his view.

We undertake that if any member on the other side wishes to speak about these things and the importance of them, having regard to what powers the minister is asking for, then we are prepared to listen. I think it is discourteous, indeed rude, for the House—

An hon. Member: You are reflecting on the Chair.

Mr. Lefebvre: You are out of order completely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I would not reflect on you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I am sure the hon. Member's point is valid in his own opinion, but this does not authorize him to make his own speech on the point of order.

[Translation]

The point raised by the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria is one which crops up time and again whenever hon. members deviate, during a debate, from the subject matter of a bill. It is very difficult for the Chair to stop an hon. member from wandering from the subject either in his opening remarks or when trying to describe a problem. I understand that it is not possible to prevent an hon. member from speaking about his riding, when the matter is directly or indirectly related to the legislation under review or when it is locally oriented, I think this works both ways and these admonitions and points of order are excellent opportunities for the Chair to invite hon. members to stick as faithfully as possible to the subject matter of the bill being discussed. The hon. member who is speaking is aware of that, for he himself pointed out to the Chair that all his remarks were the basis of his argument during the debate on this bill. It is difficult for me now to ask the hon. member to restrict his comments. This remark is also applicable to all hon. members on both sides of the House who wish from time to time to deal with certain bills on national parks or oil matters.

Mr. Corbin: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I will in no way dispute your opinion. I obviously accept it, but you have indicated clearly that it is allowed to get away from the subject at times. My present concern, however, is not that my hon. friend on the other side got away from the subject, but that he has yet to deal with it.

[English]

Mr. McKinley: You sold your province down the drain. We do not have to do the same.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased that the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) was listening to me and I am glad to note that even in a round about and frequently perfidious way he is interested in the production of energy that would be conducive to the economic stability of Canada.

When the hon. member interrupted me I was speaking about this oil-fired plant in Lennox. This plant at full load could burn 3,120 barrels of oil per hour. Its four boilers each could produce 3,600,000 pounds of steam per hour, turning four turbine generators to provide a total capacity of 2,300,000 kilowatts. In layman's terms, Mr. Speaker, the power generated by the Lennox generating station at the above capacity can provide twice the combined needs of the cities of Kingston, Belleville, Hamilton and Ottawa. If that is not important information to this House, then we should not be debating the subject of energy.

I am pleased to tell the House that the construction of the Lennox generating station is on schedule and within the estimate of $430 million. The first generating unit of the four is scheduled for transmission on April 1, 1975. That is not very far away, Mr. Speaker. The whole plant will be in complete production by the autumn of 1977. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and humbly proud to have been the prime mover of that project.

Now we get into the next topic, and this might suit the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria a little better. The new Liberal-NDP coalition has pulled off some weird and wondrous capers in this House since they drifted together 10 months ago for their mutual protection, but this time both parties have outdone themselves. The mere fact that they expect my party to accept a bill that was fathered by desperation and mothered by expediency shows all too clearly what contempt they share for the parliament of Canada and for the Canadian people. This bill is not a solution to the energy shortage facing our country. It is first of all, a concession to the NDP in exchange for the support for a faltering, ineffective and ineffectual government.

Secondly, as my colleague the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Beattie) said earlier, this is purely and simply a panic solution offered by a government that has not to this day defined the problem it attempts to solve. As in so many cases when we are asked to debate a government bill, the problem we are trying to solve here is not defined. One would think that Canadian problems are unique and defy definition. That is not so, Mr. Speaker. We can solve our problems if we approach them in a constructive and co-operative manner.

Canadian problems, like any other problems, can be identified if the government actively seeks to identify and define them. To do that, though, the government has to be interested at all times and concerned at all times. We learned long ago that this government is neither interested nor concerned. There is a slight qualification that should be added here, Mr. Speaker: this government is intensely interested and very concerned, but only in itself. This is called "clinging to power". It is interested in retaining power and it is concerned about its future prospects. Why else would the government party enter into a sinister and sordid alliance with a party whose principles are for sale, not to the highest bidder but to any bidder?

I do not want to leave the impression with members of this House that I do not have any feeling for the predicament that this government is in over the handling of the energy crisis. I have been in government myself now for more than 20 years and I believe in satisfying and fulfilling the public interest. As I watch them floundering around over there, trying to find out what it's all about, I feel very strongly. I have to reserve most of my concern for the tens of thousands of Canadians who are suffering as a result of the government's mishandling of the situation, but whatever is left over I very gladly confer upon the government.

However, I feel it is high time that government ministers got up off their benches to find out just how serious the energy situation is in Canada today. Then, and only then, can we debate measures that will solve the problem to the benefit of all Canadians.

It has been pointed out that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) has a different answer every time he is asked for an assessment of the situation. His answers are not updated from day to day, as he would like us to believe; they are just different, and that is not good enough. One day the problem is not serious at all. Everyone will be snug and warm all winter, and we will only have a problem if we talk ourselves into believing there is one. Then, lo and behold, Mr. Speaker, when minister is asked the same question but a few hours later, the story is quite different. The situation is serious, perhaps even desperate. He wants everybody to turn down the thermostat, join car pools, give up that Sunday drive and do everything else he can think up to save precious fuel.

I hope that the energy minister can find time to sit in the House and listen to the speeches being made on his behalf in the next few days and on the Prime Ministers' behalf. They should listen and take heed, because we are offering sound and sage advice to them on this serious matter. It is obvious that they have been getting very poor advice up to now, so they might as well sit and listen. If the energy minister decides that it is getting too hot in the kitchen and it is time to leave the House, I would remind him that it may be awfully cold in tens of thousands of kitchens throughout Canada this winter because of his bungling.

The government's answer to the problem is to ask for autocratic and dictatorial power to control the production and use of all energy in our country. I cannot accept this as an answer. This is the government's answer to our urging action to develop a national energy policy. This is the government's answer to a problem that developed in part because they had a majority in the past and exercised the very same powers they are now asking us to give them. They abused that authority in the past and there is every reason to believe that they will abuse it in the future. This power must be kept from them, Mr. Speaker. Let the government go back to the people and seek power through a majority. Let them go to the people and try to explain away their abuse of the power they once had, and let them explain away their bungling and incompetence.

I should like to deal specifically with a few clauses in this bill that I find particularly onerous, and then ask whether any responsible and thinking member of this house could accept this bill, whatever side of the House he or she might be sitting on. I will go so far as to throw a challenge, through Your Honour of course, to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Will the minister tell us in a few words how this bill could possibly correct the situation that this government has allowed to happen?

Specifically, it has allowed the Canadian people to be caught unawares by a world-wide oil shortage, when we are a major oil-producing country.

Subclause (4) of clause 9 reads:

> The Board and its members are exempt from liability for any act or thing done or omitted by the Board in good faith in the exercise or purported exercise of a duty or power under this Act.

That is nothing but dictatorial power. Although these powers are supposedly vested in the board, they are actually vested in the minister. The powers for which he asks in clause 9 (4) are extraordinary. All of us in this House know that no citizen or resident of Canada can be exempt from responsibility for acts committed or omitted, whether in a private, public or official capacity. The only exception is the Governor General of Canada.

What is the government afraid of? Does the government have plans for this board that it is afraid to tell us about until we have approved its formation? What does this board plan to do, that it should be afraid of being held to account for its actions? There is something awfully suspicious about this provision that would confer greater immunity on the board members than is conferred on judges, parliamentarians or even diplomats. Clause 10 provides that:

> The Board shall act under the instructions of the Governor in Council and report to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources from time to time upon its activities under this Act.

This gives the government a cozy little closed type of blanket authority to act in any way it sees fit, and charge it all up to some real or imagined energy crisis, or any other crisis it chooses to blame. Why should this House grant such authority to any agency of government, Mr. Speaker? Why should this House grant such powers to an agency of the Crown, such as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, when he has proved to be incapable of administering his portfolio in the past and present? I do not see how he could be expected automatically to become effective simply because we have granted him powers that no one else possesses in our country.

It is my view that, as a minority government, this present government has more cheek and arrogance than it exhibited even when it had a majority. I am really amazed that the NDP would go along with giving this government so much power, such potential to play partisan politics, when there is no possibility that the NDP will ever reap any benefits from such power. Surely they are not unaware of the contempt in which they are held by this government, which uses them so skilfully for its own purposes.

As one reads through this bill, Mr. Speaker, one can see that it is designed to give this new agency absolute control over every form of energy produced or imported into Canada. The bill gives the agency absolute control over energy accumulation, over storage, over the wholesaling and retailing of energy and over the bookkeeping employed by suppliers and sellers of energy. Actually, Mr. Speaker, it is just the sort of statism that the NDP would impose on the Canadian people and the Canadian economy. If we allow government to open the door as wide as would be the case if this bill becomes law, it will be the beginning of the end for our free enterprise system.

This bill provides, among other things, for a takeover by the government of every aspect of electric power in Canada. I do not want the government to have this power. I do not want them to be the sole arbiter in this area; the provinces ought to have a voice here. That is why I think we should wait until the federal-provincial conference is held in the near future. As I say, I would not want the government to have this power, any more than I would want it to have absolute power over fossil fuels.

While we are debating this bill, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is trying very hard to make Premier Lougheed of Alberta the culprit in the energy crisis, in spite of the fact that the premier has done everything in his power to see that Alberta crude finds its way to eastern Canada. It is not Premier Lougheed's fault that the federal government did not ensure that the pipeline system in Canada was extended at least as far as Montreal. It is not the premier's fault if the federal government still does not know the extent of the energy crisis as far as Canada is concerned.

We know and the Prime Minister knows that it is the fault of the federal government that we are in our present predicament. The Prime Minister is trying to use the energy crisis for political purposes, and this is despicable. He is trying to divide the Conservative party in Alberta from the federal party by trying to convince people in the east that Alberta's government is unwilling to co-operate with the federal government in Ottawa.

Nothing could be further from the truth. I do not blame Premier Lougheed for refusing to let the federal government put him over a barrel, an oil barrel or any other kind. This government has to come up with a scapegoat every time it goofs or bungles, and that is very, very often. This government bungles so regularly that one could set a clock by them, so there is always the need for a scapegoat. I suggest to the energy minister that he might very well be the next scapegoat, simply because he was not able to pin the blame for the energy crisis on Premier Lougheed. The energy minister is handy to the boss very close at hand, and he has fumbled the ball so frequently that he is vulnerable. The minister must be aware that he would not be the first cabinet minister that the Prime Minister has used as a scapegoat to cover up his own miscalculations.

In conclusion, I suggest that the Prime Minister should desist from using the bilingualism issue every time he wants to defuse a potentially explosive situation in the country. I say to the Prime Minister that bilingualism is not more important to this country than oil, the economy and the use of our resources. His statements are beneath the dignity of parliament, and while we are all aware of the contempt he holds for parliament, it would be fitting if he would conceal his contempt for the remainder of the brief period he will be sitting on that side of the House. I suggest that he inflict his spite on his ministers instead of this House and certain regions of this country. Rest assured, Mr. Speaker, the institution of parliament will outlive the present Prime Minister by a very long time.

● (1430)

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak in this debate we must acknowledge the fact that the minister in charge of energy for Canada has been attempting for at least the past four months to create a feeling of crisis within Canada on the energy question. At times it appeared as though he had succeeded. Oil was found. Supplies kept coming into Canada. As the issue became more clear in the minds of Canadians, we realized how fortunate we are that we do not yet have an oil crisis.

There is no question but that there is a crisis in the world. The Americans are in trouble. Europe is in trouble. Japan has been in trouble. We must analyse whether we have been using the right methods to meet a crisis if it should develop in Canada.

I have a copy of a daily oil news analysis which was published in New York. It is dated November 8, 1973. I will quote from it to give members an idea of what we are doing. This talks about Calgary and the western Canadian based oil industry that exists. I quote:

> Its 275 companies, from the big subsidiaries of U.S. majors to small independents, have become helpless pawns in the fast-deteriorating energy chess game between Alberta and the Canadian federal Government.

In recent days Saskatchewan got involved in that chess game. We welcome her concern and participation.

Why did the government attempt to create a crisis long before it was necessary? I think this stems from their position in the House of Commons, a very minority position. They failed to gather appeal across the country so attempted to create an issue in the hope they could go to the country and win an election on some short-term policy they had devised. A week ago last Thursday some people thought that going to the country was what we might be doing. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a speech in which he attempted to lure the NDP vote. Many right-wing members within his party must have been saddened and shocked by his brazen courting of the socialist philosophy. If they had thought back awhile, they would not have been shocked. They would have realized these were the true colours coming out.

I have an editorial which appeared in the December 8 edition of the Albertan. The writer was referring to the courting and marriage that took place a week ago Thursday. It reads in part:

> Socialists for years
>
> Over a period of four years or more I have attempted, quite unsuccessfully it is true, to prepare my readers for the federal government's ultimate move toward socialism. The facts were all there for everyone to see.
> Let us go over them again, just briefly. Before the "Three Musketeers" who are the guiding lights of the federal government at Ottawa, Trudeau, Marchand and Pelletier, entered federal politics, they were mouthpieces of the socialist party in Quebec. They campaigned, wrote and distributed pamphlets in behalf of the NDP and it was not until the people of Quebec demonstrated in no uncertain terms that they wanted nothing to do with socialism as a political way of life, that they turned their coats and joined the Liberal party.

The right-wing Liberals succumbed and allowed these men to lead their party. We all remember the leadership convention at which time the Prime Minister took over the party. It should not be a surprise to the free enterprise people within the Liberal party that these thoughts, deep concerns and true feelings have been there for a long time.

What is involved in this bill? It is a reach for power, dictatorial power, power which only a real socialist would love, power which only a real socialist could appreciate, power to take away the freedom of the individual.

Mr. Drury: Price and wage control?

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Price and wage control would be nothing compared to the rationing and complete control that this bill could bring about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): We have had a bit of a rift with the United States over this problem. In their energy crisis, their leader stated quite clearly that by the end of this decade they will have developed the potential to meet their own energy needs without depending on any foreign nation. That is what Mr. Nixon said recently with regard to their energy crisis.

What was being said in the United States in 1969 with regard to the energy crisis? Late in 1969, the United States cabinet report on energy future recommended closer relations with Canada on energy, but suggested that Canada could only be counted upon as a secure source of oil if it took steps to reduce the then total dependence of Quebec and the Maritimes on overseas imports. At that time the United States saw the danger to Canada by taking cheap oil from what might be called an insecure source and doing very little about it.

Was the oil industry of Canada asleep at that time? No, not so. The Canadian independents under the IPEC association discussed the problem with the Prime Minister. He said "Go peddle your oil somewhere else. We do not want it. It is too expensive in the province of Quebec, especially the Montreal market." That is what he said in 1969.

Now, sad but true, we have before us what is called an allocations bill. It is going to set up an energy supply allocations board. The board may control not only products so designated by the Governor in Council, such as petroleum, hydrocarbons, electricity, but even products manufactured from petroleum, according to clause 12(5). The order of the Governor in Council may designate any products manufactured wholly or in part from petroleum or hydrocarbons and bring them under the allocation program.

What will the allocation board do? How much oil will it be able to divert to the five eastern provinces? I suppose that in theory it could divert as much oil as those provinces need. But the board could do this effectively only if transportation was available. I do not know how many members saw the article in the Financial Post last week. It described the idea of moving large amounts of oil by rail as pure fantasy, not because the railroads do not have the tracks, but because they do not have the tank cars. Spokesmen for the railway companies have themselves stated before the transport committee that the railways do not own any tank cars, they rent them. The tank car rental companies say there are no more of them available for hire, so it would be impossible to move by rail the 50,000 barrels a day to which the minister has referred from time to time.

Oil is moving to Vancouver right now through the Trans-Mountain pipeline. From there it is being taken by tanker down the coast and through the Panama Canal to eastern Canada. Loading facilities are such that at best it is not possible to deliver more than 70,000 or 75,000 barrels a day to that market. Sad as it may be, the facilities for doing better are not there. They will have to be built. So what will the allocation board really be doing?

How necessary is this board? A meeting of provincial first ministers is to take place in January, and the government, presumably with the idea of promoting a feeling of goodwill among the first ministers when they attend that meeting, wishes to confront them with a bill which has already been passed by this House. Are there no clauses in this bill which are negotiable with the premiers? This has been the trouble about the chess game we have been watching. The federal government has made up its mind as to its intentions and said ho-hum to the provinces and their desires. Is this a fair attitude to take if the first ministers' conference is to be carried on in a proper spirit so as to devise ways of meeting the energy crisis which could develop in Canada should the Arabs shut off the oil being delivered to the five eastern provinces?

Richard Gwyn, a civil servant for some time, now writing for the Toronto Star, had this to say on December 8:

> Lougheed, if he wants to do it all by himself, might, at least constitutionally, just be able to do so. His new marketing board will control all of Alberta's production and can determine to whom it sells and at what prices.

So we are headed toward a direct confrontation. About a month ago someone asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to remove the present minister of energy from office and give him the job of House leader again.

An hon. Member: A Senate seat.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): That is a good suggestion. He would be the greatest confrontationist the Senate has ever seen. He might liven that place up a great deal. But to send the present minister out to a conference which is headed toward confrontation, taking with him legislation which has already been passed, committing him to an inflexible position, is surely no way to create a proper spirit among the ten ministers who will be present. Mr. Gwyn goes on in this article to say:

> The constitution gives Ottawa jurisdiction over interprovincial trade. But Alberta may have more scope than at first seemed likely. Alberta owns its oil in the literal sense of the word: it comes from Crown lands leased but not sold to the oil companies.

I wish to emphasize that last sentence, particularly for the benefit of hon. members who sit on my left. It is not the terrible multinational oil companies who own this oil but the government of Alberta, according to Mr. Gwyn, and I am inclined to agree with him. This article is one which is well worth reading. It suggests that passing the bill before us would do nothing to create harmony among the ministers attending the conference; rather, it would interfere with the goodwill necessary if we are to meet the difficult situation which may develop in the coming winter.

The Globe and Mail of November 30 carried an article under the heading "Saskatchewan orders cutback in oil output." It states:

> A spokesman for the mineral resources department said in an interview that the government had sent letters to oil companies ordering a 16 per cent cutback in production in southeast Saskatchewan (9,300 barrels a day) and a 40 per cent reduction in southwest Saskatchewan (26,200 barrels) for December.

Well, Saskatchewan can do this if it wishes, I suppose, but it suggests to me that the province is getting its back up and is fed up with the confrontation tactics of the federal energy minister. It seems Saskatchewan, too, wants to go to this conference with its mind firmly made up, not prepared to give away very much.

Since that article appeared Saskatchewan, as is well known, has brought in legislation making it plain that by January 1 they will be putting on their own tax of $2.20 a barrel. This will lead automatically to an increase in the price of crude oil in eastern Canada, or at least an increase in the price of that proportion of the market which Saskatchewan supplies, amounting to about 25 per cent of the oil consumed in Ontario.

I do not know what the leader of the New Democratic Party thinks about that, but here again a province is declaring, well in advance of the forthcoming conference, how it intends to act. It is headed for confrontation, particularly if we as legislators in this parliament do not caution the government and make it clear that the allocation bill we are being asked to pass represents a reach for power not granted to any federal government except in time of war. It is an encroachment upon provincial rights.

I know there are few, if any, members of a provincial government who would agree with the terms of clause 14, which states:

> Where it is considered necessary to do so for the purpose of conserving the available supplies of such petroleum products as have been included in a mandatory allocation program, the Governor in Council may amend the mandatory allocation program by adding electric power thereto and establishing mandatory allocation thereof.

This is bound to upset the provinces, especially if this clause is approved by the House before the conference is due to begin. Many people in central Canada have looked upon Alberta as being anti-Prime Minister, and in his speech in Vancouver the Prime Minister attempted to paint a picture of this terrible premier from Alberta and how he has tried to hold up the consumers in the rest of Canada.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Some hon. members over there says "right". Let me explain Alberta's position. Alberta has passed and is passing legislation, but it has not said it is going to implement a tax, such as Saskatchewan has, by January 1. Alberta has not cut back on production. In fact, since this crisis became obvious Alberta has increased production to a small extent, in fact to the extent that the transportation facilities could move the products to eastern Canada.

As early as October 29, or perhaps as late as November 29, Alberta laid down a five-point program in which it outlined its oil problems. In the preamble of that five-point program Alberta acknowledges ownership of 85 per cent of the petroleum resources now found in Canada and the fact that it is producing 80 per cent of Canadian production, probably supplying over 50 per cent of Canada's needs at this time.

[Mr. Horner (Crowfoot).]

This five-point program points out what Alberta believes should be its policy, and it is interesting to note that security of supply for Canadians is the number one point on that list. That does not suggest to me that Premier Lougheed is a wild, blue-eyed Arab out to rob the rest of Canada. Security of supply for Canadians is the first point in that policy, and this is a point which was amply demonstrated and should have been apparent as early as 1969.

I will not read the details of each of these points, merely the headings. The second point relates to a fair return for Alberta's resources. The premier does not suggest he wants pie in the sky, but he does want a fair return for Alberta's diminishing resources. What kind of a premier would he be if he did not want that, and what kind of respect would the Alberta voters have for him if he turned over the stewardship for Alberta resources to someone who did not want a fair return? I suggest that any individual in this House, were he premier out there, would ask for the same thing. That is not out of the way at all.

Number three relates to a price for petroleum products for the Canadian consumer. The premier is not suggesting he wants the world price for the Canadian consumer, but he is in fact prepared to negotiate a price.

Number four deals with provincial responsibility for a resource policy. We are living in a federal society under a federal system, and our constitution lays down the fact that the provinces have a responsibility for resources. Section 109 of the British North America Act provides for provincial ownership of mineral resources, and this was part of the making of this country of ours when it was put together under the British North America Act. This may have been a mistake, but we came together with that provision. What kind of a government do we have here that wants unilaterally to break that provision? I am not suggesting that Lougheed will not allow some changes, but I am saying that this government through this Bill C-236 wants unilaterally to break that agreement which eventually brought 10 provinces together to make this country of Canada. We have heard a lot of talk about the fact that this Prime Minister is the one who wants to keep Canada together. He has not suggested that lately, because if he did no one would believe him.

The fifth point in the Alberta oil policy relates to investment opportunities for Canadians. We have heard much said about the profits of multinational oil companies, and about the Ottawa Valley line established by the former Conservative government in 1961. This line was established to encourage Canadian investment in the oil industry and increased production from oil wells in Alberta. At the time these wells were producing at less than 50 per cent capacity. Many of the smaller Canadian-owned companies could not survive with that low production as they did not have the cash flow. There had to be increased demands in order to make sure that these wells were economical and producing more profit. These increased demands have been beneficial to all Canada, as has been proven, and the situation will be even further improved in the next 10 years if everyone adopts the attitude of negotiation rather than demand.

There is no question that during the 10 years leading up to 1961, or even during the seven years from 1954 to 1961, many small oil companies in western Canada were bought up by or amalgamated with the larger companies because they could not exist with the low cash position they were in as a result of cutbacks in production. This created a situation in which some of the larger international oil companies with huge financial reserves were able to get a hold on the oil industry.

I might point out that even today, as a result of government interference, oil shares on the stock market have been dropping rather than going up, even though prices have been going up and profits have been increasing. When the big oil companies begin to pull out of Canada we will find there is no confidence in the industry, and we cannot expect in that environment that small companies and individual Canadians will plough their money back into that resource. The Prime Minister sort of recognized this when he said in his great speech on Thursday that we are going to create a national oil company. That was very interesting and a lot of people perked up their ears. Members of the NDP to my immediate left pounded their desks because they thought we were on the right road to somewhere.

What have we heard about this company since last Thursday? We have heard it is going to spend $40 million almost immediately on research in developing the tar sands. The Syncrude project has not even started work yet. It has spent over $80 million on research but hopes to get started early next year.

An hon. Member: $40 million over five years.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Someone suggests that the $40 million is to be spent over five years. That shows how much knowledge and interest the Prime Minister has really expressed about this matter. His lack of knowledge and interest was demonstrated last Wednesday as a result of some of his flippant replies to serious questions posed by members on this side of the House. I suggest he has no interest in hardly anything other than the promotion of the French language in Canada. That is about the extent of his interest.

An hon. Member: And he is doing a lousy job of that.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): To suggest that the Quebec people would rather have their own language promoted than buy one gallon of Alberta oil is to insult the intelligence and the broadmindedness of the Quebec people, and I hope the Prime Minister lives to regret that remark.

Einstein once said that nationalism is an infantile disease of mankind. With the world becoming smaller because of improved efficiency in transportation and communication, and as we become more knowledgeable of various people throughout the world, that statement of Einstein's, if it was true at the time he made it, certainly is true today.

We should not be afraid of foreign investment. We should have confidence in ourselves and a belief that we can control foreign investment. One wonders, when one looks at this bill and sees the clauses in it, specifically clause 19 which provides that the board will have power to ration, how rationing in Toronto will help us to get more oil into the Montreal market. How will rationing in Calgary help us to get more oil into the Maritimes market? It cannot. It might be an expression of the philosophy that we should all suffer a little together, but this will not help.

We have the reply of the Prime Minister to questions put to him by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). Last Wednesday the hon. member for Central Nova asked a legitimate question, namely, what the government intends to do about oil prices if they become so high that they will be practically prohibitive in the Atlantic provinces. The Prime Minister replied that if they become too high, people do not have to buy the oil. Was that a serious, sensible, conscientious remark for the Prime Minister of this country to make? It certainly was not. Was he concerned about the people in Nova Scotia, the people in Prince Edward Island or the people in Quebec? He certainly was not. What is the purpose of this bill if the government does not have a contingency plan to offset some extremely high prices that might be demanded in the five eastern provinces? What is the use of setting up this allocation board?

Some time ago, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) thought that the establishment of this board would assist the government in controlling the ships and in transporting oil via the Panama Canal. It will certainly not load the ships any faster. The loading facilities are being used to the utmost right now in the port of Vancouver and the most that they can get through the port is 75,000 to 80,000 barrels a day. So what will this allocation board do? It will add to the scare crisis in Canada. It will create in certain areas, if it is politically wise to create them, certain hardships because the government wants the country to feel there is a crisis at hand and the knight on a white charger rides to the rescue of the people of Canada. This is the situation they are trying to create. Last Wednesday the Prime Minister did not suggest, in his answer to the hon. member for Central Nova, that he had as yet found the horse on which to ride. He did not see the allocation bill as the horse on which he could ride to the rescue. All he said was that if prices became too high people should not buy.

It seems to me that if this government wants to barter in good faith it should not ask the House to pass this bill, nor should it attempt to have us pass the tax bill which may come up next week. It is all right for the House to debate these bills and to listen to the views of hon. members because the thinking and contributions of hon. members should be made known before the first ministers conference is held. In this way confrontation, which is already taking place between this government and Saskatchewan regarding the cutback in production in that province and the imposition of the tax as of January 31, will be avoided. But if parliament passes these two bills the government will be asking for confrontation; and have we not had enough of that kind of confrontation diplomacy so far between the ten provinces and the federal government, a diplomacy which was originated by the minister?

There are many people who blame the Arabs and claim that all the problems which may face Canada in the future can be laid solely at the door of the Middle East countries. That is not quite so. We know that 30 per cent of the oil imported by the five eastern provinces comes from the Arab countries. Most of it comes from Venezuela and what might be called OPEC.

Mr. Béchard: Thirty per cent is an important amount.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): I am glad the hon. member says that. It amounts to 200,000 barrels a day more or less. We in the province of Alberta have done our utmost, as I said, to continue to increase our production and to meet whatever solutions the transportation industry can offer to move oil into the Montreal market or into the five eastern provinces by boat or by rail. Production might go up to 100,000 barrels a day. It would be oil from the west going to where it has never gone before, namely, the five eastern provinces. Saudi Arabia has cut Canada right off. The minister does not want to acknowledge that fact, but it came out the other day. His classmate exposed him. I should like to see his classmate expose him a little more, because then perhaps the Prime Minister may take an increased interest in the energy crisis and in finding ways to solve it. Perhaps the 70,000 or 80,000 barrels a day which we may be short if every Arab country cuts us off can be made up with increased purchases from OPEC.

I think that one should point out the difficulties in which the Arab nations find themselves. I know from a fairly reliable source that in recent years the North American continent has increased its oil consumption by 6 per cent a year and Europe has increased its oil consumption by about 12 per cent a year. In order to meet these increases the Arab nations would have to increase their production by 30 per cent a year. Let us leave aside for a moment the war in the Middle East and consider what country would not be a little concerned in those circumstances. The Arab countries are aware of their known resources. They see their production having to be increased by 30 per cent a year to meet the demand. What country, in those circumstances, would not say to itself that maybe they should be charging a little more for their oil, maybe they have something that will run out and perhaps they should be getting a higher price to provide a better livelihood for their citizens in the years ahead? Canada is fortunate in this respect; we can become self-sufficient.

Mr. Schumacher: We are.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Yes, we are self-sufficient and we can provide all parts of Canada with oil. But there are two things that all parts of Canada must recognize. First of all, the five eastern provinces have got to say, "All right. We are prepared to take Canadian oil, and if necessary we are prepared to pay a little more for it in the years ahead because we understand the cost of producing oil in Canada is higher than it is in the Middle East." That is an important recognition which they must make. They have to recognize this before Canadian oil is forced upon them as a consequence of this allocation bill.

● (1510)

At the January conference of first ministers held in western Canada, in Toronto or in Ottawa, wherever it may be, they have to say publicly, "We will take this Syncrude oil, this Athabasca tar sands oil. We realize it costs more to produce it, but we will take it even if other major pools of oil are found somewhere else." That is one thing they have to say very clearly and succinctly.

Why should private enterprise build a pipeline to Montreal just on a whim? Because the Arabs today are charging more for their oil, does this mean that forever and a day they will charge more for it? Private enterprise needs some assurance that the five eastern provinces recognize the venture they are entering upon with this oil arrangement.

The second thing that must be pointed out quite clearly is that repeatedly the province of Alberta has welcomed investment in the oil industry. We have not stopped investment money from coming into that province. Maybe we should have done so. Maybe we should say that while we know those tar sands have been there for 200 years, in another 200 years from now they will be even more valuable. But we have not said that. We have said to the province of Quebec that we do not think enough money is coming into the development of the tar sands. We welcome the creation of a corporation by the province of Quebec to spend money in assisting to develop the tar sands. We welcome a joint venture by both Quebec and Ontario, and the Alberta government itself is ready to take part in that venture.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, may I have unanimous consent to express my final point?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner (Crowfoot): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I assure the House that I will not abuse the privilege it has granted me. As I was saying, we in Alberta welcome such investment to help meet the crisis that may develop in Canada, and we will invest in that venture ourselves so that we may better assist Canada in the years ahead. We have extended an invitation to a Crown corporation or a provincial corporation, and have even gone so far as to say that in order to encourage others the province of Alberta will go in as a part-owner of the corporation.

Having said that, I would refer to the five points that Premier Lougheed announced as our energy policy in the province of Alberta. Clearly we have invited foreign money. We have invited provincial money. We have invited Crown corporations to invest, purely in the interests of stepping up production. We have assisted in supplying oil to the five eastern provinces by shipping it through the Panama Canal. We have encouraged as much oil to be moved by rail into the Montreal market as is possible. No one in this House, or anywhere else, can say conscientiously and knowledgeably that the province of Alberta and its premier have not done their utmost to ward off any crisis which may be on the horizon. But if this House passes this bill before the first ministers' conference is held in January, few people in the House or in the cabinet will be able to say as much for the federal government.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-236 concerning the government's plans to cope with the energy situation in our country. I think it is fair to say that the history of Liberal governments in this country has been of reaction to one crisis after another. Today we have a repetition of that history: things are no different. The government did not engage in the kind of medium or long-term planning that was necessary some time ago and again we are faced with a reaction to a crisis.

Policies on inflation, difficult as they may be to identify, have been one example of a panic and patchwork reaction designed to smooth things over but not to get at the basic cause of the problem. Now we have a policy on energy which also has been created in a panic situation but certainly is not designed to smooth things over. As a matter of fact, it seems designed to strain confederation to the limit.

We have seen the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and several other ministers making paradoxical policy statements and then putting forward policies that do not accord with their statements. In the past few days the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) have placed a great deal of emphasis on the fact that they have frozen the price of oil, that controls have been placed on oil. This is a big thing to them. Yet at the same time we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) indicating on many occasions, including as recently as yesterday, that controls do not work, particularly when you have a shortage of supply. He believes the problem in that situation must be solved by increasing the supply. Yet what have we seen in the past few months? We have seen controls placed on meat to depress the price, controls on wheat used domestically to reduce its costs, and now controls on the price of oil.

I do not think anybody around here questions that so far as the world situation is concerned there is a shortage of oil. On the other hand, we have a Minister of Finance who says that in a shortage of supply situation controls do not work. Immediately following that we have the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources placing price controls on that commodity. It is no wonder the Canadian public is confused on where the government stands. Are the people to believe the Prime Minister, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, or the Minister of Finance? Which of them is speaking the truth?

More basically, Mr. Speaker, we have in Canada today a government which appears to be more concerned with just surviving than with the realities of governing the country. The policies announced to deal with the energy crisis are good evidence of its desire to cling to power. Obviously some of them were taken from the NDP shopping list prepared just a few days ago. They were grasped greedily by the government in order to save itself. It is obvious that the government has been so preoccupied with the political survival game that it has been unable to govern at all. Recently I read an article quoting a Liberal source as saying that the Liberal Party, since its setback in October, 1972, has been unable to regain control of itself, has been unable to return to "its former grace." In fact, the Liberal Party seems to have entered the menopause, says this Liberal source. I think that Liberal source was rather generous when he suggested they were only in the menopause. If we examine the evidence more carefully, it points much more toward senility. One of the key features of senility is that individuals who suffer from it like to dwell on the distant past and do not like to look to the future because it appears rather bleak. If you examine statements made by ministers and members of the Liberal Party in recent weeks, you will find they have dwelt almost exclusively on past achievements and glories.

The speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) on September 6 was entirely devoted to telling us how much the Liberal Party had done for Canada in the area of welfare in the last few years, typifying his preoccupation with the past, a typical symptom of senility. In the speech made by the Minister of State responsible for multiculturalism (Mr. Haidasz) a few months ago when this subject was before the House, he spent almost his entire time dwelling on past achievements. Most of his speech was about old history and the glory that used to be of the Liberal Party. If we look at some of the speeches made in recent weeks by the hon. member for Verdun (Mr. Mackasey) we find that he dwelt a good deal on past glories and not too much on the present or the future. When the Minister of Finance speaks he does the same thing, he always reviews old history. All these are examples of a party not in menopause but far beyond the menopause, well advanced into a state of senility.

I have also seen a report recently about the need of the Liberal Party to regenerate, suggesting it was shattered by the last election and has been unable to pull itself together to regenerate to a position of positive leadership. The word regenerate caught my eye because there are only a few creatures on this earth that can regenerate. I am told that if a spider loses a leg or a portion of it, it can regenerate or grow a new part. I am also told there is a certain kind of garden worm which, if you are digging and cut it in half with a shovel, will grow a new head section and a new tail section, so that what was originally one worm may wind up as two worms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member is giving us a very good report of what the Liberals could have done had the minister spoken, but the subject matter before us today is Bill C-236 and so far the hon. member has not said very much about it. I hope he will speak more to the bill rather than to history.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if you consider these remarks carefully you will see they are related to the bill before us. I am just trying to set the framework for my discussion. It would appear that in the last election the Liberal Party was cut in half by the spade of public opinion. I have had much difficulty trying to decide which section is here, whether it is the tail section or the head section that is trying to govern. I think it is probably the tail section. Looking at the energy policies that have been presented to us in the past few months, and at the statement on energy made about a week ago, one must come to the conclusion that it is the tail section of the worm that is governing and trying desperately to grow a new head section, but it appears unable to do so and from time to time it fits on the NDP head section as a substitute. Of course, that does not work because the NDP worm has been squirming so much that no one knows what path it wants to follow in what direction it wants to go.

Mr. Hellyer: It is waffling.

Mr. Yewchuk: We have the spectacle of a party desperately clinging to power, improvising madly to provide symptomatic treatment for the ills of society but failing to come to grips with the cause of the problem, and therefore not providing the right prescription when it is required—and that is before the crisis occurs, not after. I think when a government deteriorates to the point where it appears to be completely incapable or unwilling to face squarely the problems of the country and provide the solutions which are bold and imaginative and which Canadians expect, it should step aside for the good of the country. When a government is as indecisive as this one has been, it should retreat into a cave to reassess its position; but in the meantime it should allow someone else to do the job, someone who is better suited and better prepared to do it.

The government claims that there is an energy crisis in Canada. No one questions the existence of a world shortage of energy or a world crisis, but we have yet to see the evidence that there is a crisis as far as this country is concerned. A few days ago the minister stated that under the worst circumstances Canada could be as much as 200,000 barrels a day short of oil this winter, but he has consistently refused or has been unable to provide any substantial evidence that there is in fact a shortage now or that there will be in fact a shortage this winter. Just a couple of days ago it was brought to our attention in the House that a couple of million barrels were being shipped out of Quebec to the United States under permit of the National Energy Board. That leads one to wonder how great a shortage there is of this product.

The minister himself indicates that an additional 100,000 barrels a day could be transported to Quebec and the maritimes from the west by way of tankers through the Panama Canal, down the St. Lawrence Seaway and by train and truck and every other means available. Recently we learned that a refinery at Come-By-Chance, Newfoundland, will be in production in the next month or so, producing an additional 100,000 barrels a day which are not committed to any market and are available to Canada.

Even under the worst possible conditions, in view of these facts and in view of the minister's projections, it is difficult to believe that there is indeed a crisis in Canada at this time. Nevertheless, the minister has placed Bill C-236 before the House and it is presently being debated. The bill gives the minister absolute power in the energy field to allocate energy supplies when he thinks economic conditions warrant the use of such power. Inasmuch as the industrial, commercial and business sectors of the economy depend upon energy to produce output, mandatory allocation and rationing of energy and energy products will give the minister complete authority to regulate the domestic economy as he sees fit.

I am not sure that I would be prepared to give this minister that kind of authority, Mr. Speaker. It would be a blatant distortion of the intent of this bill if it were openly to be used as an instrument of economic policy. But one cannot assume that the government would not use such power as this bill provides if the government judged it politically expedient to do so. We have seen examples of government action for expediency in the past, and I am sure we will see such examples in the future. The economic powers that this bill provides cannot be underestimated. The allocation program itself can be invoked when in the opinion of the governor in council the stability of the economy is in danger because of a petroleum shortage or market dislocation.

What about the stability of the economy? I think, Mr. Speaker, that is very much a matter of opinion—presumably the opinion of the governor in council, which in fact means the opinion of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. On this matter his opinion should be identical with that of the Minister of Finance who has stated that a real growth rate of over 5 per cent is still expected in 1974.

The fact that mandatory allocations may be necessary probably means that growth projections are overly optimistic and probably not valid. It would be necessary for these optimistic forecasts for growth to be withdrawn in order to invoke the full powers of the energy allocation bill. Such withdrawal is not likely, particularly in view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Finance who spoke in the House in glowing terms about the expectations for economic growth. Also, the Prime Minister told the people of Canada last night that the predictions are for tremendous growth in this country in the next three years, for growth greater than in any other country of the world. So we are left wondering why this kind of allocation bill is required, if it is correct to assume that such growth will occur.

It is quite conceivable that a similar difficulty exists with regard to the opinion of what may be causing economic instability. For instance, the minister may use economic instability as an argument for invoking the powers under this bill. What are the causes of economic instability? They might be large increases in unemployment, not necessarily related to the energy crisis; they could be inflation and spiralling prices which have been completely out of control for months. The causes could be industrial shutdowns through lack of markets, or a general decline in investor confidence. None of these causes necessarily reflects the energy shortage. Equally, this manifest instability could be the result of other factors, such as mismanagement of monetary policy or the result of declining export markets. Therefore, the power which this bill provides for the minister to invoke allocations of energy could well be used as a disguise for the failure of the government's economic policies in general.

We are, however, prepared to accept for the time being the minister's word that there could be an energy shortage—

An hon. Member: I don't know why.

Mr. Yewchuk: I don't know why, either, but we are prepared to accept some legislative authority for coping with the situation, if it arises. However, this bill goes far beyond any conceivable need for power which the minister may need, or can demonstrate that he needs, for coping adequately with the problem.

Mr. Harding: Then send the bill to committee and amend it. Don't filibuster it.

Mr. Yewchuk: I will have some comments for my friend to my left in a moment. Our biggest reservation is this: should the far reaching powers of this bill be given to a government which has shown itself to be incompetent and incapable of handling effectively the current problems of our country, particularly as this bill gives the Minister of Energy, Mines and resources authority to overrule or negate any provincial priorities relevant to the energy crisis?

Mr. Turner (London East): Tory times are hard times.

Mr. Yewchuk: We happen to be in the middle of Liberal times, and they are pretty hard times. Actually, some of the powers in this bill are so far reaching that the federal government could invade areas of undisputed provincial authority. In the past few weeks we have seen a deliberate attempt to run roughshod over provincial rights. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister have engaged in confrontation with the producing provinces. For example, in Vancouver the Prime Minister a few days ago at a Liberal fund-raising dinner unashamedly attacked the premier of a province without any justification and without any regard for what that attack might do to confederation. We also saw the spectacle of the party to my left jumping for joy because the Liberals, with whom they are in cahoots, a few days ago put forward a policy which they support. Suddenly they were confounded when one of their own kind, the Premier of Saskatchewan, announced certain things that he wants to do for his province.

The hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has been most critical of Alberta for wanting a good price for its product and some quid pro quo from the government. In other words, in exchange for better prices for Canadians that province wants certain things which it needs. The hon. member for York South thought that was terrible. He referred to the Alberta premier as a blue-eyed Arab. Now, suddenly, we have another blue-eyed Arab. Perhaps I should not say that. But the duly elected Premier of Saskatchewan is making demands which are far greater than those made by the Premier of Alberta. Suddenly, NDP members from Saskatchewan have been stopped in their tracks, wondering what to do now. What will they do now, I wonder? Will they support federal policies which would mean a loss of half a million dollars a day to the province of Saskatchewan, or will they reassess their position and decide on which side their bread is really buttered?

The confrontations which the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Prime Minister have provoked with the provinces have surprised me, as they have followed so closely on the heels of the western economic opportunities conference. If you recall, Mr. Speaker, prior to this conference the Prime Minister and the cabinet stirred up the fondest hopes of westerners that finally the government was taking a serious look at the west, was willing to listen to the problems of the west and, in fact, appeared to be willing to do something about those problems. Now the situation is quite different. We know where this Liberal government really stands so far as the west is concerned. Make no mistake, westerners get the message fully. The Prime Minister has decided to abandon the west, politically, and to go for broke in Ontario. I do not think the people of Ontario or the people of Canada can be fooled by this kind of attack on confederation. I would advise him strongly, as would other members of the opposition, to withdraw from that attitude.

What about my friends to our left, the great principled New Democratic Party which has been supporting this government unreservedly since January of this year? No matter what the issue has been, no matter what the position of the NDP has been prior to any vote, that party has repeatedly and consistently supported the government in order to stay alive itself. Last Monday it supported the government's energy policy. Now there is certain news from Saskatchewan and I am anxious to see what that party will do after today. Last summer, just after the parliamentary recess, the leader of the NDP went roaring from coast to coast saying, "I cannot see how we can support the Trudeau government much longer," knowing full well that there would not be any opportunity to carry out his threat by way of a vote until the middle of October. Then, by chance, in September when parliament was recalled, only one month after he had made those threats, we suddenly found that the tiger's roar had become the cat's purr.

Last week we saw more of the same. The hon. member for York South has been running around the countryside shouting threats of withdrawal of support, but when the crunch comes his party votes with the government. I find that hypocrisy rather repugnant. This is not the sort of behaviour which we ought to countenance. I am sure the NDP realizes that most Canadians find this kind of hypocrisy and this kind of behaviour intolerable. No doubt that is why the party is afraid to let go of the coat-tails of power and why it again stood behind its leader only a few days ago and voted with the government.

What about controls? We had a policy announcement last spring concerning the price freeze which was to be followed by a period of controls. The hon. member for York South, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) and others nearly broke their necks running around the country telling people why they were against controls and why controls would not work. Now they are suddenly very much in favour of controls. They threatened to withdraw their support from the government unless it imposed controls.

● (1540)

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands is a man whom we have grown to respect for his service to parliament and to the country. Even though I disagree with his ideas, he does what he thinks is right. Even he was unable to resist the temptation a couple of days ago to be a little devious when speaking on the energy situation. I asked the hon. member whether he was really in favour of controls. When we suggested them last February, he spoke against them. However, when he spoke a few days ago he was in favour of controls. His answer was, "Well, all you fellows are suggesting is a 90-day freeze." I do not believe he really meant that. If he did, it means he read only the first line of our policy paper and then ran around the country making statements based on that first line. If that was not the case, he was simply trying to be a little dishonest and I do not think he would want to do that.

This country is getting into a terrible mess as far as the economy, inflation and energy are concerned. It is not only the Liberals who are to blame; the New Democratic Party are also to blame because they are responsible for upholding this lame duck government. The NDP are maintaining this kind of a situation with a government that refuses to accept its responsibility and refuses to deal with major problems in an effective way. The NDP have to share the blame for this situation and they will have to account for their behaviour to the electorate when the time comes.

Before this bill is passed it would only be sensible for the standing committee to make a very exhaustive and extensive inquiry into all aspects of Canada's energy situation to determine the true extent of the crisis, if indeed there is a crisis. The committee should be empowered to call before it the minister, his advisers, representatives of the oil companies and anyone else knowledgeable about or concerned with the field of energy. Only after that kind of study would it be possible to decide whether there is a crisis and whether the minister really needs the kind of power he is seeking in this bill.

Before concluding I want to deal briefly with the question of the Athabasca tar sands. Syncrude, a consortium of companies, is prepared to construct an extraction plant with a capacity of 125,000 barrels a day. They are now prepared to go ahead. They have made an agreement with the province which will provide to the public treasury the maximum amount of revenue. If this project goes ahead it will mean more than 10,000 jobs in northern Alberta and in other parts of the country. It will mean that the town of Fort McMurray will more than double in population. It will be one of the initial steps in that region becoming a highly industrialized centre of Alberta and in due course a highly industrialized centre of Canada.

At the present time there are many huge construction projects of this kind in the making in North America. They require specialized materials and equipment, specially built metal receptacles and special tools and equipment of various kinds which are not mass produced. I am told that if these materials are ordered now, there is a waiting time of at least several months and possibly one to two years. The federal government should be a little more co-operative and a little more cognizant of the serious deleterious effects of holding up this project. The project is awaiting certain assurances from the federal government, or at least some clarification on where the federal government stands on the whole question. Until these matters are clarified the project will not proceed.

The minister should take a closer look at the significance of this project to Albertans and, indeed, to Canada as a whole, not just because we have a high unemployment situation and require the jobs that would be produced but because we have an energy shortage looming in the not too distant future. Plants such as that proposed by Syncrude cannot be built overnight; it is a matter of years before they are in production. I think we should proceed with this project as quickly as possible. I hope the minister will take whatever action is necessary to get the project rolling without further delay.

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I note a good deal of impatience on the other side of the House and to my left. I hope they will bear with me as we examine this bill, look into each clause and see what it will mean to Canadians in all parts of the country. The hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) really dug into what this energy problem or so-called crisis is all about. It is a transportation problem. We in Canada are self-sufficient in oil but we are not able to get it from one end of the country to the other.

I noted that some members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications asked the president of Canadian National Railways whether it would be possible to put liners in grain cars in order to move oil from Alberta and other parts of western Canada to the eastern market. That really points up the problem. At the present time the facilities are not available to move oil from Alberta, Saskatchewan and perhaps Manitoba to the eastern markets.

The hon. member for Crowfoot suggested that the port facilities to move oil through the Panama Canal to eastern Canada, or across Canada by pipeline or rail are inadequate at the present time. We should have anticipated this problem of eastern Canada being cut off from offshore oil, necessitating the transport of oil from western to eastern Canada by some method. I suspect that the best method to transport oil from one end of the country to the other is by pipeline. As some members have suggested, we should have looked into this pipeline four or five years ago, not now when we have shortages of all products and transportation problems. There is a shortage of the steel required to build a pipeline from Sarnia to Montreal, not to mention the looping that will be necessary on the Trans Canada pipeline to supply that oil.

Introducing the bill last week, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) stated it was analogous to an insurance policy. Shortly thereafter, my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) asked him to disclose the specifics of that insurance policy, for example, what were the risks and how much was the premium. These questions have not been answered and I seriously doubt that they ever will be answered. I would be willing to bet that the minister's policy is of the short term, low dividend, variety. And maybe the minister, too, is of the short term, low dividend variety.

The bill before us is a glaring example of the kind of legislation we have so often been asked to consider. I have seen issues come and go, and generally the NDP find some way of making the issues go. Legislation is all too often hastily prepared and poorly researched. It is difficult to sort out all the contradictory statements we have heard in the past few weeks, not only from the minister of energy but from the Prime Minister. Only last week, for instance, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he would like to see Canada become self-sufficient in energy by 1980. But we are already exporting more oil than we are importing, so this country does not lack oil supplies for our own use.

There is, in fact, a great deal of capacity in Alberta as well as in other provinces which could quickly be reflected in terms of increased production. We learn, for instance, that refineries in Edmonton are working on the basis of eight or ten-hour shifts. Work could be carried on throughout a 24-hour period, but there is neither the storage capacity nor the transportation needed to get the products out of Edmonton to where they are needed. This is why I say the difficulty we are experiencing in Canada is to a large extent one of transportation, since there is no lack of oil in this country.

For some strange reason the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has been reluctant to report to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works. No meeting of this committee has been held since June 7, despite requests from members on this side of the House that the chairman should call one so the present situation might be discussed. In that committee we would have an opportunity to question the minister, officials of his department, representatives of the provinces, perhaps, and people in the industry with a view to ascertaining the nature of the problem and the extent to which it might develop during the coming months.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Why not pass the bill right now, and we could have the committee sitting next week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Go to the committee stage and cut the filibuster.

Mr. Schellenberger: The minister is saying we should pass the bill in haste. I say we should have been looking into this situation months earlier than this.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Cut the filibuster and go into committee.

An hon. Member: Give us some answers.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will give you more than you can handle.

Mr. Schellenberger: We in this party do not accept the minister's reasoning. As I cross the country I hear varying assessments of our energy reserves. Differing figures are given by the federal government, by provincial governments and by private industry. I believe the minister and his department should long ago have conducted serious research in this field so as to produce statistics the people of Canada can count on. I have heard estimates that the supply of conventional oil in Canada is sufficient to last for 10, 15 or even 20 years. I have heard it estimated that our supply of natural gas is sufficient to last between 15 and 20 years. According to some estimates there are between 500 billion and one trillion barrels of oil in the tar sands in various areas of Alberta.

Surely, with all the funds and expertise available to the minister, a more accurate determination of the extent of these resources could be made for presentation to the people of Canada and members of this House, so that they might have a better basis on which to decide whether a bill such as this is necessary. The present minister deals in uncertainties, and I do not think we should give the government the powers it is demanding in the absence of far more accurate information. An attempt on his part to deal in specifics would at least lend a measure of credibility to Bill C-236.

I should like to turn briefly to clause 35 which deals with opportunity for debate and arrangements for the termination of the act. This measure, as its title implies, is to be invoked only when a national energy emergency exists. I would, therefore, question subclause (4) which provides:

> An order under subsection (3) shall be laid before parliament not later than 15 days after it has been made, or, if parliament is not then sitting, within the first 15 days next thereafter that parliament is sitting.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. This is a convenient point at which to recognize that it is four o'clock. It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the appreciable progress made by the opposition as it carries on its filibuster, the House would perhaps agree to let go the private members' hour in order to enable the Canadian people to know the true colours of the Progressive Conservative opposition.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion made by the hon. member, that private members' hour be dispensed with and that we resume consideration of the bill we have been discussing. This would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): An Alberta Tory said no.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rising on a point of order?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry if I have jumped the gun, but I believe Your Honour was about to call public bills. May I remind the House of the request I made this morning, that at this hour we might call order No. 86, resuming the debate on my Bill C-10, which calls for the abolition of the Senate. When I made that proposal this morning I did not hear any opposing voices. Perhaps the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) would agree with the proposition that this would be a good day to give Their Honours in the other place something to think about.

Mr. Crouse: Very funny.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Again, this would be a matter requiring unanimous consent. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent. The House will now turn to the consideration of private members' public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

STATISTICS ACT

MEASURE TO AUTHORIZE COLLECTION OF ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL STATISTICS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont) moved that Bill C-7, to amend the Statistics Act (area statistics), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should have said that if the House would agree to adopt this motion without debate, we could then proceed to discuss the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried.

An hon. Member: Some of us want to speak on it.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I assumed there were some who wish to speak, therefore I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre will have to wait a few more years before we come to grips with his proposition.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not with the help we are now getting from the other place.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I do not want to get into that discussion today. While I might be anxious to debate the matter with the hon. member, I think of equal importance, since he did mention giving the members of the other place something significant to grapple with, would be the opportunity for them to grapple with the modest bill that is before the House this afternoon.

This bill has been standing on the order paper ready for debate for many months, almost from the first month this session of parliament began. The reason it has not been brought forward is that there has been some discussion with members of other parties as to whether it is drafted in the proper from, or whether in some manner or fashion it is still relevant. I expect there will be some comment from other members in that regard. I do not want to get into any legal defence of the proposed motion before us this afternoon, but I have been advised there may be at least one error in respect of the numbering of the paragraphs and it might be more appropriate to have paragraph (d) of section 3 attached as paragraph (e). However, that is a minor matter.

What I really want to deal with this afternoon is the substance of the proposal before the House, and that is the very great and obvious need for better information on a provincial and regional basis available to the federal, provincial and municipal governments and to the private sector. I must admit that when this bill was originally put down, while I had some feeling about its being important, I was anxious to have it brought forward for discussion before this session of parliament either expires, prorogues or whatever will happen to it, in order that we might have an opportunity to consider the matter.

An hon. Member: It is up to you guys.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): It is up to all of us, I guess. I realize there are many global and national issues with which we are confronted these days, but I do not think we should lose sight of what is essentially a problem that will continue to confront this government and successive governments in years to come unless we take the problem seriously. Perhaps I could put it best by simply saying that in the last few weeks I have had an opportunity, travelling in the Atlantic provinces and meeting with people both in government and in universities, to be made aware again of the real problems that exist. I intend to speak specifically about Atlantic Canada because that is the area I know best and, quite frankly, that is the area which conerns me most. The real problem that exists is in respect of the lack of accurate and relevant statistical information about the Atlantic provinces. Nothing could be more true to a member who comes from a constituency in the province of Prince Edward Island.

The latest indication of that came last week with the most recent set of statistics of employment, unemployment and changes in the cost of living. When a Prince Edward Islander looks at a report concerning employment, he is faced with very few numbers and a great many asterisks because he is told at the outset that most of the information which can be provided by the most knowledgeable statistical agency in the country, Statistics Canada, is not accurate. What we are told about November, 1973, in terms of employment is that in a general way the labour force represents some 40,000 people, and in a general way there are 36,000 people who were employed during that month. But with regard to unemployment and the unemployment rate no definitive answer can be given. The sort of simple answer for this, since I am not a statistician or an economist and cannot get into all the different quantum explanations, is that at the present time when computations are made in respect of employment and unemployment the figures are averaged to the nearest thousand.

The problem Statistics Canada has in reporting accurate figures for Prince Edward Island is that if there are 999 people unemployed in Prince Edward Island, it is suggested there are in fact less than 1,000 and therefore perhaps there is conceivably no one unemployed there. If the figure is raised to 1,001 by adding two more people to the unemployment rolls, suddenly the unemployment rate jumps in Prince Edward Island from zero to 2,000. That is the kind of confusion and misleading information you get, because Statistics Canada rightly refuses to report this kind of percentage as it would be ludicrous. Prince Edward Island is just one of the ten provinces of this country which receives this kind of information that represents just one of the serious shortcomings and anomalies in the present statistical information available from Statistics Canada.

In a few minutes I intend to mention some of the other problems in respect of our region in terms of having truly adequate information in order to formulate economic and social policy. In spite of these difficulties we have the audacity—perhaps I should not say "we" because as members of parliament we do not really formulate government policy—but governments have the audacity day by day, week by week to enunciate programs to alleviate problems of unemployment and in respect of the cost of living based on this kind of misleading and, if I can use the term, half-baked information. This happens in a day and age when we know we have gone far beyond the times of Francis Bacon who said many years ago that knowledge is power. We might say today, perhaps paraphrasing some of the information that comes to us from such works as "Future Shock" by Toffler, that knowledge is a key component to change and accelerating knowledge acquisition means accelerating change.

We must have accurate information if government programs which involve billions of dollars of public money are to do the job they are meant to do. To repeat what I said a little earlier, as I visited people who are concerned with human development and social improvement in the Atlantic provinces, people who analyse this question in a detached way in university communities and people who try to work with relevant information in government offices, I found that they cannot do so and they ask, "Why can't we have accurate information and statistics about our provinces, about parts of our provinces and about the region as a whole?" I have introduced this very modest bill—members who have looked at it will see it is very modest—to make the point again that unless Statistics Canada, in gathering the information it gathers day by day, can really do the job it is meant to do, then in terms of formulating social and economic policy we are wasting a great deal of money which could be much better spent.

Many of us who live in the Atlantic provinces think we know what the situation is in regard to our own province and our own region, but we know in real terms that often we can be very much shocked when we see the actual statistics. Just yesterday I had the opportunity of meeting some representatives of the bilingual districts commission who have done a rather intensive study of the language changes occurring within my constituency of Egmont. They were frank to admit that one of the difficulties they had was that they really had to base their conclusions on a rather rough compilation of statistics taken once every ten years—1961, 1971, and so on—and that to try to formulate sensible recommendations in respect of the bilingual complexion for the future of the Egmont constituency would require a great deal more relevant information that is presently available.

Some members may recall that only a few years ago, in early 1971, for the first time in the Atlantic region the Atlantic Development Council produced a strategy. I do not intend to get into the merits or otherwise of that strategy produced by the ministerial advisory council for the Atlantic region. One of the very clear recommendations that they put on the record at that time was as follows, and I read from page 13, recommendation 65:

● (1610)

Data relevant to the economy of the Atlantic provinces are with reference to some subjects, and in some respects, seriously inadequate to provide a basis for the formulation of policies and programs and their subsequent monitoring. The Council has found this a serious problem which has hampered and complicated the preparation of a development strategy. Now that a comprehensive development effort has been launched, steps must be taken to correct this situation.

The council may have been somewhat overoptimistic about a comprehensive development strategy, but to the degree that such a strategy has not been inaugurated it may well be attributable to the fact that we do not have adequate statistics for the Atlantic region. We are faced with a variety of problems in this regard. Much of the statistical information for the Local Initiatives Program, which we were told in the beginning was to be allocated on the basis of unemployment and other social indicators across the country, we find—and I will not get into some of the allegations of political bias—to be based on the 1971 census.

We know only too well that in the period since 1971 a great deal has happened both in terms of the mobility of people and in terms of the economic situation in this country. As recently as this week we learned that across the country, especially in the larger urban centres in the central part of the country, unemployment has been on the decrease, but in the Atlantic provinces unemployment has increased in some places. In some parts of the Atlantic provinces it has increased dramatically, so dramatically that it is difficult to explain.

I have attempted to analyse—again with inadequate figures—the fact that in some of the urban centres in the Atlantic provinces, such as Halifax, Saint John and Fredericton, until two months ago unemployment was down 3 per cent or 4 per cent, and there has been a rather unusual job vacancy situation in some of the larger urban centres. But Statistics Canada is reporting as late as this week that we have a 9.6 per cent unemployment rate in the Atlantic provinces, a 13.6 per cent rate in Newfoundland and 9.9 per cent in New Brunswick. When I try to investigate the situation in Nova Scotia alone, because I thought that being the largest province in population I would find reasonable statistical explanations, I find that Cape Breton has an unemployment rate of 12 per cent and Nova Scotia about 8 per cent, but no one seems to know the explanation for this in terms of regional inconsistencies.

What we are trying to do, quite obviously, is to solve modern social and economic problems with horse and buggy statistics. The time has come to go beyond the horse and buggy stage, to realize that the nature of government and the intervention of government, not only federal government but other levels of government as well, has changed so dramatically in the past decade that to rely on normal social indicators is to waste the time of the general public and to destroy the effectiveness of programs that attempt to focus on the real human problems that exist.

Another example of the situation in the Atlantic provinces is the fact that for years—I do not know how long this goes back but I have statistics, unreliable as they may be, showing that at least for the last two decades—there has been a tremendous amount of out-migration from the Atlantic region. We know that as late as the mid 1960s there was a net out-migration of as many as 25,000 or 35,000 who had left the Atlantic region for other parts of this country or perhaps the United States.

Then we are told that in 1972 there has been a net in-migration for the first time in, I do not know how long. One would have to go back 30 or 40 years. The in-migration in 1972 amounted to some 5,000 people. We do not have enough information, unfortunately, to tell us in what way or in what form these people arrived and who they are, nor where they have gone and why they have come into the region. We do not have the gross figures on migration in or out, and we are left with the situation of trying to formulate economic and social policy without understanding what these semi-statistics tell us.

I want to quote for a moment from a speech that was given by a lady who has some interest in the subject on which I am speaking today. Her name is Sylvia Ostry. Some years ago, Dr. Ostry made a speech in which she made a few interesting comments which I think it might be worth relaying to the members of this House. She suggests in this speech, which I found to be an excellent talk about new directions, that we have to find some new social indicators because the nature of government planning and government action has changed so dramatically.

She suggested that we must develop——an emphasis on anticipatory rather than reactive decision making: an emphasis on systems rather than on discrete problem or policy areas. If one stresses the need to anticipate rather than react to problems and recognizes that inter relationships among proposed solutions must be explicitly taken into account, this may lead to a more careful and meaningful exploration of social priorities and effective strategies for their ultimate attainment.

Later in her speech she spoke about the need for——an increasingly articulated need by individuals within contemporary affluent societies to exercise more real choice about how they will live.

In the final part of her speech she suggested the following:

—the movement to develop what have been called "social indicators", direct measures of social welfare or distress such as indexes of mental and physical health; social mobility; public order and safety; the quality of the environment; participation and alienation, etc.

She went on to suggest that without these kinds of new statistics we will not be able to do the job adequately in terms of meeting and responding to the changes that are taking place in our society. I suppose that the best example of the situation in which we find ourselves today is the energy crisis. Here we are in a very difficult situation because we have not even begun to think of how we would quantify, how we would gather and how we would display the kind of information on energy utilization, energy needs and energy development either for the whole of the country or for the part of the country which is in most serious jeopardy at present either due to the potential petroleum shortages or to the very rapid rise in prices that has occurred. It points up, again, the lack of foresight that we have had and perhaps the lack of encouragement that we have given to our key statistical and information gathering system, that is, Statistics Canada.

Why do I spend so much time talking about the need for better information? It comes down very simply to this: I think at no time has it been clearer than in the last few months under this government that a good social and economic policy cannot be formulated flying by the seat of one's pants, and it certainly cannot happen because somebody gets up on a specific morning and decides he will have such and such a program or such and such a policy. We have had far too many months and far too many programs of "ad hockery." If we are to get beyond that, if we are to get positive and active government we will not get it unless we establish adequate benchmarks for social and economic development. We cannot begin to establish either short-term or long-term goals unless we have the information, the measurements and the monitoring to make them a practical reality. That is why I hope hon. members this afternoon will support the speedy passage and recommendation of this bill to committee.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased that the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) proposed his amendment and recognized that there was a small error in the drafting. I agree with him that it is insignificant and that the question we are really debating this afternoon is the substance of the bill. I listened very carefully to the hon. member, and I was pleased to hear his comment that he was looking for better information and not necessarily for more information. I am not convinced that we need more surveys, polls and inquiries. It may be that fewer would be in order.

I wonder whether the hon. member, before preparing the amendment, considered who does the work in most of these surveys. I suggest that a good portion of it has to be done by the small businessmen in Canada and, for that matter, by the larger corporations; but they hire staff and write off the cost as a business expense. The small businessman finds himself inundated with inquiries. Since Statistics Canada has been in operation for a number of years, it seems to me that the time has come to establish some form of task force to look into the kind of information that both Statistics Canada and provincial governments are gathering.

Just the other day a small businessman in my riding sent me a folder that contained seven or eight pages of questions. It had his name at the top and his address. It asked for all kinds of information, what kind of work he engaged in, how many employers he had, what he was paying them and what deductions were taken off at source. I got tired reading the questions because the list was so long. On the surface there did not seem to be an adequate explanation of the reason for it. Ture, Statistics Canada talks about such information being confidential, but the small businessman has a right to be a little apprehensive and to wonder how many people actually are looking at the type of information that he has to provide in this way.

The crowning blow for this individual was that he was told he had to complete the questionnaire and that if he did not complete it then under the act he would be subject to a fine. I can appreciate that one of the costs of doing business in Canada calls for completing income tax forms, preparing T-4 slips for employees and even collecting sales tax for the provinces and remitting it to the provincial treasury, but it seems to me we add insult to injury for the small businessman when we send him a leaflet full of questions which he cannot throw in the waste-paper basket. If it were a voluntary matter he could make up his own mind about filling out the questionnaire or throwing it in a waste-paper basket. But the government agencies seeking the information have the sanction of legislation behind them and as a result the small businessman is not told that he may, at his choice, fill out the questionnaire or not fill it out; he is told he must fill it out.

Like the hon. member, I sometimes wonder if some people come into their offices in the morning, sit down and ask each other whether they should hold a survey on a particular subject, seeking information to help the small businessman to expand, telling him what kind of equipment would be better to use in his particular business. But I wonder if they would be a little more careful in sending out questionnaires to businessmen if they had to pay each businessman $10 for the time he had to devote to completing questionnaires. I wonder if that would limit the number of questionnaires that do go out, and if more careful thought would be given to the kinds of questions asked and to the length of the questionnaires. I have mentioned a figure of $10, but I suggest that the small businessman's time is worth very much more than that simply because of the length of time he has to devote to giving information to the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

I agree that the time has come for an investigation to be made by a task force or some other appropriate authority into the kind of information gathering that is done in Canada, to determine if it is really necessary to have all of these papers that come over the desk of the small businessman. In spite of my comments, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to be negative about Statistics Canada. I know that many of the surveys it conducts are necessary. But the businessman, when he fills out these forms, is probably asking himself — of course, in the first place he is angry because he has to do it — who is going to benefit? He has spent 15 years building up this information, learning through trial and error that this particular way is the best in which to operate his business; he wonders if all this information is going to be culled from him to be used by somebody else who has not had to go through the school of hard knocks, who can take advantage of this information and perhaps become established in competition with him. By reading the answers he gives, somebody else may prosper.

Further, Mr. Speaker, the time has come for such a study to be made in order to avoid duplication. As a man who practised law for some 10 or 12 years, although I had a modest business engaging only a few employees I know the amount of paperwork that came over my desk and had to be attended to on behalf of government. I agree that part of it is proper. It is the expense of doing business in Canada, and here I speak of Ontario, the area with which I am most familiar. But on more than one occasion I saw the same questions being asked by the municipal government, the provincial government and the federal government. I was asked why I selected that particular site for my business. The municipality wanted to know for planning purposes but I do not know why the provincial government and the federal government wanted the same information.

I wish to enter a plea with Statistics Canada and other governmental information gathering agencies that they take a long, hard look at the surveys they are conducting and at the results they publish. I sometimes wonder if they really are significant without having all the background and explanations provided. Here I am thinking of things such as the monthly unemployment figures. They come out with the seasonally adjusted figure and the number of people actually unemployed at a particular time. Yet the survey done, I think, is incomplete because of the actual number of people contacted. It is said that for statistical purposes 1,000 people contacted will be as accurate as one million contacted. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the people connected with Statistics Canada ever ran in an election, where you can find that after the first thousand votes come in you might be ten behind, but when the next 20,000 votes come in and are counted you end up with a tremendous victory. I think they miss things like that.

This subject is something in which I have been interested ever since I was first elected to this House in 1968. At that time I had many calls from small businessmen in my area. We were examining the question of setting up secondary industry in Sarnia where there is already heavy industry and there is competition between industry with respect to wages. One of the things we discovered with respect to doing business in an area like Sarnia is the fact that all these additional forms, figures ans surveys add to the cost of doing business. Those concerned suggested that if even part of that cost could be eliminated it would be a tremendous help.

As a government supporter and as a member of parliament, I realized there are two sides to the question. I tried to explain to the businessmen that many of the surveys which are done are done with good motives, with the idea of aiding and assisting them. But I have determined from my research that some of the Statistics Canada business surveys are undertaken merely for the purpose of keeping administrative records. Each of these sources in general provides both national, and, to a varying extent, regional data. The hon. member indicates that they do not go into small enough regions as far as he is concerned. I think there is provision in section 3(e) to go into regional areas, but I think there has to be some form of motivation, either that the minister of industry for the province or the treasury has indicated that it would help them to determine where to locate industry, for example, in Prince Edward Island if they had more specific information on an area the size of the hon. member's riding let alone the size of Prince Edward Island.

I think that is good and that kind of information would be very helpful. I sometimes wonder if it would not be much more helpful than the countless hours that are spent on broad surveys that are very interesting to read in the newspaper, but when you throw the paper out, out goes the information on the survey. I think if we got down to a little more focusing on the kinds of information that the hon. member is looking for, maybe there would be a better role to be played by government departments. One of the defences put up by the department is that in these business surveys location is a meaningful concept. This comes back to the question, "Why did you locate in your particular area?" In my law office days I located in my particular area because it was the only upstairs office I could find that I could afford. I gave the same answer to all the questionnaires, but they indicated that in the business surveys where location is a meaningful concept, like manufacturing and mining, the data are tabulated regionally and the releases are only subject to the confidentiality provisions of the Statistics Act. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that means they remove the name of the corporation which provided the information, and to that extent it is confidential when it is sent out.

In other business surveys where location is not a meaningful concept, for example, transportation and communication, they indicate regional tabulations cannot be carried out. In the case of household sample surveys, here I suppose if someone is at home they may not feel quite so strongly about these forms that have to be filled out, although I know that the busy housewife nowadays feels she has better things to do than to answer surveys. Certainly we find that with Air Canada passengers: when they are handed a slip at the airport I suspect that often it goes into the waste basket at the end of the long corridor. But in the case of household sample surveys, the extent to which regional data can be provided is limited by sample size. As sample size decreases, so does the amount of statistically reliable regional detail which is available. That is my point exactly.

Rather than concentrating on a wide area, I think it would be more appropriate if they focused on a small area and did a more significant and meaningful study. If you do a large area and a few people, the department itself tells you that as the size decreases so does the reliability of the statistics. I suggest, with respect, if you have that on a small scale, on going over a larger area you are really cutting down the statistical reliability but over a wider area. It seems to me that is hardly progress. The high cost of survey-taking makes it important for the bureau to consider carefully the sample size, that is, the cost. I think if we added one more cost factor, tha is, paying businessmen for filling out some of these forms, maybe we would have fewer surveys and they would be focused in smaller areas.

Mr. Speaker, I understand there are other members who wish to speak. I think I have made the point that I wanted to make and on that basis I will resume my seat.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House for only a few minutes. May I say at the outset that if hon. members were not unanimously prepared to discuss Bill C-10 this afternoon, this is a good one for us to be dealing with, and I commend the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) for presenting this bill. As I understand it, his desire is that the quality of our statistics be improved and his bill suggests that one of the ways in which to do that is to provide, in certain instances, for statistics to be obtained on an area basis.

I know that when he uses the word "area" he has in mind geographical areas, but I should like to suggest that there is also room for statistics being gathered on the basis of social areas. In particular I am thinking about the consumer price index, popularly known as the cost of living index, which is produced by Statistics Canada. If I understand it correctly, this is one index right across the whole spectrum of society. However, there are certain groups, old age pensioners, veterans and, commencing in 1974, recipients of family allowances to whom the consumer price index is not just a statistic but is the basis on which the amount of money they will receive is determined.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of living increase experienced by the whole community might not be close at all to the actual impact of a cost of living increase on old age pensioners, veterans or mothers with children for whom they are receiving family allowances. When you are an old age pensioner, the kinds of things that you may have to buy are of a limited number and, as I say, that cost of living factor can be quite different from the factor for the entire community.

I would hope that when the people at Statistics Canada look at this debate and consider whether ways may be found to improve the quality of our statistics, they will consider the desirability of statistics that show what is the actual cost of living increase for groups like old age pensioners, veterans and mothers in receipt of family allowances. People who are in receipt of these benefits are forever surprised when they get their increases because in their experience the cost of living has gone up for them much more than is reflected in their pension increases. I think this problem could be met if we had statistics computed on the basis of social areas as well as on the basis of geographic areas.

I have one other sentence and then I shall sit down, Mr. Speaker. I liked the reference by the hon. member for Egmont, or maybe it was a quotation from Dr. Sylvia Ostry before she became Chief Statistician, that maybe it is time for us to be making anticipatory rather than reactive decisions. I think this is true particularly in the area of enabling people, especially pensioners and others, to cope with the rising cost of living.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre De Bané (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in substance the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) is appropriate and deserves the support of all hon. members.

I say in substance because I think there has been too great a tendency in this country to consider only national statistics, national aggregates, and not often enough the statistics of various areas which differ substantially from national statistics.

Having said that I have doubts about the advisability of the hon. member's amendment which would not produce the results he seeks because it would frustrate the clause he wants to replace and which seems to me to be very important and very useful.

As to regionalizing our statistics I think more should be done in that respect. Our bureau of statistics, now called Statistics Canada, is certainly one of the most competent in the world. Very few countries have available to them a statistical department so up to date, so specialized, so competent, so careful and impartial such as Statistics Canada, which is headed so competently by Mrs. Sylvia Ostry.

Furthermore, I think Statistics Canada should try and do more. I understand that such an undertaking is prevented from taking place mainly because of a lack of funds. If Statistics Canada had more money it could compile a lot more statistics in many more areas. Nevertheless, new studies have to be made. I am sure that all hon. members would be interested in seeing Statistics Canada undertake studies on various questions of interest to the people of this country.

To mention only one, I have been personally interested for some time in the distribution of doctors in Canada and I am trying to obtain data on this subject. Unfortunately, I have not been able to secure any figures from anyone to show exactly which region is short of doctors and how many specialists are lacking in certain regions.

The contribution of the hon. member for Egmont who reminded us how greatly differ regional statistics from national statistics, was quite eloquent about the LIP program. For instance, we know that this year the budget for this program was substantially reduced under the pretense that national unemployment was down by 1 per cent.

I would quote a few figures supplied by the Canada Manpower Centre in my constituency of Matane. In Matane, out of 3,360 people on the labour market, 1,344 are unemployed namely 40 per cent and this in the chief town of my constituency. If you consider now the villages surrounding this town whether it be Petite-Matane, St-Andelme, Sainte-Félicité, Grosses-Roches, Les Capucins, you find that the unemployment rate varies from 65 to 70 per cent. In other places such as Sainte-Paule, Les Boules, Métis, it is as high as 75 per cent.

Imagine what the reaction would be throughout the country if the unemployment rate were to reach 10 or 15 per cent at the national level. It would be a terrible crisis. The public coffers would be wide open and we would accumulate huge deficits to stimulate the economy while such sad situations as those I just mentioned would be of very small importance at the national policy level. And yet those situations have been existing for decades. Those regions are so under-populated that the fact that those people are working or not hardly puts a dent in national statistics.

For instance, in the Gaspe area about 60,000 people are on the labour market out of which about 30,000 are idle. Even if they were working they would not affect the national statistics but I can assure the House that as regards social peace and the economic welfare of this region, statistics such as those affect people's morale, which is absolutely unacceptable.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in concluding how much I approve the proposal from the hon. member for Egmont to regionalize statistics a little more and make them more available. That is a somewhat different question, but it is really related to the first one and the way the hon. member went about it unfortunately does not seem to me the most appropriate way of proceeding.

That being said, I wish again to give credit to the group of public servants, under the extremely able direction of Mrs. Ostry, for their efficiency and fair mindedness, and I hope Parliament will earmark greater funds for that agency so as to enable it to make more intensive inquiries. I mentioned the one about statistics related to the regional unemployment rate, the allocation of doctors and the statistics on poverty in our area. So many other fields would deserve an inquiry on the part of Statistics Canada, something which is not to being done because of a restricted budget.

Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a consensus in the House so that the work already done for the regionalization of statistics be carried on, for this country, as was often said, has several areas which are very different from one another and it would be our biggest error if we were to apply limited and standard measures in a country as big and as diversified as ours.

[English]

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief and make one or two points only. Unfortunately, I missed part of the remarks of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) in support of his proposal. I had rushed up to my office to get my coat in order to be ready at five o'clock to jump into the car of my seatmate, the hon. member for Sarnia-Lambton (Mr. Cullen). These days we try to pool our resources in view of the energy problem.

An hon. Member: Why don't you take the bus?

Mr. Corbin: I have never been able to determine which bus serves my part of the city, which is about 5½ miles from Parliament Hill. Another problem is that, like other MPs, I am pressed for time. I am afraid the bus is too slow for my needs, as I need to be in my office early in the morning to attend to problems and as committees usually sit early.

I hope that my brief remarks will not be interpreted as in any way denoting a parochial attitude on my part, because sometimes members from Atlantic areas accuse me of that attitude. I think it is important for members from the Atlantic area to appreciate the views of other members from the area, and not necessarily to condemn those members who live on the fringe of the Atlantic area merely because they do not agree with the views of other Atlantic area members. Much though I appreciate the statements made by members from other parts of the area, who sometimes pontificate on the advantages of the Atlantic area, let me make it clear that although I speak of my area I am also putting forward the views, opinions and aspirations of the area as a whole. On that point I know we may disagree.

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this afternoon when I was speaking on Bill C-236 the hon. member for Madawaska-Victoria (Mr. Corbin) raised a point of order, contending that my remarks were not relevant to the bill we were discussing. I now ask Your Honour to bring the hon. member to order and ask him to speak on the measure now before the House.

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the point being made. However, I thought it was not a bad idea to make some general observations in my opening remarks about things which pertain to the general area from which the author of this proposal and I come. It is in that context that I wish to make a few remarks. I see the clock is moving on and I am afraid there will not be time for me to make all the points I wished to make. In any case, after listening to the hon. member for Egmont I feel that the suggested amendment is redundant. What he seeks through his amendment has already been well taken care of in the Statistics Act which was amended, I think, in 1971.

I have been assured that there is a special research staff with special responsibility for developing estimates of socioeconomic data for some provincial areas, as well as a provincial liaison and consultative services staff which has prime responsibility for working with provincial government departments and groups of regional provincial governments such as we have in the Atlantic area. For example, this can be useful in the context of the proposed cooperative union of the Maritime provinces. These services are co-ordinated for general or specific assistance in the statistical field.

It seems that some provinces are a little timid or hesitant at times to request services that are available. Most times it is just a matter of getting on the phone or dropping a note to the Chief Statistician on behalf of any provincial government and requesting that special studies be made. It is in that sense the amendment is redundant. I have also been assured that for many years Statistics Canada has worked very closely through conferences and meetings with provincial government departments to develop meaningful statistics at both the provincial and subprovincial levels. That is the main point I wish to make today. I hope there will be an opportunity later to go into this proposition a little more deeply. I hope to be back here in future sessions, and I do not see any problem next year.

I agree with the substance of the bill. Perhaps we can enjoin Statistics Canada to continue this excellent work and branch out into more specific areas of information gathering that are not available unless specific requests are made for them. I think a lot of this information could be made public without waiting for someone to come by, knock on the door and ask for it.

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall take just a few minutes because I believe it is my duty to point out a few things on the technical side. I agree in substance with what the hon. member proposes. If I had more time, I would expound on a lot of things he said and support them. In this bill the hon. member seeks to amend the act of 1948. That act was replaced with a new act in 1971 called the Statistics Act. The relevant section is 3(e). I suggest this section is even better than the one suggested by the hon. member because of one line at the end. The hon. member's amendment reads:

(d) generally to organize a scheme of co-ordinated social and economic statistics pertaining to the whole of Canada, to each of the provinces thereof—

Up to that point it is the same as the old act. The hon. member has added:

—and to any area of Canada the minister may from time to time designate.

I would point out to the hon. member that the last part of section 3(e) reads:

—and to coordinate plans for the integration of such statistics.

I submit that these words are important. I believe the hon. member agrees. There is a lot of power in the Statistics Act to deal with this, and I do not think the hon. member would want to delete the words at the end of section 3(e). I just want to point this out to explain why we believe we should not proceed with this bill as it now stands. I want to make it abundantly clear that I believe the substance of it is important. I believe we should get better information in certain regions of the country. However, I am very concerned about definitions or impressions that form a part of the statistics that are taken across the country. They do not take into consideration the way of life of the different components of the economy. For example, they do not take into consideration the economic way of life in the Maritimes. More often than not the consumer price index and unemployment statistics do not define in economic terms the status of the economy. As the hon. member stated, they are not a good economic indicator.

In many places in my constituency and other parts of the Atlantic provinces it is impossible to work in the winter or during a certain time of the year. For example, employees in the logging industry and the pulp industry live in rural areas. The roads are not of the same standard as in other areas. Companies do not keep their camps open year-round, so it is not possible for the people to work year-round. These types of situations in certain areas are of importance.

Not only do we require better information, but in the future we should try to define the economic indicators and the socioeconomic indicators in those areas. That is where we should start. Despite the weakness of the bill from a legal standpoint, in substance it is very good and I commend the hon. member for bringing it before the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Has the hon. member completed his speech or is he calling it five o'clock? Shall I put the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Breau: Mr. Speaker, I believe it is five o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is calling it five o'clock. The time provided for the consideration of private members' business having expired, this House stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At five o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

STATUS OF WOMEN

TABLING OF PUBLICATION, "STATUS OF WOMEN, 1973"—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 41(2) I would like to table a publication entitled "Status of Women, 1973" in both the official languages, which is a review of the activities of the government to improve the position of women in Canada.

The federal government has pledged its support to the removal of discrimination and the provision of opportunity to women in all fields of Canadian life. The government is justly proud of its record to date in this field and in the leadership role it has played in this regard.

One of the most important steps taken by the government is the establishment of a network of positions whose responsibility is to advise the government on matters concerning the status of women.

At the centre of this network is the office of the Co-ordinator, Status of Women, located in the Privy Council Office, Social Policy Secretariat. The co-ordinator is responsible for advising me as minister responsible for the status of women and monitoring all government activities to ensure that they are in accordance with the general policy concerning the status of women. Completing the network are a number of positions in those government departments in which the programs and policies have particular importance to the status of women. The Women's Bureau of the Department of Labour has played an important part in attempting to persuade all Canadians of the importance of equal opportunity for women in the field of employment. Other departments with special positions are: the Treasury Board, the Public Service Commission, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Manpower and Immigration, the Department of Justice, the Secretary of State Department and the Department of the Solicitor General. There are also, in several personnel divisions of departments and agencies, persons who are responsible for ensuring the equality of opportunities for women within their respective jurisdictions.

The most recent development was the creation in May, 1973, of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women. This council of 30 people from across the country was established to bring before the government and the public matters of interest and concern to women, and to advise the government on actions that it deems necessary to improve the position of women in society. The council has already produced a number of reports and made their presence felt both by the government and the general public.

The Status of Women in Canada, 1973 booklet presents an up to date picture of recent legislation and administrative measures concerning questions of interest to women within the jurisdiction of the federal government. Important steps have been taken in this respect, and the government will continue its march forward until equality of opportunity is assured between women and men in Canada. We, as members of parliament and as Canadians, must continue to work toward this objective.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to some of the highlights of the report.

Canada has ratified on November 16, 1972, the International Labour Organization Convention 100 concerning equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value.

The regulations under the Fair Wages and Hours of Work Act were amended to include a provision that in the hiring and employment of workers to perform any work under a federal contract, the contractor will not refuse to employ and will not discriminate in any manner against any person because of that person's race, national origin, colour, religion, age, sex or marital status.

In the latter part of 1972, the government assigned the Public Service Commission responsibility for investigating complaints of alleged discrimination on the grounds of sex, race, national origin, colour or religion with respect to application or operation of the Public Service Employment Act. The commission has set up an anti-discrimination Branch to conduct such inquiries.

● (1410)

The government has continued its policy for nominating qualified women to the Senate, as judges, and to boards and commissions and other senior posts. Since October 30, 1972, this government has appointed, or reappointed, 73 women to various boards and agencies. This includes two judges of the Superior Court, four Citizenship Court judges, four full-time Commissioners of the Immigration Appeal Board, and the Chairman of the Food Prices Review Board.

Within the Public Service, the April, 1972 Cabinet directive to deputy heads to encourage the assignment of women to higher echelon positions resulted in the establishment by the Public Service Commission's Office of Equal Opportunities for Women of an interdepartmental committee to co-ordinate action and provide a mechanism for exchanging information and measuring progress. This committee is jointly chaired by senior officials from the Public Service Commission and the Treasury Board.

Status of Women

Guidelines developed by the Public Service Commission and the Office of Equal Opportunities for Women have been directed to all deputy ministers to assist departments in effectively developing equal opportunities for women programs.

The Department of Manpower and Immigration is appointing consultants in each regional office with specific responsibilities for Manpower services to women. This is in addition to the position already established at the department's headquarters to provide advice and functional guidance in the matter of employment problems of women.

The government has continued its financial support of women's voluntary associations. The Citizenship Branch of the Secretary of State Department has an active program of support to women's groups to promote the participation of Canadian women in activities that affect the quality of their lives. A program of support for native women has also been established within the Native Citizen's Program to increase their ability to participate more fully in all aspects of community life. As minister responsible for the status of women, funds have been allocated to me for national women's organizations to assist them in promoting the status of women. Other departments have also made funds available to women's organizations for projects coming within their mandates.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has established a National Day Care Information Centre within the Canada Assistance Plan Directorate. The centre provides information concerning all aspects of the day care field.

The Canada Assistance Plan regulations were amended to allow for expansion of financial support to day care. Previously the provisions of the plan allowed for the sharing in the cost to the provinces and municipalities of such expenses as salaries, staff training and research. With the amendments, shareable costs have been expanded to include all operation costs and, in some instances, equipment costs. Support is also being provided under the Canada Assistance Plan to family day care services, that is, day care services provided in a home environment.

The government in its "Working Paper on Social Security in Canada" has recognized the special problems of single parent families. These will be discussed with the provinces during the course of the review of the social security system undertaken by the federal and provincial governments. Within the framework of these discussions, the questions of the participation of the spouse remaining at home in the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans and of the equal treatment of women and men under the plan will be given priority attention as announced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) after the federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers in October.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this government is indeed serious in its efforts to promote the status of women in Canada. This booklet which I have tabled underlines how much has already been accomplished.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to tell you that the minister has outdone himself, having given me notice four days ago. I would have hoped that the length of notice might have meant shorter speeches, but that hope is in another world.

[Mr. Munro (Hamilton East).]

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): In four days you should have prepared a good, short speech.

Mr. Fairweather: I did not want to change the spontaneity of these remarks. The cause of equality and fairness for women in our society would be better served by fewer pamphlets and more evidence of action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I believe that some day we will be able to find evidence of action by the number of women in senior positions in the public service of this country. Until the minister can show us a reasonable balance in this regard, all the documents that he or anybody else produces will really not be very worth while.

Dr. Sylvia Gelber, head of the Women's Bureau, Department of Labour, in an excellent resumé of the constitutional position of women has performed a special service. I hope my colleagues in the House will have a chance to look at her speech given recently at McMaster. It is extraordinary how long it has taken this predominantly male-oriented parliament to—I was going to say "come to grips" but I had better change that phrase—deal with what is a very unfair situation.

Despite our disappointment about the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the Lavell case, as politicians we must recognize that the best forum for amending the Indian Act is in this parliament rather than through the courts. It is a political rather than a legal decision.

The government has asked the native peoples to help it and all of us by studying the Indian Act, giving their opinions about it and then making recommendations as to what form a new act should take. All this takes time. Despite the frustrations we may feel about what is on the face of it manifestly an unjust situation, I hope we can be content to wait for a little while longer for the advice of the native peoples on their act.

In a brief to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras)—I suppose that title will have to be changed very soon—the Western Conference on Opportunities for Women, 1973, made a couple of recommendations: To serve women, Manpower must be publicly committed to creating equal conditions of employment and equal opportunities for employment for all Canadians. To stop being an agent of discrimination, Manpower must become an agent of change, actively working for women, challenging the stereotypes of "male" and "female" work, training and placing of women in new areas, designing services to meet women's specific needs, and working with employers to change what up until now have been discriminatory attitudes and practices.

What we should seek to overcome is not only the unfairness of a system that discriminates but the tragic waste of talents and abilities of the women of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, we in this party are glad to have this progress report from the minister responsible for implementing measures to improve the status of women. We note that the chief thrust of this report is to detail the network of positions within various government departments where women have the special responsibility of advising the government on measures concerning the status of women. Also mentioned are the Advisory Council on the Status of Women established last May and the women appointed by the government to various boards and agencies.

● (1420)

These developments are good and we trust that their influence will be far-reaching. Where the government has fallen far short is in its failure to provide legislation or take concrete action to deal with some of the most urgent problems affecting thousands, yes, millions, of women across Canada. Some of the top priority recommendations of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women have not yet been put into effect.

The royal commission report was tabled in September, 1970. In March, 1971, my colleague, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), moved a motion on behalf of our party in which he detailed some of these important legislative needs—the inclusion of housewives in the Canada and Quebec Pension plans, the provision of maternity benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, the adoption of a national day care act, the initiation of a family planning program, certain amendments to the Criminal Code including the removal of abortion as an offence, and equal treatment of women in the federal public service. We now have maternity benefits, some grants to family planning organizations and the beginnings of fairer treatment for women in the public service. But the other major items are still practically untouched as far as legislation goes. The critical shortage of day care facilities is an outstanding example of how little action has been taken. And the problems faced by women are growing with this neglect.

Discrimination against women in the areas of immigration and citizenship must be removed. The much-heralded fair employment practices legislation promised under the Canada Labour Code is still to come, as are amendments to the Indian Act, with the full cooperation of the Indian people, so that injustices like that which came to light in the Lavell case may not recur.

Some matters must be dealt with provincially or jointly by federal and provincial authorities. In the first category are cases like the Murdoch where a farm wife, separated from her husband, was denied any interest in the property after 25 years of marriage. In the second category are the many cases where a runaway husband is allowed to escape scotfree, leaving his wife to bear the entire burden of the family.

The 1971 NDP motion called for a federal-provincial conference, convened by Ottawa, to consider such matters where joint responsibility arises. I repeat the call now. If federal-provincial conferences can be arranged to deal with all kinds of matters, surely we should be able to devote one to the removal of some of the more severe forms of discrimination which afflict the women of this country.

Olympic Advertising

Speaking in Toronto, in an expansive and generous mood a few nights before his marriage, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) expressed his concern about the need to take immediate steps to improve the status of women. With enthusiasm, he said he invited all Canadians to exhibit impatience with the government's rate of progress in this respect. Never did the Prime Minister issue an invitation which was more welcome to me and to Canadian women generally. Unfortunately, to date there has been all kinds of talk but far too little action on the status of women. It is time to exhibit our impatience in no uncertain way.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, we obviously would like to see all discrimination outlawed in every area and all classes of society. Consequently, we are in favour of the equality of sexes.

Legislation aiming at implementing sex equality therefore deserves all our support. However, Mr. Speaker, we should not put too much emphasis on this subject so as not to perpetuate this discrimination that we would like outlawed from a social standpoint, since the women's groups which are encouraged by the minister's statement could become an obstacle to the implementation of equality. I am not saying that these groups are bad, but that putting too much emphasis on them constitutes discrimination of the type that we wish to ban.

Mr. Speaker, we must also think of the time when we shall consider equal pay, for instance. We certainly agree with the equality principle. We do not see why there should be any discrimination on the basis of pay. We should also give more consideration to solutions like giving salaries to housewives who remain at home to educate and teach their children. If we paid sufficient salaries to housewives and mothers, they would be less tempted to go out and look for work. Mr. Speaker, everyone is more or less compelled to work. I wonder to what extent that will lead to an increase in unemployment. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, we agree we should actually reach that equality which we all hope. I am sure that we will attain it when we will no longer speak about it.

METHOD OF AWARDING ADVERTISING CONTRACT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The motion, I believe, is self-explanatory. If granted permission, I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House requests the Postmaster General to make a statement to the House of Commons revealing all details and circumstances surrounding the awarding of Olympic advertising by his department to B. B. Advertising Limited, and in particular the minister advise this House whether or not Mr. Jean Bouchard's connection with that firm was or was not a factor in awarding the contract; and further, that it is the opinion of this House that all future government advertising contracts should be let by public tender, and that the government discontinue the present system of awarding advertising contracts on the basis of ministerial prerogative and political considerations.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC HALIBUT FISHERY—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Thomas S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity which I hope will receive the unanimous consent of the House. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser):

That the current state of the North Pacific halibut fishery, and of the present and future position of Canadian fishermen in relation thereto, be referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry for urgent consideration and report.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

TABLING OF AGREEMENT AND STATEMENT ON MECHANISMS FOR TRANSPORTATION PLANNING AND CO-ORDINATION

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 41(2) I should like to table copies in both official languages of an agreement reached and a statement made this morning at a meeting of federal provincial and regional government representatives on mechanisms for transportation planning and co-ordination in the national capital region.

PROTECTION OF PRIVACY BILL

SUGGESTED MOTION TO REJECT SENATE AMENDMENT—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43. I do not expect the House to agree unanimously to the substance of my motion, but I hope there will be unanimity to let the motion be put and voted upon so that we will know where the House stands with respect to an urgent matter. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House urges the government to introduce forthwith a motion calling for the rejection of the Senate amendment to Bill C-176.

Mr. Speaker: This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity.

CANADIAN CITIZENSHIP ACT

PROVISION THAT CHILD BORN OUTSIDE CANADA IS NATURAL-BORN CANADIAN IF EITHER PARENT CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-246, to amend the Canadian Citizenship Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

● (1430)

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide that a child born outside Canada is a natural-born Canadian if either of his parents is a Canadian citizen. At present this privilege follows only the citizenship of the father and not the mother, and this is manifestly unfair.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,849—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Canadian Film Development Corporation on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. J. Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. 1972-73—Publicity and information: Montreal, $253.70; Toronto, $445.00; Annual Reports, $2,855.52. 1973-74—Publicity and information: Montreal, $150.08; Toronto, $150.00; Annual Reports, $3,841.93.

2. Annual Report 1972-73: $2,855.52; Carleton, Cowan Public Relations Limited, 892 Sherbrooke Street West, Montreal. Balance: classified ads in newspapers specializing in the field of the film industry of Montreal, Toronto, etc., $698.70. Annual Report 1973-74: $3,841.93; Pierre Desmarais Inc., 6125 Côte-de-Liesse, Saint-Laurent 377, P.Q. Balance: classified ads in the magazines and newspapers specializing in the field of the film industry of Montreal and Toronto, $300.08.

3. Not applicable.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—PUBLICITY EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,865—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What were the amounts of money spent by the Industrial Development Bank on publicity and/or information in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date?

2. What were the names and addresses of firms and individuals who received these contracts, what amounts of money were spent in each case and what was the purpose of each contract?

3. In the case of expenditures for publicity and/or information made within the Department by its publicity or information division, what was the amount in each case and the purpose of the expenditure?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1. The Industrial Development Bank carries out an extensive advertising program designed to inform the small businessman of the services it makes available. During the fiscal year 1972 advertising expenses totalled $179,000 while other public information, such as advertising officers' community visits, preparation and distribution of annual reports, information booklets, etc., totalled $276,000. Figures for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1973 are not yet available.

2 and 3. It has not been the practice to answer questions concerning the internal administration of the Industrial Development Bank inasmuch as the Industrial Development Bank Act places the responsibility for the management of the institution in the hands of its board of directors.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 2,913—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What was the total amount of money spent in each of the fiscal years 1972-73 and 1973-74 to date by the Industrial Development Bank on contracts to outside persons and organizations for research, development and other consulting services?

2. What are the names and addresses of these outside persons and organizations and what amounts of money were involved in each contract?

3. What was the purpose of each contract and title of each report submitted?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1, 2 and 3. It has not been the practice to answer questions concerning the internal administration of the Industrial Development Bank inasmuch as the I.D.B. Act places the responsibility for the management of the institution in the hands of its board of directors.

AIR CANADA—IN-FLIGHT ENTERTAINMENT

Question No. 2,952—Mr. Reynolds:

1. What are Air Canada's costs for the plastic headsets used for inflight movies and stereo?

2. What are the monthly costs to Air Canada for providing the movies and stereo?

3. What are the receipts to Air Canada monthly from the renting of the headsets?

4. How much liquor, beer, ale, liqueurs and wine of all varieties were purchased by Air Canada in (a) 1971 (b) 1972?

5. What were the receipts from the sale of liquor, beer, ale, liqueurs and wine of all varieties by Air Canada during (a) 1971 (b) 1972?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Contractual arrangements with suppliers are proprietary information.

2. Monthly cost averages $24,500.

3. Monthly receipts average $23,000.

4 and 5. Receipts from bar sales are recorded as a net figure, that is, the difference between revenue from bar sales and the cost of liquor, beer, ales, liqueurs, wine and cigarettes sold. For the year 1971, the net revenue on this account was $880,000, and in 1972, $560,000. These net revenue figures do not take into account the related expenses of other bar supplies such as soft drink mixes, glasses, etc., and also handling costs in preparation of supplies for flights, expense of Customs Agents for In Bond Liquor Preparation Rooms, and proportional labour cost of Flight Attendants to serve bar. When these added expenses are taken into consideration, the bar service does no more than pay for itself.

ASSISTANCE UNDER EMERGENCY GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE ACT

Question No. 2,973—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What were the names of the corporations which received cash grants under the Emergency Gold-Mining Assistance Act (EGMA), in the calendar year 1973 to date and, in each case, what were the amounts of money committed and paid?

2. What are the objectives of the program?

3. What was the date of the latest evaluative study of the program conducted by the department?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1.

Name of Corporation	Amount Committed and Paid $
Dickensen Mines Ltd.	18,251.36
Hallnor Mines Ltd.	14,214.80
Madsen Red Lake Gold Mines Ltd.	39,280.65
McIntyre Porcupine Mines Ltd.	92,814.78
Cominco Ltd.—Con Mine	61,529.26
Cominco Ltd.—Rycon Mine	16,570.04
Giant Yellowknife Mines Ltd.	21,213.37

Order Paper Questions

Name of Corporation	Amount Committed and Paid $
Lolor Mines Ltd.	6,873.45
Supercrest Mines Ltd.	10,311.53
Total	$281,059.24

These payments were holdbacks from previous years' claims.

2. The objectives of the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act are to maintain dependent gold mining communities and allow these communities to adjust gradually to diminishing economic support.

3. April, 1973.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—MARITIME SURFACE CAPABILITY NORTH OF 60 DEGREES NORTH LATITUDE

Question No. 2,983—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Which vessels of Maritime Command have a surface capability north of 60 degrees north latitude and for what periods of the year in each instance?

2. With respect to the answer to Question No. 2,336, what ships of Maritime Command have been used north of 60 degrees north latitude?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. Operational ships of Maritime Command, of destroyer size or larger, have a surface capability to operate north of 60 degrees north latitude during that part of the year, usually August and September, when Canadian Arctic waters are relatively ice free.

2. In recent years, the following ships of the current fleet have operated north of 60N: August six-September fourteen, 73, HMCS Protecteur; August one-August twenty-five, 72, HMCS Protecteur, HMCS Yukon, HMCS Fraser, HMCS St. Laurent; August twelve-September three, 71, HMCS Preserver, HMCS Margaree, HMCS Assiniboine; August one-August sixteen, 70, HMCS Annapolis, HMCS Skeena, HMCS Protecteur (Submarine HMCS Ojibwa); October one-October nine, 61, HMCS Restigouche, HMCS St. Croix. Other operations north of 60N involved ships no longer with the fleet.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT, CIVIL AVIATION MEDICINE STUDY

Question No. 2,989—Mr. Nielsen:

1. Did any official of the Department of National Health and Welfare who is attached to the Department of Transport's Civil Aviation Division circulate to selected medical doctors across Canada for comment and study a treatise entitled: "Electrocardiography for Air Crew as proposed by Dr. E. Patrick" and, if so, what was the purpose of the foregoing action?

2. Is a copy of the treatise available to the public?

3. Does the Minister consider as being adequate the present medical tests given to pilots to ascertain their physical fitness for flight insofar as heart, arterial or circulatory diseases are concerned?

4. What further physical tests or medical requirements are being considered for introduction to ascertain the medical fitness for Canadian pilots?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) Yes, if the question refers to a recent feasibility study carried out by Dr. E. Patrick entitled: "Aircrew Screening to Exclude Coronary Artery Disease". (b) This study was commissioned by the department to ascertain whether economies could be affected in the future by applying computer technology to the 6,000 electrocardiographic records screened and cross-checked annually by the Civil Aviation Medicine Service. In circulating this study to medical specialists concerned with the use of computer science, it was clearly stated on the first page that the opinions expressed were those of the author and must not be interpreted as Health and Welfare or Ministry of Transport policy or practice.

2. Since this study is an author's draft referring to complex epidemiological and technological techniques, it was not made available to the general public, but is accessible to those who may have an interest in it.

3. The present routine medical examinations given to pilots to ascertain fitness for flight were a concern to the department and to a consensus of the members of the International Civil Aviation Organization because the tests were inadequate for the detection of significant coronary artery disease; hence, the commissioning of the study.

4. The additional physical tests to ascertain medical fitness for Canadian pilots that are presently under consideration result from recent International Civil Aviation Organization recommendations. The first is that electrocardiography should be a part of the heart examination for private pilots "for the first issue of a licence, at the first re-examination after the age of 40 and thereafter no less frequently than every five years, and in re-examination in all doubtful cases". The second is a recommendation that routine chest x-ray be considered part of the initial flight medical examination.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—NUMBER OF COMMISSIONAIRES EMPLOYED, SINCE 1963

Question No. 3,117—Mr. Forrestall:

1. How many members of the Canadian Corps of Commissionaires have been employed on a regular or part-time basis by the Department of National Defence, by year, since 1963?

2. In how many bases or defence establishments maintained by the Department of National Defence has the use of such men and women been discontinued within the past three fiscal years?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): 1. The Department of National Defence requisitions commissionaire services through the Department of Supply and Services on the basis of a stated number of hours per week of required service. Commissionaires are therefore not of this department; and the actual number of members of the Corps of Commissionaires to provide the contracted services is known only to the Corps. Based on the total hours of approved commissionaire services the following are the minimum number of commissionaires employed by the Corps to satisfy the department's requirement each year from 1967.

Year	Total Hours/week Approved	Approx. No. Corpsmen (Based on 48 hour week)
1967	91,771	1,911
1968	67,899	1,414
1969	81,876	1,705
1970	79,946	1,665
1971	72,246	1,505
1972	68,935	1,436
1973	75,796	1,579

NOTE: Departmental records in this form only go back to 1967.

During the past three years, the use of commissionaire services has been discontinued at the following bases or stations: CFB Clinton; CFS Cobourg; CFB Gimli; CFB Rivers; CFS Coverdale; CFS LaMacaza; 32 CFAD/CFB Gagetown; Camp Picton/CFB Kingston; NRHQ Yellowknife; Bouchard Det/CFB Montreal.

———

Note: The reasons for discontinuance of the use of commissionaire services would be base closure and disposal, a reappraisal of security requirements or the inability of the Corps to provide the service.

GEOTHERMAL ENERGY FOR INDUSTRIAL AND MUNICIPAL USE

Question No. 3,118—Mr. Forrestall:

Is the government currently undertaking any definitive studies of the advantages or otherwise in terms of cost benefit analysis of geothermal energy for industrial and municipal use and, if so (a) to what level has funding been appropriated for this fiscal year (b) what is the present status of such studies (c) on what dates can they be expected to be made public?

Mr. John M. Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several departments as follows: No.

CHARLOTTETOWN AIRPORT

Question No. 3,132—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. (a) On what date is it intended to erect a new terminal building at the Charlottetown Airport (b) what are the dimensions and estimated cost of such a building?

2. (a) In the past five years, what extensions have been made to the Charlottetown Airport (b) what was the cost and purpose of each such extension (c) to what extent was the seating capacity increased by each extension?

3. What new land has been acquired for the Charlottetown Airport?

4. What is the present seating capacity of the Airport passenger terminal building?

5. What is the total passenger load capacity of the planes using the Airport on a daily scheduled basis?

6. What is the capacity of the public parking area at the Charlottetown Airport?

7. Is it the view of the Department of Transport that the present seating capacity of the passenger lounge is adequate to the needs of the travelling public?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Current discussions between ministry and provincial officials are keyed to the need for a new air terminal building for the 1978/79 fiscal year. (b) Plans are not yet sufficiently advanced to define the dimensions and estimated costs; the new terminal building must be located in another area of the airport and internal and adjunctive needs have not been fully assessed.

2. (a) In the past five years the internal capacity of the air terminal building was expanded; in 1970 this involved relocation/expansion of EPA offices, ticket counters, baggage handling areas, washrooms and waiting rooms; in 1971 passenger baggage reclaim and waiting room areas were again expanded; in 1973 the waiting room areas were added to and baggage reclaim area modifications are currently proceeding. (b) The costs of the 1970 expansion were $87,924; for 1971 the costs amounted to $48,158 and 1973 expenditures are $67,656; the over-all purpose was to progressively expand the air terminal building to meet increasing needs for more space and passenger/carrier conveniences. (c) The seating capacity was increased by 57 in the period 1970-73.

3. The latest acquisition of land adjacent to the present airport property was purchased from a Major McRae on May 5, 1971. Parcel 57, deed 71426, and consisting of 39.42 acres, was purchased for $18,000.

4. The present seating capacity of the airline terminal building is 87.

5. The Dart Herald, with a seating arrangement of 41, and the Boeing 737, with passenger carrying configuration of 109, are using the airport on a daily scheduled basis. EPA operates both types of aircraft. They operate nine arrivals and nine departures daily at Charlottetown Airport of which five flights are Dart Herald and four flights are Boeing 737, providing a total passenger load capacity of 641 seats on arriving and 641 on departing aircraft assuming full loads.

6. The public parking area at the airport presently consists of 64 spaces for long-term parking and 81 spaces for short-term parking privileges. Total capacity of the public parking area is 145.

7. Seating capacity for the passenger lounge is adequate to meet the normal needs of the travelling public based on present levels of traffic.

POWELL RIVER HARBOUR OPERATIONS—GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES AND REVENUES, 1946-1973

Question No. 3,134—Mr. Olaussen:

How much did the government (a) spend on (b) receive from harbour operations in Powell River since 1946?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): (a) $485,799.40; (b) $300,268.30.

CNR—SALE OF BESSBOROUGH HOTEL, SASKATOON

Question No. 3,160—Mr. Gleave:

1. On what date was the sale by CNR of the Bessborough Hotel in Saskatoon completed?

2. What was the sale price?

3. What was the book value?

4. What were the names of the purchasers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): The management of the Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. May 29, 1973.

2. It is not the company's practice nor policy to discuss terms and conditions of transactions it may have with other parties.

3. $4,276,353.

4. Management Associates Limited.

HOUSING—CORA BROWN-MacDONALD SUBDIVISIONS AT VANCOUVER INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 3,166—Mr. Reynolds:

1. For the month of September, 1973 (a) what was the total amount of rents received by the Department of Transport for houses rented in the Cora Brown-MacDonald Subdivisions at Vancouver International Airport (b) how many houses were rented (c) what was the monthly management fee paid to the rental agents (d) what amount, if any, was paid or allotted by the Department for maintenance or repairs to any of the homes?

2. What procedures are followed by the Department to ensure that the homes are maintained in a good state of repair and fit for habitation and comply with health and safety standards?

3. For the month of September, 1973, what was the total amount of fire insurance required to be carried by the tenants on the homes?

4. Was the house located in the MacDonald Subdivision at 463 Tapp Road destroyed by fire on September 5, 1973 and, if so (a) has the Department made a claim against the insurers (b) has the Department ascertained the cause of the fire?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) $7,828.50; (b) 75 houses; (c) $782.85; (d) no amount was paid or allotted by the department for maintenance or repairs to any of the homes as this is a responsibility of the tenant under the terms of his lease.

2. The rental agent is required to advise tenants of any repairs that may require attention as part of his duties. The Health Inspector for the Corporation of the Township of Richmond carries out routine health and safety inspections.

3. $1,284,000.

4. The house located at 463 Tapp Road was partially destroyed by fire on September 5, 1973. (a) The department has made a claim against the insurers. (b) The fire was believed to have been caused by a fault in the electrical wiring.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—ADMINISTRATIVE BUDGET

Question No. 3,167—Mr. Roy (Timmins):

1. (a) What was the administrative budget for offices, travel and personnel of the Canada Development Corporation for the fiscal year 1972-73 (b) what is the projected operating budget for the current fiscal year (c) for each of these years, what is the budget breakdown dor (i) total wages and salaries (ii) office expenditures (iii) administrative costs?

2. How many persons were employed by the Canada Development Corporation for (a) the fiscal year 1972-73 (b) the current year?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. Pursuant to section 31 of the Canada Development Corporation Act the CDC is not an agent of Her Majesty or a Crown Corporation. Public disclosure of information concerning the internal operations of the corporation is at the discretion of the CDC board of directors. In connection with the above questions the CDC's latest Annual Report mentions that, as at May 1973, the Corporation's staff numbered 15 persons. However no information is available on the corporation's internal administrative budget.

BREAKWATER COSTS AT TURKEY POINT, MARY TOD ISLAND AREA

Question No. 3,188—Mr. McKinnon:

1. How much money was expended by the government on breakwaters and land-fill in the Turkey Point, Mary Tod Island area in the past ten years?

2. Does the government have any control over expansion of commercial facilities now provided sheltered waters due to the breakwaters?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. $173,501.

2. Yes.

Question No. 3,189—Mr. McKinnon:

How much money was expended by the government on the approaches to Rock Bay Inner Harbour Victoria to provide access for the exclusive use of Ocean Cement Co.?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): A contract for dredging the approach channel to the Ocean Cement Company's barge loading facilities in Rock Bay was awarded by the department on April 16, 1973 in the amount of $93,325 on a 50/50 cost-sharing basis. The final payment has not been made to date on this contract; however, the department's share to date amounts to $36,025.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT BANK—LOAN APPLICATIONS IN CONSTITUENCY OF ELGIN

Question No. 3,191—Mr. Wise:

1. How many applications were filed by businessmen in the constituency of Elgin for Industrial Development Bank loans for each year 1970, 1971 and 1972 and, of these, how many were approved?

2. What was the total amount of money loaned to businessmen in the constituency of Elgin by the Industrial Development Bank of the years 1970, 1971 and 1972?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): 1 and 2. The Industrial Development Bank does not maintain statistical information by constituency. However, it does publish such information by province in its annual report.

NEW FEDERAL BUILDING, STEPHENVILLE, NFLD.

Question No. 3,203—Mr. Marshall:

1. What staff will be required as maintenance personnel at the new federal building in Stephenville, Newfoundland, after completion?

2. What is the intention of the government as to retention or disposal of the present post office building in Stephenville, Newfoundland, after completion of the new federal building?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): 1. Maintenance and janitorial service is to be provided on a contractual basis. It is expected that the contractor will hire a minimum of two part-time employees.

2. The present post office building is to be retained as accommodation for various government departments and agencies.

PURPOSE OF TRIP MADE BY ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT, 1971-72

Question No. 3,222—Mr. Knight:

1. In the fiscal year 1971-72, what was the purpose of the trip made by A. D. Hunt, Assistant Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (salary range: $28,000-$35,000), to Moscow, Warsaw, Copenhagen, Glasgow, Boston ($1,492)?

2. In what month of the year was this trip made?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The purpose of the trip to Moscow was to accompany the minister on his visit to the U.S.S.R. On the return trip he visited the Ministry for Greenland Affairs in Copenhagen. It was necessary to change planes in Warsaw for the trip to Copenhagen. On August 10, 1971, Mr. Hunt proceeded on annual leave. On expiry of his leave he departed for Canada from Glasgow and arranged and paid for his own transportation between London and Glasgow. No additional expenses were incurred by the Crown due to the departure for Canada from Glasgow rather than Copenhagen. The round trip ticket also included stopover in London without extra charge. As indicated below the trip to Boston was a separate trip to address the Boston World Affairs Organization. The cost of this trip was $174.28 which was included in the total of $1,492.

2. Trip to Moscow made from July 19, 1971 to August 9, 1971. Trip to Boston made January 25-26, 1972.

Question No. 3,306—Mr. Fairweather:

In preparing Canada's trade figures, are goods in transit and for which export permits are required added to the export totals?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: Goods moving in transit through Canada and clearly identified as such are excluded from Canada's trade statistics. Goods which have been imported into Canada and are subsequently re-exported are included in import and export statistics whether or not an export permit may be required.

RIDEAU CANAL HEADQUARTERS—BUILDING CONSTRUCTION, ELGIN, ONTARIO

Question No. 3,310—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Did the Rideau Canal Headquarters office of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development on or about November 8 advise the office of the Member of Leeds that the Department was levelling and dressing-up land in the area of Elgin, Ontario and that no building construction would be taking place at this location?

2. What is the name and title of the official who gave such information?

3. (a) Is the government planning to build a building of approximately 4,000 sq. ft. at this location (b) was the office of the Member for Leeds told otherwise and, if so, for what reason?

4. Is it the intention of the Department to announce the construction of such a building in spring of 1974 and to call tenders on such a building at that time?

5. Did members of the Rideau Canal office discuss this situation with members of the news media and, if so, on what date, with what newspapers, who were the government employees involved and was it stated to the Gananoque Reporter that such a building was planned despite denial having been made to the office for the Member for Leeds?

6. Was the announcement of such construction in the spring of 1974 planned to coincide with the announcement of the federal general election in spring of 1974?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. On or about November 8 a member of the staff of Mr. Cossitt's office phoned the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and enquired as to what was taking place on departmental lands at Elgin, Ontario. I am informed that, in response to the inquiry, a canal employee advised that the land was being cleared and no mention was made of proposed or impending construction.

2. Mr. L. W. Clark, Acting Operations Superintendent, Canals Division, Parks Canada.

3. (a) Yes; (b) no.

4. A tender for the construction of a division maintenance building at this site has been called.

5. I am informed that, on or about November 15, the Deputy Superintending Engineer of the Rideau Canal advised an employee of the Gananoque Record and Times that the site was being cleared to ascertain soil conditions and rock location. The canal employee disclosed no information with respect to a proposed building.

6. No.

HYDRAULIC MODEL STUDIES REPORT—OAK BAY, VANCOUVER ISLAND, B.C.

Question No. 3,311—Mr. McKinnon:

What was the cost of the Hydraulic Model Studies Report on Harbour Protection and Foreshore Erosion, Oak Bay, Vancouver Island, British Columbia for the Department of Public Works by Western Canada Hydraulic Laboratories, Ltd., Port Coquitlam, British Columbia?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): The cost for the Hydraulic Model Studies Report was $37,800.

EDUCATION SUPPORT—CANADIAN AND FOREIGN STUDENTS AT CANADIAN UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 3,314—Mr. Stackhouse:

1. What is the average annual operating cost per university student to the government?

2. How many foreign students are studying at Canadian universities?

3. Does the government contribute to their education on the same basis as that of Canadian students?

4. What is the average annual operating cost per foreign student to the government?

Hon. Hugh James Faulkner (Secretary of State): 1. According to estimates for fiscal year 1973-74, the federal contribution toward operating expenditures for post-secondary education under Part VI of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1972, will amount to approximately $1,067 million, of which approximately $664 million will be the amount of the federal contribution attributable to the operating expenditures of colleges and universities. In addition to this contribution, which takes the form of a combination of tax and cash transfers, the federal government supports post-secondary education in Canada through other programs, including student assistance; loans, scholarships, fellowships and provision of research funds. It is estimated that enrolments in Canadian colleges and universities in 1973-74 will total approximately 318,000 full-time and 157,000 part-time students.

2. As reported by Statistics Canada (Education in Canada, 1973, pp. 162-163), 3.9 per cent of the 274,963 full-time undergraduate university and college students in 1970-71 were residents of countries other than Canada; 35.1 per cent of the 33,172 full-time graduate students in 1970-71 were citizens of countries other than Canada.

3. The federal contributions under Part VI of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1972, are calculated on the basis of the eligible operating expenditures for post-secondary education and not on the basis of enrolments or the composition of the student body.

4. Since the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1972, does not require provincial governments to report to the federal government the amount of operating expenditures attributable to foreign students studying in Canada, the information required to calculate the average annual operating cost per foreign student to the government is not available.

TAXES COLLECTED BY FEDERAL, PROVINCIAL AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENTS, 1970-72

Question No. 3,317—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. In each year 1970, 1971 and 1972 what was the total collected in taxes by federal, provincial and municipal governments?

2. For each of these years, what percentage of the Gross National Product does each total represent?

Mr. Herb Breau (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that: 1. On a national account basis in millions of dollars:

Government Level	1970	1971	1972
Federal	14,768	16,368	18,296
Provincial	9,400	10,442	11,608
Local	3,825	4,067	4,308

2. Percentage of each of the above respectively of GNP:

Government Level	1970	1971	1972
Federal	17.2	17.5	17.7
Provincial	11.0	11.2	11.2
Local	4.5	4.4	4.2

SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS ACT—NUMBER OF APPLICATIONS RECEIVED FROM CONSTITUENCY OF LEEDS

Question No. 3,354—Mr. Cossitt:

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSITION OF ARMED FORCES MEMBERS ATTACHED TO NORAD FOLLOWING SPECIAL ALERT ORDERED BY PRESIDENT NIXON ON OCTOBER 25

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You can't beat class, can you, Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Now that we have the preliminaries over, Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Would he advise the House whether or not members of the Canadian Armed Forces who are also members of the integrated NORAD command automatically went on the alert technically known as "Defcon III" when President Nixon ordered Defcon III on October 25?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised the House closer to that date that the Canadian forces were not put on alert.

An hon. Member: What were they doing in the mountains?

Mr. Richardson: It was the American component of NORAD that was called to alert and not any part of the Canadian component of NORAD.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that is a strange answer following the statement made by the Canadian general on the NORAD staff last night on the CBC television news. Can the minister explain to the House how a vitally important and integrated part of an operation such as NORAD can operate with half on alert and the other half not on alert?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether a question asked in those terms is in order. Perhaps the hon. member might rephrase the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Semi-alert.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I will ask the minister how it is possible for an operation in which we are participating and on which the safety of this continent depends, to operate with half its personnel alerted and the other half not alerted?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the alert status of the Canadian forces cannot be changed without the authority of the Canadian government. We were at no time requested to change that status. We were advised that the United States intended to elevate the status of their alert, and that was all. We were advised that they were doing this, but we were not asked to change the status of our alert in any way.

Mr. Hees: If this is our idea of co-operation in NORAD under our continental commitment, I would ask the Prime Minister whether this is an example of the way the government is trying to run the affairs of this country?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence when we were advised as a nation that the continental air defence command of the United States had gone on alert? In view of the fact that this automatically involved Canadian troops, were we advised before or after the fact?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, it was 18 minutes past two o'clock on October 25 that the chairman of the joint chiefs of staff of the United States advised his counterpart in Canada, the Canadian chief of staff, General Dextraze, that he was moving the alert status of the United States forces to Defcon Position III—that is, Defence Condition

III. He specifically exempted us. He was simply advising us of this action on the part of the American air defence.

Mr. Rowland: What were the minister's instructions to the Canadian personnel in NORAD on receipt of that information?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, there was no need to give any instructions. The information was there. They were aware of the information that had been provided to us but there was no need to give additional instructions.

Mr. Rowland: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member wishes to ask a third supplementary. The hon. member will be recognized for that purpose, following which the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East and the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In light of the fact that Canada was not consulted in advance of the United States ordering its forces to a Defcon III position, and in light of the fact that we were advised only after the fact, will the Prime Minister give an undertaking to the House that he will take the necessary steps to protect Canadian sovereignty in the future by indicating to the United States that on the termination of the current NORAD agreement we will not again agree to its renewal in light of the present situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into this question of consultation on several occasions and I am satisfied that with some improvements this system can and does work well. Of course, consultation only applies when both countries under NORAD are going into a different Defcon. The situation does not apply when the Americans with their own troops, whether it be under the umbrella of NORAD or in some other area, decide to change the defence conditions of those troops. As the minister just explained, Canadian defence forces were not involved in any way in this alert which was applied by the Americans to the Americans, and surely we would not want the American government to have to consult us when they are going to do something with their own troops.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence because obviously there is a very bad misunderstanding as exemplified by the views expressed last night on national television. I would ask the minister whether or not this exclusion or exemption from the alert applied only to the North Bay set-up or in fact applied to all of the bases where nuclear instruments are being held?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, not only was the Canadian component of NORAD not put on alert, but NORAD itself was not on alert because NORAD does not exist without that Canadian component. It was the American air defence component of NORAD that was on alert.

• (1440)

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of National Defence stating now that the Canadian forces were not on alert in all areas with the exception of, I think, district 22 in the Yukon? Is he stating that Canadians were not on the alert at that time?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I am making clear that the Canadian forces were not on alert and that Canada was not asked to go on alert. There were some individuals in integrated staff positions who in the early stages would have been involved in the normal course of their duties, but they were not formally on alert and the country was not on alert.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond on a supplementary and then attempt to complete the first round of questioning and return to further supplementaries on this subject by recognizing the hon. member for Trinity and others.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Defence how much farther does he intend to go with demoralizing the Canadian forces?

LABOUR RELATIONS

ONTARIO BILL RESPECTING SCHOOLTEACHERS—STUDY BY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Have the minister and his officials studied the Ontario legislation Bill 274, and, if so, does the minister consider it to be a form of forced labour legislation in view of the fact that it retroactively forbids an employee resigning his job?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we have not as yet formally studied that bill.

Mr. Blackburn: Mr. Speaker, would the minister assure the House that he will do so and inform the government of Ontario forthwith that this measure contravenes basic civil liberties as embodied in the Canadian Bill of Rights?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we will no doubt be looking at this legislation as we do all provincial legislation in the ordinary course.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC CLAIM FOR REIMBURSEMENT BASED ON USE OF ITS OWN POLICE FORCE RATHER THAN RCMP

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General.

Could he clearly tell the House whether he intends to review his position concerning the claim of the Quebec Minister of Justice concerning the refund of considerable amounts as compensation since Quebec has its own police force, while it generally contributes to the financing of the RCMP?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. Our department has offered all of the provinces equally the services of the RCMP. We have no program to provide compensation in place of police services.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSITION OF ARMED FORCES MEMBERS ATTACHED TO NORAD FOLLOWING SPECIAL ALERT ORDERED BY PRESIDENT NIXON ON OCTOBER 25

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Following the notification of the chief of the defence staff at 18 minutes after two that Defcon III was being ordered, how much later was it that the chief of defence staff notified the minister, and what instructions did the minister give the chief of defence staff at that time?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered part of that question. As there was no action to be taken by the Canadian Armed Forces, I was not advised until normal working hours, which is about 7.30 the next morning for me.

Mr. Hellyer: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will be recognized for a last supplementary on the subject.

Mr. Hellyer: Do I understand the minister correctly that he is suggesting that the chief of the defence staff did not bother to advise him of the American action and consequently the government of Canada was totally unaware during all of those hours (a) that their forces were not on the alert and (b) whether or not they should be?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I have said I was advised a few hours after the call in the morning, and there was no action to be taken at that time.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

GOAL OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING RATE OF INFLATION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell us whether or not the government has accepted the recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada that for policy making purposes we should accept a goal in respect of inflation of having an inflation rate of about half of one per cent less than that of our trading nations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Council of Canada indicated a series of goals which would be the aim for the Canadian economy in the period of the next three years. I have indicated that I consider those goals as a whole as a challenge for the government to fulfil and as a challenge to the private sector. In that sense we hope we will outperform over the long run most other industrialized societies. This is the aim of the government. We are glad that the Economic Council did set forth these goals, but the Canadian people must be cautioned not to take any of these goals in isolation.

Mr. Gillies: Am I to conclude from that answer that the government is willing to accept an inflation rate in Canada of 7½ per cent or 8 per cent per year if that is the rate some of our trading nations have?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the goal we will try to achieve will be the set of norms put forward by the Economic Council of Canada. It might mean in some years doing better and in some years doing worse, but on the specific question of inflation we do hope to continue to outperform over the long run the other countries of the western industrial world.

POSSIBLE MODIFICATION BY MINISTER OF FINANCE OF FORECAST IN LIGHT OF ENERGY SHORTAGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. He has been asked questions about the possible effect on Canada of the energy shortage among our trading partners. Has he now had an opportunity to analyse the forecasted effects upon the economies of our trading partners in the coming months of 1974 and as a result has he seen fit to modify in any way the forecast previously made by his department with regard to our own economy in the coming months?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as I said last week to one of the hon. gentleman's colleagues, while there might well be some negative effects on the economy as a result of the world energy shortage, it was still premature to base an economic policy upon them because at this stage there is no way of knowing what the shortfall or shortage will be.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the position of the Minister of Finance that the general economic stance he took earlier in the year and continued through the year is still the appropriate stance for the government to take in view of the anticipated slowdown predicted in the case of some of our major trading partners? Does the minister still regard this stance as the appropriate one, or is he starting to put in place any measures to protect Canadian working people particularly against some of these secondary effects?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am, of course, watching the situation closely on a day by day basis, but at the moment the economy is still operating at close to or at capacity, and it is still the view of the government that the fiscal stance is an appropriate one at this time.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the fact the minister said last week that we must not minimize the effects of this and, on the other hand, that we must not exaggerate them, when will the minister tell us what this means, those ordinary Canadians who cannot tell just exactly what it means, on the one hand, not to minimize something and, on the other hand, not to exaggerate it, in view of the severe consequences that may be felt by the Canadian people unless the government launches precautionary moves?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has quoted me correctly. I want to say to him that until the facts become clearer it would be premature to change the stance of the economic policy of the government. I want to suggest to him, in terms he might find un-Canadian, that I would prefer to base policy on facts when those facts are known.

GOVERNMENT STEPS TO OFFSET INCREASING PRICES OF CONSUMER COMMODITIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact the wholesale price of sugar in Canada has doubled in the past month and this will be passed on in the form of considerably increased retail prices, and in view of the effect this will have on the cost of food in Canada which is already largely influenced by the energy situation, I ask the minister what steps the government proposes to take to offset these increase factors relative to the cost of food in Canada which is already running at the rate of increase of 18 per cent per year.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is aware of the earlier Tariff Board decision on sugar and its refining in Canada. I am reanalysing that decision in view of the present price structure.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE POLICY ON SUGAR

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Agriculture, by way of a supplementary question, whether, in view of the very serious situation regarding the sugar market and the effect this will have on the cost of living in Canada, he is now prepared, after two years, to bring in his sugar policy?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, my sugar policy is not two years delayed; and by the time the two years are up you can be sure we will have a new sugar beet industry and a new sugar refining industry in western Ontario and a policy for all of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will see the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby on a supplementary, and then the hon. member for South Shore.

SURVEY OF COMPANIES ON CONSEQUENCES OF ENERGY CRISIS—PUBLICATION OF FINDINGS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Two weeks ago the minister indicated that his department was conducting a survey of over 1,000 corporations with respect to the effects of the energy crisis. Is the minister now prepared to inform the House of the results of his department's analysis of the data thus obtained, and also is he prepared to table that information for the benefit of the House?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned on that occasion, this study is a form of continuing review and analysis. It is also a form of contingency planning. I do not plan to table any over-all statement on this analysis before the House rises.

GOVERNMENT PLANS FOR OVERLAND MOVEMENT OF OIL FOLLOWING CLOSING OF SEAWAY—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the Lake Ontario section of the St. Lawrence Seaway will officially close on December 20, is the minister prepared at this time to announce any specific government actions and programs relating to overland movement of oil now moving through the seaway by tankers?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have already stated to the House that the seaway will close on December 20. It is not possible to postpone its closing. At the same time, we are preparing to move oil by train and truck.

Mr. Crouse: In view of the special dependency of the people of Atlantic Canada and Quebec on oil now moving through the St. Lawrence Seaway, can the minister give his assurance that the overland movement of oil will be in place by December 20?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): The problem is as follows, Mr. Speaker. Everything must be ready to meet the needs of eastern Canada as soon as they will be felt.

● (1500)

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he completed an assessment of the need for an overland oil transportation system and, if so, what specific new programs will he be implementing to assure the movement of oil by this route?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions both with my colleague's department and with the oil companies with regard to the possibility of movement through this area. This matter is now being defined a little further. What is clear is that there may well be substantial additional investment required to undertake any movement in quantity.

EXPORT CONTROLS ON REFINED PETROLEUM PRODUCTS FROM UNITED STATES—NEGOTIATIONS TO EXCLUDE CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of the announcement by the United States energy czar, Mr. William Simon, to the effect that beginning last Friday export controls would be placed on refined petroleum products from the United States. In spite of the fact Mr. Simon hinted that Canada might not be included, I ask the minister whether he has been in touch with Mr. Simon or any of the authorities in the United States to ensure that Canada will not be included in view of the fact we export to the United States about 28 times the quantity of refined petroleum products that they export to us?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian representative in Washington with specific responsibility for the oil and gas area has been in touch with the United States administration to that effect.

Mr. Douglas: First, has the minister had any assurance from the American government? Second, since I understand that ARCO, the marketing company for Atlantic Richfield at Cherry Point, has informed British Columbia customers that there will be no shipments from December 16 until January 1 and after that date shipments will be cut to 80 per cent, is the minister aware of this and is he or the National Energy Board taking up this matter? I ask the question because this action could have serious consequences for the lower mainland area of British Columbia and disastrous consequences for the people of Vancouver Island.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing this to my attention.

OIL PIPELINE EXTENSION TO MONTREAL—CONSIDERATION OF NORTHERN ONTARIO ROUTE

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It relates to the construction of the proposed pipeline to Montreal. In view of the recent assumptions by people in the news media that the line will be built from Sarnia, and in view of the interest shown in the past by the Northern Ontario members of the treasury benches in having this pipeline built through Northern Ontario from Sault Ste. Marie, would the minister indicate whether serious consideration is still being given to building that pipeline from Sault Ste. Marie through Northern Ontario and, if so, will the decision be announced in a very short period of time?

[Mr. Crouse.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the possibility of the route from Sault Ste. Marie is indeed a very serious one, and I hope we will be able to make an announcement on this in the very near future.

PENITENTIARIES

TIMETABLE FOR PHASING OUT WOMEN'S PRISON, KINGSTON

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. With regard to the discussions that he had with his provincial counterparts last week, would the minister say if any timetable was established for the phasing out of the women's prison in Kingston?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, there was no timetable, but the phasing out was based on an agreement we made with the provinces for the exchange of services and facilities. Under that agreement we hope to sign individual agreements with the different provinces to place women inmates in their institutions. As we sign them we will be able to phase out the women's penitentiary and probably provide other facilities for those left with us.

NATIVE INMATES—TIME OF SPECIAL CONFERENCE ON CORRECTIONS—PARTICIPATION BY INDIANS

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the same meetings last week can the minister tell the House when the special conference on corrections relating to native people will be held and if he intends to consult with native leaders prior to that time to arrange for their assistance in working out rehabilitative programs?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, it was decided to have a conference on native inmates some time early next summer. A steering committee was set up under the chairmanship of the deputy minister for Manitoba to plan the conference, and it was decided that we would approach the Indian people to participate in this conference as well.

DISCUSSION WITH PREMIERS OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES OF MEASURES TO OFFSET RISING PETROLEUM PRODUCT PRICES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he had contact with the Atlantic provinces premiers over the weekend with regard to possible joint federal-provincial measures to cope with the effects of rapidly rising prices for petroleum products on eastern Canadian provincial economies, and can the minister say if there has yet been a level set by the federal government beyond which it will not permit prices to rise in that area of Canada without relief measures being introduced?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The answer to both parts of the question is no.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a brief supplementary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Having regard to the special and serious consequences of the energy crisis on eastern Canada, has the minister made any specific proposals to cabinet to help mitigate these effects, for example, with respect to Newfoundland where the price of home heating oil has risen from 19 cents to over 40 cents a gallon in a comparatively short period of time?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am constantly making representations to my colleagues with regard to the betterment of conditions in Atlantic Canada, and you can take it for granted that I am doing so on this issue as well.

If so, has there been any exchange of information at the ministerial level and to officials of the Canadian Commercial Corporation as to success?

POSSIBILITY OF PRICE CONTROLS ON ALUMINUM, NICKEL AND OTHER RAW MATERIALS IN LIGHT OF COMPANY PROFITS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the third quarter profits for corporations have gone up 48 per cent this year and profits of primary industries have gone up some 105 per cent, is the minister contemplating a policy of expanding selective price controls on products such as aluminum, nickel and other raw materials produced in this country?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we might allow the hon. member a supplementary question, and then I will see the hon. member for Lincoln, followed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain.

Mr. Nystrom: In view of the tremendous problems in some of these areas, could the minister tell us whether he is contemplating the possibility of implementing an export tax on such items as aluminum, nickel and copper?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if that were so, this would not be the time to announce it.

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION OR ELIMINATION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Mr. Kenneth J. Higson (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware of the sudden and sharp increase in the price of building materials during the last month to six weeks, presumably as a result of the petroleum problems which we are suffering, with the result that the construction cost of an average dwelling has increased by between $1,000 and $1,200? If so, would the minister propose very soon either the reduction or elimination of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, my information is that it is a question of the heavy crude involved in this situation. The board is expecting an increase in the export of heavy crude in this current month and, indeed, has sent to the various normal export licensees proposals, for the first time, to differentiate between light and heavy crude in order to put this Saskatchewan product on a sounder basis as far as export is concerned.

ALLEGED ANTI-ESPIONAGE GROUP IN QUEBEC REPORTING TO PROVINCIAL MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Would the minister care to comment on whether he or his colleague, the Minister of Justice, or the government in general have any information on the alleged 12-man anti-espionage group that reports to the minister of justice of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no information with respect to that group.

Mr. Lawrence: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might ask a question. He will appreciate that what he is doing now is asking the minister to comment. Comments should be made by way of statement on motions but if the hon. member is seeking information he should ask a question tending in that direction.

Mr. Lawrence: I did ask for information, Mr. Speaker. If the minister has no information on it, because anti-espionage is not normally a matter handled by provincial law enforcement agencies I wonder if the minister would make an investigation and report to the House?

[Mr. Higson.]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I shall do that, although it is a little vague as to exactly what group the member has in mind.

Mr. Forrestall: Is there more than one?

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION RESPECTING INTRODUCTION OF MOTION TO REJECT SENATE AMENDMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this question could be put to the Minister of Justice but it might be better if I were to address it to the Prime Minister or to the government House leader. In view of the fact the government's responsibility, indeed its answerability, is to the elected members of this House of Commons, and in view of the fact the provision that the Senate wants to cut out of the wiretapping bill is one on which this House voted precisely, is the government considering introducing an appropriate motion for the rejection of the Senate amendment to Bill C-176?

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Bill C-220 was passed to increase the annuities paid to ex-servicemen in order to help them meet the rising cost of living. The answer given to my question No. 3206 at page 8664 of Hansard indicates that this amendment will apply only to 3.6 per cent of retired servicemen. Would the President of the Treasury Board now consider sponsoring further amendments to the act so that it will apply to more than a small fraction of ex-servicemen and women?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to look at that representation.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Not in the near future, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): On December 4 the minister issued a press release. I should like to know whether the minister can let the House and the country know whether, before the decision as announced in the press release was taken, consideration was given by him and by the cabinet to the almost equal trade-off possibilities, in the case of Nimrod, of balancing off the cost of acquiring the Nimrod against the sale of CANDU reactors to Britain to give us access in this field not only to Britain but to the European Economic Community?

Mr. Richardson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, very careful consideration was given to all possible offsets in the case of all competing manufacturing companies.

INQUIRY WHETHER IN FACT SAUDI ARABIA HAS IMPOSED EMBARGO ON EXPORTS OF OIL TO CANADA

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister now in a position to confirm that there is a de facto embargo on shipments of oil to Canada from Saudi Arabia?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we are receiving two conflicting sets of information. From our diplomatic representatives and from the government of Saudi Arabia and from the international company there is the government denial that Canada is under embargo, but Aramco, the oil company, insists that we are.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister confirm that no oil has been shipped to Canada from Saudi Arabia since October 19, and that the shipment he referred to the other day as having been received by Irving was in fact en route on or before October 19?

USE OF CANADIAN SHIPS TO MOVE WESTERN OIL TO EASTERN CANADA

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question might properly be directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. What I am trying to get at is the registry of ships, namely, where we get them, the number of ships, the registry and the flag under which they are sailing. I am speaking of those ships now engaged in the movement of oil from the west coast to the east coast of Canada. Can the minister advise the House whether or not any Canadian ships are involved in this transshipment? If so, how many? If there are none, are we doing anything to encourage Canadian bottoms, Canadian flag ships, to move this oil from west to east?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, that question should be directed to the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the attention of the Minister of Transport, as the Minister of Supply and Services has suggested I should direct my question to him. Can the Minister of Transport indicate to the House whether any of the ships engaged in the movement of oil out of Alberta through the Trans Mountain pipeline and thence to the east coast of Canada are Canadian-registered vessels? If none of this oil is moving in Canadian-registered vessels, what are the plans or intentions of the government to encourage or to secure Canadian ships for this particular purpose?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in principle we try to encourage—besides this is what was decided after a meeting with the Maritimes premiers—owners of vessels registered in Canada.

I had in hand last week a list of vessels used and copy of their registration for the shipment of oil. Maybe I could bring him such a list tomorrow. About ten vessels are involved but unfortunately I would be unable to give him their names by heart.

[English]

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We are running short of time. I will recognize the hon. member on a supplementary but the hon. member for Leeds is rising on a point of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, a moment ago I directed a question to the Postmaster General. I believe it is a legitimate question as it concerns a matter of concern to all Canadians and to members of this House. On two occasions since I asked the question the Postmaster General has risen in his place in an obvious attempt to answer it. I felt it was a legitimate question seeking information which it was within my rights to request.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member can ask a question if he follows the rules, but he knows he cannot ask a question that makes charges or allegations. It is easy to ask a question without using that kind of approach, as I am sure the hon. member knows.

REQUIREMENT THAT RAILWAYS PROVIDE PROVINCES WITH INFORMATION ON COSTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the western provinces in July were led to understand with the agreement of the Minister of Transport that they would be able to obtain information relating to the costs of the railways, the CNR and the CPR, and as the minister has given the CNR and CPR an ultimatum to supply such information within ten days, can the minister inform the House whether the two railways have informed him that they will or will not supply the information?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I stated last week that the railway companies had not yet been requested by the Canadian Transport Commission to provide this information. I have contacted the railway companies directly and they have until December 21 to comply, but no reply has been received as yet.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this is a very serious charge which was laid a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt). I can assure him that the award of contracts partly to a Montreal firm and partly to a Vancouver firm was based on their competence. The unqualified success of the program bears witness to their competence since the production of coins cannot keep up with the demand.

[English]

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I did not, as the minister has stated—I feel I have to correct this—make an allegation. I asked a question. That is an entirely different situation. I feel I am certainly within my rights to ask a question that involves the expenditure of public funds without the calling of tenders or comparable presentations from other companies. I believe the minister was quite incorrect to make the charge that I made an allegation. He must feel there is something wrong or he would not have used the word "allegation". He must have a guilty conscience.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ALLOCATION BOARD, MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF SUPPLIES AND RATIONING OF CONTROLLED PRODUCTS

The House resumed, from Friday, December 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-236, to provide a means to conserve the supplies of petroleum products within Canada during periods of national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada and to amend the National Energy Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, on Friday at four o'clock I was about one-third of the way through my speech. Perhaps I might clarify some of my remarks. I had been speaking on clause 35 of the bill. As the title suggests, the provisions of the bill are to be invoked only if there is a national energy emergency. I would therefore question the propriety of clause 35(4) which reads:

> An order under subsection (3) shall be laid before parliament not later than fifteen days after it has been made, or, if parliament is not then sitting, within the first fifteen days next thereafter that parliament is sitting.

It is my contention that if parliament is not sitting when the emergency is announced, parliament should be recalled immediately. There are precedents for such action. Earlier this year when the railway unions went on strike there was a national emergency. Part of the country was in danger as a result of lack of transportation and parliament was recalled immediately. I think that if an energy emergency should arise in this country, the situation would be important enough to justify the immediate recall of parliament, when the matter could be debated. What better forum is there for debating such a matter than one in which 264 members of parliament can explain the situation in the various areas of the country? For that matter, even if parliament is sitting when the emergency arises I think the House should immediately deal with the emergency by debate and perhaps a vote should be taken on the question.

I have one question regarding the validity of the bill. I am referring to that part between clauses 1 to 10 inclusive. I am curious to know, as I am sure all members of the House are, why the energy allocation board should be made directly responsible to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and be controlled by him. I suggest the board would be more respected and more acceptable if it were an autonomous body and if it were available for consultation with the minister and the department as well as with private industry. Perhaps, if necessary, in the performance of its duties it could even consult with those with expertise in this field on my side of the House.

The wide-ranging powers requested in this bill with respect to alternate fuels are too autocratic and totally unnecessary. The provinces are trading their resources, one example being electrical power. That resource is being traded among the provinces now and I am sure they would be willing to do this automatically in a situation in which one province is short of such power.

Clauses 13 to 15 inclusive of this bill will lead, I believe, to complete control over all of Canada's non-renewable energy resources being vested in one man responsible to the federal government of Canada. The federal government's relations with the government of the province of Alberta are now, to put it mildly, strained. I would hate to see what would happen if the clauses of this bill were invoked should an emergency arise and the government had the authority to legislate the bill's provisions within the province even without consultation should they feel it necessary.

The province of Alberta and the oil industry have grown together over the years. By virtue of this development, the Alberta government has developed a great amount of knowledge and expertise in the field of energy and resource management. Consultation on energy matters with the provinces in general and Alberta in particular will be much more beneficial to the government than their present policy of consultation, which seems to be only with the New Democratic Party. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), by virtue of his Vancouver verbal attack on Premier Lougheed, has set the stage for confrontation at the forthcoming first ministers' conference in January. For the sake of all concerned, I urge the Prime Minister to change his approach from one of confrontation to one of consultation.

I have already voiced my objections to some of the requests made in this bill—for example, the severance of consultation with the provinces in energy matters and the granting of autocratic powers to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would also like to express my displeasure that the government would request this House, in the case of an energy crisis, to revoke the Combines Investigation Act, various transport acts and environmental considerations should any or all of these interfere with the invoking of Bill C-236.

If an emergency existed, surely all Canadians would pull together: transportation officials would do everything in their power to transport oil or other energy products across this country and there would not be any need to overcome all the legislation for which the provinces, the federal government and many citizens of this country have worked very hard. Surely that would be a bad precedent to set. I join with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in requesting that this government not allow a board of officials the right to destroy those regulations and statutes which the provinces and the federal government have enacted over the years in an attempt to make this country a better place for all. This is a dangerous precedent and one that should not be treated lightly by either side of the House.

Over the past few weeks a number of comments have been made about a national petroleum corporation. There will be a lot more talk about it—perhaps in the new session. Apparently, the objective of this corporation is to assist and participate in the research and development of non-renewable energy sources, particularly the oil sands. I wish to spend a little time on the topic of research. The government said it will commit $40 million over the next five years in the field of research, particularly on the Athabasca tar sands. I do not feel that is nearly enough to spend on research, particularly on the tar sands, when you compare it with what is being spent by some corporations in this area. For example, in the past couple of years Syncrude has put some $80 million into research. Texaco announced it will spend $40 million over the next two years. Great Canadian Oil Sands has spent millions of dollars in this field over the years. When it comes to research into the oil fields, $40 million is just not enough.

The United States government has said it will spend some $10 billion in the field of research into all forms of energy between now and 1980. That should be a precedent for this government. We should put in at least one-tenth of that amount, not only into energy usage of the conventional type but into other types of energy where we have some expertise. For example, there are the high-powered gas lasers to which the United States Secretary of State Henry Kissinger recently referred.

The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) will have a lot to tell us later, including in committee, about the Athabasca tar sands. Very few people are aware of the great expanse of Alberta which these sands cover. They are approximately 70 miles wide and 130 miles long. Syncrude will mine eight square miles to produce 125,000 barrels a day for the next 25 years. These sands contain approximately 600 billion barrels of oil in place. About half of this oil is either currently recoverable or shows promise of being recoverable in the not too distant future. The part that seems destined for earliest large-scale development is the 110 billion barrels of bitumen sufficiently close to the surface to be economically mined. These shallow deposits will produce sufficient bitumen to create 86 billion barrels of synthetic crude oil. Beyond there deposits there are some 200 billion barrels of high-grade bitumen in deeper formations which it may some day be possible to tap with in situ production techniques.

Thus, the tar sands represent an ultimate potential of more than 300 billion barrels of bitumen. This compares with total proved North American reserves of 56 billion barrels of conventional crude oil. The only comparable oil energy resources in North America are the oil shale deposits in the western United States. The oil shales may contain as much as 600 billion barrels of petroleum, but no feasible method of producing this oil has yet been commercially demonstrated.

In one of Mr. Lougheeds's speeches he states that one of the key portions of Alberta's energy policy is the development of new production both from conventional and oil sand sources. The discovery of replacement barrels of oil and natural gas is going to be more difficult and more expensive, so that the cash flows and incentives to explorers of these resources must be adequate.

In a presentation made to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on May 10, 1973, the Canadian Society of Petroleum Geologists noted the following conclusions: First, Canada has a very large potential physical resource base of fossil fuel reserves in petroleum and natural gas, in heavy oil sands and in coal. Less than 1 per cent of the estimated reserves in place have been produced today. Second, Canada has on hand a proven recoverable reserves supply of conventional oil and gas capable of meeting her near-term future needs of the next 10 to 15 years. Third, development of Canada's additional energy resources will necessitate increased costs. These resources will be technologically difficult to discover and develop, and costly to transport because of their remote location. Fourth, in order to provide significant contributions of hydrocarbons from the frontier exploration areas, synthetic oil from our heavy oils and processed products from our coal measures, long lead times of ten years or more are necessary because of the complex technology, logistics and over-all magnitude of these undertakings. In addition, a lead time of up to three years is necessary to acquire the materials and technological expertise to carry out the many areas of energy research and development which are required.

● (1530)

At the present time it is extremely difficult to get, not only staff with the necessary expertise but also the special machinery and equipment which are required. There is an unprecedented demand all over the world for the type of equipment needed in the development of energy, not only from oil but from uranium. Syncrude, for example, had to reach agreement with a West German firm several months ago in connection with the equipment needed for research and development this year. There are very few firms capable of providing the expertise and equipment required to develop the oil sands. If other companies, or even the government itself, were to attempt to get such equipment today they would have to wait two years before they could do so.

The standing committee heard evidence that money and incentives were required in connection with exploration. Mr. Speaker, there are people in my constituency in Alberta who, after working in the exploration field for years, are now going south to the United States to take advantage of the incentives provided in that country. In this connection I should like to quote as follows from a newspaper article which has come to my attention:

Concept Resources is one of 88 Canadian companies carrying out oil and gas exploration in foreign jurisdictions, mostly in the United States and the North Sea.

Three years ago, Mr. Darling, 44, decided to curtail his Canadian activity. Today, through a wholly-owned subsidiary, Concept Resources Inc. of Billings, Montana, he has shifted virtually all active exploration to Montana, Colorado, Washington and New Mexico.

"What I wonder is why other companies are staying in Canada," he says, adding he is convinced that other Canadian-based companies will follow his example. Government policies in Canada are taking away the incentives, whereas in the U.S. "I see nothing but roses".

Premier Lougheed has said it is critical we should realize that the life index of conventional oil and gas reserves is rapidly declining and that the rate of new discoveries of crude oil and natural gas has declined. Little success has been experienced in finding new oilfields in Alberta, the northern territories or offshore of the Maritimes. Unfortunately, recent federal actions have probably set back the discovery and development of alternate natural gas reserves in the Mackenzie Valley basin.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Schellenberger: If it were not for the Alberta oil sands, or tar sands as they are sometimes called, the long-term Canadian oil supply position would be a poor one. The Alberta oil sands contain reserves of enormous potential provided we do not delay their development. Again, I say it is vital that we should not drive away funds for the development of oil supplies in Canada. We must remember that even if it begins operations now, Syncrude will not produce until 1978 at the earliest. We must bear in mind, also, that it will not be possible to get further supplies of skilled labour and special equipment for at least two years, and that even when oil begins to flow from the tar sands, some time in the 1980s probably, it will likely be restricted to about 125,000 barrels a day.

I would point out that in 1959, 1969 and again in early 1973 the government of Alberta attempted to persuade the federal government that a pipeline to Montreal was and is in the national public interest. The response to this suggestion has in the past been negative. If the Montreal pipeline were in operation today, shortages of energy in eastern Canada could be eliminated. If we wish to become self-sufficient while at the same time maintaining our market in the United States, present requirements call for between 600,000 and 700,000 barrels a day.

To meet this demand, four or five new plants are immediately required so that the crude may be extracted from the tar sands in the necessary volume. This will mean not only heavy financial investment but the provision of a satisfactory social structure in the areas to be developed. The tar sands are some 200 miles north of Edmonton. Each plant will require at least 1,000 people to operate it. These people will need to be housed in the area, and it is difficult to expect a small community to provide newcomers with the facilities which they probably enjoyed in other areas where they had been living. Recruiting staff will not be easy, in any case. People with suitable qualifications are already employed in one sector or another of the oil industry. Before they would consent to work on a new project they would require an assurance of wages at least equal to those they have been getting, and probably higher.

These are my comments on Bill C-236. I hope that in committee we shall make the amendments which are necessary.

Mr. John A. Fraser (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address the House for a few minutes today on predominantly one aspect of the bill before us—an aspect which has largely been overlooked in the debate thus far. I am not suggesting it has been overlooked because hon. members on the government side do not share my concern about the threat to environmental law which is contained in one of the clauses of the bill. I am surprised, though, that although this debate has gone on for some days, during which time a number of government supporters have taken part, none of them has addressed himself to what in my view is one of the most dangerous and probably one of the most unnecessary clauses in the measure. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), speaking in the debate some days ago, did refer to the environment but only in the context of hastening the construction of the Mackenzie Valley pipeline.

I do not want to go over the bill clause by clause or anything like that—

An hon. Member: Go ahead; the speaker won't mind.

Mr. Fraser: —but I think it is important we should keep in mind clause 24, which is headed "Environmental Considerations". What is the effect of this clause? What it does, basically, is authorize the government, through a board it proposes to set up under this bill, to override all environmental law in Canada.

Mr. Paproski: Shame.

Mr. Fraser: I urge all hon. members, especially those on the government side, to ask themselves whether, in the first place, this provision is necessary. Second, if it should be necessary in some circumstances, is it necessary to hand these sweeping powers to a board of officials and then sit back and watch those officials go to the cabinet and say, "These are the regulations we require in order to override environmental law"? After all, as I said in the House a few days ago when putting a question to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis), all members of this House, as well as our colleagues in the provincial legislatures, have worked for a good number of years to build up in Canada a body of environmental law which will start to cope with the very serious and complex problems relating to the environment with which we are faced in this country. These are serious problems. We have to extract from the earth our minerals; we have to take trees out of the forests; we require hydroelectric power and resources of gas and oil. We also have to build highways and ports and transship goods from one part of the country to the other.

• (1540)

Because we have to do all these things, and because all of them infringe to some degree or another on the environment, we have during the last few years, though admittedly belatedly, begun to pass laws which give us the capacity to cope with the problem. The problem, very simply put, is that we have built up a high standard of living and way of life on an exploitative concept of natural resources and our consumption of natural resources, but during all these years have neglected for the most part to do anything about protecting those resources from a conservation point of view. In addition, we have done very little to protect the environment, the earth we live on, from the ravages of our industrial onslaught.

To me it is peculiar that for many years debate went on between the advocates of a strong federal position in the environmental field and those who felt that the federal government ought not to get itself directly involved in the environmental field because some people said it was essentially a provincial matter. There were brought before committees of this House experts who gave evidence as to what the federal power was in environmental matters. I was not one who ever gave testimony, but I have read some of the testimony that was given. Many of us believed that if one were to look at the provisions of the British North America Act in the context of the time that statute was passed, in view of the fact that environmental considerations were not matters specifically given to the provinces the federal government did have a very good argument for saying that, wherever necessary, it should be able to exercise its federal power to protect the environment.

However, these arguments were never really accepted by the federal government over the past few years and this is clearly shown in the legislation that has been passed. I refer to acts like the Clean Air Act and the Canada Water Act, which for the most part do not go into operation unless provincial agreement is sought and obtained in advance. We have always had the Fisheries Act, which for very many years has been the most effective anti-pollution legislation in this country, at least with respect to our waters. But this is a government and a party which for the last half dozen years or so have backed away from exercising a strong federal position in environmental law and yet now propose to this House that they give the right to abridge what law there is to a five-man board.

Surely there is a grave inconsistency in the approach that the government has taken over a number of years. I think there comes a time when the federal power has to be exercised in the interests of all Canadians. I would be the last one to run and hide behind the shield of provincial rights in every case when the national good required federal action. But I find it passing strange that this government, which for the most part has retreated when it comes to taking the initiative in proposing environmental legislation, now advances with a vengeance and grants to a board the right to make regulations to take away the effect of environmental laws, provincial, municipal and federal, which we have all worked so hard to pass in the last half dozen years.

Although they have not directed their minds to this so far in the debate, some apologists for the government may well say that subsection (1) of clause 24 provides that the board "may" consult with other bodies, including the provinces. But that is a permissive provision; there is nothing making the consultation mandatory. The Minister of the Environment and some members of the government may take some comfort from the fact that under subsection (2) the board "shall" consult with the Minister of the Environment. But the Minister of the Environment does not have the power under this bill to say no, even if he wanted to, and unless he can win the fight later on in cabinet with his other colleagues the recommendation put forward by the board will take the form of regulations no matter whether the Minister of the Environment is against it or not. The government may well say, "Well, of course, that won't happen". All I can say to that is that every time legislation is passed that overrides rights and laws and gives an amazing amount of power to a few people under a so-called crisis, this is the hardest legislation to get off the books, and it is at that time that things happen which everybody said beforehand would not happen.

I can give some examples of this, Mr. Speaker. As I have mentioned before in this House, I very well remember reading some extracts from the minutes of the proceedings before the justice and legal affairs committee where the then minister of justice said that the rules of natural law would apply to a certain section in the new Expropriation Act. This year the courts have said no, that is not so at all. I also remember reading with some interest the comments of the Minister of the Environment several years ago when this House was debating the James Bay project. The position was put to him: Would the environmental studies that the government was prepared to do in conjunction with the province of Quebec be conducted before construction began? His reply was, "Yes, that is our intention". But, of course, that is not what happened at all.

In this regard the press not long ago made a very interesting observation. It pointed out construction was well under way, before any environmental studies had been completed or were even likely to be completed. On August 23 of this year the Globe and Mail reported as follows:

> Results of the first environmental impact studies on the James Bay hydroelectric project will not be made public until after three airports and a 450-mile road are finished and a start made on the first and largest dam complex.
> J. C. Tremblay, the James Bay Development Corp. official in charge of federal-provincial relations, said yesterday that by next spring construction of three airports and a 450-mile road will be finished. And construction on the LG2 dam complex, the largest of four on the La Grande River in phase 1 of Quebec's hydroelectric development, will have started. Meanwhile, Mr. Tremblay said yesterday that in fact very few, if any, "environmental impact studies" have been started by either the federal or provincial scientists engaged in the cost-shared environmental impact effort.
>
> Under the federal-provincial agreement, the true environmental impact studies—the ones that attempt to uncover problem areas and recommend changes in plans to prevent environmental damage—will not start until next year, Mr. Tremblay said.
>
> And because even cursory environmental impact studies take a least one to two years to complete, this would mean any results and recommendations based on the results could not be made public until late in 1975 or 1976 at the earliest.

● (1550)

When government members say that these things will not happen and we are becoming alarmed about something that is not likely to take place, I remind them of what we were alarmed about yesterday and the fact that they have in fact taken place today. If one looks at the legislation the federal government has passed in recent years in respect of the environment, he will see that my contention for the most part is correct in that the federal government has withdrawn from exercising federal power in defence of our environment. I remember that not very long ago at a committee meeting the minister was asked why the federal government did not move in to stop the discharge of raw sewage into the St. Lawrence River, and he said this was a municipal problem and the federal government did not have the power. However, it was pointed out to him that under the Fisheries Act the term "corporation" included a municipal corporation, and his reply was that it would not be political to move in that direction.

This is an illustration of the fact that we must pay attention to the lack of concern by the federal government in respect of the use of its power and authority in defence of our environment. One wonders why the federal government has taken a hands-off approach. This was borne out in replies to questions directed to the Minister of the Environment on April 10 when he appeared before the committee on fisheries and forestry. I quote in part from that exchange. I began by asking:

I take it that what the minister is saying is that there is a certain amount of discussion between departments on these matters and, hopefully, the Department of the Environment somehow finds out about things in time to have some input. But is there any legislation at all that makes it a requirement of another department, working within its own sphere of influence and authority, to have each project approved by Environment before it goes ahead and announces it, and gets it under way?

MR. DAVIS: There is a requirement that projects of any scale, certainly projects that would come to cabinet or to the higher levels of government, be checked out, not only from a financial point of view but from an environmental point of view, but this is not a requirement in law, it is an administrative requirement within the government.

MR. FRASER: In other words, it is a function of government to try to ensure that this happens?

MR. DAVIS: It is administrative and not legal.

MR. FRASER: Has there been any serious consideration by the government to secure this procedure by enacting legislation which would require the Department of the Environment to peruse and approve of any project done by another department from an environmental point of view before it goes ahead?

MR. DAVIS: I do not think legislation along those lines would be considered very rational, at least in a parliamentary type of government.

I suggest we have a government that does not want to use the power it has to discipline its own departments, yet it is prepared by this legislation to abridge and abrogate all environmental law in this country. There is a vast body of law in this country in respect of the environment. It might surprise hon. members to know just how extensive this law is. I have before me a compilation of all the environmental laws and regulations in this country, the index of which shows that in the province of Alberta there are 54 laws and regulations, in British Columbia there are 27, in Manitoba there are 11, in New Brunswick there are 14, in Newfoundland there are 11, in Nova Scotia there are 9, in Ontario there are 36, in Prince Edward Island there are 18, in Quebec there are 30, and in Saskatchewan there are 30. Under the Canadian index there are 55 noted environmental laws and regulations, both provincial and federal.

Through this bill the minister is apparently prepared to propose a measure which overrides all those laws and regulations. In looking over the debates on this matter I noted with interest that hardly anyone has mentioned environmental concerns except Conservative speakers. The only reference the Prime Minister made to the environment is to be found at page 8482 of Hansard where he said, when talking about the gas pipeline through the Mackenzie Valley:

While this project must, of course, be submitted to the usual regulatory proceedings and cannot go ahead until it has been approved by responsible Canadian authorities, the government believes that it would be in the public interest to facilitate early construction by any means which do not require the lowering of environmental standards or the neglect of Indian rights and interests.

If that is the Prime Minister's view—and I must assume that all hon. members on the government side agree with it—and if he wants to push ahead with the Mackenzie Valley gas pipeline, why is this incredible power included in this bill at the present time? I think it is only fair to point out that no one on the government side so far has given any explanation, or even attempted to give one, as to why this power is needed. No one has tried to come up with any defence in answer to comments by speakers on this side of the House in criticism of this particular aspect. No government member has given us any explanation at all as to why the government is asking for these extraordinary powers.

I would ask, quite seriously, why no government member has even concerned himself with this matter? I know that government members are just as concerned as I am about our environment, but I should think that someone on the government side would have gone to the minister or his colleagues to find out what we are doing and what is the great need for this power to be given to the suggested five-man board.

I suggest to hon. members that they should take a quick look at the volume and extent of our environmental law and ask themselves if what is embodied in this bill is what we should do, and whether it is really necessary. It is all very well to talk about the energy crisis—and we certainly do have a problem, part of which can be associated with transportation. But I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) if he would agree that in spite of the difficulties and problems of our fellow citizens in the eastern provinces, this government does not require the tremendous power asked for in this bill. Surely the government must have some idea of the environmental laws that might be abridged or abrogated momentarily or for a limited period of time in order to carry out the purpose of this bill, allocating resources when undue shortages may occur. No one on the government side has assisted us in any way in this regard.

When we consider this matter of extraordinary powers, government members will have to agree that it is not the function of this House to grant such powers to the government unless it makes out a case. So far as I can see, silence is not a case: in this regard the government has made no case whatsoever for these far reaching powers to abrogate or abridge environmental law in this country.

● (1600)

One might ask what sort of situation the government has in mind. Has the government in mind the air quality standards surrounding some refinery somewhere? If so, surely these places could be isolated and described. Surely the government, since it has a board which advises it from time to time, can go to the board and ask it where it expects the government might have to relax the environmental standards. Surely this is a legitimate question for government members to ask; but I do not hear any of them asking it. I do not hear anyone on the other side of the House even beginning to try to persuade me or any other hon. member that this legislation is necessary. When one looks back at the history of environmental legislation in this country, we find that it was a phenomenon that the government, under pressure, established the Department of the Environment.

It was also only under pressure that the government passed the Clean Air Act and the Canada Water Act, which legislation, as I said earlier in this address, was carefully designed to make sure that the federal power does not push too hard in any direction. Yet without any evidence or definitive explanation concerning where these laws will be abridged, if there is a need, the federal government pushes in and tells Canadians from coast to coast in every province that at the whim of a five-man board, if it should so decide, any environmental law can be abridged.

I say that is an extraordinary situation and not one in which I am happy to hand over to the government that sort of power. Government speakers may say the federal government has not pushed for this power because it encouraged the provinces and coaxed them along. I wonder how much coaxing the government did, and I wonder how much provincial legislation has come to pass because there was no federal legislation. Certainly in many areas this is so. The fact is that because the federal government did not provide strong leadership in the environmental situation the provinces have moved as fast as they have.

There is always cause for concern whether in certain cases provincial legislation might be adequate, and one wonders where the federal government is. I notice on page two of today's Globe and Mail an article concerning lead poisoning. I should like to quote from this article as follows:

> Officials from the environment and the health ministries have expressed concern at the effectiveness of existing pollution legislation, doctors have expressed anger that children they treated have to be sent back to the areas where they were initially poisoned, researchers claim that lead contamination levels have not been significantly reduced and the level of public exasperation has been skyrocketing.

I ask why the federal government has not applied its power and force to look at this sort of thing. The fact of the matter is that the federal government has pretty well neglected to move on the environmental front. I know someone could tell me about the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act which sat on the shelf for a long time before there were any regulations. Someone could tell me about other acts and regulations. But for the most part the federal government, except under the Fisheries Act, has not much power within the provinces or has not had the courage to exercise it. However, here we have a crisis which is not very well explained and in respect of which a number of intelligent people—I am not talking about anybody in the political process at all, but people commenting from the sidelines—ask just how grave a crisis we really face.

I think we legitimately pose a question here. I believe the question is: Why has the federal government decided now to use this power to abridge environmental laws? Members of the government have failed to try to address their minds to the problem in this debate. I think probably my friends and colleagues on the government side may well be asking the same question. No doubt part of the reason they are asking that question is the extraordinary exchange which took place a few days ago between myself and the Minister of the Environment. On Tuesday, December 4, as recorded at page 8388 of Hansard, I asked this question of the Minister of the Environment:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Can he assure the House that the provisions of clause 24 of Bill C-236, whereby the energy supplies allocation board is empowered to override environmental laws, will not apply to pollution control standards or to permits issued by provincial governments?

The minister replied:

> No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot assure the hon. member of that. However, we are working very closely with provincial authorities and we have the closest liaison possible with the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I wonder how closely the government has been working with the provincial authorities. A few days after this I had occasion to reach officials of the government of British Columbia on the telephone, and officials in most departments to whom I spoke said they had barely heard that this act was in the mill. From what I could gather there had been no close liaison in respect of this particular section. On the same day I then asked this question:

> In view of the fact that for a good number of years some hon. members, including members on the government side, have worked very hard to establish good environmental laws, can the minister advise whether clause 24 will apply? Will he make a statement to make it clear to the House that environmental standards are not going to be sacrificed across this country just because of an energy shortage in some parts, and will he tell the House why the power to regulate relaxation of environmental law is given to five appointed officials without any provision for appeal or public discussion?

This is the extraordinary reply given by the Minister of the Environment:

> Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is correct in suggesting that that clause can suspend environmental standards. At the same time, I know of no existing federal or provincial legislation which will in fact be overridden.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the Minister of the Environment said that he knows of no existing federal or provincial legislation which will in fact be overridden. If the Minister of the Environment does not know of any provincial or federal legislation which will be overridden, what in heaven's name are we doing passing this piece of legislation?

I ask every member on the government side, because I know they surely are not here to try to deliberately override the environmental laws in this country, to speak to the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and to the Prime Minister and ask them what in the name of heaven is meant by that remark. We are talking about emergency legislation. We are talking about an act which, apart completely from the environmental aspect, abridges and invades an area which does not under ordinary circumstances belong to the federal government. That in itself is warning enough. However, when in respect of this particular part of the bill we find this extraordinary reply from the minister, when he says he knows of no existing federal or provincial legislation which will in fact be overridden, I ask why in the name of heaven are we looking at this bill which in effect would abridge environmental legislation? If the government's view is that this will apply only to some municipal legislation, let it say so; let the government tell us exactly what is its area of concern. But please don't come and ask me, an opposition member, in the face of silence and no explanation—what explanation we have been given makes no sense—to rush off pell-mell to give the government this authority unless the government can justify it.

I do not think we will be thanked by the Canadian people if we sit back and then finally go along with a provision like this. After all, too many members of the Canadian public have worked too long with legislators over a period of years to build up the body of environmental law which we presently have. I take some comfort from comments of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I know that often his remarks are not designed to give me or anybody else any comfort—and that is fair enough, Mr. Speaker. But as recorded at page 8754 of Hansard, the hon. member said in part:

> Certainly there is great need for clarification of a number of proposals in the bill. Certainly there is great need for a number of amendments, because some of the powers are unnecessarily large or unnecessarily wide.

I certainly agree with that. Further, I do not think that what I have said will meet with too much disagreement on the government side. I would urge the government, when this bill reaches committee, to co-operate with all hon. members in making sure that, in an attempt to take the responsibility that is the government's and effectively to establish some machinery to combat a possible shortfall in some parts of the country, we do not go overboard on this question and pass legislation which has not been defended, which is probably indefensible and which goes a long way to wiping out the work of the last half dozen years.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, since the introduction of Bill C-236, I have listened with great interest to all those who spoke, especially to our leader the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) and several of our colleagues. I had not intended to speak on second reading, but owing to the turn of the discussion and the determination of the Progressive Conservative members to carry on with this debate, I thought that I should urge this House to be a little bit more understanding.

Personally, I must admit that I am not overly enthusiastic about that bill, while I am willing to have it read a second time before Christmas to allow a more thorough consideration by the standing committee, even if we have to return to this House after New Year's and the meeting with the provinces to have it passed. Like many other members, I regret that the government did not chose to introduce this bill after consulting with all of the provinces of Canada, both oil-producing and oil-consuming.

As was so rightly stated by our leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), the present chain of events is leading us very rapidly towards an economic crisis nearly as serious as that of the Thirties, if the government does not assume its responsibilities and does not co-operate with all the provinces to put a stop to the financial ambitions of the oil giants for whom money has precedence over the security of the population. This government, faithful servant to big finance, invokes the urgency of the situation to have the bill adopted this time without any consultation with the provinces.

The previous speaker was wondering a moment ago why the government is requesting such extraordinary powers by introducing Bill C-236. Mr. Speaker, we are used to the tactics of this centralizing government. Very cleverly they create emergency situations to force Parliament into enacting legislation which the population will reprove soon afterwards in order to further extend their rule over the whole country, encroaching more and more upon provincial jurisdictions. I say to the hon. member who has spoken a moment ago that this is the reason for introducing this extraordinary emergency measure. At times I think that I am reliving the end of the thirties when this same central government pretexting the urgency of winning the war brought Parliament to approve the 1942 agreements which turned provincial governments into mere vassals of the federal government.

Today the federal government wants to do still more than stealing the taxation rights exclusive to the provinces. It wants to become the absolute master of all energy powers in Canada. It knows well that all natural resources belong exclusively to the provinces. It wants to infringe on that field and its only weapon is the pretext of emergency. The minister will say that this is temporary and he notes that even in the bill. But we are convinced in advance that this temporary act will become permanent just like the agreement of 1942 through which the central government undertook to give back to the provinces three fields of taxation as soon as the war would end.

There came about the situation we are faced with, Mr. Speaker, a war of nerves to reconquer what we had lent to those wordless centralisers in Ottawa. As the old saying goes, if you want indeed to control two men stronger than you, have them fight together, or still, divide to rule. That is indeed what this government is doing, dividing the provinces, having them fight among themselves to better possess them. That is monstrous, will you say, but that is the truth. And all that for the sake of Canadian unity.

First, of course, we must ask ourselves, Mr. Speaker, if there is really an oil shortage in Canada. One has only to read non finance owned or controlled newspapers to realize that there is no real shortage but rather a provoked and well orchestrated shortage even if in a boogyman manner the Minister for Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) came into this House trumpeting that we were going to be short of fuel this winter, that we were going to freeze, that we were going to be short of gasoline. He even went as far as saying that we would be short of electric power. Just imagine, a shortage of electric power in Quebec because of the Israeli-Arab war. And to strenghten his SOS he suggests his famous restrictions everyone of them weirder than the other, such as turning the thermostat down to 70 instead of 72, as if he did not know that it cost as much to maintain a temperature at 70 or 72. Here is another restriction, closing doors very quickly so as not to let the cold come in, and leaving all windows closed to keep the heat in.

And during all that time oil companies like Golden Eagle Canada Limited are stating they doubled their exports to the United States in the last month of 1973, 2.5 million gallons in one month. One can read this in the newspaper La Presse, and I quote:

In spite of the crisis, Quebec exports oil. At a time when Quebec is theatened with a shortage of oil this winter with the intensification of the Arab embargo, a few Quebec refineries, including Golden Eagle Canada Limited of Saint-Romuald, continue to export huge quantities of industrial heating oil or bunker fuel to the United States.

From October 15 to November 26 last, Quebec ranked first among exporting provinces that ship refined products to the American market with exports of 2.5 million barrels, or the equivalent of 87.5 million gallons.

After Ottawa decreed export quotas of industrial oils on October 15 last, Quebec supplied, to October 31, almost half of all Canadian exports to the U.S.A.

In coming weeks, those exports of refined oil should decline however, not to better serve Quebec needs in bunker fuel low in sulphur content, but to supply British Columbia via the Panama Canal.

At least here, Mr. Speaker, we are staying inside Canada. The article goes on to say:

The federal government is indeed preparing to convince eastern Canada refiners to help British Columbia, where there will be a serious shortage of industrial oils this winter. During the next few weeks, the National Energy Board will have to issue a smaller number of exportation permits for the United States in order to divert the bunker towards the Pacific coast.

Mr. Speaker, when these absurdities are mentioned, the Liberals always protest: There is a surplus. But if we have a surplus, why pretend that there is a shortage?

This is again reminiscent of the artificial food shortage of the 1930's when food was burned so that prices might triple, even though the population was starving. The simple reason for this crisis was the will to cause a price increase and the reason for the crisis today is still a question of price increase.

It is fortunate that the Canadian public is better informed and that it did not respond to the minister's entreaty. That is why he had to return to reality and admit oil products were in abundance. He acknowledged also that it was not oil that would be lacking this winter but the proper means of transportation. How can one believe now that means of transportation will be lacking? I suggest that the joke has gone a little too far.

I heard an hon. member from Alberta state that if we had an adequate transportation and storage system, Alberta could produce oil 24 hours a day instead of 10 or 11 hours. Such a comment leaves the Canadian public absolutely nonplussed.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from an article which appeared in Montréal-Matin as follows:

We have oil but we lack the means to move and store it.

[Mr. Gauthier (Roberval).]

Canada now has in storage 3 million barrels of crude oil and will receive 3 million more by the end of March but we do not know how to distribute it between the refineries in eastern Canada.

So there is no oil shortage: the only shortage we do have has to do with transportation and storage.

This is the essential of the statement made yesterday to the media by Energy, Mines and Resources Minister, Donald Macdonald.

The government keeps on saying that the shortage is the result of the Middle East conflit. I wonder what the Arab countries have to do with the matter of oil in Canada, since western provinces export about 50 per cent of their production and eastern Canada, including Quebec, has always imported most of its oil supplies from Venezuela and Rumania, where there is surely no war going on. As far as the war between Israel and the Arab countries is concerned, I wish I had a few minutes, or even half an hour more, to deal with it. I will simply say that after meeting with the diplomats involved, I realized that this crisis would be easily settled were it not for the foreign financial interests in Arabia that decided to double their export prices.

This is the main cause of this conflict that is ridiculous for the Arab people. From the political point of view, the Arab-Israeli war would quickly come to an end if the United Nations forced the Jewish people to return home and be satisfied with the territory that the Arabs were willing to give them. But there are still the interests of American millionaires and their stooges who enable them to obtain everything for almost nothing. Why does the present government not have the guts to tell the truth to the people, explaining to them that all wars are first and above all wars of financial interests. It is the same for the Arab countries war. The opportunity was given by owners of coal mines to start blockades and double prices by imposing restraints, and the governments played the game willy-nilly.

Today, the government is surprised by the opposition reaction. I am not. I believe that for the first time, the western provinces will really oppose the federal government to preserve their property. I understand them, but I am very pleased because this will make the Quebec people realize that the province of Quebec is not the only one that wants to be independent. It will prove at the same time to westerners what humiliation Quebec had to suffer because of Ottawa's infringements. I deplore only one think in Quebec today: the lack of combativeness, not to mention the puerile resignation of its government in trusting the Big Brother in Ottawa. In this respect, I should like to quote an article from Clément Brown, a columnist for Montréal-Matin:

AN AMBIGUITY: THE NATIONAL EMERGENCY

The Quebec Minister of Natural Resources, Mr. Gilles Massé, said in a statement the other day that although he intends to co-operate with Ottawa in the setting up of an emergency program to prevent oil shortages, Quebec will see to it that the federal government does not monopolize permanently powers that come normally under provincial jurisdiction.

Except under the rather vague terms of "Peace",—

● (1630)

Time does not permit me to read from another most interesting article which is a very good illustration of the simplistic attitude and submission of the province of Quebec in these circumstances. However, generally speaking people in Quebec are reacting smartly to this situation. Especially my own constituents who are considered to be the most well-informed in the province because I do my best to keep them informed about all that is going on. Let me read this report from our regional daily:

Oil consumers get panicky.

Panicky heating oil users are in the process of creating a truly artificial shortage at the oil retailing level.

That was the statement made yesterday by Mr. Jean-Louis Gauthier, manager of A.E. Gauthier Co. and director of Golden Eagle of Canada.

Mr. Gauthier said that the psychosis which was developing within—

Mr. Trudel: Is he your brother?

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): No, I do not even know him.

—within our population could further complicate the situation, admittedly serious, that will prevail this winter.

It is reported that some customers have acquired additionnal tanks holding up to 4,000 gallons, which far exceeds a family's winter oil consumption.

Those people who are hoarding oil are certainly creating a shortage for the time being. Retailers are operating on a quota basis and in many cases they will exceed their supplies for November and December, said Mr. Gauthier.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is on account of those alarming rumours, of those limitations, that people are frightened and some families in other parts of the country are bound to be deprieved of oil at certain times, if they are not totally short of it.

The script is always the same, Mr. Speaker. After the alarm cry, they create panic and all the news media, which are in the pay of the government in power, react as expected. The people are fooled and we can read all about it in the newspapers. Meanwhile, Quebec pretends to ignore everything and, as always, asks Ottawa to act on their behalf. Then we can read the following in an another newspaper article:

Ottawa acts on behalf of Quebec in the oil situation.

The dependence of the Bourassa government on Ottawa and on oil companies and the lack of leadership from the Department of Natural Resources paralyse the energy policy in Quebec. This is what the Official Opposition maintained yesterday when they introduced their first non confidence motion on the energy policy of the goverment.

According to the Leader of the Opposition, the problems in Quebec are directly related to this twofold dependence; "... dependence of Quebec, first as far as the energy they need is concerned, which is from 75 to 80 per cent of energy consumption, second, dependence on large oil companies which import, sell and distribute oil; as the government does not know anything as far as stocks are concerned, they cannot intervene."

Mr. Speaker, before referring this bill to the Committee, I ask the minister to recall that Confederation concerns the provinces as well and that the government has to know their will before voting such a bill which will have far reaching consequences on future federal-provincial relations.

If this government no longer wants to abide by the principles of confederation, let it say so to the Canadians and stop taking indirect means to bring about centralization. We must keep in mind that the confederation has been created by the provinces, and that the federal government must therefore be their instrument. But today this order of things is reversed and this is quite deplorable for all Canada because this kind of situation causes all the disagreements between the provinces.

I hope this government will scrutinize itself before it is too late, for if they go on the same way as in the past it will not be long before we can say it is too late.

[English]

Mr. Frank Hamilton (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker I am pleased to take this opportunity to express some thoughts on Bill C-236, the energy supplies emergency bill. The bill gives power to the minister to set prices for energy resources, to control exports and imports, to establish rationing and to take almost any other action that the cabinet decides. This legislation is one more step in a game more easily begun than ended. In its proposed form, this bill could ensure that never again will a province be able to uphold its rights to control energy resources without resorting to extraordinary measures. This bill gives powers as far reaching as wartime measures, and the severity of the bill depends upon unknowns.

I have had some experience, Mr. Speaker, in administering an act of parliament as chairman of a government board. To me it is almost beyond belief that regulations made under this act will supersede a good many acts of parliament. This is heavy stuff indeed. A question that has bothered me a good deal during my service with the government, and now as a member of parliament, is just how reliable is the advice of the senior government servants to members of parliament and to cabinet ministers. The latest example is the minister's erratic replies to questions on Canada's oil situation. They are all very hazy. He has been saying he had been given the information by what he calls his technical committee. So the erratic information the minister has been getting from his so-called technical committee is in question as, of course, is the government's whole handling of this so-called energy crisis.

Far too many senior government servants who administer the programs passed by parliament do not have any real sympathy for the law to succeed. They should at least have some will to ensure success of the acts and programs. Should they not be like a surgeon performing an operation? Surely, he has some desire for the patient to live. Government employees and civil servants are usually people who have nothing to do with producing goods. The further removed they are, the more influential they seem to be with their daily power of suggestion to the minister. A good number of them are disdainful of commerce. Let us look at clause 3 of the bill before us. It reads:

There is hereby established an energy supplies allocation board consisting of a chairman and four other members to be appointed by the governor in council to hold office during pleasure.

It is the "during pleasure" part that I want to speak about. The members of the National Energy Board are appointed to hold office during "good behaviour for a period of seven years". There is at least some security of tenure and some independence for board members. Their numbers are to be increased to nine by this bill. The members of this new energy supplies allocation board are to be appointed to hold office "during pleasure." There is no security of tenure. This means all it takes is a telephone call and they are on their way. This new board will be nothing but a club for the minister and, incredibly, will have authority to run roughshod over the National Energy Board. Also, as I said before, its regulations will supersede acts of parliament.

● (1640)

Is it any wonder the minister questioned the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) about appointments to this new board. I would like to quote from Hansard of December 6. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) said:

> I should like to compliment the hon. member on his speech. It is a good speech. It is really in respect of the appointments that I wish to ask him a question. It is not a question of political hacks but, rather, of obtaining qualified people in the oil business who would be prepared to sacrifice better incomes in order to make such a contribution.

The key words in the new bill regarding appointment are "at pleasure." This will be no more than a strawboard; surely nobody but a civil servant or a political hack will accept an appointment "at pleasure" on the board. In his television talk on energy resources, and in the House later, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke about a number of aspects of the problem; but it was certainly not an exhaustive presentation. He completely forgot about or ignored the need for fuel energy in agricultural production, which is the very basis of our survival. Fossil fuels are indispensable to the needs of modern agriculture. I cannot discuss this matter in one short speech except to say that for every three calories of food produced in this country, there must be an input of one.

Farming in Canada now uses more petroleum by-products than any other single industry. The total input of energy per acre of land producing corn in the United States is now 80 American gallons. These gallons include the energy equivalent of labour, machinery, fertilizers in the form of nitrogen, phosphorous, potash, seeds for planting, irrigation, insecticides, herbicides, drying of the crops, electricity and transportation. Lack of oil is certainly going to influence crops in Europe as well as in the United States in the next growing season. I sincerely hope that our federal cabinet and the Canadian Wheat Board fully understand the possible effects of fuel shortages on crops of cereal grains around the world. I also hope the various experts who so competently predict vast world food production increases will realize on what our past increases have been based—mainly petroleum and other types of fossil fuel energy in the industrial countries, obtained at comparatively low prices.

There is no over-all shortage of energy in Canada, or the world for that matter; but, rather, there is a definite scarcity of low-cost energy. Canada's total recoverable inventory of oil and gas, proven and potential, has been estimated to be the equivalent of 561 billion barrels of oil. To date, total cumulative Canadian production has been about ten billion barrels, less than 2 per cent of the total. The current wellhead price of a gallon of Canadian crude is approximately 11 cents and the reserves of oil available at that price are definitely limited. However, estimates contained in "An Energy Policy for Canada, Phase I" suggest that a price of 20 cents per gallon would make available 60 to 85 billion barrels of oil. By way of comparison, total Canadian oil consumption in Canada this year will be approximately .65 billion barrels.

There has been a general tendency to lament the high cost of gasoline and to infer that the oil companies are somehow at fault. The facts are that of the total retail sales price of a gallon of gasoline, the dealer's margin is about 10 cents, combined federal and provincial tax ranges from 18 cents to 28 cents, depending on the province, and the oil company receives about 26 cents from which it must, among other things, pay royalties and income taxes. The latter figure is approximately 25 per cent higher than it was 25 years ago in 1948. It is interesting to note that over this same period wages and salaries have quadrupled and the general wholesale index has doubled. In view of the realities of the petroleum situation, it is obvious that countries on subsistence agriculture will have to develop their new policies in terms of power from men and from draught animals. It is already becoming evident that some of the developing countries know this rather simple and very important fact and it may well be that some of our experts will need re-educating.

It is interesting to note the short-term response of government and industry to energy shortages. Their primary concern is to search for faster ways to exploit available energy resources, as well as to temporarily reduce present consumption to get us through the winter. Nowhere have I seen any suggestion that we plan for the long term and that we decide how we will shape our society to make the best use of our fossil fuels. For example, do we want these fuels for the next 10, 100 or 1,000 years?

In the matter of controlling the amount of money available for development, government plays an important role, taxes being a major cost. In plain terms, any shortage of petroleum we may suffer will be the direct result of inadequate capital spending engineered by this government. Canada is the world's largest major oil consumer on a per capita basis, and agriculture is the most intensive user of lubricating oil, grease, gasoline and fuel in Canada. Based on 1971 figures, fossil energy and derived products amounted to 14 per cent of all farm input expenses in Canadian agriculture, 17 per cent of out-of-pocket expenses of farmers, or equal to nearly one-third of net farm income. These figures are from Statistics Canada, 1971.

With agriculture such an important factor in the energy situation, what do we hear from this government about it? Nothing. They are asleep at the switch. The secretary of agriculture in the United States has at least made some concessions to agriculture. Millions of dollars are to be spent on fuel research in this country, but not a word about agriculture. However, agriculture, with its waste products, is a very important source of energy production. Other countries are moving in this direction and I mention just one, Taiwan. Agriculture, instead of being a net absorber of fuel energy, could well become self-reliant in fuel by proper use of its waste products, straw and animal waste. Let us spend a few thousand dollars on some little projects along this line. We seem to have millions for other research. Starchy cereals and vegetables can be converted to fuel. It has been done in other countries such as Czechoslovakia and the United States.

Canada will face serious problems in financing the level of capital expenditures now required for energy development. This will mean an increasing short supply of capital for Canadian agriculture, further difficulty in exporting farm products and more competition from other countries' imports. Comparisons of the potential ability to produce food and the potential market for food should provide a little insight into the market strategies for Canadian agriculture. Here are some selected countries, indicating the arable acres per person. The average in all of Asia and all of Europe is 12 acres per person. In the United States it is six acres per person, in the Soviet Union 40 acres per person, and in Canada 80 acres per person. These figures are taken from the FAO production year book, 1971. Canada has the best land to population ratio in the world. We have the capacity to produce more food per person than any other country in the world. Does the government have any long-range plans to capitalize on all our assets? Right now there is a build-up of idle ships all around the world because of fuel bunkering problems. Surely Canada should advertise that ocean shipping would be welcome here and assured of bunker fuel. This would be the best public relations job we could do for our country. Yet I have heard nothing along these lines.

Market strategies designed to take advantage of Canada's agricultural ability must be based on benefits to Canadian farmers rather than the extent to which the rest of the world needs our production. On humanitarian grounds we may have a moral obligation to assist in feeding the hungry world, regardless of the ability or otherwise of a particular country to purchase. It should be appreciated, though, that this obligation falls on all Canadians, not just on food producers.

What we face today, as I see it, is not an energy problem; it is a transportation crisis. It is one which brings into question the competence of the government. How can we believe the government is sufficiently competent to deal with energy problems when for years it has been unable to come up with regulations regarding procedures to be followed by the oil industry in the north in areas under federal jurisdiction? Nothing in the bill will produce one more gallon of oil or the 35 gallons to make one barrel. Instead of going beyond the communist manifesto as the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says, let us show a few international good manners toward our friends to the south and a few good manners toward the provincial governments.

What will happen to agriculture around the world if the price of oil rises to the price just posted by Iran—over $17 a barrel, or settles down to $10 a barrel? I have seen no projections put forward by the government. Between 1961 and 1971 farm costs in Canaca rose 47 per cent during a period of stable energy resource prices. It is suggested that farm costs will probably rise by 40 per cent over the next ten years due to increased energy costs alone. Couple this with a general condition of capital shortage, high credit costs, increased farm wages and land prices and we can expect a minimum increase of 90 per cent in farm production costs. What plan has the government to offer to meet the situation in agriculture and rural Canada in the next decade? As a first step, I suggest a much greater degree of federal assistance in assuring alternate energy sources to maintain the scientific agriculture we presently enjoy.

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, this statute is one more step in a game more easily begun than ended. It is no substitute for sound economic management carefully conceived and consistently executed. Trying to remedy the situation along the lines the government is now suggesting will turn out to be more costly and unsettling than any preventive program which might have been adopted a few years ago when the problem was first recognized.

It seems to me there are plenty of federal government agencies in existence right now which could deal effectively with the current situation. Canadians are concerned about attitudes toward energy and energy development. The petroleum industry must be encouraged to press forward with the job it knows best how to do, that is to say, finding, developing and processing petroleum products and bringing them to Canadian consumers. Ottawa should be consistently strengthening the idea of Canada as a nation. But the approach taken by the government toward national policy in the field of energy, as in other matters, is leading to disaster.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, this debate on second reading of Bill C-236 has been going on for a number of days now and during that time we have seen some changes in the over-all situation. It appears that the energy situation is an ever-changing one. We heard the speech made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on December 6. That speech certainly produced some new factors for our consideration. Sometimes I thought, after listening to that speech, that the Happy Hooker might have some trouble proving her status as an authority on prostitution.

I feel I must echo the comments made by others who have taken part in this debate: we have not been facing an energy crisis in this country but, rather, we are facing a problem related to transportation. If we follow the policy advocated by the minister of energy and by the Prime Minister, we are likely to be in deep-freeze for an extended period because we shall lack the energy to meet our energy requirements. The figures show that today Canada is 118 per cent self-sufficient in energy. In face of that figure, how anyone could say there is an energy crisis today is beyond my comprehension.

We have heard a few elements of a so-called policy disclosed from the other side. It was announced in September that there would be a voluntary price freeze beginning September 4. The statement was made in response to an increase in the cost of living figures and was not related to the Arab-Israeli war which began a month or so later. However, since that day the government, in its wisdom, decided to extend the so-called voluntary freeze until the end of the winter, whenever that may be. The way the government operates, we could be in for a freeze on oil prices for a very extended period and this, I can only suggest, will hurry along the day when Canada becomes a dependent country rather than a surplus country as far as oil is concerned.

Speaking about freezes, I note that the policy of the NDP is to support the government in extending the freeze beyond January 31. This was the main prize for which the NDP held out when considering whether to support the government on December 10. I suggest that the NDP wants more than this. Ideally, it wants a permanent freeze in connection with the price of petroleum products in this country. I often wonder who that party thinks it is fooling when it takes stands of this kind, because if you follow that policy to its logical conclusion it would have a great effect on a number of wage earners who are supposed to be close to the heart of the NDP.
